Our signs and a manifest authority ④⑥ to Pharaoh and his notables. But they waxed arrogant and were a haughty people. ④⑦ They said, “Shall we believe in two human beings like us, while their people are slaves we possess?” ④⑧ But they denied them, and so were among the destroyed. ④⑨ And indeed We gave unto Moses the Book, that haply they may be guided. ⑤⑩ And We made the son of Mary and his mother a sign, and We gave them refuge in a high place of stillness and a flowing spring. ⑤⑪ O messengers! Eat of the good things and work righteousness. Truly I know what you do. ⑤⑫ And truly this community of yours is one community, and I am your Lord, so reverence Me. ⑤⑬ But they made their affair to be founded upon different scriptures, each party exulting in what it had. ⑤⑭ So leave them in their heedlessness for a time. ⑤⑮ Do they reckon that, [on account of] the wealth and the children that We have provided them, ⑤⑯ We hasten unto good for them? Nay, but they are unaware! ⑤⑰ Truly those who are in awe for fear of their Lord, ⑤⑱ and those who believe in the signs of their Lord, ⑤⑲ and those who ascribe not partners unto their Lord, ⑥⑰ and those who give what they give while their hearts quake with fear that they shall return to their Lord— ⑥⑱ it is they who hasten toward good deeds, and are foremost in them. ⑥⑲ And We task no soul beyond its capacity, and with Us is a Book that speaks in truth. And they shall not be wronged. ⑥⑳ Nay, indeed their hearts are engrossed away from this, and they have other deeds besides which they undertake, ⑥㉑ till, when We seize those of them who lived in luxury with the punishment, behold, they shall implore! ⑥㉒ Implore not today! Truly you will not be helped by Us! ⑥㉓ My signs were recited unto you, but you used to turn on your heels, ⑥㉔ waxing arrogant on account thereof, talking foolishly by night. ⑥㉕ Have they not contemplated the Word, or has there come unto them that which came not unto their forefathers? ⑥㉖ Or do they not know their Messenger, and so deny him? ⑥㉗ Or do they say, “He is possessed?” Rather, he has brought them the truth, but most of them are averse to the truth. ⑥㉘ Were the truth to follow their caprices, the heavens and the earth and those therein would have been corrupted.

Nay, We gave them their reminder, but they turned away from their reminder. 72 Dost thou ask any recompense of them? For thy Lord's recompense is better, and He is the best of providers. 73 Surely thou callest them unto a straight path. 74 And truly those who believe not in the Hereafter are deviating from the path. 75 And were We to show them mercy and remove whatever evil was upon them, they would surely persist, wandering confused in their rebellion. 76 And We already seized them with the punishment, but they did not yield to their Lord, nor are they humble, 77 till, when We open upon them a gate of severe punishment, behold, they despair therein. 78 He it is Who brought into being for you hearing, sight, and hearts. Little do you give thanks! 79 He it is Who created you on the earth, and unto Him shall you be gathered. 80 And He it is Who gives life and causes death, and unto Him belongs the variation of the night and the day. Will you not, then, understand? 81 Nay, but they say the like of that which was said by those of old. 82 They say, "What, when we have died and are dust and bones, are we to be resurrected?" 83 We and our fathers were certainly warned of this before. These are naught but fables of those of old." 84 Say, "Whose is the earth and whosoever is upon it, if you know?" 85 They will say, "God's." Say, "Will you not, then, take heed?" 86 Say, "Who is the Lord of the seven heavens and the Lord of the great Throne?" 87 They will say, "God's." Say, "Will you not then be reverent?" 88 Say, "Who is it in Whose Hand lies the dominion of everything, who protects but is not protected against, if you know?" 89 They will say, "God's." Say, "How then are you bewitched?" 90 Nay, We brought them the truth, and indeed they are liars. 91 God has not taken any child, and neither are there any gods with Him, for then each god would take away what he created, and some of them would overcome others. Glory be to God above that which they ascribe! 92 Knower of the Unseen and the seen! Exalted is He above the partners they ascribe! 93 Say, "My Lord! If Thou showest me what they are promised, 94 my Lord, then place me not among the wrongdoing people!" 95 And surely We are able to show you what We promise them. 96 Repel evil by that which is better. We know best what they ascribe. 97 And say, “My Lord! I seek refuge in Thee from the incitements of the satans. 98 And I seek refuge in Thee, my Lord, lest they should be present with me.” 99 Till, when death comes to one of them, he says, “My Lord! Return me, 100 that haply I may work righteousness with regard to that which I left.” Nay, indeed these are words that he speaks. And behind them is a barrier till the Day they are resurrected. 101 And when the trumpet is blown, there shall be no kinship between them that Day, nor will they question one another. 102 As for those whose scales are heavy, it is they who shall prosper. 103 And as for those whose scales are light, it is they who shall lose their souls, abiding in Hell. 104 The Fire will smite their faces, and they shall grimace therein. 105 “Were not My signs recited unto you, and you used to deny them?” 106 They will say, “Our Lord! Our wretchedness overwhelmed us, and we were a people astray. 107 Our Lord! Remove us from it! Then if we revert, we shall be wrongdoers.” 108 He will say, “Be gone therein, and speak not to Me.” 109 Verily there was a group of My servants who would say, “Our Lord! We believe; so forgive us and have mercy upon us, and Thou art the best of those who are merciful.” 110 But you took them in mockery, till it made you forget My remembrance, and you used to laugh at them. 111 Truly today I have rewarded them for having been patient. Truly they are the triumphant. 112 He will say, “How many years did you tarry on earth?” 113 They will say, “We tarried a day or part of a day. But ask those who keep count.” 114 He will say, “You tarried but a little, if you but knew.” 115 “Did you suppose, then, that We created you frivolously, and that you would not be returned unto Us?” 116 So, exalted is God, the True Sovereign; there is no god but He, Lord of the noble Throne. 117 Whosoever calls upon another god along with God, for which he has no proof, his reckoning is with God. Truly the disbelievers will not prosper. 118 Say, “My Lord! Forgive and show mercy, for Thou art the best of those who are merciful.”

Commentary

① Truly the believers have prospered,

1 Commentators record a tradition that says that God created Adam with His Hand, wrote the Torah with His Hand, and planted (the Garden of) Eden with His Hand, and then said, “Truly the believers have prospered” (Ṭ) or that God said this when He created the Garden (Ṭ). “To prosper” has the literal sense of being successful or thriving and is also related to the notion of “cultivation” in an agricultural context; it is used in the Quran (e.g., 3:104; 6:21; 10:17; 30:38) to distinguish between those who thrive and flourish and those who do not do so in this life and especially in the Hereafter; see 2:5c.

② who are humble in their prayers,

2 In relation to one’s inward state, this verse is said to refer to an attitude of self-effacement and obedience (R). Al-Rāzī quotes two ḥādīths: “How many a worshipper stands to pray whose share is only toil and weariness,” and, “The servant has of his prayer only that which he understands.” With respect to one’s outward actions, it is said by some that before this verse was revealed the believers would look up toward the sky or elsewhere when standing in prayer, and that afterwards (as is common for worshippers to this day) the believers would keep their eyes on the place where they would touch the ground in prostration (R, Ṭ), though in some places worshippers look forward and slightly downwards. That they are humble is also interpreted to refer to the stillness with which one should perform the prayer, or else it refers to an attitude of fear during the prayer (Ṭ). Humble renders khāshi^c, from a root that evokes the sense of eyes being lowered or cast down and also has the sense of physical lowliness and withering, as in 54:7; 68:43; 70:44; and 79:9. In the Islamic spiritual tradition, the attainment and maintenance of a state of humility in prayer is an essential part of spiritual discipline; it is intimately connected with the practice of the virtues outside of prayer, as described in the subsequent verses, together with the contemplation of God’s Qualities and one’s own infirmities (Aj).

3 Idle talk is also described as a practice to be avoided in 25:72 and 28:55, and its absence reflects a dimension of the felicity of the Hereafter as described in 19:62; 52:23–25; and 78:35. It is described as talk that is forbidden, undesirable, or permissible but unnecessary, though some limit its definition strictly to talk that is forbidden (R).

④ and who give the alms,

4 Alms (zakāh) can refer to charity in general, but in the Islamic context the term came to denote the required yearly alms paid from accumulated liquid wealth; see 5:12c; 6:141; 9:60, 75–76, 103; 73:20; 98:5.

⑤ and who guard their private parts,

5 Guarding one's private parts (furūj; cf. 24:31; 33:35; 70:29) refers to abstaining from illicit sexual relations; see commentary on 24:30–31.

⑥ save from their spouses or those whom their right hands possess, for then they are not blameworthy—

6–7 On the concept of what right hands possess and related issues, see 4:24c.

⑧ and who keep their trusts and their covenant,

8 See the nearly identical verse in 70:32. On trusts (amānah), see also 2:283;

4:58; 8:27. The concept of covenant (^c*ahd*, e.g., 2:40; 6:152; 36:60) and related terms such as pact/covenant (mīthāq, e.g., 2:63; 5:70; 57:8) and promise/tryst (mī^cād) are significant aspects of the Quran’s language relating to the relationship between human beings and God; see 70:32–33c.

9 Being mindful (yuhāfiẓūn) of one’s prayers is also mentioned in 2:238; 6:92; and 70:34. In addition to being linked to the attitude of humility mentioned in v. 2, it is also interpreted to mean that one should pray in a timely manner, that is, pray each of the five canonical prayers in the prescribed period of time during the day (R, Ṭ); see 70:34c. It can also mean to concentrate on and be present in the prayer.

⑩ It is they who are the heirs,

⑪ who shall inherit Paradise, abiding therein.

10–11 The inheritance of Paradise by the believers is also mentioned in 7:43 and 26:85; the inheritance of the earth is mentioned in 21:105 and 39:74. Here Paradise renders firdaws, a word with similar etymology as the word “paradise” in English, both derived from the Old Persian word for “garden.” A ḥadīth states, “When you ask God for something, ask Him for firdaws, for it is the middlemost part of the Garden, and the highest part of the Garden, whence flow the rivers of the Garden.”

⑫ And indeed We created man from a draught of clay.

12 For some, man (insān) here refers to the creation of Adam, while for others it refers to human beings in general (Ṭ); some add that clay is a reference to Adam himself (R). Elsewhere human beings are described as created from dried clay, made of molded mud (15:26, 28), a base fluid (32:8; 77:20), or dried clay, like earthen vessels (55:14), in addition to many references simply to clay (e.g., 6:2; 7:12; 17:61;

13 The drop refers to seminal fluid (see also 16:4; 18:37; 22:5; 35:11; 36:77; 40:67; 53:46; 75:37; 76:2; 80:19), and the secure dwelling place is the womb (R, Ṭ).

⑭ Then of the drop We created a blood clot, then of the blood clot We created a lump of flesh, then of the lump of flesh We created bones and We clothed the bones with flesh; then We brought him into being as another creation. Blessed is God, the best of creators!

14 On the blood clot and lump of flesh, see 22:5–6c, which also discusses the stages of the physical growth of human beings. Brought him into being as another creation is interpreted variously as the inbreathing of the spirit into what was previously only a form (Ṭ), the act of being born (Ṭ), or one's development into mature adulthood and the full realization of one's faculties (Q, R).

15–16 Cf. 7:25: He said, "Therein you shall live, and therein you shall die, and thence shall you be brought forth."

⑰ And indeed We created above you seven paths, and We were not heedless of creation.

17 The seven paths are interpreted by many commentators to mean the seven heavens (R, Ṭ). Paths renders ṭuruq (sing. ṭarīqah), and some commentators note that the verb ṭāraqa (from the same root, ṭ-r-q) means to place one thing over another, which would coincide with the traditional cosmology of the seven heavens being above one another as described in 71:15: Have you not considered how God created the seven heavens one upon another. For the seven heavens, see also 14:12; 65:12; 67:3–4c. Others say paths refers to the paths of the planets, meaning the five visible planets plus the sun and the moon (R), or to the celestial spheres in which, according to some traditional cosmologies, the planets move (aflāk; M). As a spiritual allegory, this verse is interpreted to refer to the veils or coverings upon the heart, which are constituted by human ignorance and vice and which must be overcome through spiritual discipline and the growth of virtue, so that the rains of spiritual blessings (v. 18) can reach the heart (Aj). That God is not heedless is a theme found also in 2:74, 85, 140, 149; 3:99; 6:132; 11:123; 27:93.

①⑧ And We sent down water from Heaven in due measure, and settled it in the earth, and We are able to make it disappear.

18 For in due measure, see also 43:11. The concept of measure (qadar) also appears in 13:17; 15:21; 42:27; and 54:49: Truly We have created everything according to a measure; see also 54:49c. Verses such as these are often interpreted as a spiritual allegory in which the earth symbolizes the receptive heart and the water symbolizes the blessings of knowledge and spiritual insight. On the spiritual interpretation of these natural phenomena, see 7:58c; 5:66c.

①⑨ And thereby We brought into being for you gardens of date palms and grapevines, wherein you have many fruits and whereof you eat, 19 Date palms and grapevines, symbols of bounty and blessing, are also mentioned in 2:266; 13:4; 36:34; see also 36:34c.

②⑩ and a tree issuing forth from Mount Sinai that produces oil and a seasoning for eating.

20 The tree in this verse is understood to be the olive (Q). A seasoning (ṣibgh) is generally understood to be a liquid condiment such as olive oil or vinegar; it is related by root to the word for “dye” and “baptism.” Some commentators believe that the word rendered Sinai, saynā, simply means “blessed” or “beautiful” and is not the proper name of the mountain associated with Moses and the Israelites (Ṭ), though al-Ṭabarī argues that there is no such adjective in Arabic. On Mount Sinai, see also 2:63–64c; 4:154c; the introduction to Sūrah 52; 95:2c.

21 And truly in cattle there is a lesson for you: We give you to drink from that which is in their bellies, and in them you have many uses, and some of them you eat.

22 And upon them, and upon ships, are you carried.

21–22 On the meaning of cattle (anʿām), see 5:1c; 6:143–44c. The benefits of cattle are also mentioned in 16:5–8; 36:71–73; 40:79–80; 43:12–13. The imagery of seafaring as a blessing bestowed by God is also mentioned in 14:32; 17:66; 22:65; 30:46; 31:31; 43:12. Seafaring as a symbol for the spiritual state of human beings is also discussed in 2:164c; 10:22c; 22:65c; 30:46c; 35:12c.

23 And We indeed sent Noah to his people, and he said, “O my people! Worship God! You have no god other than Him. Will you not be reverent?”

23 The refrain Worship God! You have no god other than Him also appears in v. 32. It is also spoken in Sūrah 7 in succession by Noah (v. 59), Hūd (v. 65), Ṣāliḥ (v. 73), and Shuʿayb (v. 85), and similarly in Sūrah 11 by the last three prophets in vv. 50, 61, and 84, respectively (in which sūrah the story of Noah also precedes these three). This sequential arrangement in the stories of these prophets is evoked by v. 44: We sent Our messengers in succession.

24 But the notables who disbelieved among his people said, “This is only a human being like yourselves, desiring to set himself above you. And had God willed, He would have sent down angels. We heard not of this from our fathers of old.

24 Cf. 11:27. Objections based upon the fact that prophets were mere human beings rather than angels is also described in 14:10; 21:3; 26:154, 186; 36:15. Notables renders mala', which can also mean assembly (as in 2:246; 38:69) or “leaders/leadership.” The Quran also discusses the notables of Pharaoh (23:46), the queen of Sheba (27:29), the Quraysh (38:6), the people of Hūd (7:65), the people of Shu^cayb (7:88), and the king in the story of Joseph (12:43). Elsewhere the disbelievers explicitly wonder why an angel has not been sent with the prophet (6:8; 6:158; 11:12; 15:7; 17:92; 25:7, 21; 41:14; 43:53); see 6:8–9c.

25 He is but a man possessed. So wait concerning him, for a time.”

25 The idea of being possessed (bihi jinnah) or mad is also mentioned in 23:70 and 34:8. The term used here is related to the more common term majnūn (also rendered “possessed”), which evokes the word “jinn” and the notion of being possessed by them. Both Arabic terms can also mean “insane” without reference to supernatural influences.

26 Cf. v. 39.

27 So We revealed unto Him, “Build the Ark before Our eyes and by Our Revelation. Then when Our Command comes and the oven gushes forth, place therein two of every kind, and thy family except those against whom the word has already gone forth. And address Me not concerning those who did wrong; surely they shall be drowned.

28 And when thou mountest the Ark, thou and those with thee, say,

27–28 On Noah’s Ark, see 7:64c; 11:37c; the Ark is also mentioned in 10:73; 26:119; 36:41. The oven gushes forth (fār al-tanūr; cf. 11:40) is interpreted to mean either the break of dawn or that the face of the earth would gush forth; according to some, tanūr refers to the highest and best place on earth (Ṭ), while others say it refers to a literal oven, and when water comes out of it, that will be a sign that the flood is coming (R, Ṭ). And address Me not concerning those who did wrong (cf. 11:37) is similar to 11:46, where God responds to Noah’s lament about his son’s being drowned with the rest of his people. It is also related in theme to 9:113, which prohibits the Prophet and the believers from praying for forgiveness for those idolaters whose destiny as inhabitants of the Hellfire has become clear; all of these verses place a limit on the extent of one’s concern for those who have made their own decision to oppose God’s Will; see 9:113–14c.

29 Harbor in this verse renders a word derived from the root n-z-l and refers to God allowing the Ark to settle in a blessed place. The phrase could also be rendered, “Cause me to disembark in a blessed place,” in the sense of disembarking from the Ark (Q).

③⁰ Truly in that are signs, and truly We put [mankind] to the test.”

30 The fact that God put [mankind] to the test—that is, tried previous peoples (Q)—is meant to show the Prophet that other prophets also experienced what he did (Ṭ). Putting human beings to the test is inherent in God’s Nature, since He created death and life that He may try you as to which of you is most virtuous in deed (67:2); see commentary on 29:2–3.

31 The notion of a generation (qarn) succeeding other generations appears repeatedly in the Quran (6:6; 10:13; 11:116; 19:74, 98; 20:128; 25:38; 28:43, 45, 78; 32:26; 36:31; 38:3; 46:17; 50:36), and 17:17 mentions Noah specifically, How many a generation have We destroyed after Noah! The generations of the past are often mentioned as proof of the world’s ephemerality and as reminders of God’s Ability to destroy those who do not heed His message. Some commentators attempt to speculate which people are being discussed in this verse—some say the ʿĀd, others the Thamūd—but as al-Qurṭubī notes, there is no explicit identification given in this verse.

32 And We sent among them a messenger from among themselves, [saying], “Worship God! You have no god other than Him. Will you not be reverent?”

32 See commentary on 23:23, which is similar in wording.

33 And the notables of his people who disbelieved and denied the meeting of the Hereafter, and unto whom We had given luxury in the life of this world, said, “This is but a human being like you, eating of what you eat, and drinking from what you drink.

34 So if you obey a human being like yourselves, then surely you will be losers.

33–34 See v. 24, where the notables’ fear is that Noah desires to rule over them. Whom We had given luxury in the life of this world refers to those who were granted ease and privilege (see also 11:116; 17:16; 21:13). See also 25:7, where the disbelievers reportedly say of the Prophet Muhammad, What ails this Messenger, who eats food and walks in the markets? Why is there not an angel sent down unto him to be a warner with him?

35 Does he promise you that when you are dead and are dust and bones, you shall indeed be brought forth?

35 The notion of the revival of human beings who have become mere dust and bones, usually invoked in the form of an objection posed by those who balk at the possibility of bodily resurrection, is also mentioned in 17:49, 98; 23:82; 37:16, 53; 56:47; the revival of dead bones is also mentioned in a different context in 36:78 and 79:11. Brought forth is literally “caused to leave [it]”, meaning caused to leave the earth in which they lie when they are given life on the Last Day.

36 Far-fetched, far-fetched is that which you are promised.

36 Far-fetched, far-fetched renders hayhāt hayhāt, literally signifying “far away, far away,” evoking the sense of something unlikely, ridiculous, or impossible (Q, Ṭ).

37 There is naught but our life in this world: we die and we live, and we will not be resurrected.

37 This verse is similar to 6:29, but it adds we die and we live, meaning that there is only the life and death of this world (R) and that some die and others take their place (Ṭ).

38 He is but a man fabricating lies against God, and we do not believe him.”

38 Even the idolatrous Arabs who worshipped idols and acknowledged the existence of God still denied the Hereafter and the Resurrection, which is to say that they limited the scope of reality to this life even though they did, in a way, affirm the existence of a higher power. Here the people espouse the same belief; they accuse the messenger of telling falsehoods about God and deny any importance to God for human beings beyond this world.

39 Cf. v. 26.

40 He said, “In a little while they shall become remorseful.”

40 Remorseful can also mean “regretful”; see also 5:31–32; 26:157; 49:6.

41 So the Cry seized them rightly, and We made them into dross; so away with the wrongdoing people!

41 The Cry (ṣayḥah) is understood to be the literal shout of Gabriel that causes death itself, a great quaking, or the death and punishment themselves (R); see also 11:67, 94; 15:73, 83; 29:40. Rightly indicates it was a just punishment (R). On dross, which is usually understood to mean leaves or grass that are borne on a torrent of water, also see 87:5.

42 Then after them We brought into being other generations.

42 See 23:31c.

43 No community can hasten its term, nor delay it.

43 Term (ajal) most often refers to the end of something and is normally understood to refer to the event of someone’s death, but al-Rāzī also speculates that it could refer to the period when these peoples are to live on earth. The idea of people not being able to hasten or delay God’s Will appears also in 7:34; 16:61; 34:30.

④④ Then We sent Our messengers in succession. Whenever there came unto a community its messenger, they would deny him. So We caused them to follow one another, and made them the objects of stories. So away with a people who believe not!

44 God caused those communities to follow one another (R) and made them the objects of stories (aḥādīth, sing. ḥadīth or uḥdūthah), meaning that God either caused them to be spoken about (ḥadīth) or caused them to be something spoken about with amazement or wonder (uḥdūthah; Q, R), but not in a positive sense (Q).

④⑤ Then We sent Moses and his brother Aaron with Our signs and a manifest authority

④⑥ to Pharaoh and his notables. But they waxed arrogant and were a haughty people.

45–46 By signs some understand Moses’ various miracles, such as his white hand (20:22), his staff turning into a serpent (20:69), and the plagues wrought on Pharaoh’s people (R). The manifest authority refers to the clarity and persuasive power of the signs with which Moses and Aaron came (R). The idea of Moses bringing a manifest authority also appears in 4:153; 11:96; 40:23.

④⑦ They said, “Shall we believe in two human beings like us, while their people are slaves we possess?”

47 Slaves describes the material relationship between the two peoples—the Egyptians literally owned the Israelites—but it also evokes the worshipful attitude expected from the underlings when Pharaoh says, I am your lord most high (79:24; R). The disdain expressed by Pharaoh and his people echoes that in the words spoken by the notables of Noah’s community in v. 34.

48 But they denied them, and so were among the destroyed.

49 And indeed We gave unto Moses the Book, that haply they may be guided.

48–49 Moses was given the Torah after the destruction of the Egyptians; as evidence for this al-Rāzī employs 28:43: And indeed We gave unto Moses the Book—after We had destroyed the former generations. The they in that haply they may be guided refers to the Children of Israel.

50 And We made the son of Mary and his mother a sign, and We gave them refuge in a high place of stillness and a flowing spring.

50 For the account of Jesus and Mary, see 3:35–55 and Sūrah 19. They were made a sign through the miraculous birth of Jesus (R). The high place of stillness and a flowing spring is understood by some commentators to refer to the twelve-year period of time when Jesus, Mary, and Joseph lived in exile away from their home (R). High place (rabwah) is rendered hill in 2:265; see 2:264–65c.

51 O messengers! Eat of the good things and work righteousness. Truly I know what you do.

51 That this verse is addressed to the messengers as a group is interpreted to mean that each messenger was given this message (R), or it is addressed to the Prophet himself, but it is done so in the plural form in order to signal that this is a message common to all the messengers (R). Good things renders ṭayyibāt, a word that appears especially in connection with the Blessings God bestows upon human beings (e.g., 2:57, 172; 5:4; 20:81).

52 And truly this community of yours is one community, and I am your Lord, so reverence Me.

52 This verse is very similar to 21:92, differing only in the command so reverence Me rather than so worship Me. The phrase one community (ummah) is understood to mean a religious community whose unity is based on a common belief in the One God, but does not preclude differences in “laws” (sharā’i‘), which refers to obligations specific to the different religious communities, such as fasting and canonical prayers (R); in this interpretation this community of yours refers to all revealed religions. Different descriptions and categories of the community of believers are also given in 2:143; 3:110; and 22:78. On related questions, also see the essay “The Quranic View of Sacred History and Other Religions.”

53 But they made their affair to be founded upon different scriptures, each party exulting in what it had.

53 On the question of differing over the interpretations of scriptures, see 3:19c; 6:65c; and 98:4c, which discuss how each religious community split into factions after it had been given unitive knowledge in the form of Divine Revelation; on this question, see also 3:105; 30:32; 42:14. Here scriptures renders zubur (different from zabūr but related by root; see 35:25c), and according to this reading these communities split, and each followed its own scriptures or religious books, so that it led to a proliferation of scriptures, evoking for al-Rāzī the image of pieces of iron, which is also related to the root z-b-r. However, zubur is interpreted by others to simply mean “pieces,” in which case it refers to the splitting off of a religion into various sects.

54 So leave them in their heedlessness for a time.

54 Heedlessness renders ghamrah, which in its most literal sense refers to water deeper than the height of a person and which is understood to indicate ignorance and confusion (R). The phrasing of this verse is similar to 6:91: Say, “Allāh,” then leave them to play at their vain discourse; and 6:110: We shall leave them to wander confused in their rebellion.

55 Do they reckon that, [on account of] the wealth and the children that We have provided them, 56 We hasten unto good for them? Nay, but they are unaware!

55–56 These verses deny that God would hasten good for those who disbelieve by giving them wealth and children; the same phrasing is used in v. 61 to describe those who hasten toward good works themselves. Hasten unto good for them alludes to the goods of this world possessed by the disbelievers but not by the believers (R); this verse is meant to convey that they who are unaware—the idolaters or disbelievers—should not take such possessions as a sign of Divine Favor. Some commentators note that this means that all worldly wealth and possessions are given to human beings as a trial, and that in the case of disbelievers such wealth and children only serve to entrench them in their folly and worldliness; that is, far from blessing them, God is “leading them,” through these possessions, toward their own ruin (Q).

57 Truly those who are in awe for fear of their Lord, 57 In awe renders mushfiq, which al-Rāzī describes as fear combined with weakness and tenderness, and he notes an interpretation that sees this awe or anxiety as the pinnacle of the true fear of God, as it is a result of vigilance and persistence in obedience to Him (R).

58 and those who believe in the signs of their Lord, 58 Here signs refers to created things, all of which point to God (R) through their symbolic meaning and in fact their very existence; for a description of the different kinds of signs in the Quran, see 2:106c.

59 and those who ascribe not partners unto their Lord,

59 “Ascribing partners unto God” is understood to encompass not only outright idolatry, but also the hidden ascription of partners to God, meaning a preoccupation with things other than God that prevents one from being devoted to God with complete sincerity (R). On the notion of hidden idolatry, see also 3:31c.

60 and those who give what they give while their hearts quake with fear that they shall return to their Lord—

61 it is they who hasten toward good deeds, and are foremost in them.

60–61 Give what they give can refer to both religious and spiritual obligations, such as the giving of alms, and any transaction between people, such as the payment of debts (R). According to a ḥadīth, ‘Ā’ishah asked the Prophet, “Does give what they give while their hearts quake with fear refer to those who commit fornication, drink wine, and steal while fearing God on account of it?” The Prophet responded, “No, O Daughter of [Abū Bakr] al-Ṣiddīq. Rather, it is the man who prays, fasts, and gives charity and fears God on account of it.” Being foremost (sābiq) appears in 9:100 and 56:10 and refers to those of the highest level of virtue and the most illustrious spiritual station in the Hereafter; see 56:10c.

62 And We task no soul beyond its capacity, and with Us is a Book that speaks in truth. And they shall not be wronged.

62 That no soul is tasked beyond its capacity, an idea important in both spirituality and the practice of Islamic Law, is also mentioned in 2:233, 286; 6:152; 7:42; see commentary on 2:284–86. This verse is similar to 45:29, which also mentions the Book that speaks in truth (bi’l-ḥaqq), and similar in message to the record of deeds from which human beings will read in the Hereafter, mentioned in 18:49: What a book this is! It leaves out nothing, small or great, save that it has taken account thereof.

63 Nay, indeed their hearts are engrossed away from this, and they have other deeds besides which they undertake,

63 Their hearts is understood to refer to the hearts of disbelievers (R). Some read other deeds besides which they undertake in the future tense, so that it would be rendered, “other deeds besides which they will undertake” (R), referring to their intention to continue in their bad behavior.

64 till, when We seize those of them who lived in luxury with the punishment, behold, they shall implore!

65 Implore not today! Truly you will not be helped by Us!

64–65 On those who lived in luxury (mutraf), see 34:34c. This verse is usually interpreted as referring to the punishment of the Hereafter, though some commentators connect it with the defeat suffered by the idolaters at the Battle of Badr (R).

66 My signs were recited unto you, but you used to turn on your heels, 67 waxing arrogant on account thereof, talking foolishly by night.

66–67 The idolaters opposed the Quran in three ways: by distancing themselves from it, acting arrogantly, and talking foolishly by night, a phrase that refers to their gathering in the environs of the Ka^cbah at night to call the Quran the product of magic or poetry and to insult the Prophet (R). In connection with talking foolishly by night, al-Qurṭubī mentions that the Prophet did not like to sleep before the night prayer (‘ishā’) or engage in conversation afterwards, saying that the prayer covers over the sins of the day and engaging in foolish talk at night seals the day with idleness and falsehood.

68 Have they not contemplated the Word, or has there come unto them that which came not unto their forefathers?

68 The Word is the Quran (Q); see also 4:82: Do they not contemplate the Quran? Some interpret the second question in this verse to mean, “Do they have some promise against punishment that their fathers did not have, and indeed no one has?” (Q). Others say this question points out that they have received a revelation that their fathers did not receive and they should thus be all the more grateful for it (IK, Ṭ), as alluded to in one interpretation of 36:6: That thou mayest warn a people whose fathers were not warned; so they were heedless.

69 Or do they not know their Messenger, and so deny him?

69 An important aspect of the biography (sīrah) of the Prophet is to point out that, far from being a marginal or unknown figure in his community, he came from a noble (though not wealthy) lineage and was famous for his honesty and trustworthiness, having earned the epithet al-Amīn, or “the Trustworthy.” Commentators explain that this verse reminds Muhammad’s people that the man they deny is no stranger to them (IK, Q, R, Ṭ).

70 Or do they say, “He is possessed?” Rather, he has brought them the truth, but most of them are averse to the truth.

70 On possessed (cf. 34:8), see 23:25c. The disbelievers are said to be averse to the truth out of jealousy and hidebound devotion to their customs (Q).

71 Were the truth to follow their caprices, the heavens and the earth and those therein would have been corrupted. Nay, We gave them their reminder, but they turned away from their reminder.

71 Were the truth to follow their caprices is understood to mean, “If the truth were in accord with their desires” (Q) or “If the upholder of truth were to obey their desires” (Q). It may also be interpreted metaphysically to mean that if reality were to be as they desired, the order of the heavens and earth would be corrupted because the desires of human beings are chaotic and most often at odds with one another, as described in 21:22, where it is said of the heavens and the earth: Were there gods other than God in them, they would surely have been corrupted. The reminder refers to the Quran and the truths it contains (R).

72 Dost thou ask any recompense of them? For thy Lord's recompense is better, and He is the best of providers.

72 The theme of messengers asking no recompense appears often in the Quran (e.g., 11:29, 51; 26:109, 127, 145, 164, 180; 34:47; 36:21; 38:86).

73 Surely thou callest them unto a straight path.

74 And truly those who believe not in the Hereafter are deviating from the path.

73-74 On the straight path, see 1:6c.

75 And were We to show them mercy and remove whatever evil was upon them, they would surely persist, wandering confused in their rebellion.

75 Whatever evil was upon them can refer to hunger and other worldly afflictions or to trials such as warfare (R). This is similar to 43:50: And when We removed the punishment from them, behold, they reneged. The phrase wandering confused, describing those who are trapped in a state of spiritual blindness, also appears in 2:15; 6:110; 7:186; 10:11; 15:72; 27:4.

76 And We already seized them with the punishment, but they did not yield to their Lord, nor are they humble, 76 The punishment in this verse is understood to refer to afflictions of hunger and drought, to which the disbelievers responded with haughtiness and obstinacy rather than humility, patience, and obedience (Ṭ). Some understand the punishment mentioned in this verse to refer to the story of a certain Thumāmah ibn Uthāl, the chief of Banū Ḥanīfah, who embraced Islam and then—because, according to some, he was mistreated by Quraysh on his visit to Makkah—placed a boycott on the Quraysh that caused them considerable suffering. The Quraysh asked the Prophet to have the embargo lifted on the grounds that it violated the Treaty of Ḥudaybiyyah (see the introduction to Sūrah 48), which he did. Other verses relating to the idea that one must humble oneself in affliction include 6:42–43; 7:94, 130.

77 till, when We open upon them a gate of severe punishment, behold, they despair therein.

77 Commentators say this verse refers to the gates of Hell (R), or the eventual conquest of Makkah by the Prophet (Q), or the triumph of the Muslims at the Battle of Badr (Q, R, Ṭ).

78 He it is Who brought into being for you hearing, sight, and hearts. Little do you give thanks!

78 Hearing, sight, and hearts are all in their inward reality organs of knowledge and spiritual consciousness mentioned together in several Quranic verses (6:46; 32:9; 46:27; 67:23); they are subject to being sealed, covered over, and rendered blind (including hearts); see 2:7c; 6:46c; 32:9c.

79 He it is Who created you on the earth, and unto Him shall you be gathered.

79 Commentators point out that the verb translated by created (dharaʿa) also has the sense of “to spread out” or “to scatter” (Q, R), thus contrasting with humanity being gathered on the Day of Resurrection even from the far-flung corners of the earth (IK).

80 And He it is Who gives life and causes death, and unto Him belongs the variation of the night and the day. Will you not, then, understand?

81 Nay, but they say the like of that which was said by those of old.

80–81 On giving life and causing death, see 2:28c and 53:44, and on the variation of the night and day, also see 2:164 and 3:190.

82 They say, “What, when we have died and are dust and bones, are we to be resurrected?”

83 We and our fathers were certainly warned of this before. These are naught but fables of those of old.”

82–83 The denial of the resurrection of dust and bones, namely, bodily remains, is mentioned frequently in the Quran (e.g., 17:49, 98; 36:78; 37:16–17, 53; 50:3; 56:47; 79:11). The disbelievers’ attempts to dismiss the claims set forth in the Quran as nothing more than fables of those of old is also mentioned in 6:25; 8:31; 25:5; 27:68; 46:17; 68:15.

84 Say, “Whose is the earth and whosoever is upon it, if you know?”

85 They will say, “God’s.” Say, “Will you not, then, take heed?”

86 Say, “Who is the Lord of the seven heavens and the Lord of the great Throne?”

87 They will say, “God’s.” Say, “Will you not then be reverent?”

88 Say, “Who is it in Whose Hand lies the dominion of everything, who protects but is not protected against, if you know?”

89 They will say, “God’s.” Say, “How then are you bewitched?”

84–89 The series of questions and answers in this passage point to the paradox that many of the disbelievers accept that the heavens and the earth all belong to God, yet do not believe that God could create them anew or that God could create and sustain the heavens and the earth without “helpers” (R). In some manuscripts the word God (Allāh) in vv. 87 and 89 is read so that there is no preposition (Q, R, T), in which case, the answer to the questions posed in v. 86 and v. 88 would both be rendered, “They will say, ‘God.’” According to this reading, the questions are answered directly, since they begin with the interrogative “who.” But according to the reading reflected in this translation, the answer God’s means, “These belong to God,” and refers in v. 86 to the seven heavens and the great Throne and in v. 88 to the dominion of everything and the description who protects but is not protected against. For al-Rāzī, the meaning in either case is the same.

Dominion renders malakūt, a word that commentators understand as an intensive form of mulk, or “sovereignty” (Q, R; see 67:1c), interpreted here to mean the “treasuries” (khazā’in) of things (T); for the relation between the two, see 36:83c. Protects but is not protected against means that none can hinder God and none should expect to find security against God, in either this world or the Hereafter (Q). Bewitched refers to being misled or fooled by Satan (Q, R).

90 Nay, We brought them the truth, and indeed they are liars.

90 The truth is understood to mean the religion God sent through His Prophet (T).

91 God has not taken any child, and neither are there any gods with Him, for then each god would take away what he created, and some of them would overcome others. Glory be to God above that which they ascribe!

91 The assertion that God does not have offspring (see also, e.g., 10:68; 18:4; 19:88; 21:26; 112:3) is thought here to pertain to the idolaters' assertion that the angels were the daughters of God (see 16:57; 37:149–53; 43:16; 52:39; 53:19–23). The present verse highlights the relativity introduced when one speaks of multiple gods and points out that a god that can be overcome could not be logically called a god (Q). This verse resembles the structure of the argument offered in 21:22: Were there gods other than God in them (the heavens and the earth), they would surely have been corrupted.

92 Knower of the Unseen and the seen! Exalted is He above the partners they ascribe!

92 God is also referred to as Knower of the Unseen and the seen, meaning of what is perceivable by the physical senses and what is not, in 6:73; 9:94, 105; 13:9; 23:92; 32:6; 34:3; 39:46; 59:22; 62:8; 64:18; see 9:94c: 59:22c.

93 Say, “My Lord! If Thou showest me what they are promised, 94 my Lord, then place me not among the wrongdoing people!”

95 And surely We are able to show you what We promise them.

93–95 What they are promised refers to the punishment promised the wrongdoers, and thus the supplication place me not is a plea to not be among them if the punishment comes to them (Q, R, Ṭ). We are able to show you refers to the punishment that God can deliver at any moment (Ṭ), which some consider to be the sufferings the idolaters experienced on account of their rejection of the truth (Q), either in this world or the Hereafter (R).

96 Repel evil by that which is better. We know best what they ascribe.

96 This universal commandment (Q) means that in the face of the idolaters' lies and taunts one should reply with words of peace and greeting (Ṭ), reminding them of the Blessings of God and using beautiful discourse based on evidence and persuasion (R). See also 41:34: Repel [evil] with that which is better; and 29:46: And dispute not with the People of the Book, save in the most virtuous manner; see commentary on 41:34.

97 And say, “My Lord! I seek refuge in Thee from the incitements of the satans.

97 The incitements of the satans can refer to their whispering to the soul or to their goading an enemy to cause one harm (R); see 114:4c. Such incitements distract from the remembrance of God (Q). Some commentators even describe these incitements in terms of “choking” or “throttling” by Satan (Ṭ).

98 And I seek refuge in Thee, my Lord, lest they should be present with me.”

98 The idea of a satan being present to a human being does not imply some extraordinary state of possession, but rather the typical state of affairs in which human beings find themselves. In traditional Islamic psychology, human beings are subject to both satanic and angelic influences while retaining the power of will to resist or conform to either. On the influence of Satan, also see 4:38, 119; 14:22c; 43:36–37c.

99 Till, when death comes to one of them, he says, “My Lord! Return me, 100 that haply I may work righteousness with regard to that which I left.” Nay, indeed these are words that he speaks. And behind them is a barrier till the Day they are resurrected.

99–100 Till is understood to follow the end of v. 83, which recounts the dismissive words of the disbelievers; that is, they will persist in such rejection until death comes (Q). This verse has subject matter similar to that of 63:10: And spend of that which We have provided you before death comes upon one of you and he says, "My Lord, wouldst that Thou grant me reprieve until a term nigh, that I may give charity and be among the righteous!" The desire of those who have died to return to the world is also mentioned vividly in 32:12: Our Lord! We have seen and we have heard; so send us back that we may work righteousness; see also 2:167; 26:102; 35:37; 39:58.

Some commentators understand the plea for return in this verse to be uttered while one is still alive; after an exclamation to God (My Lord!), return me is addressed to the angels who come to take the soul at the moment of death (R, Ṭ). Others understand this request to be spoken after death, after beholding the Fire (R). Behind them is a barrier refers to the truth that they will not return to the life of this world (Ṭ). Barrier renders barzakh, a word that connotes either a barrier or an isthmus between two things; see commentary on 3:169–71 and also the essay “Death, Dying, and the Afterlife in the Quran.” Some commentators understand These are words that he speaks to mean, “These are words that he could not but speak” (Ṭ).

101 And when the trumpet is blown, there shall be no kinship between them that Day, nor will they question one another.

101 The trumpet that signals the end of the world and the impending Judgment is also mentioned in 18:99; 20:102; 27:87; 36:51; 39:68; 50:20; 69:13; 74:8; 78:18; see also 6:73c; 39:68c. The breaking of worldly bonds is also mentioned in such verses as 22:2: On the day you see it, every nursing woman will forget what she nurses; and 80:34: That Day when a man will flee from his brother.

Regarding nor will they question one another (cf. 28:66), al-Rāzī raises the point that some verses say people will not question one another, while other verses say they will (e.g., 7:44–50; 37:27–32, 50; 52:25). He responds to this apparent incongruity by saying that the Day of Judgment is itself a long period of time (fifty thousand years according to him) composed of multifarious states, some of which are so overwhelming and terrifying that people are prevented from caring about anyone else and others allow people to pay attention to something beyond their own situation.

102 As for those whose scales are heavy, it is they who shall prosper.

103 And as for those whose scales are light, it is they who shall lose their souls, abiding in Hell.

102–3 For a discussion of the scales of deeds, see 101:6–9c. Lose their souls could also be rendered “lose themselves.”

104 The Fire will smite their faces, and they shall grimace therein.

104 Smite renders a verb that also means “to burn or scorch.” Other verses that contain a description of the Fire or punishment being meted out to human beings and manifested on human faces include 8:50; 10:27; 14:50; 17:97; 18:29; 25:34; 27:90; 33:66; 54:48; 67:27. According to some commentators, the grimace results from the disfigurement of the lips by the flames (Q, Ṭ).

105 “Were not My signs recited unto you, and you used to deny them?”

106 They will say, “Our Lord! Our wretchedness overwhelmed us, and we were a people astray.

105–6 The verb phrase rendered overwhelmed has the sense of taking possession or ownership of or dominion over something (R, Z). The disbelievers’ statement is understood to mean that they are describing God’s role in making them wretched, meaning that God destined in the Mother of the Book that they should be so (43:4; Ṭ). In this sense, it is not understood as a plea, but as a statement of fact (Q).

107 Our Lord! Remove us from it! Then if we revert, we shall be wrongdoers.”

107 The disbelievers will ask to be removed from the Fire (Ṭ). They will ask to return to the world to have a chance to perform good works, attesting that if they fail the second time, they will indeed be doers of wrong (R); on the desire to return to the world, see 23:99–100c.

108 He will say, “Be gone therein, and speak not to Me.”

108 On the deeper significance of God’s not speaking to human beings, understood as both a sign of disapproval and a punishment itself, see 2:174c.

109 Verily there was a group of My servants who would say, “Our Lord! We believe; so forgive us and have mercy upon us, and Thou art the best of those who are merciful.”

109 God as the best or most Merciful of those who are merciful also appears in 7:151; 12:64, 92; 21:83; 23:118.

110 But you took them in mockery, till it made you forget My remembrance, and you used to laugh at them.

110 On the concept of forgetting to remember God, see 9:67c; 45:34c. On the central practice of remembering (dhikr) God, see 4:103c; 13:28c; 33:41c; 29:45c; and the essay “The Quran and Sufism.” The mockery carried out by the disbelievers is a common trait ascribed to them (see, e.g., 2:14–15; 4:140; 5:57–58; 6:5; 31:6; 45:9, 35).

111 Truly today I have rewarded them for having been patient. Truly they are the triumphant.

111 On the concept of triumph (fawz) and the triumphant (fā’iz), often connected with the attainment of felicity in the Hereafter as well as victory over the world in a spiritual sense, see 5:119c.

112 He will say, “How many years did you tarry on earth?”

113 They will say, “We tarried a day or part of a day. But ask those who keep count.”

114 He will say, “You tarried but a little, if you but knew.”

112–14 On the experience of the Hereafter causing people to think of their entire life of this world as nothing more than a day or an hour, see 79:46c; see also 10:45; 17:52; 18:19; 30:55; 46:35; 79:46.

115 “Did you suppose, then, that We created you frivolously, and that you would not be returned unto Us?”

115 The Quran often asserts that God created the world in truth (e.g., 29:44; 30:8; 39:5; 44:39), not in play (e.g., 21:16; 44:38) or in vain (3:191). The question about returning to God (cf. 28:39) is posed in the context of the frequent assertion in the Quran that human beings will indeed return to God (e.g., 2:245; 6:36; 28:70) and that in fact all things return to God (e.g., 2:210; 3:83; 8:44; 11:123).

116 So, exalted is God, the True Sovereign; there is no god but He, Lord of the noble Throne.

116 True Sovereign can also be translated, “the Sovereign, the Truth.” Sovereign renders malik, which is typically translated “king,” but which directly links to “sovereignty” (mulk) and “dominion” (malakūt); see 36:83c and Sūrah 67. On the noble Throne, see 2:255c.

117 Whosoever calls upon another god along with God, for which he has no proof, his reckoning is with God. Truly the disbelievers will not prosper.

117 A proof (burhān) is a “demonstration” or “evidence” (Ṭ) that is clear and whose foundations are firm; the term is used similarly in 2:111; 21:24; 27:64; 28:75. Reckoning (ḥisāb) refers to the Judgment by God. The fact that it is a Divine responsibility to bring human beings to account and not a human one is also mentioned in 88:26: Then truly with Us lies their reckoning. Noah says in 26:113: Their reckoning is only by my Lord.

118 Say, “My Lord! Forgive and show mercy, for Thou art the best of those who are merciful.”

118 This verse echoes the prayer of the believers in v. 109.

Light

Al-Nūr is universally considered to be a Madinan sūrah (Q), although some say v. 58 is Makkan (Āl). Its title comes from the parable in the famous Light Verse (v. 35), a passage that has given rise to numerous mystical and symbolic interpretations throughout Islamic history. In addition, parables of a mirage (v. 39), the darkness beneath the waves of the sea (v. 40), and lightning (v. 43) employ the symbolism of light to describe the nature of human beings' inner reality.

Al-Nūr also is extremely significant not only for Islamic metaphysics and art but also for certain social and legal questions. Its opening verses deal with the punishment for adultery and lay out in detail the evidentiary standards for finding a person guilty of this crime (vv. 1–9). It is followed by a passage that deals with an accusation of adultery leveled against ʿĀʾishah, the youngest wife of the Prophet, and the response of the Muslim community to what was eventually declared to be a baseless slander (vv. 11–26).

Another important aspect of this sūrah is its focus on various rules of etiquette, such as those governing the visiting one another's homes (vv. 27–29, 61) and the proper comportment between men and women who are not related to one another, which includes rules on dress and modesty (vv. 30–31) as well as proper decorum with regard to privacy in one's home (vv. 58–60).

① A sūrah that We have sent down, and ordained, and in which We have sent down clear signs, that haply you may remember. ② As for the adulterer and the adulteress, flog them each one hundred lashes, and let not pity for them overcome you concerning God's Judgment, if you believe in God and the Last Day. And let their punishment be witnessed by a group of the believers. ③ The adulterer shall marry none but an adulteress or idolatress, and the adulteress shall marry none but an adulterer or idolater. And that is forbidden to the believers. ④ And as for those who accuse chaste women, but then do not bring four witnesses, flog them eighty lashes, and never accept any testimony from them. And it is they who are the iniquitous, ⑤ save those who repent thereafter and make amends, for truly God is Forgiving, Merciful. ⑥ And as for those who accuse their wives and have no witnesses but themselves, then the testimony of one of them shall be four testimonies, swearing by God that he is among the truthful, ⑦ and the fifth shall be that the curse of God be upon him if he is among the liars. ⑧ And the punishment shall be averted from her should she give four testimonies, swearing by God that he is among the liars, ⑨ and the fifth that God's Wrath shall come upon her if he is among the truthful. ⑩ And were it not for God's Bounty upon you, and His Mercy, and that God is Relenting, Wise! ⑪ Truly those who brought forth the lie were a group among you. Do not suppose it to be an evil for you. Rather, it is a good for you. Unto each man among them is the sin he committed. And he among them who undertook the greater part of it, his shall be a great punishment. ⑫ Why, when you heard it, did not the believing men and women think well of their own, and say, "This is a manifest lie"? ⑬ Why did they not bring forth four witnesses thereto? For when they brought not the witnesses, it is they who were then liars in the Eyes of God. ⑭ And were it not for God's Bounty upon you, and His Mercy, in this world and the Hereafter, a great punishment would have befallen you for having engaged [in vain talk] concerning it, ⑮ when you accepted it with your tongues, and spoke with your mouths that whereof you had no knowledge, supposing it to be slight, though it is great in the Eyes of God. ⑯ And why, when you heard it, did you not say, "It is not for us to speak of this! Glory be to Thee! This is a tremendous calumny!" ⑰ God exhorts you, lest you ever return to the like of it, if you are believers. ⑱ And God makes clear unto you the signs, and God is Knowing, Wise. ⑲ Truly those who desire that indecency be spread among those who believe, theirs shall be a painful punishment in this world and the Hereafter. God knows, and you know not. ⑳ And were it not for God's Bounty toward you, and His Mercy, and that God is Kind, Merciful! ㉑ O you who believe! Follow not the footsteps of Satan! And whosoever follows the footsteps of Satan, truly he enjoins indecency and wrong. And were it not for God's Bounty toward you, and His Mercy, not one of you would ever be pure. But God purifies whomsoever He will, and God is Hearing, Knowing. ㉒ And let not the men of bounty and means among you forswear giving to kinsfolk and the indigent and those who emigrated in the way of God. And let them pardon and forbear. Do you not desire that God forgive you? And God is Forgiving, Merciful. ㉓ Truly those who accuse chaste and heedless believing women are cursed in this world and the Hereafter, and theirs shall be a great punishment ㉔ on the day their tongues, their hands, and their feet bear witness against them as to that which they used to do. ㉕ On that Day God will pay them their just due in full, and they will know that God is the Manifest Truth. ㉖ Vile women are for vile men, and vile men are for vile women, and good women are for good men, and good men are for good women. They are innocent of what they say. Theirs is forgiveness and a generous provision. ㉗ O you who believe! Enter not houses other than your own, until you inquire and greet the dwellers thereof. That is better for you, that haply you may remember. ㉘ But if you find not anyone therein, then enter them not until permission is granted you. And if it is said to you, "Turn back," then turn back. That is purer for you, and God knows what you do. ㉙ There is no blame upon you for entering uninhabited houses wherein there is some good for you. And God knows what you disclose and what you conceal. ㉚ Tell the believing men to lower their eyes and guard their private parts. That is purer for them. Surely God is Aware of whatsoever they do. ㉛ And tell the believing women to lower their eyes and to guard their private parts, and to not display their adornment except that which is visible thereof. And let them draw their kerchiefs over their breasts, and not display their adornment except to their husbands, or their fathers, or their husbands' fathers, or their sons, or their husbands' sons, or their brothers, or their brothers' sons, or their sisters' sons, or their women, or those whom their right hands possess, or male attendants free of desire, or children who are innocent of the private areas of women. Nor let them stamp their feet such that the ornaments they conceal become known. And repent unto God all together, O believers, that haply you may prosper. 32 And marry those who are single among you, and the righteous among your male slaves and your female slaves. If they are poor, God will enrich them from His Bounty. And God is All-Encompassing, Knowing. 33 And let those who are unable to marry be chaste till God enriches them from His Bounty. And as for those among the ones whom your right hands possess who seek a contract [of emancipation] with you, contract with them if you know of any good in them, and give unto them from the Wealth of God, which He has given you. And compel not your female slaves into prostitution if they desire to be chaste, for the sake of seeking after the ephemerality of the life of this world. And whosoever compels them, then truly God, after their having been compelled, will be Forgiving, Merciful. 34 We have indeed sent down unto you clarifying signs and a description of those who have passed before you, and an exhortation for the reverent. 35 God is the Light of the heavens and the earth. The parable of His Light is a niche, wherein is a lamp. The lamp is in a glass. The glass is as a shining star kindled from a blessed olive tree, neither of the East nor of the West. Its oil would well-nigh shine forth, even if no fire had touched it. Light upon light. God guides unto His Light whomsoever He will, and God sets forth parables for mankind, and God is Knower of all things. 36 [It is] in houses that God has permitted to be raised and wherein His Name is remembered. He is therein glorified, morning and evening, 37 by men whom neither trade nor buying and selling distract from the remembrance of God, the performance of prayer, and the giving of alms, fearing a day when eyes and hearts will be turned about, 38 that God may reward them for the best of that which they have done, and increase them from His Bounty. And God provides for whomsoever He will without reckoning. 39 As for those who disbelieve, their deeds are like a mirage upon a desert plain which a thirsty man supposes is water, till when he comes upon it, he does not find it to be anything, but finds God there. He will then pay him his reckoning in full, and God is swift in reckoning. ④① Or like the darkness of a fathomless sea, covered by waves with waves above them and clouds above them—darknesses, one above the other. When one puts out one's hand, one can hardly see it. He for whom God has not appointed any light has no light. ④② Hast thou not considered that God is glorified by whosoever is in the heavens and on the earth, and by the birds spreading their wings? Each indeed knows its prayer and its glorification, and God knows that which they do. ④③ And unto God belongs sovereignty over the heavens and the earth, and unto God is the journey's end. ④④ Has thou not considered that God drives the clouds, then joins them together, then makes them as a heap, and then thou seest the rain come forth from amid them? And He sends down from the sky—from the mountains [of clouds] therein—hail, wherewith He smites whomsoever He will, and which He turns away from whomsoever He will. The flash of His lightning well-nigh takes away sight. ④⑤ God alternates the night and the day. Truly in that is a lesson for those possessed of sight. ④⑥ And God created every beast from water: among them are those that go upon their bellies, and among them are those that go upon two legs, and among them are those that go upon four. God creates whatsoever He will. Truly God is Powerful over all things. ④⑦ We have indeed sent down clarifying signs, and God guides whomsoever He will unto a straight path. ④⑧ And they say, "We believe in God and in the Messenger, and We obey." Then a group of them turn away thereafter, and believers they are not. ④⑨ And when they are called to God and His Messenger, that He may judge between them, behold, a group of them turn away. ④⑩ But if the right is theirs, they come unto Him submissively. ④⑪ Is there a disease in their hearts? Or do they doubt, or fear that God and His Messenger will deal unjustly with them? Nay, but it is they who are the wrongdoers. ④⑫ The only words of the believers when they are called unto God and His Messenger, that he may judge between them, will be to say, "We hear and we obey.” And it is they who shall prosper. 52 Whosoever obeys God and His Messenger, and who fears God and reverences Him, it is they who shall triumph. 53 And they swear by God with their most solemn oaths that, wert thou to command them, they would surely go forth. Say, “Swear not! [But give] honorable obedience! Surely God is Aware of whatsoever you do.” 54 Say, “Obey God and obey the Messenger.” But if they turn away, he is only accountable for that wherewith he has been burdened, and you are accountable for that wherewith you have been burdened. But if you obey him, you will be rightly guided, and naught is incumbent upon the Messenger save the clear proclamation. 55 God has promised those among you who believe and perform righteous deeds that He will surely make them vicegerents upon the earth, as He caused those before them to be vicegerents, and that He will establish for them their religion, which He has approved for them, and that He will surely change them from a state of fear to [one of] security. They will worship Me, not ascribing any partners unto Me. And whosoever disbelieves thereafter, it is they who are iniquitous. 56 And perform the prayer, and give the alms, and obey the Messenger, that haply you may receive mercy. 57 Do not suppose that the disbelievers thwart [aught] on the earth. The Fire will be their refuge—what an evil journey’s end! 58 O you who believe! Let those whom your right hands possess and those who have not come of age ask your leave three times: before the dawn prayer, when you doff your garments at noon, and after the night prayer—three times of privacy for you. Beyond these, there is no blame upon you or upon them should you go about [visiting] one another. Thus does God make clear unto you the signs, and God is Knowing, Wise. 59 And when the children among you come of age, let them ask leave as those before them asked leave. Thus does God make clear unto you His signs, and God is Knowing, Wise. 60 As for elderly women who no longer anticipate marriage, there is no blame upon them to doff their garments without displaying any ornament. And it is better for them to be modest, and God is Hearing, Knowing. 61 There is no fault against the blind, nor fault against the lame, nor fault against the sick, nor upon yourselves in that you eat from your houses, or your fathers' houses, or your mothers' houses, or your brothers' houses, or your sisters' houses, or your paternal uncles' houses, or your paternal aunts' houses, or your maternal uncles' houses, or your maternal aunts' houses, or those whose keys you possess, or [those of] your friends. There is no blame upon you whether you eat together or separately. So when you enter houses, greet each other with a salutation from God, blessed and good. Thus does God make clear unto you the signs, that haply you may understand. 62 Only they are believers who believe in God and His Messenger and who, when they are with him in a collective affair, go not forth until asking his leave. Truly those who ask thy leave, it is they who believe in God and His Messenger. So when they ask thy leave in some matter of theirs, give leave unto whomsoever thou wilt, and seek forgiveness for them from God. Truly God is Forgiving, Merciful. 63 Do not deem the Messenger's calling among you to be like your calling to one another. Indeed, God knows those among you who steal away under shelter. So let those who contradict his command be wary, lest a trial befall them or a painful punishment befall them. 64 Behold! Unto God belongs whatsoever is in the heavens and on the earth. God certainly knows [the state] you are in. On the day they will be returned unto Him, He will inform them of that which they did. And God is Knower of all things.

① A sūrah that We have sent down, and ordained, and in which We have sent down clear signs, that haply you may remember.

1 An implied subject at the start of this verse would have it begin, “This is a sūrah . . .” For some, ordained refers to the many important rulings that are legislated in this sūrah (R). The verb rendered by ordained (farada) also means “to allocate” or “to apportion,” in which case it is interpreted to mean that the Quran is revealed portion by portion (Q).

2 Adulterer and adulteress render zānī and zāniyah, respectively, which are derived from zinā, meaning unlawful sexual intercourse (by both married and unmarried persons; Q). Zinā is also mentioned in 17:32; 25:68; 60:12. A related word is faḥshā’ or fāḥishah, usually rendered “indecenty,” which often, though not always, refers to sexual misconduct in the Quran; for example, 4:15 refers to a fāḥishah (“indecenty”) that is usually understood to mean zinā (“adultery”).

According to most jurists, 4:15–16 promulgated the first punishments for adultery: As for those of your women who commit an indecenty, call four witnesses among you to bear witness against them. And if they bear witness, then confine them to their houses until death takes them, or until God appoints for them another way. And if two of those among you are guilty thereof, punish them both; but if they repent and make amends, then let them be. These punishments were then considered abrogated by 24:2. It is thought by many jurists and commentators that 24:2 was further abrogated or delimited by the punishment of stoning to death—established by the Prophet, but not in the Quran—for married adulterers (both male and female), while some believe that 24:2 had always been understood as applicable only to unmarried people.

Upholders of the penalty of stoning to death point to aḥādīth describing the Prophet enforcing a penalty of stoning to death for married adulterers, a practice also said to have been followed by the first caliphs. They also mention a verse from the Quran that prescribed the punishment of stoning whose “recitation” (tilāwah) was abrogated, while its legal status (ḥukm) remained; that is, although it is not found in the Quran, its ruling is still binding—a highly contested idea. These sources regarding stoning merit consideration in some detail.

The Jewish couple: In one account, often mentioned in the commentaries on 3:23 and 5:43–44, two Jews in Madinah of high station who were guilty of adultery came to the Prophet to decide their case. According to most accounts, they did so hoping to avoid the punishment of stoning recorded in the Torah by relying upon the reportedly more lenient law being brought by Muhammad. According to some accounts, the Prophet asked for the Torah and had the relevant passage read for him, while in others he asked the expertise of a learned Jew of Madinah. In some versions the couple confessed, and in other versions the sentence depended upon the testimony of eyewitnesses. In all accounts of the Jewish couple the Prophet resolutely vowed to follow the dictates of the Torah, and the couple were stoned to death.

Māʿiz ibn Mālik: In another account, a man identified as Māʿiz ibn Mālik, or simply “a man from [the tribe of] al-Aslam,” came to the Prophet to confess adultery, and at this initial confession the Prophet rebuffed him and sent him away. Undaunted, the man returned a second and then a third time and received the same reaction from the Prophet. After he confessed a fourth time, the Prophet ordered him stoned. In some versions, the Prophet thoroughly interrogated the man, asking if perhaps he only engaged in passionate acts other than intercourse, and then made inquiries about whether the man was known to be sane. According to some versions, the man asked the Prophet directly to stone him, while in other versions the man attempted to run from the stoning, crying that his people fooled him into confessing and that he never thought the Prophet would kill him. In these versions, when the Prophet heard of this, he asked why they did not let him go when he said that, so that perchance he could repent. In other versions, the Prophet met him and was the first to ask if it were true that he had committed the sin of adultery, to which the man replied in the affirmative, after which the Prophet warned the man that if he confessed a fourth time, he would be stoned.

The pregnant woman: In another account, a pregnant woman, sometimes identified as from the tribe of Juhaynah (or its subtribe Ghāmid), came and confessed her adultery, and even wondered if the Prophet would try to turn her away as he did with Māʿiz. The Prophet ordered her to go away until she gave birth; when she came back after the baby had been weaned, the Prophet ordered her stoned.

The ḥadīth of double punishment: According to this ḥadīth, the Prophet is reported to have said regarding adulterers, “God has come with a way pertaining to them: for the virgin with a virgin (bikr), one hundred lashes and a year’s exile, and the nonvirgin with the nonvirgin (thayyib), one hundred lashes and stoning.” Other versions exist with similar wording.

The employer’s wife: In yet another account, a man attempted to give a kind of compensation for his virgin son’s crime of adultery with his employer’s wife through a large payment of livestock. The Prophet ordered the virgin’s father to take back the goods. He then had the son lashed and exiled, and told the people to go to the woman and ask if she would confess; if she did, they were to stone her. She confessed, and they stoned her to death.

Sayings attributed to the Companions: In variations of an account attributed to ‘Umar ibn al-Khaṭṭāb, ‘Umar affirmed the penalty of stoning, warning others not to be led astray by the absence of such a penalty in the Quran; he maintained that he saw the Prophet enforce it and that “we” (presumably referring to the first Caliphs) also practiced it. The versions of what is attributed to ‘Umar vary significantly in their content, and some allude to a verse in the Quran that describes stoning (see below). Some accounts describe ‘Alī as having both lashed and stoned a woman and then saying, “We lashed in accordance with the Book of God and stoned in accordance with the wont of the Messenger of God.”

The “stoning verse”: According to some reports attributed to ‘Umar, there was a verse in the Quran that read, “And the shaykh and shaykhah, stone them outright,” with some variation in wording, such as the inclusion of “when they commit adultery.” Shaykh and shaykhah mean “old man” and “old woman,” respectively, which those jurists who accept the stoning verse interpret to mean nonvirgins or married people. This “stoning verse” is often cited as an example of “abrogation of the text but not the ruling,” unlike the usual kind of abrogation in which the text remains, but its legal status is overruled by another verse (see 2:106c).

The central legal problem pertaining to stoning to death for adultery is that 24:2 lays out a clear and detailed punishment for adultery, describing how and by whom the punishment is to be carried out, while making no mention of stoning or distinguishing between married and unmarried persons. In Islamic jurisprudence, abrogating or partly overturning an unambiguous text of the Quran requires a high standard for evidence—and it is only possible if one accepts that a ḥadīth can abrogate a part of the Quran, a view rejected by most religious authorities. The penalty of stoning is much more than an explanation or elucidation through the Prophet’s Sunnah of a general Quranic concept, as are, for example, the descriptions of how to pray or fast, which are not found detailed in the Quran, but which are transmitted in detail through Sunnah as recorded in the Ḥadīth. Rather, stoning is a more severe and different kind of punishment—indeed the harshest of all—applied to a class of people (married persons) not specified in the Quran. Elsewhere the Quran does explicitly assign different punishments for sexual misconduct, but these are to make the punishment of a slave half that of a free person (4:25) and to make the punishment of any wife of the Prophet—should she commit such an act—double that of an ordinary person (33:30; though this latter verse is not necessarily always interpreted in this way).

The text of the Quran does not, however, distinguish between the categories of married and unmarried as they relate to zinā (“adultery”) or faḥshāʾ (“indecenty”). Nor is there any other area in Islamic Law in which a distinction is made between young and old (shaykh); the nearest such distinction is between prepubescent children and adults, the latter of which are identified as those bearing full legal responsibility for their actions if they are sane. Thus, even if one can accept the existence of a verse that is no longer present in the Quran but is still legally binding, which notion does not rest on solid textual evidence, the use of shaykh and shaykhah (“old man,” “old woman”) only serves to confuse the issue, since an old person can be a virgin and a young person can be married. Furthermore, the doubling (33:30) and halving (4:25) of the punishment for adultery is incongruous with the punishment of stoning to death, which unlike lashing can by definition be neither doubled nor halved. The stoning punishment would also complicate the interpretation of the punishment shall be averted in v. 8. Since v. 8 refers unambiguously to married women, the punishment would be stoning according to the widely accepted interpretation, but the only punishment mentioned in the passage is lashes.

With respect to the relevant aḥādīth, the various versions of individual stoning accounts—such as that of Māʿiz ibn Mālik—often contradict each other on important details and contain errors and inconsistencies, such as misquotations from the Torah that amount to paraphrases of later Islamic legal maxims or the Quran itself (such as mention of four eyewitnesses seeing the act “as if seeing a kohl stick going into a kohl container,” referring to a stick used to apply kohl, a black substance sometimes rubbed around the eyes, being inserted into its container). There are, moreover, substantial incongruities between the different accounts. For example, in the cases of Māʿiz and the pregnant woman, the Prophet is portrayed as sparing no effort to give the confessor an opportunity to recant, while in the case of the Jewish couple no such efforts are made. In the case of Māʿiz, he investigates the matter thoroughly, while in the case of the employer’s wife, he simply sends a delegation to ask if she will confess and has her stoned with no similar stream of questioning. Some aḥādīth mention lashes and stoning combined, while others do not. Furthermore, some accounts mention banishment, but it is absent from other accounts. Though ʿUmar is said to have spoken of stoning, there is no record of either Abū Bakr or ʿUmar stoning anyone in the traditional histories. None of these ḥadīth accounts taken singly would seem to rise to the level of abrogating an unambiguous Quranic text, especially because they contradict each other, do not reinforce each other when they are taken together, and indeed seem to nullify each other. Despite this fact, many commentators and jurists do make the claim that the penalty of stoning to death is mutawātir, or “widely transmitted,” a technical term that refers to something so widely transmitted from disparate sources that it would be inconceivable for it to have been falsified.

Beyond such ambiguities, some basic logical questions arise, which are mentioned by al-Rāzī as objections on the part of the Khārijites. The Quran describes many kinds of transgressions including theft and murder, but does not go into the same level of detail for them as it does for adultery, and thus it is implausible that, in the midst of this detail, stoning, which is a more grievous punishment than all others mentioned in the Quran, would go unmentioned. It is also argued that no solitary ḥadīth could overturn the plain sense of the Quran, much less on a question as momentous as imposing the severest of penalties.

Jurists typically place the penalty of stoning for adultery in the category of ḥudūd (sing. ḥadd), referring to those corporal punishments that are mandatory once guilt is established. Another category of punishments, called taʿzīr, are those discretionary actions that can be taken by a legitimate political authority but that do not constitute Divinely mandated punishments. This distinction is not necessarily rigid, however, as it is widely accepted that ʿUmar suspended the ḥadd punishment for theft during a time of famine. Some have speculated that if indeed the Prophet did have people stoned, it was a taʿzīr, not a ḥadd. Among these jurists, some speculate that those incidents of stoning, even if taken as historical events, took place before the revelation of 24:2, and thus 24:2 is the final and abrogating punishment for adultery and stoning is at a maximum a possibility of taʿzīr. In one account, when the jurist al-Shaybānī asked the Companion ʿAbd Allāh ibn Abī Awfā about stoning, he affirmed that the Prophet did stone, but he did not know whether it was before or after the revelation of al-Nūr (the present sūrah).

Regarding the requirement that the lashing be witnessed by a group, there are disagreements over the minimum number required, some saying one or more, others saying four (corresponding to the number of witnesses necessary to ascertain the guilt of adultery), others saying two (a usual number for witnesses), and others saying three, which is the minimum number for being called a “group” (Q, Ṭ).

Al-Qurṭubī, surveying the legal rulings, describes the punishment of lashes as follows: The lashes should land upon one's back, but not the head; men are to expose their skin (according to some), but women retain a layer of clothing. They remain standing and are not bound. The whip to be used is described as neither too hard nor too soft, and the blows, although meant to cause pain, should not be so hard as to draw blood. The person administering the lashes is not to raise his arm high up so as to deliver a harder blow and should never let his armpit become visible (from raising his arm to strike). Some say that this limitation is realized by requiring the person to hold an object in his armpit while delivering the lashes. The punishment should be carried out by the most respected members of society and only under the aegis of a legitimate political and legal authority.

In cases where a person's health cannot withstand the blows, the conditions are modified. In one account, a very frail man was presented for punishment, but it was clear he would not survive it; so the Prophet ordered that a number of twigs corresponding to the number of lashes be tied together, and the man was struck once with the bundle (Q).

More than one crucial dimension of the interpretation of the Quran comes into discussion regarding the punishment of stoning for adultery, including abrogation (see 2:106c), the relationship between the Quran and the Ḥadīth, the authentication and comparison of competing accounts within the Ḥadīth, and the status of religious laws other than those of Islam. In contemporary discussions of stoning several Islamic authorities have raised serious doubts about the authenticity of those accounts that attribute stoning to the Prophet or to the early leadership of the Muslim community, basing this conclusion not only upon the punishment's incongruity with the actually existing text of the Quran (setting aside the question of "abrogation of the text but not the command"), but also based upon the improbable nature of some of the ahādīth adduced in its favor as well as their mutual contradiction. It is not implausible that the stoning punishment was a holdover from other local traditions (such as that of the Jews) that then came to be considered normative practice in Islam. Some jurists may have reasoned that since stoning is a part of Jewish Law and was not explicitly cancelled by Islamic Law, it could be employed in some conditions, and this act of discretion may have, over the course of time, risen to the level of general obligation; such a position would be supported by the account that describes the Prophet executing Jewish Law against the Jewish couple. One could further speculate that, for reasons of social cohesion, early authorities (after the death of the Prophet and the first generation) felt that the punishment of lashes was not sufficient a check on adultery (indeed, some contemporaries of the Prophet deemed the standards of evidence far too demanding, as mentioned in 24:6–9c) and believed that penalty of stoning to death had to exist as a disincentive on licentiousness, which could lead to social disintegration. Such speculation about the origins of this punishment is justified and worthwhile in the face of the evidence in favor of stoning to death—evidence that is equivocal at best and contradictory and untenable at worst. It is also important to mention that the condition set for the proof of adultery—four eyewitnesses to the very act—was such that this punishment was very rare in Islamic society.

3 Some interpret this verse as highlighting the enormity of adultery by forbidding adulterers to marry believers (Q). For others, it means that those who are inclined to adultery would only want to marry adulterers or idolaters (R). Others interpret it to mean that the only people who would assent to the actions of an adulterer would be other rebellious adulterers or idolaters who had no qualms about such conduct (IK). Marry renders the verbal form of nikāḥ, which according to context can also refer to sexual intercourse (IK, Q, Ṭ). If read as a reference to intercourse, this verse is understood to mean that there is no one-sidedness in adultery; that is, if one of the two can be considered an adulterer, both must be considered adulterers. Some commentators object to this reading on the grounds that nikāḥ only appears in the Quran to describe marriage (Q), though in fact some commentators on 4:22 interpret the same verb as referring to sexual relations (see 4:22c).

According to another set of opinions, the verse refers to certain believers who wished to marry women who were known to be prostitutes. Others mention an account where some of the People of the Veranda (see 2:273c), who were homeless except for the mosque and who were extremely poor, desired to marry certain women of Madinah who were known prostitutes, but who could at least provide them food and shelter (IK, Q, R, Ṭ). Some prefer this reading, because those who commit adultery are generally not hindered from marrying later, and indeed taking the verse in the literal sense would seem to allow believers to marry idolaters, which is categorically forbidden. Interpreting this verse as a reference to certain women would then not hinder a believing person once guilty of adultery from marrying again. A variant opinion is that this verse refers to those upon whom the ḥadd punishment (i.e., lashes) has been rendered (Q), that is, those who had been judicially convicted of adultery and received the punishment. But al-Qurṭubī rejects this interpretation on the grounds that it would then allow the believing adulteress to marry an idolater, something that was already forbidden to her before she was an adulterer.

④ And as for those who accuse chaste women, but then do not bring four witnesses, flog them eighty lashes, and never accept any testimony from them. And it is they who are the iniquitous,

4 Chaste renders muhṣan, which can also mean free (as opposed to slave) or married; see 4:24c. This verse applies equally to men and women (IK, Q). It refers to the crime of slander (qadhf) with regard to the accusation of adultery (zinā). Some believe this verse was revealed in the context of the accusation made against ʿĀʾishah (see 24:10–22c), while others believe that it is a general ruling that was not occasioned by any particular incident (Q, T).

Al-Qurṭubī describes the various conditions under which the accusation of adultery becomes a punishable offense: the accuser must be a sane adult; the alleged crime must be a punishable offense, such as adultery or sodomy; and the accused must be a sane, free adult. The witnesses must see the act of penetration directly, in one place and at one time, meaning that four people each witnessing a separate occasion would not be admissible (Q); on the necessity of four witnesses for prosecuting such offenses, see 4:15c.

Some say that the command to never accept any testimony from them applies only to those who gave false testimony regarding matters whose punishment would be a ḥadd punishment (a Divinely ordained capital or corporal punishment), not other matters. Some also say that if someone repents sincerely for having given false testimony, that person’s testimony can be accepted without restriction in the future (Q).

5 The issue of repentance in connection with punishable offenses arises in each context where the Quran prescribes punishment for such an offense. For some, the possibility of repentance mentioned in v. 5 applies only to freeing oneself from being considered iniquitous (v. 4), while others believe that this repentance also applies to the possibility of having one's testimony restored to the status of being acceptable by the community (v. 4; Q). Some thus interpret the word never (abad^{an}) in v. 4 to mean "never as long as they are committing the adultery slander" (Q). For similar verses that suggest that repentance might avert the consequences or punishments prescribed for major crimes, see 4:93c; 5:34c. To make amends refers to living for a period of time in an honorable way and perhaps even being required to perform acts such as giving charity (R) to make one's repentance manifest to others (Q).

⑥ And as for those who accuse their wives and have no witnesses but themselves, then the testimony of one of them shall be four testimonies, swearing by God that he is among the truthful, ⑦ and the fifth shall be that the curse of God be upon him if he is among the liars.

⑨ and the fifth that God's Wrath shall come upon her if he is among the truthful.

6-9 Several reports are widely associated with the revelation of this passage dealing with "mutual condemnation" (li^cān), that is, the swearing of oaths pertaining to the accusation of adultery by one spouse against another. In some of these reports, a man came to the Prophet to accuse his wife of an act of adultery in progress, but balked at the requirement that he bring four witnesses (4:15; 24:4), arguing that by the time he collected four witnesses and returned, the adulterer would have had ample time to cease the act of penetration, which the witnesses were required to see. The Prophet, described as immovable on the question of four witnesses, then commanded the husband to testify as described in this passage. The wife was given an opportunity to do the same. This procedure saves the accusing spouse from the punishment of eighty lashes for false accusation, while allowing the accused spouse to declare his or her innocence; that is, only a spouse can make an accusation of adultery that is unsubstantiated by four witnesses and emerge without being lashed.

There are a range of opinions regarding several questions pertaining to the accusation of adultery on the part of a spouse, including whether the marriage thereby comes automatically to an end; whether the couple can ever remarry; the status of any child that the husband might deny as his own (since one form of the accusation of adultery is to declare that a child to whom one's wife has given birth is not one's own); how long a man has to renounce the child before his silence becomes acceptance; whether the renunciation can be taken back; and whether and how these rules apply to free, slave, Muslim, and non-Muslim individuals. The mutual condemnation must take place in public, preferably in a large "congregational mosque," where the Friday prayers are held (Q, R).

⑩ And were it not for God's Bounty upon you, and His Mercy, and that God is Relenting, Wise!

10-22 This passage relates to an incident involving the Prophet's wife ʿĀʾishah. According to the traditional accounts, while on a journey ʿĀʾishah's necklace fell from her neck two times. The first time, the Prophet ordered the Muslims to make camp to look for it, and eventually the verse related to ritual purification by dust was revealed (for the full account, see 4:43c). The second time, ʿĀʾishah again realized that her necklace had fallen, and she left the enclosed tentlike saddle atop her camel to go look for it. At the time, it was said that ʿĀʾishah was still fourteen and slight of build, and those who led her mount did not detect that the covered saddle was empty. ʿĀʾishah, expecting that the group would not leave without her, returned to the campsite to find that everyone had left. She waited, expecting that sooner or later they would realize their oversight and return, and fell asleep. Eventually a man named Ṣafwān ibn Muʿaṭṭal found her and brought her back to the main group, leading her on his mount. Ṣafwān is described in the sources as having been a valorous, chaste man who tended the Prophet's camel during battles and was later killed in battle during the caliphate of ʿUmar (Q). Soon after Ṣafwān brought ʿĀʾishah back to the encampment, rumors began to spread accusing ʿĀʾishah of committing adultery with Ṣafwān.

⑪ Truly those who brought forth the lie were a group among you. Do not suppose it to be an evil for you. Rather, it is a good for you. Unto each man among them is the sin he committed. And he among them who undertook the greater part of it, his shall be a great punishment.

11 The group among you was reported to consist mainly of three people, ḥassān ibn Thābit, Miṣṭaḥ ibn Uthāthah, and Ḥamnah bint Jaḥsh, though others report that the group consisted of ten or even up to forty persons (Q). Who undertook the greater part of it is thought to refer to Ḥassān ibn Thābit; this phrase is meant to refer to the person who began the rumor and therefore carried the greatest blame for it (Ṭ). According to some reports, Ḥassān later went blind, which was interpreted by some as his recompense (Q, Ṭ); it is also recorded that Ṣafwān struck a nonlethal blow to his head with his sword (Q, R). Others interpret the one who undertook the greater part of it to refer to ʿAbd Allāh ibn Ubayy, usually thought of as the leader of the hypocrites and described as having had an important role in the scandal (Ṭ).

There are also differing reports as to whether the Prophet beat or lashed these three scandalmongers. In one account, only ḥassān received a corporal punishment; other reports indicate that all three did; and still others report that none of them did, because such punishments require clear evidence in order to be carried out, and the evidence of guilt was insufficient in this case (Q). For al-Qurṭubī this gap between moral culpability and criminal liability is reminiscent of the fact that, though the hypocrites are mentioned frequently in the Quran, they are not named in such a way as to bring a legal claim against them. He reports that in the most well known account these three were lashed, but that ʿAbd Allāh ibn Ubayy was not.

Rather, it is a good for you is interpreted to mean that the “bringing forth” of this lie was a good thing for the community, either because, rather than leaving the people suspicious and uncertain, the matter was resolved openly and put to rest, or because it resulted in the revelation of these Quranic verses about the issue (R). When the good that comes from this development is understood to be for the benefit of the false accusers rather than the victims of the scandal (ʿĀʾishah and Ṣafwān and by extension the Prophet and ʿĀʾishah’s family), it can be seen as preventing them from carrying on in sin or as providing a punishment in this life that would avert a harsher punishment in the Hereafter (R).

12 This verse encapsulates the ethical principle of erring against suspicion and not repeating something one has heard if its source is unreliable or unknown (Q). In this connection al-Rāzī quotes the ḥadīth, “In their togetherness and compassion for one another and what God placed between them, the Muslims are like unto a single body. When one part is afflicted, the whole will be afflicted by fever and wakefulness.” Islamic ethical writings make frequent mention of “positive presumption” or “thinking well [of others]” (ḥusn al-ẓann), which can apply to human beings as well as on another level to God. In the former case, it refers to the presumption of innocence and good character in others, and in relation to God it refers to belief in God’s Compassion and Mercy.

⑬ Why did they not bring forth four witnesses thereto? For when they brought not the witnesses, it is they who were then liars in the Eyes of God.

13 This verse refers to the requirement that accusations of sexual misconduct be supported by four eyewitnesses, as mentioned in 4:15 and 24:4. Al-Rāzī discusses the possibility that a person might be truthful in his or her accusation of adultery, but fail to produce four witnesses. He suggests that it could mean that, as a matter of law and dealing with such an accuser, such an accuser must be treated as a liar in the absence of the requisite witnesses, regardless of the merit of the claim.

⑭ And were it not for God’s Bounty upon you, and His Mercy, in this world and the Hereafter, a great punishment would have befallen you for having engaged [in vain talk] concerning it, 14 Empty or vain talk about subjects without benefit is a vice frequently condemned in the Quran, as in 4:140; 6:68; and 9:65.

15 when you accepted it with your tongues, and spoke with your mouths that whereof you had no knowledge, supposing it to be slight, though it is great in the Eyes of God.

15 Accepted it with your tongues could be translated literally, “You met it with your tongues,” meaning that they received and transmitted the lie readily (Ṭ). The verb you accepted renders talaqqawna (from the root l-q-y), which some read as taliqūna (from the root w-l-q), meaning to penetrate as with a weapon, to quickly follow upon something, or to do something quickly in succession. In such a reading, the phrase could be rendered, “You propagated it quickly with your tongues.” Slight is understood to mean that they thought no sin would attach to them on its account (Q, Ṭ).

16 And why, when you heard it, did you not say, “It is not for us to speak of this! Glory be to Thee! This is a tremendous calumny!”

16 In traditional Islamic ethics gossip and backbiting are considered serious vices, even when what is being said is true; see also 49:12c. In this verse, calumny renders buhtān, which signifies backbiting by telling lies (Q), since one can also backbite by relating that which is factually true but still damaging to a person. Glory be to Thee! is understood as an expression of astonishment, or as an implicit declaration that the wife of God’s chosen Messenger could not do such a thing, or as an exclamation that God is too Glorious to leave this matter unattended (R). In the context of this verse discussing calumny, al-Rāzī mentions several aḥādīth pertaining to it, such as, “A Muslim is he from whose tongue the Muslims are safe, and the Emigrant is he who emigrates from what God has forbidden.”

17 God exhorts you, lest you ever return to the like of it, if you are believers.

18 And God makes clear unto you the signs, and God is Knowing, Wise.

17–18 If you are believers means if the accusers heed God’s Exhortation (Ṭ) and never repeat the same type of accusation in the future (IK). God makes clear the signs is mentioned elsewhere in the Quran (e.g., 2:187, 221, 242; 3:103; 5:89; 24:59), and in this case the signs can be understood as referring to the laws and rulings that benefit His servants (IK).

①¹⁹ Truly those who desire that indecency be spread among those who believe, theirs shall be a painful punishment in this world and the Hereafter. God knows, and you know not.

19 Those who desire that indecency be spread among believers shall be punished unless they make sincere repentance (Q). This verse, and indeed this entire passage, is understood as a warning against such slander-mongering and a reminder to the believers that their inner thoughts are not hidden from God (R). In this connection Ibn Kathīr mentions the ḥadīth, “Do not insult the servants of God, and do not reproach them, and do not look for their faults. Whosoever looks for the faults of his Muslim brother, God will look for his faults so much so that He will expose him in his home.”

①²⁰ And were it not for God’s Bounty toward you, and His Mercy, and that God is Kind, Merciful!

20 The result contingent upon were it not is implied (cf. v. 10), meaning that were it not for God’s Bounty, the slanderers would have been worse off, either through their own ultimate perdition or because the slander would have spread even farther (R). It could also refer to the result contingent upon the similar phrase in v. 21 and thus to their inability to be purified without God’s Bounty.

①²¹ O you who believe! Follow not the footsteps of Satan! And whosoever follows the footsteps of Satan, truly he enjoins indecency and wrong. And were it not for God’s Bounty toward you, and His Mercy, not one of you would ever be pure. But God purifies whomsoever He will, and God is Hearing, Knowing.

21 To be pure is understood here to mean to be upright or righteous (ṣāliḥ; Q), or to be rightly guided, or to follow Islam (Ṭ). Other verses that mention following in the footsteps of Satan include 2:168, 208; 6:142. That Satan commands to evil or indecency is also mentioned in 2:169, 268.

22 And let not the men of bounty and means among you forswear giving to kinsfolk and the indigent and those who emigrated in the way of God. And let them pardon and forbear. Do you not desire that God forgive you? And God is Forgiving, Merciful.

22 Some connect this verse to Abū Bakr, who used to give charity to his impoverished maternal cousin, Miṣṭah ibn Uthāthah. But when it became clear that he was one of the three main culprits in propagating the lie against ʿĀʾishah, Abū Bakr vowed not to give Miṣṭah charity ever again (Q, R, Ṭ). Others say this verse was revealed in connection with all such persons (Q). It is reported that after this verse was revealed, Abū Bakr said, “Yea, by God I desire, O Lord, that Thou forgivest us!” returned to Miṣṭah, and promised not to withhold charity from him (IK). Some commentators speak of this verse as the “most hopeful” in the Quran, as it shows God’s Kindness even to those who commit slander (Q). Other verses listed as being among those that are “most hopeful” include 2:260; 33:47; 39:53; 42:19, 22; 93:5 (Q); see also 2:260c. Al-Rāzī notes the great moral challenge that this verse presented to Abū Bakr, who was thereby enjoined to continue giving regular charity to a man who had defamed his own daughter ʿĀʾishah—that is, to respond to evil with good, not in kind. See 13:22 and 28:54 for the injunction to repel evil with good.

23 Truly those who accuse chaste and heedless believing women are cursed in this world and the Hereafter, and theirs shall be a great punishment

23 Here heedless means the women are without guile or cunning (Z). Though this passage was reportedly revealed in connection with ʿĀʾishah, it is considered to have a general application (Ṭ). Some commentators think this verse referred specifically to the wives of the Prophet, since this and the following verses do not mention the possibility of repentance, whereas the discussion of slander in vv. 4–5 does address the issue of repentance (R); that is, some commentators placed such accusations against the Prophet’s wives in a more egregious category, one in which the consequences could not be averted through repentance (Q). However, since it is widely acknowledged that all sincere repentance is accepted by God (9:104; 39:53), this passage would refer, according to some authorities, to those who persevered in their offense without contrition (Q, R).

24 on the day their tongues, their hands, and their feet bear witness against them as to that which they used to do.

24 Similar verses describing how objects incapable of speech will speak in the Hereafter include 41:21: And they will say to their skins, “Why did you bear witness against us?” They will reply, “God, Who makes all things speak, made us speak”; and 36:65: On that Day We shall seal their mouths. Their hands will speak to Us, and their feet will bear witness to that which they used to earn. In a famous verse, the Sufi poet Rūmī, in referring to inanimate objects, writes that they are silent here but speak there, meaning in the Hereafter.

25 On that Day God will pay them their just due in full, and they will know that God is the Manifest Truth.

25 Just due renders dīn, a word usually translated as “religion,” but which is also etymologically related to the words “recompense” and “debt.” “Day of Judgment” renders yawm al-dīn (lit. “Day of Religion”); see 1:4c.

26 Vile women are for vile men, and vile men are for vile women, and good women are for good men, and good men are for good women. They are innocent of what they say. Theirs is forgiveness and a generous provision.

26 As translated, this verse can be understood to be similar to v. 3 (Q, R).

However, this verse could also be translated, “Vile things are for vile people, and vile people are for vile things, and good things are for good people, and good people are for good things.” In this reading, preferred by al-Rāzī, al-Qurṭubī, and many others, the vile and good things are usually interpreted to mean vile and good words or speech, recalling that the context of this passage is the matter of false accusations of adultery (Q, R, Ṭ); that is, vile things are only said by vile people, or else vile things are only truly said about vile people (R). They are innocent means that good people are innocent of the vile things said about them (R), which many commentators see as a specific reference to ʿĀʾishah and Ṣafwān (IK, Q).

27 O you who believe! Enter not houses other than your own, until you inquire and greet the dwellers thereof. That is better for you, that haply you may remember.

27 Some say inquire and greet the dwellers refers to a signal like clearing one’s throat or knocking at the door to let the occupants inside know that someone is there (Ṭ), meaning there is no sense in greeting unless you know someone is inside (R). The greeting here is the formula “Peace be upon you” (al-salāmu ʿalaykum; Q, Ṭ).

28 But if you find not anyone therein, then enter them not until permission is granted you. And if it is said to you, “Turn back,” then turn back. That is purer for you, and God knows what you do.

28 Traditionally one is limited to seeking permission to enter three times, after which one should leave (Q, R). Many commentators mention the ḥadīth, “If one of you asks permission three times and permission is not given him, let him go back.” They also note that it was the wont of the Prophet not to stand immediately in front of the doorway when asking permission to enter, but to stand off to the side, as doorways did not necessarily have actual doors or covers (Q, Ṭ). This verse holds whether the door is locked or unlocked and even if there is no door at all (Q). Al-Qurṭubī records a ḥadīth in which the Prophet rebukes severely a man who peered through a hole in the Prophet’s door and saw him combing his hair. The right to privacy became an important and much discussed subject in Islamic Law.

29 There is no blame upon you for entering uninhabited houses wherein there is some good for you. And God knows what you disclose and what you conceal.

29 Uninhabited houses are thought to refer to way stations on the road for travelers, way stations that are not anyone's permanent domicile; others say that they refer to ruins (Q, Ṭ). It is permissible to enter them without permission, because there is no risk of exposing anything inside that should be kept private (Q).

30 Tell the believing men to lower their eyes and guard their private parts. That is purer for them. Surely God is Aware of whatsoever they do.

30 The same command for men to be modest and chaste in this verse is repeated for women in the next verse. Since one cannot "lower one's eyes" against everything, this verse is interpreted to mean that men should not look at things with passion or at those things that are forbidden or that God dislikes (Ṭ). Al-Qurṭubī quotes a ḥadīth: "Let not a glance follow a glance. The first is yours, but not the second." This saying means that one is not responsible for the first glance at something forbidden, but is responsible if one continues to look at it. In another ḥadīth the Prophet said, "Give the road its rights." When asked what these rights were, he added, "Lowering the eyes, removing harmful obstacles, sharing greetings, and enjoining right and hindering wrong." "Guarding one's private parts," referring to abstaining from sexual misconduct, is also mentioned in 23:5; 33:35; 70:29.

31 And tell the believing women to lower their eyes and to guard their private parts, and to not display their adornment except that which is visible thereof. And let them draw their kerchiefs over their breasts, and not display their adornment except to their husbands, or their fathers, or their husbands' fathers, or their sons, or their husbands' sons, or their brothers, or their brothers' sons, or their sisters' sons, or their women, or those whom their right hands possess, or male attendants free of desire, or children who are innocent of the private areas of women. Nor let them stamp their feet such that the ornaments they conceal become known. And repent unto God all together, O believers, that haply you may prosper.

31 The command to women to be modest and chaste mirrors the command for men in the previous verse. Kerchiefs renders khumur (sing. khimār), and breasts renders juyūb (sing. jayb). A khimār can mean a cloth that covers the head or neck; a scarf; a flowing garment; a garment without stitching; or a man's turban. According to commentators, before the advent of Islam women would wear the khimār and it would drape behind their backs, exposing their upper chests (and, according to some accounts, their breasts as well). Some say this was done after the manner of "the Nabateans" (M, Q), presumably a reference to the tribes of northern Arabia or the inhabitants of the marshlands of southern Iraq. It was in any event a common feature of women's dress in the ancient Near East. Beyond describing that it was worn atop the head or neck, no precise details are available for the dimensions or coverage of the khimār. A jayb can refer to the heart or chest, the beginning of a woman's cleavage, the place where the chest meets the neck, the opening of a shirt through which one places one's head, a pocket, or the shirt itself. Jayb is also used to describe that into which Moses places his hand and pulls it out white in 27:12 and 28:32, where it is rendered bosom (referring to the chest area of his garment; it thus could also mean "pocket" or "enclosure").

The only other place in the Quran where garments are discussed is 33:59, which mentions the jilbāb, or cloak women draw around their bodies as a way of identifying themselves so as not to be accosted (see 33:59c). As will be seen below, most jurists interpreted the command in this verse to mean that a free woman's hair, ears, throat, and chest should be covered (IK, Q, Th). Beyond these general requirements, certain special rules of seclusion applied to the wives of the Prophet (see commentary on 33:32, 33, 53), but these did not extend to other Muslim women; ḥijāb comes from the veil or partition mentioned in 33:53 meant to shield the Prophet's wives from petitioners and those displaying excessive familiarity.

A handful of reports attributed to some of the Companions describe the women of Madinah responding to the revelation of this verse by cutting cloth from their skirts and "covering" with it (using the verb ikhtamara, related by root to the word khimār), but how this was done and what was covered are not described, though it was later often mistranslated as "covering the face." In some accounts the women are described as appearing “as if crows were on their heads,” but this is of ambiguous meaning as well. Similar metaphors in Arabic of birds above one’s head can also describe a mood of solemnity. Al-Ālūsī, for example, interprets these aḥādīth as merely communicating that the women of Madinah were responsive to the revelation of v. 31. A relevant ḥadīth in which the Prophet describes to his sister-in-law Asmā’ (the daughter of Abū Bakr) the parts of the body that a woman should cover (everything but the face and hands) is of weak authenticity.

It was typical for jurists to discuss the question of dress, for both men and women, in terms of what must be covered in order to perform the canonical prayer, which was usually taken as equivalent to what had to be covered in the presence of those not listed in this verse. This area to be covered was usually referred to as one’s ‘awrah (“private area”) and generally fell into one of three categories as classified by jurists: the ‘awrah of men, of female slaves, and of free women. A man’s ‘awrah was typically described as the area from his navel to his knees. The ‘awrah of a free woman was almost always everything but the hands (and sometimes the forearm), face, and sometimes feet (and sometimes part of the calf), though some early minority opinions, such as that of Sa‘īd ibn Jubayr (d. 95/714), disapproved of uncovering the hair while noting that the hair was not mentioned explicitly in this verse. Other jurists considered a free woman’s entire body to be ‘awrah. For most jurists the ‘awrah of a female slave (or even a female servant) was similar to that of a man, though some jurists, such as the Ḥanafīs, preferred that they cover their chests and backs as well. Many jurists stated plainly that the female slave’s ‘awrah was appropriate to her obligations of carrying out her work without being overly encumbered.

Though jurists considered it forbidden and sinful to look upon women with lust and to stare at female slaves not one’s own, they did not demand any change in women’s dress or prevent them from going about actively in society. Some jurists cite a tradition that ‘Umar actually forbade female slaves from covering their hair, lest they be mistaken for free women. It is reasonable to assume that early jurists saw dress at least partly as a signifier of rank or communal identity (as it seems to be in 33:59) rather than solely in connection with indecency and temptation. In any case, the rules on slave and servant women seem to indicate that the mere fact of women being exposed was not a motivating concern separable from their social status, at least in the formative period of Islamic Law. Jurists who allow uncovering of the face for free women and other parts of the body for slave women still note that looking upon such areas with passion is forbidden; that is to say, the mere fact that it is forbidden to stare at something does not render it ‘awrah, or an area that must be covered (Āl).

Adornment renders zīnah, a word that also means “decoration,” “embellishment,” “finery,” or something that beautifies. That which is visible thereof renders mā ṣāhara minhā, which can mean “that which shows” or “that which is exterior,” referring to what could be seen under normal circumstances (Z). For some the adornment that is visible refers to the face and hands, clothes, eye makeup (kuḥl), rings, and bracelets (Ṭ). Al-Rāzī notes that for some jurists this means whatever usually appears in customary practice (al-‘ādah al-jāriyah), which in the case of women refers to the face and hands. As a woman could not be expected reasonably to cover her face and hands and the ornaments upon them without hardship and difficulty, they could not be part of her ‘awrah (R). Al-Zamakhsharī notes that this ruling can extend to the feet as well, especially for poor women. For nearly all jurists, these guidelines did not apply to female slaves (see above).

Their women refers to Muslim women, and many note that it is also prohibited for them to be exposed to female idolaters (IK, Ṭ); others interpret this as a reference to Muslim women’s female attendants or companions (R). Those whom their right hands possess is thought by some to refer to any slave, male or female, though some jurists limited it to female servants (R). Male attendants free of desire is understood to refer to certain kinds of mentally disabled men uninterested in women’s sexuality, those who are impotent, eunuchs, or old men (Q, Ṭ). Children who are innocent of the private parts of women refers to young children who do not see women as sources of sexual attraction (Ṭ). The ornaments they conceal refers to the anklets, sometimes described as having small bells, that women would wear under their skirts; women were not to reveal the presence of these ornaments by stamping their feet (Ṭ).

32 And marry those who are single among you, and the righteous among your male slaves and your female slaves. If they are poor, God will enrich them from His Bounty. And God is All-Encompassing, Knowing.

32 Depending on how the verb is read, this verse can be seen as addressing those who will themselves marry or those who “give in marriage”—that is, legal guardians (Q)—whose permission, according to many jurists, is required for a woman to marry (unless she has been married previously, in which case the guardian’s permission is not required). Some believe that the single among you refers to free persons (Q), because the remainder of the sentence concerns slaves

(on the marriage of slaves, see 4:25c). Some commentators are careful to say that this verse is not interpreted as an absolute command to reduce the single population, such that it would be a sin for there to be marriageable men and women who were not married (R).

God will enrich them is not interpreted as a promise of wealth after marriage, but as a general statement about God's Power over giving (R). However, some accounts do speak of marriage in these terms. Al-Rāzī mentions sayings of Companions such as Abū Bakr and Ibn ʿAbbās that encourage marriage and say that marriage will bring material blessings with it.

33 And let those who are unable to marry be chaste till God enriches them from His Bounty. And as for those among the ones whom your right hands possess who seek a contract [of emancipation] with you, contract with them if you know of any good in them, and give unto them from the Wealth of God, which He has given you. And compel not your female slaves into prostitution if they desire to be chaste, for the sake of seeking after the ephemerality of the life of this world. And whosoever compels them, then truly God, after their having been compelled, will be Forgiving, Merciful.

33 Commentators recognize that poverty can hinder one from marrying, though they acknowledge that a woman could willingly marry a man of meager means, accepting a small bridewealth and living modestly (Q).

A contract of [emancipation] (kitāb, also mukātabah) refers to an agreement by which slaves can purchase their freedom for an agreed-upon sum. Once the master agrees to emancipation, slaves can then begin to earn money to make the payments. Some consider it obligatory to contract emancipation with slaves if one knows any good in them (Q, Ṭ), while others read this as a recommendation, a kind of guidance, so that an owner cannot be compelled by the request of the slave for freedom (Q). The good refers to being trustworthy or honest or having the capability of working to pay the sum (IK, Q, R, Ṭ). Jurists discuss many ancillary issues regarding this matter, such as the advisability of contracting such emancipation with a slave who has no expertise or profession by which to earn an income, some reasoning that this could lead to burdening society with a helpless individual dependent upon charity (Q). Some understand the command to give unto them from the Wealth of God to mean that some of the zakāh funds should be given to slaves after their emancipation (IK), pointing to 9:60, the verse that lists the freeing of slaves as one use of zakāh; the freeing of slaves is also encouraged in 5:89 and 90:13. Al-Qurṭubī and Ibn Kathīr mention the ḥadīth: “There are three who have a right with God to be helped: the slave contracting his emancipation; he who desires to marry chastely; and he who strives in the way of God.” Others say that the Wealth mentioned here refers to a portion of the sum from the contract of emancipation that would be given back to the slave after his or her emancipation (IK, R, Ṭ).

Compel not your female slaves refers to the practice before Islam of forcing female slaves into prostitution. Many commentators mention that the chief hypocrite, ‘Abd Allāh ibn Ubayy, compelled his female slaves in this fashion and collected the payments (R, Ṭ). God, after their having been compelled, will be Forgiving, Merciful refers to the fact that God will not hold such female slaves responsible for what they were forced to do (Ṭ).

34 We have indeed sent down unto you clarifying signs and a description of those who have passed before you, and an exhortation for the reverent.

34 Description renders mathal, which depending on context can mean a parable, allegory, example, or illustrative case. For variations of the refrain an exhortation for the reverent, also see 2:66; 3:138; 5:46.

35 God is the Light of the heavens and the earth. The parable of His Light is a niche, wherein is a lamp. The lamp is in a glass. The glass is as a shining star kindled from a blessed olive tree, neither of the East nor of the West. Its oil would well-nigh shine forth, even if no fire had touched it. Light upon light. God guides unto His Light whomsoever He will, and God sets forth parables for mankind, and God is Knower of all things.

35 This is the Light Verse (āyat al-nūr), one of the most famous and often recited verses of the Quran, from which this sūrah takes its name. “Light” is considered a Name of God. Many independent treatises have been composed on the Light Verse, perhaps the most famous of which is Abū Ḥāmid al-Ghazzālī's The Niche of Lights (Mishkāt al-anwār), which contains a meditation on the meaning of the symbolism of this verse as well as a metaphysical treatment of the concept and reality of light in general. The verse is often found inscribed on the lamps that hang in many mosques in the Islamic world, and the design of some mosques has been based on its symbolism.

Al-Qurṭubī mentions that the Prophet was asked, “Did thou seest thy Lord?” and he replied, “I saw Light.” Ibn Kathīr cites a ḥadīth evoking the content of this verse in which the Prophet prays, “O God! Praise be to Thee! Thou dost sustain the heavens and the earth. Thou art the Light of the heavens and the earth and all therein.” That God is the Light is interpreted also to mean that God guides or directs the affairs of the heavens and the earth (Ṭ). Most commentators on this verse focus their reflections not on the initial phrase God is the Light of the heavens and the earth, but rather on the second phrase, the parable of His Light, and the meaning of light itself. The parable of His Light is typically understood to refer to the light in the heart of the believer placed there by God (Ṭ), although it is also interpreted by some to refer to the Quran (Ṭ), which, like other Divine books, is described in terms of its light and luminosity (see 4:174; 5:15, 44, 46; 6:91; 7:157; 21:48; 22:8; 31:20; 64:8). For other uses of light in the Quran, see 2:17, 257; 6:1, 122; 9:32; 13:16; 14:1, 5; 28:71; 33:43; 39:22; 39:69; 42:52; 57:9, 12, 19, 28; 61:8; 65:11; 66:8.

Niche translates mishkāh, which is usually described as a recess in a wall within which to set or hang a lamp. There are, however, others who understand it to mean the body of the lamp itself, the metal by which the lamp is hung, or the piece that holds the wick (IK, R, Ṭ). Lamp renders miṣbāḥ, which refers here to the lighted wick, but some have interpreted it to be the whole lamp itself. Combined with the reading of mishkāh as the lamp or the piece of the lamp that holds the wick, this phrase could be read, “The parable of His Light is a lamp wherein is a lighted wick.” The glass would then refer to the enclosure around the wick, and kindled from a blessed olive tree refers to the special olive oil that is the lamp's fuel; in one reading, the glass is understood to be a windowpane that covers the niche (Ṭs). Some read a syntactical inversion of lamp and niche in the two sentences: The parable of His Light is a niche, wherein is a lamp (or lighted wick). The lamp (or lighted wick) is in a glass. According to this reading, the lines actually mean, “The parable of His Light is as a lamp in a niche,” since that is the source of the light as ordinarily understood (R). It is pointed out that parable . . . is does not restrict the comparison to the niche alone, but includes everything that follows (Ṭb).

A blessed olive tree, neither of the East nor of the West is interpreted to mean that it is a heavenly tree, since any earthly tree would necessarily be eastern or western (R), or it is a symbolic tree (Ṭ). In one opinion attributed to Ibn ʿAbbās, it means the tree is on a high mountain or open plain, such that the sun strikes it as it both rises and sets (IK, R, Ṭ); in this sense, it can mean that the tree is of both the East and the West because it is neither exclusively (R). According to these interpretations, of the East (sharqiyyah) and of the West (gharbiyyah) can also mean “easterly” and “westerly” or “east-facing” and “west-facing,” because the words for “east” and “west” in Arabic refer directly to the rising and setting of the sun. The blessed olive tree can also be seen as referring symbolically to the axis mundi.

The imagery created by the first part of this verse is of a light radiating from a lamp fueled by oil, shining through a glass that covers the niche holding the lamp (alternately, the light simply radiates through the glass that is part of the lamp body). These phrases, which symbolize the Light of God or the light in the heart of a believer, have been interpreted as a description of the nature of cosmic reality itself or as a symbolic account of human spiritual realization or both. For some commentators this symbol applies to all believers: the niche is the breast of the believer, the lamp (lighted wick) is the Quran and faith, and the glass is the heart (Ṭ). For others this verse is a symbol of the reality of the Prophet: the niche is the breast of the Prophet, the glass refers to his heart, and the lamp refers to the faith within it; the blessed olive tree is Abraham, and God placed the same light within the Prophet that He put within Abraham (R, Su). For others, the niche is the tongue and mouth, the lamp (lighted wick) is the Quran, the glass is the heart of the believer, and the tree is the tree of revelation (Ṭs). Still others describe the niche as referring to the body, whose dark nature is illumined by the lamp of the Spirit, while the glass is the heart lit by the Spirit (K).

Its oil would well-nigh shine forth, even if no fire had touched it is interpreted to mean that the Prophet shone even before revelation had touched him (IK), that his light was clear to people even before he spoke, or that he was possessed of wisdom even before the onset of his mission as prophet (R). Alternately, the oil may refer to the proofs in the Quran, which would well-nigh shine forth even if they were not recited (Ṭs). Al-Rāzī says that the oil of the olive tree, when it is pure and viewed from afar, looks as if it has rays coming from it, and fire only increases that; likewise, the heart of believers acts according to right guidance before understanding comes to them, after which their inner illumination increases.

Many spiritual, ontological, and cosmological interpretations have been given for the Light Verse throughout the ages. According to Junayd, God illuminates the hearts of the angels so that they glorify Him, the hearts of the prophets to attain true knowledge and to worship with true worship, and the hearts of believers to attain guidance and knowledge. He interprets neither of the East nor of the West to mean desiring neither this world nor the Hereafter, but being detached from both and desiring only God. For him, the oil that would well-nigh shine forth means that light shines forth from the heart unto the tongue when one remembers God, wherever one happens to be between the East and West. He interprets light upon light to refer to the light of certainty combined with the light of faith (Su). For al-Kashānī, the oil symbolizes the soul in its state of readiness to receive illumination from the Spirit; when light does strike the soul (when it comes upon the light lying there in a potential state), it becomes actualized light (K). For some, the oil is sincerity, and as one's sincerity increases, so does one's light (ST). Ibn ʿAjībah, like many other Sufis, interprets the verse through the lens of ontology and says that all elements of creation are aspects of the Light of God: the niche is like a window into a subtle treasure from which earthly lights radiate, and indeed every part of creation is a niche for a light from the Light of lights, a view that interprets light as the inner reality of the cosmos.

For some Shiites, the niche symbolizes Fāṭimah, the Prophet's daughter, while the lamp represents Ḥasan and Ḥusayn, and light upon light refers to the succession of Imams who were her progeny (Qm).

In commenting on light upon light, some see a symbol for the faith of a believer, and many commentators transmit an opinion attributed to Ubayy ibn Kaʿb that describes the five kinds of light a believer possesses: speech, deeds, entrance (into the grave at death), exit (from the grave on the Day of Judgment), and return (to the Garden; ٢). For some light upon light refers to faith and action (٢) or to the light of the Quran together with the light of the believer (IK).

For al-Ghazzālī, the niche, glass, wick, tree, and oil all represent levels of perception and consciousness, which he describes as lights in the sense that they are that by which things are known. The niche represents the physical senses that receive light passively; the glass represents the imagination, which, like clay transformed into glass, is purified through spiritual discipline; the lamp (lighted wick) symbolizes the soul's power to understand meanings and ideas; the blessed olive tree represents the power of meditation, each branch giving rise to two branches, which each give rise to more; the oil that would well-nigh shine forth is the knowledge and consciousness possessed by the prophets and great "friends of God" (awliyāʾ), which is almost self-awakening, though it does require the kindling of revelation and inspiration from God. These levels of perception and consciousness are light upon light.

The concept of light became the scriptural basis for an entire current of Islamic philosophy called the School of Illumination, which describes all of reality as composed of varying grades of the same reality, which is light and which becomes mixed with darkness as it is removed from its luminous Source, or God, Who is called the Light of lights (Nūr al-anwār). The symbolism of light is, moreover, employed in many schools of theology, philosophy, and Sufism as a most powerful symbol for the nature of God’s relationship with the various levels of creation down to this world. Light is visible in itself and grants visibility to everything else; it thus symbolizes the truth that God is the most evident Reality in Himself and is also That by which all things are known. Just as sensory objects become manifest to the eye by physical light, so too are inward realities made manifest to the inner eye through the Light of God. In al-Rāzī’s words, one can imagine sunlight disappearing, but God’s Light could not disappear without the heavens and the earth ceasing to exist. The mystery of God’s Light is that it is so manifest in all things that He is hidden. Ibn ‘Arabī once wrote, “Glory be unto Him who is hidden by that which is none other than Himself.”

The Light Verse has been commented upon over the ages metaphysically, cosmologically, cosmogonically, epistemologically, and psychologically. Moreover, it has been a major influence in the Islamic arts in domains ranging from poetry to miniature painting to architecture, where it has played a central role in the understanding of the relation of light to space in Islamic sacred architecture. Some of the greatest works of Islamic metaphysics, such as the already cited work of al-Ghazzālī or Mullā Ṣadrā’s commentary on this verse, attest to the central significance of this verse in Islamic thought, just as so many works of architecture and painting provide evidence of its importance for Islamic art. This verse, quoted so often in daily life by Muslims, has been influential in determining, along with certain other Quranic verses, the general attitudes and sensibility of Muslims to light and its ever-present spiritual and psychological impact upon the soul.

36 [It is] in houses that God has permitted to be raised and wherein His Name is remembered. He is therein glorified, morning and evening,

36 This verse is usually read as a continuation of the previous verse, meaning that the lamp or “lighted wick” is in a niche within houses (Ṭ) or, similarly, that the light is kindled in the houses (R). It could also be read as a new sentence: “In houses that God has permitted to be raised and wherein His Name is remembered, He is therein glorified morning and evening.” By houses many understand mosques, while others extend it to mean all houses (R, Ṭ) or else specific places such as the Ka^cbah, the Holy Sanctuary (in Jerusalem), the Prophet's mosque in Madinah, or the Qubā' mosque (see commentary on 9:107–8; Q, R). That the houses are raised refers to either the building of such houses, their exaltation, or both (R, Ṭ). Many commentators believe that the glorification (tasbīḥ) mentioned here refers to the Muslim canonical prayer (ṣalāh; Q, R, Ṭ). Continuing the symbolism from the previous verse, houses is understood here by Sufis to be a symbol for the illumination of the hearts of human beings in which the Name of God is remembered (Aj). The juxtaposition of the general word houses and the remembrance of God's Name is also suggestive of the different kinds of houses of worship mentioned in 22:40, which speaks of monasteries, churches, synagogues, and mosques, wherein God's Name is mentioned much.

37 by men whom neither trade nor buying and selling distract from the remembrance of God, the performance of prayer, and the giving of alms, fearing a day when eyes and hearts will be turned about,

37 The language here is similar to that in 63:9: Let neither your property nor your children divert you from the remembrance of God; and 62:9: When you are called to the congregational prayer, hasten to the remembrance of God and leave off trade. The phrase when eyes and hearts will be turned about refers to the terror and awe experienced on the Day of Judgment (Ṭ), and related imagery is used to describe eyes and hearts in 14:42–43: He merely grants them reprieve till a day when eyes will stare, transfixed, running with necks outstretched and heads upraised, their glance returning not to them, their hearts vacant. Continuing the symbolism of the previous verse, the houses can be said to symbolize the hearts of those who are afraid of their eyes and hearts being turned away from the remembrance of God (Aj).

38 that God may reward them for the best of that which they have done, and increase them from His Bounty. And God provides for whomsoever He will without reckoning.

38 On what it means to be rewarded for the best of that which they have done, see 9:121c; 29:7c. Increase them is understood by al-Rāzī to mean that there is an element of deserving in one's reward in the Hereafter beyond which God grants an added bounty. On God's providing without reckoning, see 2:212c; 3:27c.

39 As for those who disbelieve, their deeds are like a mirage upon a desert plain which a thirsty man supposes is water, till when he comes upon it, he does not find it to be anything, but finds God there. He will then pay him his reckoning in full, and God is swift in reckoning.

39 The mirage discussed here is based on the physical phenomenon caused by the difference in temperature between the warm air immediately above the hot desert floor and the cooler air above it. The warm air close to the ground refracts the light from distant objects slightly upward, giving the appearance of water reflecting the sky or other objects. Since the apparent "water" is actually the inverted light of distant objects or the sky, one can never actually reach it; the inversion effect will gradually disappear, the closer one gets to it.

Their deeds are like a mirage is thought to refer to the good actions of disbelievers such as acts of filial piety, maintaining good family relations, and acting well toward one's neighbor (Q); that is, they believe there is some reward or benefit from their deeds, but ultimately there is not, because they exclude God. Finds God there is understood to mean "finds the Recompense of God" or "finds the Judgment of God" (Aj, Q, R) or "finds the path to Him" (Su). It also means that their deeds are not ultimately good even in this world and that what they believe to be good leads to greater corruption and error (Aj). God is swift in reckoning, because such reckoning is easy for Him (R) as He has infinite Power and need not consult anyone (Aj).

40 Or like the darkness of a fathomless sea, covered by waves with waves above them and clouds above them—darknesses, one above the other. When one puts out one's hand, one can hardly see it. He for whom God has not appointed any light has no light.

40 For some, this verse continues the description of the deeds of the previous verse, meaning that the disbelievers' deeds are like the darkness of a fathomless sea (T); alternately, this verse is likening their disbelief to darkness, since disbelief can also be viewed as an action or deed (Q). Darknesses renders the plural form zulumāt, implying that there are levels of darkness (see 5:16c). Remarks similar to those attributed to Ubayy ibn Kaʿb with regard to light in v. 35 are also mentioned here by several commentators, when they state that a person’s “darknesses” are five: speech, actions, entrance (into the grave at death), exit (from the grave at the Resurrection), and return (in this case, to the Fire rather than to the Garden; R, Ṭ). The three kinds of darkness mentioned here—the sea, the waves, the clouds—are interpreted to be the darkness of one’s heart, one’s sight, and one’s hearing (R); see 2:7c for the notion of hearts and spiritual faculties being sealed or covered. Others interpret this verse to refer to the compound ignorance of the disbeliever: he does not understand, he fails to know that he does not understand, and he thinks that he does understand (R). The imagery is meant to show how he is surrounded, since he is struck by the terror from below (sea), the terror from around (waves), and the terror from above (clouds; Q). For some, the notion that he can barely see his hand in front of his face shows the profundity of his ignorance (R). With his heart he cannot see the light of faith (Q). The final phrase shows that all light, guidance, and understanding come from God (Q, R). That the disbeliever can hardly see his hand suggests that human beings can never be left in total darkness, and the light of guidance is available as long as they are still alive.

41 Hast thou not considered that God is glorified by whosoever is in the heavens and on the earth, and by the birds spreading their wings? Each indeed knows its prayer and its glorification, and God knows that which they do.

41 The worship and glorification of God by all beings is a common theme throughout the Quran (e.g., 17:44; 38:18–19; 21:19–20; 22:18); see also 2:74c; 30:26c; 64:1c. This verse is noteworthy in describing that prayer and glorification are differentiated, because everything knows its prayer and its glorification. According to some, prayer (ṣalāh) refers to the activity of human beings, while glorification (tasbīḥ) refers to this activity in all other beings (Ṭ). Some say that the beating of their wings is the birds’ prayer, while their song is their glorification (Q).

There are those who interpret these verses to mean not that the beings of the heavens and the earth consciously glorify God, but that God is glorified through their very being; that is, they are in themselves testaments to God’s Glory and their existence points to His Transcendence (R). This interpretation is offered because some beings appear to oppose openly and abstain from prayer and glorification—specifically, disbelieving human beings (Q). This is similar to the apparent paradox that all things submit to God willingly or unwillingly, a distinction discussed in 3:83c; see also 13:15c.

④⁴² And unto God belongs sovereignty over the heavens and the earth, and unto God is the journey's end.

42 The concept of sovereignty (mulk) is discussed in 67:1c; 36:83c. The journey's end (maṣīr) refers to one's return to God in the Hereafter, an idea present throughout the Quran in various forms.

④⁴³ Has thou not considered that God drives the clouds, then joins them together, then makes them as a heap, and then thou seest the rain come forth from amid them? And He sends down from the sky—from the mountains [of clouds] therein—hail, wherewith He smites whomsoever He will, and which He turns away from whomsoever He will. The flash of His lightning well-nigh takes away sight.

43 Some read from the mountains [of clouds] therein as a reference to the appearance of the clouds, while others read the grammar of the phrase to mean that a “mountain's worth of hail” comes down (Q, R). The hail is interpreted here as an instrument of destruction (Th). Other destructive clouds are mentioned in 46:24. Often, however, in the Quran clouds are beneficial givers of rain (7:57; 35:9), and this symbolizes spiritual blessings raining down upon the heart of the believer (Aj). The image of lightning snatching away sight is also mentioned in 2:20.

④⁴⁴ God alternates the night and the day. Truly in that is a lesson for those possessed of sight.

44 Cf. 3:190; 10:6; 23:80; 39:5; 45:5.

45 And God created every beast from water: among them are those that go upon their bellies, and among them are those that go upon two legs, and among them are those that go upon four. God creates whatsoever He will. Truly God is Powerful over all things.

45 Beast renders dābbah, which means an animal that ambulates on the surface of the earth (which would therefore exclude fish; Q). Some commentators such as al-Rāzī seem to understand water to be a reference to reproductive fluids and interpret the verse on that basis. Similar verses are 21:30: And We made every living thing from water; and 25:54: And He it is Who created a human being from water. In the Quran different kinds of beings are described as made from different substances. Human beings are described as made from clay (6:2; 32:7), water (25:54), and dust (22:5; 30:20; 35:11). Iblīs was created from fire (7:12), and the jinn from a smokeless fire (55:15). In the Ḥadīth the angels are described as beings created from light (see 2:30c; 55:31c).

46 We have indeed sent down clarifying signs, and God guides whomsoever He will unto a straight path.

46 The word clarifying (mubayyināt) here is etymologically closely related to clear (bayyināt) in other instances of the similar phrase clear signs (e.g., 3:97; 22:16; 28:36), the former being a more intensive form. On straight path, see 1:6c.

47 And they say, “We believe in God and in the Messenger, and We obey.” Then a group of them turn away thereafter, and believers they are not.

47 This verse is understood to refer to the hypocrites of Madinah (Q, Ṭ).

48 And when they are called to God and His Messenger, that He may judge between them, behold, a group of them turn away.

48 According to some, this verse was revealed in connection with a land dispute between Mughīrah ibn Wā'il and 'Alī ibn Abī Ṭālib. When 'Alī proposed that they bring the dispute to the Prophet to judge, Mughīrah reportedly said, "I fear Muhammad will deal unjustly [see v. 50] with me." In another account, it was a hypocrite named Bishr who had a dispute with a Jew. When the latter suggested bringing the dispute to the Prophet, Bishr proposed Ka'b ibn Ashraf instead, saying, "Muhammad treats us unjustly" (Q, R).

49 But if the right is theirs, they come unto Him submissively.

49 According to this verse, the hypocrites submit to judgment whenever they think the outcome will be in their favor or when they think that they are truly in the right (R).

50 Is there a disease in their hearts? Or do they doubt, or fear that God and His Messenger will deal unjustly with them? Nay, but it is they who are the wrongdoers.

50 Al-Rāzī ponders the fact that the three categories mentioned here—having a diseased heart, doubting God, and being a wrongdoer—are not always distinct, since hypocrisy, doubt, and disbelief can be seen as overlapping or even synonymous, and people can harm themselves through these attitudes. Other verses that refer to a diseased heart include 2:8–11; 5:52; 33:12, 60; 47:20, 29; 74:31.

51 The only words of the believers when they are called unto God and His Messenger, that he may judge between them, will be to say, "We hear and we obey." And it is they who shall prosper.

51 Some read that he may judge in the passive voice, so it means "that it may be a judgment rendered" (Z). Hear and . . . obey, used to express loyalty and faith (in either the positive or the negative), also appears in 2:93, 285; 4:46; 5:7.

52 Whosoever obeys God and His Messenger, and who fears God and reverences Him, it is they who shall triumph.

52 On the question of obeying God and the Prophet, see 3:32c; 4:59c.

53 And they swear by God with their most solemn oaths that, wert thou to command them, they would surely go forth. Say, “Swear not! [But give] honorable obedience! Surely God is Aware of whatsoever you do.”

53 For similar false oaths sworn by the hypocrites and disbelievers, see 5:53c.

54 Say, “Obey God and obey the Messenger.” But if they turn away, he is only accountable for that wherewith he has been burdened, and you are accountable for that wherewith you have been burdened. But if you obey him, you will be rightly guided, and naught is incumbent upon the Messenger save the clear proclamation.

54 Burdened refers to what one is commanded to do and for which one is responsible (Ṭ; cf. 2:286: Our Lord, lay not upon us a burden like Thou laid upon those before us). The Prophet is only tasked with the clear proclamation of the message, while the believers are tasked with following him and acting in accordance with the Commands of God (R, Ṭ). That the Prophet is not responsible for anything beyond conveying the message (3:20; 5:92, 99; 13:40; 16:35, 82; 36:17; 42:48; 64:12) is also discussed in 88:21–26c.

55 God has promised those among you who believe and perform righteous deeds that He will surely make them vicegerents upon the earth, as He caused those before them to be vicegerents, and that He will establish for them their religion, which He has approved for them, and that He will surely change them from a state of fear to [one of] security. They will worship Me, not ascribing any partners unto Me. And whosoever disbelieves thereafter, it is they who are iniquitous.

55 To make . . . vicegerents renders the verb istakhlafa, which in addition can also mean “to cause to inherit” or “to cause to become successor to.” Some interpret this verse as a response to the laments of the Makkan Emigrants regarding their long struggle with their enemies in Makkah and see the vicegerency mentioned in this verse as referring to their inheriting the land of Makkah (Q, Ṭs; in which case earth, arḍ, would be rendered “land”). In these accounts, it is said that the Companions, having lived through many years of conflict and persecution, asked whether a time would come when they could put their swords away and live without fear, and this verse was then revealed (Q, R, Ṭ). For some this land over which He will surely make them vicegerents refers to the Arabian Peninsula (Ṭ). For others it refers to the lands of the Arabs and Persians (Q, Ṭs). Those before them who became vicegerents is thought to refer to the Children of Israel and triumph and state of security granted to them (Q, R).

This verse has also served as the locus for reflections on the question of the successors to the Prophet. For some Sunni commentators, it describes some or all of the period of thirty years subsequent to the death of the Prophet when the Muslim community was led by the four rightly guided Caliphs (al-khulafāʾ al-rāshidūn): Abū Bakr, ʿUmar, ʿUthmān, and ʿAlī (Q, R). Some have posed the question whether this inheritance or vicegerency refers only to the Companions or also to later caliphs and in fact to all believers in general (R, Ṭs). For some Shiites, this verse refers to the coming of the Mahdī (Ṭs) and the vicegerents are the People of the House (ahl al-bayt), meaning the descendants of the Prophet. Alternately, some say that it describes the period of the reign of Abū Bakr and ʿUmar specifically, since after their rule Muslims became divided among themselves (IK, Q).

On their religion, which He has approved for them, see also 5:3: This day I have perfected for you your religion, and completed My Blessing upon you, and have approved for you as religion, Submission (Islam). For some the change from a state of fear to [one of] security refers not to a change in status in this world, but the move from this world to the Hereafter (Ṭs). They will worship Me, not ascribing any partners is an adverbial phrase in the Arabic, meaning that it is a description of the believers' state as they live in security (R).

56 And perform the prayer, and give the alms, and obey the Messenger, that haply you may receive mercy.

56 Cf. 3:132; 6:155; 7:63, 204; 27:46; 36:45; 49:10.

57 Do not suppose that the disbelievers thwart [aught] on the earth. The Fire will be their refuge—what an evil journey's end!

57 The idea of the disbelievers not being able to thwart or frustrate God or His signs appears several times in the Quran, including 8:59; 9:2–3; 11:20; 29:22; 35:44; 42:31; 46:32; 72:12.

58 O you who believe! Let those whom your right hands possess and those who have not come of age ask your leave three times: before the dawn prayer, when you doff your garments at noon, and after the night prayer—three times of privacy for you. Beyond these, there is no blame upon you or upon them should you go about [visiting] one another. Thus does God make clear unto you the signs, and God is Knowing, Wise.

58 Many jurists note that the Command to ask your leave, or ask permission to enter, is not abrogated and is an obligation for all men and women, a view that al-Qurṭubī says is the opinion of most jurists, though he also mentions other opinions that understand it as a recommendation or advice or as an obligation upon one gender or the other. It seems that the question of abrogation of this verse arose because the action mentioned in this specific verse fell out of practice, and many people bemoaned the fact (IK, Ṭ). Al-Qurṭubī mentions that Ibn ʿAbbās was asked by the people of Iraq (usually a reference to the towns of Basra and Kufa) about this verse, which was no longer followed. Ibn ʿAbbās replied that God loves modesty and explained that, because servants or children would walk in on people without announcing their presence and many of the houses did not have partitions or separate chambers, this verse was revealed as an act of compassion and generosity by God. Al-Qurṭubī opines that the conditions in non-urban areas still made the verse relevant, even though for many people the situation addressed by this verse did not normally arise.

Three times is thought by most to refer to the three periods of time mentioned in this verse, though others interpret it to mean that when one asks, one should do so thrice (Q). It is aimed at those who normally would go back and forth in one's house, not people outside of the household (IK). When you doff your garments at noon refers to the traditional midday rest taken at the time of greatest heat, while before the dawn prayer and after the night prayer refer to the beginning and end of the day, after rising in the morning and going to bed at night.

59 And when the children among you come of age, let them ask leave as those before them asked leave. Thus does God make clear unto you His signs, and God is Knowing, Wise.

59 As those before them asked leave means that those children who, before coming of age, only had to ask permission during the three times mentioned in the previous verse would now have to ask permission at any time, as is the case for adults (IK).

60 As for elderly women who no longer anticipate marriage, there is no blame upon them to doff their garments without displaying any ornament. And it is better for them to be modest, and God is Hearing, Knowing.

60 Elderly renders qawā'id (sing. qā'id), which evokes the sense of someone who is now “sitting out” or “sitting back” from marriage and childbearing or from a busy life (M, R). Garments (thiyāb) is interpreted as the jilbāb, the garment mentioned in 33:59 (IK, M, Q, Ṭ); the kerchief (khimār; R, Ṭ); the “wrap” (ridā' or milḥafah; M, Ṭ, Z); or simply one's garments (R). Al-Qurṭubī mentions the opinion of some jurists that if the hair of an old woman—one who is a free woman, see

24:31c—shows, there is no problem, but he still thinks it refers to the jilbāb, which goes over the kerchief. For al-Qurṭubī himself, this is because women of the age mentioned in this verse are beyond the dangers of passion and do not have to comply with “inconvenient” obligations.

Ornament (zīnah) is interpreted here to mean what is ordinarily supposed to be covered as described in 24:31 (Z). As in 24:31, those areas that women are supposed to cover are not clearly specified in the text and the reference to not displaying any ornament appears to mean that, although the rules governing elderly women are different, those rules still remain in effect to a degree. Al-Māturīdī says that no woman can show her zīnah in any case; so he is against the opinion that garments refers to the kerchief (khimār). He interprets it as a wrap they wear when they go out. It is better for them to be modest is thought to refer to the preference that they wear the kerchief (khimār; †).

61 There is no fault against the blind, nor fault against the lame, nor fault against the sick, nor upon yourselves in that you eat from your houses, or your fathers’ houses, or your mothers’ houses, or your brothers’ houses, or your sisters’ houses, or your paternal uncles’ houses, or your paternal aunts’ houses, or your maternal uncles’ houses, or your maternal aunts’ houses, or those whose keys you possess, or [those of] your friends. There is no blame upon you whether you eat together or separately. So when you enter houses, greet each other with a salutation from God, blessed and good. Thus does God make clear unto you the signs, that haply you may understand.

61 There are diverse opinions as to what is meant by saying that there is no fault on the blind, lame, or sick in this verse. According to some, the weaker members of society mentioned here were distressed when people would take them not to their own houses to eat, but to other people’s houses, and this verse was then revealed to set them at ease (IK). Others say that it means that sometimes the Companions would not have food in their own houses; so they would take the needy to other houses to eat, but the needy would be uncomfortable with that arrangement, and this verse was meant to comfort them (†). For still others it refers to those who went to war, leaving the keys of their home with someone, and the needy were unsure whether they could eat such food as was offered to them from the houses of those who were away (Ṭ). Some believe that it means that when they were told by the owners of the houses, “Eat as you need,” they feared or perceived that this was said grudgingly (Q). For some, it refers to pre-Islamic times when people would not like to eat with those suffering from misfortunes, because they found their afflictions inconvenient or distasteful (Q, Ṭ), or it refers to these people’s reticence to cause trouble or discomfort for other people because of their own afflictions (Q). In the opinion of Abū Muslim al-Ṣfahānī, however, this verse refers to non-Muslim relatives (R). Some commentators note the custom in some tribes of never eating alone—a person might even wait an entire day for someone with whom to share a meal—and this verse clarifies that there is no sin in eating together or separately (R, Z).

Your houses is thought to include the houses of one’s children (R, Z), since the structure in the Arabic allows for the reading, “The houses of your own.” Those whose keys you possess refers to those houses that have been entrusted to the care of others, who are allowed to partake of the food and gardens of the house (Z).

Regarding the mention of your friends, some commentators report a saying attributed to Ibn ʿAbbās in which he notes that friends are in a sense more important than parents, because on the Day of Judgment people will call out not to their parents, but to their friends, as in 26:100–101: So now we have no intercessors, nor any loyal friend (Z). For some the Quran elevates the status of friends by mentioning them with others with whom one has intimacy in this verse (Z). The salutation is made in a manner that is blessed and good, because a believer is praying to God that He bless and give good provision to other people (Z).

One possible way of understanding this verse is that people had various scruples about sharing meals or food with each other, and the verse was meant to put them at ease and to discourage them from being overly officious or formal to the detriment of enjoying the meals in blessing and wholesomeness. Alternately, in the situations described the level of permission and formality is different, as the settings are more intimate.

62 Only they are believers who believe in God and His Messenger and who, when they are with him in a collective affair, go not forth until asking his leave. Truly those who ask thy leave, it is they who believe in God and His Messenger. So when they ask thy leave in some matter of theirs, give leave unto whomsoever thou wilt, and seek forgiveness for them from God. Truly God is Forgiving, Merciful.

62 A collective affair refers to the congregational prayer or to people sitting together for the purposes of consultation (IK). More generally it can refer to a gathering for defense or similar purposes that requires the leader to call people together (Q). Ibn Kathīr notes that just as the previous verse teaches the adab, or courtesy, of entering houses, this verse addresses the adab of leaving them; that is, when in a gathering with the Prophet, one should ask his permission to leave. Ibn Kathīr quotes the ḥadīth: “When one of you comes upon a gathering, let him offer greetings, and when he wishes to leave, let him offer salutations, for the former is not worthier to do than the latter.” Others interpret the verse to mean that people steal and slink away within their souls from the Book of God and from His remembrance (R).

63 Do not deem the Messenger’s calling among you to be like your calling to one another. Indeed, God knows those among you who steal away under shelter. So let those who contradict his command be wary, lest a trial befall them or a painful punishment befall them.

63 It is said that the Prophet used to be addressed, “O Muhammad,” or “O Abu’l-Qāsim,” the former being his given name and the latter the common Arab sobriquet (kunya) formed by calling a man the father of his son; Abu’l-Qāsim means “Father of Qāsim,” referring to the Prophet’s son, who died as a child. Believers were commanded instead to honor and respect him by saying, “O Messenger of God” or “O Prophet of God” (IK, Ṭ). According to another interpretation, the calling (du‘ā’) refers not to a hail, but instead to supplicatory prayer, in which case it means that the prayers of the Prophet have a status greater than those of ordinary believers. Still others interpret it to mean that when the Prophet calls, one should respond with urgency and obedience (R, Ṭ). Others say that it means one should not raise one’s voice when calling him, as in 49:2 (R).

Those who steal away refers to the hypocrites who did not want to stay for the entire Friday sermon or who actually left from the back rows during prayer (IK); others see it as an attempt to plead an excuse to other Companions for having done so (R). Contradict his command can have the general meaning of “go against him” and can refer to spurning the Prophet’s example and teachings and not following his way, the punishment for which can come in either this life or the Hereafter (R).

64 Behold! Unto God belongs whatsoever is in the heavens and on the earth. God certainly knows [the state] you are in. On the day they will be returned unto Him, He will inform them of that which they did. And God is Knower of all things.

64 [The state] you are in renders a phrase that can also mean “what you do” or “what you follow.” For many, the implication of this verse is that, in addition to knowing individuals’ state and actions in life and informing them of them, God will also then give their just recompense (R, T, Z). The shift from you are in (second person) to they will be (third person) can serve more than one purpose, and al-Zamakhsharī offers the view that it could mean that the third person refers to the hypocrites specifically. The common idea of the heavens and the earth belonging to God is repeated in 2:284; 3:109, 129; 4:126, 131, 170; 53:31. That God will inform human beings of their every action on earth is a pervasive dimension of the Quran’s message, stated explicitly in this and similar passages (see 6:60c) and also implicitly in those verses describing the Day of Judgment more generally.

The Criterion

Most commentators consider al-Furqān to be a Makkan sūrah, although some believe that vv. 68–70 are from the Madinan period, while a minority consider most of the sūrah to be from the Madinan period and vv. 68–70 to be from the Makkan period (Q). It takes its name from the mention of the Criterion (al-Furqān) in the first verse, a word that could also be rendered “the Divide,” and which is also a name of the Quran.

Beginning with the disbelievers’ accusation that the Quran was taught by a human being to the Prophet or that he was simply rehearsing old legends (vv. 4–5), this sūrah goes on to elaborate on one of its main themes, namely, the inability of the Quraysh to accept Muhammad as a prophet because of his humanity. It lists their objections: he walks in the market like any other human being, is given no great treasure, and is not accompanied by an angel (vv. 7–10, 20–21). Moreover, the Quraysh wonder why the Quran was not sent down all at once, rather than being revealed gradually over years (v. 32), and part of their denial is manifest in their aversion to the use of the Divine Name al-Raḥmān (the Compassionate; vv. 59–60).

Several verses describe the horror of the disbelievers as they call out to be destroyed rather than suffer the punishment of the Fire and as they are rebuked and denied by the objects of their worship in this world (vv. 11–19, 22–29). Moses and Aaron, Noah, and the messengers sent to al-Rass are mentioned as previous examples of prophets who were rejected by their people (vv. 35–40). The latter part of the sūrah includes several verses that describe how the believers should conduct themselves in the face of vain talk and insults and addresses the true meaning of repentance and supplication to God (vv. 63–77).

① Blessed is He Who sent down the Criterion upon His servant that he may be a warner unto the worlds, ② He unto Whom belongs sovereignty over the heavens and the earth, and Who took not a child, and Who has no partner in sovereignty, and Who created everything, then measured it out with due measure. ③ But they have taken gods apart from Him, who create naught and are themselves created, and who have no power over what harm or benefit may come to themselves, and who have no power over death, or life, or resurrection. ④ And the disbelievers say, “This is naught but a lie that he has fabricated, and another people have helped him in it.” They have indeed produced a wrongdoing and a calumny. ⑤ And they say, “They are fables of those of old which he has had written down, and they are recited to him morning and evening.” ⑥ Say, “He has sent it down Who knows what is secret in the heavens and on the earth. Truly He is Forgiving, Merciful.” ⑦ And they say, “What ails this Messenger, who eats food and walks in the markets? Why is there not an angel sent down unto him to be a warner with him, ⑧ or no treasure cast unto him, or no garden for him from which to eat?” And the wrongdoers say, “You follow naught but a man bewitched.” ⑨ Look how they set forth descriptions of thee, and then go astray and cannot find a way. ⑩ Blessed is He Who, if He will, shall appoint for thee what is better than that—Gardens with rivers running below, and He will appoint for thee palaces. ⑪ Nay, but they deny the Hour, and We have prepared a Blaze for those who deny the Hour. ⑫ When it sees them from a place far off, they will hear its raging and roaring. ⑬ And when they are cast bound together into a narrow place thereof, they will, there and then, call to be destroyed. ⑭ “Call not this Day for one destruction, but call for many destructions!” ⑮ Say, “Is that better, or the Garden of everlastingness which is promised to the reverent?” It is for them a reward and a journey’s end. ⑯ Therein they shall have whatsoever they will, abiding. It is a binding promise upon your Lord. ⑰ And on the Day He gathers them and that which they worship apart from God, He will say, “Was it you who caused these servants of Mine to go astray, or did they [themselves] go astray from the way?” 18 They will say, “Glory be to Thee! It does not befit us to take protectors apart from Thee! But Thou didst grant them and their fathers enjoyment until they forgot the Reminder. And they were a people ruined. 19 They have denied you in what you say; so you cannot avert [it] or [find] help.” And whosoever among you does wrong, We shall make him taste a great punishment. 20 And We sent not any messengers before thee but that they ate food and walked in the markets. And We made some of you a trial for others; will you be patient? And thy Lord is Seeing. 21 And those who hope not to meet Us say, “Why have not the angels been sent down unto us, or why have we not seen our Lord?” Indeed, they have waxed arrogant in their souls and were greatly insolent. 22 On the Day they see the angels, there shall be no glad tidings for the guilty that Day. And they will say, “A barrier, forbidden!” 23 And We shall turn to whatever work they have done, and make it scattered dust. 24 That Day the inhabitants of the Garden shall have the best dwelling place and the most beautiful rest. 25 And the Day when the heavens are split open with clouds and the angels are sent down in a descent, 26 that Day the true sovereignty will belong to the Compassionate, and that will be a difficult Day for the disbelievers. 27 And that Day the wrongdoer will bite his hands, saying, “Would that I had taken a way with the Messenger! 28 Oh, woe unto me! Would that I had not taken so-and-so for a friend! 29 He did indeed cause me to go astray from the Reminder after its having come to me, and Satan is a forsaker of man.” 30 And the Messenger will say, “O my Lord! Truly my people have taken this Quran for foolishness.” 31 Thus did We make for every prophet an enemy from among the guilty, and thy Lord suffices as a Guide and a Helper. 32 And the disbelievers say, “Why was the Quran not sent down upon him as a single whole?” It is so, that We may make firm thine heart thereby. And We have recited it unto thee in a measured pace. 33 And they come not to thee with any parable, but that We bring to thee the truth and a better explanation. 34 [As for] those who are gathered upon their faces to Hell, their place is worse and they are further astray from the way. 35 And indeed We gave unto Moses the Book and placed with him his brother as a helper. 36 Then We said, "Go to the people who have denied Our signs." Then We destroyed them completely. 37 And Noah's people: when they denied the messengers, We drowned them and made of them a sign for mankind. And We have prepared for the wrongdoers a painful punishment. 38 And ʿĀd and Thamūd and the inhabitants of al-Rass, and many generations between them, 39 for each We set forth parables, and each We ruined utterly. 40 And indeed they passed by the town upon which fell the evil rain. Have they not seen it? Nay, but they hope not for a resurrection. 41 And when they see thee they do naught but take thee in mockery: "Is this the one whom God sent as a messenger? 42 He would indeed have nearly led us astray from our gods, had we not been steadfast to them." They will know, when they see the punishment, who is further astray from the way. 43 Hast thou considered the one who takes his caprice as his god? Wouldst thou be a guardian over him? 44 Or do you suppose that most of them hear or understand? Truly they are but as cattle. Nay, they are further astray from the way. 45 Hast thou not considered thy Lord, how He spreads out the shade—and had He willed, He could have made it still—and then We make the sun an indicator of it; 46 then We withdraw it unto Ourselves, a gentle withdrawal. 47 And He it is Who made the night a garment for you, and made sleep repose, and made day a resurrection. 48 And He it is Who sends the winds as glad tidings ahead of His Mercy. And We send down from Heaven pure water, 49 that We may revive a dead land thereby and give drink to many cattle and men We created. 50 And indeed We have distributed it among them, that they may reflect. But most of mankind refuse to be aught but ungrateful. 51 And had We willed, We would have sent a warner to every town. 52 So obey not the disbelievers, but strive against them by means of it with a great striving. 53 And He it is Who mixed the two seas, one sweet, satisfying, the other salty, bitter, and set between them a divide and a barrier, forbidden. 54 And He it is Who created a human being from water, and made of him lineages and [kinships through] marriages. And thy Lord is Powerful. 55 And they worship apart from God that which neither benefits them nor harms them. And the disbeliever is a partisan against his Lord. 56 And We sent thee not, save as a bearer of glad tidings and as a warner. 57 Say, “I ask not of you any reward for it, save that whosoever will may take a way unto his Lord.” 58 And trust in the Living, Who dies not, and hymn His praise. And God suffices as One Aware of the sins of His servants, 59 He Who created the heavens and the earth and whatsoever is between them in six days, then mounted the Throne, the Compassionate [is He]. So ask, regarding Him, One Who is aware. 60 And when it is said unto them, “Prostrate before the Compassionate,” they say, “And what is the Compassionate? Shall we prostrate before that [to] which you command us?” And it increases them in aversion. 61 Blessed is He Who placed constellations in the sky and placed therein a lamp and a shining moon. 62 And He it is Who made the night and the day successive, for whosoever desires to reflect or desires to be thankful. 63 The servants of the Compassionate are those who walk humbly upon the earth, and when the ignorant address them, say, “Peace,” 64 and who pass the night before their Lord, prostrating and standing [in prayer], 65 and who say, “Our Lord! Avert the punishment of Hell from us! Truly its punishment is inescapable. 66 What an evil dwelling place and station!” 67 and who, when they spend, are neither prodigal nor miserly—and between them is a just mean— 68 and who call not upon another god along with God, and slay not the soul that God has made inviolable, save by right, and who fornicate not—for whosoever does that shall meet requital, 69 and the punishment shall be multiplied for him on the Day of Resurrection. He shall abide therein, humiliated, 70 save for those who repent and believe and perform righteous deeds. For them, God will replace their evil deeds with good deeds, and God is Forgiving, Merciful. 71 And whosoever has repented and works righteousness does indeed repent to God with true repentance. 72 As for those who do not bear false witness, and who, when they pass by some idle talk, pass by with dignity, 73 and who, when they are reminded of the signs of their Lord, fall not deaf and blind against them, 74 and who say, “Our Lord! Grant us comfort in our spouses and our progeny, and make us imams for the reverent,” 75 it is they who shall be rewarded with the lofty abode for having been patient, and they will be met therein with salutations and [greetings of] peace, 76 abiding therein. What a beautiful dwelling place and station!

77 Say, “What weight would my Lord give you, were it not for your supplication? But you have denied, and it will be inevitable.”

Commentary

① Blessed is He Who sent down the Criterion upon His servant that he may be a warner unto the worlds,

1 The root from which blessed derives carries the sense of the growth and increase of what is good (IK, Q). Therefore, some commentators prefer to understand blessed to mean “holy” or “transcendent” in order to avoid the theological problem of associating God Himself with the change implied in the concept of growth or increase (Q).

On Criterion (Furqān), a word that appears also in 2:53, 185; 3:4; 8:29, 41; 21:48, see 3:3–4c and 8:29c. Criterion could also be rendered “divide” or “boundary” in the sense that it can mean both “that which distinguishes” and “that by which things are distinguished.” It is referred to in this way because it separates the believers from the disbelievers and truth from falsehood, and teaches believers how to live by delineating what is lawful and what is prohibited (Q). In this verse, al-Furqān is another name for the Quran; see also 21:48, where Moses and Aaron are also given a furqān, or a revelation in a more universal sense.

On warner, see 35:23c; 4:165c. See also 21:107, where the Prophet is described as a mercy unto the worlds. Worlds (‘ālamīn) can also mean more specifically human worlds or “nations,” that is, various human collectivities (see 2:47c). Here it is understood by some to refer to the human beings and jinn to whom the Prophet was sent (Q); see the introduction to Sūrah 72 for a discussion of the jinn and their reception of the Prophet’s message. For some, warner unto the worlds means that the Prophet was sent to all creatures until the Day of Judgment (R). Certain Mu‘tazilite theologians have argued that this verse means that God desires all creatures to have faith and to do good and avoid evil, while Ash‘arite theologians countered this argument by citing 7:179: Certainly We have created for Hell many among jinn and men (R).

② He unto Whom belongs sovereignty over the heavens and the earth, and Who took not a child, and Who has no partner in sovereignty, and Who created everything, then measured it out with due measure.

2 For God’s sovereignty, see Sūrah 67, “Sovereignty”; see also 67:1c; 36:83c. For a discussion of the Quran’s rejection of the notion of God having a child, which includes both Arab pagan beliefs concerning “daughters of God” and the Christian doctrine of Jesus as son of God, see 2:116c; 6:101–2c. Measured it out with due measure (cf. 76:16) renders a phrase composed of a verb (qaddara) and the verb’s corresponding verbal noun (taqdīr). It is a word that encompasses both knowing the measure of a thing and bestowing a measure upon a thing and thus also has within its range of meaning the sense of “estimation” and also “ordainment.” This range of meaning has implications for the theological questions surrounding the order found in creation as well as both God’s Knowledge of things and His Power over them, which is to say that it has bearing on questions of God’s Omniscience and Omnipotence. Al-Rāzī notes that, as it concerns human beings, taqdīr is an act of estimation or assessment, but because God’s Knowledge is eternal and unchanging, the Divine taqdīr refers to God’s Knowledge of a creature’s entire existence from beginning to end. Other commentators emphasize the sense of taqdīr as ordainment or “predestination,” referring to the bestowal and ordainment of everything a creature was, is now, or ever will be (IK, Q). In this latter sense taqdīr is similar to qadar, or one’s “lot” or “measuring out,” a concept that in the theological tradition often refers to the doctrine of Divine predestination; see 54:47–49; 6:60c; 17:13–14c; 17:30c; 65:3c; 68:1c; 91:8c, and the essay “The Quran and Schools of Islamic Theology and Philosophy.”

③ But they have taken gods apart from Him, who create naught and are themselves created, and who have no power over what harm or benefit may come to themselves, and who have no power over death, or life, or resurrection.

3 This verse is widely thought to refer to idolaters in particular, and would not necessarily include Christians, as the assertion in the previous verse might (R). The dismissal of false objects of worship as things that are created, but cannot themselves create, is also found in 7:191 and 16:20, and the criticism that they have no power over harm or benefit appears in 5:76; 10:18, 106; 13:16; 21:66. The Quran points out frequently that idols are incapable of numerous things, including granting provision (16:73; 29:17), speech (78:37), and intercession (30:13; 39:43; 43:86), indicating that they are unworthy of worship.

④ And the disbelievers say, “This is naught but a lie that he has fabricated, and another people have helped him in it.” They have indeed produced a wrongdoing and a calumny.

⑤ And they say, “They are fables of those of old which he has had written down, and they are recited to him morning and evening.”

4–5 These verses describe the accusation leveled against the Prophet that he was taught what to say by certain Jews and Christians (Q, Ṭ), and was merely rehearsing old stories; see also 16:103: He has merely been taught by a human being. Some commentators name specific people who were learned in the Torah, but then became followers of the Prophet, and it was alleged that he took stories from them (R). Many commentators connect these verses with a certain Naḍr ibn al-Ḥārith of the Quraysh, a storyteller who would recite stories from Persian history and myth; the disbelievers would compare his stories with the Quran and announce in the Prophet’s presence that al-Ḥārith’s stories were better (Ṭ). Fables of those of old are also mentioned in 6:25; 8:31; 16:24; 23:83; 27:68; 46:17; 68:15; 83:13.

⑥ Say, “He has sent it down Who knows what is secret in the heavens and on the earth. Truly He is Forgiving, Merciful.”

6 According to this verse, God knows all that is hidden in the heavens and on the earth, and so the Prophet does not need to be taught by another (Q). Also, the implicit threat in the idea that God knows all secret things would mean that He is aware of the thoughts and plots of those who oppose the Prophet (R).

⑦ And they say, “What ails this Messenger, who eats food and walks in the markets? Why is there not an angel sent down unto him to be a warner with him,

7 A major theme of the Quran is the incredulity of the disbelievers that God would send an ordinary human being to be His messenger. On the disbelievers’ desire to see an angel appear as a messenger, see 6:8–9c; also see 11:12; 15:7;

17:92–95; 21:3; 25:21; 43:53. Some note that the disbelievers employed this kind of insult against the Prophet because they knew that the great kings, rulers, and notables considered themselves above walking with ordinary people in the markets (Q). A response to this question comes in v. 20: And We sent not any messengers before thee but that they ate food and walked in the markets.

⑧ or no treasure cast unto him, or no garden for him from which to eat?” And the wrongdoers say, “You follow naught but a man bewitched.”

8 Similar questions are posed by the disbelievers about the Prophet in 11:12 and about Moses in 43:53: Why, then, have armlets of gold not been cast upon him, and why do angels not accompany him? They believed that a messenger who was not wealthy and did not have lands from which to sustain himself could not be superior to them; so they felt no imperative to follow him (R). Similar arguments were made by the Israelites against Saul in 2:247.

⑨ Look how they set forth descriptions of thee, and then go astray and cannot find a way.

9 For al-Rāzī, since it is not necessarily a problem that miraculous or extraordinary phenomena—such as those mentioned in v. 8—are not associated with prophets, perhaps this is meant to express astonishment that the wrongdoers would waste time making such useless comparisons or descriptions. For al-Qurṭubī, they offer such comparisons for the purposes of denying the Prophet. They then go astray and cannot find a way to accomplish their denial of the Prophet, meaning their parables or descriptions are of no avail (Q), which some interpret to mean that they can find no way out of the comparative descriptions they have given of the Prophet (Ṭ), presumably because this traps them, in a sense, in their state of rejection.

⑩ Blessed is He Who, if He will, shall appoint for thee what is better than that—Gardens with rivers running below, and He will appoint for thee palaces.

10 This verse states that the rewards of the Hereafter are greater than the treasure and garden that the disbelievers mention in v. 8 (Ṭ). For some this means that if God willed, He could bestow both gardens in the Hereafter and palaces in this world (R). On the meaning of Gardens with rivers running below, see 2:25c. Palaces renders quṣūr, which according to some commentators meant for the Quraysh any dwelling that was made of stone, regardless of size (IK, Q, Ṭ). See also 7:74, which mentions the castles (quṣūr) built by the Thamūd, the people of Ṣāliḥ, and also 22:45.

11 Nay, but they deny the Hour, and We have prepared a Blaze for those who deny the Hour.

11 The Hour refers to the end of the world and the Day of Resurrection (Q). Blaze renders saʿīr, which means a flame or kindled fire and is in this sense a rough synonym for nār, usually rendered “fire.” Some consider it one of the names of Hell (R). For saʿīr (Blaze or blazing flame), see also 4:10, 55; 17:97; 22:4; 31:21; 33:64; 34:12; 35:6; 42:7; 48:13; 67:5, 10, 11; 76:4; 84:12. Because of the term prepared, some theologians understand this verse to support the idea that one’s ultimate end is predestined and that “those who are saved were saved in their mother’s womb” (R), though the verse can also be read as saying that Hell is prepared as a destination for those people who choose freely to deny the Hour.

12 When it sees them from a place far off, they will hear its raging and roaring.

12 When it sees them means when Hell sees them (Q) or when the custodians of Hell see them; here Hell is a metonym, as when one says, “Ask the town,” meaning, “Ask the people of the town” (R). Al-Qurṭubī glosses this verse with a ḥadīth describing the Fire that will come upon the disbelievers on the Day of Resurrection as having a neck sprouting out of it with two eyes that see, two ears that hear, and a tongue that speaks, declaring that it has been entrusted with those who associated others with God and that it will swallow them as a bird swallows a sesame seed. Some theologians (such as the Mu^otazilites) disallow the notion of such attributes, but others see no problem with God's granting the Fire such faculties (R).

13 And when they are cast bound together into a narrow place thereof, they will, there and then, call to be destroyed.

14 "Call not this Day for one destruction, but call for many destructions!"

13–14 In a saying attributed to Ibn ^oAbbās, the constriction of the narrow place is described using the metaphor of a spearhead forced into the shaft of a spear (Q). Bound together is interpreted by some to mean that people will be chained to their individual satans; for others, their hands will be chained to their necks (Q, Z). To be destroyed renders thubūr, which is also thought of as a kind of lamentation (Ṭ). According to this understanding, these verses would be rendered, "They will, there and then, call out 'Woe!' 'Do not call out "Woe!" once, but call out "Woe!" many times!" Call for many destructions refers to the fact that the punishment will not be a solitary event; it will be enduring and come in many forms, and there will be no relief from it, so that those experiencing it will call out to be destroyed (or call out "Woe!") over and over again (R, Z). Other verses that mention the unremitting punishment include 4:56: As often as their skins are consumed, We shall replace them with other skins; and 20:74: His shall be Hell, wherein he neither dies nor lives.

15 Say, "Is that better, or the Garden of everlastingness which is promised to the reverent?" It is for them a reward and a journey's end.

16 Therein they shall have whatsoever they will, abiding. It is a binding promise upon your Lord.

15–16 Everlastingness renders khuld, from the same root as abiding (khālid) in v. 16, which is often used in the Quran to describe the denizens of Paradise and Hell as abiding therein (e.g., v. 76) and which means literally "to stay" or "to remain,” by implication in an everlasting manner. When understood in relation to the Hereafter, to “stay” or “remain” in a place can be interpreted as tantamount to being there forever, or as it is said here everlastingly. That this Garden is promised to the reverent and that this promise is characterized as binding (mas’ūl) raises theological issues related to whether human beings deserve Paradise and whether God is in any sense obligated to bestow it as a gift from Him. Some understand the word mas’ūl in a more literal way to mean “something asked for” by human beings rather than “what one is obligated to do” (Ṭ), while others see in this a reference to the angels’ supplication to God in 40:8: Our Lord, make them enter Gardens of Eden that Thou hast promised them (R). Binding (mas’ūl) is interpreted to signify obligation in the sense of a promise that one keeps rather than a debt that one owes (Q). Although binding reflects idiomatic Arabic, such notions of God’s being “obligated” often fall outside of what is theologically acceptable for many commentators, especially those who subscribe to the Ash‘arite school, for whom God’s absolute Will and Omnipotence are always paramount. This extends to questions of how Paradise and Hell constitute a promise or threat that He will carry out. Some theologians maintain that God is not “obligated” to fulfill a promise or act upon a threat, since His Will is supreme. For other theologians, such as the Mu‘tazilites and many others, these verses indicate that those who receive Paradise are indeed those who deserve it (R). Receiving and having free access to what one desires in Paradise or with God is also mentioned in 16:31; 39:34; 42:22; 50:35.

①⑦ And on the Day He gathers them and that which they worship apart from God, He will say, “Was it you who caused these servants of Mine to go astray, or did they [themselves] go astray from the way?”

①⑧ They will say, “Glory be to Thee! It does not befit us to take protectors apart from Thee! But Thou didst grant them and their fathers enjoyment until they forgot the Reminder. And they were a people ruined.

17–18 The Day refers to the Day of Judgment, while that which they worship refers to other beings who become objects of worship such as the angels, jinn, idols, or even Jesus (Q); the idols will be made to speak just as the parts of the human body will be made to speak, as in 36:65 (Q, R). This question posed by God to the objects of worship is similar to that posed to Jesus in 5:116: And when God said, “O Jesus, son of Mary! Didst thou say unto mankind, ‘Take me and my mother as gods apart from God?’” he said, “Glory be to Thee! It is not for me to utter that to which I have no right.” Protectors renders awliyā’, which can also mean “friends,” “allies,” or “saints” (see 3:28c; 4:88–90c; 5:55c). To be granted enjoyment refers to being given the opportunity to indulge in the goods of the world. Forgetting of the reminder (or remembrance) of God is described in similar terms in 23:110: But you took them in mockery, till it made you forget My remembrance. The forgetting of God is also mentioned in 7:51; 23:110; 45:34; 58:19; 59:19; see 9:67c; 45:34c.

①9 They have denied you in what you say; so you cannot avert [it] or [find] help.” And whosoever among you does wrong, We shall make him taste a great punishment.

19 They have denied you is spoken to those who worship things apart from God in v. 17; it is they who cannot avert the Punishment of God or find any help against God (Q). Another opinion is that these words are spoken to the Prophet and refer to the disbelievers’ rejection of him and the truths about which he and his followers speak (Q); in keeping with this understanding, so you cannot avert [it] is read by some in the third person, “so they cannot avert [it],” where the “they” refers to the idolaters (Q, Z). Avert is also read without an implied object, so that it would mean “to turn oneself,” that is, to turn in repentance; or it means that they will be unable to engage in any kind of ruse or trick to escape the situation (R).

②0 And We sent not any messengers before thee but that they ate food and walked in the markets. And We made some of you a trial for others; will you be patient? And thy Lord is Seeing.

20 This verse is understood as a response to the questions posed in v. 7 regarding the humanity and natural limitations of the Prophet. The trial is understood by some to refer to the scorn exhibited by the haughty Quraysh toward the impoverished Companions, as described in 46:11: Had it been good, they would not have outstripped us in [attaining] it; that is, the low social status and poverty of some of the Companions kept the socially superior Quraysh from embracing the faith (R); see commentary on 6:52–53. It can also be extended to refer to human beings in general with respect to their being given different physical, intellectual, and spiritual gifts. Will you be patient? is understood to be addressed to the believers, encouraging them to bear the taunts of the disbelievers and to endure the poverty and weakness they suffer; it is also understood implicitly as the command “Be patient” (Q).

21 And those who hope not to meet Us say, “Why have not the angels been sent down unto us, or why have we not seen our Lord?” Indeed, they have waxed arrogant in their souls and were greatly insolent.

21 Similar questions are posed to Moses in 2:55: O Moses, we will not believe thee till we see God openly. In other passages, including 6:8 and 17:90–93, the Quraysh demand that the Prophet produce marvels before they will believe in him; see also 25:7c.

22 On the Day they see the angels, there shall be no glad tidings for the guilty that Day. And they will say, “A barrier, forbidden!”

22 No glad tidings for the guilty refers to the fact that the guilty will only see the angels upon death or on the Day of Resurrection (Q, R), which are two possible meanings for the word Day. The phrase A barrier, forbidden! renders an idiomatic Arabic exclamation used when one encounters an enemy or attacker and wants the attack to be stopped or hindered (R). According to one interpretation, these words are spoken by the disbelievers who, upon seeing the fearsome sight of angels, desire to be protected from them, while others understand these to be the words of the angels keeping the disbelievers out of the gates of the Garden (R). The warning to the “guilty” about meeting the angels is expressed in a different way in 2:210: Do they wait for naught less than that God should come in the shadows of clouds, with the angels, and that the matter should have been decreed?; see also 6:158 and 16:33.

23 And We shall turn to whatever work they have done, and make it scattered dust.

23 The works of filial piety that the guilty believed to constitute good deeds will come to naught because of their disbelief (Q), though work may also be understood to refer to any action of theirs (R). Dust renders habā', which is typically thought to refer to the particles floating in the air that are made visible by a shaft of light. Regarding the broader Quranic discussion of deeds coming to naught, see 2:217; 3:21–22; 5:5, 53; 6:88; 7:147; 9:17; 11:16; 18:105; 33:19; 39:65; 47:9, 28, 32.

24 That Day the inhabitants of the Garden shall have the best dwelling place and the most beautiful rest.

24 Some read this verse as a response to the question in v. 15: Is that better (khayr), or the Garden of everlastingness? In this verse best (also khayr) can be read as the superlative (“best”) or the comparative (“better”). Rest (maqīl) is understood to refer specifically to a place where one takes the midday sleep (qaylūlah; see also 24:58), raising questions for some commentators about whether one sleeps in the Garden or whether there will be a kind of intermission during the Day of Judgment (occurring in the middle of the “Day” like the ordinary midday sleep) when the reckoning of deeds will be suspended (Q, R, Z).

25 And the Day when the heavens are split open with clouds and the angels are sent down in a descent, 25 The splitting or opening of the heavens when the world is destroyed is also mentioned in 42:5; 55:37; 69:16; 78:19; 82:1; 84:1. The descent or coming of the angels at the end of the world is also mentioned in 2:210; 6:158; 89:22.

26 that Day the true sovereignty will belong to the Compassionate, and that will be a difficult Day for the disbelievers.

26 Some take true sovereignty to mean that on that Day there will be no illusion of any sovereignty other than God's, even though true sovereignty was always God's, and all other claims to sovereignty over anything will disappear (Q, R). On the concept of sovereignty (mulk), see 67:1c; 36:83c.

27 And that Day the wrongdoer will bite his hands, saying, "Would that I had taken a way with the Messenger!

28 Oh, woe unto me! Would that I had not taken so-and-so for a friend!

29 He did indeed cause me to go astray from the Reminder after its having come to me, and Satan is a forsaker of man."

27–29 Although some commentators tie these verses to a specific person who was said to have been misled by his friend away from Islam and from following the Prophet (IK, Q), others do not consider it to be specific at all (R), as such expressions of regret over one's conduct in the world also appear in 6:27; 33:66; 68:29–31; 78:40; 89:24.

The Reminder can be a reference to the Quran itself (one of whose names is the Reminder) or the remembrance of God, as the latter is also part of the lexical meaning of dhikr (R). Satan can refer to Iblīs himself, but the Quran also uses the word shayṭān in a more extended sense to refer to the helpers of Satan and to certain human beings (see 2:14c; 6:112c), so that this phrase could also be read as referring to that false friend ("the satan" rather than "Satan") who misleads one away from the truth (R).

30 And the Messenger will say, "O my Lord! Truly my people have taken this Quran for foolishness."

30 These words are understood to be spoken by the Prophet in the Hereafter, but they also can have occurred during his earthly life (R). The people took it for foolishness when they either thought it was sorcery (cf. 37:15) or simply called it a lie (T).

31 Thus did We make for every prophet an enemy from among the guilty, and thy Lord suffices as a Guide and a Helper.

31 That the Prophet Muhammad had obstacles in common with previous prophets is a major theme of the Quran, as in 6:112: Thus have We made for every prophet an enemy—satans from among mankind and jinn, who inspire each other with flowery discourse in order to deceive. Elsewhere it is mentioned that all the prophets were in some way mocked by their peoples or opposed by the affluent and powerful among those to whom they were sent; see the stories of the prophets Noah, Hūd, Ṣāliḥ, Lot, Shu‘ayb, and Moses in 7:59–136. On the concept of God’s Sufficiency, see 2:137c; 3:173c. For some commentators the subsequent mention of several prophets and their enemies in vv. 31–39 is a direct continuation of the message of this verse.

32 And the disbelievers say, “Why was the Quran not sent down upon him as a single whole?” It is so, that We may make firm thine heart thereby. And We have recited it unto thee in a measured pace.

32 The Quran was revealed over the course of the Prophet’s entire mission of twenty-two or twenty-three years; see the essay “The Islamic View of the Quran.” The message of this verse is connected with 11:120: All that We recount unto thee of the stories of the messengers is that whereby We make firm thine heart. Some understand We have recited it unto thee in a measured pace to mean, “We have explained to thee its interpretation” (IK, Ṭ). Many commentators highlight the relationship of the Quran to the events of the life of the Prophet, the gradual legislation of commands and prohibitions, and the manner in which successive revelations were both necessary for the establishment of the Islamic community and a source of support and help for the Prophet during his struggles with his enemies (IK, Q, R). Al-Rāzī understands the gradual application of the commands and prohibitions, the memorization and understanding of one part at a time, and the responsiveness of the revelation to the questions and states of the believers to be among the benefits of the successive revelation of the Quran; see also commentary on 17:106: And [We sent it down] as a recitation We have divided in parts, that thou mayest recite it unto men in intervals, and We sent it down in successive revelations.

At the same time, some commentators describe how the Quran descended all at once from the Preserved Tablet (85:22) or Mother of the Book (13:39) into the highest state of the cosmos (“the heaven of this world”) and, once established there, descended gradually over time to the Prophet (IK).

③③ And they come not to thee with any parable, but that We bring to thee the truth and a better explanation.

33 Parable renders mathal, which also means “symbol” and which can in this context also convey the meaning of “comparison” or “description”; here the term refers to arguments or challenges the disbelievers used in order to try to discredit the Prophet and the Quran (IK). Explanation renders tafsīr, a word that in its later technical usage refers to the genre of the exegesis of the Quran, but that here refers to an explanation or clarification of the truth that is always better than the challenges presented by the Prophet’s opponents (IK, Q).

③④ [As for] those who are gathered upon their faces to Hell, their place is worse and they are further astray from the way.

34 That those who are astray are gathered upon their faces in the Hereafter, as a consequence of disbelief and evil actions, is also mentioned in 17:97 and 54:48. The significance of punishment in connection with the human face is discussed in 33:66c, which also refers to such verses as 8:50; 14:50; 23:104; 27:90.

③⑤ And indeed We gave unto Moses the Book and placed with him his brother as a helper.

③⑥ Then We said, “Go to the people who have denied Our signs.” Then We destroyed them completely.

35–36 Sometimes the command to go to Pharaoh is addressed to Moses in the singular (20:24), while in other verses, such as v. 36, the command, in the dual form, is addressed to Moses and Aaron. Al-Qurṭubī points out that the dual can be used even though the command was directed at Moses only, or it means that Moses was commanded first and then, as described in 20:29–32, Moses asked God to make Aaron his helper, after which they were both commanded to go to Pharaoh. Destroy renders dammara, also used in 7:137; 17:16; 26:172; 27:51; 37:136; 47:10.

37 And Noah’s people: when they denied the messengers, We drowned them and made of them a sign for mankind. And We have prepared for the wrongdoers a painful punishment.

38 And ʿĀd and Thamūd and the inhabitants of al-Rass, and many generations between them, 37–38 These various peoples are also mentioned together in 50:12–13. For the Quranic account of Noah and the destruction of his people, see 7:59–64; 11:25–48; 23:23–30; 26:105–22; and Sūrah 71. For the account of the ʿĀd, see 7:65–72; 11:50–60; 41:15–16; 54:18–21. For that of the Thamūd, see 7:73–79; 11:61–68; 26:141–58; 54:23–31. There is no agreement as to the identity of the people of al-Rass or even if the term is a proper name, since the word can also mean “the well” or “the pit” (Ṭ). Al-Rāzī lists several possibilities for the geographical location of these people and the prophets who were sent to them, including one that says the people of al-Rass were descended from or were part of the people of the Thamūd and another that says the name comes from the fact that these people threw their prophet into a well or pit; on al-Rass, also see 50:12–14c. Al-Rāzī prefers the opinion that none of these details are ascertainable and the significance of the story lies in the fact that these were people who, like the ʿĀd and the Thamūd, were destroyed because of their disbelief.

39 for each We set forth parables, and each We ruined utterly.

39 Set forth parables means that God provided them with exhortations and proofs (R, Ṭ). Parable renders mathal, a form of descriptive comparison used to convey a message that can encompass forms of address broader than metaphor or allegory; on mathal, also see 16:60c; 25:33c. The verb phrase rendered by ruined utterly also connotes the sense of something crumbling.

40 And indeed they passed by the town upon which fell the evil rain. Have they not seen it? Nay, but they hope not for a resurrection.

40 This verse is understood to refer to the people of Lot (Ṭ). The evil rain (cf. 27:58) is a rain of stones (R, Ṭ), causing destruction of the town. This verse is alluding to the fact that the Quraysh, in their journeys for purposes of trade, would have passed by such ruins (R). This is also connected to another Quranic theme repeated in the question, Have they not journeyed upon the earth and observed how those before them fared in the end? (e.g., 12:109; 30:9, 42; 35:44; 40:21, 82; 47:10). They hope not for a resurrection, referring to the Quraysh, can mean both that they are not hopeful for such a reality and that it is something they do not believe will happen (“hope” in the sense of “anticipate”; R). Such language of “not hoping” to meet God or be resurrected also appears in 4:104; 10:7, 11, 15; 25:21; 45:14; 71:13; 78:27.

41 And when they see thee they do naught but take thee in mockery: “Is this the one whom God sent as a messenger?”

41 On the disbelievers’ incredulity regarding God’s choice of Muhammad and his followers instead of them, see 46:11c; 6:53c. Cf. 43:6–7: How many a prophet did We send to those of old? Yet never did a prophet come unto them, but that they mocked him. The mockery carried out by the disbelievers is a common trait ascribed to them (see, e.g., 2:14–15; 4:140; 5:57–58; 6:5; 31:6; 45:9, 35).

42 He would indeed have nearly led us astray from our gods, had we not been steadfast to them.” They will know, when they see the punishment, who is further astray from the way.

42 For al-Rāzī, this verse alludes to the seriousness and diligence with which the Prophet continually presented proofs and evidence, but the disbelievers were steadfast to their gods, kept themselves loyal to them (Q), and remained firm (R).

④⁴³ Hast thou considered the one who takes his caprice as his god? Wouldst thou be a guardian over him?

43 The idolaters obey their passions to the point of worshipping them (Aj, Z). In this context some commentators relate that some were so fickle that, upon seeing a better or more beautiful idol than the one they were worshipping, they would quickly abandon the first and begin worshipping the second (Aj, Q, R). This verse suggests to the Prophet that those who act on impulse and respond to their passions cannot be persuaded to worship the One God (Aj, Q). See also 88:22: Thou art not a warder over them.

④⁴⁴ Or do you suppose that most of them hear or understand? Truly they are but as cattle. Nay, they are further astray from the way.

44 The disbelievers are like cattle in that they do not think and restrict their concerns to eating and drinking; they are even further astray, because cattle are not condemned for acting like this, but human beings are (Q). Also, cattle follow their natures, know how to obey their herders, and can hear and understand insofar as they are animals, but disbelievers disobey God and have neither eyes nor ears for the truth (IK, Ṭ). For some, this verse means that, although cattle do not possess knowledge, they are not guilty of the compound ignorance of both not knowing and not knowing that they do not know. Cattle, moreover, know what is good and bad for them, whereas some human beings do not understand how good God has been to them and that Satan is their enemy (Z), and thus they do not know how to seek the greater good of the Hereafter and avoid its punishments (Aj). Other verses that compare human beings to animals include 2:65; 7:176; 29:41; 31:19; 62:5; see 2:65c.

④⁴⁵ Hast thou not considered thy Lord, how He spreads out the shade—and had He willed, He could have made it still—and then We make the sun an indicator of it;

45 Here the shade refers to the time from the break of dawn until sunrise (Ṭ), a state between total illumination and total darkness (R). According to this interpretation, shade (zill) could also be rendered “twilight.” On zill, also see 56:30c, where shade is discussed in connection with the Garden. He could have made it still refers to the fact that God could cause the twilight to last without the sun overtaking it and causing it to disappear (IK). We make the sun an indicator of it is interpreted to mean that it is through opposites that things are known, and thus the shade is known and understood in contrast to the shining of the sun (IK, R). In a sense, it is through knowing the sun’s shining state that one knows the twilight (Z). Just as the sun moves gradually through the sky, so too does the shade or twilight gradually change (Ṭb).

46 then We withdraw it unto Ourselves, a gentle withdrawal.

46 It refers to the shade (zill) or twilight from the previous verse. The twilight is withdrawn as the sun rises and the light erases the shade (Ṭb). Some interpret gentle (yasīr) to mean “quickly” or “in a hidden way” (Ṭ), while others take it to mean that the withdrawal is gradual (Z). This verse also has connotations of the coming of the Hour (the end of the world and the Resurrection), which is spoken of as being easy (also yasīr) for God to accomplish, as in 29:19 and 50:44 (R). As a spiritual allegory, vv. 45–46 are understood to mean that the human soul (and indeed every created thing) is a shadow cast from the Unseen; the sun of sacred knowledge points to its ultimate nature, and God draws it gradually to Himself until the soul is annihilated (fanāʿ) in Him (Aj).

47 And He it is Who made the night a garment for you, and made sleep repose, and made day a resurrection.

47 In connection with waking as a resurrection (nushūr), some mention the proverb, “Sleep is the brother of death” (Ṭ). Sleep is also associated with death in 6:60: He it is Who takes your souls by night, and also 39:42: God takes souls at the moment of their death, and those who die not during their sleep; see commentary on these two verses. The night, sleep, and day are described using similar language in 78:9–11.

④⑧ And He it is Who sends the winds as glad tidings ahead of His Mercy. And We send down from Heaven pure water, 48 For sends the winds as glad tidings ahead of His Mercy, referring to the gathering of a rainstorm before the water starts to fall, see 7:57c. Winds as signs of God and blessings are also mentioned in 2:164; 7:57; 15:22; 27:63; 30:46; 45:5. Pure can mean both something that is pure and something by which other things are purified; hence the phrase could also be rendered “purifying water” (IK, R), an idea found in 8:11: He . . . sent down upon you water from the sky to purify you thereby. This latter verse is generally connected with an incident where an unexpected rain allowed the Muslims to perform their ritual ablutions with water before a battle, and several commentators use the present verse to discuss the details of the purifying properties of water and whether other substances share those properties.

④⑨ that We may revive a dead land thereby and give drink to many cattle and men We created.

49 The revival of a dead land is also mentioned in 43:11 and 50:11.

④⑩ And indeed We have distributed it among them, that they may reflect. But most of mankind refuse to be aught but ungrateful.

50 Distributed it means that the rain does not always fall in the same place, coming down on different lands at different times (IK, R); even though rain falls every year, God chooses to bless certain lands with it some years and other lands with it in other years (Aj). As in many verses that mention water in its various forms, water also symbolizes spiritual blessings that provide life to the soul through knowledge and wisdom (Aj). The lack of gratitude in the face of beneficent rain is interpreted to refer specifically to human beings attributing blessings like rain to astrological events such as the setting of a star, rather than to the Mercy and Power of God (IK, Q).

51 And had We willed, We would have sent a warner to every town.

51 This verse is understood as a magnification and praise of the Prophet Muhammad, implying that God singled him out and deemed him to be worthy to carry out the task of establishing God's final religion alone (IK, R). Al-Ṭabarī reads it to mean that God is telling the Prophet that it may have been easier on him if more messengers were sent to other towns, but now Muhammad has to bear a greater burden himself, and v. 51 reminds him not to obey the desires of the disbelievers. According to al-Qurṭubī, it implies that, unlike the rain that descends upon all lands (v. 50), the Prophet is sent to one land, and Ibn ʿAjībah notes that the Prophet was necessarily possessed of exceptional wisdom and insight to be able to convey a message that would give the different people of the world all that they needed. The plain sense of the verse also allows an interpretation that singles out the town of Makkah.

52 So obey not the disbelievers, but strive against them by means of it with a great striving.

52 Strive against them by means of it is understood to mean striving (jihād) with the help of the Quran (IK, Ṭ) or of Islam (Q, Ṭ). Al-Qurṭubī and others dismiss the opinion that this refers to the use of force, since this is a Makkan sūrah and the permission to use force had not been granted yet. See the essay “Conquest and Conversion, War and Peace in the Quran.”

53 And He it is Who mixed the two seas, one sweet, satisfying, the other salty, bitter, and set between them a divide and a barrier, forbidden.

53 That God mixed the two seas means that one flows into the other (Ṭ), though some understand the verb to mean “to allow to flow” (Q), so that the phrase would then be translated, “God caused the two seas to flow.” By sweet is understood the water of rivers and streams, and by salty the water of the oceans (Ṭ), although these terms also have symbolic meanings. The idea of the two seas is also mentioned in 18:60; 27:61; 35:12; 55:19. For the range of interpretation of the two seas, see 35:12c; 55:19–20c. Symbolically, some interpret the sweet water to be a reference to the Law (Sharī‘ah), because it is easy to attain, while the salty water is ultimate truth (ḥaqīqah), which can only come through spiritual effort and courage (Aj); alternately, in the heart of a believer there is both hope and fear of God, corresponding to the sweet and salty water, respectively, and neither should overpower the other in one’s soul (Qu).

Barrier renders barzakh, which also appears in 23:100 and 55:20 and which connotes a barrier or an isthmus between two things as well as purgatory when considered eschatologically; see 3:169–71c and also the essay “Death, Dying, and the Afterlife in the Quran.” Here it is coupled with forbidden, forming a phrase identical to the exclamation spoken by either the angels or the disbelievers in the Fire in v. 22 (A barrier, forbidden!), though in the present verse it is descriptive rather than imperative.

54 And He it is Who created a human being from water, and made of him lineages and [kinships through] marriages. And thy Lord is Powerful.

54 Lineages and marriages refer to kinship by blood and kinship through marriage, respectively (Q, R, Ṭ). The creation of every living thing from water is mentioned in 21:30 and 24:45. On the nature of all human beings’ common origin, see commentary on 4:1: Reverence your Lord, Who created you from a single soul and from it created its mate, and from the two has spread abroad a multitude of men and women.

55 And they worship apart from God that which neither benefits them nor harms them. And the disbeliever is a partisan against his Lord.

55 The common motif of disbelievers worshipping what neither harms nor benefits them is also found in 6:71; 7:192, 197; 10:18, 106; 13:16; 22:12. Partisan (ḡahīr) is understood to mean that they help or support Satan against God (R, Ṭ). Some understand ḡahīr to connote the sense of being “left behind” or “disregarded,” in which case the verse would mean, “And the disbeliever deems his Lord unimportant” (Q, R).

56 And We sent thee not, save as a bearer of glad tidings and as a warner.

56 This is one of several passages to refer to the Prophet as a bearer of glad tidings and as a warner (5:19; 7:188; 11:2; 17:105; 33:45; 34:28; 35:24; 48:8); in other verses these functions are attributed to all prophets (2:213; 4:165; 6:48; 18:56).

57 Say, “I ask not of you any reward for it, save that whosoever will may take a way unto his Lord.”

57 The Prophet is asking people to believe for their own sake, not his (R); all the Prophet desires is for them to receive what he is giving them (Z). Alternately, he does not ask them for any reward, but rather is asking them to spend their wealth in the way of God (R). For some, to take a way unto God means to do so through charitable giving (R). According to some, the word rendered by save (illā) forms a grammatical break, such that the verse would read, “I ask not of you any reward for it, but [let] whosoever wills take a way unto his Lord [by giving in the way of God]” (Q). References to messengers of God not asking for a reward from people, but only expecting their reward from God can also be found in 26:109, 127, 145, 164, 180; 34:47; 36:21; 38:86; 42:23.

58 And trust in the Living, Who dies not, and hymn His praise. And God suffices as One Aware of the sins of His servants, 58 On God as the Living, see 2:255c. On the concept of God’s “sufficiency,” see 2:137c.

59 He Who created the heavens and the earth and whatsoever is between them in six days, then mounted the Throne, the Compassionate [is He]. So ask, regarding Him, One Who is aware.

59 On the creation of the heavens and the earth in six days (cf. 7:54; 10:3; 11:7; 32:4; 50:38; 57:4) and God’s “mounting” the Throne (cf. 7:54; 10:3; 32:4), see 7:54c; 11:7c; 32:4c. Some commentators, such as al-Rāzī, prefer to interpret the days here literally and not to delve into symbolic interpretations, considering superfluous those interpretations that understand these days as like the days mentioned in 22:47: Truly a day with your Lord is as a thousand years of that which you reckon. They consider questions like the nature of these six days to be among the inquiries that are essentially imponderable and unknowable, since God could just as easily have created the heavens and the earth in an instant; other such questions include why there are specifically five daily prayers (R).

The final part of this verse is read in several ways. As translated, the Compassionate is read as the subject of the sentence, and the predicate is everything that precedes it. Others read the Compassionate as an appositive following the Living from the previous verse. Still others read the Compassionate as the start of a new sentence, so that it would read, “[As for] the Compassionate, ask, regarding Him, One Who is aware” (R).

Some read the final phrase as, “So ask, regarding it”; that is, ask about the creation of the heavens and the earth; in this case the One Who is aware is thought to refer to God Himself and the Prophet is being commanded to rely on God for knowledge of such matters (R). Others say One Who is aware refers to Gabriel (Bḍ) or to a person who is wise in such matters, though the latter seems unlikely if this command is addressed to the Prophet.

60 And when it is said unto them, “Prostrate before the Compassionate,” they say, “And what is the Compassionate? Shall we prostrate before that [to] which you command us?” And it increases them in aversion.

60 It is said that the idolatrous Arabs were unfamiliar with using the Compassionate (al-Raḥmān) as a way of referring to God. For example, at the signing of the Treaty of ḥudaybiyyah (see 2:190–94c; and the introduction to Sūrah 48), the Prophet instructed that it be written, “In the Name of God, the Compassionate, the Merciful,” but the Qurayshī negotiators objected and said they did not know of either name; they wanted it to read, “In Thy Name, O God” (bi’smika Allāhumma; IK). Some note that the idolaters said that they only knew of one raḥmān, namely, Musaylimah, a contemporary of Muhammad who also claimed to be a prophet, who had taken on the title Raḥmān al-Yamāmah, or “the Compassionate One of [the region of] Yamāmah” (Q, Z). Most commentators believe this meant that the idolaters were questioning the name al-Raḥmān, not the existence of that to which it referred (R). Some read command in the third person, so that it would be translated, “Shall we prostrate before that [to] which he commands us?” (Q, Z). According to some reports, upon the revelation of this verse the Prophet and other Companions prostrated, and the idolaters imitated them in mockery, which is what is meant by and it increases them in aversion (R).

61 Constellations (burūj; see also 15:16; 85:1) is usually considered to refer to the twelve constellations of the zodiac, which are found in that band of the sky through which the sun, moon, and planets move. Burūj is connected by some to tabarruj, meaning a “display of adornments,” because of the radiance of the constellations (Z). Burūj can also mean “towers” (cf. 4:78), and in this sense burūj refers to the “houses” where the seven astrological planets (the five visible planets plus the sun and moon) “reside” (IK, Z). The planets are mentioned or alluded to, according to some commentators, in 23:17; 51:3; 70:40; 79:5; 81:15–16; see commentary on those verses, and also 2:102, in which some have seen a reference to the origins of the astrological tradition. However, although the cosmological sciences, of which astrology is a part, were common in Islamic civilization, and the practice of astrology in its descriptive and predictive aspects is practiced by some people throughout the Islamic world, Islamic Law forbids predictive (but not symbolic) astrology and astrological magic. The zodiacal signs and constellations, which are associated with different cosmological qualities (and have both a macrocosmic and a microcosmic significance), are sometimes interpreted to symbolize the states of being and stations of the soul, including the attainment of various kinds of virtue and wisdom (Aj).

Most commentators interpret the lamp to be the sun, which is what it is called in 71:16 and 78:13 (Q), although some read lamp (sirāj) in the plural as “lamps” (suruj) and understand it to mean the stars (Q). Lamp can also be understood as an allusion to the Prophet Muhammad, who is called a luminous lamp in 33:46.

62 And He it is Who made the night and the day successive, for whosoever desires to reflect or desires to be thankful.

62 For some, this means that whatever one could not accomplish (by way of worship or good deeds) in the day one could accomplish at night, and vice versa (R, Ṭ). In this vein, Ibn Kathīr mentions the ḥadīth: “God, glorified and resplendent is He, extends His Hand by night so that He might forgive the one who sinned during the day, and He extends His Hand by day so that He might forgive the one who sinned during the night.” Succesive renders khilfah, which some understand to mean “opposed,” so that this verse would mean, “He it is who made the night and the day opposites,” that is, one dark and the other light (Q, Ṭ). The alternation of the night and day is cited in the Quran as a sign of God (see 3:190; 10:6, 23:80; 45:5), as is the passing of the day into the night and of the night into the day (see 3:27; 22:61; 31:29; 35:13; 57:6); see 36:40c. One desires to reflect on or desires to be thankful for the blessings of the day and night (Ṭ).

63 The servants of the Compassionate are those who walk humbly upon the earth, and when the ignorant address them, say, “Peace,”

63 To walk humbly is interpreted to mean with dignity, tranquility, and forbearance (IK, Ṭ) and refers not only to walking, but also to the general conduct of one’s life (Q); see 17:37c, which discusses the manner in which the Prophet walked. Ibn Kathīr mentions an incident in which ʿUmar ibn al-Khaṭṭāb encountered a younger man walking meekly and leisurely and asked him if he was ill, to which the man replied no. ʿUmar then commanded him to walk with strength, indicating that humbly does not mean weakly. Ibn Kathīr also mentions a ḥadīth in which the Prophet said, “When you come to the prayer, do not do so in a state of haste. Come to it with tranquility and pray whatever you can of it, and whatever you miss, make it up.” On saying, Peace, see also 43:89, where the believers are instructed to respond with “Peace.” Here it is interpreted to mean that, though they are subjected to ignorant behavior, they should not respond in kind (Ṭ). Some interpret it to mean that they should speak appropriately and correctly (sadād; Q, Ṭ). The saying of “Peace” is associated with the paradisaal state in 10:10; 13:24; 14:23; 19:62; 33:44; 36:58; 56:26.

Some commentators point out that this “peace” (salām) is not a greeting or declaration of peace, but must mean something like “to be free of” (tasallama min), so that the believers are being commanded to say, “I am free of or disassociated from you,” meaning, “There is neither good nor bad between us” (Q). This interpretation is associated with the opinion that this verse (and other verses similar in their peaceful message) are abrogated (i.e., have had their binding effect overturned) by later verses that command the believers to fight the disbelievers. This interpretation would, if applied to identical uses of salām throughout the Quran, entail unacceptable meanings; for example, it would mean that God, instead of saying Peace! to believers in the Garden, would be saying, “I am free of you” (36:58), or that the believers would say this to God (33:44), or Abraham would be declaring himself “free of” the angelic visitors (51:25). Elsewhere other words related to “peace” (salām; such as silm in 2:208) are understood by some to mean something other than their plain sense by citing the meaning of a word that also derives from the root s-l-m in order to understand such verses as abrogating those verses that command peace or reconciliation with nonbelievers. Al-Qurṭubī, after mentioning the opinion regarding abrogation, states, however, that no question of abrogation need arise in this case, since the verse is commanding one to have a certain attitude of restraint and forbearance, which is not a legal command or prohibition and hence not subject to abrogation according to any mainstream understanding of that concept; regarding the issue of abrogation see 2:106c.

64 and who pass the night before their Lord, prostrating and standing [in prayer], 64 Praying at night is an important supererogatory practice in Islam. The Prophet would rise to pray most nights before dawn (to the point where some authorities considered it a prescribed act of worship specific to him), and many pious Muslims continue to do so to this day; see 17:79c; 73:1–2c.

65 and who say, “Our Lord! Avert the punishment of Hell from us! Truly its punishment is inescapable.

66 What an evil dwelling place and station!”

65–66 Inescapable renders gharām, a word that is etymologically related to being infatuated or enamored with something, which the commentators connect to the sense that one cannot free oneself from the object of one’s infatuation (Z) and also to the notion of a debt or penalty, since a gharīm is a debtor. Some understand it to mean a lasting evil (Ṭ).

67 and who, when they spend, are neither prodigal nor miserly—and between them is a just mean—

67 This verse is similar in message to 17:29: And let not thine hand be shackled to thy neck; nor let it be entirely open. There are different conceptions of what prodigality or waste (isrāf) means in Islamic thought. For some any expenditure in disobedience to God is waste (R, Ṭ), and they sometimes cite a proverb: “There is no doing good in waste, and no waste in doing good” (lā khayr fī’l-isrāf wa lā isrāf fī’l-khayr; Z). Opinions on what constitutes “waste” range from expenditure on what is bad to being excessive when it comes to even what is good (R). See also 3:147c; 7:80–81c; 10:12c.

Just mean renders qawām, which carries the sense of a normal state or of uprightness. More than one commentator cites the ethical tradition that a virtue lies between two vices or two extremes or that a good lies between two evils (Ṭ, Z). The idea that the best part of a thing is its “middlemost” or center is common in Islamic thought; see 2:143c (regarding middle community, ummah wasaṭah); 23:10–11c.

68 and who call not upon another god along with God, and slay not the soul that God has made inviolable, save by right, and who fornicate not—for whosoever does that shall meet requital,

68 Requital renders athām, which some say is the name of a valley in Hell, similar to the way in which woe (wayl) in 2:79 is interpreted as a valley in Hell (see 2:79c), even though both words have idiomatic Arabic meanings as reflected in the translation. The prohibition on slaying any soul save by right—that is, when it is warranted as a punishment for a capital transgression according to the Law—is also mentioned in 4:29, 92–93; 5:32; 6:151; 17:33.

69 and the punishment shall be multiplied for him on the Day of Resurrection. He shall abide therein, humiliated, 69 The multiplication or doubling of the punishment in the Fire is also mentioned in 11:20 and 33:30. Some understand this to mean that the idolaters are guilty of the compound sin of disobedience and rejection of faith, leading to multiplication of punishment (R), or it is interpreted to mean that the punishment will be unremitting and intense (IK). The doubling of punishment can also be intended for those who do evil themselves and lead others toward evil as well.

70 save for those who repent and believe and perform righteous deeds. For them, God will replace their evil deeds with good deeds, and God is Forgiving, Merciful.

70 It is reported that some idolaters were inclined to embrace Islam, but they felt they could never escape the weight of previous sins, such as those enumerated in v. 68, and wanted to know if there were some kind of expiation for them; this verse was then revealed (Ṭ). In one account, Abū Hurayrah, a prominent transmitter of aḥādīth, was approached by a woman who asked if there was any chance of repentance for her: she had committed adultery, given birth, and killed the child. Abū Hurayrah replied emphatically in the negative. When he told the Prophet, the Prophet rebuked him and asked him whether he knew vv. 68–71. Abū Hurayrah then sought out the woman to convey what the Prophet had said (Ṭ).

For some this verse is abrogated by 4:93: Whosoever slays a believer willfully, his recompense is Hell, abiding therein (R, Ṭ). Some have said that a person who enters Islam, learns its commands, and then purposefully kills another believer has no chance at repentance, although even those who hold this opinion make an exception for those who truly regret it and repent (Ṭ). This latter opinion would be in keeping with the universal principle that no sin is unforgivable in an absolute sense. According to most Muslim theologians, God accepts all sincere repentance and can forgive all sin even without repentance except in the case of idolatry (shirk), for which one must repent; see 4:48c.

Replace their evil deeds with good deeds is understood to mean, not that evil can become good (Ṭ), but that through repentance one's evil deeds are wiped away and one has a good deed recorded for one's soul (R), or that one's evil deeds will be transformed into good ones in the Hereafter (Ṭ). Others hold that it means that punishment will be replaced by reward (R). For still others, it means that after one's repentance, God will lead one from idolatry to faith, from adultery to wholesome marriage, and from bad actions to good ones in this life and one will then be granted the reward of those righteous deeds (R).

71 And whosoever has repented and works righteousness does indeed repent to God with true repentance.

71 This verse can be interpreted to mean that the first mention of repentance, has repented, refers to “turning away” (the literal sense of “repentance,” or tawbah) from idolatry, while the second, does repent, refers to turning toward God (R). The verse could also be rendered, “Whosoever repents and performs righteous deeds, truly repents to God with [real] repentance,” indicating a present or future action. On repentance (tawbah), also see 2:37c; 2:128c; 9:14–15c.

72 As for those who do not bear false witness, and who, when they pass by some idle talk, pass by with dignity, 72 Bear false witness (cf. 22:30, false speech), meaning to testify to a lie (IK), is interpreted by some to mean “to witness what is false (zūr),” which would include such things as idolatry, lewd talk, and lascivious song; that is, one should not look at or listen to such false things (R, Ṭ). Praise for those who turn away from idle talk (laghw) is also mentioned in 23:3 and 28:55. Dignity renders kirām, a word that also carries the sense of nobility, generosity, and high-mindedness.

73 and who, when they are reminded of the signs of their Lord, fall not deaf and blind against them, 73 Spiritual deafness and blindness are mentioned throughout the Quran, as in 22:46, Truly it is not the eyes that go blind, but it is hearts within breasts that go blind; see also 2:7c; 2:18c; 5:71c.

74 and who say, “Our Lord! Grant us comfort in our spouses and our progeny, and make us imams for the reverent,”

74 Comfort (lit. “coolness of the eyes”) is understood to be of a spiritual nature, not mere worldly enjoyment of children and spouses, regarding which the Quran warns the believers (R; e.g., 64:14); that is, they pray that their families will join them in worship and obedience to God. Moreover, the “coolness of the eyes” will be perfected when they join their families in the Garden in the Hereafter (R); also, they experience joy in seeing them worship God and perform acts of obedience (T).

Desiring to be imams for the reverent means that they desire to achieve a level of devotion that will become a standard for others, and in this respect some understand imām to mean something like “proof” or “example” (R). Here al-Rāzī cites the words of Abraham in 26:84, And make for me faithful renown among later generations, and notes that some consider a desire to be exalted in matters of religion to be a positive thing, since such leadership or renown comes through both true knowledge and righteous action.

75 it is they who shall be rewarded with the lofty abode for having been patient, and they will be met therein with salutations and [greetings of] peace,

76 abiding therein. What a beautiful dwelling place and station!

75–76 Lofty abode renders ghurfah (cf. 29:58; 34:37; 39:20), which means the uppermost part of a dwelling and here refers to the Garden (R); see 39:20c.

77 Say, “What weight would my Lord give you, were it not for your supplication? But you have denied, and it will be inevitable.”

77 The first part of the question is an idiom that, when used declaratively, indicates that one considers another of no consequence or importance; so the whole question asks, “Of what consequence or importance would you be, were it not for your supplication?” Commentators understand this verse to mean that a human being’s purpose is to worship God (R), in keeping with other verses such as 51:56: I did not create jinn and mankind, save to worship Me. Here supplication (du‘ā‘) is also understood to refer to one’s worship, prayer, and gratitude to God (R) or one’s faith (IK).

The it in it will be inevitable is understood to refer to death; to battle in general; to the Battle of Badr, where the idolaters suffered a major defeat at the hands of the Muslims (see the introduction to Sūrah 8; ٨); or to punishment in the Hereafter (R). Inevitable renders lizām, which also means something that adheres, and some read this to mean, “But you have denied, and that [denial] will cling to you,” in the form of punishment in the Hereafter (IK).

The Poets

al-Shu^ʿarā^ʾ

According to most commentators al-Shu^ʿarā^ʾ is a Makkan sūrah, although some think a small number of verses (vv. 224–27) are Madinan (Āl, Q, Ṭs), and others include v. 197 among the Madinan verses (Āl). It takes its name from v. 224, which mentions the poets (shu^ʿarā^ʾ) who played a significant role in pre-Islamic Arab culture, a role that endured during the Islamic era, but in a different form and with an altered meaning.

Much of this sūrah recounts the stories of previous prophets. It begins with a partial telling of the account of Moses' confrontation with Pharaoh, his duel with the sorcerers, and the flight from Egypt with the Israelites (vv. 10–66). This section is followed by an account of Abraham (vv. 69–89) and his idolatrous people, and Abraham's prayer of forgiveness for his father. Next told is Noah's story (vv. 105–21), with emphasis on his people's aversion to the individuals of low social status who followed him. This is followed by the stories of Hūd (vv. 123–39), whose people are condemned for their pursuit of domination and worldly glory, and Ṣāliḥ (vv. 141–58), whose people are characterized by their material attachments, and brief accounts of Lot (vv. 160–73) and Shu^ʿayb (vv. 176–89).

The last section of the sūrah begins with an affirmation that the Quran is indeed revealed from a spiritual source (v. 193), and notes that it was revealed in Arabic to a people who are meant to understand and comprehend it (vv. 197–200). The sūrah concludes by saying that no satan or jinn could have brought the Quran (vv. 210–212), and levels an attack at poets, whose words were often considered to have a magical or supernatural origin in satans or jinn (vv. 224–227), unlike the Quran, whose origin is God and which was revealed through the Archangel Gabriel.

A significant formal aspect of al-Shu^carā is its rhythmic and poetic nature and the repetition of certain verses as refrains at the start and end of the stories of each prophet (see vv. 8–9, 107–9), linking them together by showing that the fundamental teachings (and challenges) of the prophets were the same.

① Ṭā. Sīn. Mīm. ② These are the signs of the clear Book. ③ Perhaps thou dost torment thyself that they are not believers. ④ If We will, We will send down a sign from Heaven and their heads would remain bowed before it in humility. ⑤ Yet no new reminder comes to them from the Compassionate, but that they turn away from it. ⑥ Indeed, they have denied it, but there shall come to them the tidings of that which they used to mock. ⑦ Have they not considered the earth, how much of every noble kind We have caused to grow therein? ⑧ Truly in that is a sign, but most of them are not believers. ⑨ And truly thy Lord is the Mighty, the Merciful. ⑩ And [remember] when thy Lord called out to Moses, “Go to the wrongdoing people, ⑪ the people of Pharaoh. Will they not be reverent?” ⑫ He said, “My Lord, truly I fear that they will deny me. ⑬ And my breast will be straitened, and my tongue will not be unfettered; so send unto Aaron. ⑭ And they have a crime against me; thus I fear that they will slay me.” ⑮ He said, “Nay! Go forth, then, with Our signs. We shall be with you, listening. ⑯ So go to Pharaoh and say, ‘Verily we are sent by the Lord of the worlds, ⑰ that you may send with us the Children of Israel.’” ⑱ He said, “Did we not raise you among us as a child, and did you not stay among us for years of your life? ⑲ And you did your deed which you did, and you are one of the ingrates.” ⑳ He said, “I did it then, when I was one of those who are astray. ㉑ So I fled from you when I was afraid of you. Then my Lord granted me judgment and placed me among the messengers. ㉒ And that blessing you recount to me is that you have enslaved the Children of Israel.” ㉓ Pharaoh said, “And what is the Lord of the worlds?” 24 He said, “The Lord of the heavens and the earth and whatsoever is between them—would that you were certain.” 25 He said to those around him, “Do you not hear?” 26 He said, “Your Lord, and the Lord of your fathers of old.” 27 He said, “Truly your messenger who has been sent to you is possessed!” 28 He said, “The Lord of the East and the West and whatsoever is between them, if you understand.” 29 He said, “Truly if you take a god apart from me, I shall place you among the imprisoned!” 30 He said, “And if I bring you something manifest?” 31 “Bring it, then, if you are among the truthful.” 32 So Moses cast his staff, and behold, it was a serpent manifest. 33 Then he drew out his hand, and behold, it was white to the beholders. 34 He said to the notables around him, “Truly this is a knowing sorcerer, 35 who desires to expel you from your land with his sorcery. What would you command?” 36 They said, “Leave him and his brother a while, and send marshalers to the cities 37 to bring to you every knowing sorcerer.” 38 So the sorcerers were brought together for the tryst of an appointed day. 39 And it was said unto the people, “Will you gather, 40 that haply we may follow the sorcerers if they are the victors?” 41 Then, when the sorcerers came, they said to Pharaoh, “Shall we truly have a reward if we are the victors?” 42 He said, “Yes, and you shall then be among those brought nigh.” 43 Moses said to them, “Cast what you would cast!” 44 So they cast their ropes and staffs and said, “By the might of Pharaoh, we shall surely be the victors!” 45 Then Moses cast his staff, and behold, it devours what they make falsely! 46 Then were the sorcerers cast down, prostrating. 47 They said, “We believe in the Lord of the worlds, 48 the Lord of Moses and Aaron.” 49 He said, “Do you believe in Him before I give you leave? He is indeed your chief, who has taught you sorcery. You will surely know! I shall surely cut off your hands and your feet from opposite sides, and I shall surely crucify you all!” 50 They said, “It is no harm. Truly unto our Lord do we turn. 51 Truly we hope that our Lord will forgive us our sins for our having been the first of the believers.” 52 Then We revealed unto Moses, “Set forth with My servants by night; you shall indeed be pursued.” 53 Then

Pharaoh sent marshalers to the cities [saying], 54 “These indeed are a small band, 55 and indeed they have enraged us, 56 and we are a host at the ready!” 57 So We expelled them from gardens and springs, 58 and treasures and a noble station. 59 So it was, and We made the Children of Israel to inherit them. 60 Then they pursued them at sunrise. 61 And when the two hosts saw one another, the companions of Moses said, “We are overtaken!” 62 He said, “Nay! Truly my Lord is with me; He will guide me.” 63 Then We revealed unto Moses, “Strike the sea with thy staff!” and it parted, and each part was as a great mountain. 64 And thither We brought the others nigh. 65 And We delivered Moses and those with him all together. 66 Then We drowned the others. 67 Truly in that is a sign, though most of them are not believers. 68 And truly thy Lord is the Mighty, the Merciful. 69 And recite unto them the story of Abraham, 70 when he said to his father and his people, “What are you worshipping?” 71 They said, “We worship idols, and we remain ever devoted to them.” 72 He said, “Do they hear you when you call? 73 Or do they benefit or harm you?” 74 They said, “Nay, but we found our fathers doing so.” 75 He said, “Have you considered what you worship, 76 you and your ancestors? 77 For they are all enemies unto me, save the Lord of the worlds, 78 Who created me, and guides me, 79 and Who feeds me and gives me drink, 80 and Who, when I am ill, heals me, 81 and Who causes me to die, then gives me life, 82 and Who I hope will forgive me my sins on the Day of Judgment. 83 My Lord! Grant me judgment, and bind me to the righteous! 84 And make for me faithful renown among later generations. 85 And place me among the heirs of the Garden of bliss. 86 And forgive my father—he is one of those who are astray. 87 And disgrace me not on the Day they are resurrected, 88 the Day when neither wealth nor children avail, 89 save for him who comes to God with a sound heart.” 90 And the Garden will be brought nigh unto the reverent, 91 and Hellfire will become apparent to the errant. 92 And it will be said unto them, “Where is that which you worshipped 93 apart from God? Are they helping you or helping themselves?” 94 Then they shall be toppled into it, they and the errant,

95 and the hosts of Iblīs all together. 96 They will say, as they dispute with one another therein, 97 “By God, indeed we were in manifest error, 98 when we made you equal with the Lord of the worlds. 99 And none caused us to go astray but the guilty. 100 So now we have no intercessors, 101 nor any loyal friend. 102 If we had another turn, we would be among the believers.” 103 Truly in that is a sign, but most of them are not believers. 104 And truly thy Lord is indeed the Mighty, the Merciful. 105 The people of Noah denied the messengers, 106 when their brother Noah said unto them, “Will you not be reverent? 107 Truly I am a trustworthy messenger unto you. 108 So reverence God and obey me. 109 And I ask not of you any reward for it; my reward lies only with the Lord of the worlds. 110 So reverence God and obey me.” 111 They said, “Shall we believe you, when the lowliest follow you?” 112 He said, “What knowledge have I of what they used to do? 113 Their reckoning is only by my Lord, were you but aware. 114 And I shall not drive away the believers. 115 I am but a clear warner.” 116 They said, “Truly if you cease not, O Noah, you shall indeed be among the stoned.” 117 He said, “My Lord, verily my people have denied me. 118 So decide between me and them, and deliver me and the believers who are with me!” 119 So We delivered him and those who were with him in the full-laden Ark. 120 Then afterwards We drowned those who remained. 121 Truly in that is a sign, but most of them are not believers. 122 And truly thy Lord is indeed the Mighty, the Merciful. 123 Ād denied the messengers, 124 when their brother Hūd said unto them, “Will you not be reverent? 125 Truly I am a trustworthy messenger unto you. 126 So reverence God and obey me. 127 And I ask not of you any reward for it; my reward lies only with the Lord of the worlds. 128 Do you frivolously build on every high place a sign? 129 And do you occupy castles, that haply you may ever abide? 130 And when you strike, do you strike as tyrants? 131 So reverence God and obey me. 49 4 And reverence Him who has succored you with what you know, 69 6 succored you with cattle and children, 134 and gardens and springs. 135 Truly I fear for you the punishment of a tremendous day!” 136 They said, “It is the same to us whether you exhort us or whether you are not among those who exhort. ¹³⁷ This is naught but the ethos of those of old, ¹³⁸ and we shall not be punished.” ¹³⁹ So they denied him, and We destroyed them. Truly in that is a sign, but most of them are not believers. ¹⁴⁰ And truly thy Lord is, indeed, the Mighty, the Merciful. ¹⁴¹ The Thamūd denied the messengers, ¹⁴² when their brother Šāliḥ said unto them, “Will you not be reverent? ¹⁴³ Truly I am a trustworthy messenger unto you. ¹⁴⁴ So reverence God and obey me. ¹⁴⁵ And I ask not of you any reward for it; my reward lies only with the Lord of the worlds. ¹⁴⁶ Will you be left among that which is here, secure, ¹⁴⁷ amid gardens and springs, ¹⁴⁸ sown fields, date palms with ripe stalks? ¹⁴⁹ And you skillfully hew dwellings in the mountains. ¹⁵⁰ So reverence God and obey me. ¹⁵¹ And obey not the commands of the prodigal, ¹⁵² who work corruption upon the earth, and do not set matters aright.” ¹⁵³ They said, “You are but one of the bewitched. ¹⁵⁴ You are naught but a human being like us; so bring a sign, if you are among the truthful.” ¹⁵⁵ He said, “This is a she-camel; she shall have drink and you shall drink on an appointed day. ¹⁵⁶ And touch her not with harm, lest you be taken by the punishment of a tremendous day.” ¹⁵⁷ But they hamstrung her, and then became remorseful. ¹⁵⁸ So the punishment seized them. Truly in that is a sign, but most of them are not believers. ¹⁵⁹ And truly thy Lord is the Mighty, the Merciful. ¹⁶⁰ The people of Lot denied the messengers, ¹⁶¹ when their brother Lot said unto them, “Will you not be reverent? ¹⁶² Truly I am a trustworthy messenger unto you, ¹⁶³ so reverence God and obey me. ¹⁶⁴ And I ask not of you any reward for it; my reward lies only with the Lord of the worlds. ¹⁶⁵ Among all creatures do you come unto males, ¹⁶⁶ leaving your spouses your Lord created for you? Nay, but you are a transgressing people.” ¹⁶⁷ They said, “If you cease not, O Lot, you will be among those who are expelled.” ¹⁶⁸ He said, “Truly I am of those who detest what you do. ¹⁶⁹ My Lord! Deliver me and my family from what they do.” ¹⁷⁰ So We delivered him and his family all together, ¹⁷¹ save for an old woman among those who lagged behind. ¹⁷² Then We destroyed the others. ¹⁷³ And We rained a rain upon them. Evil was the rain of the warned! ¹⁷⁴ Truly in that is a sign, but most of them are not believers. ¹⁷⁵ And truly thy Lord is indeed the Mighty, the Merciful. ¹⁷⁶ The inhabitants of the thicket denied the messengers, ¹⁷⁷ when Shu'ayb said unto them, "Will you not be reverent? ¹⁷⁸ Truly I am a trustworthy messenger unto you. ¹⁷⁹ So reverence God and obey me. ¹⁸⁰ And I ask not of you any reward for it; my reward lies only with the Lord of the worlds. ¹⁸¹ Give full measure, and be not among those who fall short. ¹⁸² Weigh with the right balance, ¹⁸³ and diminish not people's goods, nor behave wickedly upon the earth, working corruption. ¹⁸⁴ And reverence Him Who created you and the generations of old." ¹⁸⁵ They said, "You are but one of the bewitched. ¹⁸⁶ You are naught but a human being like us, and indeed we deem you to be among the liars, ¹⁸⁷ so make fragments from the sky fall upon us, if you are among the truthful." ¹⁸⁸ He said, "My Lord knows best what you do." ¹⁸⁹ So they denied him, and the punishment of the day of gloom seized them. Truly it was the punishment of a tremendous day. ¹⁹⁰ Truly in that is a sign, but most of them are not believers. ¹⁹¹ And truly thy Lord is indeed the Mighty, the Merciful. ¹⁹² And truly it is a revelation of the Lord of the worlds, ¹⁹³ brought down by the Trustworthy Spirit, ¹⁹⁴ upon thine heart—that thou mayest be among the warners— ¹⁹⁵ in a clear, Arabic tongue. ¹⁹⁶ It is indeed in the scriptures of those of old. ¹⁹⁷ Is it not a sign for them that the learned of the Children of Israel know it? ¹⁹⁸ And had We sent it down upon some non-Arab, ¹⁹⁹ and he recited it unto them, they would not have believed in it. ²⁰⁰ Thus do We place it into the hearts of the guilty; ²⁰¹ they will not believe in it till they see the painful punishment; ²⁰² so it will come upon them suddenly, while they are unaware. ²⁰³ Then they will say, "Will we be granted respite?" ²⁰⁴ Do they seek to hasten Our Punishment? ²⁰⁵ Consider: if We grant them enjoyment for years, ²⁰⁶ and there comes upon them that which they were promised, ²⁰⁷ of what avail to them will be that which they were made to enjoy? ²⁰⁸ And never did We destroy a town save that it had warners, ²⁰⁹ as a reminder; and We did no wrong. ²¹⁰ And the satans did not descend with it, ²¹¹ nor is it fitting for them, nor are they able. ²¹² Indeed, they are debarred from hearing [it]. ²¹³ So call not upon another god along with God, lest thou be among the punished. ²¹⁴ And warn thy tribe, thy nearest kin, ²¹⁵ and lower thy wing to the believers who follow thee. ²¹⁶ And should they disobey thee, say, “Truly I am quit of that which you do.” ²¹⁷ And trust in the Mighty, the Merciful, ²¹⁸ Who sees thee when thou standest [to pray], ²¹⁹ and thy movement amid those who prostrate. ²²⁰ Truly He is the Hearing, the Knowing. ²²¹ Shall I inform thee of those upon whom the satans descend? ²²² They descend upon every sinful liar, ²²³ eavesdropping, and most of them are liars. ²²⁴ And as for the poets, the errant follow them. ²²⁵ Hast thou not considered that they wander in every valley, ²²⁶ and that they say what they do not do? ²²⁷ Not so those who believe and perform righteous deeds, and remember God much, and help one another after having been wronged. And those who do wrong shall know to what homecoming they will return!

1 For a discussion of the separated letters that appear at the beginning of some sūrahs, see 2:1c. Some suggest that the ṭā^o here represents the joy (ṭarab) of the hearts of those who know God, the sīn, the happiness (surūr) of the lovers of God, and the mīm, the intimate discourse (munājah) of those who desire God (R). Other interpretations say that the ṭā^o is for God's Might (ṭawl), the sīn for His Resplendence (sinā^o), and the mīm for His Sovereignty (mulk; Q), or that they stand for Names of God al-Ṭāhir (the Pure), al-Salām (Peace), and al-Majīd (the Glorious; Q). Others suggest that they represent a name for this sūrah, are a name of the Quran itself, or constitute an oath that God swears (Ṭ).

② These are the signs of the clear Book.

2 The clear Book is the Quran (R; cf. 12:1; 28:2; 43:2; 44:2). Clear renders mubīn, an adjective related to bayyin (usually rendered “clear,” but also meaning “that which makes clear”); bayyin is a common description of the verses (lit. “signs”) of the Quran (e.g., 10:15; 22:16; 24:34; 28:36; 57:9; 65:11).

③ Perhaps thou dost torment thyself that they are not believers.

3 Torment renders bākhi^c (cf. 18:6), which literally means to “fight” or “destroy,” meaning that the Prophet is being warned against harming his soul through worry and concern over whether his people will embrace his message (Q, Ṭ). Some note that for the Prophet to fight his own soul is as useless to him as the Quran's message is to those who refuse to hear and benefit from the clear Book (v. 2; R), and this verse is meant to comfort the Prophet (IK). Instead of tormenting himself, the Prophet should remember that the state of the souls of those whom he is ordered by God to address is a matter for God to determine and is not the Prophet's concern (Su).

④ If We will, We will send down a sign from Heaven and their heads would remain bowed before it in humility.

4 Sign (āyah) is the same word used for a verse of the Quran, but in this case refers to a miraculous event or wonder (Q). Heads renders aʿnāq, which literally means “necks,” but which in this case refers to the act of bowing one’s head in effacement, a gesture of humility (R). Aʿnāq also can connote the leadership of a group, in which case this phrase could also be understood to mean, “And their leaders [i.e., the possessors of aʿnāq] would be humbled” (Q, R). Aʿnāq can, moreover, signify “groups,” in which case this phrase is understood to mean that the tribes and clans of the Arabs will be humbled (Ṭ).

5 New renders muḥdath (cf. 21:2), which also carries the sense of “recent,” referring to the way in which the Quran was revealed gradually and each new revelation was a new reminder or remembrance (dhikr) for them (R). The significance of the revelation coming in parts rather than all at once is also discussed in the commentary on 25:32: And the disbelievers say, “Why was the Quran not sent down upon him as a single whole?”; see also 17:106c. Muḥdath would come to be understood as a technical term in Islamic theology and philosophy signifying the fact of something being created in time.

⑥ Indeed, they have denied it, but there shall come to them the tidings of that which they used to mock.

6 That they will receive tidings of that which they used to mock means that they will finally come to see the true nature of those things they ridiculed, by implication accompanied by a punishment for it (Q), in either this world or the next (R). Other dimensions of the consequences of mocking the truth are also discussed in 39:48c, which says of the experience on the Day of Resurrection for those who do evil: That which they used to mock will beset them (cf. 11:8; 45:33).

⑦ Have they not considered the earth, how much of every noble kind
We have caused to grow therein?

7 Here noble (karīm) also means good and beautiful, and these verses refer to the vegetation of the earth from which people and animals can eat (Ṭ). Al-Rāzī notes that kind here can refer to both what is beneficial and what may not appear to be so; he in fact says that every growing thing has some benefit, though one may be unaware of it. Another meaning of growth appears in a saying attributed to Sufyān al-Thawrī: “Human beings are among the growing things of the earth; whosoever enters the Garden is noble, and whosoever enters the Fire is wretched” (IK, Th). Kind renders zawj, which also means “pair.” When read with this meaning, the verse can be understood as a reference to Adam and Eve, “the most noble pair,” who gave rise to all the prophets and saints (Su).

⑧ Truly in that is a sign, but most of them are not believers.

⑨ And truly thy Lord is the Mighty, the Merciful.

8–9 These verses are repeated throughout this sūrah, at the end of the story of each of the various prophets cited (vv. 67–68, 103–4, 121–22, 139–40, 158–59, 174–75, 190–91). Most of them is generally thought to refer to the contemporaries of Prophet Muhammad (R). Most of those to whom the Prophet was preaching were not believers, and this refrain is intended as a comfort to him, reminding him that he is not alone in that situation; earlier prophets had also encountered it (R).

10 Moses’ initial call is mentioned in greater detail in 20:9–48 and 28:29–35, which describe him seeing a fire on the mountain from a distance, going to it, speaking with God, and being invested with the mission of going to Pharaoh.

11 Some understand this verse to mean that God is commanding Moses to ask them, “Will you not be reverent?” (Q). Depending on how the end of this verse is vocalized, it could also mean, “Will they not reverence Me?” (R). As in most uses of the verb “to reverence,” it connotes being mindful or on guard, and thus some understand this verse to mean that they should be mindful of the punishment of the Hereafter (T).

⑫ He said, “My Lord, truly I fear that they will deny me.

12–13 Some say it is precisely being denied and called a liar that can cause one’s breast to be straitened, which in turn makes it difficult to speak with facility (R). Because of his sincere desire to fulfill his service to God, Moses was concerned that he would not be able to execute properly his responsibilities alone, as he feared that people would deny that he was a prophet (Q). Although the Quran does not specify the nature of Moses’ difficulty in speaking (cf. 20:27, where Moses prays, Untie a knot from my tongue), some Muslim commentators accepted the idea—also present in the Jewish tradition—that Moses may have suffered from either a tongue injury or a form of stuttering or stammering (see 20:27c). In light of the Quran’s use of other faculties such as the heart and sight and hearing (2:7; 16:108; 22:46) in a spiritual rather than biological sense, it is plausible that “tongue” refers not to a physical limitation, but rather to an inward or psychological obstacle. Cf. Exodus 4:10–16.

Aaron’s appointment as a helper to Moses is also mentioned in 19:53 and 20:29–30. As in the English, the Arabic phrase rendered by send unto Aaron is condensed and lacks an explicit direct object (Z). Commentators mention that Moses’ desire to send unto Aaron means either that Moses himself encountered him directly and informed him of it or that God sent Gabriel to announce his mission to him (R); that is, Moses was asking God to bestow prophethood upon Aaron (Q).

14 The crime refers to Moses’ striking and killing an Egyptian who was fighting with an Israelite, as described in 28:15–21 (cf. Exodus 2:11–14), which was the reason he fled Egypt. God’s response in v. 15 is interpreted as a promise of protection (Q).

⑮ He said, “Nay! Go forth, then, with Our signs. We shall be with you, listening.

15 Our signs usually is understood to mean the miracles by which Moses proves his veracity. We shall be with you, listening is understood to mean that God will be on Moses’ side, supporting him and Aaron against Pharaoh (R).

⑯ So go to Pharaoh and say, ‘Verily we are sent by the Lord of the worlds, ⑰ that you may send with us the Children of Israel.’”

16–17 Send with us means release the Israelites and allow them (Q, R) to go to the land of Palestine (Th).

⑱ He said, “Did we not raise you among us as a child, and did you not stay among us for years of your life?

18 Pharaoh’s words allude to the fact that Moses lived in Pharaoh’s household as a boy, regarding which see 28:8–13.

19 And you did your deed which you did, and you are one of the ingrates.”

19 Ingrate renders kāfir, which is ordinarily translated “disbeliever,” and indeed some interpret this to mean that Pharaoh is calling Moses a disbeliever with respect to Pharaoh’s religion (Q, Ṭ). Some commentators dismiss the idea that Pharaoh would take a position on disbelief (kufr), since he would not be motivated by such theological matters (Th). Kāfir means ingrate (cf. 2:276; 31:32; 43:15) insofar as it connotes the “covering over” of a blessing one received from another and behaving as though one had not received anything, and in this case it refers to what Pharaoh gave to Moses while Moses lived among the Egyptians (Q, Ṭ, Th). And you are one of the ingrates could also be translated as an adverbial clause, “while you were an ingrate,” meaning that the act of killing the Egyptian was done in that state (R).

20 He said, “I did it then, when I was one of those who are astray.

20 By astray many commentators understand “ignorant” (IK). Al-Rāzī notes that Moses struck the Egyptian not with the intention of killing, but in order to “discipline” him, but did so in an incorrect way. As mentioned in the 27:10–11c, some theologians, though not most, admitted the possibility that a prophet could “err” or commit a small kind of sin before being invested with his mission, but after becoming a prophet or messenger he is protected from sin, having thereafter the attribute of ‘iṣmah, meaning “protected [from sin]” or “inerrant [with respect to sin]”; see also 4:59c; 4:105–7c; 7:151c; 33:33c; 48:2–3c.

21 So I fled from you when I was afraid of you. Then my Lord granted me judgment and placed me among the messengers.

21 This verse refers to Moses’ flight to Midian (see 28:21–22). Judgment renders ḥukm, a word that can also mean “power” in the sense of power to make a decision, and some commentators understand it to mean something other than prophethood (denoted by placed me among the messengers), such as knowledge and intelligence (R) or understanding (Th).

22 And that blessing you recount to me is that you have enslaved the Children of Israel.”

23 Pharaoh said, “And what is the Lord of the worlds?”

24 He said, “The Lord of the heavens and the earth and whatsoever is between them—would that you were certain.”

22–24 Recount renders mannā, which has a rich range of meaning, including the sense of giving, counting, and also preening and reminding others of the charity one has given, as in 2:264: O you who believe! Do not annul your acts of charity through preening and injury. Here it refers to the so-called benefaction that Pharaoh had once bestowed upon Moses, who reminds Pharaoh that the latter enslaved and persecuted the Children of Israel. Moses is saying in effect, “Is this blessing you have given me that you enslaved the Children of Israel?” (Ṭ).

Al-Rāzī uses this exchange between Moses and Pharaoh to discuss the impossibility of actually giving a definition of God, which Pharaoh’s first question in v. 23 seems to request. Instead, Moses responds by describing God’s acts: the creation of the heavens and the earth, of Pharaoh himself and his forefathers, and of the East and West. Pharaoh’s responses (vv. 25, 27, 29) exhibit amazement or incredulity, either because he does not like the answers or because he does not understand that he is, in a sense, asking the question insincerely, as he already presents himself as a god to his people (see 28:38; 79:24; Q, Ṭ). Ibn Kathīr dismisses the interpretation of those such as al-Rāzī and al-Qurṭubī that Pharaoh was asking about the essence or quiddity (māhiyyah) of God, since Pharaoh believed in no such thing; he was simply being confrontational and argumentative.

25 He said to those around him, “Do you not hear?”

25 Pharaoh responds mockingly, as if to say, “Are you not amazed at what he is saying?” (IK).

26 He said, “Your Lord, and the Lord of your fathers of old.”

26 Moses’ mention of Pharaoh’s forefathers is understood to highlight the truth that human beings come from origins that are themselves ephemeral, since the forefathers of Pharaoh have come and gone just as Pharaoh would (Q).

27 He said, “Truly your messenger who has been sent to you is possessed!”

27 Pharaoh is effectively saying, “There is nothing to his allegation that there is a Lord other than me” (IK).

28 He said, “The Lord of the East and the West and whatsoever is between them, if you understand.”

28 This response, a continuation of the ongoing description of what God has created and is Lord of, is understood to differentiate Pharaoh’s limited and finite dominion from the all-encompassing sovereignty of God (Q). Moses’ threefold answer to Pharaoh’s question in v. 23 is not meant to convey knowledge of God as such—impossible since God’s ultimate nature is not knowable—but rather to suggest the means by which one can attain that knowledge (Q).

29 He said, “Truly if you take a god apart from me, I shall place you among the imprisoned!”

29 Sensing the futility of his argument, Pharaoh resorts to tyranny and coercion (IK, Q) and threatens to throw Moses in prison.

30 He said, “And if I bring you something manifest?”

30 Something manifest (mubīn), usually connotes something that serves as evidence and proof.

31 “Bring it, then, if you are among the truthful.”

32 So Moses cast his staff, and behold, it was a serpent manifest.

33 Then he drew out his hand, and behold, it was white to the beholders.

31–33 Cf. 7:106–8.

34 He said to the notables around him, “Truly this is a knowing sorcerer, 34 Notables (malaʿ) can also mean “council” or “group of leaders,” referring here to Pharaoh’s advisers and intimates. The Quran also discusses the notables of the queen of Sheba (27:29); the Quraysh (38:6); the people of Hūd (7:65); the people of Shuʿayb (7:88); and the king in the story of Joseph (12:43). That the prophets are rejected by the “notables” of their communities is found throughout all the prophetic accounts in Sūrah 7 and elsewhere in the Quran (e.g., 34:34; 43:23).

35 who desires to expel you from your land with his sorcery. What would you command?”

35 Pharaoh’s statement suggests that Moses will create enmity among the Egyptians leading to their dissolution as a community (R). Al-Ṭabarī understands it to mean, “He will expel your servants, the Children of Israel, from here,” but this strains the plain sense, which is that, rather than address the issue at hand, Pharaoh resorts to accusations that Moses intends something other than freeing the Children of Israel. What would you command? means, “What is your opinion?” (R) or “What would you have me do?” See also 7:110.

36 They said, “Leave him and his brother a while, and send marshals to the cities 37 to bring to you every knowing sorcerer.”

36–37 On this act to bring sorcerers who would best Moses’ miraculous feats, see 7:112–13c (cf. 10:79). As mentioned in 7:111–12c, some interpreted this to mean that Pharaoh had Moses and Aaron temporarily imprisoned or delayed their departure.

38 So the sorcerers were brought together for the tryst of an appointed day.

38 The day is spoken of in 20:59: He said, “Your tryst shall be on the Day of Adornment; let the people be gathered when the sun has risen high.”

39 And it was said unto the people, “Will you gather, 40 that haply we may follow the sorcerers if they are the victors?”

39–40 Some commentators point out that what is missing from this statement is the possibility that the people would follow Moses if he were the victor, since it would have pitted them against the religion of Pharaoh (IK, Ṭ). Others interpret this to be an ironic, mocking statement, in which the sorcerers are Moses and Aaron, and the people are joking about following Moses and Aaron, should they win (Th).

41 Then, when the sorcerers came, they said to Pharaoh, “Shall we truly have a reward if we are the victors?”

42 He said, “Yes, and you shall then be among those brought nigh.”

41–42 Here the reward is one of increased status, connoted by you shall then be among those brought nigh, meaning that the sorcerers will be close to Pharaoh, which would entail other benefits that come with a position close to power (R). For others this nearness can have a spiritual connotation as well; see 7:113–14c.

43 Moses said to them, “Cast what you would cast!”

44 So they cast their ropes and staffs and said, “By the might of Pharaoh, we shall surely be the victors!”

45 Then Moses cast his staff, and behold, it devours what they make falsely!

43–45 See commentary on 7:115–17, which discusses the sorcerers’ tactics in trying to overcome Moses’ miracle and how Moses defeated them.

46 Then were the sorcerers cast down, prostrating.

47 They said, “We believe in the Lord of the worlds, 48 the Lord of Moses and Aaron.”

46–48 See commentary on 7:119–122, which discusses the nature of the new faith of the sorcerers, who, above all others, realized that Moses’ miracle was true.

49 He said, “Do you believe in Him before I give you leave? He is indeed your chief, who has taught you sorcery. You will surely know! I shall surely cut off your hands and your feet from opposite sides, and I shall surely crucify you all!”

50 They said, “It is no harm. Truly unto our Lord do we turn.

51 Truly we hope that our Lord will forgive us our sins for our having been the first of the believers.”

49–51 See commentary on 7:123–26. The first of the believers can have the literal meaning that the sorcerers were the first of the Egyptian people to believe (Ṭ), that they were the first to believe in that particular sign (Ṭs), or that they were the first sorcerers to do so (R); in other contexts first also has the sense of “foremost,” as when Abraham refers to himself in 6:163 as the first of those who submit.

52 Then We revealed unto Moses, “Set forth with My servants by night; you shall indeed be pursued.”

52 After the plagues and events described in 7:133–35, Moses was commanded to go by night with the Children of Israel; cf. 44:23.

53 Then Pharaoh sent marshalers to the cities [saying],

54 “These indeed are a small band,

55 and indeed they have enraged us,

56 and we are a host at the ready!”

53–56 Small band (shirdhimah), referring to the fleeing Children of Israel, is a word that connotes the remnant of a larger group or thing (Ṭ). They have enraged us is a declaration of enmity (Th) and refers to the Egyptians’ response to the plagues that had been brought down upon them as well as to the rejection of their religion by Moses and the Israelites (Q, R). Host at the ready has the connotation of being equipped and prepared (Q), in this case with weapons and mounts (Ṭ).

57 So We expelled them from gardens and springs,

58 and treasures and a noble station.

57–58 Expelled (lit. “made to leave”) refers to God’s making the Egyptians leave behind their possessions and high rank (Ṭ), which were of a worldly kind since they did not have faith (R). Some understand it to mean that God placed in their hearts the desire to leave these things in order to pursue the Israelites (R).

59 So it was, and We made the Children of Israel to inherit them.

59 The Children of Israel were made to possess those things mentioned in vv. 57–58 (R), not that they were a direct inheritance. Other commentators mention opinions that this could refer to some of the wealth that the Israelites took with them by God’s Command (Q). According to another opinion attributed to al-Ḥasan al-Baṣrī, after the destruction of Pharaoh and his people, the Israelites returned to Egypt, though this latter interpretation would seem to conflict with the Quran’s own account of what happened to the Israelites after their exodus (e.g., 7:138); cf. 44:28.

60 Then they pursued them at sunrise.

60 The Egyptians pursued the Israelites.

61 And when the two hosts saw one another, the companions of Moses said, “We are overtaken!”

61 The two hosts are the Egyptians and the Israelites (R).

62 He said, “Nay! Truly my Lord is with me; He will guide me.”

63 Then We revealed unto Moses, “Strike the sea with thy staff!” and it parted, and each part was as a great mountain.

62–63 When Moses parted the sea, each side of the gap that was created was as a great mountain (cf. Exodus 14:21–22). The Quran does not identify the body of water that was parted, but it is traditionally considered by Muslims to be the Red Sea, as it is for Jews. It is pointed out by some Muslim sources that the miracle lay not so much in the parting of the waters, since water can disappear from its usual place for natural reasons such as the presence of currents or evaporation, but that the water was made to stand tall like a mountain (R).

64 And thither We brought the others nigh.

64 The others refers to the Egyptian host, which were literally being brought closer to the sea and in an ultimate sense closer to their death (R).

65 And We delivered Moses and those with him all together.

66 Then We drowned the others.

65–66 Moses and those with him reached the other side of the sea, and then the gap was closed and those who pursued them were drowned. The saving of the Israelites and the drowning of the Egyptians are mentioned in 2:50: And when We parted the sea for you and so delivered you, and drowned the House of Pharaoh as you looked on. The drowning of the Egyptians is also mentioned in 7:136; 8:54; 10:90; 17:103; 20:77–79. In addition to in the story of Noah (11:36–48 passim), drowning is also mentioned as a punishment in 17:69 and 36:43.

67 Truly in that is a sign, though most of them are not believers.

68 And truly thy Lord is the Mighty, the Merciful.

67–68 For this refrain, see 26:8–9c.

69 And recite unto them the story of Abraham,

70 when he said to his father and his people, “What are you worshipping?”

69–70 This question is also stated in 6:74, where Abraham addresses his father and his people, saying, Do you take idols for gods? and in 21:52, where he says, What are these images to which you are cleaving? Ibn ‘Ajībah notes that the Abrahamic ḥanīf (see 2:135c; 3:95; 4:125; 6:161), the ideal of a follower of a pure and primordial monotheism unaffected by sectarian tribalism, is brought to the foreground in this story, where Abraham renounces all lords but God and names as enemies those things that occupy the heart in place of God and those people who follow their egotistical passions.

71 They said, “We worship idols, and we remain ever devoted to them.”

72 He said, “Do they hear you when you call?

73 Or do they benefit or harm you?”

71–73 Similar language is used in 20:91, where the Israelites tell Aaron regarding their new idol: We shall not cease to be its devotees till Moses returns unto us; and 20:97, where Moses says to them: Now observe your god, to whom you remained devoted: We shall surely burn it and scatter its ashes in the sea!

74 They said, “Nay, but we found our fathers doing so.”

75 He said, “Have you considered what you worship,

76 you and your ancestors?”

74–76 The idolaters admit that the idols do not have the power to harm or benefit (IK). This is, for al-Rāzī, a clear argument against belief based on conformity with authority (taqlīd) and in favor of belief based upon sound reasoning and proof. Abraham's reply shows that error, whether recent or entrenched, is error regardless of the authority to which one defers in upholding it (Q, R). For the notion of idolaters blindly following the ways of their forefathers, see commentary on 5:104: "Sufficient for us is that which we have found our fathers practicing." What! Even if their fathers knew naught and were not rightly guided? Similar injunctions are addressed to the Children of Adam (7:28), the Egyptians (10:78; 28:36), and people in general in 31:21 and 43:24.

77 For they are all enemies unto me, save the Lord of the worlds,

77 Another interpretation is that the they refers to those who worship the idols and not the idols themselves (R). In this interpretation, the subsequent phrase would be understood to mean, "except those who worship the Lord of the worlds" (Q). Abraham's statement seems to suggest that the Lord of the worlds was among those beings or things worshipped by his people along with their idols (much like the Quraysh), and Abraham wanted to make clear that he was only expressing enmity toward the idols and false objects of worship and not the Lord of the worlds (Q). At a spiritual level, this means that in a sense one has to make the things of the world one's enemy before one can truly love God (Su). Al-Rāzī reasons that enemies unto me can also mean that, because of the worship afforded to the idols by his people, they took on the status, in the eyes of those who worshipped them, of destructive and corruptive living beings, and it is in this sense that they could become enemies unto Abraham.

78 Who created me, and guides me,

79 and Who feeds me and gives me drink,

80 and Who, when I am ill, heals me,

81 and Who causes me to die, then gives me life,

78–81 Only a being capable of the acts listed in these verses is worthy and deserving of worship (R, T). Interpreted symbolically, these verses can mean that God feeds and nourishes the soul, heals the ailments of the soul, and enlivens the spirit by causing death to the passionate ego. A saying attributed to Ja'far al-Şādiq states, "When I am ill through sin, He heals me with repentance" (Th). Others say that the food is faith, and the drink is trust in God and contentment (Su). Al-Tha'labī summarizes the spiritual dimensions of these verses by saying that God brings death through justice and life through grace; death through disobedience and life through obedience; death through separation and life through meeting Him; death through ignorance and life through knowledge. Others note that one is caused to die outwardly, but is given life inwardly, dies through forgetfulness of God, and lives through remembrance of Him (Su). Some quote Junayd, who says that when human beings are resurrected on the Day of Judgment, everyone will be naked except for those given the raiment of reverence, and everyone will be hungry except for those given the food of gnosis, and everyone will be thirsty except for those given the drink of love (Aj, Th).

82 and Who I hope will forgive me my sins on the Day of Judgment.

82 Practically all Muslim theologians espouse the principle that the prophets are without sin or are promised forgiveness for their sins. Thus some have difficulty with the idea that Abraham might hope for forgiveness, which expresses an aspiration rather than certitude of the realization of what one hopes for, while others wrestle with Abraham's apparent attribution of sin to himself (R). For some it means that, in the case of Abraham, "hope" is a kind of certainty, but for believers it is a yearning (Q), while others say that Abraham's words are meant to be an example and provide Muslims with a way to make proper supplications (R). Mujāhid says that it could refer to 21:63, where Abraham "lies" and tells the people the largest idol destroyed all the others, when in fact Abraham had done it himself; and 6:76 and 37:89, which both deal with Abraham's looking to the stars, which seems outwardly to mean that he did not demonstrate faith in God alone.

83 My Lord! Grant me judgment, and bind me to the righteous!

83 Judgment (ḥukm) is thought to refer here to wisdom and understanding or to prophethood (Q); the latter interpretation is rejected by some who point out that Abraham was a prophet already (R). The righteous refers to the prophets, to the inhabitants of the Garden (Q), or to those who are content in all states and conditions (Su). Bind me to the righteous can refer to being with the righteous in both this life and the Hereafter (IK).

84 And make for me faithful renown among later generations.

84 The request for faithful renown has various meanings: religious communities will unite around Abraham; that he will be praised beautifully and have high rank for all time; that he will have descendants who will uphold the truth until the end of time; or that he desires prayers on his behalf until the Day of Judgment (Q); see also 19:50, which can in a sense be seen as a fulfillment of this prayer. Renown renders lisān, which literally means “tongue” and which some understand to signify “word,” and faithful renders ṣidq, which can also mean “sincere” or “true,” so that the core meaning here is that Abraham desires that good and sincere words be uttered on his behalf (Q). Another way of interpreting Abraham’s request is that he is asking for good qualities that would be worthy of remembrance in later times (R) or that he desires not to be lied about in later times (Ṭ). Others understand this verse to be a prayer whose fulfillment is the Prophet Muhammad himself, meaning that Abraham was praying for a descendant who would call others to God (Q, R).

85 And place me among the heirs of the Garden of bliss.

85 Bliss renders naʿīm, a word that evokes tranquility, ease, and blessing. Other verses speak of Gardens of bliss (e.g., 5:65; 10:9; 22:56; 31:8; 37:43; 56:12; 68:34); see 56:11–12c; 56:88–89c.

86 And forgive my father—he is one of those who are astray.

86 For Abraham’s prayer for his father, see 9:114, Abraham’s plea for forgiveness of his father was only due to a promise he had made to him. But when it became clear to him that he was an enemy of God, he repudiated him, and 9:113–14c, which refers to 19:47: I shall seek forgiveness for you from my Lord. Some interpret a promise he had made to him (9:114) to be a promise made by Abraham's father to Abraham to become a believer (Q), but this is a minority position.

87 And disgrace me not on the Day they are resurrected, 87 Disgrace is often discussed as part of the spiritual dimension of suffering in the Hereafter; see 3:192c; 3:194c. Disgrace in this world is also mentioned as a punishment throughout the Quran (see, e.g., 2:85, 114; 5:33, 41; 10:98; 39:26; 41:16). Some cite, in connection with this verse, a ḥadīth that describes Abraham seeing his father on the Day of Resurrection in a wretched state covered in dust. When he asks God, "Didst thou not promise me that Thou wouldst not disgrace me on the day they are resurrected?" God replies, "I have forbidden the Garden to the disbelievers" (IK).

88 the Day when neither wealth nor children avail,

88 The uselessness in the Hereafter of wealth and children, which exalt human beings and are a source of security, status, and comfort in this world, is a prevalent Quranic theme; see 3:10c; 3:116c; 9:55c; 31:33c; 34:35–37c; 58:17c; 60:3c; 64:15c.

89 save for him who comes to God with a sound heart."

89 A sound heart is also associated with Abraham (see 37:84c); it refers to knowing that God is real, that the Hereafter will come, and that God will resurrect what is in the graves (Q). It can also mean a heart without doubts and one that is sincere (Ṭ) and free of polytheism (IK), ignorance, vices, and attachments to the life of this world (R). Moreover, it refers to the heart that is spiritually healthy as opposed to one that is sick (Th), a heart that is empty of all but its Lord and only happy with Him (Su).

90 And the Garden will be brought nigh unto the reverent, 91 and Hellfire will become apparent to the errant.

90–91 Part of the joy of the reverent will be to see the Garden when they are brought near to it (cf. 50:31), but before they enter it, while the errant will suffer from the sight of Hell (R).

92 And it will be said unto them, “Where is that which you worshipped 93 apart from God? Are they helping you or helping themselves?”

92–93 The inability to help or be helped by any but God, especially as it relates to one’s fate in the Hereafter, also appears in 7:192, 197; 14:22; 18:43; 28:81. Rhetorically these verses resemble such verses as 16:20–21: And those whom they call upon apart from God create naught, and are themselves created. [They are] dead, not living, and they are not aware of when they will be resurrected.

94 Then they shall be toppled into it, they and the errant, 94 This verse is understood to mean that the errant will be hurled into Hell along with the idols they worshipped (Ṭ, Z), an interpretation that seems to fit the context, but others say this could mean that the errant will be thrown in with their leaders (IK) or with the satans (Ṭ) they followed; however, this last opinion would seem to be what is explicitly mentioned in v. 95, the hosts of Iblīs. The word toppled (kabkaba) evokes the sense of tumbling upside down and also being gathered together (Q, Ṭ).

95 and the hosts of Iblīs all together.

95 Though some interpret this verse as referring to the jinn only (Q), it could refer to anyone who was a follower of Iblīs, including human beings (Ṭ); some among both human beings and jinn are referred to as satans in the Quran (see 2:14c; 6:112).

96 They will say, as they dispute with one another therein,

97 “By God, indeed we were in manifest error,

96–97 They refers to the aforementioned group that was cast into the Fire (Q). Here they admit their manifest error, and in related verses it is stated that human beings will, on the Day of Judgment, admit their sin (67:11; cf. 40:11).

98 when we made you equal with the Lord of the worlds.

98 The idolaters say the words of this verse to the idols they worshipped, not because they still believe that idols can hear them, but because the idolaters wish to express that they now recognize these idols for what they are (R). Or they are saying this to those whom they followed into idolatry, making such people equal to God by obeying them whereas they should have obeyed God (IK).

99 And none caused us to go astray but the guilty.

99 The guilty could refer to the aforementioned errant and the hosts of Iblīs, or it could refer to their forebears who bequeathed idolatry to them (Q); according to ‘Ikrimah, it refers to the son of Adam (Cain) and Iblīs, who inaugurated disbelief and sin (Q, Ṭ).

100 So now we have no intercessors,

100 On the concept of intercession in the Hereafter, see 2:48c; 2:255c. Part of the idolaters’ belief was that the idols had the power of interceding with God on their behalf, which is then shown to be false (R).

101 Loyal friend translates ṣadīq ḥamīm. Ḥamīm (cf. 40:18; 41:34; 70:10) is someone who cares about what the other person cares about and feels pain when the other feels pain (R). Some understand ṣadīq to be the plural (R) or an intensive form denoting someone with whom one has a particularly strong bond of friendship (Q). Some say that ṣadīq refers to one who is merely helpful, while ḥamīm connotes one who intercedes on one's behalf (IK, Th). The loneliness of the reckoning before God and the absence of friends or support for those who disbelieve are discussed in the 69:35c, and this issue ties in with the broader Quranic theme of the fact that people have no helpers (e.g., 3:22, 90, 192) or protectors (e.g., 2:120; 33:65) other than God.

102 If we had another turn, we would be among the believers.”

102 Another turn refers to the idolaters' desire to return to the world in order to live their lives differently; see also 2:167c; 6:27–28c; 23:99–100c; 32:12c.

103 Truly in that is a sign, but most of them are not believers.

104 And truly thy Lord is indeed the Mighty, the Merciful.

103–4 For this refrain, see 26:8–9c.

105 The people of Noah denied the messengers,

105 For the story of Noah, also see 7:59–64; 10:71–73; 11:25–48; 23:23–30; 37:75–82; 54:9–15; and Sūrah 71. The plural messengers is used here even though

Noah is being discussed, because the people's denial of him would include the rejection of all messengers, since the path to recognizing and affirming a messenger is universal and does not change according to historical circumstance (R); in this sense every messenger calls upon his people to affirm all messengers. It may also mean that they rejected Noah's prophecy that messengers would come after him; or it may be an example in which a category stands for a specific individual (Q).

106 when their brother Noah said unto them, "Will you not be reverent?"

106 Their brother means that he was one of them (R). On the concept of reverence (taqwā), see 2:2c. Here being reverent is also interpreted as being mindful or careful, meaning, "Will you not be mindful of disobedience toward Me?" (R).

107 Truly I am a trustworthy messenger unto you.

108 So reverence God and obey me.

109 And I ask not of you any reward for it; my reward lies only with the Lord of the worlds.

107-9 Noah was trustworthy because being one of his people, he was known to them all his life, just as Muhammad was among the Quraysh and he had given them no reason to mistrust him (R), as he had been truthful all his life (Q). The call to reverence God precedes the call to obey Noah, because the latter depends upon the former (R). The people were to obey Noah when he enjoined them to faith (Q). A common theme in the Quran is that the messengers do not seek enrichment or status in return for being instrumental in bringing the message of faith to their people.

110 So reverence God and obey me."

111 They said, “Shall we believe you, when the lowliest follow you?”

112 He said, “What knowledge have I of what they used to do?”

111 In his opponents’ eyes, that Noah was followed by people of low social status was a barrier to their having faith in his message (Ṭ). A similar dynamic is mentioned in 25:20c in connection with verses such as 46:11, where the Quraysh say of the Prophet’s impoverished Companions that they were the reason they rejected the new religion: Had it been good, they would not have outstripped us in [attaining] it.

113 Their reckoning is only by my Lord, were you but aware.

112 This could also be rendered, “No knowledge have I of what they used to do” (Z). That is, Noah claims no responsibility for what his followers once did; he only looks to their actions now (Ṭ). He may also be saying that he is tasked only with calling them to faith, and their occupation or trade is not relevant (Q). Some commentators see in the opponents’ position an implicit accusation that Noah’s followers are motivated by material enrichment rather than spiritual conviction (Q, R), as if to say there must be a reason other than religion for why only the lowly follow Noah (see also 6:52c). Implicit in Noah’s response is that he is not responsible for deciphering whatever intentions they may have in following him, since it is for God to judge them (v. 113), not Noah (Q, R, Ṭ).

114 And I shall not drive away the believers.

113 The restriction of ultimate judgment and reckoning to God, to the exclusion of human beings, angels, and even prophets, is also mentioned in 6:52, 69; 13:40; 88:26.

115 I am but a clear warner.”

114 The implication in the disbelievers' statement in v. 111 is that Noah should dissociate himself from people of low social status (IK), as the Quraysh also desired the Prophet Muhammad (see 6:52c) to do, but Noah's statement reaffirms that he was sent to all human beings, not only the rich or the poor (Q), that he will never deny those who speak the truth, no matter which social class they belong to, and that he will protect the friends of God (Su).

116 They said, "Truly if you cease not, O Noah, you shall indeed be among the stoned."

115 This phrase is also attributed to Noah in 7:184; 11:25; 71:2 as well as to the Prophet Muhammad in 15:89; 22:49; 29:50; 38:65, 70; 46:9; 51:50; 67:26; see 38:65–66c. On the concept of prophets being warners (nadhīr), often combined with being bringers of glad tidings (bashīr), see 4:165c.

117 He said, "My Lord, verily my people have denied me.

116 The disbelievers say they will stone Noah to death (R) for denigrating their gods and their religion (Q). Some say that stoned (marjūm) does not mean literal stoning, but abuse and vilification (Q, Ṭ), as in the phrase "the accursed Satan" (al-shayṭān al-rajīm), which literally means "the stoned Satan," but which is usually understood to mean the former. Al-Qurṭubī points to the example of "stoning" in the words spoken by Abraham's father to him in 19:46 (If you cease not, I shall surely stone you!) as an example of metaphorical rather than literal stoning.

118 So decide between me and them, and deliver me and the believers who are with me!"

117 Noah was denied in the sense that he was declared a liar; so he turned to God in sadness that his people would not accept faith in Him (Q).

119 So We delivered him and those who were with him in the full-laden Ark.

118 A similar prayer is uttered by Shu^cayb in 7:89: Decide between us and our people in truth.

120 Then afterwards We drowned those who remained.

121 Truly in that is a sign, but most of them are not believers.

119–20 These verses refer to the flood, which is also mentioned in 7:64; 10:73; 11:37; 21:77; 23:27; 25:37; 29:14; 37:82; 54:11–12.

123 ^cĀd denied the messengers,

121–22 For this refrain, see 26:8–9c.

124 when their brother Hūd said unto them, “Will you not be reverent?”

125 Truly I am a trustworthy messenger unto you.

126 So reverence God and obey me.

127 And I ask not of you any reward for it; my reward lies only with the Lord of the worlds.

123–27 These five verses form a pattern that opens the story of Noah and each of the prophets who follow; cf. vv. 105–9, 141–45, 160–64, 176–80. See commentary on 26:105–9.

128 Do you frivolously build on every high place a sign?

128 High place renders rī^c, which can also refer to a path or road (Ṭ). Different accounts are given describing what the ʿĀd built, such as structures on high places in order to display a sign of their wealth and power for everyone to see. What was built may also have been baths (Q). Ibn Kathīr adopts the position that the specifics of what they built are not significant in this account.

129 And do you occupy castles, that haply you may ever abide?

129 Castles renders maṣāni^c, which may refer to fortresses (Ṭh), aqueducts, or other water-conveyance structures (R). May ever abide implies that the people did not contemplate their own deaths, but built structures as though they would live forever (Q).

130 And when you strike, do you strike as tyrants?

130 Strike here is to strike a blow with a weapon such as a whip or sword (Ṭ), which the ʿĀd do as tyrants. “Tyrant” renders jabbār, a word that can mean one who dominates or controls (cf. 5:22; 11:59; 14:15; 19:14, 32; 28:19; 40:35; 50:45; 59:23). The verse thus means that when they have dealings with other people, they do so in a heavy-handed and domineering fashion (R). For al-Rāzī the three qualities the ʿĀd seek for themselves—glory, everlastingness, and domination—are only appropriate for God; indeed, al-Jabbār, “the Compeller,” is a Divine Name.

131 So reverence God and obey me.

131 Cf. v. 108.

49 4 And reverence Him who has succored you with what you know,
69 6 succored you with cattle and children,
134 and gardens and springs.

132–34 God made the things mentioned in this verse subservient and useful to human beings; so He should be thanked for them (Q).

135 Truly I fear for you the punishment of a tremendous day!”

135 Similar words are spoken by prophets to their peoples in 7:59; 11:3, 26, 84; 40:30; 46:21.

136 They said, “It is the same to us whether you exhort us or whether you are not among those who exhort.

136 In this verse the disbelievers say about themselves what the Quran says about them in 2:6: Truly it is the same for the disbelievers whether thou warnest them or warnest them not; they do not believe (cf. 36:10); and 7:193: And if you call them to guidance, they follow you not. It is the same for you whether you call them or whether you remain silent.

137 This is naught but the ethos of those of old,

137 Ethos (khuluq) is taken to mean the religion, the fables (asāḥīr), the customs (‘ādah), or a thing invented or concocted by those of old (Q, Ṭ); this is related to the idea held by disbelievers that the Prophet’s religion was made up of fables of those of old (see 25:4–5c). Others interpret these words as referring not to the message of Hūd, but to what the ‘Ād were actually doing; that is, it is as though they were saying, “What we are now doing, O Hūd, is the same as the actions of those of old, people who were not punished for it, and so neither shall we be punished” (Q, Ṭ). If read as khalq (“creation”) instead of khuluq, as some do, it would mean that these are matters that those of old created or invented or that the ʿĀd created these objects (vv. 128–29) as did those before them (R).

138 Commentators note that, although the people believed in a Creator in the manner of the Quraysh (who accepted the idea of a creator deity), they did not believe they would be held accountable in any Hereafter (Ṭ).

139 So they denied him, and We destroyed them. Truly in that is a sign, but most of them are not believers.

140 And truly thy Lord is, indeed, the Mighty, the Merciful.

139–40 For this refrain, see 26:8–9c.

141 The Thamūd denied the messengers,

142 when their brother Ṣāliḥ said unto them, “Will you not be reverent?

143 Truly I am a trustworthy messenger unto you.

144 So reverence God and obey me.

141–45 For a similar opening to other prophets’ stories, cf. vv. 105–9, 123–27, 160–64, 176–80. See commentary on 26:105–9.

145 And I ask not of you any reward for it; my reward lies only with the Lord of the worlds.

146 Will you be left among that which is here, secure,

148 sown fields, date palms with ripe stalks?

146–48 The question indicates that the Thamūd are living as if they expect to be left on the earth, as if there will be no abode of recompense for them (R). Though v. 147 mentions gardens, some think that the mention of date palms specifically shows the superiority of the date palm over other fruit (R). Ripe renders haḍīm, which some understand to mean “slender”; or it means that the fragile stalks are crushed or crumbled, so that they nearly snap because of the weight of the ripe fruits piled on top of one another (Ṭ).

149 And you skillfully hew dwellings in the mountains.

149 Skillfully renders fāriḥ, which some read with the shorter vowel as fariḥ. Fariḥ means something more like “nimble” or in another sense “exulting” or “exuberantly,” though some commentators consider fāriḥ and fariḥ synonymous (Q, Ṭ). Al-Rāzī observes that this sūrah shows how the ʿĀd were overcome by their desire for domination and glory, while the Thamūd were seduced by the material comforts of the world, deviations that represent the two sets of vices present in the irascible and concupiscent soul, respectively.

150 So reverence God and obey me.

150 Cf. v. 108

151 And obey not the commands of the prodigal,

152 who work corruption upon the earth, and do not set matters aright.”

151–52 On the vice of prodigality or wastefulness in the Quran, see 3:147c; 7:80–81c; 25:67c; and especially 10:12c. The warning against being prodigal means that one should not be seduced by those who seek excessively the things of this world and that one should seek, rather, contentment (R). On the meaning in the Quran of the opposing concepts of working corruption (fasād) and setting matters aright (iṣlāḥ), see 2:220c.

153 They said, “You are but one of the bewitched.

153 Rather than meaning one who is under the influence of sorcery (siḥr; Q), bewitched (musahḥar) is understood by some to mean merely a creature who consumes food (related to saḥr, referring to the lungs or upper part of the gut). The Thamūd are making the point that Ṣāliḥ, who eats food, is a being just like themselves and therefore commands no special authority (R, Ṭ); this would be consistent with the following verse; see 25:7c, which discusses how the disbelievers balk at the fact that the Prophet is a human being like them who eats and walks among people.

154 You are naught but a human being like us; so bring a sign, if you are among the truthful.”

154 A human being like us is a phrase that also appears in connection with other prophets, as in 11:27; 14:10; 21:3; 23:24, 33–34. It is spoken as a form of accusation by those who refuse to follow a mere human being, but is also said by prophets about themselves (e.g., 18:110; 41:6) as a means of emphasizing their humanity and the powerlessness they share with others before God.

155 He said, “This is a she-camel; she shall have drink and you shall drink on an appointed day.

155 The story of the she-camel of the Thamūd is told more fully in 7:73 (also 11:64; 17:59; 54:27; 91:13). Some understand this verse to mean that there was a certain day on which the she-camel would drink, while others interpret it to mean that the people and the she-camel would have a certain portion of drink (Q, T), so that it would mean, “She shall have an amount of water, and you shall have an amount of water.”

156 And touch her not with harm, lest you be taken by the punishment of a tremendous day.”

157 But they hamstrung her, and then became remorseful.

158 So the punishment seized them. Truly in that is a sign, but most of them are not believers.

156–58 The sending of the miraculous she-camel to the Thamūd is mentioned also in 7:73–77; 11:64–65; 54:27–29; 91:13–14 and constituted a sign in response to challenges that Ṣāliḥ prove he was a prophet.

159 And truly thy Lord is the Mighty, the Merciful.

158–59 For this refrain, see 26:8–9c.

160 The people of Lot denied the messengers,

161 when their brother Lot said unto them, “Will you not be reverent?”

162 Truly I am a trustworthy messenger unto you,

163 so reverence God and obey me.

164 And I ask not of you any reward for it; my reward lies only with the Lord of the worlds.

160–64 For a similar opening to other prophets' stories, cf. vv. 105–9, 123–27, 141–45, 176–80. See commentary on 26:105–9.

165 Among all creatures do you come unto males,

166 leaving your spouses your Lord created for you? Nay, but you are a transgressing people.”

165–66 According to some, these verses mean that these people engaged in anal intercourse with both men and women (Ṭ), though the context would seem to indicate that they avoided women; for some this means that they engaged in this behavior with foreign men (Q). See also 7:80–81c; 11:77–79c; 29:28–29c.

167 They said, “If you cease not, O Lot, you will be among those who are expelled.”

167 Cf. 7:82.

168 He said, “Truly I am of those who detest what you do.

169 My Lord! Deliver me and my family from what they do.”

168–69 What Lot “detests” are their sexual practices (Ṭ).

170 So We delivered him and his family all together,

171 save for an old woman among those who lagged behind.

170–71 Some commentators mention here that she (i.e., Lot’s wife) was punished because she pointed out the guests to the inhabitants of the city (see also 7:83; 27:57; 29:32), while others mention some details of the story as described in Genesis 19 (Q), namely, that she was turned into a pillar of salt, though such details are not mentioned in the Quran.

172) Then We destroyed the others.

173) And We rained a rain upon them. Evil was the rain of the warned!

172–73 See 25:40, which is also thought to refer to the people of Lot: And indeed they passed by the town upon which fell the evil rain. This rain is described as a rain of fire and sulfur (cf. Genesis 19:24; Th).

174) Truly in that is a sign, but most of them are not believers.

175) And truly thy Lord is indeed the Mighty, the Merciful.

174–75 For this refrain, see 26:8–9c.

176) The inhabitants of the thicket denied the messengers,

177) when Shu^cayb said unto them, “Will you not be reverent?”

178) Truly I am a trustworthy messenger unto you.

179) So reverence God and obey me.

180) And I ask not of you any reward for it; my reward lies only with the Lord of the worlds.

176–80 For a similar opening to other prophets’ stories, cf. vv. 105–9, 123–27, 141–45, 160–64. See commentary on 26:105–9. On Shu^ʿayb, see 7:85c. The thicket (aykah) is also mentioned in 15:78; 26:176; 38:13; 50:14; an aykah is understood as a tangled or twisted tree (Q, Ṭ) or a group of trees (Ṭ). The inhabitants of the thicket are sometimes thought to have been either part of the people of Midian or a separate people to whom Shu^ʿayb was sent as a prophet (Q), though their exact identity is unknown; see 29:36–37c; cf. 50:12–14. Al-Tha^ʿlabī argues that since Shu^ʿayb is described as being sent to the people of Midian as their brother (29:36), but not described this way in the case of the inhabitants of the thicket, it means that Shu^ʿayb was of Midian and the people of the thicket were a different people.

181 Give full measure, and be not among those who fall short.

183 and diminish not people’s goods, nor behave wickedly upon the earth, working corruption.

181–83 These verses instruct people not to cheat in matters of buying and selling (Ṭ, Th). The acts referred to by behave wickedly upon the earth, working corruption are usually understood to include highway robbery and piracy, raiding, and the destruction of crops (R). On the corrupt and predatory mercantile practices of which the Midianites were guilty, see 7:85c; 11:84–86c.

184 And reverence Him Who created you and the generations of old.”

184 Generations renders jibillah, which is understood by some to mean “creatures,” “a multitude of creatures” (Ṭ), or “many people” (Q).

185 They said, “You are but one of the bewitched.

186 You are naught but a human being like us, and indeed we deem you to be among the liars, 185–86 See commentary on 26:153–54.

187 so make fragments from the sky fall upon us, if you are among the truthful.”

188 He said, “My Lord knows best what you do.”

187–88 Fragments (kisaf) is understood by some to mean “side,” as in “side of the sky” (Q); similar imagery is used in 17:92 and 34:9. The request that prophets produce miracles, a prominent theme in the Quran, is also found in 3:183, and the challenge to bring down a punishment (often a form of mockery) is also mentioned in 6:57; 7:70; 16:1; 17:90–93; 22:47; 29:53; 37:176; 42:18; 46:22; 51:14; see, moreover, 8:23c; 8:32c, which discuss challenges made to the Prophet.

189 So they denied him, and the punishment of the day of gloom seized them. Truly it was the punishment of a tremendous day.

189 Some commentators relate a story that God afflicted the people of the thicket by withholding the wind and sending a terrible heat for seven days, after which a cloud appeared under which a man found comfort and coolness. He called his people to join him beneath it, and when they did, they were all destroyed by a fire originating from it (IK, Q, Th). This was the gloom that destroyed them.

190 Truly in that is a sign, but most of them are not believers.

191 And truly thy Lord is indeed the Mighty, the Merciful.

190–91 For this refrain, see 26:8–9c.

192 And truly it is a revelation of the Lord of the worlds,

193 brought down by the Trustworthy Spirit,

192–93 The Trustworthy Spirit (al-rūḥ al-amīn) is a reference, according to most commentators, to the Archangel Gabriel (Ṭ), the angel of revelation. According to one reading of the verb in this verse, it would mean, “The Trustworthy Spirit descended with it”—that is, with the Quran (Ṭ)—rather than the reading here, which is more akin to “to cause it [i.e., the Quran] to descend.”

Gabriel is called a Spirit because he is created from Spirit, because he is the bringer of that which gives life, or because he is entirely Spirit, unlike human beings, who have a material dimension as well as a spiritual nature (R). Gabriel is called Trustworthy, because of his faithfulness in conveying God’s message to the Prophet Muhammad and other prophets (R). It is also noteworthy to mention that several prophets in this sūrah say that they are a trustworthy messenger (e.g., vv. 107, 126, 143), and this is the only sūrah to refer to the Trustworthy Spirit.

195 in a clear, Arabic tongue.

194–95 A clearer word order might be, “Upon thine heart in a clear, Arabic tongue, that thou mayest be among the warners” (cf. 2:97). The significance of the Quran being in Arabic, the language of the people of the Prophet Muhammad, is also mentioned in 12:2; 13:37; 16:103; 20:113; 39:28; 41:3, 44; 42:7; 43:3. Some understand its being brought “upon the heart” of the Prophet to mean that the Trustworthy Spirit caused the Prophet to understand and retain it (R) or that Gabriel strengthened his heart (Q).

Here al-Rāzī remarks upon the Quranic meaning of the heart as the seat of understanding and knowledge, upon which the faculties of the soul depend. He explains that, in contrast to some positions even in his day, it is not the brain but the heart that is the seat of intelligence, even though he acknowledges straightforwardly the role of the brain in human physiology and details different ways in which the brain can function together and in harmony with the heart. He does not go beyond that, however, as many philosophers and authorities on doctrinal Sufism do when they claim for the heart a spiritual and subtle reality of which the biological heart is only a symbol and reflection and its manifestation on the corporeal level of reality. On significance of the heart in the Quran, also see 2:7c.

196 It is indeed in the scriptures of those of old.

196 Scriptures here renders zibur (see 3:184c). This verse is understood to mean that the Quran is mentioned or described in some of the previous scriptures revealed to other prophets (Ṭ) or that the Prophet himself is so mentioned (Th).

197 Is it not a sign for them that the learned of the Children of Israel know it?

197 Some see the learned of the Children of Israel as a reference to ʿAbd Allāh ibn Salām (among others), one of the learned Jews of Madinah who became Muslim and whose conversion was, because of his knowledge and standing within the Jewish community of his time, of special significance (Q, Ṭ). This view, however, would not harmonize with the opinion that this sūrah is from the Makkan period, since ʿAbd Allāh ibn Salām converted after the migration of the Prophet to Madinah. It is said that the Makkan idolaters would consult with the People of the Book on certain religious matters, such as the prophethood of Muhammad, and were told by at least some of them that he was the prophet described in their scriptures and that this was his time (Q).

198 And had We sent it down upon some non-Arab,

198 Non-Arab renders aʿjam, a word that also denotes someone who does not speak Arabic well and hence connotes a foreigner; see 41:44c. In Islamic texts the term came to be used mostly as a reference to Persians.

199 and he recited it unto them, they would not have believed in it.

199 They would not have believed in it; that is, they would not have understood it. This idea is related to the emphasis that the Quran places on the fact that prophets are not foreigners to the people to whom they are sent, but are rather known to them, as in 10:16, where the Prophet is commanded to say to his people: Had God willed, I would not have recited it unto you, nor would He have made it known to you. Indeed, I tarried among you for a lifetime before it. It is also a reminder that the Quran speaks through proof and evidence, against which the idolaters are inured (R), and that it is meant to be understood and not only rehearsed. See also 41:44: And had We made it a Quran in a foreign tongue, they would say, "If only its signs were expounded. What! A foreign tongue and an Arab [messenger]?" and 14:4: And We have sent no messenger, save in the language of his people.

200 Thus do We place it into the hearts of the guilty;

200 For some the it in this verse means that the denial of the Quran is placed by God within the hearts of the disbelievers (R). Others interpret it to mean that God causes the Quran itself to enter into the hearts of disbelievers and becomes a proof against them when they do not believe in it (Th, Ṭs). Some point out that the negative particle lā here is possibly read with an implied sense of “in order to,” which would result in the translation of vv. 200–201 as, “We place it into the hearts of the guilty, that they may not believe in it till they see the painful punishment” (Q, Ṭ, Th). Several commentators interpret this verse as an articulation of God’s predestining certain souls, reflecting an understanding that the thing being placed in the soul is not the Quran, but disbelief, as implied by the end of v. 199 (Bḍ, R). A plausible reading, based upon the context of this verse, is that the reception of the Quran by those who do not believe is analogous to that of non-Arabs hearing Arabic: they can hear it, but cannot understand it.

201 The guilty will believe only when it is too late and the punishment is already upon them (IK; cf. 10:88, 97).

202 so it will come upon them suddenly, while they are unaware.

202 It is said that al-ḥasan al-Baṣrī read the verb come upon in this verse in the grammatical feminine, which would not correspond to the grammatically masculine punishment of the previous verse, but rather to an implied “Hour” (sā‘ah), meaning that the end of the world would come suddenly (Q). The idea of the Hour coming unexpectedly appears in 6:31; 7:187; 12:107; 21:40; 22:55; 39:55; 43:66; 47:18.

203 Then they will say, “Will we be granted respite?”

204 Do they seek to hasten Our Punishment?

203–4 At the moment of truth, the disbelievers will seek to have the punishment delayed, though in life they would mockingly seek to hasten the Punishment of God, as in v. 187 (R, Ṭ). This is related to other verses that speak of those who wish to have a second chance at life in order to do good deeds (e.g., 2:167; 39:58). Regarding the desire by people to return to the world in order to live their lives differently, see 2:167c; 6:27–28c; 23:99–100c; 32:12c. That they seek to hasten God’s Punishment refers to the manner in which disbelievers ignore the warnings of the prophets and mock the punishments they foretell; see 10:50–51; 13:6; 22:47; 27:46, 72; 29:53c; 37:176–77; 38:16; 42:18; 51:14.

205 Consider: if We grant them enjoyment for years,

206 and there comes upon them that which they were promised,

207 of what avail to them will be that which they were made to enjoy?

205–7 This passage is a reference to the idolaters of Makkah and says that even if the promised punishment were not to arrive for a long time, the things of the world that they enjoyed would be of no use to them in the Hereafter (Q). Moreover, in their case it would only add to their ruin, as they would have become entrenched in their lack of faith and would spend years more without repenting (Ṭ).

208 And never did We destroy a town save that it had warners, 209 as a reminder; and We did no wrong.

208–9 For the idea that God did not destroy any people without first having given them a chance to be righteous, see also 15:4; 17:15; 20:134; 28:59. Some read as a reminder not as a clause modifying warners, but as the second half of a phrase whose first half is implicit, so that it would be translated, “They had warners, [who delivered] a reminder,” or, “They had warners. [It was] a reminder” (Q).

210 And the satans did not descend with it,

212 Indeed, they are debarred from hearing [it].

210–12 These verses reaffirm that the Quran was brought by an angel (v. 193), from whom no falsehood can come (IK, Q). Satans bring corruption and misguidance to God’s servants, whereas the Quran enjoins right and forbids wrong and is a light and guidance (IK). Nor would the satans be able to bring such a thing even if they desired to do so. About the suitability of nonhuman beings receiving the revelation, Ibn Kathīr cites 59:21: Had We made this Quran descend upon a mountain, thou wouldst have seen it humbled, rent asunder by the fear of God. With regard to they are debarred from hearing [it], he mentions that the jinn are described as saying in 72:8: We reached out to Heaven and found it filled with mighty sentries and flaming stars; see 15:17–18c; 37:6–10c; 72:8–9c; and the introduction to Sūrah 72. Some say debarred from hearing [it] means they cannot understand the Quran or that they hear its commands, but do not obey them (Su).

213 So call not upon another god along with God, lest thou be among the punished.

213 This verse is in the second-person singular and is thus considered to be addressed to the Prophet himself, but is also interpreted as a Command to the Prophet to say these words to others (Q).

214 And warn thy tribe, thy nearest kin,

214 It is reported that when this verse was revealed, the Prophet addressed his kin directly by name, including his daughter Fāṭimah, his uncle ʿAbbās, and his aunt Ṣafiyyah, and his tribe, the Quraysh, in more general terms, saying, “Purchase your souls from God! I can avail thee naught against God” (Ṭ, Th). In a version of the story favored by Shiite sources, the Prophet asked a gathering of his nearest relatives who among them would be his supporter, helper, and trustee; only his young cousin ʿAlī, who was still a boy, rose to respond (Qm, Ṭ). In some accounts, the Prophet’s words to his family and relatives come over the course of three consecutive nights during which he invited them to partake of a meal. In other accounts, the Prophet ascends the hill Ṣafā to deliver his warning, asking his kin (usually the number given is approximately forty) if they would believe him if he told them that an army was just about to come from around the mountain; when they reply in the affirmative, he then warns them of the coming of the Hereafter (Ṭ, Z).

215 Cf. 15:88. Lower thy wing means to be gentle (Ṭ). Some understand this symbolism through the image of a bird, which, when it is in flight and wants to descend, lowers its wings, representing humility and gentleness (R); or since, in the case of a human being, a wing (janāḥ) is one’s side, it means to “lower one’s side” to the believers and to deal gently with them (Q).

216 And should they disobey thee, say, “Truly I am quit of that which you do.”

216 I am quit (barīʿ) of that which you do means that the Prophet is not responsible for the disobedient and is innocent of their wrongdoings (cf. 6:19, 78; 10:41; 11:35, 54). The Quran frequently mentions that the Prophet is not answerable for the sins of his people; he is only responsible for warning them and bringing them glad tidings (see 26:115c).

217 And trust in the Mighty, the Merciful,

217 Trusting here means that one's fear and hope should rest entirely with God, reflecting the heart's reliance upon God, which increases as one's faith grows (Su). The concept of trust in God (tawakkul) is a cornerstone of Islamic spirituality, and believers are told in dozens of verses to trust in God (e.g., 4:81; 5:23; 8:61; 25:28); regarding the significance of trust in God, see 14:11–12c.

218 Who sees thee when thou standest [to pray],

220 Truly He is the Hearing, the Knowing.

218–20 According to one interpretation, when thou standest [to pray] refers to the night vigil prayer (tahajjud; see the introduction to Sūrah 73), which many consider to have been at one time an obligatory act in Makkah that was later made supererogatory; see 73:20c. When the obligatory status was lifted, it is said that the Prophet went from house to house to see if his Companions were continuing the practice even though it was no longer a religious obligation, which is what is meant by thy movement amid those who prostrate (R). In another interpretation, this refers to the Prophet's role as leader of prayer, including his movements of bowing and prostrating along with the other worshippers (R, Ṭ). According to another interpretation, movement (taqallub) refers to the movement of the Prophet's sight—in 2:144 taqallub refers to the Prophet's turning his face toward Heaven—over the worshippers behind him, in accord with a ḥadīth that states that the Prophet could see in front of him and behind him during the prayer: “Straighten your rows, for truly I can see you behind me” (IK, R).

221 Shall I inform thee of those upon whom the satans descend?

223 eavesdropping, and most of them are liars.

221–23 In connection with these verses, commentators mention various aḥādīth that describe how the jinn and satans overhear something from the unseen world of the angels and convey this knowledge to their allies among human beings, such as soothsayers (sing. kāhin); they convey some truth, but add to it a hundred lies (IK, Q, R); see 72:8–9c. Every sinful liar is interpreted to mean soothsayers. Eavesdropping refers to their listening in on the celestial discourse (see Sūrah 72) and then conveying this to soothsayers (IK). Most of them are liars is understood by some to mean that these soothsayers lie about what they hear from the satans and jinn (R), or it can mean that most of the satans lie to the soothsayers (Sm, Ṭ).

224 And as for the poets, the errant follow them.

225 Hast thou not considered that they wander in every valley, 226 and that they say what they do not do?

224–26 The Quran distances itself from shīʿr, usually rendered “poetry,” and from the accusation that the Prophet was a poet (21:5; 36:69; 37:36; 52:30; 69:41). In pre-Islamic Arabia a poet (shāʿir) was not merely a person who composed verse, but rather one who was part of a spectrum of supernaturally affected individuals that included soothsayers (sing. kāhin) and those who were possessed or mad (sing. majnūn), as described in 52:29–30: So remind, for thou art not, by the Blessing of thy Lord, a soothsayer or one possessed. Or do they say, “A poet—let us await the vagaries of fate for him.” Soothsayers claimed openly and directly to have contact with jinn or satans and typically served an oracular function predicated on their ability to communicate with unseen forces who could convey information from the unseen world (ghayb). Poets did not serve this function, but their imaginative powers were often associated with inspiration from the same kind of otherworldly or magical source. That is to say, it was the widely accepted source and function of “poetry” in the Age of Ignorance (al-jāhiliyyah) that was the point of contention between the Prophet and the idolaters who accused him of being a “poet.” When the Quran distances itself from poetry, it is not to deny that the Quran has identifiable formal beauty, as many of its sections reflect the highest poetic eloquence, or that it employs allegory and symbolism and so has much overlap with what anyone would call poetry. It is rather to say that in the context of the Arabia in which the Quran was revealed, calling someone a shāʿir or calling some text shiʿr suggested a source other than God or the Trustworthy Spirit mentioned in v. 193. That is to say that shāʿir and shiʿr as used at the time of the Quranic revelation do not correspond exactly to “poet” and “poetry” as those words are used in English today.

At another level, poets were also associated with vulgarity and with many of the worst aspects of tribal culture, such as vainglory, intemperance, lust, and combativeness. Al-Rāzī reflects upon this passage by noting that the poets would fashion words in praise of someone one day and then say the opposite the next day to a different audience. They would rhetorically savage a person for the smallest fault of an ancestor, while committing all manner of sin themselves. Al-Qurṭubī points out that in the tradition poetry is considered a special kind of speech, which can be either good or bad, beautiful or ugly, but he notes that pre-Islamic Arab poets would versify for money to whatever purpose the customer wished, whether true or false. There were exceptions, such as the pre-Islamic poet Labīd, some of whose poems the Prophet praised.

Some say that the errant (ghāwīn) refers to the aforementioned satans (v. 221) or the “rhapsodists” (rawwāh), individuals whose function it was to memorize and transmit the compositions of poets (Ṭ, Th). Other opinions say they are idolaters or misguided people in general (Ṭ).

227 Not so those who believe and perform righteous deeds, and remember God much, and help one another after having been wronged. And those who do wrong shall know to what homecoming they will return!

227 This verse is understood to refer to those poets who compose verse and engage the imagination for noble purposes rather than those referred to in the previous verse (IK), and indeed there were famous poets among the Prophet’s Companions, such as ʿAbd Allāh ibn al-Rawwāḥah and ḥassān ibn Thābit, who used their talents in the service of the believers’ cause. It is also worth noting that wherever Islam went, the poetic tradition became strong; and precisely because of the form of the Quran, poetry is one of the highest arts in Islam and plays a much greater role in Islamic culture than in Western culture.

Remember God much can also be rendered “mention God much” or “invoke God much,” and some interpret this to be a reference not to the poets, but to the poetry itself if it contained spiritually wholesome themes (Ṭ). Some point out that to remember God much is not a matter of mere quantity of time, but of being conscious and aware of God’s Presence in a way that is not affected by habit or forgetfulness (Su).

Having been wronged is understood by some to mean the idolaters’ use of verse to mock or satirize the believers (Ṭ). Commentators such as al-Rāzī and Ibn Kathīr note that the Prophet on occasion commanded Companions to compose verse in response to the idolaters, saying, for example, to ḥassān ibn Thābit, “Versify against them, for Gabriel is with thee.” On the occasion of the conquest of Makkah, ʿAbd Allāh ibn al-Rawwāḥah recited verses against the idolaters. He was rebuked by ʿUmar for reciting poetry in the environs of the Kaʿbah, but the Prophet said to ʿUmar, “Leave him be, O ʿUmar, for it [the verse] goes through them [the idolaters] faster than an arrow.”

Those who do wrong is understood to mean any who do wrong (IK), but it is also associated more specifically with individuals such as the aforementioned poets or idolaters of Makkah (Ṭ). Homecoming (munqalib) is the active participle of return (yanqalib), which has the sense of returning, but also of being brought to the opposite of one’s state (Q), and here it refers to what one returns to after death (Th). In this sense homecoming is related to other similar words relating to one’s ultimate return to God in the Hereafter, such as maṣīr (journey’s end; e.g., 2:286; 24:42; 31:14; 35:18; 40:3), maʿāb (return; e.g., 3:14), and marjīʿ (return; e.g., 3:55), all of which mean “return” or “place of return,” as well as to general verses that speak of all things returning to God (see, e.g., 2:210; 3:109; 22:76; 35:4; 57:5).

The Ants

A Makkan sūrah (Q), al-Naml takes its name from the valley of the ants through which Solomon’s army passes, mentioned in v. 18. The sūrah opens with several verses articulating common themes in the Quran regarding Final Judgment in the Hereafter and then turns to Moses’ encounter with the fire on the mountain, from which God spoke charging him with his mission to go to Pharaoh and free the Israelites (vv. 7–14). This is followed by an account of Solomon with his miraculous host of men, jinn, and birds and his encounter with the Queen of Sheba, who eventually comes before Solomon and embraces faith in the One God (vv. 15–44). The story of the Arabian prophet Ṣāliḥ and his people, the Thamūd, is recounted (vv. 45–53), describing a plot devised by Ṣāliḥ’s people to murder him. Lot’s story, including the destruction of his people for their iniquities, is told briefly (vv. 54–58). Next are several verses that challenge readers to meditate upon the Nature of God and His creation; the refrain Is there a god alongside God? punctuates the passage several times (vv. 59–64).

The disbelievers challenge the Prophet regarding the reality of bodily resurrection and the coming of the end of the world and are then reminded that only God knows what is hidden in the heavens and on the earth and within the hearts of human beings (vv. 65–72). Verses describing how God will judge between those who differ on religious matters (vv. 75–81) are followed by a section that discusses eschatological realities, such as the “beast” that will rise as one of the portents of the end of the world, the marshaling of religious communities and the terror human beings will experience at the end of the world, the destruction of the mountains, and the consequences for those who do good and those who do evil (vv. 82–93).

① Ṭā. Sīn. These are the signs of the Quran and a clear Book, ② a guidance and glad tidings for the believers, ③ who perform the prayer and give the alms, and of the Hereafter are certain. ④ Truly those who believe not in the Hereafter, We have made their deeds seem fair unto them, while they wander confused. ⑤ It is they who shall have a terrible punishment, and in the Hereafter it is they who are the greatest losers. ⑥ Truly thou dost receive the Quran from the Presence of One who is Wise, Knowing. ⑦ [Remember] when Moses said unto his family, “Verily, I perceive a fire. I shall bring you some news therefrom, or a brand, that haply you may warm yourselves.” ⑧ Then when he came to it, a call came unto him, “Blessed is the One in the fire, and the one around it. And glory be to God, Lord of the worlds! ⑨ O Moses! Verily, it is I, God, the Mighty, the Wise!” ⑩ And, “Cast thy staff!” Then when he saw it quivering like a serpent, he turned in retreat without returning. “O Moses! Fear not! Verily the messengers fear not in My Presence, ⑪ save one who did wrong, then replaced evil with good. For truly I am Forgiving, Merciful. ⑫ And insert thy hand in thy bosom; it will come forth white, without blemish—among nine signs to Pharaoh and his people. Truly they have been an iniquitous people.” ⑬ And when Our signs came to them as a clear portent, they said, “This is manifest sorcery!” ⑭ They rejected them—though their souls were convinced of them—wrongfully and exultantly. So behold how the workers of corruption fared in the end! ⑮ And indeed We gave unto David and Solomon knowledge. And they said, “Praise be to God, Who has favored us above many of His believing servants.” ⑯ Solomon inherited from David and said, “O mankind, we have been taught the language of the birds, and we have been given of all things. Truly this is clear bounty!” ⑰ And gathered for Solomon were his hosts of jinn and men and birds, and they were marshaled [in ordered ranks], ⑱ till when they came to the valley of the ants, an ant said, “O ants! Enter your dwellings, lest Solomon and his hosts crush you, while they are unaware.” 19 And he smiled, laughing at her words, and said, “My Lord! Inspire me to give thanks for Thy blessing wherewith Thou hast blessed me and my parents and to work righteousness pleasing to Thee, and cause me to enter, through Thy Mercy, among Thy righteous servants!” 20 And he surveyed the birds and said, “How is it that I do not see the hoopoe? Or is he among those who are absent? 21 I will surely punish him with a severe punishment, or I shall slaughter him, unless he brings me a clear warrant.” 22 But he tarried not long, and said, “I have comprehended that which thou hast not comprehended, and I bring you a sure report from Sheba. 23 Verily, I found a woman ruling over them, and she has been given of all things, and hers is a mighty throne! 24 I found her and her people prostrating to the sun, apart from God, and Satan has made their actions seem fair unto them, and turned them from the way, such that they are not rightly guided. 25 Will they not prostrate unto God, Who brings forth what is hidden in the heavens and on the earth, and Who knows what you hide and what you disclose? 26 God, there is no god but He, Lord of the mighty Throne!” 27 He said, “We shall see if you have spoken the truth or if you are among the liars. 28 Go with this letter of mine and deliver it unto them. Then turn away from them and observe what they send back.” 29 She said, “O notables! Truly a noble letter has been delivered unto me. 30 Verily, it is from Solomon and verily it is, ‘In the Name of God, the Compassionate, the Merciful. 31 Do not exalt yourselves against me, but come unto me in submission.’” 32 She said, “O notables! Give me your opinion in this matter of mine. I am not one to decide on any matter unless you are present.” 33 They said, “We are possessed of strength and possessed of great might. But the command is thine; so consider what thou wouldst command.” 34 She said, “Verily, kings, when they enter a town, corrupt it, and make the most honorable of its people the most abased. They will do likewise. 35 I will send a gift to them, and observe what the envoys bring back.” 36 But when it came to Solomon, he said, “Do you offer me wealth? What God has given me is better than what He has given you. Nay, but it is you who exult in your gift!” 37 “Return unto them, for we shall come upon them with hosts they cannot withstand, and we shall expel them hence, abased, and they shall be humbled.” 38 He said, “O notables! Which of you will bring me her throne before they come unto me in submission?” 39 An ‘ifrīt among the jinn said, “I will bring it to thee before thou risest from thy place. Truly I have the strength for it, [and] am trustworthy.” 40 The one who had knowledge of the Book said, “I will bring it to thee in the blink of an eye.” Then when he saw it set before him, he said, “This is of the Bounty of my Lord, to try me whether I will give thanks or be ungrateful. And whosoever give thanks, he gives thanks only for his own soul; and whosoever is ungrateful, truly my Lord is Self-Sufficient, Generous.” 41 He said, “Disguise her throne for her. We shall see if she is rightly guided or if she is among those who are not rightly guided.” 42 Then when she came, it was said, “Is your throne like this?” She said, “It seems the same.” [Solomon said], “And we were given knowledge before her and we were submitters, 43 while that which she worshipped apart from God barred her; verily she was from a disbelieving people.” 44 It was said unto her, “Enter the pavilion.” But when she saw it, she supposed it to be an expanse of water and bared her legs. He said, “Verily it is a pavilion paved with crystal.” She said, “My Lord! Surely I have wronged myself, and I submit with Solomon to God, Lord of the worlds.” 45 And indeed We sent to Thamūd their brother Šāliḥ, [saying], “Worship God!” And behold, they were two groups, quarreling. 46 He said, “O my people! Why do you seek to hasten evil before good? Why do you not seek Forgiveness of God, that haply you may be shown mercy?” 47 They said, “We augur ill of you and of those with you.” He said, “Your auguring ill is with God. Rather, you are a people being tried.” 48 And in the city there were nine persons working corruption in the land and not setting matters aright. 49 They said, “Swear by God to each other that we shall attack him and his family by night. Then we shall surely say to his heir that we were not present at the destruction of his family and that surely we are truthful.” 50 And they devised a plot, and We devised a plot, while they were not aware. 51 So behold how their plot fared in the end; truly We destroyed them and their people all together. 52 And those are their houses, lying desolate for their having done wrong. Surely in this is a sign for a people who know. ⁵³ We saved those who believed and were reverent. ⁵⁴ And [We sent] Lot, when he said to his people, “Do you commit indecency, though you see? ⁵⁵ Do you really come with desire unto men instead of women? Nay, but you are an ignorant people!” ⁵⁶ Yet the reply of his people was naught but to say, “Expel the family of Lot from your town! Truly they are people who keep themselves pure!” ⁵⁷ So We saved him and his family, except for his wife. We decreed that she should be among those who lagged behind. ⁵⁸ And We poured down upon them a rain—evil is the rain of those who were warned! ⁵⁹ Say, “Praise be to God, and peace be upon His servants whom He has chosen.” Is God better, or the partners they ascribe? ⁶⁰ He, Who created the heavens and the earth, and sent down water for you from the sky, through which We make grow beautiful gardens, whose trees it is not for you to make grow? Is there a god alongside God? Nay, but they are a people who ascribe equals. ⁶¹ He, Who made the earth a dwelling place, and made rivers to run through it, and made firm mountains for it, and made between the two seas a barrier? Is there a god alongside God? Nay, but most of them know not. ⁶² He, Who answers the one in distress when he calls upon Him and removes the evil, and Who makes you vicegerents of the earth? Is there a god alongside God? Little do you reflect! ⁶³ He, Who guides you in the darkness of land and sea, and sends the winds as glad tidings ahead of His Mercy? Is there a god alongside God? Exalted is God above the partners they ascribe! ⁶⁴ He, Who brings creation into being, then brings it back, and Who provides for you from Heaven and the earth? Is there a god alongside God? Say, “Bring your proof, if you are truthful.” ⁶⁵ Say, “None in the heavens or on the earth know the Unseen, save God. And they are not aware of when they will be resurrected.” ⁶⁶ Nay, but does their knowledge reach to the Hereafter? Nay, but they are in doubt concerning it; indeed, they are blind to it. ⁶⁷ And those who disbelieve say, “What? When we and our fathers are dust, shall we indeed be brought forth? ⁶⁸ Indeed, we were promised this, we and our fathers, before. This is naught but fables of those of old!” ⁶⁹ Say, “Journey upon the earth and behold how the guilty fared in the end!” 70 And grieve not for them, and be not distressed by what they plot. 71 And they say, “When will this promise come to pass, if you are truthful?” 72 Say, “It may be that some of what you seek to hasten is close behind you.” 73 And truly thy Lord is Possessed of Bounty toward mankind, but most of them do not give thanks. 74 And surely thy Lord knows that which their breasts conceal and that which they disclose. 75 And there is nothing hidden in Heaven or on the earth, but that it is in a clear Book. 76 Verily, this Quran recounts unto the Children of Israel most of that wherein they differ, 77 and verily it is a guidance and a mercy for the believers. 78 Verily thy Lord shall judge between them by His Judgment, and He is the Mighty, the Knowing. 79 So trust in God; truly thou standest upon the manifest truth. 80 Surely thou dost not make the dead hear; nor dost thou make the deaf hear the call when they turn their backs; 81 nor canst thou guide the blind away from their error. Thou canst only make hear those who believe in Our signs and are submitters. 82 And when the Word comes upon them, We shall bring forth for them a beast from the earth who will speak to them of how mankind was not certain of Our signs. 83 And on that Day We shall gather from every community a group of those who denied Our signs, and they shall be marshaled [in ordered ranks], 84 till, when they come, He will say, “Did you deny My signs, though you encompassed them not in knowledge? What is it that you used to do?” 85 And the Word will come upon them for their having done wrong, and they shall not speak. 86 Have they not considered that We made the night that they might rest therein, and the day by which to see? Truly in that are signs for a people who believe. 87 And on that Day the trumpet will be blown, and whosoever is in the heavens and on the earth will be terrified, save whom God wills, and all will come to Him in abject humility. 88 And thou seest the mountains that thou dost suppose are solid pass away like clouds—the Work of God, Who perfects all things. Truly He is Aware of whatsoever you do. 89 Whosoever brings a good deed, he will have that which is better than it. And that Day they will be secure from terror. 90 And whosoever brings an evil deed, their faces shall be cast down into the Fire. Are you recompensed for aught save that which you used to do? ﴿91﴾ Truly I am commanded to worship the Lord of this city, Who has made it sacred. And unto Him belong all things. And I am commanded to be among those who submit, ﴿92﴾ and to recite the Quran. So whosoever is rightly guided, he is guided only for his own soul. And [as for] whosoever is astray, say, “Verily, I am but a warner.” ﴿93﴾ And say, “Praise be to God! He will show you His signs, and you will know them.” And thy Lord is not heedless of what you do.

① Ṭā. Sīn. These are the signs of the Quran and a clear Book,

1 For a discussion of the separated letters that appear at the start of some sūrahs, see 2:1c. Some say the Ṭa represents the Divine Name al-Laṭīf (“the Subtle”) and the sīn the Name al-Samīc (“the Hearing”), while others say the ṭā represents purity (ṭahārah) and the sīn the mystery (sirr) of the Beloved (Th). On these two particular letters, also see 26:1c. These are the signs refers to the verses (āyāt, lit. “signs”) of this sūrah, while a clear Book refers to the Preserved Tablet (85:22; R) or the Quran (Q). Cf. 10:1; 12:1; 13:1; 15:1; 26:1; 28:1; 31:2.

2 This pairing of guidance and glad tidings also appears in 2:97 and 16:102.

③ who perform the prayer and give the alms, and of the Hereafter are certain.

3 The pairing of the prayer (Ṣalāh; see 2:3c) and the alms (zakāh) occurs throughout the Quran (2:43, 83, 110, 177, 277; 4:77, 162; 5:12, 55; 7:156; 9:5, 11, 18, 71; 19:31, 55; 21:73; 22:41, 78; 24:37, 56; 31:4; 33:33; 58:13; 73:20; 98:5). Being certain of the Hereafter is a description that also appears in 2:4 and 31:4, and it encompasses belief in the Resurrection, Judgment, the Garden, and the Fire (IK).

4 The description of actions being made to seem fair (zuyyina) to people is found throughout the Quran (e.g., 2:212; 3:14; 6:43; 6:108, 122, 137; 8:48; 9:37; 10:12; 13:33; 15:39; 16:63; 27:24; 29:38; 35:8; 40:37; 41:25; 47:14; 48:12; 49:7). In this verse, God is the agent of making worldly things seem fair (i.e., beautiful or good) to human beings; in other passages it is Satan; and in still others the verb is passive, as in 9:37: The evil of their deeds is made to seem fair unto them. Making what is bad “seem fair” is a common theme connecting fallen human beings to their passions and can mean, in other contexts, to “adorn” (15:16), meaning that one’s actions were, as it were, “adorned” (made to seem good) in the eyes of those who believe not in the Hereafter. To wander confused (cf. 6:110; 7:186; 10:11; 23:75) can mean to vacillate between sin and error and to engage in empty play (Q), a state resulting directly from one’s attachment to the ephemeral objects of the world, which renders one incapable of practicing the spiritual life (Qu).

⑤ It is they who shall have a terrible punishment, and in the Hereafter it is they who are the greatest losers.

5 Some say the terrible punishment can refer to any punishment in this world or the Hereafter (R), but others situate such loss and punishment in this world, seeing the punishment as a reference to the Battle of Badr (see the introduction to Sūrah 8; Z). Some connect greatest losers with the symbolism of buying and selling employed throughout the Quran, for example, when the Quran warns people about purchasing error at the price of guidance (cf. 2:16, 86, 175; Ṭ). Others explain this phrase by saying that some people lose the world and gain the Hereafter, but these people do the opposite and hence are the greatest losers (Q).

⑥ Truly thou dost receive the Quran from the Presence of One who is Wise, Knowing.

6 Some commentators describe this verse as a kind of introduction to the stories of the prophets that follow (Q, R). Sufis meditating upon this verse read it beyond its context as addressed to the Prophet; they say that no one can be considered among those firmly rooted in knowledge (al-rāsikhūn fi'l-‘ilm, mentioned in 3:7) until one recites the Quran “through God” (bi’Llāh) and hears it “from God” (min Allāh)—that is, hears it from the Presence of One who is Wise, Knowing (Aj).

7 In Sufism, this verse symbolizes the levels of certainty envisioned as progressive stages in the spiritual life: (1) having conceptual knowledge of the fire, (2) seeing that fire, and (3) being burned or consumed by it symbolize (1) theoretical knowledge about spiritual matters, (2) direct vision of spiritual realities, and (3) the realization attained when the substance of the soul is transformed by being consumed by the Truth.

Some understand family (ahl) here to refer to Moses’ wife only, which is one possible meaning of ahl (R). Some news refers to information about the road, since they had become lost on their journey (IK, R). (Cf. 28:29; Exodus 3:1–6.)

⑧ Then when he came to it, a call came unto him, “Blessed is the One in the fire, and the one around it. And glory be to God, Lord of the worlds!

8 The One in the fire is understood to refer to God Himself, so that, according to some, this phrase means that it was the fire that was blessed or that the Light of God within the fire was blessed (Ṭ). The one around it refers to the angels or to Moses and the angels together (Ṭ), meaning that Moses and the angels are blessed by God (Th). For some this means that the fire itself is what is blessed, since the Arabic particle man, which is rendered here as the one, but ordinarily means “who” or “one [who],” can also have the more general meaning of mā, or “what,” so that it would mean, “Blessed is that which is in the fire,” meaning the fire itself (Th). In trying to understand this verse in relation to the description of this same incident in 28:30, which speaks of the location as the blessed site, some interpret blessed to mean that it is the place of the fire that is blessed (Z), because it is the place where this great event took place (R). Still others say that blessed implies, “Blessed is the one [seeking after] the fire,” or, “Blessed is the One [whose power and authority is] in the fire” (Th). Such different interpretations of the meaning of blessed arise, because ordinarily this form of the verb (bāraka) takes a direct or indirect object (Q, Th), but in this case there is no object for the verb. Blessed (the passive verb būrīka) is also understood to mean “holy” (muqaddas; IK, Th).

Some note that the phenomenon was described as fire (nār), but was actually light (nūr); Moses deemed it “fire,” but the Arabs are said to have sometimes used the word “fire” (nār) in the place of “light” (nūr; Q, Th). Ibn ʿAbbās said it was not fire, but a flickering light, and in another statement he referred to it as the “Light of the Lord of the worlds” (IK).

It is in the context of this verse that many commentators mention the ḥadīth: “God sleeps not; nor is it proper to Him to sleep. He lowers justice and raises it. He raises to Himself the deeds of the night before the day, and the deeds of the day before the night. His veil is light [or fire]. If it were removed, the glories of His Face would burn up everything whose sight fell upon It.”

9 Because of the different ways in which this verse can be read, Verily, it is I, God could also be understood to mean, “It is the case that truly I am God” (Ṭ). It can also be read as simply denoting the beginning of a new clause, so that it would be rendered, “O Moses! I am God” (R, Z).

It is worth noting that the ambiguity in the Arabic between annahū anāʾllāh and innahū anāʾllāh, which leads to the aforementioned interpretations, is not the same type of ambiguity that fuels debates surrounding the Hebrew ehyeh asher ehyeh, which God says to Moses as recounted in Exodus 3:14 and which is rendered in numerous ways, such as “I am that I am,” “I am Who I am,” “I am He who is,” or “I will be what I will be.” The Islamic understanding of what God said during this event, namely, that He identified Himself by His Name, overlaps with those currents of Jewish and Christian understanding of ehyeh asher ehyeh that hold that this phrase is or contains a Name of God.

⑩ And, “Cast thy staff!” Then when he saw it quivering like a serpent, he turned in retreat without returning. “O Moses! Fear not! Verily the messengers fear not in My Presence,

10–11 And at the start of v. 10 could also be understood as connecting v. 10 to the statement in v. 9, so that the translation would be, “I am God, the Mighty, the Wise; so cast thy staff.” Without returning is also interpreted to mean without looking to one side or the other (Q, Ṭ), implying so little hesitation that he did not even venture a sideways glance.

In this passage, save one who did wrong is considered an oblique reference to Moses himself, who struck and killed an Egyptian who was fighting with an Israelite (see 28:15–21; cf. Exodus 2:11–14) and perhaps feared God’s Presence on this account (Ṭ). To replace evil with good means to repent for one’s sins (Ṭ). The particle illā, which ordinarily means “except” or “save,” can also have other meanings. Here some commentators understand it so that the sentence would read, “Verily the messengers fear not in My Presence, and neither does one who did wrong and replaced evil with good” (Ṭ). It is likely that those who search for alternate meanings for illā do so out of a reluctance to attribute sin to prophets and messengers, because their infallibility and protection from sin is an important doctrine among the vast majority of Muslim theologians. As al-Qurṭubī points out, however, many accept that prophets could have committed “errors” (dhanb) before their investiture with prophethood; moreover, it is a sign of sincerity that one fears that one’s repentance is not complete. A saying attributed al-Ḥasan al-Baṣrī says, “Prophets sin and are chastised” (Q, Ṭ).

⑫ And insert thy hand in thy bosom; it will come forth white, without blemish—among nine signs to Pharaoh and his people. Truly they have been an iniquitous people.”

12 The miracle of the white hand (cf. 20:22; 26:33; 28:32) is demonstrated to Moses here, before being made to appear again later in the presence of Pharaoh (26:33). On the nine signs, see 17:101c, which speaks of the nine clear signs given to Moses. As a spiritual symbol, the white hand can mean that one should place one’s spiritual meditation into one’s heart, and one’s thoughts will then emerge white and gleaming, which will lead to greater understanding and vision and a fuller realization of the virtues necessary to journey to God (Aj).

14 They rejected them—though their souls were convinced of them—wrongfully and exultantly. So behold how the workers of corruption fared in the end!

13–14 It was the arrogance of Pharaoh and his people that prevented them from accepting what they knew to be true in their hearts (Ṭ). The final phrase of v. 14 is a frequent refrain that appears in the Quran in the context of previous peoples whose ultimate disappearance or destruction serves as a lesson to later peoples; see 30:9c.

15 And indeed We gave unto David and Solomon knowledge. And they said, “Praise be to God, Who has favored us above many of His believing servants.”

15 This knowledge is considered by some to be the wisdom and understanding proper to prophethood (Q); for others it refers to the special favors mentioned in vv. 16–17 (Ṭ) or the forms of knowledge mentioned in 21:80: And We taught him how to make garments for you to protect you against your own might. Some note that this verse shows the eminence of knowledge among the gifts that God bestows, as mentioned in 58:11: God will raise in degrees those among you who believe and those who have been given knowledge (Q). David and Solomon’s gratitude for their God-given knowledge surpasses their gratitude for their kingdom, and the knowledge that they possess is beyond that of ordinary believers and necessarily includes, given that they were prophets, an awareness and remembrance of God at all moments (R).

16 Solomon inherited from David and said, “O mankind, we have been taught the language of the birds, and we have been given of all things. Truly this is clear bounty!”

16 Knowledge of the language of the birds was something Solomon inherited from David (R); it is mentioned in 21:79: We compelled the mountains and the birds to glorify along with David; and 34:10: And indeed We gave David bounty from Us:

“O mountains! Echo God’s praises with him, likewise you birds!” See also 38:19, which states regarding David: And the birds gathered, each turning oft unto Him. The phrase given of all things does not mean literally everything, but “much” or “abundantly” (R). The idea of the “language of the birds” became an important idea in Sufi thought, often symbolizing higher states of consciousness that enable one to understand the deeper significance of things beyond their outward appearances. Some Sufis have interpreted this phrase to mean not only knowledge of an esoteric character in general, but more specifically knowledge of the inner meaning of other religions. One of the most famous works of Sufism is the Manṭiq al-ṭayr of °Aṭṭār, which is usually rendered “Conference of the Birds,” but which has the identical Arabic terms as the phrase in this verse.

17 And gathered for Solomon were his hosts of jinn and men and birds, and they were marshaled [in ordered ranks], 17 Marshaled translates yūza‘ūn, which some interpret as meaning “corralled” or “kept in check,” as in keeping the lines together and being tightly grouped (Q, Ṭ). For others marshaled means that they moved forward or else that they were defenders against attacks (Ṭ). For some Solomon’s hosts were particular to his time and the birds serving him were unlike those of other times, though even normal birds (like all creatures) possess a measure of intelligence and inspiration proper to their state of being (R). The inclusion of jinn as part of Solomon’s host indicates not only that it was of a miraculous and wondrous nature, but also that Solomon had the stature and power to control and make use of the jinn, beings ordinarily considered uncontrollable by human beings and most often mischievous.

18 till when they came to the valley of the ants, an ant said, “O ants! Enter your dwellings, lest Solomon and his hosts crush you, while they are unaware.”

19 And he smiled, laughing at her words, and said, “My Lord! Inspire me to give thanks for Thy blessing wherewith Thou hast blessed me and my parents and to work righteousness pleasing to Thee, and cause me to enter, through Thy Mercy, among Thy righteous servants!”

18–19 Some commentators say that the ants were winged, thus making them ṭayr, or “birds,” whose language Solomon understood (Q, Ṭh). Also, a number of commentators actually give a name for the ant, though others say it is inconceivable that one could possibly know such a detail (Q). The ant says while they are unaware, assuming that if a prophet like Solomon knew, he would not crush them (R). Solomon laughed and smiled, because he marveled at the ant’s anxiety and care and felt grateful to God for the privilege of being able to understand the ant’s concerns (Bḍ). Some commentators mention the ḥadīth: “An ant bit a prophet, and he ordered the anthill burned. God revealed unto him, ‘Did you, because a single ant bit you, destroy a community (ummah) from among the communities that hymn praises [of Me]? Why not a single ant?’” (IK, Q).

Inspire me renders awza^cnī, which some understand to mean “make me” (Ṭ); it is in fact the same word rendered marshaled in v. 17; the difference in meaning is based on context. Solomon mentioned his parents, because he considered the invocation of blessings upon them to be tantamount to blessings upon himself (R). To work righteousness pertains to the life of this world, while being included among Thy righteous servants pertains to being in their company in the Hereafter (R).

20 And he surveyed the birds and said, “How is it that I do not see the hoopoe? Or is he among those who are absent?”

20 The hoopoe (hudhud) is a medium-sized bird with a long thin bill, notable for a distinctive crest on its head. In the commentary, the hoopoe is described as knowing where the nearest water was, and when Solomon asked about the water, he discovered the hoopoe was absent (Ṭ); others say that he learned of the hoopoe’s absence, because it was the bird’s function to shield Solomon from the sun (R). Some note that Solomon’s reaction shows one of the qualities of a great leader—he was aware of the condition of those he led, down to that of a single bird (Q). As a spiritual allegory and symbol, this passage is interpreted to be a drama between the spiritual heart, or the spirit within one, and the ego. The hoopoe symbolizes an aspect or faculty of the soul, while Solomon is the spiritual heart that must control the soul and take it to task when it disobeys. The soul can become lost in heedlessness of God; yet its faculties are able to bring to the soul knowledge and wisdom previously undiscovered (Aj).

21 I will surely punish him with a severe punishment, or I shall slaughter him, unless he brings me a clear warrant.”

21 Warrant renders sulṭān, in this case meaning some clear evidence or excuse for why the hoopoe was absent (Ṭ).

22 But he tarried not long, and said, “I have comprehended that which thou hast not comprehended, and I bring you a sure report from Sheba.

23 Verily, I found a woman ruling over them, and she has been given of all things, and hers is a mighty throne!

22–23 For Sheba, see commentary on 34:15–19 (in the sūrah of the same name). The Queen of Sheba is known in the Islamic tradition as Bilqīs (or Bilqays) daughter of Sharāḥīl. Mighty throne here is understood to refer not only to her power, but also to the actual physical dimensions and richness of the throne (Q, Ṭ, Th). All things is understood to mean “everything she needs for her kingdom” (Q). The same phrase also appears in v. 16 in connection with Solomon’s kingdom.

24 I found her and her people prostrating to the sun, apart from God, and Satan has made their actions seem fair unto them, and turned them from the way, such that they are not rightly guided.

24 On Satan’s making things seem fair, see 27:4c.

25 Will they not prostrate unto God, Who brings forth what is hidden in the heavens and on the earth, and Who knows what you hide and what you disclose?

25 This verse could also be read as a continuation of and turned them from the way from the previous verse, so that the two verses together would mean, “And turned them from the way, so that they were not rightly guided and so that they did not prostrate.” In this case the first word of v. 25 would be read alā rather than allā, but both are accepted readings (Q, Ṭ). By what is hidden some understand rain (ghayth), the fruits of the earth, all things in the heavens and the earth that are known only to God (Ṭ), or mysteries generally (Q).

②⑥ God, there is no god but He, Lord of the mighty Throne!”

26 Al-Qurṭubī notes that the Queen of Sheba’s throne is called mighty (v. 23) in relation to the other thrones of the sovereigns of the earth, whereas God’s Throne is Mighty because it (or its Pedestal) encompasses the heavens and the earth. This is one of fifteen verses after which it is said that one must prostrate when reciting the Quran; see 19:58c.

②⑦ He said, “We shall see if you have spoken the truth or if you are among the liars.

②⑧ Go with this letter of mine and deliver it unto them. Then turn away from them and observe what they send back.”

27–28 In these verses Solomon is speaking to the hoopoe (Ṭ), since the hoopoe had made such a categorical claim in v. 22 regarding what he knew and what Solomon did not know (Q), but it also shows that a leader should accept the legitimate excuses of his followers (Q). Al-Qurṭubī quotes a ḥadīth that states, “None love excuses more than God. That is why He revealed the Books and sent the messengers.”

②⑨ She said, “O notables! Truly a noble letter has been delivered unto me.

③⑩ Verily, it is from Solomon and verily it is, ‘In the Name of God, the Compassionate, the Merciful.

29–30 The Queen of Sheba called the letter noble either because of its seal, because it was sent by Solomon, or because the contents were noble and good (Q, Ṭ). V. 30 is the only verse in the Quran that repeats the entire basmalah (the formula with which all *sūrah*s but one begin) in the middle of a sūrah.

31 Do not exalt yourselves against me, but come unto me in submission.’”

31 Come . . . in submission means in a state of submission and obedience to God and with faith in His Oneness (Ṭ), though some read it to mean the queen and her notables should approach Solomon in a state of obedience (R) rather than arrogantly or as tyrants, as alluded to in Do not exalt yourselves against me (IK).

32 She said, “O notables! Give me your opinion in this matter of mine. I am not one to decide on any matter unless you are present.”

33 They said, “We are possessed of strength and possessed of great might. But the command is thine; so consider what thou wouldst command.”

32–33 The words of the queen’s notables pertain to their worldly power and military strength, the implication being that they were capable of supporting her with their strength in battle (Ṭ). Al-Rāzī considers their response a good one, as it is balanced between deference to the queen and a display of strength. Others note that she likely knew more than they did in any case, and hence her question was more diplomatic than practical (IK). In his commentary on this incident in his Fuṣūṣ al-ḥikam, Ibn ‘Arabī notes that the queen’s handling of the letter from Solomon demonstrated her superiority and worthiness to rule. Such attributes along with her willingness to embrace true faith when challenged (unlike other figures such as Pharaoh) can also be interpreted as constituting a Quranic model for beneficent and wise female leadership and governance.

34 She said, “Verily, kings, when they enter a town, corrupt it, and make the most honorable of its people the most abased. They will do likewise.

34 The queen uttered this sentence in response to the suggestion by her council of notables that they were strong enough to resist the power of Solomon, meaning that if Solomon were to enter their land, destruction would ensue (Q). Although the plain sense of the queen’s comment is that it is about the way kings or queens overturn the order and harmony of conquered lands, some Sufis read this verse as a spiritual allegory. In his famous Kitab al-ḥikam (“Aphorisms”), Ibn ‘Aṭā’illāh al-Iskandarī sees the kings as symbolic of inspirations that assail the heart from the spiritual world, which, when they are real and true, will enter the town of the heart, topple the dominance of its worldly desires and make them most abased, and replace them with spiritual aspirations that are no longer subordinate to the appetites of the soul (Aj).

35 I will send a gift to them, and observe what the envoys bring back.”

35 The commentators give details to the story, describing—sometimes at length—what the gifts were (IK, Ṭ), though it is not completely clear where such information would have come from; commentators such as al-Rāzī dismiss such details as irrelevant to the story.

36 But when it came to Solomon, he said, “Do you offer me wealth? What God has given me is better than what He has given you. Nay, but it is you who exult in your gift!”

36 The Queen of Sheba’s worldly possessions were no match for those of Solomon (Ṭ), who in any case was a prophet and therefore not motivated by the acquisition of worldly possessions for their own sake (Q). Exult in your gift means that the gift was a means of celebrating their own wealth and power rather than a manifestation of generosity or goodness (Ṭ).

37 “Return unto them, for we shall come upon them with hosts they cannot withstand, and we shall expel them hence, abased, and they shall be humbled.”

37 These words were spoken by Solomon to the envoy from Sheba (Ṭ).

38 He said, “O notables! Which of you will bring me her throne before they come unto me in submission?”

38 The majority hold that these words were said after Solomon received the gifts from Sheba (Q). For others, these words were spoken when the hoopoe first came with news of the Queen of Sheba and her throne and follow upon Solomon’s statement in v. 27: We shall see if you have spoken the truth.

In submission (muslimīn) here is interpreted by some to mean in obedience to Solomon (Q), but by others to mean “as Muslims,” that is, as adherents to the religion of the One God (Ṭ). It is thought that Solomon asked for her throne in order to send her a message of reproof or so that he could later show it to her as a proof of his prophethood (Ṭ).

39 An ‘ifrīt among the jinn said, “I will bring it to thee before thou risest from thy place. Truly I have the strength for it, [and] am trustworthy.”

39 An ‘ifrīt is a kind of jinn (see 2:30c; 6:71–72c; and the introduction to Sūrah 72) that is either a giant (Ṭ), in one account described as big as a mountain (IK), or a mischievously clever jinn (Q, Ṭ). Others say that an ‘ifrīt is a man who is foul and bold (R). Al-Qurṭubī mentions a ḥadīth according to which the Prophet overpowers an ‘ifrīt that had come to disrupt his prayer. This ḥadīth supports the idea that an ‘ifrīt is a kind of mischievous jinn.

40 The one who had knowledge of the Book said, “I will bring it to thee in the blink of an eye.” Then when he saw it set before him, he said,

“This is of the Bounty of my Lord, to try me whether I will give thanks or be ungrateful. And whosoever give thanks, he gives thanks only for his own soul; and whosoever is ungrateful, truly my Lord is Self-Sufficient, Generous.”

40 The one who had knowledge was a man (Ṭ), whose name is usually given as Āṣif ibn Barkhiyā, who knew a secret Name of God that, when invoked, caused one’s supplication to be answered (Q, Ṭ). It is reported that Ibn Mas‘ūd said that the man was Khiḍr, the name traditionally attributed to the mysterious undying servant of God who became Moses’ teacher in 18:65–82. Some even say that the speaker of these words was Solomon himself and that they were said to the ‘ifrīt (R). Al-Rāzī prefers this last interpretation, since it seems to fit better with the context: as a prophet, Solomon would have been most knowledgeable about the Book, and he expressed gratitude to God for seeing the throne appear before him, implying that Solomon did it himself. By Book is understood the Preserved Tablet (85:22), the books of the prophets, or a book particular to Solomon (R), though what this book could be is not specified.

Blink of an eye renders a phrase that means “immediately,” but literally means something like, “Before your glance returns to you.” For some this phrase means that the man would bring the throne in less time than it would take for a man who was within range of Solomon’s vision to reach him (Ṭ). For others it means that in the time it takes for Solomon to look as far as his sight would reach, the throne would appear before him (Ṭ). For still others, the throne sprang from the ground (Ṭ).

Whether I will give thanks or be ungrateful is interpreted by many to mean that Solomon understood that such amazing blessings as the power to bring a throne from afar contained within them a test of his sincerity (Ṭ). To mention here that God is Self-Sufficient serves to emphasize that He has no need of gratitude from human beings and is neither helped by its presence nor harmed by its absence (Ṭ).

41 He said, “Disguise her throne for her. We shall see if she is rightly guided or if she is among those who are not rightly guided.”

41 Disguise means change the throne (Ṭ), that is, add some things and remove some things (Ṭ) or turn it upside down (Q). We shall see implies waiting to see if the queen recognizes it (Ṭ), as it was meant to be a test for her (IK).

④⁴² Then when she came, it was said, “Is your throne like this?” She said, “It seems the same.” [Solomon said], “And we were given knowledge before her and we were submitters, ⁴² It seems the same indicates that she was in doubt (Ṭ). Some say the question was a test of her intelligence; if she said yes or no, she would have been incorrect, because the throne was neither entirely the same nor entirely different, but she correctly evaluated it by saying that it “seemed” like her very throne (Q).

④⁴³ while that which she worshipped apart from God barred her; verily she was from a disbelieving people.”

④⁴⁴ It was said unto her, “Enter the pavilion.” But when she saw it, she supposed it to be an expanse of water and bared her legs. He said, “Verily it is a pavilion paved with crystal.” She said, “My Lord! Surely I have wronged myself, and I submit with Solomon to God, Lord of the worlds.”

⁴⁴ The pavilion is also interpreted to be a palace or fortress. Some commentators note that part of the illusion was that there were actually fish swimming beneath the crystal (Q, R, Ṭ). Part of the folklore attached to this story is that Solomon's jinn told him that the mother of Bilqīs was a jinn with the legs of an ass, and this ruse was prepared to trick her into exposing her legs; after the incident, other legends say that Solomon fell in love with Bilqīs and married her (Q, R, Ṭ). Ibn Kathīr, echoing al-Rāzī's sentiment regarding v. 35, sees little value in this folkloric material, which originated in Arab legends and the oral traditions of various converts to Islam from Judaism and Christianity.

Ibn ʿArabī notes in the chapter on Solomon in his Fuṣūṣ that the submission of Bilqīs was superior to that of Pharaoh, because she submitted to the Lord of the worlds without qualification, whereas he submitted (though too late according to many theologians) to the Lord of Moses and Aaron (7:122; 26:48); that is, Bilqīs understood what God was in Himself, whereas Pharaoh's understanding was limited to the Power of God as manifested through some of His prophets.

Ibn ʿAjībah interprets the encounter between Solomon and Bilqīs on a spiritual level and states that it is a highly complex allegory of the relationship between a spiritual master and a disciple and of the spiritual love between Solomon and the Queen of Sheba. Among other elements, Ibn ʿAjībah notes that in the spiritual life one relinquishes one's throne, which symbolizes the soul, and it is transfigured by the spiritual master into something new, but not completely different. Commentaries on Ibn ʿArabī's Fuṣūṣ mention that Bilqīs was taught here a lesson about appearances, about seeing what she believed should not have been there (her throne) and about not seeing what was in reality there (glass, not water), which is a kind of allegory for the challenge of overcoming appearances to reach the true nature of things, a goal of the spiritual life.

45 And indeed We sent to Thamūd their brother Ṣāliḥ, [saying], "Worship God!" And behold, they were two groups, quarreling.

45 For a description of the Thamūd, see 7:73c; 11:61c. Other narrative accounts of Ṣāliḥ are found in 7:73–79; 11:61–68; 26:141–58; 54:23–31. The two groups were those who believed in Ṣāliḥ and those who denied him (Ṭ).

46 He said, "O my people! Why do you seek to hasten evil before good? Why do you not seek Forgiveness of God, that haply you may be shown mercy?"

46 The evil is the Punishment of God, and the good is His Mercy (Ṭ). Seek to hasten evil before good may also refer to the fact that the Thamūd's actions were evil and deserved punishment, and that they committed such actions rather than performing good actions, which merit reward (Q). Cf. 13:6: And they would have thee hasten evil before good, though examples have passed before them.

47 They said, “We augur ill of you and of those with you.” He said, “Your auguring ill is with God. Rather, you are a people being tried.”

47 Other verses in which people augur ill of or call their prophets an ill omen are 7:131 and 36:18. Your auguring ill is with God means that those things they predict happening as a result of ill omens are with God (Q), that is, known only to God (Ṭ). Any good or evil that they believed would happen to them comes not from any auguring, but originates from God (R). They were being tried precisely by the sending of Ṣāliḥ to them (Ṭ). The language of ill omen here is based on the ancient practice of using birds for divination: a bird would be released or chased, and if it went right, it was a good omen, and if went left, a bad one.

48 And in the city there were nine persons working corruption in the land and not setting matters aright.

48 Working corruption (afsada) and setting matters aright (aṣḥaḥa) are generally contrasted with one another in the Quran (e.g., 7:142; 26:152). These nine people are singled out because they were those who worked together to hamstring the she-camel and conspired to assassinate Ṣāliḥ (Ṭ). They were among the notables of the city, and their evils included, according to some, corrupt lending practices and a habit of dishonoring and humiliating people (Q).

49 They said, “Swear by God to each other that we shall attack him and his family by night. Then we shall surely say to his heir that we were not present at the destruction of his family and that surely we are truthful.”

49 The people swore by God to each other that they would kill Ṣāliḥ and provide alibis for one another to his heir (Ṭ), meaning that they wanted to have an excuse to give to the person upon whom exacting retribution would fall (Q); on the concept of retribution, see 2:178c. According to some, this plot took place three days after they had hamstringed the she-camel (7:77; 11:65; 26:157; 54:29; 91:14) and Ṣāliḥ had informed them of their impending doom; various versions of how their plot was foiled and they came to their death are given in various commentaries, but none are definitive (Q).

50 And they devised a plot, and We devised a plot, while they were not aware.

50 In related passages, God is described as best of plotters (3:54; 8:30), and elsewhere it is said that unto God belongs plotting altogether (13:42; cf. 14:46). Almost synonymous with this language is that of God using “schemes” against the disbelievers, and that His scheming is superior to theirs is alluded to in other verses (see 7:99; 52:42; 86:15–17; cf. 10:21).

51 So behold how their plot fared in the end; truly We destroyed them and their people all together.

51 Asking how people fared in the end is a common refrain in the Quran, an invitation to meditate upon the ultimate downfall of previous peoples who were wicked (cf. 12:109; 30:9, 42; 35:44; 40:21, 82; 47:10).

52 And those are their houses, lying desolate for their having done wrong. Surely in this is a sign for a people who know.

52 The wrong they did was their idolatry and denial of their prophet (Ṭ). One interpretation of houses, lying desolate, beyond the outward sense of their now empty dwellings, is that their hearts were hardened through their disobedience (Su).

53 We saved those who believed and were reverent.

53 Some commentators say that those who were saved with Ṣāliḥ settled in Ramallah in Palestine (Ṭ), while others say that the saved, numbering some four thousand, went to Ḥaḍramawt, where Ṣāliḥ died. It is said that the place is called Ḥaḍramawt because it is where he died, since the word can mean “death has come” (Q), but this is one of several legendary etymologies for this place-name.

54 And [We sent] Lot, when he said to his people, “Do you commit indecency, though you see?”

55 Do you really come with desire unto men instead of women? Nay, but you are an ignorant people!”

54–55 On the story of Lot in the Quran, see commentary on 11:77–83. As discussed in 26:165–66c, the indecency is understood to refer to anal intercourse, especially by men with men, but also according to some with women (Ṭ). Al-Rāzī points out that part of their sin was that they were open about their illicit activity and did not seek to keep it from view, and it went against the Wisdom of God, who did not create men sexually for men. Though you see means that they knew their deeds were indecent (R).

56 Yet the reply of his people was naught but to say, “Expel the family of Lot from your town! Truly they are people who keep themselves pure!”

56 Keep themselves pure renders the verb taṭahhara (cf. 7:82), which in other contexts is a term of praise for those who believe (2:222; 9:108), but here is used by Lot’s people pejoratively. It means, “They are trying to keep themselves pure [from our sexual practices]” (R, Ṭ).

57 So We saved him and his family, except for his wife. We decreed that she should be among those who lagged behind.

57 Lot's wife is also mentioned in 7:83; 15:60; 26:171; 29:33; 37:135.

58 And We poured down upon them a rain—evil is the rain of those who were warned!

58 On this evil rain, also see 25:40.

59 Say, “Praise be to God, and peace be upon His servants whom He has chosen.” Is God better, or the partners they ascribe?

60 He, Who created the heavens and the earth, and sent down water for you from the sky, through which We make grow beautiful gardens, whose trees it is not for you to make grow? Is there a god alongside God? Nay, but they are a people who ascribe equals.

59–64 This is a section devoted to descriptions of God in the form of rhetorical questions, ending with the refrain Is there a god alongside God? The questions beginning He, Who are structured to seem as though they will end with a comparison between God and something else, but instead they arrive at the question, Is there a god alongside God? By implication they are asking in so many different ways the question posed in v. 59: Is God better, or the partners they ascribe? The questions beginning with He, Who, whose grammar suggests a comparison that is not actually made explicit (cf. 13:33), imply that God's Power and Beneficence are so great that one should not even offer an explicit comparison with Him.

60 Ascribe equals renders ya^cdilūn, which can also mean “swerve or turn away,” since this particular verb changes meaning depending on the preposition that follows it, and both meanings are accepted by commentators. In this case there is no preposition to indicate which shade of meaning is being emphasized. Gardens renders ḥadā'iq (sing. ḥadīqah), which are walled gardens (Ṭ) or gardens of palm trees (Q). Beautiful renders bahjah, understood to connote here edible flowers or simply anything from which human beings and animals eat (Ṭ). It is not for you to make grow refers to the fact that if God were not to provide water, these trees would not flourish (Ṭ). Al-Rāzī notes that this verse disabuses people of the idea that a human being makes a tree grow, when all aspects of its being and survival originate with God. See also 56:63–64: Have you considered what you reap? Is it you who sow it or are We the sowers?

⑥1 He, Who made the earth a dwelling place, and made rivers to run through it, and made firm mountains for it, and made between the two seas a barrier? Is there a god alongside God? Nay, but most of them know not.

61 The two seas are also mentioned in 25:53; 35:12; 55:19. Some note that within the soul there are two seas, the sea of faith and wisdom and the sea of rebellion and passion, and God by His Grace placed a barrier between them, a barrier (ḥājiz, also spoken of in 25:53 and 55:19, though in those two verses the term used for the barrier is barzakh) that is maintained as long as the soul is not insolent and rebellious toward God (R). He Who . . . made rivers to run through it is similar to 18:33: We made a stream gush forth in their midst. On the concept of firm mountains (rawāsī), see 21:30–31c.

⑥2 He, Who answers the one in distress when he calls upon Him and removes the evil, and Who makes you vicegerents of the earth? Is there a god alongside God? Little do you reflect!

62 Evil here means harm (Ṭ). One in distress refers to one who is helpless and powerless (Q), in the sense of being in a bad situation through no choice of one's own, perhaps afflicted by poverty or sickness (R). Al-Qurṭubī quotes a ḥadīth connecting the one in distress to those who are wronged or oppressed: “Be mindful of the supplication of the oppressed, for there is no veil between it and God.” For some Sufis one in distress refers to those who have cut themselves off from attachment to everything but God and see no answer to their distress except for God. Others say that this phrase refers to those who raise their hands in prayer to God, but who have not a single good deed to present to Him. Such people have only their past sins to show God and cannot approach God with an attitude of merit; yet their prayers are answered by God's pure Generosity, meaning that those who come with awareness of their complete helplessness before God will find their prayers answered no matter what their actions might have been and will have the heart's evils removed (Aj). On the meaning of vicegerents, see 6:165c.

63 He, Who guides you in the darkness of land and sea, and sends the winds as glad tidings ahead of His Mercy? Is there a god alongside God? Exalted is God above the partners they ascribe!

63 The darkness of the sea and land (cf. 6:63, 97) can be taken both in the literal sense of physical danger and as a symbol of the spiritual journey. Here it also suggests a wilderness without guideposts or signs to show the way (Q). Regarding winds as glad tidings ahead of His Mercy, referring to the gathering of a rainstorm before the water starts to fall, see 7:57c; 25:48c. Winds as signs of God and blessings are also mentioned in 2:164; 7:57; 15:22; 30:46; 45:5.

64 He, Who brings creation into being, then brings it back, and Who provides for you from Heaven and the earth? Is there a god alongside God? Say, "Bring your proof, if you are truthful."

64 Brings creation into being, then brings it back (cf. 10:4; 30:11, 27) is understood to encompass all of the other blessings that God provides from Heaven and earth (R). The message of the prophets is not only that God begins everything, which even many idolaters accepted (see 39:3c; 46:28c), but also that all things will return to Him; the Origin indicates and points to the Return (R), evoking 57:3: He is the First, and the Last, and the Outward, and the Inward. For some, the provisions from Heaven and the earth refer to the spiritual and material blessings, respectively, that God bestows (Aj).

65 Say, "None in the heavens or on the earth know the Unseen, save God. And they are not aware of when they will be resurrected."

65 In the Quran Unseen (ghayb) refers to what is invisible in the sense of belonging to another order of reality, not something that is too distant or hidden to see physically, but it can also refer to events that are unknowable because they are in the remote past or have yet to occur, such as when they will be resurrected; on ghayb, also see 6:59c; 9:94c. God is described several times as Knower of the Unseen and the seen (shahādah), which could also be translated “Knower of what is absent and what is present” (6:73; 9:94, 105; 13:9; 23:92; 32:6; 39:46; 59:22; 62:8; 64:18; see also 59:22c). Some say this verse was revealed when the idolaters asked the Prophet to tell them when the Day of Resurrection would come (Q).

66 Nay, but does their knowledge reach to the Hereafter? Nay, but they are in doubt concerning it; indeed, they are blind to it.

66 Nay, but does their knowledge reach renders bal iddāraka, which has several different readings (R) depending on how the consonants are vocalized. The translation reflects a reading of the verb as an interrogative, an alternate translation of which would be, “Or, does their knowledge reach to the Hereafter?” as a form of reproach. Another reading makes it a declarative statement, “Their knowledge reaches the Hereafter,” in the sense that they will come to possess knowledge in the Hereafter after it is too late for such knowledge to do them any good (Ṭ). If iddāraka is read as a contraction of the verb tadāraka (such contractions occur in Arabic when letters whose pronunciation is close are blended together), it would mean something like, “Their knowledge is completed in the Hereafter” (Q, R).

67 And those who disbelieve say, “What? When we and our fathers are dust, shall we indeed be brought forth?”

67 This rhetorical question frequently comes from the opponents of prophets (e.g., 13:5; 17:49; 23:35, 82; 37:16; 56:47) and implies rejection of the notion of bodily resurrection in the Hereafter. Brought forth can mean something like “taken out,” that is, taken out of the grave. Al-Rāzī notes that doubt in the reality of the Hereafter stems from doubt about the Power of God, which is in a sense a failure of ordinary human imagination, which the Quran also mentions in 36:81: Is not He Who created the heavens and the earth able to create the like thereof? Yea, indeed,

He is the knowing Creator. Some Sufis say that as one's knowledge of God increases, one's apprehension of certain unseen and mysterious realities increases as well (Aj), which is a way of saying that to the degree that one is truly detached from the world, one begins to see beyond it.

68 Indeed, we were promised this, we and our fathers, before. This is naught but fables of those of old!”

68 The often repeated idea in the Quran of the dismissal of prophetic messages as fables of those of old (cf. 6:25; 8:31; 23:83; 25:5; 46:17; 68:15) is comparable to calling them legends or old wives' tales; see 25:4–5c.

69 Say, “Journey upon the earth and behold how the guilty fared in the end!”

69 On the Quran's retort and challenge (e.g., 12:109; 30:9, 42; 35:44; 40:21, 82; 47:10) to travel the earth to see the vestiges of the peoples who denied their prophets (Ṭ) in ruin, see 7:84c; 30:9c. By behold some understand observe with one's heart and one's insight (Q).

70 And grieve not for them, and be not distressed by what they plot.

70 The Quran offers consolation to the Prophet elsewhere (5:68; 15:97; 16:127; 18:6; 26:3; 35:8), instructing him, among other things, not to be saddened by the failure of his people to embrace his mission, but to entrust their souls to God. Distressed renders ḍayyiq, which has the sense of contraction or constriction.

71 And they say, “When will this promise come to pass, if you are truthful?”

71 The promise refers to the end of the world, the coming of the Hereafter, and God's Judgment of human beings (cf. 10:48; 21:38; 34:29; 36:48; 67:25). See 36:48c.

72 Say, "It may be that some of what you seek to hasten is close behind you."

72 Is close behind means "has come near" (Ṭ), but also has the sense of following in someone's footsteps (Q). Some interpret what is closing in upon them to be their defeat at the Battle of Badr (R), which occurred within a few years of the revelation of this sūrah; it is quite common among commentators for such warnings of impending punishment to be interpreted as references to the Battle of Badr.

73 And truly thy Lord is Possessed of Bounty toward mankind, but most of them do not give thanks.

73 God is also described as Possessed of Bounty (dhū faḍl) in 2:243, 251; 40:61. That most human beings are not sufficiently grateful to God is mentioned in 2:243; 7:10, 17; 10:60; 12:38; 23:78; 32:9; 40:61; 67:23.

74 And surely thy Lord knows that which their breasts conceal and that which they disclose.

74 Cf. 28:69. The concealing of thoughts and intentions within breasts (ṣudūr) is an important idea in the Quran and is frequently discussed in the context of God's Knowledge of what lies within breasts (e.g., 3:119; 5:7; 8:43; 11:5; 29:10; 31:23; 39:7; 40:19; 42:24; 57:6; 64:4; 67:13; 100:10).

75 And there is nothing hidden in Heaven or on the earth, but that it is in a clear Book.

75 Hidden renders ghā'ibah, related to ghayb (“Unseen”). The clear Book refers to the Mother of the Book (Ṭ), mentioned in 3:7 and 43:4.

76 Verily, this Quran recounts unto the Children of Israel most of that wherein they differ, 76 That wherein they differ is what the Israelites themselves disagree about (R, Ṭ), to the point of disparaging and cursing one another about it, regarding such matters as what they and the Christians “distorted” (taḥrīf; see 2:75c) in the Torah and the Gospel (R) and the obligations of the Divine Law (Q); on this latter question, see 3:50–51c. This verse is also interpreted in a more general way to mean that the Quran provides universal answers regarding the Nature of God.

77 and verily it is a guidance and a mercy for the believers.

77 The coupling of a guidance and a mercy for the Quran or the Torah also appears in 6:154, 157; 7:203; 10:57; 16:64, 89.

78 Verily thy Lord shall judge between them by His Judgment, and He is the Mighty, the Knowing.

78 Thy Lord shall judge between them; that is, God will judge in the Hereafter about who is right (Q, Ṭ), and it is not the duty of the Prophet to carry out this judgment (R). This verse is also related to the idea that God will, in the Hereafter, inform you of that wherein you differed, referring to God’s Judgment or disclosure of the truth in matters of religious disagreement on the Day of Judgment, mentioned in 2:113; 5:48; 6:164; 10:93; 16:39; 16:124; 22:69; 32:25; 39:3, 46.

79 So trust in God; truly thou standest upon the manifest truth.

79 Regarding the virtue of trust in God (tawakkul), see 3:122, 160; 5:11; 9:51; 12:67; 14:11–12; 39:38; 58:10; 64:13. Thou standest upon could also be rendered, “Thou followest” or “Thou art based upon.” Manifest truth could also be rendered “clear truth.”

80 Surely thou dost not make the dead hear; nor dost thou make the deaf hear the call when they turn their backs;

81 nor canst thou guide the blind away from their error. Thou canst only make hear those who believe in Our signs and are submitters.

80–81 Those whose heart God has sealed cannot be made to understand the truth, and those God has made deaf cannot then be made to hear (Ṭ). These verses echo similar imagery used throughout the Quran for those who are spiritually blind and deaf (e.g., 2:17–18; 5:71; 6:25; 6:39; 10:42–43), such as 22:46: Have they not journeyed upon the earth, that they might have hearts by which to understand or ears by which to hear? Truly it is not the eyes that go blind, but it is hearts within breasts that go blind; also see 2:7c. Al-Rāzī interprets these verses as helping the Prophet’s heart to actualize trust in God and to become stronger thereby, arguing that when one hopes to get something from others, it weakens one’s ability to manifest opposition to them; by absolving the Prophet of any responsibility or power over whether his people believe or disbelieve, God strengthens the Prophet’s ability to declare and teach the truth.

82 And when the Word comes upon them, We shall bring forth for them a beast from the earth who will speak to them of how mankind was not certain of Our signs.

82 Some connect the Word comes upon them with similar language about the Word “coming due” (e.g., 10:96; 28:63; 36:7, 70; 39:71; 40:6), which connotes the coming of Divine Judgment (Ṭ); see 10:33c; 36:7c. For others the Word signifies that it is necessary for God’s Wrath to come upon them (Q, Ṭ).

Beast renders dābbah (sometimes translated creature; cf. 2:164; 6:38; 11:6, 56; 16:49, 61; 24:45; 29:60; 31:10; 34:14; 35:45; 42:29; 45:4), a word whose most general meaning is anything that crawls or walks upon the earth (including human beings); it can often have the special sense of an animal that serves as a mount, but it can also include insects and sea animals that crawl. It is said the beast will come upon people at a time when no one any longer “enjoins what is right and forbids what is wrong” (see 3:104c; Ṭ). Various ahādīth are mentioned in connection with this beast, which is considered one of the signs of the impending end of the world and the Day of Resurrection: “There are three things that, when they come, no soul’s belief will avail it, if they did not believe before, or if their belief earned them no good: the rising of the sun from the west, the Dajjāl, and the beast of the earth.” See also the essay “Death, Dying, and the Afterlife in the Quran.”

For some, the beast is enormous in size, sixty (R) or seventy cubits long (IK, Th). Others say it will emerge with the staff of Moses and the seal of Solomon, touch the face of the believers with the staff, and stamp the face of the disbelievers with the seal, so that anyone seeing a person will be able to say, “This is a believer, or this is a disbeliever” (IK, Q, Ṭ).

Other accounts describe the beast as being made up of parts of different ordinary animals on earth, with the head of a bull, the eyes of a pig, the trunk of an elephant, the horns of a stag, the torso of a lion, the markings of a tiger, the haunches of a cat, the tail of a ram, and the legs of a camel; this composite beast will be twelve cubits long. It will come out with the staff and the seal. When it touches the face of the believer, a white spot will appear that will grow to cover the believer’s face, and when it touches the face of the disbeliever with the seal, the same will occur with a black spot. It will then say to people, “O so-and-so, you are one of the people of the Garden, and so-and-so, you are one of the people of the Fire” (Th). Others give it the face of a man and the body of a bird or mention that its feet will be on the ground, but its head will be in the clouds (IK). According to some Sufis, the form of the beast in these accounts, which encompasses so many animal forms in paradoxical and fantastical ways, symbolizes a “universal nature” that bears, as it were, all worldly realities within it; it is a manifestation of that intermediate world (barzakh) between bodies and spirits where certain kinds of opposites can exist together, and it will unlock mysteries and provide insight to those who possess depth of spiritual vision (IH). At another level, some say that the beast is an ignorant spiritual master whom one encounters when one has been spiritually veiled from the truth and through whom God punishes those whom He chooses to punish by mirroring them in the psychic veiling and ignorance that comes from following a fool (Aj).

Some report that speak to them (tukallimuhum) can be understood to mean “wound them” (taklimuhum; Q, R). Others say the beast will actually be a human being (Q), though this is not a widely held position. Most commentators believe that mankind was not certain of Our signs will be spoken or conveyed by the beast (Z).

There is a great deal of disagreement regarding the attributes of this beast and whence it will come (Q). For some, it is said the beast will come forth from Makkah, specifically from Minā (one of the sites of the rites of ḥajj), or that it will arise three times: from Yemen, from the desert, and then from Makkah. Some point out that since there is no clear indication of any of these details in the Quran, one should accept a report only insofar as it can be authenticated as from the Prophet, but otherwise one should pay no attention to such details (R).

83 And on that Day We shall gather from every community a group of those who denied Our signs, and they shall be marshaled [in ordered ranks], 83 As when used in connection with Solomon's hosts in v. 17, marshaled can mean to corral or group together (Ṭ).

84 till, when they come, He will say, "Did you deny My signs, though you encompassed them not in knowledge? What is it that you used to do?"

84 Encompassed them not in knowledge is interpreted to mean that the disbelievers did not know or recognize the signs as they deserved to be known (Ṭ).

85 And the Word will come upon them for their having done wrong, and they shall not speak.

85 The wrong that the disbelievers have done was their denial of the truth and rejection of God's Revelation (Ṭ). They shall not speak means they will not be able to defend themselves (Ṭ). The notion that the wretched will or will not be able to speak in the Hereafter to God is discussed in the commentary on 2:174, God will not speak to them on the Day of Resurrection (cf. 3:77), which describes how not being able to speak with God is a form of punishment.

86 Have they not considered that We made the night that they might rest therein, and the day by which to see? Truly in that are signs for a people who believe.

86 Cf. 10:67; 17:12; 25:47; 40:61. That God created the night for rest and repose is also invoked in 28:73 and 78:9. The symbolism and significance of the night and day is brought up in several ways in the Quran, as when it mentions the night and day passing into one another (3:27; 22:61; 31:29; 35:13; 57:6), and the alternation of the night and the day (2:164; 3:190; 10:6; 13:3; 17:12; 22:61; 24:44; 31:29; 35:13; 39:5; 45:5). For the relationship between night and day, see 10:6c; 17:12c.

87 And on that Day the trumpet will be blown, and whosoever is in the heavens and on the earth will be terrified, save whom God wills, and all will come to Him in abject humility.

87 Some read this verse as, “[Remember] the Day when the trumpet will be blown” (Q). Regarding the blowing of the trumpet (by Seraphiel, or Isrāfīl in Arabic), one of the major eschatological events signaling the coming of the Final Judgment according to the Quran, see 6:73c; 18:99; 20:102; 23:101; 36:51; 39:68c; 50:20; 69:13; 74:8; 78:18. Some mention that this terrifying blowing of the trumpet will be the first of three; the second will cause all to swoon, and the third will bring about the Resurrection (Ṭ). Others, however, think that the trumpet will only be blown twice, because the one mentioned in this verse is the same as the one causing swooning mentioned in 39:68: And the trumpet will be blown, whereupon whosoever is in the heavens and on the earth will swoon, save those whom God wills (Q). Although many interpret trumpet (ṣūr) to be something like a “horn” (qarn), it could also be interpreted as an army being mustered by a trumpeter to symbolize the raising of the dead (R). Some read ṣūr as ṣuwar, the plural of ṣūrah, or “form,” meaning that the blowing would be the blowing of spirit into the forms or bodies to resurrect them (R).

Be terrified renders the verb fazi^ca, which can also have the meaning of responding to a summons with alacrity and hence would describe the way in which those who are resurrected emerge from the graves (Q).

Save whom God wills is thought by some to refer to those who were slain in the way of God as mentioned in 3:169, which describes them as alive with their Lord, provided for; they are exempt from the terror that will affect those alive in the world (Ṭ). For others this exception refers to certain angels, or specifically to Gabriel, Michael, Seraphiel, and the Angel of Death, or ʿIzrāʾīl (Azrael; Q), and may also include the prophets and saints (Aj). Others are saved from this terror as described in v. 89. The terror of the end of the world is also mentioned in other verses, such as 70:11: The guilty would wish to ransom himself from the punishment of that Day at the price of his children; 79:8: Hearts that Day shall tremble; and 80:34: That Day when a man will flee from his brother. The manner in which human beings are brought before God is also mentioned in 19:95: And each of them shall come unto Him on the Day of Resurrection, alone.

88 And thou seest the mountains that thou dost suppose are solid pass away like clouds—the Work of God, Who perfects all things. Truly He is Aware of whatsoever you do.

88 Some commentators interpret pass away as “move” and thou dost suppose are solid to mean that mountains move but we cannot see this movement, since large objects viewed from a distance, even if they are moving quickly, appear to be standing still (Q, R). Others interpret the whole phrase (thou seest the mountains that thou dost suppose are solid pass away) as referring to an event at the end of the world similar to the destruction or movement of mountains at the Hour spoken of in other verses (e.g., 18:47; 19:90; 20:105; 52:10; 56:5; 69:14; 70:9; 73:14; 77:10; 78:20; 81:3; 101:5; R). Some interpret pass away as a reference to the earth itself, meaning that the world, believed to be solid, is actually as ephemeral as a cloud (Q). Another interpretation is that this verse is an allegory for the spirit when it leaves the body at death and rises toward the Divine Throne (Q). It is said that when the famous Sufi Junayd al-Baghdādī was asked why he did not appear to have the same (visible) states and ecstasies as other Sufis, he responded by reciting this verse. Perfects renders atqana, which some understand to mean to “tie down” or “make firm” (Ṭ) or which in this context means that God “ties together” things according to His Wisdom (R).

89) Whosoever brings a good deed, he will have that which is better than it. And that Day they will be secure from terror.

90) And whosoever brings an evil deed, their faces shall be cast down into the Fire. Are you recompensed for aught save that which you used to do?

89–90 A good deed refers to testifying, “There is no god but God” and believing in Him (Q); al-Qurṭubī quotes a ḥadīth that states, “Lā ilāha illa’Llāh is the best of good things.” An evil deed refers to idolatry (Q, Ṭ). Which is better can mean many things, among them knowledge of God in this world, the vision of God in the Hereafter (R), or the Contentment of God (Q). It can also refer to the multiplication of good deeds as mentioned in 6:160: Whosoever brings a good deed shall have ten times the like thereof (Q). For some this verse implies that people of faith, if they are punished in the Hereafter, will not be punished forever (R). Some say that what is better refers to being secure from terror on that day (Ṭ).

The imagery of faces cast down into the Fire or afflicted by it also appears in 17:97; 18:29; 23:104; 33:66; 54:48. Here faces shall be cast down can refer to being cast in the Fire upside down as in 17:97 or dragged upon their faces as in 54:48. According to some the face, like the head or neck, can in idiomatic usage stand for the whole person, so that “their faces” means simply “they” (Q, R). For some the question Are you recompensed for aught save that which you used to do? can also be read as a description of what will be said to the people as they are cast down into the Fire (R).

91) Truly I am commanded to worship the Lord of this city, Who has made it sacred. And unto Him belong all things. And I am commanded to be among those who submit,

91 This city (balad) is thought to refer to Makkah, though God is the Lord of all lands (Ṭ). It is mentioned specifically, because it is the home of the idolaters to whom the Prophet is preaching; it is a reminder of the blessings and benefits that accrue to them by virtue of being inhabitants of Makkah, where they are safe from attack (Ṭ). Made it sacred refers to the fact that people were forbidden to commit certain acts during the pilgrimage to Makkah, or it means that it is a safe place for people seeking sanctuary or refuge. Its trees were not to be cut or its animals hunted, prohibitions followed even by the Arabs of the time because of their abiding recognition of the sanctity of the Ka^obah, the House of God built by Abraham, and its surroundings (Q, R); see also 3:97c; 5:97c; 29:67c. On those who submit (muslim; cf. 10:72), see also 2:128c; 3:52c; 3:85c; 3:110c; 5:3c; 5:111c; 22:78c.

92 and to recite the Quran. So whosoever is rightly guided, he is guided only for his own soul. And [as for] whosoever is astray, say, “Verily, I am but a warner.”

92 He is guided only for his own soul, or “for himself,” “for his own sake.” Similar verses that speak of human beings’ good deeds as benefitting themselves, but as of no benefit to God include 31:12; 39:41; 41:46; 45:15. Being but a warner is a description of the Prophet found throughout the Quran meaning that it is not his responsibility to compel anyone to believe (cf. 11:12; 34:46; 35:23; 38:65; 79:45).

93 And say, “Praise be to God! He will show you His signs, and you will know them.” And thy Lord is not heedless of what you do.

93 He will show . . . His signs, both within the soul and in the created order (T), echoes 41:53: We shall show them Our signs upon the horizons and within themselves till it becomes clear to them that it is the truth; and 51:20–21: And upon the earth are signs for those possessing certitude, and within your souls. Others see this as a warning to the disbelievers that they will see the signs of God, but only after it is too late, referring to the signs at the end of the world (R).

The Story

al-Qaṣaṣ

Most commentators consider al-Qaṣaṣ to be an entirely Makkan sūrah that was revealed after Sūrah 27, al-Naml, although some consider vv. 52–55 to be Madinan (JJ, Q) and others maintain that v. 85 was revealed during Muhammad’s migration from Makkah to Madinah (Āl, IJ, JJ). It takes its name from the story (qaṣaṣ) Moses tells his future father-in-law in v. 25 regarding his flight from Egypt.

Al-Qaṣaṣ begins with the story of Moses and Pharaoh and describes the oppression suffered by the Children of Israel, leading Moses’ mother to cast him into the river, after which he was rescued and cared for by the family of Pharaoh and ultimately reunited with his mother (vv. 3–13). This is followed by an account of Moses’ striking and killing an Egyptian who was quarreling with an Israelite and the subsequent flight of Moses from Egypt to Midian (vv. 14–22). There Moses meets two sisters, one of whom he will come to marry, and finds refuge for many years in the employ of his father-in-law (vv. 23–28). Then Moses encounters the fire from which he hears God speak to him; he has his first experience of the miracles he will perform in Egypt and requests that Aaron, his brother, be sent with him to confront Pharaoh (vv. 29–35). The confrontation between Moses and Pharaoh includes the issue of the latter’s claim to divinity and his boast about building a structure to climb up to Heaven to encounter and challenge the God of Moses (vv. 36–42).

The Prophet Muhammad is told that he was not present when Moses received his revelations and that in the intervening period God sent prophets to other peoples, a reminder that only highlights the obstinacy and pride of the Prophet’s contemporaries who claimed to long for guidance from God, but who rejected His Prophet when he was sent (vv. 43–50). They are contrasted with those who, when they hear the truth, believe in it (vv. 51–55).

The last part of the sūrah emphasizes the ephemerality of the world in relation to the Hereafter; Moses' contemporary Korah is presented as the epitome of wickedness and worldly extravagance and pride. The sūrah ends with a reminder that this world is coming to an end and that all things will return to God (vv. 56–88).

In the Name of God, the Compassionate, the Merciful

① Ṭā. Sīn. Mīm. ② These are the signs of the clear Book. ③ We recite unto thee in truth some of the account of Moses and Pharaoh, for a people who believe. ④ Indeed, Pharaoh exalted himself in the land, and made its people into factions, oppressing a party among them, slaying their sons and sparing their women. Verily he was among those who work corruption. ⑤ Yet We desired to be gracious to those who were oppressed in the land, and to make them imams, and to make them the heirs, ⑥ and to establish them in the land, and to show Pharaoh and Hāmān and their hosts that which they dreaded from them. ⑦ So We revealed to the mother of Moses, “Nurse him. But if you fear for him, then cast him into the river, and fear not, nor grieve. Surely We shall bring him back to you and make him one of the messengers.” ⑧ Then the House of Pharaoh picked him up, such that he would become unto them an enemy and a sorrow. Truly Pharaoh and Hāmān and their hosts were sinners. ⑨ And the wife of Pharaoh said, “A comfort for me and for you! Slay him not; it may be that he will bring us some benefit, or that we may take him as a son.” Yet they were unaware. ⑩ But the heart of Moses' mother became empty, and she would have disclosed it, had We not fortified her heart, that she might be among the believers. ⑪ And she said to his sister, “Follow him.” So she watched him from afar; yet they were unaware. ⑫ And We forbade him to be suckled by foster mothers before that; so she said, “Shall I direct you to the people of a house who will take care of him for you and treat him with good will?” ⑬ Thus We returned him to his mother, that she might be comforted and not grieve, and that she might know that God's Promise is true. But most of them know not. ⑭ When he reached maturity and was firmly established [in life], We gave him wisdom and knowledge. Thus do We recompense the virtuous. ⑮ He entered the city at a time of heedlessness among its people. And he found therein two men fighting—one from among his own faction and the other from among his enemies. Then the one from among his own faction sought his aid against the one who was from among his enemies; so Moses struck him with his fist and put an end to him. He said, "This is the work of Satan! Truly he is a manifest enemy, leading astray." ⑯ He said, "My Lord! Truly I have wronged my own soul. Forgive me." So He forgave him. Verily He is the Forgiving, the Merciful. ⑰ He said, "My Lord! Because Thou hast blessed me, I shall never be a supporter of the guilty." ⑱ Morning found him in the city, fearful and vigilant, and behold, the one who had sought his help the day before cried out to him for help! Moses said to him, "Truly you are clearly in error." ⑲ But when he desired to strike him who was an enemy unto them both, he said, "O Moses! Do you desire to slay me, as you slew a soul yesterday? You desire naught but to be a tyrant on the earth, and you desire not to be among the workers of righteousness." ⑳ Then from the outskirts of the city a man came running. He said, "O Moses! Truly the notables are conspiring against you, that they might slay you. So leave! Truly I am among your sincere advisers." ㉑ So he left from there, fearful and vigilant. He said, "My Lord! Save me from the wrongdoing people!" ㉒ And when he turned his face toward Midian, he said, "Perhaps my Lord will guide me to the right way." ㉓ And when he arrived at the wells of Midian, he found there a community of people watering [their flocks]. And he found beside them two women holding back [their flocks]. He said, "What is your errand?" They said, "We water not [our flocks] until the shepherds have driven [theirs] away, and our father is a very old man." ㉔ So he watered [their flocks] for them. Then he turned toward the shade and said, "My Lord! Truly I am in need of any good that Thou mayest send down upon me." ㉕ Then one of the two came to him, walking bashfully. She said, "Truly my father summons you, that he might render unto you a reward for having watered [our flocks] for us.” When he came and recounted his story unto him, he said, “Fear not. You have been saved from the wrongdoing people.” 26 One of the two said, “O my father! Hire him. Surely the best [man] you can hire is the strong, the trustworthy.” 27 He said, “I desire to marry you to one of these two daughters of mine, on condition that you hire yourself to me for eight years. But if you complete ten, that will be of your own accord. And I desire not to be hard upon you. You shall find me, if God wills, to be among the righteous.” 28 He said, “So let it be between you and me. Whichever of the two terms I complete, let there be no enmity toward me. And God is Guardian over what we say.” 29 Then when Moses had completed the term and set out with his family, he perceived a fire on the side of the Mount. He said to his family, “Stay here. I perceive a fire. Perhaps I will bring you some news therefrom, or a firebrand, that haply you may warm yourselves.” 30 And when he came upon it, he was called from the right bank of the valley, at the blessed site, from the tree, “O Moses! Truly I am God, Lord of the worlds!” 31 and, “Cast thy staff!” Then when he saw it quivering like a serpent, he turned in retreat without returning. “O Moses! Approach and fear not! Truly, thou art of those who are secure. 32 Insert thy hand in thy bosom; it will come forth white, without blemish. And draw thine arms to thyself against fear. These are two proofs from thy Lord to Pharaoh and his notables. Verily they are an iniquitous people.” 33 He said, “My Lord! Verily I have killed a soul among them, and I fear that they will slay me. 34 And my brother, Aaron, is more eloquent than me in speech. So send him with me as a helper to confirm me, for I fear they will deny me.” 35 He said, “We shall strengthen thine arm through thy brother, and We shall grant an authority for both of you, such that they shall not reach you. With Our signs, you and those who follow you shall be the victors.” 36 But when Moses brought them Our clear signs, they said, “This is naught but fabricated sorcery. We heard this not among our fathers of old.” 37 Moses said, “My Lord knows best who brings guidance from Him, and whose end is the Abode. Truly the wrongdoers will not prosper.” 38 Pharaoh said, “O notables! I know of no god for you other than myself. So kindle for me a fire, O Hāmān, for clay, and make me a tower, that haply I may behold the God of Moses, though truly I think he is among the liars.” 39 And he and his hosts waxed arrogant upon the earth, without right, and they thought they would not be returned unto Us. 40 So We seized him and his hosts, and cast them into the sea. So behold how the wrongdoers fared in the end. 41 And We made them imams calling unto the Fire. And on the Day of Resurrection they will not be helped. 42 And We caused them to be pursued by a curse in this world. And on the Day of Resurrection they will be among the repugnant. 43 And indeed We gave unto Moses the Book—after We had destroyed the former generations—as a [source of] insight for mankind, and guidance and mercy, that haply they may reflect. 44 And thou wast not on the western side when We decreed unto Moses the Commandment, and thou wast not among the witnesses. 45 But it is We Who brought into being the generations, and lives grew long for them. And thou dwelt not among the people of Midian, reciting unto them Our signs. But it is We Who sent. 46 And thou wast not on the side of the Mount when We called out. But [thou art sent as] a mercy from thy Lord that thou mayest warn a people unto whom no warner has come before thee, that haply they may remember. 47 And [We did so] lest there be an affliction that would befall them because of that which their hands have sent forth at which they should say, “Our Lord! If only Thou hadst sent a messenger unto us, we would have followed Thy signs and been among the believers!” 48 But when the truth came to them from Us, they said, “Why was he not given the like of that which was given to Moses?” Did they not disbelieve in that which was given to Moses aforetime? They said, “Two sorceries, supporting one another.” And they said, “Truly we are disbelievers in each.” 49 Say, “So bring a book from God that provides better guidance than these two, that I may follow it, if you are truthful.” 50 And if they respond not to thee, then know that they follow only their caprices. And who is more astray than one who follows his caprice without guidance from God? Surely God guides not wrongdoing people. 51 And indeed We have caused the Word to reach them, that haply they may reflect. 52

Those unto whom We gave the Book before it, they are believers in it. 53 And when it is recited unto them, they say, “We believe in it; verily it is the truth from our Lord. Truly we were submitters even before it.” 54 It is they who will be given their reward twice over for their having been patient. And they repel evil with good, and spend from that which We have provided them. 55 And when they hear idle talk, they turn away therefrom and say, “Unto us our deeds, and unto you your deeds. Peace be upon you! We do not seek out the ignorant.” 56 Surely thou dost not guide whomsoever thou lovest, but God guides whomsoever He will. And He knows best those who are rightly guided. 57 And they say, “If we follow guidance along with thee, we shall be snatched away from our land.” Have We not established for them a secure Sanctuary, to which the fruits of all things are brought, as a provision from Our Presence? But most of them know not. 58 And how many a town have We destroyed who exulted in their life of ease. There are their dwellings, uninhabited after them save for a few. And We, truly, are the Inheritor. 59 And thy Lord never destroys towns until He sends a messenger to their mother city to recite unto them Our signs. And We never destroy towns, save when their people are wrongdoers. 60 And whatsoever you have been given, it is an enjoyment of the life of this world, and its ornament. But that which lies with God is better and more lasting. Will you not understand? 61 And is he unto whom We made a goodly promise and who receives it, like unto him whom We granted enjoyment in the life of this world and who then, on the Day of Resurrection, will be among those arraigned? 62 And on the Day when he shall call out to them, and say, “Where are My partners, those whom you claimed?” 63 Those against whom the Word has already come due will say, “Our Lord! These are those whom we perverted. We perverted them as we ourselves were perverse. We disavow [them] before Thee; it was not us whom they worshipped.” 64 It will be said, “Call upon your partners.” So they will call upon them, but they will not answer them. And they will see the punishment—if only they had been rightly guided! 65 And on the Day when He will call out to them and say, “What answer gave you to the message bearers?” 66 the tidings shall be obscured for them on that Day, and they shall not question one another. 67 But for he who repented, believed, and worked righteousness, perchance he will be among those who prosper. 68 And thy Lord creates what He will, and chooses; no choice have they. Glory be to God and exalted is He above the partners they ascribe! 69 And thy Lord knows what their breasts conceal and what they disclose. 70 And He is God; there is no god but He! To Him belongs praise at the beginning and at the end. To Him belongs judgment, and unto Him shall you be returned. 71 Say, "Have you considered: if God should make night come over you unceasingly until the Day of Resurrection, what god other than God would bring you light? Will you not, then, listen?" 72 Say, "Have you considered: if God should make day come over you unceasingly until the Day of Resurrection, what god other than God would bring you night, that you might rest therein? Will you not, then, see?" 73 Out of His Mercy He made for you night and day, that you may rest therein, and that you may seek of His Bounty, and that haply you may give thanks. 74 And on the Day when He shall call out to them, He will say, "Where are My partners, those whom you claimed?" 75 And We shall draw forth from every community a witness, and say, "Bring your proof." Then they will know that the truth belongs to God. And that which they used to fabricate will forsake them. 76 Truly Korah was of the people of Moses, but he transgressed against them. And We gave him such treasure that the keys to it would be a heavy burden for a group of strong men. [Remember] when his people said to him, "Exult not! Surely God loves not the exultant. 77 And with what God has given you, seek after the Abode of the Hereafter, and forget not your portion in this world. And be good, as God has been good to you. Seek not to work corruption upon the earth. Surely God loves not the workers of corruption." 78 He said, "I have only been given it on account of knowledge I possess." Did he not know that God has destroyed generations before him who were mightier in strength and greater in what they had amassed? And the guilty will not be questioned about their sins. 79 And he came forth unto his people in his adornment. Those who desired the life of this world said, "Would that we had the like of that which has been given to Korah. Truly he is a possessor of great fortune!” 80 But those who had been given knowledge said, “Woe unto you! The Reward of God is better for those who believe and work righteousness, and none shall receive it save the patient.” 81 Then We caused the earth to engulf him and his house. And he had no party who could help him against God, nor could he help himself. 82 And morning found those who had longed to be in his place the day before saying, “Alas! It seems God outspreads and straitens provision for whomsoever He will among His servants. Had God not been gracious to us, He would have caused us to be engulfed [as well]. Alas! It seems the disbelievers will not prosper!” 83 That is the Abode of the Hereafter, which We ordain for those who desire neither dominance upon the earth, nor corruption. And the end belongs to the reverent. 84 Whosoever brings a good deed, he shall have better than it; and whosoever brings an evil deed, those who perform evil deeds shall only be recompensed for that which they have done. 85 Truly the One Who ordained the Quran for thee shall surely bring thee back to the place of return. Say, “My Lord knows best those who bring guidance, and those who are in manifest error.” 86 And thou didst not hope that the Book would be delivered unto thee; rather, it was a mercy from thy Lord. So be not a support for the disbelievers. 87 And let them not turn thee from the signs of God after they have been sent down unto thee. But call [others] to thy Lord and be not among those who ascribe partners unto God. 88 And call not upon another god along with God. There is no god but He! All things perish, save His Face. Judgment belongs to Him, and unto Him will you be returned.

1 For a discussion of the separated letters that appear at the start of some sūrahs, see 2:1c. On these particular letters, two of which also appear at the beginning of Sūrah 27, see 27:1c.

② These are the signs of the clear Book.

2 Signs translates āyāt, which is also used to denote the verses of the Quran; on the range of realities signified by the word āyah in the Quran, see also commentary on 2:106; 45:3–5. Other sūrahs of the Quran have a similar verse at the beginning (10:1; 12:1; 13:1; 15:1; 26:2; 31:2). The Book refers here to either the Quran itself or the Preserved Tablet (85:22; R). It is clear in its message, its blessings, and in the goodness it contains (Q).

③ We recite unto thee in truth some of the account of Moses and Pharaoh, for a people who believe.

3 We recite means that God conveys it to Muhammad through the Archangel Gabriel (Q, R).

4 Pharaoh exalted himself in the land means he was tyrannical and oppressive (Ṭ) in his own kingdom (R). Or it can refer to his claim to lordship, as described in 79:24, when he says, I am your lord most high (Q). Oppressing . . . them—“to oppress” can also mean “to deem weak” (cf. 7:75, 150)—refers to the Egyptians’ enslaving of (R, Ṭ) and forcing the Israelites into servile and demeaning labor (IK).

Other than describing it as a punishment or suffering (‘adhāb), the Quran does not give a specific reason for the slaughter of boys and sparing of girls (cf. 2:49). In light of the fact that Pharaoh repeats the same threat when Moses is an adult (7:127; 40:25), the Quran itself indicates that the murder of males was a form of collective punishment or control (R; cf. Exodus 1), rather than the result of a foretelling of future events, as is sometimes mentioned in the commentaries (R, Ṭ, IK), by soothsayers or astrologers (or even through a dream of Pharaoh) warning that a child would be born of the Israelites who would rise and destroy Pharaoh’s kingdom; see 20:25–28c.

⑤ Yet We desired to be gracious to those who were oppressed in the land, and to make them imams, and to make them the heirs, 5 Those who were oppressed in the land are the Israelites (Ṭ). The idea of making them imāms is also echoed in 21:73 with regard to Isaac and Jacob: And We made them imāms, guiding according to Our Command; and in 25:74, in a prayer by those who repent: Make us imams for the reverent. In 2:124 God makes Abraham an imām for mankind. To be an imām means to be foremost in matters of faith and worldly affairs (R) and to be a leader in doing good and in calling others to do what is good (Q). To make them the heirs means that they would inherit a land, though what precisely they would inherit is not described here. On this question, see 7:137c, and 26:59c, which mentions that one interpretation is that they inherited land and property similar to what the Egyptians possessed, though they did not inherit it from Pharaoh directly; see also 44:25–28.

⑥ and to establish them in the land, and to show Pharaoh and Hāmān and their hosts that which they dreaded from them.

6 Hāmān is also mentioned in vv. 8, 38; 29:39; 40:24, 36. In two of those verses, Pharaoh asks Hāmān to build a tower in order to proclaim Pharaoh a deity (v. 38; 40:36). The identity of Hāmān has long been a source of contention between Muslim scholars and some revisionist scholars and also among Muslims themselves. Matters have often not been clarified by the willingness of many classical commentators to pass along folkloric or legendary material that was derived, often uncritically, from Jewish, Christian, and other sources. This transmission of extra-Quranic material concerning this question has often resulted in a confusion between the Hāmān of the Quran and the Hāmān of the later commentary tradition. Many Muslim scholars who have examined this issue closely have concluded that the most plausible explanation for the name Hāmān is that it is a title (like the title Pharaoh, or Fir^cawn), not a personal name, and refers to the high priest of Amon (Ha-Amen), who would have had important governmental functions, such as being in charge of public works like constructing buildings, and would have been second in authority only to Pharaoh. Revisionist or skeptical scholars have offered alternate derivations from various Biblical and apocryphal literature to explain the entry of the figure of Hāmān into the Quranic accounts of Pharaoh—arguments too complex to repeat here, but ones that essentially propose a confused borrowing from the Bible (specifically the figure of Haman from the book of Esther) or other traditions from the ancient Near East.

That which they dreaded from them is thought by some to refer to a prophecy given to Pharaoh and Hāmān by their soothsayer that an Israelite would be born who would rise up and destroy them (R, Ṭ), but it could also, and perhaps more plausibly, refer to a fear of losing control of a subject population who had hitherto been kept in check by periodic decimation of their male population (see v. 4; 2:49c). To establish them in the land (or “on the earth”) means to establish them in a land like that of the Egyptians (R).

⑦ So We revealed to the mother of Moses, “Nurse him. But if you fear for him, then cast him into the river, and fear not, nor grieve. Surely We shall bring him back to you and make him one of the messengers.”

7 Revealed to the mother of Moses means that the message in this verse was cast into her heart (Ṭ). Other opinions mention that she saw it in a dream, though some say Gabriel appeared and told her. Al-Qurṭubī argues that an appearance by Gabriel, usually associated with prophethood, would not have made her a prophet, citing consensus in the Islamic tradition that she in fact was not a prophet. Revealed renders the verbal form of wahy, a word often used to describe the process by which the Quran came to the Prophet, as in 53:4, It is naught but a revelation revealed, but it is also used for the inspiration God gave to the apostles of Jesus (5:111) and even the bee (16:68). Though classical Islamic theology distinguishes typically between wahy, referring to the revelation given to the prophets and messengers, and ilhām, or “inspiration” given to saints and sometimes ordinary people (the latter appears as a verb in 91:8 in connection with the inspiration given to the human soul), the usage of the word wahy in the Quran is somewhat more complex, or at least is not restricted to the conveyance of revelation to prophets and messengers.

Some say Moses’ mother would hide him in a garden and come and nurse him secretly (Ṭ). Al-Ṭabarī mentions several opinions regarding how long Moses’ mother waited before placing him in the river, but he notes there is no solid evidence to specify such a time period. Bring him back to you is thought to mean that God would return Moses to her so that she could nurse him (v. 13; Ṭ). She is told to fear not that Moses would die or be lost, nor grieve over her separation from him (Q). Some note that fear is suffering over what may come, and grief is suffering for what has gone by (R); the absence of both fear and grief is a state often attributed to those who achieve salvation and enter the Garden, as in the common Quranic refrain No fear shall come upon them, nor shall they grieve (e.g., 2:38; 3:170; 5:69; 6:48; 46:13). The story of Moses’ separation and return to his mother is also told in 20:37–40.

⑧ Then the House of Pharaoh picked him up, such that he would become unto them an enemy and a sorrow. Truly Pharaoh and Hāmān and their hosts were sinners.

8 Such that he would become unto them an enemy and a sorrow does not mean that this was the intention of those from the House of Pharaoh who took the baby; rather, it refers to the ultimate end God had in store for them (R, Ṭ). Sinners translates khāṭiʿ, which can also mean those who make a mistake, and for a minority of commentators their hosts were sinners (khāṭiʿ) means not that they were sinning, but that they were making a mistake in understanding the nature of the situation (R).

⑨ And the wife of Pharaoh said, “A comfort for me and for you! Slay him not; it may be that he will bring us some benefit, or that we may take him as a son.” Yet they were unaware.

9 In the Islamic tradition the wife of Pharaoh is named Āsiyah and is considered by many to have been one of the saintliest women to have ever lived, as mentioned in a ḥadīth that singles out in this regard Āsiyah, Mary the mother of Jesus, the Prophet's first wife, Khadijah, and his daughter Fāṭimah (see 3:42c; 66:11:c). The Quran's account does not say that it was the wife of Pharaoh who plucked Moses from the water, though some commentaries assert this (Q; in the Biblical account, Exodus 2:6, it is the daughter of Pharaoh who finds Moses).

According to the commentaries, in response to his wife's statement that the child would be a blessing and a comfort, Pharaoh said, "A comfort for you, but for me, no," and some commentators mention a ḥadīth from the Prophet saying that had Pharaoh agreed with his wife's positive and hopeful appraisal of Moses' arrival, God would have guided Pharaoh to faith just as He guided his wife (Q, Ṭ). Yet they were unaware refers to their ignorance of the fate that awaited them (Ṭ), though some say it could refer to the fact that the Israelites did not know that Moses would save them (Ṭ).

⑩ But the heart of Moses' mother became empty, and she would have disclosed it, had We not fortified her heart, that she might be among the believers.

10 The first instance of heart renders fu'ād, and the second renders qalb. Some lexicographers say qalb pertains more to the essence, or "kernel," of the heart, while fu'ād signifies the container or outward dimensions of the heart, though the terms are sometimes treated synonymously. In Sufi literature there is often a hierarchy of such terms—fu'ād, qalb, sirr ("secret" or "mystery"), and rūḥ ("spirit")—to describe the depths and layers of human beings' inner reality. That Moses' mother's heart became empty means it was empty of everything except for the remembrance of her son and her grief over his absence (Ṭ), or she forgot or was made to forget the promise that God had made her regarding Moses (v. 7). Became empty may also be a way of saying that she was completely driven to mental distraction and could not think (R) or that she was overcome by anxiety and fear (R), as alluded to in a similar metaphor used in 14:43 to describe the terror of the end of the world: Running with necks outstretched and heads upraised, their glance returning not to them, their hearts vacant. The verb translated became can also have the more particular sense of something that happens in the morning, so that it would be rendered, "And morning found the heart of Moses' mother empty" (Q). What she would have disclosed was that Moses was her son and she had placed him in the river (R, Ṭ); she might have exclaimed something like, "Oh, my son!" (Q).

⑪ And she said to his sister, “Follow him.” So she watched him from afar; yet they were unaware.

11 Moses’ mother instructed his sister to follow him to see what would happen to him, whether he lived or died (R, Ṭ). They were unaware means that those of the House of Pharaoh were oblivious to her presence or that they did not know that she was his sister or what her intentions were (R, Ṭ).

⑫ And We forbade him to be suckled by foster mothers before that; so she said, “Shall I direct you to the people of a house who will take care of him for you and treat him with good will?”

12 Cf. 20:40. We forbade him to be suckled by foster mothers means that God caused the infant Moses to refuse suckling by any woman other than his mother (R). His sister then suggested to the House of Pharaoh that there was a woman who could take care of him and suckle him, and so Moses was reunited with his mother (Ṭ).

⑬ Thus We returned him to his mother, that she might be comforted and not grieve, and that she might know that God’s Promise is true. But most of them know not.

13 God’s Promise refers to Moses’ return to his mother, which was foretold in v. 7 (Ṭ). This promise is a part of the story of Moses, but the healing of his mother’s heart is described as an end in its own right, and the compassion and solicitude toward her suffering as a mother evokes the consolation received by Mary during her labor pains in 19:23–26.

⑭ When he reached maturity and was firmly established [in life], We gave him wisdom and knowledge. Thus do We recompense the virtuous.

14 See also 12:22, which speaks of wisdom and knowledge being given to Joseph at the time of his maturity (ashudd), or adulthood, a concept also used in connection with the age at which orphans become independent of their custodians (e.g., 6:152; 17:34). For a fuller discussion of the various ages given for “maturity” in Islamic Law, see 4:6c. Was firmly established renders the verb istawā, a word that has a rich range of meaning, including “to mount” (e.g., 10:3; 25:59; 32:4), “to turn or direct oneself to” (e.g., 2:29), and “to be equal to or the same as” (e.g., 4:95; 16:75; 35:19). It implies the stage at which one achieves the balance and sure footing of adulthood, and spiritually it indicates when a person has become balanced inwardly between hope and fear, humility and dignity, and dependence and autonomy, a time when true wisdom begins (Aj). As a physical description, it is thought to refer to the age of forty (the age of prophethood, as it is commonly known in Muslim tradition, and the age at which Muhammad first received the revelation; Q). Some treat these two ideas as synonymous, but for others the difference between maturity and being firmly established is that between physical maturity, on the one hand, and reaching one’s intellectual and psychological maturity, on the other, the first often associated with the end of puberty and the second with reaching the age of forty (R); others say they refer to thirty-three and forty years old, respectively (T).

By wisdom (ḥukm) is understood the wisdom that is possessed by a prophet before his investiture with prophethood, while knowledge refers to understanding in religious matters (T); some think that in this context it refers to knowledge in the religious tradition of Moses’ forefathers among the Israelites (Q), but others say it refers to the wisdom to judge between people (M). Thus do We recompense the virtuous (cf. 6:84; 12:22; 37:80, 105, 110, 121, 131; 77:44; see also 29:69c; 37:80c) refers to how God rewarded and blessed the mother of Moses by giving her a son, returning him to her after she was forced to relinquish him, and giving him sound judgment and intelligence (Q). Some have made the point that this verse could not refer to prophethood, since according to the Islamic tradition prophethood is never given as a reward for merit (R).

15 He entered the city at a time of heedlessness among its people. And he found therein two men fighting—one from among his own faction and the other from among his enemies. Then the one from among his own faction sought his aid against the one who was from among his enemies; so Moses struck him with his fist and put an end to him. He said, “This is the work of Satan! Truly he is a manifest enemy, leading astray.”

15 The city is thought to be the capital city in which Pharaoh resided (R), though some specify that it was Heliopolis (R) or Memphis (Ṭ); it is unclear where this information originates (cf. Exodus 2:11–15). Some commentators understand time of heedlessness to mean a time when most of the inhabitants were asleep at midday (Q, Ṭ); most commentators note that by this time Moses would have been identifiable as part of Pharaoh’s retinue and was even called “the son of Pharaoh” (Q, R, Ṭ). Others say that by this time Moses had already shown his opposition to Pharaoh and had been cast out (R); heedlessness refers to the fact that the people did not know or remember Moses anymore (Q, Ṭ).

His own faction refers to the Israelites, and his enemies, the Egyptians (R). Others speculate that the adversary mentioned in this verse could have been another Israelite, but one who was a disbeliever and thus an enemy (M); the Biblical story mentions explicitly that it was an Egyptian (Exodus 2:12). Though the Quran’s account uses the word “enemy” to specify the person with whom this Israelite was quarreling in both this verse and v. 19, the Biblical account specifies that the Israelite’s first adversary was an Egyptian, but the second adversary was another Israelite; some Muslim commentators rely on the Biblical account in also identifying the adversary in this verse as Egyptian. The slightly different language in v. 19 (enemy unto them both rather than one who was from among his enemies in v. 15) could suggest, if one accepts the interpretation that enmity can also be a matter of whether one is a disbeliever, that the second adversary was a different kind of enemy and not necessarily that this second enemy was also an Egyptian; it can also be noted that v. 15 also mentions Satan as an enemy.

Put an end to him (qāḍā ‘alayhi) is understood to imply that Moses did not intend to kill the Egyptian, but only to defend the Israelite (Q). Work of Satan signifies that it was “not appropriate” for a prophet to kill a person; the sin was not murder, but striking him in such a manner as to result in his death (Q). In general commentators are careful, here and elsewhere, to keep from attributing sin to Moses or any prophet.

16 He said, “My Lord! Truly I have wronged my own soul. Forgive me.” So He forgave him. Verily He is the Forgiving, the Merciful.

16 I have wronged my own soul could also simply mean, “I have wronged myself.” Some suggest that the “wrong” may have been that Moses could have helped the Israelite without striking the Egyptian so forcefully (R). As to why someone whose intentions are pure—an assumption Muslims make for all prophets—would ask for forgiveness, some note that prophets are more careful and anxious about these kinds of matters than ordinary believers; some also note that, in addition, this verse shows the harm of unintended consequences (Q). See also 26:82, which speaks of Abraham’s hope for forgiveness; 26:82c, on the theological questions this issue raises for those commentators who believe that prophets have certainty of forgiveness from God; and 48:2–3c.

17 He said, “My Lord! Because Thou hast blessed me, I shall never be a supporter of the guilty.”

17 Moses was blessed by being given wisdom and knowledge (v. 14; Q). Some note that his gratitude for blessings did not stem from his being forgiven, because this was said before he was made a prophet and could have had certain knowledge of God’s Forgiveness (Q). For some never be a supporter of the guilty refers specifically to the fact that Moses had been a member of Pharaoh’s household, but he now desires to no longer participate in the wrongs they committed; or it can mean something more universal and general, functioning more as a supplication asking God to never let him be a supporter of wrong (Q, R, Ṭ).

18 Morning found him in the city, fearful and vigilant, and behold, the one who had sought his help the day before cried out to him for help! Moses said to him, “Truly you are clearly in error.”

18 Morning found him . . . fearful could also be rendered simply as, “He became fearful” (see the similar issue in 28:10c; Q). He was vigilant in that he was keen to see what the consequences of striking and killing the Egyptian would be (Ṭ). Moses tells the man who cried out to him for help that he was clearly in error—that is, clearly doing wrong—because this was the same man who only the day before had quarreled with the other man whom Moses had struck (Q, Ṭ). In the Exodus account (2:13), it is said that Moses came upon two Israelites, but this account does not specify the other person's identity other than saying he was an enemy to them both, though some Quran commentators describe him as a second Egyptian with whom the same Israelite was quarreling (Th; see 28:15c).

19 But when he desired to strike him who was an enemy unto them both, he said, “O Moses! Do you desire to slay me, as you slew a soul yesterday? You desire naught but to be a tyrant on the earth, and you desire not to be among the workers of righteousness.”

19 These words are usually thought to be spoken by the enemy, but some say they could also be spoken by the Israelite whom Moses had helped previously (R). According to this latter reading, it was this statement that exposed the incident from the day before, which led to Moses' flight (R, Ṭ). Here tyrant renders jabbār, which al-Rāzī explains is a human being who commits violence and oppression without regard for consequences and without searching for the best way to go about one's actions.

20 Then from the outskirts of the city a man came running. He said, “O Moses! Truly the notables are conspiring against you, that they might slay you. So leave! Truly I am among your sincere advisers.”

20 Some commentators say that the man who came running was “a believer from the people of Pharaoh” (Q, R) or an Israelite (Ṭ). As noted in 28:19c, some think that the reason Moses' deed was discovered was that what the Israelite said to him in v. 19 was loud enough to be heard by others (Ṭ). Notables (malaʿ) can also mean “council” or “group of leaders.” The Quran also discusses the notables—a class of people who were often the most hostile to the prophets—of the Queen of Sheba (27:29); the Quraysh (38:6); the people of Hūd (7:65); the people of Shuʿayb (7:88); and the king in the story of Joseph (12:43).

21 So he left from there, fearful and vigilant. He said, “My Lord! Save me from the wrongdoing people!”

21 Fearful and vigilant (cf. v. 18) is the same way Moses is described after he struck and killed the Egyptian; he is concerned that he would be caught and killed by Pharaoh's forces (Ṭ). Moses' prayer is understood to highlight his reliance upon God and his realization that God was his only refuge (Q).

22 And when he turned his face toward Midian, he said, "Perhaps my Lord will guide me to the right way."

22 Some say that Moses did not know how to get to Midian, and only had his trust in God's Benevolence to guide him along the right way. It is said that he had no provisions or money (R, Ṭ) and that he did not even have a specific destination, but only trusted in God (R). Midian was the land of the people of Shu^cayb (see 7:85c).

23 And when he arrived at the wells of Midian, he found there a community of people watering [their flocks]. And he found beside them two women holding back [their flocks]. He said, "What is your errand?" They said, "We water not [our flocks] until the shepherds have driven [theirs] away, and our father is a very old man."

23 Commentators note that the two women held their flocks back either because they were not strong enough to make their way to the water, because they did not want their animals to mix with the others, or out of modesty in order to avoid mingling with the men watering their flocks (Q, R). Though the act of holding back is usually understood to mean they were holding the flocks back, some say it could mean that they were holding the other people back from their flocks (Ṭ). Moses asked them why they were staying away rather than watering their flocks (Ṭ). Their reply meant that their father was too old to do so himself, and had he been present, they would not have had to stay back with their flocks (R, Ṭ). What is your errand? can also be rendered, "What is your situation?" or "What is going on with you?"

The plain sense of the passage indicates that Moses, as a strong man in that particular social context, was able to move the animals forward and give them water. However, some commentators mention certain popular accounts in which a heavy rock that ten men could not lift was blocking another well; Moses lifted it, allowing the women's animals to drink (Q, R, Ṭ); such popular accounts are, however, often dismissed (R). Most Muslims say that the father of the women, named Jethro in the Bible, was identical with the prophet Shu'ayb, though the Quran does not explicitly indicate this (R); see 7:85c; cf. 11:84–86c; 29:36–37.

24 So he watered [their flocks] for them. Then he turned toward the shade and said, “My Lord! Truly I am in need of any good that Thou mayest send down upon me.”

24 Moses turned toward the shade of a tree (Ṭ), by which some understand that the time was the middle of a hot day (R). Most commentators say that I am in need of any good that Thou mayest send refers to the fact that Moses was hungry, as he had been traveling for days without provisions (Q, Ṭ). In need of renders faqīr, a word that denotes a state of dependence and poverty in relation to something else and is used in both a material and a spiritual sense.

25 Then one of the two came to him, walking bashfully. She said, “Truly my father summons you, that he might render unto you a reward for having watered [our flocks] for us.” When he came and recounted his story unto him, he said, “Fear not. You have been saved from the wrongdoing people.”

25 Moses went to the father of the women and recounted the story of his flight from Egypt. The father told him to fear not, because Pharaoh had no power in that land (Ṭ).

26 One of the two said, “O my father! Hire him. Surely the best [man] you can hire is the strong, the trustworthy.”

26 The woman called Moses strong, because of his actions in watering the flocks, and trustworthy, because of his noble conduct when he was approached to meet their father; according to certain accounts he insisted on walking in front of her out of modesty (My, Q, Ṭ), though this detail is not part of the Quran's account and is likely a later embellishment.

27 He said, "I desire to marry you to one of these two daughters of mine, on condition that you hire yourself to me for eight years. But if you complete ten, that will be of your own accord. And I desire not to be hard upon you. You shall find me, if God wills, to be among the righteous."

27 I desire not to be hard upon you is in reference to the eight years of service the father requested for his daughter's hand (Ṭ); he was saying that he would be fair and reasonable in his demands during that period of time (R).

28 He said, "So let it be between you and me. Whichever of the two terms I complete, let there be no enmity toward me. And God is Guardian over what we say."

28 The two terms are the eight years and ten years (Ṭ). Some say that it was at this time that Moses was given his staff, though others say the staff was given to him later by Gabriel (Ṭ). Enmity renders 'udwān, which could also mean "injustice." Let there be no enmity means that neither would go outside of the bounds of their agreement (R).

29 Then when Moses had completed the term and set out with his family, he perceived a fire on the side of the Mount. He said to his family, "Stay here. I perceive a fire. Perhaps I will bring you some news therefrom, or a firebrand, that haply you may warm yourselves."

29 Some say that Moses completed the term of the entire ten years and then stayed ten more (Q, R). The incident of Moses seeing the fire is also mentioned in

20:9; 26:10; 27:7. A firebrand refers to a burning log or branch with which one might start another fire (R, T).

30 And when he came upon it, he was called from the right bank of the valley, at the blessed site, from the tree, “O Moses! Truly I am God, Lord of the worlds!”

30 For the manner in which the place or the tree and fire were blessed, see 27:8c. This verse is an important point of contention between theologians on the question of whether God’s Speech is created or uncreated, an argument that usually centers on the Quran itself in a controversy that arose some two centuries after the revelation of the Quran (see the essay “The Quran and Schools of Islamic Theology and Philosophy”). In this verse the question involves the nature of the voice coming from the tree: are the words that Moses hears created or uncreated, and, if Speech is one of God’s Attributes, what does the answer to that question mean for the unchanging Essence of God? It is said that God spoke to Moses directly, without intermediary, based on 4:164: And unto Moses God spoke directly (kallama Allāhu Mūsā taklīman).

The commentators embellish the Quranic account with legendary material about the origin of Moses’ staff. It is said in these later sources that Moses’ staff was the staff of Adam given to him by Gabriel. In another story, when Moses agreed to work for his father-in-law, he was told to go into a house where there were several staffs and choose a staff to use; when he opened the door, one of the them fell onto him. Jethro then told him to put it back and get another one, but the same staff fell onto him again and again. At that, Jethro told his two daughters, “This is a prophet” (Q, R). These are legendary accounts, but nonetheless highlight the importance in Islamic sacred history of the connections (genealogical or otherwise) between the prophets and the significance of Moses’ staff. For more on Moses’ staff, see 7:106–8c.

31 and, “Cast thy staff!” Then when he saw it quivering like a serpent, he turned in retreat without returning. “O Moses! Approach and fear not! Truly, thou art of those who are secure.

31 Serpent renders jānn, which evokes the meaning of jinn, since jānn is considered by some to be a synonym for jinn or to refer to a certain kind of jinn. Without returning means that he retreated without the intention of returning. It also means that he did so without waiting (Ṭ).

32 Insert thy hand in thy bosom; it will come forth white, without blemish. And draw thine arms to thyself against fear. These are two proofs from thy Lord to Pharaoh and his notables. Verily they are an iniquitous people.”

32 Bosom (jayb) is understood to mean that part of his shirt covering his bosom. For the meaning of jayb, see 24:31c; it can refer to the chest area up to the collarbones. In 20:22 it is not jayb, but janāḥ (“side”) where Moses places his hand, which would entail his placing his hand using the same motion. The displaying of the “white hand” (cf. 20:22; 26:33; 27:12) is one of the miracles that Moses would perform later in the presence of Pharaoh; see 27:12c.

Draw thine arms to thyself is interpreted by some to signify a gesture associated with a lack of fear, the opposite of extending the arms out in fear or in a gesture of defense (R). Others see in the action of bringing the hands to the chest a means of allaying fear (Q), although how this occurs is not clearly explained. In this case, fear is interpreted to mean Moses’ fear of the staff that became like a living serpent (R) or his fear of Pharaoh (Q). The two proofs are the hand and the staff (Ṭ).

33 He said, “My Lord! Verily I have killed a soul among them, and I fear that they will slay me.

33 Cf. 26:14. This verse refers to the striking and killing of the Egyptian described in v. 15.

34 And my brother, Aaron, is more eloquent than me in speech. So send him with me as a helper to confirm me, for I fear they will deny me.”

34 Moses' request for Aaron's help is mentioned also in 20:29–30 and 26:13; see 20:29–35c.

35 He said, “We shall strengthen thine arm through thy brother, and We shall grant an authority for both of you, such that they shall not reach you. With Our signs, you and those who follow you shall be the victors.”

35 Strengthen thine arm is an idiom meaning “help thee” (Ṭ) or “strengthen thee” (Q). The authority given to Moses and Aaron is also mentioned in 23:45, and the idea of Moses bringing a manifest authority appears in 4:153; 11:96; 40:23. That authority (sulṭān) is sent down (e.g., 7:71; 11:96; 12:40) is often understood to mean a Divine revelation or message; see also 22:71c; 69:29c. Sulṭān is also used to denote the influence or power of one thing over another, as in Satan's words to his followers in 14:22: And I had no authority over you, save that I called you, and you responded to me. They shall not reach you means that the Egyptians will not be able to harm Moses and Aaron (R).

36 But when Moses brought them Our clear signs, they said, “This is naught but fabricated sorcery. We heard this not among our fathers of old.”

36 We heard this not can mean that the people had not heard of the notion of the worship of the One God (Ṭ) or that Moses was saying something earlier peoples had not heard of and hence was novel (Q). The clear signs were fabricated, or false, because in their eyes Moses was lying about their source (R). For al-Rāzī, the point of this verse is partly to condemn blind conformity to forefathers' beliefs, as in 5:104: “Sufficient for us is that which we have found our fathers practicing.” What! Even if their fathers knew naught and were not rightly guided? (cf. 2:170). Condemnations of slavish conformity to ancestral beliefs are also addressed to the Children of Adam in 7:28: When they commit an indecency, they say, “We found our fathers practicing it, and God has commanded us thus.” Similar verses can be found with regard to the Egyptians (10:78), Abraham's people (21:53–54), and human beings in general (31:21; 43:24).

37 Moses said, “My Lord knows best who brings guidance from Him, and whose end is the Abode. Truly the wrongdoers will not prosper.”

37 In whose end is the Abode (dār; cf. 6:135), Abode usually refers to the Abode of the Hereafter (dār al-ākhirah; e.g., 2:94; 6:32; 16:30; 29:64), but only in its beatific sense (R). The end does not mean only “what is last,” but also the result or outcome of a thing. The Quran also speaks of the end belonging to the reverent (e.g., 7:128; 11:49; 13:35; 28:83).

38 Pharaoh said, “O notables! I know of no god for you other than myself. So kindle for me a fire, O Hāmān, for clay, and make me a tower, that haply I may behold the God of Moses, though truly I think he is among the liars.”

38 See also 79:24, where Pharaoh says: I am your lord most high. It is not known whether the tower was ever actually begun or built (R). Some traditions exist that Pharaoh actually had such a structure built, climbed to the top, and shot an arrow toward the sky, which miraculously fell back down and struck him, drawing blood (R, Ṭ); al-Rāzī finds such accounts to be “not for the sane” and wonders how anyone could think of building a structure taller than a mountain, and if so, then go on to propose employing a weapon from the top of it. The order to build it can be seen as a kind of rhetorical move on Pharaoh’s part, perhaps said with a sense of irony; see 40:36–37c.

39 And he and his hosts waxed arrogant upon the earth, without right, and they thought they would not be returned unto Us.

39 The return to God is one of the great certainties mentioned throughout the Quran, but denied by those who disbelieve (cf. 23:115; 84:14).

④① So We seized him and his hosts, and cast them into the sea. So behold how the wrongdoers fared in the end.

40 Asking how people fared in the end is a common refrain in the Quran, and is an invitation to meditate upon the ultimate downfall of previous peoples (e.g., 12:109; 30:9, 42; 35:44; 40:21, 82; 47:10). The drowning of the Egyptians is also mentioned in 7:136; 8:54; 10:90; 17:103; 20:77–79; 26:65–66 (cf. Exodus 14–15).

④① And We made them imams calling unto the Fire. And on the Day of Resurrection they will not be helped.

41 Imāms calling unto the Fire is understood by some to refer to those who were foremost in performing actions and upholding beliefs that led them to the Fire and in calling others to follow them (R), in the sense that what they called for necessarily led to punishment (Q).

④② And We caused them to be pursued by a curse in this world. And on the Day of Resurrection they will be among the repugnant.

42 The curse in this world refers to the successive plagues and humiliation the Egyptians suffered for disobeying Moses' call and to their ultimate doom (Ṭ). As in other contexts in the Quran, the idea of a curse (la'nah) has the sense of being distanced from God or from the good (Q). Repugnant renders maqḅūḥ, which also has the sense of something that is detestable or ugly, denoting both moral and physical ugliness, or something that is accursed and to be kept at a distance (R). On the Day of Judgment it is said that inward ugliness will manifest itself outwardly (R).

④③ And indeed We gave unto Moses the Book—after We had destroyed the former generations—as a [source of] insight for mankind, and guidance and mercy, that haply they may reflect.

43 The Book refers to the Torah (R), and former generations refers to ancient peoples such as those of Noah, Lot, and Šālih (Ṭ). Insight renders baṣā'ir (sing. baṣīrah; cf. 6:104; 7:203; 12:108; 17:102; 45:20; 75:14). Baṣīrah, like the English word “insight,” can be both an attribute of a person and something by which one gains insight (Q); hence its rendering in 17:102 as clear portents and in 75:14 as testimony.

44 And thou wast not on the western side when We decreed unto Moses the Commandment, and thou wast not among the witnesses.

45 But it is We Who brought into being the generations, and lives grew long for them. And thou dwelt not among the people of Midian, reciting unto them Our signs. But it is We Who sent.

44–45 And thou addresses the Prophet Muhammad, and the western side refers to the side of the mountain where Moses received his mission (Ṭ). In these verses, God is telling the Prophet that he was not witness to these events experienced by previous prophets (Ṭ). Lives grew long for them (cf. 20:86; 21:44; 57:16) is understood to imply that, over the course of time, people came to abandon the remembrance of God (Q) or to indicate the long period of time between Moses and Muhammad (R). Some commentators say that these verses are talking about the foretelling of the Prophet Muhammad in the Book of Moses, a prophecy that came to be lost and misunderstood over time (Q); see also 3:65–66, 78, 187, and especially 7:157, which are also understood to refer to such prophecies in the Bible; see also 7:157c. It is We Who sent refers to the sending of Muhammad (Q), or it is telling the Prophet Muhammad that he was not sent to previous peoples and God had sent different prophets to peoples at different times (R).

46 And thou wast not on the side of the Mount when We called out. But [thou art sent as] a mercy from thy Lord that thou mayest warn a people unto whom no warner has come before thee, that haply they may remember.

46 When We called out is thought to refer not to Moses' initial investiture with the mission of going to Pharaoh, but with the giving of the Law or with the encounter described after the destruction of the calf (Q), for which see 2:55c; 7:155c. Some commentators understand this call to be directed not to Moses, but to the community of Muhammad and to consist of: "O community of Muhammad, I gave unto you before you asked of Me, and I answered you before you called unto Me" (Q, Ṭ). Others say that Moses was told at this moment of the coming of the community of Muhammad and that he would not live to see it (R). These commentators use imagery similar to the covenant recounted in 7:172: Thy Lord took from the Children of Adam, from their loins, their progeny and made them bear witness concerning themselves; that is, according to this interpretation, the aforementioned words addressed to the community of Muhammad were spoken to them while they were "in the loins" of their forefathers (R). For some, a mercy (cf. 21:107) refers to the Quran (Ṭ). Others interpret [thou art sent as] a mercy to mean, "[We did that] as a mercy" or "[We sent thee, Muhammad,] as a mercy" (Q).

47 And [We did so] lest there be an affliction that would befall them because of that which their hands have sent forth at which they should say, "Our Lord! If only Thou hadst sent a messenger unto us, we would have followed Thy signs and been among the believers!"

47 For the idea that, before the advent of Muhammad's mission, the people of Arabia were asking for a prophet, see 2:89c. It is thought that the present verse refers to the Quraysh, but some say it refers to the Jews (Q), though the first is more likely, because al-Qaṣaṣ is considered a Makkan sūrah. And [We did so] lest there be is a phrase that indicates a grammatical elision, which is interpreted by commentators such that the verse would mean, "Were it not for the fact that the disbelievers, when they experience God's Punishment, plead that God sent them no messenger, [God would have punished them sooner, or God would not have sent a prophet]." It is thus interpreted to mean that, with the advent of the Prophet Muhammad, any possible excuse for disbelieving was gone (Bḏ, Q, R, Ṭ, Z). This verse should be read especially in light of v. 59; other verses relevant to the condition of those peoples who were destroyed include 6:131; 11:117; 15:4; 17:16. At the end of this particular section in v. 59 it is reaffirmed that God does not destroy or punish a town or city until a messenger has been sent to them. In this sense the sending of the Prophet Muhammad and his presence among them remove the excuses the disbelievers may have been insincerely offering for their previous conduct (Q), to which v. 48 alludes.

48 But when the truth came to them from Us, they said, “Why was he not given the like of that which was given to Moses?” Did they not disbelieve in that which was given to Moses aforetime? They said, “Two sorceries, supporting one another.” And they said, “Truly we are disbelievers in each.”

48 When Muhammad came to them as a prophet, the Quraysh disbelieved in him and asked why his revelation was not like the revelation given to Moses; this verse asks them why, then, when the revelation of Moses was available to them before, they did not believe in it (Ṭ). Or the verse can have a more general significance, meaning that Moses was denied by the disbelievers of his time just as Muhammad was in his (R).

For some, that which was given to Moses refers specifically to miracles, such as the white hand (20:22) and the staff (20:69; Q). For others, it is revelation all at once, as with the Torah, rather than in parts (R), as mentioned in 25:32: And the disbelievers say, “Why was the Quran not sent down upon him as a single whole?” The two sorceries refer, according to some, to the Torah and the Quran, or the Torah and the Gospel (Ṭ). Reading sorceries (siḥrān) as “sorcerers” (sāḥirān), some have proposed Moses and Muhammad, or Moses and Aaron, or Jesus and Muhammad (Q, Ṭ).

According to some, the Quraysh would consult with local Jews on matters related to religion and prophethood, and when they described Muhammad to them, the Jews told the Quraysh to challenge Muhammad in the way mentioned in this verse (Q). It shows that, far from being sincere, the Quraysh were issuing these challenges cynically (R); see also 6:7c; 43:57–58c.

49 Say, “So bring a book from God that provides better guidance than these two, that I may follow it, if you are truthful.”

49 The Prophet is commanded to challenge the Quraysh regarding the two books (two sorceries) they demeaned in the previous verse. Similar challenges to produce something like the Quran are made in 2:23; 10:38; 11:13; 17:88.

50 And if they respond not to thee, then know that they follow only their caprices. And who is more astray than one who follows his caprice without guidance from God? Surely God guides not wrongdoing people.

50 The idea of following one's caprices (ahwāʿ, sing. hawā), or egotistical desires, is a theme present in such verses as 25:43, which speaks of one who takes his caprice as his god, and other verses in which the Prophet is warned not to follow or be influenced by the whims and desires of other people (e.g., 2:120, 145; 6:56; 38:26); also see 45:23c; 53:2–3c.

51 And indeed We have caused the Word to reach them, that haply they may reflect.

51 We have caused the Word to reach them is understood to mean, “We elaborated the Word for them” (Ṭ) or “We completed the Word for them” (Q). Them refers to the Quraysh, the Jews, or both (Q). The Word means the contents of the Quran (Ṭ).

52 Those unto whom We gave the Book before it, they are believers in it.

53 And when it is recited unto them, they say, “We believe in it; verily it is the truth from our Lord. Truly we were submitters even before it.”

52–53 These verses are thought to refer to the People of the Book who believed in the Prophet Muhammad (Ṭ). Before it means before the Quran (Ṭ); that is, they were monotheists or believed in the coming of a prophet before the advent of the Quranic revelation (Q). Or it can refer to those who were devoted to their own religion before but followed Muhammad when he came, including people such as ʿAbd Allāh ibn Salām, who was Jewish, and Salmān al-Fārsī, who was Zoroastrian (Ṭ); others also mention certain Christian monks such as Baḥīrah and Waraqa, other Christians from Syria, or others from Abyssinia who returned with the Muslims who had sought refuge there before the Muslim community as a whole migrated from Makkah to Madinah (Q, R). Submitters renders muslimīn; regarding the universal capacity of the term islām to refer to correct religion as such and not only Islam, see 2:128c; 3:19c; 3:85c; 5:3c, as well as the essay “The Quranic View of Sacred History and Other Religions.” These are people who receive a reward twice over in v. 54 (Ṭ). For a similar set of issues regarding the faith of members of other religious communities, see also commentary on 3:110–15; 5:82–83.

54 It is they who will be given their reward twice over for their having been patient. And they repel evil with good, and spend from that which We have provided them.

54 Some say that their reward is given twice over because they believed in the foretelling of the coming of Muhammad and then accepted him when he was sent; or because they accepted their previous prophet and then accepted Muhammad as well (R). The virtues mentioned here are celebrated elsewhere in the Quran as attributes of the believers, for example, in 41:34: The good deed and the evil deed are not equal. Repel [evil] with that which is better; then behold, the one between whom and thee there is enmity shall be as if he were a loyal protecting friend; and 2:2–3: The reverent . . . believe in the Unseen and perform the prayer and spend from that which We have provided them (cf. 2:254; 8:3; 13:22; 32:16; 35:29; 42:38).

55 And when they hear idle talk, they turn away therefrom and say, “Unto us our deeds, and unto you your deeds. Peace be upon you! We do not seek out the ignorant.”

55 For the attitude of forbearance and patience in the face of ignorant talk or abuse, see 19:47c; 25:63c. Some report that this verse was revealed in connection with an incident in which certain People of the Book embraced Islam in the presence of Abū Jahl, the early leader of those opposed to the Prophet; when these new converts were leaving the gathering, Abū Jahl followed them hurling insults and abuse at them, to which they responded simply, “Peace be upon you” (Q, R); see also 109:6c.

56 Surely thou dost not guide whomsoever thou lovest, but God guides whomsoever He will. And He knows best those who are rightly guided.

56 It is generally thought that this verse was revealed in connection with the Prophet's uncle and patron, Abū Ṭālib (Ṭ). According to Sunni accounts, when Abū Ṭālib was on his deathbed, the Prophet said to him, "Say, 'There is no god but God,' and I can bear witness for you on the Day of Resurrection." He responded, "Were it not for the fact that the Quraysh should shame me by saying, 'He did it only out of fear of death,' [I would do so]." This is the accepted version of events among Sunnis, but Shiites believe that at the end of his life Abū Ṭālib did embrace the faith of his nephew. Some point out that although the verse is addressed to the Prophet, it applies to all people and is exemplified in the examples of other prophets who were unable to guide some of those they loved: Adam and his son Cain (5:27–31), Noah and his son (11:42–46), Abraham and his father (9:114; Aj). Related verses include 2:272; 3:128–29; 9:113.

57 And they say, "If we follow guidance along with thee, we shall be snatched away from our land." Have We not established for them a secure Sanctuary, to which the fruits of all things are brought, as a provision from Our Presence? But most of them know not.

57 The statement in this verse by some of the Prophet's people indicates that they believed that what he said was true, but they feared being ostracized and losing their secure place, because the other Arabs did not share that belief (Q). The Sanctuary (ḥaram) was a place of relative safety and security in comparison with the surrounding lands of Arabia (Q). On the notion of the sanctuary and its privileged conditions, see 5:97c; 27:91c; 29:67c. Most of them know not that it is God Who established them in the first place and kept them safe (Ṭ). At a spiritual level, this verse can refer to those who offer various kinds of excuses to themselves or others as to why they have not or cannot embark on the spiritual life or why they cannot give up such and such in their attachment to the world (Aj).

58 And how many a town have We destroyed who exulted in their life of ease. There are their dwellings, uninhabited after them save for a few. And We, truly, are the Inheritor.

58 This verse is connected to the previous one in that the rejection of faith for the sake of retaining the objects of this world will eventually lead to loss of both those worldly goods and salvation in the Hereafter (R). How many a town have We destroyed? is also asked in various forms in 7:4; 21:11; 22:45; 47:13; 65:8. Exulted in their life of ease means that they did not know that they ought to have thanked God for what they had (Q). Save for a few does not mean that a few of the people remained, but that some of the ruins still stood, and people such as travelers would use them as temporary dwellings while on their journeys. In this sense it could also be rendered “save a little” (Q). The implication in We, truly, are the Inheritor is that, because of the utter destruction, none were left to inherit them but God (Ṭ). In a more general sense, a foundational teaching of the Quran is that all things return to God (e.g., 2:210; 3:83; 8:44; 11:123); He is the Inheritor of all things.

59 And thy Lord never destroys towns until He sends a messenger to their mother city to recite unto them Our signs. And We never destroy towns, save when their people are wrongdoers.

59 Most commentators understand this verse to be a reference to Makkah, which came to have (and still has) the traditional title Umm al-Qurā, meaning “Mother of Towns” (Q, Ṭ). By mother city (lit. “mother”) is meant the greatest or largest of them (Th, M). By towns is meant those towns around Makkah (M) or all towns, as most Muslims understand the title. Some say this verse can refer to all peoples who have towns and a central city to whom messengers have been sent (M). In other verses it is also said that God never destroyed a city or town before sending it a warner (e.g., 6:131; 11:117; 26:208).

60 And whatsoever you have been given, it is an enjoyment of the life of this world, and its ornament. But that which lies with God is better and more lasting. Will you not understand?

60 The inferiority of this transient world in comparison with the more enduring Hereafter or with what lies with God is a major theme of the Quran (see, e.g., 4:77; 7:169; 12:57; 16:30; 87:17). Some say that this world in relation to the Hereafter is like a speck of dust in relation to the sea, and that the realities of the Hereafter are lasting in that they never come to an end, unlike all things in this world, which certainly will end (R). The idea of the goods of this world as an ornament is also mentioned in 33:28.

61 And is he unto whom We made a goodly promise and who receives it, like unto him whom We granted enjoyment in the life of this world and who then, on the Day of Resurrection, will be among those arraigned?

61 The question in this verse—whether one who is promised the rewards of the Garden and then ultimately reaches them is like one who enjoys the world but loses a place of felicity in the Hereafter—serves as a reminder that poor and afflicted believers are superior in the sight of God to disbelievers who are wealthy and comfortable in this world (Q). Arraigned (muḥdar) has a negative connotation, as it is associated with being called to account (R); or it means being “made present” (a more literal rendering) in the Punishment of God (Ṭ). Some say that the two people being compared in this verse are the Prophet (in other opinions, ‘Alī ibn Abī Ṭālib or the Prophet’s uncle Ḥamzah) and Abū Jahl (see 28:55c), respectively (Ṭ).

62 And on the Day when he shall call out to them, and say, “Where are My partners, those whom you claimed?”

62 The partners (ascribed unto God) in this question posed on the Day of Judgment (cf. v. 74) can refer to inanimate objects such as idols, but also to living objects of worship, such as jinn, angels, or human beings; for the same or a similar question, see 6:22; 16:27; 40:73; 41:47. This verse thus describes a situation where those who have been resurrected now have knowledge of the Oneness of God and the truths that the prophets brought, but this knowledge has not come to them through reflection; it has come of necessity rather than by choice (R). The them is thought to refer to the leaders who misguide, which seems to be implied by the subsequent verse (R). You claimed refers to those leaders' claims that these objects of worship would help or intercede for those who put their faith in them (Q).

63 Those against whom the Word has already come due will say, “Our Lord! These are those whom we perverted. We perverted them as we ourselves were perverse. We disavow [them] before Thee; it was not us whom they worshipped.”

63 In the Quran the language of the Word “coming due” (e.g., 10:96; 36:7, 70; 39:71; 40:6) usually means the Word of punishment and requital, as when a guilty person receives a deserved or preordained sentence; see 10:33c; 36:7c. The words spoken in this verse are those of the leaders among the disbelievers and wrongdoers and those who misguided others, as also mentioned in such verses as 2:166: When those who were followed disavow those who followed (R). Perverted renders aghwā, and were perverse renders ghawā, both of which come from the same root; the former means to entice or lure someone from the way, and the latter means to stray or err. Some understand the leaders' disavowal to imply that it was not they whom the followers worshipped, but their own egotistical desires and attachments (R).

64 It will be said, “Call upon your partners.” So they will call upon them, but they will not answer them. And they will see the punishment—if only they had been rightly guided!

64 The idolaters are to call upon those whom they worshipped instead of or alongside God (Q); cf. 7:195; 17:36; 34:22. Since the former idolaters will know the inescapable certainty of their situation, some commentators interpret this verse to mean that not even they will expect an answer from their former objects of worship; rather, this experience is part of their chastisement (R).

If only they had been rightly guided is the first part of a conditional statement whose completion would be, “they would have been saved from the Fire” (Q) or “they would have known the truth” (R). Some read the whole sentence as the complete conditional statement: “They would have seen the punishment, if they had been rightly guided.” They may refer to the idolaters, who, had they been rightly guided in the world, would have had known to fear the punishment in the Hereafter; or they may refer to the idols, which would see the punishment if they were actually living beings capable of being guided (R).

65 And on the Day when He will call out to them and say, “What answer gave you to the message bearers?”

65 This verse is often understood in light of the fact that the prophets will be asked about the response of those to whom they were sent, as in 5:109: The Day when God will gather the messengers and say, “What response did you receive?” they shall say, “We have no knowledge. Truly it is Thou who knowest best the things unseen.”

66 the tidings shall be obscured for them on that Day, and they shall not question one another.

66 The tidings (anbāʿ) are understood to be pleas or arguments that shall be obscured for them, meaning that there are no valid arguments those people can make on their own behalf in the Hereafter (Q); or perhaps their news of each other will be obscured and they will not be able to question one another (R).

Question one another can also mean “inquire about one another,” but this will not occur (cf. 23:101) because of the terror of the Day (Q, R). However, in other verses (7:44–50; 37:27, 50; 52:25) some kind of mutual questioning is said to take place among the condemned, and in 74:40 such “questioning” is a part of the felicitous state of being in the Garden; on how this apparent disparity is dealt with, see 23:101c. The seeming contradiction in the accounts of whether people will “question one another” is similar to the question of whether God will speak to people on the Day of Resurrection, as some verses imply that He will and others that He will not; on this question, see 2:174c. On the similar issue of how or whether the guilty will be “questioned,” see 28:78c.

67 But for he who repented, believed, and worked righteousness, perchance he will be among those who prosper.

67 On the concept of repentance in the Quran, see 2:37c; 2:128c; 4:17–18c; 9:14–15c; 25:71c. Commentators often point out that in the Quran phrases such as perchance, it may be, and haply (usually ‘asā or la‘alla) denote not a possibility, but something that will necessarily come to pass because it is God Who is speaking (Q); see also 2:21c; 11:12c. This interpretation implies that such terms are meant to give hope to those who repent, believe, and do good works (R).

68 And thy Lord creates what He will, and chooses; no choice have they. Glory be to God and exalted is He above the partners they ascribe!

68 Many commentators say that thy Lord . . . chooses refers to the selection by God of prophets, and that this verse is a response either to those among the Quraysh who thought that a man of higher social standing and power than Muhammad would have merited the office of prophet or to those Jews who believed that the prophet should have been a Jew rather than an Arab (Q); on this subject, see 2:139c; 3:26c; 43:31c. For others it is thought to refer to the privilege of intercession (shafā‘ah; Q; see 2:48c; 2:255c). No choice have they means that it is not they who decide who will be a prophet or messenger (Q). It can also mean, according to some, that in all matters it is God, not the creature, Who decides (Q).

Some commentators, most notably al-Ṭabarī, read this verse, “Thy Lord creates what He will, and chooses that which is choicest of what they have,” understanding it to mean that God chooses the best among them for Himself. Al-Qurṭubī points out that al-Ṭabarī prefers this interpretation, because otherwise the verse, which can be rendered more literally as, “No choice had (kāna) they,” would imply that the idolaters had no choice in the past, but would in the future, an inference that al-Qurṭubī rejects, since kāna can apply to the future as well as the past.

On a spiritual level, this verse is understood to express a fundamental fact about the relationship between God and human beings, namely, that in their spiritual lives people must understand their own power of choice in submitting to what God chooses for them (Aj). Ibn ‘Ajībah quotes a saying of the Sufi master Abu’l-Ḥasan al-Shādhilī (d. 656/1258), “Forsake the directing of things, and if you must direct things, then let it be to direct yourself not to direct things,” referring to the art of submitting one’s will to the Will of God both outwardly and inwardly.

69 And thy Lord knows what their breasts conceal and what they disclose.

69 Cf. 27:74. According to this verse, God knows the opponents' inner thoughts of enmity against the Prophet and their contempt for God's choice, not only their outward abuse and hostility toward him (R). The concealing of thoughts and intentions within breasts (ṣudūr) is an important idea in the Quran, which frequently describes that God knows what lies within breasts (e.g., 3:119; 5:7; 8:43; 11:5; 29:10; 31:23; 39:7; 40:19; 42:24; 57:6; 64:4; 67:13; 100:10).

70 And He is God; there is no god but He! To Him belongs praise at the beginning and at the end. To Him belongs judgment, and unto Him shall you be returned.

70 At the beginning and at the end can mean at the beginning and end of time or this world and the next. The end renders al-ākhirah, which can also mean “the last” and is usually rendered “the Hereafter,” especially when it is juxtaposed against al-dunyā, or “this world” (al-dunyā literally means something like “the lower” or “the nearer”). In this verse al-ākhirah is coupled with the beginning (al-ūlā), which can also mean “the first.”

Judgment here renders ḥukm, which can also convey the sense of the power of decision, dominion, or rule as well as wisdom. In this world, all judgment and power are rightfully exercised only as a function of God's Judgment and Power, and in the Hereafter God will judge and decide directly between and among His creatures, which is part of that to which they shall be returned (R; e.g., 4:141; 10:93; 22:56; 27:78).

71 Say, “Have you considered: if God should make night come over you unceasingly until the Day of Resurrection, what god other than God would bring you light? Will you not, then, listen?”

72 Say, “Have you considered: if God should make day come over you unceasingly until the Day of Resurrection, what god other than God would bring you night, that you might rest therein? Will you not, then, see?”

73 Out of His Mercy He made for you night and day, that you may rest therein, and that you may seek of His Bounty, and that haply you may give thanks.

71-73 Unceasingly renders sarmad, a term that in the language of Islamic philosophy came to be associated with the notion of eternity. The alternation of night and day and the blessings particular to each half of the daily cycle are mentioned frequently in the Quran (e.g., 2:164; 3:190; 10:6; 13:3; 17:12; 22:61; 24:44; 31:29; 35:13; 39:5; 45:5). In this passage it is the alternation of activity and rest, exposure and hiddenness that is evoked, and human beings are asked to contemplate what the day, which enables work and the fulfillment of needs, would be like without the night's rest and tranquility, and similarly to contemplate what the night's quiet and rest would be like without the light of the day by which one is able to see (R). Human beings are then asked why they would worship a being who can neither provide nor take away the alternating of day and night, followed by the questions Will you not, then, listen? and Will you not, then, see? These rhetorical questions correspond to the half of the daily cycle that precedes them: during the night one depends more upon hearing, while during the day one depends more upon sight.

The night and the day can refer, in the context of the spiritual life, to periods of psychological and spiritual difficulty and ease, to confusion and clarity. A basic teaching of Islamic spirituality is the notion that it is through the alternation of the rhythms of the night and the day of the soul that one progresses and matures spiritually: if one experiences the expansion of the day too much, one becomes bold and importunate, but if one is relentlessly subject to the night of contraction, one becomes despairing and timid (Aj).

74 And on the Day when He shall call out to them, He will say, “Where are My partners, those whom you claimed?”

74 See 28:62c.

75 And We shall draw forth from every community a witness, and say, “Bring your proof.” Then they will know that the truth belongs to God. And that which they used to fabricate will forsake them.

75 It is thought that the bringing forth from every community a witness refers to prophets, as suggested by 4:41, which addresses the Prophet: How will it be when We bring forth a witness from every community, and We bring thee as a witness against these (Q, Ṭ). Alternately, it would include all those who could be named “witnesses” for their communities, since there will have been many generations within various communities without prophets actually living among them (R). Bring your proof is thought to be addressed to the communities that rejected their prophets, meaning that they should bring any evidence on their own behalf that they were justified in their rejection of the messengers sent to them (Ṭ). That which they used to fabricate refers to the idols that they invented (Q) and the lies that they told (R).

76 Truly Korah was of the people of Moses, but he transgressed against them. And We gave him such treasure that the keys to it would be a heavy burden for a group of strong men. [Remember] when his people said to him, “Exult not! Surely God loves not the exultant.

76 In the Bible the story of Korah (Qārūn), a prominent Israelite who rebelled against Moses, is told in Numbers 16; cf. 29:39c. Korah’s station in life exemplifies the lesson of v. 60, namely, that wealth and power in the world will not save one from the Punishment of God. Transgressed renders baghā, which can refer to his disbelief in God (Q) or his contemptuous attitude toward others stemming from his great wealth (Q); or it may point to his failure to give charity in accordance with proper belief, flaunting his wealth, or mistreating people (R). Some say that his attitude and actions stemmed partly from his jealousy of Moses and Aaron and the station that God had bestowed upon them. Here the admonition Exult not is understood to mean that he should not be wanton or miserly with this wealth, denying it from those who have a right to some of it (Q), and that he should not celebrate the things of this world as if there were no consequences in the Hereafter (R).

The meaning of the keys to such treasure here is interpreted variously to mean that they were literally keys to manifold treasures so numerous that a single man could not carry them; or that the nature of the burden was one of knowledge—he had so many different keys for different treasures they were difficult to count or keep track of; or that the keys were carried along with the treasures. It can also be interpreted to mean that these were keys of knowledge, meaning that Korah was proficient and knowledgeable in so many different areas that even the combined skills of a group of people could not equal his (R); keys are used with regard to knowledge in connection with God’s Knowledge of the Unseen in 6:59: And with Him are the keys of the Unseen (R).

77 And with what God has given you, seek after the Abode of the Hereafter, and forget not your portion in this world. And be good, as God has been good to you. Seek not to work corruption upon the earth. Surely God loves not the workers of corruption.”

77 Korah is advised to use his wealth for good works, rather than wasting it or being miserly with it (Q), although the advice also has general applications. Forget not your portion in this world is thought to mean that one should not waste one’s life by neglecting to do good works, be charitable, or prepare for the Hereafter (Q, Ṭ); others interpret it to mean that one should not go to extremes of asceticism and detachment from the world and enjoy what God has made permissible (Q, R, Ṭ). Here al-Qurṭubī quotes a saying of ʿAbd Allāh ibn ʿUmar (sometimes attributed to the Prophet or to ʿAlī): “Work for this world as though you would live forever, and work for the Hereafter as though you were to die tomorrow.” Some say that the portion in this world refers to one’s coffin or grave (Q), and thus the phrase points to the important spiritual attitude of remembering death. The root of good in And be good, as God has been good to you is ḥ-s-n, which also has the sense of beauty and virtue.

78 He said, “I have only been given it on account of knowledge I possess.” Did he not know that God has destroyed generations before him who were mightier in strength and greater in what they had amassed? And the guilty will not be questioned about their sins.

78 On account of knowledge renders ‘alā ‘ilm, which appears also in 7:52; 39:49; 44:32; 45:23. Some think that here it means Korah possessed certain skills and proficiencies that enabled him to become wealthy (some say he was a goldsmith; others transmit a tradition that he was an alchemist, which are both mentioned and dismissed by commentators). In this instance of ‘alā ‘ilm, it is clear that Korah attributes the blessings he possesses to knowledge he has, but in other instances this phrase can also be used to mean that God acts based upon His Knowledge (translated with knowledge or knowingly; 7:52; 44:32; 45:23). In other instances the sense of ‘alā ‘ilm is more open to interpretation; see 39:49c. Some commentators read ‘indī, rendered here as I possess, to mean “in my opinion,” which is another usage of the word and which would make the translation, “I have only been given it on account of knowledge, in my opinion” (R, Ṭ).

Other verses in which disbelievers are reminded of those generations or peoples who came before them who were as great or greater than they were in worldly possessions and strength and yet were destroyed include 6:6; 19:74; 40:82; 47:13; 50:36; see 40:82c.

Some interpret the guilty will not be questioned about their sins to mean that the guilty of one generation will not be questioned about or held responsible for the sins of another generation (Ṭ). That the guilty are not questioned about their sins is similar in meaning to 30:57: Nor can they make amends (Q); and 41:24: And if they seek favor, they will not be granted favor. It can also mean that God has no need to question them about their deeds, because He already knows these deeds completely (R).

Because other verses indicate that people will be questioned, such as 15:92, So by thy Lord, We shall question them all, some note that there are different kinds of questions to be asked—those that seek information, those that call one to account, and those that are meant as rebuke (R)—and these different verses can be referring to those different kinds of questions, so that God questions them in one respect, but does not question them in another. For a similar issue of whether and how people will question one another, see 28:66c.

According to the Sufis, one should not exult in one’s own attainments or be pleased with one’s own state, words, or actions; they believe that individuals who look at their own accomplishments with a sense of glory should be considered wretched (Aj).

79 And he came forth unto his people in his adornment. Those who desired the life of this world said, “Would that we had the like of that which has been given to Korah. Truly he is a possessor of great fortune!”

80 But those who had been given knowledge said, “Woe unto you! The Reward of God is better for those who believe and work righteousness, and none shall receive it save the patient.”

79–80 The commentators relate various descriptions of the fantastic wealth and luxury displayed by Korah (Q, Ṭ). Although it is more plausible that those who had been given knowledge refers to people of piety and wisdom, some commentators say that it refers to the “rabbis” or “priests” (aḥbār; Q), though this would have been somewhat of an anachronism as applied to the time of Moses. These people who had been given knowledge point out that one must be patient and steadfastly obedient in the world in order to attain success in the Hereafter (Q).

81 Then We caused the earth to engulf him and his house. And he had no party who could help him against God, nor could he help himself.

82 And morning found those who had longed to be in his place the day before saying, “Alas! It seems God outspreads and straitens provision for whomsoever He will among His servants. Had God not been gracious to us, He would have caused us to be engulfed [as well]. Alas! It seems the disbelievers will not prosper!”

81–82 Some commentators relate that because of the enmity, rebellion, and scurrilous actions that Korah undertook against Moses, God granted the latter the power to call upon the earth to swallow him (Q, Ṭ). Party renders fiʿah, a word that in other contexts refers to a group upon whom one can call for support in a battle (see 8:15–16c). In both instances in v. 82, it seems renders kaʿanna, which some understand as providing emphasis: “Indeed, God outspreads,” or with an implicit verb, “Alas! [Know that] God outspreads” or “Alas! [Do you not know that] God outspreads?” (Q, Ṭ). Others read this phrase as meaning, “Alas for you! Truly God outspreads,” which is possible depending on how the letters are voweled (Q, R). The idea that God outspreads and straitens also appears in 13:26; 17:30; 29:62; 30:37;

34:36, 39; 39:52). And morning found those could also mean simply “and it came to be that those.”

83 That is the Abode of the Hereafter, which We ordain for those who desire neither dominance upon the earth, nor corruption. And the end belongs to the reverent.

83 That refers to the Garden (Q), which one will attain not through dominance or corruption, but by no longer dominating or corrupting (R). Dominance renders ‘uluww, which also can mean “ascendancy,” “exaltedness,” or “grandeur.” The end can denote the outcome of something, and the Quran also states elsewhere that the end belongs to the reverent (7:128; 11:49; 13:35). Corruption (fasād), a word that literally means “rot,” is used here, as in most instances in the Quran, to mean corruption in the broadest sense, including ethical and financial corruption, decadence, and immorality.

84 Whosoever brings a good deed, he shall have better than it; and whosoever brings an evil deed, those who perform evil deeds shall only be recompensed for that which they have done.

84 That the reward for good deeds is multiplied is also mentioned in 6:160: Whosoever brings a good deed shall have ten times the like thereof (see also 2:245, 261; 4:40; 64:17).

85 Truly the One Who ordained the Quran for thee shall surely bring thee back to the place of return. Say, “My Lord knows best those who bring guidance, and those who are in manifest error.”

85 This verse is often recited by Muslims as a prayer of protection for those who are about to set out on a journey. What is ordained consists of the commands and prohibitions of the Quran, to be followed in this life, after which one will be returned to God after death (R); or ordained the Quran for thee signifies “bestowed the Quran upon thee” (Ṭ).

Some understand this verse to be a promise to the Prophet that he would return to Makkah victorious (Q, R, Ṭ). It is said in some traditional sources that this verse was revealed neither in Makkah nor in Madinah, but in Juḥfah, between Makkah and Madinah, during the Prophet’s emigration (hijrah); its purpose was to console the Prophet in his sadness at having to leave his home by informing him that he would return to it (Q, R). The place of return refers to one’s death, or to the Day of Resurrection, or to the Garden (Q, Ṭ).

86 And thou didst not hope that the Book would be delivered unto thee; rather, it was a mercy from thy Lord. So be not a support for the disbelievers.

86 The first part of this verse is taken to mean that the Prophet did not know beforehand that he was to be chosen as a messenger by God (Q). Some say that this verse could also be read, “Thou didst not hope that the Book would be delivered unto thee, but only for mercy from thy Lord” (R, Z). For the notion of what it means to be a support (ḡahīr), see 28:17c.

87 And let them not turn thee from the signs of God after they have been sent down unto thee. But call [others] to thy Lord and be not among those who ascribe partners unto God.

87 In this verse the Prophet is told not to let the disbelievers’ lies, denials, and efforts to harm him or shake him from his mission (Q, R); rather, he should call them to the affirmation of the Oneness of God. It is said that this verse was revealed when the Quraysh were trying to induce the Prophet to praise or magnify their gods (Q), but some assert that the real audience for this verse is not the Prophet himself, but the community of believers as a whole (R).

88 And call not upon another god along with God. There is no god but He! All things perish, save His Face. Judgment belongs to Him, and unto Him will you be returned.

88 Face renders wajh, a word with a rich range of meanings. For some it means God Himself (Q, Th), the Divine Essence or Self (al-Dhāt; Z), or Truth/Reality (al-Ḥaqq; Th). Others emphasize the Face as what one faces, interpreting the verse to mean that all objects of aspiration other than God will come to nothing (M). Some say this verse means that all actions are empty except for those that lead one to God (Su) or that all things perish except those things by which one approaches God (IK, Q). This latter meaning echoes the opinion that Face refers to God’s religion (Q, Ṭb). Others say that this verse means anything that lives will die, except God (Qu). Others interpret it to mean all things perish except God, the Garden, the Fire, and the Throne (Th). See also commentary on 55:26–27: All upon it passes away. And there remains the Face of thy Lord. Ibn Kathīr cites a ḥadīth of the Prophet: “The truest words spoken by a poet were those of [the pre-Islamic poet] Labīd, ‘All that is other than God is false (bāṭil)’” (bāṭil can also mean “vain” or “void”); the poem continues, “And every enjoyment will without doubt vanish.” Wajh can also be understood to mean that aspect of the Divine Reality that is turned toward His creation.

For some, perish (hālik) means to become nothing or to be annihilated (R), while for others it means to be removed, through death, from a state of being able to benefit from the Face of God; in this latter sense perishing or being destroyed does not mean that a thing becomes literally nothing. Al-Rāzī uses the example of a garment, which, when it becomes tattered or ripped to the point of becoming unusable, is said to have perished or been destroyed, even though its constituent parts remain. He extends this imagery to the heavens and the earth, which will be destroyed, but whose parts will not become literally nothing, as suggested by 14:48: On the Day the earth shall be changed into other than the earth, and the heavens [too]. For others, “perishing” means that a thing is essentially or by its nature perishable and subject to destruction; that is, a “perishing” thing is ephemeral or contingent (R), which is the status of all created beings.

The Spider

Most scholars maintain that al-ʿAnkabūt is a Makkan sūrah, although many of those say the first ten verses were revealed in Madinah (Āl, IJ, Q, Tb). A minority maintain that it is Madinan (IJ), but some say that the first ten verses were the last verses revealed in Makkah (Āl, IJ). According to several sources, among them the Prophet’s wife ʿĀʾishah, the Prophet would recite Sūrahs 29 and 30 together in his prayers, sometimes followed by Sūrah 36. The sūrah takes its name from the use of the spider’s house as a metaphor for the frailty of this world in v. 41: The parable of those who take protectors apart from God is that of the spider that makes a house. Truly the frailest of houses is the spider’s house, if they but knew. This verse evokes the central theme of this sūrah, that human beings are not aware of the true nature of God and the Hereafter and that in taking protectors other than God, they take the frailest of positions and thus are not prepared for what will transpire after death.

Al-ʿAnkabūt begins by challenging the believers who think that their faith or belief alone will save them from the trials of this life, reminding them of the difficulties of this life and that one must continue to strive in the way of God, since truth rarely prevails without great effort and sacrifice (vv. 1–13). It then provides examples of previous communities, such as those of the prophets Noah, Abraham, Hūd, and Šāliḥ, who disobeyed the messengers God had sent to them (vv. 14–43). After discussing the Quran and its purifying efficacy, while reaffirming its transcendent Source (vv. 44–51), the sūrah responds to the objections posed by the disbelievers and addresses the nature of their beliefs (vv. 52–63). It concludes with a meditation on the ephemerality of this world, assuring those who believe in God and the Hereafter that by remaining thankful and striving for God, they will be rightly guided (vv. 64–69).

① Alif. Lām. Mīm. ② Does mankind suppose that they will be left to say, “We believe,” and that they will not be tried, ③ though We have indeed tried those who were before them? Surely God knows those who are truthful, and surely He knows the liars. ④ Or do those who commit evil deeds suppose that they will outstrip Us? Evil indeed is the judgment they make! ⑤ Whosoever hopes for the meeting with God, God’s term is coming. And He is the Hearing, the Knowing. ⑥ And whosoever strives, strives only for himself. Truly God is beyond need of the worlds. ⑦ And those who believe and perform righteous deeds, We shall surely absolve them of their evil deeds, and We shall surely recompense them according to the best of that which they used to do. ⑧ And We have enjoined man to be good unto his parents. But if they urge thee to ascribe as partner unto Me that whereof thou hast no knowledge, then obey them not. Unto Me is your return, whereupon I shall inform you of that which you used to do. ⑨ And those who believe and perform righteous deeds, We shall surely cause them to enter among the righteous. ⑩ Among mankind are those who say, “We believe in God”; but if he is harmed for the sake of God, he takes persecution from men to be as God’s Punishment. Yet if help comes from thy Lord, he will surely say, “We were indeed with you.” Does God not know best what lies within the breasts of all creatures? ⑪ Surely God knows those who believe, and surely He knows the hypocrites. ⑫ Those who disbelieve say to those who believe, “Follow our path and we shall bear your sins.” But they bear not aught of their sins. Truly they are liars. ⑬ Surely they will bear their own burdens, and others’ burdens along with their own, and on the Day of Resurrection they will surely be questioned concerning that which they used to fabricate. ⑭ And indeed We sent Noah unto his people and he remained among them a thousand years, less fifty; and the flood seized them, for they were wrongdoers. ⑮ Then We saved him and the companions of the ship, and We made it a sign for the worlds. ⑯ And [We sent] Abraham, when he said to his people, “Worship God and reverence Him. That is better for you, if you but knew. ⑰ You only worship idols apart from God, and you only create perversion. Truly those whom you worship apart from God have no power over what provision may come to you. So seek your provision with God, worship Him, and be thankful to Him; unto Him shall you be returned. ⑱ But if you deny, then communities have certainly denied before you; and naught is incumbent upon the Messenger but the clear proclamation.” ⑲ Have they not considered how God originates creation, then brings it back? Truly that is easy for God. ⑳ Say, “Journey upon the earth and observe how He originated creation. Then God shall bring the next genesis into being. Truly God is Powerful over all things.” ㉑ He punishes whomsoever He will and has mercy upon whomsoever He will, and unto Him will you be returned. ㉒ You thwart not on earth, nor in Heaven; and apart from God you have no protector or helper. ㉓ Those who disbelieve in God’s signs and in the meeting with Him, they despair of My Mercy, and for them there shall be a painful punishment. ㉔ Yet the answer of his people was but to say, “Slay him, or burn him!” Then God saved him from the fire. Truly in that are signs for a people who believe. ㉕ And Abraham said, “You have taken idols apart from God on account of affection between you in the life of this world. Then on the Day of Resurrection you will disown one another, and you will curse one another; your refuge will be the Fire, and you will have no helpers.” ㉖ And Lot believed him and said, “Truly I am fleeing unto my Lord. Truly He is the Mighty, the Wise.” ㉗ And We bestowed upon him Isaac and Jacob, and We established prophethood and scripture among his progeny. We gave him his reward in this world, and in the Hereafter he shall truly be among the righteous. ㉘ And [We sent] Lot, when he said to his people, “Truly you commit indecency such as none in the worlds committed before you. ㉙ What! Do you come unto men, cut off the way, and commit reprehensible deeds in your gatherings?” Yet the answer of his people was but to say, “Bring us God’s Punishment, if you are among the truthful.” 30 He said, “My Lord, help me against the people who work corruption.” 31 And when Our envoys came unto Abraham with glad tidings, they said, “We shall surely destroy the people of this town; truly its people are wrongdoers.” 32 He said, “Verily, Lot is in it.” They said, “We know better who is in it. Assuredly We shall save him and his family, save for his wife; she is among those who lagged behind.” 33 And when Our envoys came unto Lot, he was distressed on their account; yet he was constrained from helping them. And they said, “Be not afraid, nor grieve. We shall surely save thee and thy family, save for thy wife; she is among those who lagged behind. 34 Truly we shall bring down upon the people of this town a torment from Heaven for having been iniquitous.” 35 And We indeed have left of it a manifest sign for a people who understand. 36 And unto Midian, [We sent] their brother Shu‘ayb; he said, “O my people! Worship God and hope for the Last Day, and behave not wickedly upon the earth, working corruption.” 37 But they denied him, and so the earthquake seized them, and morning found them lying lifeless in their abode; 38 and ‘Ād, and Thamūd; [their fate] is certainly evident to you from their dwellings. Satan made their deeds seem fair unto them and thus turned them from the way, though they had been discerning; 39 and Korah, and Pharaoh, and Hāmān! Indeed, Moses brought them clear proofs, but they waxed arrogant upon the earth, and outstripped [Us] not. 40 Each We seized for his sin. Among them are some upon whom We sent a torrent of stones, and among them are some whom the Cry seized, and among them are some whom We caused the earth to engulf, and among them are some whom We drowned. God wronged them not, but themselves did they wrong. 41 The parable of those who take protectors apart from God is that of the spider that makes a house. Truly the frailest of houses is the spider’s house, if they but knew. 42 Truly God knows whatsoever they call upon apart from Him. And He is the Mighty, the Wise. 43 These are the parables; We set them forth for mankind. But none understand them, save those who know. 44 God created the heavens and the earth in truth. Surely in that is a sign for believers. 45 Recite that which has been revealed unto thee of the Book, and perform the prayer. Truly prayer prevents against indecency and abomination, but the remembrance of God is surely greater. And God knows whatsoever you do. ⁴⁶ And dispute not with the People of the Book, save in the most virtuous manner, unless it be those of them who have done wrong. And say, "We believe in that which was sent down unto us and was sent down unto you; our God and your God are one, and unto Him are we submitters." ⁴⁷ Thus have We sent down unto thee the Book. So those unto whom We have given the Book believe in it. Among them are some who believe in it; and none reject Our signs, save the disbelievers. ⁴⁸ And thou didst not recite before this any Book; nor didst thou write it with thy right hand, for then those who make false claims would have doubted. ⁴⁹ Nay, it is but clear signs in the breasts of those who have been given knowledge, and none reject Our signs, save the wrongdoers. ⁵⁰ And they say, "Why have signs not been sent down unto him from his Lord?" Say, "Signs are with God alone, and I am only a clear warner." ⁵¹ Does it not suffice them that We have sent down unto thee the Book that is recited unto them? Surely in that is a mercy and a reminder for a people who believe. ⁵² Say, "God suffices as a Witness between you and me. He knows whatsoever is in the heavens and on the earth." And those who believe in what is false and disbelieve in God, it is they who are the losers. ⁵³ And they bid thee hasten the punishment. Yet were it not for a term appointed, the punishment would have come upon them. And it will surely come upon them suddenly, while they are unaware. ⁵⁴ And they bid thee hasten the punishment. Truly Hell shall encompass the disbelievers ⁵⁵ on the Day when the punishment will cover them from above and from beneath their feet, and We shall say, "Taste that which you used to do!" ⁵⁶ O My servants who believe! Truly My earth is vast. So worship Me. ⁵⁷ Every soul shall taste death. Then unto Us shall you be returned. ⁵⁸ And those who believe and perform righteous deeds, We shall surely settle them in lofty abodes of the Garden with rivers running below, therein to abide. Excellent indeed is the reward of the workers [of righteousness], ⁵⁹ those who are patient and trust in their Lord. ⁶⁰ And how many a beast bears not its own provision, yet God provides for it and for you? And He is the Hearing, the Knowing. ⑥1 Wert thou to ask them, “Who created the heavens and the earth and made the sun and the moon subservient?” They would surely say, “God.” How, then, are they perverted? ⑥2 God outspreads and straitens provision for whomsoever He will among His servants. Truly God is Knower of all things. ⑥3 And wert thou to ask them, “Who sends down water from the sky and revives thereby the earth after its death?” They would surely say, “God.” Say, “Praise be to God!” Nay, but most of them understand not. ⑥4 The life of this world is naught but diversion and play. And surely the Abode of the Hereafter is life indeed, if they but knew. ⑥5 And when they board a ship, they call upon God, devoting religion entirely to Him, but when He delivers them to land, behold, they ascribe partners [unto Him]. ⑥6 So let them be ungrateful for that which We have given them, and let them enjoy themselves, for soon they will know! ⑥7 Or have they not considered that We have made a secure sanctuary while people are snatched away all around them? Do they believe in that which is false? And are they ungrateful for God’s Blessing? ⑥8 Who does greater wrong than one who fabricates a lie against God or denies the truth when it comes unto him? Is there not within Hell an abode for the disbelievers? ⑥9 But as for those who strive for Us, We shall surely guide them in Our ways. Truly God is with the virtuous.

1 The Arabic letters alif, lām, and mīm, which also appear in 2:1; 3:1; 30:1; 31:1; and 32:1 are among the separated letters (al-muqattaʿāt) that are found at the beginning of twenty-nine sūrahs and whose ultimate meaning is considered by most commentators to be known only to God; see 2:1c. In this context, some say that Alif Lām Mīm is a name for the sūrah or a name for the Quran (Q).

② Does mankind suppose that they will be left to say, “We believe,” and that they will not be tried,

2 That human beings will be tried is attested in many Quranic verses and is believed to be inherent in creation, as in 67:2, where God is described as He Who created death and life that He may try you as to which of you is most virtuous in deed. Of this broad Quranic theme, al-Tustarī is reported to have said, “Truly affliction is a doorway between the people of spiritual knowledge (ahl al-maʿrifah) and God” (ST), meaning that through affliction and forbearance true knowledge of God can be attained. Although the meaning of this verse applies to all Muslims, commentators offer several separate instances as the possible occasion of its revelation. According to one account, this verse was revealed about Mihja^c, the first Muslim to be killed at the Battle of Badr. His wife and parents were distraught because of his death, so God revealed vv. 2–3, explaining that Muslims were not exempt from suffering trials and hardship for the sake of God (IJ, Q, W). According to another account, vv. 2–3 were revealed in response to the situation of a group of Muslims who had not been able to emigrate from Makkah to Madinah with the others (IJ, Q, Ṭ). When this group first attempted to emigrate, they were stopped by the idolaters; then the first ten verses of this sūrah were revealed. When they heard the revelation, they resolved to try to emigrate again. Some were killed and some were saved, and then 16:110 was revealed: Then indeed thy Lord, for those who emigrated after being oppressed, then strove and were patient, surely thy Lord thereafter is Forgiving, Merciful (IJ, Q); see commentary on 16:110; 8:74–75.

③ though We have indeed tried those who were before them? Surely God knows those who are truthful, and surely He knows the liars.

3 Those who were before them refers to the followers of previous prophets, such as Moses and Jesus, who suffered persecution for their beliefs, but persevered (Q, Ṭ). In this sense vv. 2–3 are similar to 2:214: Or did you suppose that you would enter the Garden without there having come to you the like of that which came to those who passed away before you? Misfortune and hardship befell them, and they were so shaken that the Messenger and those who believed with him said, “When will God’s help come?” Yea, surely God’s Help is near (cf. 3:142). That God knows the truthful and the liars can be understood to mean that God tries them not to learn their true natures, but to make their true natures manifest, as God knows their true natures before they are tested (Ṭ). To be afflicted by trials is thus considered beneficial for believers, as it both manifests their true natures and serves to expiate some of their sins. In this regard, the Prophet is reported to have said, “No fatigue, disease, sorrow, sadness, hurt, or distress befalls a Muslim—even if he be pricked by a thorn—but that God expiates some of his sins thereby.” Similarly the Quran says of those who oppose the disbelievers, No thirst, nor toil, nor hunger befalls them in the way of God; nor do they take any step enraging the disbelievers; nor do they endure aught at the hands of an enemy; . . . nor do they spend aught, be it small or large; nor traverse a valley, but that it is written down for them, that God may reward them for the best of that which they used to do (9:120–21).

④ Or do those who commit evil deeds suppose that they will outstrip Us? Evil indeed is the judgment they make!

4 Whereas the previous verses chastise those who may think their declaration of faith will spare them, the present verse criticizes disbelievers who take the fact that they experience health and wealth as an indication that they will not be punished. They will not outstrip Us means that none can thwart or evade God (Ṭ, Z), as in 8:59: And let not those who disbelieve suppose they have outstripped [anyone]. Indeed, they thwart nothing (Z). Their judgment is evil (cf. 6:36; 16:59; 45:21) or simply bad, because it is based upon neither reason nor revelation and thus has no foundation (R).

⑤ Whosoever hopes for the meeting with God, God's term is coming. And He is the Hearing, the Knowing.

5 Here the meeting with God is understood as a reference to reaching one's final end and all it entails, such as meeting the Angel of Death, the Resurrection, the Reckoning, and the Recompense (Bd, Z). In this sense, Whosoever hopes for the meeting with God is sometimes interpreted to mean "Whosoever fears the meeting with God," that is, fears God's Punishment (Q); or it is said to refer to both those who hope for reward and those who fear the Reckoning (Aj). God's term—that is, the term that God has appointed—refers to death (R, Z) or the Resurrection (R). In this context, that it is coming alludes to the reward that one who hopes and works for the meeting with God is to receive (R). It can also be understood as an injunction to all who believe that they must devote themselves to those acts that will demonstrate and confirm their hope to meet with God and bring them closer to Him (Z).

⑥ And whosoever strives, strives only for himself. Truly God is beyond need of the worlds.

6 Since human beings are punished and rewarded for their own actions, ultimately one strives only for oneself. One's deeds are not for God, since God is beyond need of anything human beings do, and those deeds cannot be counted for or against another person, because none shall bear the burden of another (6:164; 17:15; 35:18; 39:7; 53:38). This verse thus indicates a moral reflexivity in which the ultimate impact of one's actions, whether good or evil, falls upon oneself, as in 41:46 and 45:15: Whosoever works righteousness, it is for his own soul. And whosoever commits evil, it is to the detriment thereof (on this subject of individual moral responsibility, see also 2:9, 272; 3:69; 6:123; 8:60; 9:34–35; 10:23; 35:18).

⑦ And those who believe and perform righteous deeds, We shall surely absolve them of their evil deeds, and We shall surely recompense them according to the best of that which they used to do.

7 The retribution people would receive for their evil deeds is absolved or outweighed by the reward for their good deeds (Z). In addition, idolaters who embrace belief and act in accord with it will be absolved of their previous evil deeds; that is, they will be requited in accordance with their faith rather than the acts of disobedience they committed before they embraced Islam (Z). From one perspective, their evil deeds are absolved through their faith and then they are rewarded for their good deeds (R). Faith and belief are even understood to help cover over one's evil deeds in this life (R). God requites people according to the best of that which they used to do (cf. 9:121; 16:96–97; 24:38; 39:35; 46:16), because righteous deeds are the only deeds that truly remain, since they are performed seeking the Face of God (2:272) and all things perish, save His Face (28:88; R). In contrast, “that which is not performed for God does not last through itself, through the one who performs it, or through the one for whom it is performed; thus it is not righteous” (R). The righteous deed is said to have three components or aspects: actualization in the heart through belief, reflection, and affirmation; actualization through the tongue by bearing witness to what is in the heart, implying right intention; and actualization through the bodily members by means of acts of obedience and worship (R).

⑧ And We have enjoined man to be good unto his parents. But if they urge thee to ascribe as partner unto Me that whereof thou hast no knowledge, then obey them not. Unto Me is your return, whereupon I shall inform you of that which you used to do.

8 Goodness, gratitude, and virtue toward parents are enjoined in several verses (4:36; 31:14–15; 46:15), and in 2:83 Be virtuous toward parents is listed as the first injunction of the covenant (mīthāq). Obedience toward parents is considered one of the highest virtues in Islam and is thus presented alongside the command to worship God (2:83; 4:36; 6:151; 17:23). The Prophet also told his Companions, “To attribute partners unto God and to be disrespectful toward parents” are “the greatest of the major sins.” If one's parents remain idolaters, one is to continue to consort with them in a kindly manner, but not to obey them in matters that would run contrary to religious dictates (see 31:15).

According to several early commentators, this verse was revealed about Sa'd ibn Abī Waqqās. When he embraced Islam, his mother, Hannah, said to him: “O Sa'd, I heard that you have renounced your old religion. By God! I will not take shelter under any roof to protect me from the sun and wind, nor will I eat or drink, until you disbelieve in Muhammad and revert to your old religion.” For three days, his mother did not eat, drink, or take shelter until it was feared that she might perish. At that point, Sa'd went to the Prophet to express his lament. As a response God revealed this verse as well as 31:14 and 46:15 (Q, T, W).

That in the Hereafter God will inform people about their deeds performed during the life of this world is a prevalent Quranic theme; see 5:14, 105; 6:60, 108, 159; 9:94, 105; 10:23; 24:64; 31:15, 23; 39:7; 41:50; 58:6–7; 62:8; 64:7; 75:13.

9 And those who believe and perform righteous deeds, We shall surely cause them to enter among the righteous.

9 Cause them to enter among the righteous means that believers will either enter the Garden with the righteous or be counted among those who are righteous. In a similar vein, those who believe and perform righteous deeds will enter Gardens with rivers running below (4:57, 122; 14:23; 22:14, 23; cf. 2:25; 10:9), be made joyous in a Garden (30:15), and have Gardens of bliss (31:8; cf. 22:56). God shall pay them their rewards in full, and will increase them from His Bounty (4:173), for to them God has promised forgiveness and a great reward (5:9; cf. 22:50), thus theirs is blessedness and a beautiful return (13:29) and for them shall the Compassionate ordain love (19:96).

10 Among mankind are those who say, “We believe in God”; but if he is harmed for the sake of God, he takes persecution from men to be as God’s Punishment. Yet if help comes from thy Lord, he will surely say, “We were indeed with you.” Does God not know best what lies within the breasts of all creatures?

10 This verse addresses the state of hypocrites who would backslide whenever affliction befell them (Q, T, W). According to Mujāhid, it was revealed about people who would declare faith with their tongues, but would succumb to disbelief when tested with trials or calamities (Q, W). Ibn ʿAbbās is reported to have said that this verse was revealed about some believers in Makkah who were forced by the idolaters to march with them to the Battle of Badr and about whom 4:97 was then revealed, claiming that they had no excuse for having joined the Makkan army (Q, T, W), after which 16:110 then offered them a means of repentance (T); see

4:98–99c; 29:2c. That God knows what lies within the breasts is repeated verbatim in 3:119, 154; 5:7; 8:43; 11:5; 31:23; 35:38; 39:7; 42:24; 57:6; 64:4; 67:13; see 5:7c.

⑪ Surely God knows those who believe, and surely He knows the hypocrites.

11 This is most likely the first use of hypocrites (munāfiqūn) in the chronological order of revelation, as hypocrisy did not become an issue within the Muslim community until the Madinan period. In the Quranic context, hypocrisy indicates moral wavering in addition to conscious dissembling, so that one who is unable to commit and always seeking to maintain options can also be considered a munāfiq; see the introduction to Sūrah 63; 63:1–8c.

⑫ Those who disbelieve say to those who believe, “Follow our path and we shall bear your sins.” But they bear not aught of their sins. Truly they are liars.

12–13 Cf. 14:21; 40:47. Those who have led others in disbelief and in rejecting God’s messengers will bear the burden of the punishment for their own disbelief and an additional burden for having led others astray (see also 16:25). This punishment will not, however, alleviate the burden of those who followed them, for individuals are responsible for their own actions, since none shall bear the burden of another (6:164; 17:15; 35:18; 39:7; 53:38). Elsewhere, those whom they have led astray supplicate to God, Our Lord, it was they who led us astray; so give them a double punishment in the Fire (7:38; cf. 33:68; 38:61); see 7:38–39c.

⑭ And indeed We sent Noah unto his people and he remained among them a thousand years, less fifty; and the flood seized them, for they were wrongdoers.

⑮ Then We saved him and the companions of the ship, and We made it a sign for the worlds.

14–15 For the Quranic account of Noah and the flood, see 7:59–64; 10:71–73; 11:25–48; 21:76–77; 23:23–30; 26:105–21; 37:75–82; 54:9–15, and Sūrah 71. The companions of the ship refers to his children and his wives (Ṭ) or to a larger group of seventy-eight, ten, or eight believers, divided evenly between men and women (Z). As with other prophets whose people met with calamity and destruction for having rejected them, Noah and those who followed him were spared the punishment. That God made it a sign is understood to mean that the ship remained for many years upon the top of Mount Jūdī (IJ, Ṭ), though some say that it refers to the punishment (Ṭ, Ṭs), hence the flood that came upon Noah’s people. In either interpretation it can be understood as a sign of the manner in which God will separate the believers from the disbelievers on the Day of Resurrection (Ṭs). When a sign is understood as a reference to the whole story, it also reminds one to reflect upon the Grace of God in providing for and saving Noah and those with him, as God not only warned them, but also made the waters recede before their provisions ran out (R).

⑯ And [We sent] Abraham, when he said to his people, “Worship God and reverence Him. That is better for you, if you but knew.

⑰ You only worship idols apart from God, and you only create perversion. Truly those whom you worship apart from God have no power over what provision may come to you. So seek your provision with God, worship Him, and be thankful to Him; unto Him shall you be returned.

16–17 Various aspects of Abraham’s story are repeated in over two hundred verses of the Quran. Islam presents itself as the renewal of his creed, as in 6:161, where the Prophet is enjoined, Say, “Truly my Lord has guided me unto a straight path, an upright religion, the creed of Abraham.” Thus 2:130 asks rhetorically, Who shuns the creed of Abraham, but a foolish soul? And Muslims are all enjoined to follow the creed of Abraham (3:95; 16:123). When challenged by Jews and Christians as to the origins of their religion, Muslims are counseled to say, [Ours is] the creed of Abraham (2:135); see 3:67c.

The injunction to worship God and reverence Him is a summation of Abraham's more extensive entreaties in 19:42–48, where he withdraws from his people; 21:52–66, where he smashes their idols; 26:69–76; and 37:85–95. His criticism of their idol worship is found in several accounts, as when he chastises his father, saying, Do you take idols for gods? Truly I see you and your people in manifest error (6:74; cf. 19:42; 21:52). But the only justification that his father and his people are able to give is, We found our fathers worshipping them (21:53; cf. 26:74).

That they only create perversion refers to their lie in claiming that their idols are gods (I). That the idols they worship have no power over what provision may come (cf. 16:73) indicates the utter futility of their worship and that their “gods” cannot even be considered minor deities who bring them closer to God, as they claim when they say, We do not worship them, save to bring us nigh in nearness unto God (39:3). Similarly Jesus is said to have addressed the disbelievers, Do you worship, apart from God, that which has no power over what benefit or harm may come upon you? (5:76); see 25:3c. Unto Him shall you be returned (cf. 2:28, 245; 10:56; 11:34; 21:35; 28:70, 88; 29:57; 30:11; 39:44; 41:21) speaks to the promise of the Resurrection; see 2:28c.

⑱ But if you deny, then communities have certainly denied before you; and naught is incumbent upon the Messenger but the clear proclamation.”

18 This verse can be read as a continuation of Abraham's address to his people or as the beginning of a break in the story of Abraham, which then resumes in v. 24 (IK). In either reading, communities have certainly denied before you serves as a reminder and a consolation to the Prophet Muhammad that, as in the case of Abraham, previous communities rejected the messengers sent to them, though the messengers eventually prevailed. That Muhammad and other prophets are only responsible for the clear proclamation—that is, for delivering God's Message—is emphasized in many passages (e.g., 3:20; 5:92, 99; 13:40; 16:35, 82; 24:54; 36:17; 42:48; 64:12).

19 Have they not considered how God originates creation, then brings it back? Truly that is easy for God.

19–23 Most commentators see these verses as a break in the story of Abraham, which is resumed in v. 24. Others interpret them as a continuation of Abraham’s words in vv. 16–18.

19 This verse is one of many instances in which the Quran refers to God’s Ability to “originate creation” as an argument for His Ability to resurrect, both of which are said to be easy for God, as in 30:27: He it is Who originates creation, then brings it back, and that is most easy for Him (see also 10:34; 27:64; 64:7; 10:4c; 30:11c).

20 Say, “Journey upon the earth and observe how He originated creation. Then God shall bring the next genesis into being. Truly God is Powerful over all things.”

20 Although here the call is to journey upon the earth and observe or reflect upon the created order, other instances call for one to journey in order to observe how the deniers fared in the end (3:137; 16:36; cf. 6:11; 27:69; 30:42). Regarding the spiritual value of journeying, see 30:9c. The next genesis (cf. 53:37) refers to resurrection after death (IJ, T).

21 He punishes whomsoever He will and has mercy upon whomsoever He will, and unto Him will you be returned.

21 This verse refers to God’s Punishment and Mercy either in this life or after the next genesis (IJ), or both.

22 You thwart not on earth, nor in Heaven; and apart from God you have no protector or helper.

22 People cannot thwart God on earth, and the inhabitants of the heavens cannot thwart God in Heaven; or people cannot thwart God on earth, and were they in Heaven, they could not thwart Him there either (IJ, Q, Ṭ); cf. 8:59; 9:2–3; 11:20; 35:44; 42:31; 46:32; 72:12. And they have no protector or helper near at hand to benefit them or prevent God’s Punishment from coming upon them (IJ); cf. 2:107; 9:116; 42:31.

②③ Those who disbelieve in God’s signs and in the meeting with Him, they despair of My Mercy, and for them there shall be a painful punishment.

23 Those who disbelieve in and thus deny God’s signs, meaning His proofs (Ṭ), such as the Quran (IJ, Ṭ, Z), evidentiary miracles (Z), and the Resurrection, will despair of ever reaching the Garden (IJ) or of receiving God’s Forgiveness (IJ).

②④ Yet the answer of his people was but to say, “Slay him, or burn him!” Then God saved him from the fire. Truly in that are signs for a people who believe.

24 His people means Abraham’s people. For the story of Abraham and the fire, see 21:66–70c. Truly in that are signs for a people who believe (cf. 6:99; 16:79; 27:86; 30:37; 39:52) refers to God saving Abraham from the fire. That the believers will be saved, despite severe trials, is a major theme of this sūrah.

②⑤ And Abraham said, “You have taken idols apart from God on account of affection between you in the life of this world. Then on the Day of Resurrection you will disown one another, and you will curse one another; your refuge will be the Fire, and you will have no helpers.”

25 That they have taken idols on account of affection . . . in the life of this world indicates that their love for the world is what leads them to worship idols, but as this love pertains entirely to this world, it will bring them no benefit in the Hereafter, and their affection will also be cut off (Ṭ). That the disbelievers will disown one another, and . . . curse one another points to the rancor within their breasts (see also 2:166–67; 7:38–39c; 34:31–33), since friends on that Day will be enemies to one another, save for the reverent (43:67).

26 And Lot believed him and said, “Truly I am fleeing unto my Lord. Truly He is the Mighty, the Wise.”

26 Lot’s declaration I am fleeing unto my Lord indicates that he is emigrating from Sodom to wherever God will provide him refuge, a practice similar to what is enjoined upon the first Muslim community in Makkah and lauded in 16:41–42: And those who emigrate for the sake of God, after having been wronged, We shall surely settle them in a good place in this world—and the reward of the Hereafter is greater, if they but knew—those who are patient and trust in their Lord (see also 2:218; 3:195; 4:100; 8:72–75; 9:20; 16:110; 22:58; 24:22). The present verse can thus be read as an extension of the theme in v. 10, when that verse is interpreted as being addressed to those Muslims who had failed to emigrate and thus suffered affliction and nearly apostatized.

27 And We bestowed upon him Isaac and Jacob, and We established prophethood and scripture among his progeny. We gave him his reward in this world, and in the Hereafter he shall truly be among the righteous.

27 Here him refers to Abraham. Isaac and Jacob are also identified as Divine gifts in 6:84 and 19:49 and referred to as an added gift in 21:72 (called added because Ishmael was born before Isaac). For the account of Abraham and his wife, Sarah, receiving the news of Isaac’s impending birth, see commentary on 37:101; 51:28–30.

28 And [We sent] Lot, when he said to his people, “Truly you commit indecenty such as none in the worlds committed before you.

29 What! Do you come unto men, cut off the way, and commit reprehensible deeds in your gatherings?” Yet the answer of his people was but to say, “Bring us God’s Punishment, if you are among the truthful.”

28–29 For the story of Lot, who was sent to the people of Sodom, see 7:80–84; 11:77–83; 15:57–77; 26:160–73; 27:54–58; 54:33–38; and Genesis 19. Similarly in 7:80, Lot proclaims, What! Do you commit an indecenty such as none in the worlds committed before you? In both accounts, indecenty renders fāḥishah, which denotes an abominable sin and is most often used with reference to sexual transgression (see 4:15c). Here indecenty is understood as a specific reference to sexual relations between men (cf. 7:81; 26:165–66; 27:55), a transgression that, based upon this verse, commentators say no people had committed on such a wide scale before Lot’s people (IK; cf. 7:81).

Given the aggressive manner in which the men of Sodom are said to have approached other men in 11:77–79; 15:67–71; and Genesis 19, some maintain that Lot reproaches them for forcible rather than consensual sexual relations. However, the emphasis here and in 7:81; 26:165–66, and 27:54 is upon approaching men with desire and lust, whether consensual or not, and thus “leaving their spouses their Lord created for them” (see 26:166); also see 7:80–81c. That they cut off the way by preferring men over women means they cut off the way to having children (Ṭs), or they cut off the way of travelers, as, according to some accounts, they specifically targeted travelers to rape them (Ṭs). Their challenge to Lot is similar to the one the °Ād pose to the prophet Hūd (Then bring upon us that wherewith you have threatened us, if you are among the truthful; 46:22; cf. 7:70) and the one the Thamūd pose to the prophet Ṣāliḥ (see 7:77).

30 He said, “My Lord, help me against the people who work corruption.”

30 Elsewhere, “working corruption” is connected in a more general manner to committing physical violence (see 2:11, 27, 30, 205; 5:33, 64; 7:127; 17:4; 26:183; 27:48–49; 28:4; 29:30; 38:28; 47:22). In other verses, it often implies a combination of spiritual and worldly corruption; see 7:74, 85–86, 103; 11:85; 13:25. For the Quranic understanding of corruption, see 30:41c.

31 And when Our envoys came unto Abraham with glad tidings, they said, “We shall surely destroy the people of this town; truly its people are wrongdoers.”

32 He said, “Verily, Lot is in it.” They said, “We know better who is in it. Assuredly We shall save him and his family, save for his wife; she is among those who lagged behind.”

31–32 For a more complete account of Abraham’s encounter with the angels, to whom reference is made elsewhere as the guests of Abraham (15:51), see 51:24–34; 15:51–60; and commentary on 11:69–74. This town refers to the towns of Sodom and Gomorrah. Abraham also pleads with the angels concerning the people of Lot in 11:74, but here and in 15:58–60 the angels explain that they will destroy everyone in it, save for the family of Lot . . . except for his wife. . . . She is indeed among those who lagged behind (15:59–60; cf. 7:83; 26:171; 27:57). The angels’ statement We know better who is in it means that they know better than Abraham who the wrongdoers and believers are, and that Lot is not among the wrongdoers (Ṭ). Those who lagged behind renders ghābirīn and indicates that they are destroyed in this life, completely covered over by dust (ghubār), and that they will be disgraced in the Hereafter, when their faces shall be covered with dust (ghabarah), overspread with darkness (80:40–41). For more on Lot’s wife, see 7:83c.

33 And when Our envoys came unto Lot, he was distressed on their account; yet he was constrained from helping them. And they said, “Be not afraid, nor grieve. We shall surely save thee and thy family, save for thy wife; she is among those who lagged behind.

34 Truly we shall bring down upon the people of this town a torment from Heaven for having been iniquitous.”

33–34 Torment, which also appears in 2:59 and 7:134, renders rijz, a word that can also be understood to mean “defilement,” as in 8:11, where God purifies Lot and his people from the defilement of Satan (rijz al-shayṭān), or to mean “plague.” This verse could thus indicate that God will send a plague or some form of defilement upon Lot’s people, though it most likely refers to the stones of baked clay (11:82; 15:74) or torrent of stones (54:34) said to have rained down upon them; see also 7:84.

35 And We indeed have left of it a manifest sign for a people who understand.

35 God has left the punishment that He inflicted upon the people of Lot as a sign, a proof and a warning, for those who understand (Ṭ). It could refer to the ruins of their town, the stones or rain that came down upon them, or the account of their story (Z).

36 And unto Midian, [We sent] their brother Shu^ʿayb; he said, “O my people! Worship God and hope for the Last Day, and behave not wickedly upon the earth, working corruption.”

37 But they denied him, and so the earthquake seized them, and morning found them lying lifeless in their abode;

36–37 This discussion of Shu^ʿayb likely comes after that of Abraham and Lot, because the Midianites are said to take their name from Midian, the son of Abraham from whom they descended (see Genesis 25:2); see 7:85c. Though considered an Arab prophet, Shu^ʿayb is usually identified with the Biblical figure Jethro, the father-in-law of Moses, since the Quran mentions that Moses met his future wife and father-in-law in the area of Midian (see 26:22–23). According to some commentators, Shu^ʿayb was sent both to the people of Midian and to “the inhabitants of the thicket” (al-aykah), while others consider “the inhabitants of the thicket” to be another reference to the people of Midian (see 15:78; 26:176; 38:13; 50:14c). The warning given here is part of a longer warning delivered by Shu^ʿayb in 7:85 (see also 11:85; 26:183). For the meaning of working corruption and its place in the Quran, see 30:41c. For more complete accounts of the story of Shu‘ayb, see 7:85–93; 11:84–95; 26:176–89.

The description in v. 37 of the destruction of the Midianites for their rejection of Shu‘ayb (cf. 7:91; 11:94) is identical to the description of that of the tribe of Thamūd for their rejection of the prophet Ṣāliḥ (see 7:77–78c; 11:67–68c). Lying lifeless can be understood to mean that they were rigid corpses or that they were prostrate upon their knees, dead (Z), which would imply a humiliating position with their faces on the ground and their hindquarters in the air.

38 and ʿĀd, and Thamūd; [their fate] is certainly evident to you from their dwellings. Satan made their deeds seem fair unto them and thus turned them from the way, though they had been discerning;

38 The ʿĀd and the Thamūd were pre-Islamic Arabian tribes that rejected the prophets sent to them, Hūd and Ṣāliḥ, respectively. For the tribe of ʿĀd, see commentary on 7:65–72; 11:50–60. For the tribe of Thamūd, see commentary on 7:73–79; 11:61–68. That Satan made their deeds seem fair unto them (cf. 8:48; 16:63; 27:24) means that he made them consider their disbelief in God and their rejection of His messengers to be a mark of their excellence (Ṭ). That Satan turned them from the way can also mean that he blocked the way for them. Though they had been discerning implies that they were people of intelligence who nonetheless did not act in accord with the truth (Q, Z), or that they had seen clearly that a punishment would come upon them (IJ, Q), but followed Satan nonetheless (Z). It could also be rendered “Though they had understood,” referring to the fact that they had been shown the truth through the messengers God had sent (R) and were thus aware that they were in error (Q, Ṭ).

39 and Korah, and Pharaoh, and Hāmān! Indeed, Moses brought them clear proofs, but they waxed arrogant upon the earth, and outstripped [Us] not.

39 The initial and connects those listed in the verse to the fates of the tribes of °Ād and Thamūd in the previous verse or to the phrase Satan made their deeds seem fair unto them and thus turned them from the way (Ṭ). For the story of Korah, a great grandson of Levi (Numbers 16:1) with vast wealth who was swallowed by the ground for opposing Moses (Numbers 16:32), see commentary on 28:76–82. For Hāmān, a member of Pharaoh’s court who was ordered to light a fire and make a tower (28:38) to proclaim Pharaoh a deity, see 28:6, 8, 38; 40:24, 36–37; 28:6c. Although some have confused this Hāmān with the Haman mentioned in the Biblical book of Esther (9:5–14), it most likely refers to the head of Pharaoh’s stone quarries; see 28:36c. Here clear proofs refers to the miracles that Moses performed, such as the white hand and the staff turned serpent, as well as the plagues against the Egyptians in 7:133, in the face of all of which Pharaoh and “his notables” waxed arrogant (cf. 7:133; 10:75; 23:46; 28:39). That they cannot “outstrip” God means they cannot escape what God has decreed (Ṭ, Z), as in v. 22: You thwart naught on earth, nor in Heaven; see also 56:60c.

④ Each We seized for his sin. Among them are some upon whom We sent a torrent of stones, and among them are some whom the Cry seized, and among them are some whom We caused the earth to engulf, and among them are some whom We drowned. God wronged them not, but themselves did they wrong.

40 A torrent of stones (cf. 17:68; 67:17) was sent against the people to whom Lot preached (see 15:74; 29:33; 54:34). Those whom the Cry seized (cf. 15:73, 83; 23:41) were the tribe of Thamūd (11:66–68; 11:95) and the Midianites (11:94–95). Those whom the earth swallowed (cf. 16:45; 34:9; 67:16) were the people of Korah (28:81). Those drowned refers to Noah’s people, and Pharaoh and Hāmān. The Cry is also interpreted to indicate lightning and its accompanying thunder. Thus in this verse human beings are destroyed by the four traditional elements: fire, through lightning or the Cry; water, through drowning; earth, which engulfed them; and air, by whose wind God sent a torrent of stones. None of these punishments were arbitrary, but were, from a Quranic perspective, the outcome of the people’s own iniquity. Thus God wronged them not, but themselves did they wrong (cf. 2:57; 7:160; 9:70; 16:33, 118; 30:9).

④① The parable of those who take protectors apart from God is that of the spider that makes a house. Truly the frailest of houses is the spider's house, if they but knew.

41 The Quranic criticism of those who take protectors apart from God (cf. 7:30; 39:3; 42:6; 45:10) is directed against those who take other human beings as protectors (see, e.g., 4:139c; 5:51c; 9:23–24c), those who take satans as protectors (see 7:27c; 18:50c), and those who take idols as protectors (see 2:257). From a Quranic perspective, God is the ultimate Protector (Walī), and the Prophet and the community of believers are the only true protectors for Muslims in the human realm (see, e.g., 2:107, 257; 3:68, 122; 4:45, 139; 5:55; 6:14, 127; 7:196; 8:72; 9:71, 116), whereas the idolaters seek protection from their idols (e.g., 2:257; 13:16) and disbelievers seek protection from Satan and each other (e.g., 7:30; 8:73; 16:100).

Just as a house provides shelter and protection, while a spider's house, or web, does not, so too do true protectors provide nourishment and shelter, while false protectors taken by the disbelievers do not (R). They are thus afflicted with the forms of destruction mentioned in the previous verse and with punishment in the Hereafter. And just as the spider's house becomes scattered dust, so too do the creeds and rituals that the idolaters have constructed for their religion become scattered dust and their deeds have come to naught (2:217; 3:22; 5:53; 7:147; 9:17; 18:105). In this way, this verse also points to the hidden polytheism of those who worship God to be seen of men (2:264; 4:38, 142; 8:47), for they have, in effect, taken a god other than God (R). From this perspective, any religion or ideology produced by human beings is the frailest of houses.

④② Truly God knows whatsoever they call upon apart from Him. And He is the Mighty, the Wise.

42 Even though the idolaters are unaware of the emptiness of whatsoever they call upon, or worship, apart from Him, God knows and will not reward them for it.

④③ These are the parables; We set them forth for mankind. But none understand them, save those who know.

43 These are the parables refers to the parable of the spider's house and similar parables found throughout the Quran (Sh). Similarly, 59:21 states that God sets forth parables for mankind, that haply they may reflect. Commenting upon the present verse, al-Tustarī writes, "God sets forth the parables for mankind in general, since those things that bear witness to power point to the Powerful. But none understands them, save His elect. Thus knowledge is rare and comprehension of God even rarer. Whosoever attains knowledge by himself through his natural self is deluded. And whosoever comes to know Him through the knowledge of God, God knows what He Himself desired for him. The creature has no knowledge of the truth beyond that. This allusion [to the parables] was made due to the distance of hearts from the knowledge of reality" (ST).

44 God created the heavens and the earth in truth. Surely in that is a sign for believers.

44 That God created the heavens and the earth in truth (cf. 6:73; 16:3; 39:5; 45:22; 64:3) is reiterated in various ways in several verses (see 10:5; 14:19; 15:85; 30:8; 46:3; see also 44:38–39c). In truth translates bi'l-ḥaqq, which can also mean "for the truth," indicating that creation was brought forth to manifest the truth (IJ). In this context, that in that is a sign for believers (cf. 15:77) alludes to the frailty of the created order, of which the spider's web described in v. 41 is a symbol, and evokes the idea that every created thing can be used by God as a parable, as in 2:26: Truly God is not ashamed to set forth a parable of a gnat or something smaller.

45 Recite that which has been revealed unto thee of the Book, and perform the prayer. Truly prayer prevents against indecency and abomination, but the remembrance of God is surely greater. And God knows whatsoever you do.

45 Here prayer refers to the obligatory prayers (IJ, Q, R). Some say it means the act of reciting the Quran (IJ, Ṭ), which is another form of supererogatory worship, but al-Rāzī argues against such an interpretation, given that the verse already begins with the mention of reciting the Quran. The combined command to recite the Quran and perform the prayer can be understood to mean that if one performs the prayers and then reflects upon the words of the Quran recited in them, it will prevent one from committing indecent and abomination (IJ), though others understand this verse to mean that prayer in and of itself fulfills this function (IJ). According to a saying sometimes attributed to the Prophet and sometimes to his Companion Ibn Mas'ūd, "He whose prayer does not prevent indecent and abomination, his prayer increases him in naught but distance [from God]" (IJ, R, Sh, Ṭ). From this perspective, prayer in and of itself may not prevent indecent and abomination unless it is combined with sincerity and repentance, as in 5:27: God accepts only from the reverent (Z). Nonetheless, it is thought that the grace of prayer itself can move one away from bad deeds and toward good deeds, as when the Prophet said of a young man who prayed with him but inclined toward indecent acts, "Surely his prayer will soon prevent him [from doing that]" (Bḍ, Q, Z). Here indecent may refer to fornication and abomination to disobedience (Ṭ). Prayer prevents these and other sins in that it purifies the heart, a function alluded to when the Prophet asked his Companions, "Tell me, if one of you had a river at his door in which he washed five times a day, would any of his filth remain?" To which the people replied, "Nothing of his filth would remain." He said, "That is a likeness of the five prayers. God obliterates sins with them" (Q). In this vein, al-Ghazzālī advises penetrating deeper into prayer, since it was not prescribed merely for the words and motions it entails, but for "polishing the heart and renewing the remembrance of God" (Iḥyā' 'ulūm al-dīn [Beirut, 1998], 1:142). Regarding the function of prayer in protecting against indecent and abomination, al-Tustarī is reported to have said, "Every prayer that does not restrain shameful and unjust deeds and is devoid of the adornment of shunning these deeds is tainted, and it is incumbent upon one to purify it" (ST, Su).

The remembrance of God is surely greater (or "greatest") means that to remember God is greater than all else (IJ, Sh, Ṭ), including other acts of worship. From another perspective, it means that God's remembrance of human beings is greater than their remembrance of God (Bḍ, IJ, Sh, Su, Ṭ, Z), since His remembrance is eternal and theirs is temporal (Su), or both meanings can obtain at the same time (Sh, Ṭ). From a Sufi perspective, the two meanings together indicate that the fullness of remembrance comes only when individuals have been annihilated before God, so that no selfhood or egotism remains, and they thus realize that their remembrance of God is in fact God's remembrance of God Himself through and within them. Only this form of remembrance can be truly "great," since only this form of remembrance is beyond the contingencies of time and place, to which any ordinary human remembrance of God would, by definition, be bound.

Some also understand this verse to mean that remembering God in prayer is better than the indecent and abomination that it prevents (IJ, Ṭ), that believers' remembrance of God is better than idolaters' remembrance of their gods (R), or that prayer, which some understand to be what is meant by the remembrance of God in this verse, is better than all other acts of obedience (Bḏ, Z). Regarding the preeminence of the remembrance of God, whichever of the meanings above may obtain, the Prophet is reported to have said, "The world is accursed, accursed is all that is in it, save the remembrance of God and that which supports it."

46 And dispute not with the People of the Book, save in the most virtuous manner, unless it be those of them who have done wrong. And say, "We believe in that which was sent down unto us and was sent down unto you; our God and your God are one, and unto Him are we submitters."

46 This verse is an injunction to the Prophet and Muslims to not argue with Jews and Christians, except in a beautiful manner that calls them through God's signs and draws evidence from God's proofs (Ṭ) or in a manner that exhorts them to good, as in 16:125: Call unto the way of thy Lord with wisdom and goodly exhortation. And dispute with them in the most virtuous manner (IK); this means that even if others speak poorly, Muslims should still speak well (Ṭ). Those of them who have done wrong means those People of the Book who turn away from the signs delivered by God's prophets and remain stubborn and arrogant (IK), or those who engage in physical conflict against the Muslims and who will not enter into a treaty with them (Ṭ). According to some, this verse was abrogated by 9:29, but al-Ṭabarī argues that this verse is in effect and not abrogated, emphasizing that a verse cannot be considered abrogated in the absence of definitive proof.

Muslims are then ordered to declare the fundamental similarities between the revelations sent to them and those sent to previous religious communities, as in 2:136: Say, "We believe in God, and in that which was sent down to us, and in that which was sent down to Abraham, Ishmael, Isaac, Jacob, and the Tribes, and in what Moses and Jesus were given, and in what the prophets were given from their Lord. We make no distinction among any of them, and unto Him we submit" (cf. 3:84). Regarding discussions with the People of the Book, the Prophet is reported to have counseled his followers, "Do not confirm the People of the Book and do not deny them; say, 'We believe in that which was sent down unto us and that which was sent down unto you; our God and your God are one, and unto Him are we submitters’” (IK, Q, T, Z).

④⑦ Thus have We sent down unto thee the Book. So those unto whom We have given the Book believe in it. Among them are some who believe in it; and none reject Our signs, save the disbelievers.

④⑦ Among them are some who believe in it means that among the People of the Book, here referred to as those unto whom We have given the Book, are some who believed in the Quran and the prophethood of Muhammad (T, Z); or it means the Makkans (Z), some of whom believed in the Quran, but many of whom did not. When understood as a reference to the People of the Book, most commentators interpret it to mean those Jews and Christians who became Muslim (IK, Q, T, Z). But this need not be the case, as in 3:199: And truly among the People of the Book are those who believe in God and that which has been sent down unto you, and that which has been sent down unto them. Such people would not have rejected God’s signs and thus would not have been those who opposed the Muslims; also see commentary on 3:110–15; 5:82–83.

④⑧ And thou didst not recite before this any Book; nor didst thou write it with thy right hand, for then those who make false claims would have doubted.

④⑧ This verse is understood to mean that the Prophet had no part in authoring the Quran, one of the fundamental beliefs of all schools of Islamic thought. Addressing him directly, it alludes to his having lived among his people for many years, during which time he had never recited another book or made any claims to have composed one, since he was “unlettered” or “unschooled” (ummi), as in 7:157, where Muhammad is referred to as the unlettered Prophet (IK, T, Z). Both 26:224–27 and 36:69 also reject the idea that the Prophet was a poet. This verse then proposes that, had the Prophet engaged in recitation and composition, those who make false claims, meaning either the Quraysh (T, Z) or those among the People of the Book who opposed him (Z), may have had more reason to doubt the origin of the revelation, as in 25:5: And they say, “They are fables of those of old which he has had written down, and they are recited to him morning and evening” (cf. 6:25; 8:31; 16:24; 23:83; 27:68; 46:17; 68:15; 83:13).

49 Nay, it is but clear signs in the breasts of those who have been given knowledge, and none reject Our signs, save the wrongdoers.

49 Some understand this verse to mean that the Quran is composed of clear signs or verses that are easy to memorize, as in 54:17: And indeed We have made the Quran easy to remember (cf. 54:22, 32, 40), and that these signs or verses are preserved, recited, and interpreted by those who have been given knowledge (Aj, IK, Z). Others interpret those who have been given knowledge (cf. 22:54; 34:6; 58:11) as a reference to those among the People of the Book who had found references to or clear signs of the Prophet Muhammad in their scriptures (Aj, T).

50 And they say, “Why have signs not been sent down unto him from his Lord?” Say, “Signs are with God alone, and I am only a clear warner.”

50 This is one of several verses in which the disbelievers call for a miraculous sign as proof of the reality of the revelation (see 2:118; 10:20; 13:7; 17:90–93; 20:133; 6:37c; 54:1–2c). That the signs are with God alone refers to God alone having the keys to the treasures of the Unseen and dispensing signs as He alone wills, as in 6:50, where the Prophet is enjoined, Say, “I do not say to you that with me are the treasures of God; nor do I know the Unseen; nor do I say unto you that I am an angel. I follow only that which is revealed unto me.” The Prophet is told to say, “I am only a clear warner” or “I am naught but a warner” in several verses (22:49; 38:70; 46:9; 67:26; also see 27:92), and other verses instruct the Prophet, Thou art but a warner (13:7; 79:45), and Thou art naught but a warner (35:23).

51 Does it not suffice them that We have sent down unto thee the Book that is recited unto them? Surely in that is a mercy and a reminder for a people who believe.

51 This verse is a response to the objection raised in the previous verse (Q) meaning, “Does it not suffice as a sign that God has sent the Quran as a revelation?” (T). See also 20:133: They say, “Why has he not brought us a sign from his Lord?” Has there not come unto them the clear proof of that which is in the scriptures of old? Regarding the sufficiency of the Quran as a sign, the Prophet is reported to have said, “There is no prophet who was not given miracles that would make the people believe in him. What I have been given is revelation that God reveals to me, and I hope that I will have the greatest number of followers on the Day of Resurrection” (IK). The Quran is a mercy, since it tells of the Blessings and Bounty of God, and a reminder, or admonition, regarding God’s Punishment (IK).

52 Say, “God suffices as a Witness between you and me. He knows whatsoever is in the heavens and on the earth.” And those who believe in what is false and disbelieve in God, it is they who are the losers.

52 In 17:96, the Prophet is also enjoined to say God suffices as a Witness between you and me when the disbelievers object to his prophethood by saying, Has God sent a human being as a messenger? (17:94). In the present sūrah, the disbelievers ask for a sign, meaning a miracle, as proof of the Prophet’s claims, and in 17:92 they ask why God did not send angels. In both instances they seek an undeniable supernatural proof, but as 6:25 states, Were they to see every sign, they would not believe in it (cf. 7:146). Thus the Prophet is enjoined to respond by letting them know that God suffices as a Witness (cf. 4:79, 166; 13:43; 17:96; 46:8; 48:28), meaning that He will settle their differences, since He knows those who believe in what is false and those who attest to the truth. In a similar vein, the Prophet is enjoined to say to the disbelievers who reject his prophethood, God and whosoever possesses knowledge of the Book suffice as a witness between you and me (13:43).

53 And they bid thee hasten the punishment. Yet were it not for a term appointed, the punishment would have come upon them. And it will surely come upon them suddenly, while they are unaware.

54 And they bid thee hasten the punishment. Truly Hell shall encompass the disbelievers

53–54 That they seek to hasten the punishment refers to the manner in which disbelievers ignore the warnings of the prophets and mock the punishments they foretell, saying, When will this promise come to pass, if you are truthful? (10:48; 21:38; 27:71; 34:29; 36:48; 67:25), even going so far as to say, O God, if this be the truth from Thee, rain down stones upon us from the sky, or bring us a painful punishment (8:32). This attitude of derision is attributed to all disbelievers in one way or another and is elsewhere contrasted with that of the believers: Those who believe not in it would seek to hasten it, and those who believe are wary of it and know that it is the truth (42:18; for other passages in which the disbelievers seek to hasten their punishment, see 10:50–51; 13:6; 22:47; 26:204; 27:46, 72; 37:176–77; 38:16; 51:14). In response to this attitude, the Prophet is told to say, That which you seek to hasten is not within my power. Judgment belongs to God alone, He relates the Truth, and He is the best of deciders (6:57; see also 22:47).

A term appointed appears in several contexts in the Quran, most often as a reference to the span of a human being’s life (6:2, 60; 11:3; 14:10; 22:5, 33; 39:42; 40:67; 71:4); in other instances, as here, it alludes to Divine Punishment (16:61; 20:129; 29:53; 35:45) and is a reference to the Day of Judgment (35:45; 42:14). It also appears in reference to the spans decreed for the trajectories of the moon and the sun (13:2; 31:29; 35:13; 39:5), the span of existence of the heavens and the earth (30:8; 46:3), and paying one’s debts (2:282). For more regarding the interpretation of a term appointed, see 35:45c.

55 That the punishment covers the disbelievers from above and from beneath their feet is an idiomatic expression meaning that punishment will envelop them from all sides (cf. 5:66; 6:65; 33:10). It may also refer to the various forms of punishment that come from above, such as floods of rain, torrents of stones, and a destructive thunderbolt, and from below, such as earthquakes; see 6:65c. Taste that which you used to do implies taste the punishment everlasting for that which you used to do (32:14; cf. 3:106; 6:30; 7:39; 8:35; 46:34).

56 O My servants who believe! Truly My earth is vast. So worship Me.

56 This verse was reportedly revealed to advise some Muslims to emigrate from Makkah to Abyssinia, where they would be able to practice their religion freely (IK, Q). Similar to vv. 1–10, it indicates that those who are unable to worship God in the land in which they live should migrate to another land where they will be able to be true to their religion (Z). In this regard, it is related to 4:97: When the angels take the souls of those who were wronging themselves, [the angels] say, “In what state were you?” They say, “We were weak and oppressed in the land.” [The angels] will say, “Was not God’s earth vast enough that you might have migrated therein?” These shall have their refuge in Hell—what an evil journey’s end!

57 Every soul shall taste death. Then unto Us shall you be returned.

57 Cf. 3:185; 21:35. In the immediate context, this frequently quoted verse explains why the previous verse enjoins worship of God. Since death is inevitable, everyone must prepare for it by worshipping God.

58 And those who believe and perform righteous deeds, We shall surely settle them in lofty abodes of the Garden with rivers running below, therein to abide. Excellent indeed is the reward of the workers [of righteousness], 59 those who are patient and trust in their Lord.

58–59 After souls have returned to God, each is informed of its place in the Hereafter. Believers are given lofty abodes of the Garden, which are elsewhere described as lofty abodes above which are lofty abodes (39:20). Regarding them the Prophet is reported to have said, “In the Garden there are rooms whose outside can be seen from the inside, and whose inside can be seen from the outside. God has prepared them for those who give food, those who speak well, those who pray and fast continually, and those who stand in prayer at night while others sleep” (IK). That God shall settle them alludes to the difficulties some may confront in emigrating, addressed in v. 56, assuring the believers that whatever they give up, if they emigrate for the sake of God (16:41), they will receive lofty abodes in the Hereafter, if not in this life. Elsewhere, they are assured: Those who emigrate for the sake of God, after having been wronged, We shall surely settle them in a good place in this world—and the reward of the Hereafter is greater, if they but knew (16:41). In contrast to the disbelievers, who sought to hasten their final end (vv. 53–54), such individuals are patient with what confronts them in the present and trust in their Lord regarding what He will provide them in the future (cf. 16:42; R).

60 And how many a beast bears not its own provision, yet God provides for it and for you? And He is the Hearing, the Knowing.

60 Here the manner in which wild animals trust in God for their provision is cited as an example for believers, as in a famous ḥadīth: “Were you to trust in God as He merits, He would provide for you as He provides for the birds; they depart with empty stomachs and return full” (Q). In this context, that God is the Hearing, the Knowing serves as a reminder that God is aware of and provides for the needs of all things. It can also be understood to mean that He hears believers when they make supplication and knows their needs when they are silent (R).

61 Wert thou to ask them, “Who created the heavens and the earth and made the sun and the moon subservient?” They would surely say, “God.” How, then, are they perverted?

61 Cf. 43:87. When asked who is creator and master of all things, they—that is, the idolaters among the Quraysh—would surely say, “God” (cf. 10:31; 23:84–85; 29:63; 31:25; 39:38; 43:9, 87), because they still believed in a supreme deity, though they nonetheless worshipped idols alongside—that is, attributed partners to—this deity. The Prophet is then told to respond, saying, Praise be to God (v. 63), meaning that only God should be praised for everything in creation and not those partners they attribute to Him, partners who had nothing to do with creation, and that no one other than God should be worshipped (Z).

How, then, are they perverted translates annā yu’fakūn (cf. 43:87), which is literally, “How are they turned away?” and which always carries a negative connotation, meaning turning away from truth toward falsehood—turning from telling the truth to lying or from beautiful actions to ugly ones (Iş)—and thus becoming perverted or deluded (Tāj al-‘arūs). Here it is an expression of astonishment meaning, “How could they turn away from the Oneness of God and attribute partners to Him, even while they affirm that He is the Creator of the heavens and the earth?” (Z). In this sense, it relates to the prevalent Quranic theme that many believe in God, but do not act in accord with their belief; see 23:84–89.

62 God outspreads and straitens provision for whomsoever He will among His servants. Truly God is Knower of all things.

63 And wert thou to ask them, “Who sends down water from the sky and revives thereby the earth after its death?” They would surely say, “God.” Say, “Praise be to God!” Nay, but most of them understand not.

62–63 God outspreads and straitens provision for whomsoever He will (cf. 13:26; 17:30; 28:82; 30:37; 34:36, 39; 39:52; 42:12; see 34:39c) serves as a transition from the discussion of God as Creator to God as Sustainer. Here, that the disbelievers would surely say, “God” (cf. 10:31; 23:84–85; 29:61; 31:25; 39:38; 43:9, 87) indicates that just as they acknowledge a Supreme Creator, so too should they acknowledge that God provides for them. Nonetheless, they fail to draw the proper conclusion because most of them understand not (cf. 5:103; 49:4). God’s Ability to revive barren land also stands as an argument for His Ability to resurrect (cf. 7:57; 16:65; 22:5; 30:19, 24, 50; 35:9; 36:33; 41:31, 39; 43:11; 45:5; 50:9–11).

64 The life of this world is naught but diversion and play. And surely the Abode of the Hereafter is life indeed, if they but knew.

64 This world is also described as naught but play and diversion (6:32; cf. 47:36), indicating the rapidity with which it dissipates (Aj), and as naught but the enjoyment of delusion (3:185). In 57:20 the world is described more fully as play, diversion, glitter, mutual boasting, and vying for increase in property and children—the likeness of a rain whose vegetation impresses the farmers; then it withers such that you see it turn yellow; then it becomes chaff; see 57:20c. The Abode of the Hereafter (cf. 2:95; 6:32; 7:169; 12:109; 16:30; 28:77, 83; 33:29) refers to Paradise.

65 And when they board a ship, they call upon God, devoting religion entirely to Him, but when He delivers them to land, behold, they ascribe partners [unto Him].

65 Cf. 10:22–23; 17:67; 31:32. A storm at sea can be seen as a parable for the afflictions that beset one in life. Devoting religion entirely to Him (cf. 7:29; 10:22; 31:32; 40:14, 65; 98:5) refers to the singularity of people’s devotion in the face of the severity of the afflictions that befall them (T). Yet when they are delivered to safety, they turn away and are ungrateful (17:67), return to their polytheism, and behave tyrannically upon the earth without right (10:23). In the context of the previous verse, this verse can be understood as an allusion to religious and spiritual hypocrisy, as many will pray, turning to God briefly in their state of dire need, but then when no longer in need turn away, forgetting God and devoting themselves to seeking the things of this world. In this sense, it is attachment to the life of this world that prevents many people from believing in God (R).

66 So let them be ungrateful for that which We have given them, and let them enjoy themselves, for soon they will know!

66 Cf. 16:55; 30:34. If people do not want God’s Blessings, they may choose to reject them and disbelieve, as in 18:29, when the Prophet is enjoined to say, So whosoever will, let him believe, and whosoever will, let him disbelieve. The phrase let them enjoy themselves follows upon v. 64. Though they think the diversion and play of this world is good, as they are able to enjoy a little (77:46), in fact this respite that God has granted them lets them dig a deeper hole for themselves, as in 31:24: We grant them enjoyment a little, then We compel them toward a grave punishment (see also 3:178; 10:69–70; 15:3; 16:55; 26:205–7). Thus soon they will know how their attempt to direct their own affairs led to their destruction (Aj).

67 Or have they not considered that We have made a secure sanctuary while people are snatched away all around them? Do they believe in that which is false? And are they ungrateful for God’s Blessing?

67 The secure sanctuary is Makkah. Traditionally, no fighting was to take place within its confines, and the Makkans were well protected from possible incursions by other tribes. This verse thus rebukes the Quraysh for not reflecting upon the security with which God has blessed them in contrast to other tribes (Ṭ, Z; see also commentary on 106:1–4). Do they believe in that which is false? is a rhetorical question rebuking them both for believing in the idols they worshipped and for believing themselves to be the source of their own security. God's Blessing, for which they are ungrateful, refers to both the security He provides and His having sent them a prophet (Aj). The secure sanctuary can also be read as a reference to any form of security or stability that God grants human beings in the face of the instability and uncertainty of the storms of life. On a spiritual level it refers to being preserved from the diversion and play (v. 64) of the world that ensnares those who believe in falsehood and are ungrateful for God's Blessings.

68 Who does greater wrong than one who fabricates a lie against God or denies the truth when it comes unto him? Is there not within Hell an abode for the disbelievers?

68 The condemnation of one who fabricates a lie against God is a recurring Quranic theme (see 3:94; 6:21–23, 93, 144; 7:37; 10:17; 11:18; 18:15; 61:7c). In the end, they will surely be questioned concerning that which they used to fabricate (29:13), and that which they used to fabricate will forsake them (10:30; 16:88; 28:75; see also 6:24; 7:53; 11:21). The truth that the creators of lies deny may refer to the Prophet, to the Quran (Aj), to the general message of Divine Unity and all that it entails (Ṭ), or to all of them. Is there not within Hell an abode for the disbelievers? (cf. 39:32), or elsewhere an abode for the arrogant (39:60), is a rhetorical question meaning that they are undoubtedly in Hell (Ṭ, Z).

69 But as for those who strive for Us, We shall surely guide them in Our ways. Truly God is with the virtuous.

69 Those who strive for Us refers to those who strive with their very souls against Satan, against their own lower souls, and against the enemies of religion (Aj). That God will guide them in His ways indicates that they will be guided on the straight path (Ṭ) or on ways that lead to good and to Divine Succor (Z), and that they will be guided to God (Aj). This verse is subject to many interpretations, each reflecting the belief that striving to obtain one good will lead to another good. Among these, some say it means that those who strive to act upon what they know will be guided to greater knowledge that they did not have before (Aj, IK); those who strive to obtain knowledge will be guided to the ways of acting in accord with it; those who strive to do what is pleasing to God will be guided to the attainment of contentment; those who strive in repentance will be guided upon the paths of sincerity; or those who strive to serve God will be guided upon the path of intimate converse with God (Aj).

Although several verses speak of God's Love for the virtuous (2:195; 3:134, 148; 5:13, 93), this is the only verse to say that God is with the virtuous. Here, the virtuous translates muḥsinīn, which means those who do what is beautiful or who make things beautiful. It is related to iḥsān, "making or doing what is beautiful," and is thus related to "virtue" or "goodness" and to ḥusn, meaning both "good" and "beauty." Regarding iḥsān, the Prophet said to his Companions, "God has ordained doing what is beautiful for all things." From this perspective, at the core of the Quran's message stands the idea that one must do all things with beauty and goodness (ḥusn).

The Byzantines

All commentators agree that al-Rūm was revealed during the Makkan period, although some maintain that v. 17 is from the Madinan period (Aj, Āl) and others maintain that vv. 27–28 are from the Madinan period (IJ). The sūrah takes its name from the mention of the defeat of the Byzantines, or Romans, al-Rūm, in v. 2. According to some commentators, God’s promise that the Byzantines would prevail after having been defeated (v. 3) follows upon the last verse of the previous sūrah, which promises that God will guide those who strive for His sake (Āl, Sy). Others maintain that the two sūrahs are linked by the promise that truly God is with the virtuous, which ends Sūrah 29, and the promise in vv. 4–5 that on that day the believers shall rejoice in God’s Help (Aj).

From the mention of the battle between the Sassanids and the Byzantines and the prediction of the eventual victory of the Byzantines (vv. 2–6) followed by a criticism of the disbelievers for failing to reflect upon the signs of God (vv. 7–9), the sūrah proceeds to a discussion of the disparate ends of believers and disbelievers (vv. 10–16). This leads into the sūrah’s central theme, the abundance of signs of God in the created order and the inability of many human beings to understand them, because they follow caprice rather than knowledge (vv. 17–29). Beginning with a reference to the original or primordial nature of human beings, the fiṭrah, in one of the Quran’s more famous verses (v. 30), vv. 30–34 contrast those who follow the upright religion with those who divide religion into factions (v. 32). Challenging the disbelievers to bring something to substantiate their claims (v. 35), the sūrah then touches upon several broader Quranic themes, such as virtue toward relatives and employing one’s wealth in a just manner (vv. 38–39), the phases of human existence (v. 40), and the extent of human corruption (v. 41).

After calling again to the upright religion (vv. 43), al-Rūm returns to the contrast between the believers and disbelievers (vv. 44–45), which leads into another extended passage on its central theme, the importance of reflecting upon God’s signs (vv. 46–51). A reminder of the Prophet’s inability to guide those whom God has not guided (vv. 52–54) is then followed by a discussion of the difficulties that will confront the guilty upon the Hour of Judgment (vv. 55–57). The sūrah concludes with a reminder that their hearts are sealed (v. 59) and that one must thus remain steadfast when confronted by them (v. 60).

① Alif. Lām. Mīm. ② The Byzantines have been defeated ③ in a land nearby. Yet after being defeated they will prevail ④ within a few years—unto God belongs the affair, before and after, and on that day the believers shall rejoice ⑤ in God’s Help. He helps whomsoever He will, and He is the Mighty, the Merciful. ⑥ [This is] God’s Promise—God fails not His Promise, but most of mankind know not. ⑦ They know some outward aspect of the life of this world, but of the Hereafter they are heedless. ⑧ Do they not reflect upon their souls? God did not create the heavens and the earth and whatsoever is between them, save in truth and for a term appointed. Yet truly many among mankind believe not in the meeting with their Lord. ⑨ Have they not journeyed upon the earth and observed how those before them fared in the end? They were greater than them in strength. They tilled the earth and built upon it more than have they, and their messengers brought them clear proofs. For God would never wrong them, but themselves did they wrong. ⑩ Then the end of those who committed evil deeds was most evil, for they denied God’s signs and mocked them. ⑪ God originates creation, then brings it back; then unto Him shall you be returned. ⑫ And on the Day when the Hour is come, the guilty shall despair. ⑬ They have no intercessors from among those they ascribed as partners, and they will then disbelieve in those they ascribed as partners. ⑭ And on the Day when the Hour is come, that Day they will be separated. ⑮ As for those who believe and perform righteous deeds, they will be made joyous in a Garden. ⑯ But as for those who disbelieved and denied Our signs and the meeting of the Hereafter, they will be arraigned unto the punishment. ⑰ So glory be to God when you enter upon the eve and when you rise at morn; ⑱ His is the praise in the heavens and on the earth—when the sun declines and when you reach noontide. ⑲ He brings forth the living from the dead, and brings forth the dead from the living, and He revives the earth after its death. Even so shall you be brought forth. ⑳ Among His signs is that He created you from dust. Then, behold, you are human beings ranging far and wide. ㉑ And among His signs is that He created mates for you from among yourselves, that you might find rest in them, and He established affection and mercy between you. Truly in that are signs for a people who reflect. ㉒ And among His signs are the creation of the heavens and the earth and the variation in your tongues and colors. Truly in that are signs for those who know. ㉓ And among His signs is your sleep by night and day and your seeking His Bounty. Truly in that are signs for a people who hear. ㉔ And among His signs is that He shows you lightning, arousing fear and hope, and that He sends down water from the sky, then revives thereby the earth after its death. Truly in that are signs for a people who understand. ㉕ And among His signs is that the sky and the earth stand fast by His Command. Then, when He calls you forth from the earth with a single call, behold, you will come forth. ㉖ Unto Him belongs whosoever is in the heavens and on the earth; all are devoutly obedient unto Him. ㉗ He it is Who originates creation, then brings it back, and that is most easy for Him. Unto Him belongs the loftiest description in the heavens and on the earth, and He is the Mighty, the Wise. ㉘ He sets forth for you a parable from yourselves: have you, among those whom your right hands possess, partners in what We have provided for you, such that you are equal with respect to it, with you fearing them as you fear each other? Thus do We expound the signs for a people who understand. ㉙ Nay, those who do wrong follow their caprices without knowledge. So who will guide those whom God has led astray? And they shall have no helpers. 30 Set thy face to religion as a ḥanīf, in the primordial nature from God upon which He originated mankind—there is no altering the creation of God; that is the upright religion, but most of mankind know not— 31 turning unto Him. And reverence Him and perform the prayer; and be not among the idolaters, 32 among those who have divided their religion and become factions, each party rejoicing in that which it has. 33 And when harm befalls the people, they call upon their Lord, turning to Him in repentance. Then, when He lets them taste of His Mercy, behold, a group among them ascribe partners unto their Lord. 34 Let them be ungrateful for that which We have given them: “So enjoy yourselves! For soon you will know.” 35 Or have We sent down upon them any authority that speaks of that which they ascribe as partners unto Him? 36 And when We cause the people to taste some mercy, they rejoice in it. But should an evil befall them because of that which their hands have sent forth, behold, they despair. 37 Have they not considered that God outspreads and straitens provision for whomsoever He will? Truly in that are signs for a people who believe. 38 So give unto the kinsman his right, and unto the indigent and the traveler. That is better for those who desire the Face of God. It is they who shall prosper. 39 That which you give in usury that it might increase through other people’s wealth does not increase with God. But that which you give in alms, desiring the Face of God—it is they who receive a manifold increase. 40 God it is Who created you, then nourished you; then He causes you to die; then He gives you life. Is there anyone among those you ascribe as partners who does aught of that? Glory be to Him and exalted is He above the partners they ascribe. 41 Corruption has appeared on land and sea because of that which men’s hands have earned, that He may let them taste some of that which they have done, that haply they might return. 42 Say, “Journey upon the earth and observe how those before fared in the end, most of whom were idolaters.” 43 And set thy face to the upright religion before there comes a day from God that none can repel. That Day they will be spread asunder. 44 Whosoever disbelieves, his disbelief is to his own detriment. And whosoever works righteousness, they make provision for their souls, 45 that from His Bounty He may recompense those who believe and perform righteous deeds. Truly He loves not the disbelievers. 46 And among His signs is that He sends the winds as bearers of glad tidings to let you taste of His Mercy, that the ships may sail by His Command, and that you may seek of His Bounty, and that haply you may give thanks. 47 We have indeed sent messengers unto their people before thee, and they brought them clear proofs. Then We took vengeance upon those who were guilty; and it is incumbent upon Us to help the believers. 48 God is He Who sends the winds, then they cause clouds to rise, and He spreads them in the sky as He will and makes them into fragments, whereupon you see the rain emerging from their midst. Then when He bestows it upon whomsoever He will among His servants, behold, they rejoice, 49 though previously, before it was sent down upon them, they had been in despair. 50 So observe the vestiges of God's Mercy, how He revives the earth after its death. Truly that is the Reviver of the dead, and He is Powerful over all things. 51 And were We to send a wind and they were to see it turn yellow, after that they would surely disbelieve. 52 Surely thou dost not make the dead to hear; nor dost thou make the deaf to hear the call when they turn their backs; 53 nor dost thou guide the blind from their straying. Thou makest none to hear, save those who believe in Our signs and are submitters. 54 God is He Who created you from weakness, then ordained strength after weakness, then ordained weakness and old age after strength. He creates whatsoever He will, and He is the Knowing, the Powerful. 55 And on the Day when the Hour is come, the guilty will swear that they had tarried naught but an hour; thus were they perverted. 56 And those who have been given knowledge and belief will say, "Indeed, you tarried in God's Book until the Day of Resurrection; and this is the Day of Resurrection! But you knew not." 57 On that Day the excuses of those who do wrong will benefit them not; nor can they make amends. 58 And indeed We have set forth for mankind in this Quran every kind of parable. And if thou bringest them a sign, those who disbelieve will surely say, "You make naught but false claims.” 59 Thus does God seal the hearts of those who know not. 60 So be patient. God’s Promise is indeed true. And let not those without certainty disquiet thee.

2–5 These verses provide the only reference in the Quran to political events contemporary to Muhammad and his followers beyond the Arabian Peninsula. According to the majority of commentators, these verses were revealed in response to the disbelievers heckling the Muslims after the Persian Empire had defeated the Byzantine Empire in Syria. In the first part of the seventh century, the Persian ruler Khusraw Parwīz (r. 590–628) sent an army under the command of General Shahrbarāz (d. 630) to Byzantium. These forces conquered parts of Syria, taking Damascus in 613 and Jerusalem in 614, during which time another Sassanid army under General Shahīn had conquered Egypt and laid siege to Constantinople. For many people the complete defeat of the Byzantine Empire seemed imminent. The Byzantine ruler had entrusted the command of his army to a man called Juhannas. In a land nearby most likely refers to the battles that he lost to Shahrbarāz at Adhri^cat and Busrah, which are the closest parts of Syria to the land of the Arabs. The Prophet and his Companions heard of this defeat while in Makkah and were saddened. The Prophet disliked the fact that the Sassanids had the upper hand over the Byzantines, as the former were Magians and the latter were followers of an Abrahamic religion. The disbelievers of Makkah, however, were said to have been exultant and gloating. When they met the Prophet's Companions, they said to them, "You are People of the Book, and the Christians are People of the Book. We are without a revealed scripture, and our brothers the Persians have defeated your brothers the Byzantines. If you ever fight us, we will defeat you too" (Ṭ, W).

Despite the defeats they had suffered, the Quran predicted that the Byzantines would prevail within a few years. In this context, a few translates biḍc, which indicates a period between three and nine years (Sh, Ṭ, Z). In 622 the tide began to turn when the Byzantine emperor Heraclius defeated the Persians at Issus, south of the Taurus Mountains. This was the first in a series of victories that culminated in the Battle of Nineveh in 627, after which the Persian Empire weakened considerably, having fallen from the apparent greatness it had reached at the time these verses are said to have been revealed. In the context of the geopolitical events to which these verses refer, unto God belongs the affair, before and after refers to God's ability to make one army victorious over another. Metaphysically, it can also be understood to mean before everything existed and after everything ceases to exist, since God is the Originator of all things and the One to Whom all things return (ST).

⑥ [This is] God's Promise—God fails not His Promise, but most of mankind know not.

6 The first phrase of this verse can also be read as an abbreviated structure substituting for a verbal construction meaning, "God has promised them [victory]." In both readings, it refers to God's Promise that the Byzantines would defeat the Sassanids (IK, Sh). That God fails not His Promise (cf. 22:47; 39:20) is a general statement confirming the repeated Quranic assertion that God's Promise is true (see 30:60c).

⑦ They know some outward aspect of the life of this world, but of the Hereafter they are heedless.

7 This verse refers to those who know how to prosper in this world, but who are ignorant of religious and spiritual matters (IK, Ṭ). They know the outward vanities of this world, but are ignorant of the inner realities and final ends of all things (R, Z).

8 Do they not reflect upon their souls? represents one of the Quran's many invitations to reflect upon the nature of God's creation in order to facilitate spiritual understanding; see also 11:24, 30; 13:3; 16:17; 37:155; 56:62; see commentary on 3:191; 45:3–6, 23. Many understand this verse to mean that were the disbelievers to reflect upon themselves and how they were created, they would find evidence of both the Oneness of God and God's Ability to resurrect them (Bđ, IK, R, Sh, Ṭ). In this sense, it is similar to the question posed to the disbelievers in 23:115: Did you suppose, then, that We created you frivolously, and that you would not be returned unto Us? (R). To reflect upon their souls could also be understood to mean to reflect "within themselves" and upon themselves (Aj, Q, Sh). Here, as in many verses, the Quran maintains that were human beings to reflect, they would see that God did not create the heavens and the earth and whatsoever is between them, save in truth (cf. 15:85; 46:3; see also 10:5; 14:19; 16:3; 39:5; 45:22; 64:3; 6:73c; 29:44c; 44:38–39c). That all things are created for a term appointed (cf. 13:2; 22:5; 31:29; 35:13; 39:5; 46:3), which is understood as a reference to the Day of Resurrection (Sh), points to the finitude of all that exists and to their being created with a final end in mind (R). That they disbelieve in or deny the meeting with their Lord (cf. 6:31; 32:10) would thus mean both that they deny the Resurrection and that they do not understand that everything in the created order will eventually come to an end, since all things perish, save His Face (28:88).

⑨ Have they not journeyed upon the earth and observed how those before them fared in the end? They were greater than them in strength. They tilled the earth and built upon it more than have they, and their messengers brought them clear proofs. For God would never wrong them, but themselves did they wrong.

9 Have they not journeyed upon the earth and observed how those before them fared in the end? (cf. 12:109; 30:42; 35:44; 40:21, 82; 47:10) refers to the ruins and traces of bygone peoples that the Arabs would have seen when traveling, vestiges that provide profound lessons regarding the nature of life on earth, as indicated in 22:46: Have they not journeyed upon the earth, that they might have hearts by which to understand or ears by which to hear? The call to reflect upon the fate of bygone peoples complements the call in the previous verse to contemplate their own souls, since all peoples and all souls eventually pass away. In the context of pre-Islamic Arabia, such a call would have served as a reminder that even an individual's legacy as preserved by the tribe would eventually be wiped away with the tribe itself. The Quran mentions frequently the fate of the guilty, the corrupt, the wrongdoers, and those who denied God's messengers as an admonition to the disbelievers (see 3:137; 6:11; 7:84, 86, 103; 10:39, 73; 16:36; 27:14, 69; 37:73; 43:25). That they were greater in strength, tillage, and building indicates that, although they had greater control over the world around them than those who now oppose the Prophet, they too were destroyed (see 35:44; 40:21, 82). That their messengers brought them clear proofs (cf. 7:101; 9:70; 10:13, 74; 14:9; 35:25; 40:22, 83) refers to prophetic miracles or to the rulings of Divine Law (Q, Sh). God would never wrong them, because they had been given fair warning through the sending of a messenger (Q), but themselves did they wrong (cf. 2:57; 9:70; 16:33, 118; 29:40) by failing to follow the prophets and clear proofs that had been sent to them.

⑩ Then the end of those who committed evil deeds was most evil, for they denied God's signs and mocked them.

10 In the Hereafter the evildoers will receive the worst of all fates, that of being cast into the Fire (Z). Some say this verse refers to their punishment within the Fire, while others say it refers to the Fire itself (IJ).

⑪ God originates creation, then brings it back; then unto Him shall you be returned.

11 Originates creation, then brings it back (cf. 10:4, 34; 27:64; 30:27) refers to the composition of human beings from dust and their resurrection, or to the beginning of all creation and the eventual return of all things to God; see 10:4c. Then unto Him shall you be returned (cf. 2:28, 245; 10:56; 11:34; 21:35; 28:70, 88;

29:17, 57; 39:44; 41:21) refers to the Resurrection and the return of all things to God; see 2:28c.

⑫ And on the Day when the Hour is come, the guilty shall despair.

⑬ They have no intercessors from among those they ascribed as partners, and they will then disbelieve in those they ascribed as partners.

12–13 Despair translates yublis, which indicates being broken and silent, having lost any opportunity to present an argument on one’s own behalf, and being acutely aware of this state (Q). Just as they despair of being able to argue on their own behalf, those whom they claimed could intercede for them (see 39:3c) now declare themselves innocent of what the disbelievers worshipped, as in 2:166, which describes the Day of Judgment as one when those who were followed disavow those who followed, and they see the punishment, while all recourse will be cut off from them (Ṭ; also see 14:22c; 59:16); regarding the question of intercession, see 2:48c; 2:255c. And they will then disbelieve in those they ascribed as partners can also be understood to mean “though they disbelieved on account of those they ascribe as partners” (Z). Although they have now learned that believing in them was incorrect, this knowledge has come too late to save them.

⑭ And on the Day when the Hour is come, that Day they will be separated.

14 On the Day the believers and the disbelievers will be separated from one another in a definitive and lasting manner. For this reason the Day of Resurrection is also referred to as the Day of Division (37:21; 44:40; 77:13–14, 38; 78:17; see also 10:28).

⑮ As for those who believe and perform righteous deeds, they will be made joyous in a Garden.

15 Made joyous translates yuh̄barūn, which also indicates being blessed and honored (Q, Ṭ). In this context Garden renders rawḍah, which means a place where water collects and vegetation is abundant, such as the verdant land that surrounds a spring or well (Q).

16 But as for those who disbelieved and denied Our signs and the meeting of the Hereafter, they will be arraigned unto the punishment.

16 The signs denied by the disbelievers could refer to revelation in general, the verses of the Quran in particular, the signs of God in the created order, the signs of the end of time, or to all of these, as each of these is mentioned in the Quran as being among God’s signs; see commentary on 2:106; 30:20, 22; 45:3–6. All people will be arraigned before God (see 36:32, 53), but only the disbelievers will be arraigned unto the punishment (cf. 34:38).

17 So glory be to God when you enter upon the eve and when you rise at morn;

18 His is the praise in the heavens and on the earth—when the sun declines and when you reach noontide.

17–18 In this context, glory be to God is understood as an injunction to glorify or praise God, either generally or specifically within the five daily prayers, in which one recites “Glory be to God, the Magnificent” when bowing and “Glory be to God, the Most Exalted” when prostrating (Q). Together, these two verses are interpreted as a reference to the five daily prayers: the eve refers to the sunset prayer (maghrib) and the night prayer (‘ishā’); at morn, to the morning prayer (fajr); when the sun declines, to the late afternoon prayer (‘aṣr); and noontide, to the early afternoon prayer (ẓuhr; Q).

19 He brings forth the living from the dead, and brings forth the dead from the living, and He revives the earth after its death. Even so shall you be brought forth.

19 This verse answers the rhetorical question posed in 10:31: And who brings forth the living from the dead, and brings forth the dead from the living? God brings forth the living from the dead when creating human beings the first time and when resurrecting them after death. God brings forth the dead from the living when causing them to die. These functions are related to the two Divine Names Muhyī (“Giver of Life”; 30:50; 41:39) and Mumīt (“Bringer of Death”); see also 3:27c; 6:95c; 10:31c. This is one of many verses where the manner in which God revives the dead earth is employed as a metaphor for resurrection; see also 7:57; 16:65; 22:5; 25:48–49; 29:63; 30:24, 50; 35:9; 36:33; 41:31, 39; 43:11; 45:5; 50:9–11.

20 Among His signs is that He created you from dust. Then, behold, you are human beings ranging far and wide.

20 Among His signs, which begins vv. 20–25 and v. 46 as well as 41:37, 39 and 42:29, 32, can be understood to mean that these signs are indications of God’s complete Power and Lordship over all things (Aj). On one level, God’s having created human beings from dust is a reminder of their humble origins and of God’s Ability to resurrect them from dust, just as He brought them forth from clay, as in 36:79: He will revive them Who brought them forth the first time. It can also be understood as a reminder that human beings are of two natures, one spiritual and one physical, and that the physical nature, made of clay and dust, must not be allowed to dominate over the luminous spiritual nature (Aj). Behold translates the particle idhā, which in this context indicates immediacy, thus conveying the manner in which God is believed to bring forth creation suddenly through the command “Be!” (R; see 2:117c; 3:47; 6:73; 16:40; 19:35; 36:82c; 40:68). That human beings range far and wide alludes to all races being of one origin, as in the ḥadīth: “God created Adam from a handful [of dust] taken from throughout the earth. Hence the sons of Adam vary as the earth varies; so they are white, red, black, and [colors] in between” (IK).

21 And among His signs is that He created mates for you from among yourselves, that you might find rest in them, and He established affection and mercy between you. Truly in that are signs for a people who reflect.

21 That God made for human beings mates from among yourselves (or “from your souls”; cf. 16:72; 35:11; 42:11; 78:8) is also understood to mean “from yourselves” when seen as an allusion to the creation of Eve from Adam’s rib (IK, Ṭ), though some commentators are skeptical of this association, feeling it relies too heavily on the Biblical tradition (see Genesis 2:21–23). A direct account of Eve’s creation is not found in the Quran, only in the Ḥadīth literature; see 4:1c. Although many understand the present verse as an address to men, telling them of the benefits to be found in their wives (Aj, IK, R), viewed in a broader Quranic context, especially in relation to those verses that state that God created human beings from a single soul (4:1; 6:98, 7:189, 31:28, 39:6) and its mate from that same soul (see 7:189c and 39:6), it is most likely an address to both men and women, telling of the manner in which God has extended His own Love and Mercy to them through the love and mercy that they manifest toward one another. In this sense, the purpose of marriage is not limited to producing children; it also represents a spiritual good in and of itself and a means by which men and women can encounter God’s Love and Mercy in each other. In this vein, the Prophet is reported to have said, “The believer whose faith is most complete is the one whose character is the best; and the best among you are those who are best to their wives.”

22 And among His signs are the creation of the heavens and the earth and the variation in your tongues and colors. Truly in that are signs for those who know.

22 That the created order serves as a sign of God’s Omnipotence and Oneness is a theme found throughout the Quran, though it is stated more explicitly in this pericope (vv. 20–25) than in most others. The variation in the tongues and colors indicates the differences between languages and races. The difference in tongues can also be understood as a reference to different types of speech, as individuals reveal something of their true nature by the content of their speech. Colors can, moreover, be understood as a reference to different states or conditions of human beings. Variation can also be seen as a reference to the different means by which people see and understand God’s signs. As Ibn ‘Arabī writes, “The Divine signs that have come in the Wise Reminder [i.e., the Quran] have come in great variation. Because of their variation, those addressed by them have a variety of descriptions. Among them are signs for a people who reflect (13:3; 30:21; 39:42; 45:13; cf. 10:24); signs for a people who understand (2:164; 13:4; 16:12; 30:24); signs for a people who hear (10:67; 16:65; 30:23); signs for a people who believe (45:3; cf. 6:99; 15:77; 16:79; 27:86; 29:24, 44; 30:37; 39:52); signs for those who know (30:22); signs for a people who are reverent (10:6); signs for those possessed of intelligence (20:54, 128); signs for the possessors of intellect (3:190); and signs for those who possess insight (3:13).” Ibn ‘Arabī then enjoins, “So differentiate as He has differentiated and do not step beyond to what has not been mentioned [in the Quran]. On the contrary, put every sign and everything else in its place” (Futūḥāt, IV 105.30–33). In this sense, those who discern signs (15:75) are those who know which signs speak to which human types and to which faculties and are able to differentiate between them accordingly.

23 And among His signs is your sleep by night and day and your seeking His Bounty. Truly in that are signs for a people who hear.

23 This verse could be understood to mean “your sleep by night and your seeking His Bounty by day” (Aj, Q), in which case sleep by night refers to death and day and your seeking His Bounty refers to Resurrection (Q). It could also be understood to mean your sleep during both night and day and your seeking His Bounty during both (Aj). A people who hear, or “listen,” is understood to mean those who reflect upon and understand what they hear (Aj, IK, Q). What is heard could be the Quran, the truth, God’s exhortation (Q), or all three.

24 And among His signs is that He shows you lightning, arousing fear and hope, and that He sends down water from the sky, then revives thereby the earth after its death. Truly in that are signs for a people who understand.

24 Lightning arouses fear of the destructive forces it may herald, yet hope for the rain it may bring; see 13:12–13c. This is one of several verses to invoke God’s ability to revive the earth after its death as an argument for His ability to resurrect human beings (cf. 7:57; 16:65; 22:5; 29:63; 30:19, 50; 35:9; 41:39; 43:11; 45:5;

25 And among His signs is that the sky and the earth stand fast by His Command. Then, when He calls you forth from the earth with a single call, behold, you will come forth.

25 That all things stand by His Command indicates that nothing would exist, were it not for God's Direction and Wisdom, or His Permission (Q); see also 22:65; 35:41. Then when God calls human beings to the Resurrection (Aj, IK, Q), they rise again, by His Command; see also 17:52; 36:53; 79:13–14. As in v. 20, behold renders the particle idhā, indicating a sudden event. Just as God is said to create human beings out of nothing in an instant through His Word and Command, so too will He resurrect them suddenly, and they will have as much choice in the matter as they did when they were brought forth the first time.

26 Unto Him belongs whosoever is in the heavens and on the earth; all are devoutly obedient unto Him.

26 That all of creation is devoutly obedient (qānit) indicates an existential and spiritual obedience that carries with it a sense of constancy and in the human order also serenity (cf. 2:116, 238; 3:17, 43; 4:34; 16:120; 33:31, 35; 39:9; 66:12). In this sense, everything is also said to prostrate unto God, as in 16:49: And unto God prostrates whatever crawling creatures or angels are in the heavens or on the earth, and they do not wax arrogant (cf. 13:15; 22:18; 55:6), and in the repeated assertion that whatsoever is in the heavens and whatsoever is on the earth glorify God (59:1; 61:1; 62:1; 64:1; also see 17:44; 24:41; 57:1; 59:24).

27 He it is Who originates creation, then brings it back, and that is most easy for Him. Unto Him belongs the loftiest description in the heavens and on the earth, and He is the Mighty, the Wise.

27 Regarding the assertion that it is God Who originates creation, then brings it back (cf. 10:4, 34; 27:64), see v. 11; 10:4c. That is most easy for Him is understood to mean that the process of creation and resurrection is easy for God (Ṭ), or resurrecting human beings could be even easier for God than creating them the first time (IK, Q, R, Ṭ). Unto Him belongs the loftiest description (cf. 16:60) is understood to mean the most exalted description, which cannot be attributed to anything else (Aj). Thus some link it to the phrase Naught is like unto Him (42:11; Aj, IK, Ṭ) or to the Muslim testimony of Divine Unity, “There is no god, but God” (Aj, IK, R, Ṭ); see 16:60c.

28 He sets forth for you a parable from yourselves: have you, among those whom your right hands possess, partners in what We have provided for you, such that you are equal with respect to it, with you fearing them as you fear each other? Thus do We expound the signs for a people who understand.

28 The parable established here compares the relationship between God and those whom the idolaters ascribe as partners to God to the relationship between human beings and their own slaves or servants. The rhetorical questions indicate that no one would envision a slave or servant having an equal share in the master’s wealth or fear that the slave would have an equal right to it, just as God, the Absolute Sovereign, would not fear anything else sharing in His Power. The argument is that if one cannot envision this state of affairs for one’s own limited sphere of sovereignty, how can one attribute it to the universal sovereignty of God (IK, Q, Ṭ)? Also see commentary on 16:71, 75–76. This verse is understood by some as a response to the devotional chant that the idolaters are reported to have sung when circumambulating the Ka’bah, “At Thy service, Thou hast no partner, save the partner that Thou hast. Thou dost possess him and whatsoever he doth possess” (IK, Q). Regarding the manner in which God is said to expound the signs, see 6:97–98, 126; 7:32, 174; 9:11; 10:5, 24; 13:2; 41:44; 6:46c; 6:55c; 41:3c.

29 Nay, those who do wrong follow their caprices without knowledge. So who will guide those whom God has led astray? And they shall have no helpers.

29 From a Quranic perspective, to follow one's own caprices and desires is the opposite of following God and God's messengers; see commentary on 2:120; 45:18, 23. Those who follow caprice have thus taken a course directly opposite to that of guidance, as in 47:14: Is one who stands upon a clear proof from his Lord like one whose evil deeds are made to seem fair unto him, and like those who follow their caprices? The answer to the rhetorical question So who will guide those whom God has led astray? is found in 4:88: Whomsoever God leads astray, thou wilt not find a way for him. There could therefore be no helpers among human beings, jinn, or angels who would help the disbelievers (see also 3:22, 56, 91; 16:37; 42:8; 48:22), as none can thwart God.

30 Set thy face to religion as a ḥanīf, in the primordial nature from God upon which He originated mankind—there is no altering the creation of God; that is the upright religion, but most of mankind know not—

30 To set, “turn,” or “submit” one's face to or toward religion (see 6:79; 10:105) means to orient one's whole being toward worship and obedience to God (see also 2:112; 3:20; 7:29; 30:43; 31:22). The present verse is thus taken by most commentators to be a command to follow the religion for which God created human beings. It is addressed directly to the Prophet or to all who hear the message (Aj). Some commentators take the first phrase to mean, “Follow the religion as a ḥanīf and follow the primordial nature in which God created you” (Q, Ṭ). In another interpretation, primordial nature (fiṭrah) modifies religion, which is referred to as “primordial” because human beings were originally created for religion, as in 51:56: I did not create jinn and mankind, save to worship Me (Q). As a ḥanīf is understood by most to mean in a straight and upstanding manner, neither inclining nor adhering to past religions that have been altered or abrogated (Q). For ḥanīf (pl. ḥunafā'), which derives from the verb ḥanifa, meaning “to incline,” see 2:135c. Ḥanīf is usually employed in the Quran with reference to Abraham (2:135; 3:67, 95; 4:125; 6:79, 161; 16:120, 123), but in general it indicates one who inclines away from misguidance and toward belief in the Oneness of God (tawḥīd; Iṣ). Thus in 10:105, the Prophet is enjoined, Set thy face toward the religion as a ḥanīf, and be thou not among the idolaters (see also 22:31; 98:5). The basic understanding of ḥanīf may best be illustrated by a famous ḥadīth qudsī: “God says, ‘Verily I created My servants as ḥunafā'. Then the satans came to them and distracted them from their religion’” (IK). Seen in this light, to be truly devout (ḥanīf) and incline toward the worship of God and away from idolatry is to live according to one’s primordial nature (fiṭrah), in which all human beings have been created. One cannot change this underlying nature as a servant or worshipper of God, because there is no altering the creation of God (Q, R). This phrase is also understood to mean that there is no change in God’s religion (IK, Q); that is, there is no change in the substance or universal truths of religion, only in the forms in which these truths are revealed in different religions.

The reference to the fiṭrah is read by some to mean that human beings are born for Islam, so that anyone who follows any other religion is “astray” or “misguided” (IK). But al-Qurṭubī maintains that it is impossible for the fiṭrah mentioned here to be Islam in its particular sense, because “Islam (submission) and īmān (faith) are declaring with the tongue, embracing with the heart, and performing with the limbs,” implying that if fiṭrah pertains to the original human nature, which is related to the spirit, it cannot pertain to the specific practices of a particular religious tradition because these can only be performed while a spirit resides in a body in this world. From this perspective, the upright religion (cf. 6:161; 9:36; 12:40; 30:43; 98:5) could refer to religion as such and thus to any religious practice that accords with the fiṭrah. Nonetheless, most interpret upright religion as a reference to Islam in particular (IK, Q). Regarding the upright religion, see 6:161c.

31 turning unto Him. And reverence Him and perform the prayer; and be not among the idolaters, 32 among those who have divided their religion and become factions, each party rejoicing in that which it has.

31–32 Turning unto Him translates munībīna ‘alayhi, which can mean turning unto God in repentance or returning to God (Q). In this context, perform the prayer can be seen as a general injunction to follow all of the practices of religion (Ṭū), as these are the means by which one acts in accord with the fiṭrah while in this world. Although the injunction to be not among the idolaters or polytheists is clearly a call to monotheism, in this context it is also seen as a call to avoid hidden polytheism, meaning that one should seek only to please God in one’s worship (R). To do otherwise constitutes a hidden polytheism on account of which human beings have divided their religion and become factions (R). Being divided into factions is understood by many as a reference to being divided into various sects or even making false religions out of true religion (Ṭs), but it can also be seen as a reference to those who worship God with the goal of seeking something of this world, or even those who do so seeking Paradise, rather than those who do so with a sincere heart, seeking only God (R).

In other passages, dividing religion into factions is an error attributed to previous religious communities, one that Muslims are enjoined to avoid (see 3:103–5; 6:65; 42:13–14; 98:4; 6:159c). When understood as a reference to religious sects, each party rejoicing in that which it has can be understood as a reference to competing creeds and tenets (Ṭs, Ṭū). But when understood as a reference to different modes of worship, it can be seen as a reference to the different aspects of God’s Bounty and Mercy in which different types of worshippers rejoice (R) and the injunctions that God has promulgated for each religious community.

33 And when harm befalls the people, they call upon their Lord, turning to Him in repentance. Then, when He lets them taste of His Mercy, behold, a group among them ascribe partners unto their Lord.

33 This is one of several verses to mention human beings’ tendency to call upon their Lord in times of peril or adversity (cf., e.g., 10:12; 17:67; 39:8; Ṭ), such as illness and poverty (JJ); see 6:40–41c. Then, when He lets them taste of His Mercy by relieving them of such afflictions, they revert to heedlessness and to pursuing their caprices (Ṭ, Ṭb); see also 7:189–90c; 10:12c.

34 Let them be ungrateful for that which We have given them: “So enjoy yourselves! For soon you will know.”

34 Cf. 16:55; 29:66c. So enjoy yourselves is an ironic injunction indicating that people will continue to follow their caprices (v. 29) and rejoice in the tenets of their ways (v. 34), but that these are merely the ephemeral delights of this world, which stand in stark contrast to the rewards of the next life (see 3:14; 4:77; 9:38; 13:26; 20:131; 28:60; 40:39; 42:36; 43:35), since the world itself is naught but the enjoyment of delusion (3:185; 57:20). In this regard, the Prophet is instructed to say to disbelievers, Enjoy your disbelief a little; truly you shall be among the inhabitants of the Fire (39:8). In this sense, those who disbelieve enjoy themselves and eat as cattle eat (47:12) and give no thought to anything beyond their immediate interests and desires.

35 Or have We sent down upon them any authority that speaks of that which they ascribe as partners unto Him?

35 Here authority can be understood to mean a revealed book (Q, Ṭ), as in passages that speak of God having sent Moses with a manifest authority (4:153; 11:96; 23:45; 40:23; 44:19; 51:38). It can also be understood to mean any proof that would attest to the truth of the idolaters' position (IK, Q, Z). In this vein, 37:156–57 asks the disbelievers: Or have you a manifest authority? Bring your Book, then, if you are truthful. Elsewhere the Quran asks rhetorically, Did We give them a book, such that they stand upon a clear proof from it? (35:40; see also 6:148; 34:44; 43:21; 53:28; 68:37–38, 47).

36 And when We cause the people to taste some mercy, they rejoice in it. But should an evil befall them because of that which their hands have sent forth, behold, they despair.

36 Cf. 42:48. People rejoice in their blessings, which they attribute to their own merits and which they believe are a testament to their own superiority, as in 39:49: And when harm befalls man, he calls upon Us. Then, when We confer upon him a blessing from Us, he says, "I was only given it because of knowledge." The judgment wrongdoers receive in the next life is the result of the acts of disobedience that their hands have sent forth (Q; 2:95; 4:62; 28:47; 42:48; 62:7; see also 5:80; 18:57; 36:12; 78:40), reinforcing the idea that human beings are responsible for their fate in the Hereafter. But there is also the suggestion that the misfortunes generated by their wrongdoing might be visited upon them in this life. From one perspective, their actions are sent forth to be confronted again at a later point in time or on the Day of Judgment, though from another perspective, actions are "brought forth" by their hands, thus making manifest what is in their hearts (Ṭs). Those who do not succumb to the tendency to turn away from God when evil befalls them are the patient who, when affliction befalls them, say, "Truly we are God's, and unto Him we return"

37 Have they not considered that God outspreads and straitens provision for whomsoever He will? Truly in that are signs for a people who believe.

37 For Truly in that are signs for a people who believe, cf. 6:99; 16:79; 27:86; 29:24; 39:52. Regarding God outspreads and straitens provision for whomsoever He will (cf. 13:26; 17:30; 28:82; 29:62; 34:36, 39; 39:52; 42:12); see 34:39c.

38 So give unto the kinsman his right, and unto the indigent and the traveler. That is better for those who desire the Face of God. It is they who shall prosper.

38 According to Shiite commentaries, the first phrase of this verse is a specific injunction for the Prophet to give his family members their due (Ṭs, Ṭū). In accordance with this injunction, the Prophet is reported to have given his daughter Fāṭimah a garden. But due to different understandings of what the Prophet had intended, this garden was viewed by the first Caliph, Abū Bakr, as property that belonged to the Muslim polity and not to Fāṭimah (Qm, Ṭs, Ṭū). In contrast, most Sunni commentators see this as one of several injunctions to observe the rights of kin found throughout the Quran. The right, or due, that one is to give can be seen specifically as charity or generally as virtuous conduct toward relatives (see 2:83). It is even said that giving charity to others while one's relatives are in need will not be accepted by God as a good deed (Q). For a broader discussion of the categories of people among whom one's wealth should be distributed, see 2:177c. That giving others their right, or due, is better means that it is better than keeping wealth just for oneself (Q). To give charity because one desires the Face of God indicates that one does not do it to obtain favors from others or for some other form of worldly gain (see 2:264c).

39 That which you give in usury that it might increase through other people's wealth does not increase with God. But that which you give in alms, desiring the Face of God—it is they who receive a manifold increase.

39 This is the earliest mention of usury (ribā) in the chronological order of the Quran. The last verses in the chronology of revelation (2:275–81) also deal with the concept of ribā, but are ambiguous enough to have led to centuries of debate over how one defines “usury”; see 2:275–81c; 3:130; 4:161c. In the context of this verse, ribā is understood as a reference to either usury, which is forbidden (see 2:275–81) or the seeking of increase, which is permissible (Ṭs). It is permissible to present a gift to another in the hopes of receiving something greater than it from that person, although it does not bring increase with God, because it is thought that actions are rewarded in accord with the intentions behind them (Q). That one receives a manifold increase from paying alms (zakāh) is meant as a contrast to the practice of ribā in pre-Islamic Arabia, where loans could compound exponentially, to the point of leaving the borrower in complete ruin (see 2:275–81c).

40 God it is Who created you, then nourished you; then He causes you to die; then He gives you life. Is there anyone among those you ascribe as partners who does aught of that? Glory be to Him and exalted is He above the partners they ascribe.

40 This is one of many verses that refer to all the stages of existence and God's function as the creative agent for each. For then He causes you to die; then He gives you life (cf. 2:28; 22:66; 45:26), see 2:28c. Glory be to Him and exalted is He above the partners they ascribe (cf. 10:18; 16:1; 39:67) is an affirmation of God's utter transcendence.

41 Corruption has appeared on land and sea because of that which men's hands have earned, that He may let them taste some of that which they have done, that haply they might return.

41 Corruption (fasād) implies all manner of decadence and injustice, in regard to both rebelling against God and oppressing others, thus failing to recognize the rights of all. It is often understood by commentators to mean open disobedience toward God. In both 2:27 and 13:25, corruption is presented as part and parcel of breaking the covenant: those who break God's pact after accepting His covenant, and sever what God has commanded be joined, and work corruption upon the earth; and in 5:33 working corruption is linked to rejecting God's messengers. In general, when human caprice is followed rather than Divine ordinances, corruption ensues, as in 23:71: Were the truth to follow their caprices, the heavens and the earth and those therein would have been corrupted. As such, corruption can be linked to all manner of iniquity, such as arrogance (see 7:74), oppression (26:183; 28:4), and failing to honor family relations (47:22). Though working corruption is an accusation made against several specific human collectivities, such as the Children of Israel (17:4) and the pre-Islamic Arabian tribes of Thamūd (26:152) and Midian (7:85; 29:36), it is recognized as a general human shortcoming. Thus the angels are reported to have said to God regarding the creation of the human being on the earth, Wilt Thou place therein one who will work corruption therein, and shed blood? (2:30). Working corruption implies a combination of spiritual and worldly corruption (e.g., 2:27; 7:74, 85–86, 103; 11:85; 13:25); and it is implicitly or explicitly connected to physical violence in several verses (e.g., 2:205; 5:64; 26:183; 27:48–49; 28:4). The opposite of working corruption (ifsād) is iṣlāḥ, “setting things aright” or “making amends,” and elsewhere corruption is put in direct contrast to performing righteous deeds (ṣāliḥāt): Or shall We make those who believe and perform righteous deeds like those who work corruption upon the earth? Or shall We make the reverent like the profligate? (38:28).

In the present verse corruption is said to appear because of that which men's hands have earned while elsewhere it is said that it is through the works of men that corruption is repelled: And were it not for God's repelling people, some by means of others, the earth would have been corrupted (2:251). The final ends of those who work corruption and those who oppose it are thus divergent. Heaven is ordained for the latter: That is the Abode of the Hereafter, which We ordain for those who desire neither dominance upon the earth, nor corruption (28:83); and punishment for the former: Those who disbelieve and who have turned from the way of God, for them We shall add punishment on top of punishment, for their having worked corruption (16:88).

That God will let them taste some of that which they have done means that God will allow them to experience some form of trial or punishment in this life in hopes that it may help them turn toward repentance and thus be forgiven and absolved of experiencing the full punishment in the Hereafter. That haply they might return thus implies that they might repent (Ṭ) and refrain from committing acts of disobedience in the future (IK, Ṭs).

④⁴² Say, “Journey upon the earth and observe how those before fared in the end, most of whom were idolaters.”

42 Cf. 12:109; 22:46; 30:9; 35:44; 40:21, 82; 47:10. See 30:9c.

④⁴³ And set thy face to the upright religion before there comes a day from God that none can repel. That Day they will be spread asunder.

43 Set thy face to the upright religion is understood to mean to not turn away from it in the least, lest one be unable to return to it, as in 9:127: Then they turn away. God has turned their hearts away, because they are a people who understand not (Ṭs). For set thy face, see 30:30c. Regarding the upright religion (cf. 6:161; 9:36; 12:40; 30:30; 98:5), see 6:161c.

None can repel the Day of Resurrection, just as naught in the heavens or upon the earth can thwart God (35:44; cf. 8:59; 9:2–3; 11:20; 24:57; 29:22; 42:31; 46:32; 72:12). Thus none can avert the punishment that is their due, as in 6:134: Indeed, that which you are promised shall come to pass, and you cannot thwart [it]. Here a Day from God that none can repel can also be read, “a Day on which none can repel God” (R, Ṭs), but the former meaning is more likely, as such a reading more closely corresponds to other Quranic verses, such as 21:40: Nay, but it will come upon them suddenly, and confound them. Then they will not be able to repel it, nor will they be granted respite. That people will be spread asunder refers to their being divided into those destined for the Garden and those destined for the Fire (Ṭ, Ṭs, Z); see 30:14c.

④⁴⁴ Whosoever disbelieves, his disbelief is to his own detriment. And whosoever works righteousness, they make provision for their souls, ④⁴⁵ that from His Bounty He may recompense those who believe and perform righteous deeds. Truly He loves not the disbelievers.

44–45 That his disbelief is to his own detriment (cf. 35:39) relates to the broad Quranic teaching that those who turn away from God and deny God’s signs ultimately do wrong to themselves, as in 7:177: Evil is the parable of the people who denied Our signs and wronged themselves. That the righteous make provision for their souls means that their good deeds will translate into their being recompensed from God’s Bounty in the Hereafter. Make provision translates mahada, which can also mean “to spread out.” Some thus relate this verse to their spreading beds for themselves in the grave before the Resurrection (Ṭ) or in the Garden (Bḍ), or both (Ṭs). Others relate it to the manner in which God rewards good deeds with ten times the like thereof (6:160; IK).

46 And among His signs is that He sends the winds as bearers of glad tidings to let you taste of His Mercy, that the ships may sail by His Command, and that you may seek of His Bounty, and that haply you may give thanks.

46 That the winds come as bearers of glad tidings refers to their heralding rain, as in v. 48, and all the benefits that derive from it (cf. 7:57; 25:48; 27:63). Regarding the Quranic use of “winds” and “wind,” see 30:48–49c. Seafaring is invoked as a blessing from God in several verses (14:32; 17:66; 23:21–22; 31:31; 35:12; 40:80; 42:32–34; 43:12; 45:12; 55:24; see also 2:164c). Here, as in other verses, the ships are understood by some as a spiritual symbol: the winds are the winds of guidance, spiritual inspiration, and the mercy of spiritual knowledge, and the ships allude to the meditations by means of which one courses upon the ocean of Divine Oneness to seek God’s Bounty (Aj).

47 We have indeed sent messengers unto their people before thee, and they brought them clear proofs. Then We took vengeance upon those who were guilty; and it is incumbent upon Us to help the believers.

47 Regarding the meaning of clear proofs, see 30:9c. To this same opening phrase, 13:38 adds and it is not for a messenger to bring a sign, save by God’s Leave; and for every term there is a book, which follows upon other verses maintaining that for every people there is a guide (13:7), that there has been no community but that a warner has passed among them (35:24), and that God has sent a messenger unto every community (16:36). From this perspective, God takes vengeance upon those who were guilty, because they have rejected guidance and failed to heed the warnings that were sent to them by God (see 26:208–9c).

The translation of the last phrase, and it is incumbent upon Us to help the believers, is based upon reading upon Us to help the believers as modifying incumbent, which here renders haqqan. But haqqan can also be read as the end of a sentence (Aj), in which case the phrase might best be rendered, “and it was due. Ours is to help the believers,” as it is often by means of other people that God repels the unjust (see 2:250–51c; 22:40c). Both readings indicate that God took vengeance in order to aid the believers, but the second reading is somewhat more emphatic, indicating that God’s Vengeance was due and that it was just. The means by which God aids human beings can also be seen as a reference to His saving them in the Hereafter, as in a famous saying of the Prophet, “No Muslim defends the honor of his brother but that it is incumbent upon God to defend him from the Fire of Hell on the Day of Resurrection,” after which he recited and it is incumbent upon Us to help the believers (Bd, IK, Q, R, Ts).

④⑧ God is He Who sends the winds, then they cause clouds to rise, and He spreads them in the sky as He will and makes them into fragments, whereupon you see the rain emerging from their midst. Then when He bestows it upon whomsoever He will among His servants, behold, they rejoice, ④⑨ though previously, before it was sent down upon them, they had been in despair.

48–49 Winds appears in the plural form ten times in the Quran, and each time it expresses God’s Mercy, as in 7:57: He it is Who sends forth the winds as glad tidings ahead of His Mercy (see also 25:48; 35:9). In contrast, when wind occurs in the singular, it is usually used to convey God’s Wrath and Punishment (see 3:117; 10:22; 17:69; 22:31; 30:51; 33:9; 41:16; 46:24; 51:41; 54:19; 69:6). This distinction is likely made because the winds of the south, east, and north are all said to bring mercy; only the west wind is said to bring punishment and destruction. Fragments renders kisaf, which could also mean “piled up” (IK). The people to whom the rain came may have been in despair because they were in need, and the rain relieved their despair (IK). Or they may have been in despair when the winds first arose, thinking that a violent storm was coming, and then became relieved when it only brought rain.

50 So observe the vestiges of God’s Mercy, how He revives the earth after its death. Truly that is the Reviver of the dead, and He is Powerful over all things.

50 The vestiges of God’s Mercy refers to the rain and all of the things that are given life through it (Bḍ). Vestiges translates āthār, which can also be read athar, meaning “the effect of God’s Mercy” (IJ, Ṭ). As with other passages that refer to the revival of dead earth (e.g., 7:57; 16:65; 22:5; 30:19, 24; 35:9; 36:33; 41:31, 39; 43:11; 45:5; 50:9–11), this passage also uses such imagery to argue for God’s ability to resurrect decayed bones (Aj). That is the Reviver of the dead thus indicates that God and no other has the ability to revive the earth, since He is Powerful over all things, and that God has the ability to resurrect human beings. God’s reviving the earth by sending water is also understood as a symbol for spiritual revival. Thus al-Tustarī writes, “In its outer meaning it refers to the rain, and in its inner meaning it alludes to the life of hearts through remembrance”(ST).

51 And were We to send a wind and they were to see it turn yellow, after that they would surely disbelieve.

51 In contrast to their positive reaction to the winds of mercy and blessings mentioned in vv. 46–50, when people are confronted with a wind that removes those blessings, they think poorly of God, fail to reflect upon the blessings that they have been given, fail to trust in God (Bḍ), and thus come to disbelieve. In this context, turn yellow refers to either plants turning yellow from lack of rain or clouds changing color (N). After that means either after they were made glad or after the plants or clouds turned yellow (N). Together, vv. 48–51 indicate the manner in which disbelievers vacillate, first despairing of God’s Mercy and provision, then becoming glad when they arrive, and then disbelieving in God and God’s Mercy when some of the blessings are removed (N).

52 Surely thou dost not make the dead to hear; nor dost thou make the deaf to hear the call when they turn their backs;

53 nor dost thou guide the blind from their straying. Thou makest none to hear, save those who believe in Our signs and are submitters.

52–53 Cf. 27:80–81. Just as the Prophet is unable to make the dead hear in their graves, so too is he unable to make those who turn away from the revelation hear, as this ability lies with God alone (IK, Ṭ). A similar parallel is drawn in 6:36: Only those who hear will respond. As for the dead, God will resurrect them, and unto Him they shall be returned. That the Prophet cannot cause the dead to hear can also be understood as an allusion to those whose hearts are dead or sealed (N), as in v. 59. Blind then refers to those whose hearts are blind (Aj), as in 22:46: Truly it is not the eyes that go blind, but it is hearts within breasts that go blind. From a Quranic perspective, the Prophet cannot cause their hearts to see or hear because his function is only to convey the revelation (see 3:20; 13:40), and whomsoever God leads astray, no guide has he (7:186; 13:33; 39:23, 36; 40:33); the Prophet should thus concern himself only with guiding those who do listen.

54 God is He Who created you from weakness, then ordained strength after weakness, then ordained weakness and old age after strength. He creates whatsoever He will, and He is the Knowing, the Powerful.

54 That human beings were created from weakness (cf. 4:28) refers either to their having been made from a base fluid (77:20; cf. 32:8; 86:5–7; Aj, Q, Ṭ), or to the weakness of a child at the beginning of life (Aj, Q, Z). Strength then refers to the period of youth and maturity, followed by the period of decline in old age. See also 22:5, where all of the stages of earthly life from conception to old age are cited as signs of God's Power (see also 22:5c) as well as 36:68, which speaks of those whom God causes to regress in creation, and 16:70, which speaks of those who are brought back to the weakest of ages, such that they know nothing after having had knowledge (cf. 5:17; 24:25; 42:49).

55 And on the Day when the Hour is come, the guilty will swear that they had tarried naught but an hour; thus were they perverted.

55 That the guilty seem to have tarried naught but an hour (cf. 10:45; 17:52; 20:102–4; 46:35; 79:46) refers either to their experience of the period in the grave before the Day of Resurrection or to their period of time on earth (Q), whose duration is as an hour or less in relation to the eternity of the Hereafter. Their claim may be made in ignorance or in order to argue that there is not enough proof against them (IK). Perverted translates yu'fakū, which literally means “turned away,” but which always carries a negative connotation, meaning turning away from truth toward falsehood—turning from telling the truth to lying or from beautiful actions to ugly ones (Iṣ)—and thus becoming perverted or deluded (Tāj al-‘arūs). In this latter sense, the last phrase can also mean “thus were they deluded” (Z) in their understanding of the relationship of this world to the Hereafter.

56 And those who have been given knowledge and belief will say, “Indeed, you tarried in God’s Book until the Day of Resurrection; and this is the Day of Resurrection! But you knew not.”

56 Here, those who have been given knowledge and belief is understood to mean those who are given knowledge of and belief in God’s Book (Ṭ), which some identify specifically as the angels or the believers (IJ) or more generally as the angels, the prophets, and the believers (Aj, Z). In God’s Book means in God’s Knowledge that is written on the Preserved Tablet (85:22), in God’s Judgment and Decree (Aj), in the Quran (Aj), or in the book of deeds that is with God (IK). Their saying This is the Day of Resurrection implies a rebuke, similar to the disbelievers being told, This is the Day of Division that you used to deny (37:21).

57 On that Day the excuses of those who do wrong will benefit them not; nor can they make amends.

57 The wrongdoers’ excuses do not benefit them, because they have been provided ample warning through the messengers and ample opportunity to repent, as in 35:24: And there has been no community but that a warner has passed among them (cf. 16:36). Thus they are commanded, O you who disbelieve! Make no excuses this day! You are only requited for that which you used to do (66:7); see also 16:84; 45:35.

58 And indeed We have set forth for mankind in this Quran every kind of parable. And if thou bringest them a sign, those who disbelieve will surely say, “You make naught but false claims.”

59 Thus does God seal the hearts of those who know not.

58–59 That God has set forth . . . every kind of parable (cf. 39:27) and employed every kind of parable (17:89; 18:54) means that God has shown people the truth, so that they may understand and follow it (IK), thus indicating why it is that the disbelievers have no excuse. Here a sign can mean verses of the Quran (Aj) or prophetic miracles (Aj, IK), such as Moses’ staff turning into a snake and his hand turning white (IJ) or the Prophet Muhammad’s cleaving of the moon (IK; see 54:1c). In this context, them in if thou bringest them a sign refers to the guilty (v. 55) as well as those whom the Prophet cannot make hear (v. 52) because God has “sealed their hearts” (v. 59); thus they will not believe, though every sign should come unto them, till they see the painful punishment (10:97). God’s sealing hearts (see also 2:7; 6:46; 7:100–101; 9:87, 93; 10:74; 16:108; 40:35; 63:3) indicates that He has cut off the faculties of understanding. In some instances it is combined with a reference to God taking away both hearing and sight (e.g., 6:46; 16:108), for although one may still have the use of these faculties, one does not understand the images one perceives through them; see 2:7c; 63:3c.

60 So be patient. God’s Promise is indeed true. And let not those without certainty disquiet thee.

60 That God’s Promise is indeed true (cf. 4:122; 10:4, 55; 18:21; 28:13; 31:33; 35:5; 40:55, 77; 45:32; 46:17) hearkens back to v. 6. Here it is understood as a reference to God’s Promise to aid the Prophet, to make him prevail (IJ, T, Z), and to render his veracity clear (R). The command to not be disquieted by the uncertainty of the disbelievers can mean to not let them make one restive regarding one's own religion (IJ, Q). Thus although the address is in the second-person singular, which ordinarily signifies an address to the Prophet alone, it is understood as having been addressed to the Prophet's community as a whole (Q). Disquiet translates yastakhiff, which can also mean to induce another to levity or to force another to do something in a hurry and so become unsteady. It is also understood to mean making another heedless or ignorant, so that the person then falls into error and transgression (Q).

Luqmān

Luqmān is believed to have been revealed during the Makkan period immediately after the previous sūrah, al-Rūm, although some maintain that vv. 27–29, perhaps the most frequently cited verses of the sūrah, were revealed during the Madinan period (Āl, IJ, JJ). The sūrah takes its name from the mention of the sage or prophet Luqmān (vv. 12–13), who conveys wisdom to his son (vv. 13, 16–19). The beginning of the sūrah can be seen as flowing directly from the last verse of the previous sūrah in that being steadfast in adhering to the Wise Book (v. 2) and following its guidance are what prevent one from being disquieted, while following idle discourse (v. 6) will lead to disquiet. The observation in v. 7 that the disbelievers turn away from God’s signs as if they do not hear also echoes the assertion in 30:52 that the Prophet cannot cause the deaf to hear.

The focus of this sūrah is upon worship, obedience, and gratitude. Luqmān enjoins his son to recognize the Greatness of God, His Oneness, and the need to worship only Him. As in several other passages, this injunction is linked to obedience and gratitude toward parents, so long as they do not challenge one’s allegiance to God. In this teaching one can see an important component of the Quranic social message: people should support the community and maintain familial allegiances, but not to the detriment of their relationship with God. The sūrah closes with a warning that neither parent nor child can help one another on the Day of Judgment (v. 33).

① *Alif. Lām. So give him glad tidings of a painful punishment. ⑧ Truly those who believe and perform righteous deeds, theirs shall be Gardens of bliss, ⑨ therein to abide—God’s Promise in truth. And He is the Mighty, the Wise. ⑩ He created the heavens without pillars that you see, and cast into the earth firm mountains, lest it shake beneath you, and spread about all manner of beast therein. And We sent down water from the sky and caused every noble kind to grow therein. ⑪ This is the creation of God; so show me that which those apart from Him have created. Nay, the wrongdoers are in manifest error. ⑫ And indeed We gave Luqmān wisdom: “Give thanks to God!” And whosoever gives thanks, he gives thanks for his own sake. And whosoever is ungrateful, truly God is Self-Sufficient, Praised. ⑬ And behold, Luqmān said to his son, admonishing him, “O my son! Do not ascribe partners unto God. Truly ascribing partners is a tremendous wrong.” ⑭ And We have enjoined man concerning his parents—his mother bore him, weakness upon weakness, and his weaning was two years—give thanks unto Me and unto thy parents. Unto Me is the journey’s end. ⑮ But if they strive to make thee ascribe as a partner unto Me that of which thou hast no knowledge, then obey them not. Consort with them in the world in a kindly manner, and follow the way of those who turn in repentance unto Me. Then unto Me is your return, and I shall inform you of that which you used to do. ⑯ “O my son! Unto Us is their return; then We shall inform them of that which they did. Truly God knows what lies within breasts. ㉔ We grant them enjoyment a little, then We compel them toward a grave punishment. ㉕ And wert thou to ask them, “Who created the heavens and the earth?” they would surely say, “God.” Say, “Praise be to God.” Nay, but most of them know not. ㉖ Unto God belongs whatsoever is in the heavens and on the earth. Truly God is the Self-Sufficient, the Praised. ㉗ And if all the trees on earth were pens, and if the sea and seven more added to it [were ink], the Words of God would not be exhausted. Truly God is Mighty, Wise. ㉘ Your creation and your resurrection are as naught but a single soul. Truly God is Hearing, Seeing. ㉙ Hast thou not considered that God makes the night pass into the day and makes the day pass into the night, and that He made the sun and the moon subservient, each running for a term appointed, and that God is Aware of whatsoever you do? ㉚ That is because God, He is the Truth, and whatsoever they call upon other than Him is false, and God is the Exalted, the Great. ㉛ Hast thou not considered that the ships sail upon the sea by God’s Blessing, that He may show you His signs? Truly in that are signs for all who are patient, thankful. ㉜ And when waves enshroud them like awnings, they call upon God, devoting religion entirely to Him. Then when He has delivered them safely to land, some of them take a middling course. And none reject Our signs, save all who are perfidious, ungrateful. 33 O mankind! Reverence your Lord and fear a day on which no parent will avail his child aught and no child will avail his parent aught. Surely God's Promise is true. So let not the life of this world delude you, nor let the Deluder delude you concerning God. 34 Truly with God lies knowledge of the Hour, and He sends down the rain and knows what lies in wombs. And no soul knows what it will earn on the morrow, and no soul knows in what land it will die. Truly God is Knowing, Aware.

1 The Arabic letters alif, lām, and mīm, which also appear in 2:1; 3:1; 29:1; 30:1; 32:1, are among the separated letters (al-muqattaʿāt) that are found at the beginning of twenty-nine sūrahs and whose meaning is considered by most commentators to be known only to God; see 2:1c.

② These are the signs of the Wise Book,

2 Cf. 10:1. The Wise Book is a reference to the Quran, which is also described as wise in 10:1 and 36:2; and the Mother of the Book—interpreted to mean the Quran or the source of all revelation—is described as wise in 43:4. Wise translates ḥakīm, which can also mean “determined” or “made firm” (muḥkam), as in 11:1, where the Quran is described as a Book whose signs have been determined (uḥkimat). According to Ibn Kathīr, its being determined (muḥkam) indicates that falsehood comes not upon it from before it or from behind it (41:42). Ḥakīm is also interpreted to mean that which makes wise (muḥkim), since the Quran clarifies and explains (Ṭ). For other sūrahs that open with references to the signs of the Book, see 12:1; 13:1; 15:1; 26:1; 27:1; 28:1.

③ guidance and mercy for the virtuous,

3 If read in the nominative, guidance and mercy describes the Wise Book (IJ, Ṭ); if read in the accusative, it is the reason for which its signs were revealed, that is, as guidance and mercy. Guidance and mercy also characterize the revelation sent to Moses (6:154; 28:43) and describe the Quran in 7:52; 16:64; 16:89. That it is for the virtuous means it is for those who act in accord with it (Ṭ); regarding the virtuous, see 29:69c.

④ who perform the prayer and give the alms and who are certain of the Hereafter.

4 In this context, performing prayer can be seen as virtue with regard to oneself, while paying alms (zakāh) can be seen as virtue with regard to one's property. Prayer also indicates virtue in relation to God, while alms indicates virtue in relation to other human beings. See commentary on the similar verse 27:3; cf. 5:55.

5 It is they who are upon guidance from their Lord, and it is they who shall prosper.

5 Upon guidance means that they see, have clarity, and are following a clear way (IK), since they “ride upon guidance and are made firm by it” (Aj) and are “upon a light from their Lord” (Ṭ, Sh on 2:5). For prosper, see commentary on the identical verse 2:5.

6 And among mankind are those who purchase idle discourse to lead astray from the way of God without knowledge and who take it in mockery; for them there shall be a humiliating punishment.

6 Idle discourse can be a reference to all forms of speech that hinder one from seeing the signs of God and following in the way of God (IK). In this sense, it is a contrast to the Quran, which is referred to as the most beautiful discourse, or “the best discourse,” in 39:23. Idle translates lahw, which can also mean “diversion” or “distraction.” Thus some say it means whatever diverts or distracts one from God (IJ), while others say it refers to disputing in matters pertaining to religion and becoming engrossed in falsehood (ST). This verse was reportedly revealed in relation to stories related by one Naḍr ibn al-Ḥārith, who would return from his travels to distant lands with stories, those of the Byzantines and Sassanids in particular. Idle discourse would then refer to the stories he transmitted to the Quraysh, saying, “Muhammad relates to you the events of the ‘Ād and the Thamūd, and I relate to you the events of Rustam, Isfandiyār, and Khosro.” Some found his tales more entertaining than listening to the Quran, and so this verse was revealed (IJ, JJ, W, Z).

According to others, idle discourse refers to singing (IK, Ṭ), and the verse refers to those who hired singing girls for amusement (IK, Q, Ṭ, Z), a practice forbidden in several sayings of the Prophet (Ṭ, Z). Others maintain that purchase does not refer to spending money, but to preferring idle discourse and thus being lead astray by it (IK, Ṭ), choosing false or empty discourse over true discourse and discourse that harms over discourse that benefits (Ṭ). Such people purchase idle discourse . . . without knowledge (R), ignorant of what the outcome of such actions will be (Ṭ). What they take in mockery is understood to be the way of God (IJ, R, Ṭ) or the signs of God (IJ, Ṭ).

⑦ And when Our signs are recited unto him, he turns away arrogantly as if he did not hear them, as if there were deafness in his ears. So give him glad tidings of a painful punishment.

7 Because some prefer idle discourse to the Quran, they turn away arrogantly. When such people do hear the Quran, however, they do not understand it, because they are spiritually deaf, as in 6:25: Among them are those who listen to thee, but We have placed coverings over their hearts, such that they understand it not, and in their ears a deafness (cf. 2:171; 5:71; 6:39; 8:22; 10:42; 17:46; 18:57; 21:46; 41:5, 44; 47:23); see 6:25c. This is one of many verses to speak of the various ways in which the disbelievers react to the recitation of God's signs, that is, verses of the Quran; cf. 8:31; 19:73; 22:72; 34:43; 42:25; 46:7; 68:15; 83:13. Glad tidings usually indicates the good news of salvation that prophets bring, but here, as elsewhere, it is used with a sense of irony (cf. 3:21; 4:138; 9:3, 34; 45:8; 84:24; see also 5:60), indicating that hypocrites and disbelievers will receive the painful punishment that actions such as purchasing idle discourse and turning away from God's signs merit.

⑧ Truly those who believe and perform righteous deeds, theirs shall be Gardens of bliss,

8 In other verses, those who believe and perform righteous deeds are said to have Gardens with rivers running below (47:12; 85:11) and the Gardens of Paradise as a welcome (18:107) as well as a reward unceasing (41:8).

9 therein to abide—God’s Promise in truth. And He is the Mighty, the Wise.

9 God’s Promise in truth, which could also be rendered “God’s True Promise” or “God’s Promise is true,” means that God has given believers a true promise (Ṭ), the Gardens of bliss (Z). In this context, the combination of the Divine Attributes Mighty and Wise indicates that, while God is the Mighty, Whom none can overcome or thwart and Who thus blesses whomsoever He wills, He is also the Wise, so such blessings are not bestowed arbitrarily, but in a manner that is wise and just (Z).

10 He created the heavens without pillars that you see, and cast into the earth firm mountains, lest it shake beneath you, and spread about all manner of beast therein. And We sent down water from the sky and caused every noble kind to grow therein.

10 As translated, that you see refers to pillars. But it could also be understood as a reference to the heavens, in which case it would be rendered, “He created the heavens, and you see them without pillars” (Q, Ṭ, Z). See commentary on 13:2: God it is Who raised the heavens without pillars that you see. Regarding cast into the earth firm mountains, see 16:15c. That God has spread about all manner of beast (cf. 2:164) upon the earth indicates God’s Mercy in providing nourishment (Ṭ) and the extent of His Knowledge and Power (IK). Beast can be understood as a reference to all animals, and every noble kind (cf. 26:7) can be understood as a reference to every form of vegetation (Ṭ). Noble translates karīm, which also means “generous” and is thus understood by some as a reference to the manner in which vegetation gives abundantly without asking anything in return (R).

11 This is the creation of God; so show me that which those apart from Him have created. Nay, the wrongdoers are in manifest error.

11 This verse challenges the idolaters to substantiate their claim that their idols have some part in the creative process, as in 52:35–36: Were they created from naught? Or are they the creators? Or did they create the heavens and the earth? Nay, but they have no certainty (cf. 7:191; 16:20). For manifest error, see 36:24c

⑫ And indeed We gave Luqmān wisdom: “Give thanks to God!” And whosoever gives thanks, he gives thanks for his own sake. And whosoever is ungrateful, truly God is Self-Sufficient, Praised.

12 Vv. 12–13 provide the only direct reference to Luqmān in the Quran. There is extensive debate regarding his identity. A minority of commentators propose that he was a pre-Islamic Arabian prophet (Ṭ, Z), but most commentators maintain that he was simply a righteous man (IK, Ṭ) or a sage (ḥakīm). Some identify him as a Nubian, an Ethiopian, or an Egyptian slave (IK, Ṭ, Z). Others claim that he was the nephew of the Prophet Job who lived a thousand years and acquired knowledge from the prophet David (Z), or that he was a judge among the people of Israel (Z). In the modern period, some scholars have attempted to identify him with such ancient figures as Prometheus, Alcmaeon, or the Biblical Balaam. It is most likely that he was a pre-Islamic Arabian sage revered during the time of Muhammad. That he was given wisdom is thus interpreted to mean comprehension and understanding rather than revelation (Ṭ).

Thankfulness toward God is for one’s own benefit, because God gives generously in accord with one’s thankfulness toward Him (Ṭ). Whosoever is ungrateful is ungrateful to the detriment of his or her own soul (Ṭ), as in 30:44 and 35:39: Whosoever disbelieves, his disbelief is to his detriment (cf. 40:28). In this context, that God is Self-Sufficient means that He has no need for human gratitude, since it adds nothing to God (Ṭ, Z), but that human beings are in need of being grateful toward God. That God is Praised means that it is in God’s Nature to be praised whether human beings praise God or not (Ṭ, Z). From this perspective, participating in the praise of God is itself a gift for which human beings should give thanks.

14 And We have enjoined man concerning his parents—his mother bore him, weakness upon weakness, and his weaning was two years—give thanks unto Me and unto your parents. Unto Me is the journey’s end.

13–14 The advice given by Luqmān to his son combined with the “charge” given to human beings about parents constitute protection against the two greatest sins, as when the Prophet asked his Companions, “Shall I tell you what are the greatest of major sins? . . . To attribute partners to God and to be disrespectful toward parents.” Goodness, gratitude, and virtue toward parents are enjoined in several verses (4:36; 29:8; 46:15) and often combined with the command to worship none but God (see 17:23); see 29:8c. In 2:83, Be virtuous toward parents is listed as the first injunction of the covenant (mīthāq). Weakness upon weakness refers to the hardships of childbearing (IK, Ṭs) and can also mean “exhaustion upon exhaustion” (IK). His weaning was two years means that it is best for a child to be breast-fed for a full two years when possible, as in 2:233: And let mothers nurse their children two full years, for such as desire to complete the suckling (see also 46:15c). Giving thanks unto God is said to be accomplished through praise and obedience, while giving thanks to parents is demonstrated through righteousness and maintaining ties of kinship (Ṭs).

15 But if they strive to make you ascribe as a partner unto Me that of which you have no knowledge, then obey them not. Consort with them in the world in a kindly manner, and follow the way of those who turn in repentance unto Me. Then unto Me is your return, and I shall inform you of that which you used to do.

15 Although this verse should be understood as a general address to all human beings (Ṭū), according to several accounts this verse and the preceding one were revealed in connection with Saʿd ibn Mālik. Saʿd had always honored his mother, but when he embraced Islam, his mother asked him to leave Islam, saying that if he persisted, she would not eat or drink until she died, and people would all declare his shame by saying that he had killed his mother. But after two days she gave up her hunger strike when she saw that it had no effect upon him (IK, Q, Ṭ). The command to follow the way of those who turn in repentance unto God is understood as an address to all human beings to follow the way of the prophets (Q) or the way of the Prophet Muhammad (Qm, Ṭs) as well as the way of the believers (Ṭs, Ṭū). Some who read the verse as addressing the situation of Sa°d ibn Mālik understand it as a command to follow the way of Abū Bakr, under whose tutelage Sa°d is reported to have entered Islam (Q, Ṭ, W). This is one of several verses where it is said that at the Final Judgment, God will inform people about their actions in this life; see also 5:14, 105; 6:60, 108, 159; 9:94, 105; 10:23; 24:64; 29:8; 31:23; 39:7; 41:50; 58:6–7; 62:8; 64:7; 75:13. In this context, God’s “informing” human beings stands as a reminder that among the things for which they will be called to account are their attitude and actions toward parents.

①⑥ “O my son! If it be but the weight of a mustard seed, be it in a rock, in the heavens, or on the earth, God will bring it forth. Truly God is Subtle, Aware.

16 All deeds, no matter how small, will be accounted for on the Day of Judgment, as in 99:7–8: So whosoever does a mote’s weight of good shall see it. And whosoever does a mote’s weight of evil shall see it. Thus it is said that all deeds will be weighed, as in 21:47: We shall set the just scales for the Day of Resurrection, and no soul shall be wronged in aught. Even if it be the weight of a mustard seed, We shall bring it. That God is Subtle indicates that God has knowledge of the minutest details, while Aware indicates that He is aware of all things at every moment.

①⑦ O my son! Perform the prayer, enjoin right and forbid wrong, and bear patiently whatever may befall you. That is indeed a course worthy of resolve.

17 To enjoin right and forbid wrong is a major ethical injunction of the Quran; see 3:104c, 110, 114; 7:157; 9:71, 112; 22:41. In this context, where it follows Luqmān’s initial command to give thanks to God, ascribe no partners to Him (vv. 12–13), and perform the prayer, the injunction to enjoin right and forbid wrong can be understood to mean that after individuals have perfected their own worship of God, then they can help others perfect theirs (R). As translated, That is indeed a course worthy of resolve (cf. 3:186; 42:43) indicates that the phrase relates to the importance of human beings resolving to follow such a course. But it can also be understood to mean that it is a course or matter that God has resolved, determined, or commanded (Ṭ), in which case it might be rendered, “That is indeed among the matters resolved.”

①⑧ And turn not your cheek at men in scorn, nor walk exultantly upon the earth. Surely God loves not any vainglorious boaster.

18 Turn not your cheek at men in scorn is understood as a general command not to be arrogant with others, especially when conversing with them, but is also said to refer specifically to shunning a companion for whom one had affection (Ṭ). Others understand it as an injunction to avoid speaking in a boastful manner (Ṭ). The injunction to walk not exultantly upon the earth (cf. 17:37) means that one’s reason for walking about should not be vanity and insolence (Z). In the contemporary period, this phrase is invoked by some environmentalists to argue against human beings’ arrogant behavior toward nature, which is seen as an abuse of their role as God’s vicegerents on earth. When seen in relation to the injunctions Luqmān gives his son in vv. 13 and 17–18, this verse can be understood to mean that once people have achieved the level where they truly enjoin right and forbid wrong, they should not be condescending toward others or put on airs (R), and they should not turn their backs on those who seek guidance (ST).

①⑨ And be moderate in thy pace and lower thy voice. Truly the vilest of voices are those of asses.”

19 Be moderate in thy pace means to be neither lazy nor hasty (IK). Combined with the injunction to lower thy voice, it can be understood as counsel to be moderate and deliberate in all of one’s affairs (R). Be moderate in thy pace can also be understood to mean “direct thy walking” (Z), indicating that one should direct one’s course to avoid being influenced by forces that might lead one astray. The command to lower one’s voice is connected to the general advice to be cautious in speech, as the tongue is said to “translate” or manifest the heart (R). In this vein, the Prophet is reported to have asked rhetorically, “Is there anything that drags people on their faces”—or he said, “on their noses”—“into the Fire other than the jests of their tongues?” In relation to the Prophet, lowering the voice is also connected to reverence, as in 49:3: Truly those who lower their voices before the Messenger of God, they are the ones whose hearts God has tested for reverence.

20 Have you not considered that God has made whatsoever is in the heavens and whatsoever is on the earth subservient unto you and has poured His Blessings upon you, both outwardly and inwardly? Among mankind are those who dispute concerning God without knowledge, without guidance, and without an illuminating Book.

20 God has made all things subservient to human beings (cf. 14:33; 22:65; 45:13) insofar as He has made human beings vicegerents upon the earth (6:165; 35:39; cf. 2:30). In this context, the subservience of creation to human beings highlights the importance of being moderate in one's actions and one's speech, as the deeds of human beings can have an exponential impact on the world around them. Here outwardly describes blessings that are attained through the senses, while inwardly describes those attained through the mind, the intellect, and the heart (Aj). Outward blessings could also be seen as the health and comfort God provides, while inward blessings could be seen as faith, certainty, and knowledge (Aj). That people dispute without knowledge, without guidance, and without an illuminating Book (cf. 22:8) indicates that they have no rational arguments, no transmitted knowledge, and no revelation to support their claims (cf. 34:44; 35:40; 43:21; 46:4; 68:37–38).

21 When it is said unto them, "Follow that which God has sent down," they respond, "Nay, but we follow that which we found our fathers following." What! Even though Satan is calling them to the punishment of the Blaze?

21 Similar to this verse is 5:104, in which, when the Makkan idolaters are called to follow the Quran, they respond, Sufficient for us is that which we have found our fathers practicing; this is then countered with a rhetorical question, What! Even if their fathers knew naught and were not rightly guided? Likewise, when the prophets Moses and Aaron call their people to follow the Torah, they respond, Have you come unto us to turn us away from that which we found our fathers following? (10:78). All such verses indicate an unequivocal rejection of blind adherence to the ways of previous generations (Bḍ).

22 And whosoever submits his face to God and is virtuous has indeed grasped the most unfailing handhold, and unto God is the end of all affairs.

22 Submitting one's face to God (cf. 2:112; 3:20; 4:125) implies submitting one's entire being to Him, as in Arabic the face is a metonym for one's essence. Virtuous renders muḥsin, which indicates one who performs iḥsān, that is, virtue, or literally doing what is beautiful or what makes things beautiful; see 29:69c. The manner in which being virtuous or doing what is beautiful is connected to submitting one's face, or essence, to God indicates that the full depth of islām—the reality of “submission”—is attained by performing all actions with virtue and beauty. Both islām and iḥsān control passions and conceits, the former by channeling and neutralizing them from without through the dictates of the Shariah, and the latter by dissolving them from within. But when passions and conceits are dissolved from within, many of the prescriptions and prohibitions that pertain to the outer neutralizing discipline of islām do not need to be imposed, because the actions they enjoin arise organically from within. Submitting one's face as a muḥsin could thus be understood to be the most unfailing handhold (cf. 2:256), a term understood as a metaphor for salvation (Ṭb) and by some Shiites as a reference to the sanctity of the Imams (Ka, Qm). Regarding the most unfailing handhold, °Abd Allāh ibn Salām is reported to have said, “I saw myself in a garden, and there was a pillar in the middle of the garden, and there was a handhold at the top of the pillar. I was asked to climb it. I said, ‘I cannot.’ Then a servant came and lifted up my clothes, and I climbed [the pillar], and then got hold of the handhold, and I woke up while still holding it. I told the Prophet of it, and he said, ‘The garden symbolizes the garden of Islam, and the handhold is the firm Islamic handhold, which indicates that you will be adhering firmly to Islam until you die.’”

23 And whosoever does not believe, let not his disbelief grieve thee. Unto Us is their return; then We shall inform them of that which they did. Truly God knows what lies within breasts.

23 As the disbelievers will return to God on the Day of Resurrection, be informed of their deeds (see 31:15c), and be punished for them, the Prophet is enjoined not to grieve regarding them (Ṭ), since they will not be able to overcome God's Plan (Z; see also 3:176; 5:41, 68; 6:33; 10:65; 15:88; 16:127; 18:6; 26:3; 27:70; 35:8; 36:76). In this context, that God knows what lies within breasts (cf. 3:119, 154; 5:7; 8:43; 11:5; 29:10; 35:38; 39:7; 42:24; 57:6; 64:4; 67:13) means that God knows the disbelief hidden within their hearts (Ṭ). It could also be understood as a general statement that God will deal with all human beings in accord with their true natures (Z).

24 We grant them enjoyment a little, then We compel them toward a grave punishment.

24 This verse could also be read, “And We grant them a little enjoyment.” In both readings, the implication that God is allowing the disbelievers to enjoy the blessings of this life for a while should not be a cause for consternation, since their being given more time and more blessings often allows them more time to commit sin and thus prove their true character. In this regard, 15:3 says of the disbelievers, Leave them to eat and enjoy themselves and to be beguiled by hopes, for soon they will know. And in 14:30, the Prophet is told to say to the disbelievers, Enjoy yourselves! For truly your journey is unto the Fire! See also 3:178; 10:69–70; 16:55; 26:205–7; 29:66; 30:34c; 77:46.

25 And wert thou to ask them, “Who created the heavens and the earth?” they would surely say, “God.” Say, “Praise be to God.” Nay, but most of them know not.

26 Unto God belongs whatsoever is in the heavens and on the earth. Truly God is the Self-Sufficient, the Praised.

25–26 When questioned about the source of creation, they—that is, the idolaters among the Quraysh—would surely say, “God” (cf. 10:31; 23:84–85; 29:61, 63; 39:38; 43:9, 87), because the agency of a creator above all others is evident to them, given that many of them still believed in a supreme deity. The Prophet is then told to say, Praise be to God, meaning that only God should be praised for the existence of the created order, not those who had nothing to do with bringing forth creation (Ṭ), and that no being other than God should be worshipped (Z). Regarding the Divine Names the Self-Sufficient, the Praised, see 31:12c.

27 And if all the trees on earth were pens, and if the sea and seven more added to it [were ink], the Words of God would not be exhausted. Truly God is Mighty, Wise.

27 This verse evokes the inexhaustibility of God's creation through Divine Speech (R), as in 36:82: His Command when He desires a thing is only to say to it, "Be!" and it is (cf. 2:117; 3:47; 6:73; 16:40; 19:35; 40:68). In this context, seven more is not literal, but is meant to indicate an immeasurable quantity (IK, R). Thus, were one to attempt to bring forth all of the creations of God, the possibilities of which are infinite, immeasurable seas of ink and innumerable pens would be exhausted before God's creative speech would be exhausted (Aj, Ṭb); see 18:109c.

This verse was reportedly revealed in response to a dispute the Prophet had with some Jews. After he had migrated to Madinah, a group of Jewish leaders went to see him and said, "O Muhammad, you have said, And you have not been given knowledge, save a little [17:85]. Are you referring to us or to your people?" The Prophet said, "Both." To which they replied, "Do you not recite in what has come to you that we have been given the Torah as a clarification of all things [16:89]?" The Prophet answered, "In relation to God's Knowledge it is little, and you have from [God's Knowledge] what suffices you." Then God sent this verse in response to what they had asked (Ṭ). According to another account, the Prophet responded, "The knowledge that you have is very little in comparison with God's Knowledge. God has given you something that would benefit you, were you to act in accord with it." They said, "O Muhammad, how can you claim this when it is you who says, Whosoever is granted wisdom has been granted much good [2:269]? How can little knowledge and much good be combined together?" Then as a response, God revealed this verse (W). Others say that this verse may have been revealed in relation to a group of disbelievers after they had remarked, "What Muhammad transmits will soon be exhausted" (R).

28 Your creation and your resurrection are as naught but a single soul. Truly God is Hearing, Seeing.

28 God only needs to command a thing once and it will be (Q), as in 54:50: Our Command is naught but one, like the blinking of an eye (IK). Likewise, the Resurrection shall be but a single cry (36:53; 79:13). Thus it is no more difficult for God to create all human beings and to resurrect them than it is for God to create a single human being (Aj, IK, Q). In this way, this verse reaffirms the idea that God's Power would not and could not be exhausted (v. 27) by the process of creation or resurrection. In somewhat different contexts, however, the Quran mentions that God created human beings from a single soul and that from this single soul was created its mate (see 4:1c; 6:98; 7:189; 39:6). That God is Hearing, Seeing (4:58, 134; 22:61, 75; 58:1) reinforces the fullness of God's Omniscience; see 4:58c.

29 Hast thou not considered that God makes the night pass into the day and makes the day pass into the night, and that He made the sun and the moon subservient, each running for a term appointed, and that God is Aware of whatsoever you do?

29 Cf. 35:13. The passing of the night into the day and the day into the night (cf. 3:27; 22:61; 57:6) can refer to the daily exchange of light and darkness (Aj), to seasonal variations in the length of days and nights (IK, JJ), or to both. That God has made the sun and the moon subservient (cf. 7:54; 13:2; 14:33; 16:12; 29:61; 39:5) refers to God's control over all celestial bodies (IK), as in 16:12: The sun, and the moon, and the stars are subservient by His Command. It can also be understood as a reference to the manner in which they are made to serve human beings, as in 14:33: He has made the sun and the moon subservient unto you, constant, and He made the night and the day subservient unto you (cf. 22:65; 31:20; 45:13). That each runs for a term appointed (cf. 13:2; 35:13; 39:5) refers to their termination at the end of the world (IK, JJ) or to their cyclical rotation.

30 That is because God, He is the Truth, and whatsoever they call upon other than Him is false, and God is the Exalted, the Great.

30 That refers to all that is mentioned in the previous verse (Aj, Q, Ṭ, Z), or it can be understood to begin an emphatic statement meaning “Witness that God, He is the Truth” (Aj). The Truth renders al-Ḥaqq, which can also mean “the Real.” This verse is thus understood as an affirmation that God is the Ultimate Reality beyond and behind all of creation and that all of the things to which anyone ascribes ultimate power or upon which anyone calls for intercession are entirely dependent upon God, possessing no reality in and of themselves. God is the only reality or being that is necessary, while all other realities are contingent (Ṭb).

31 Hast thou not considered that the ships sail upon the sea by God’s Blessing, that He may show you His signs? Truly in that are signs for all who are patient, thankful.

31 That seafaring is a blessing bestowed by God (cf. 14:32; 17:66; 22:65; 30:46; 43:12) reiterates the manner in which God makes creation subservient to human beings, as in 45:12: God it is Who made the sea subservient unto you, that the ships may sail upon it by His Command, that you may seek His Bounty, and that haply you may give thanks; see 31:20c. Patient and thankful describe those who are steadfast in the face of affliction and thankful when in a state of ease (IK).

32 And when waves enshroud them like awnings, they call upon God, devoting religion entirely to Him. Then when He has delivered them safely to land, some of them take a middling course. And none reject Our signs, save all who are perfidious, ungrateful.

32 Cf. 10:22–23; 17:67; 29:65. A storm at sea can be seen as a parable for every affliction that besets human beings in life. Devoting religion entirely to Him (cf. 7:29; 10:22; 29:65; 40:14, 65; 98:5) refers to the singularity of their devotion in the face of severe afflictions (Ṭ). Yet when they are delivered to safety, some take a middling course, wavering away from the sincerity they had declared when they feared for their lives (Z), or turn away and are ungrateful (17:67), returning to their polytheism or their forgetfulness of God and behaving tyrannically upon the earth without right (10:23). Perfidious translates khattār, which means one who betrays or stabs in the back or who breaks every promise made (IK). Such people deny that their good fortune is a blessing from God and do not give thanks for it (IK).

33 On the Day of Judgment none can avail another against God's Punishment (2:48, 123; 3:10, 116; 26:88; 44:41; 86:10). On the one hand, this means that even if a parent wanted to take the place of a child, or vice versa, he or she would not be able to do so (IK), since none shall bear the burden of another (6:164; 17:15; 35:18; 39:7; 53:38). On the other hand, it indicates that on the Day of Judgment, everyone will be too concerned with his or her own state of affairs to give thought to the condition of those he or she had loved in this world, as alluded to in 80:37: For every man that Day his affair shall suffice him (see also 70:10–14). This present verse is also one of several that warn against being deluded by the life of this world (cf. 6:70, 130; 35:5; 43:35). The Deluder is a reference to Satan, the nature of whose delusion is made clear in 4:120: He makes them promises and stirs in them desires, but Satan promises naught but delusion (cf. 14:22). Deluder translates ghurūr, which could also be taken as a reference to “delusion” in general.

③ Truly with God lies knowledge of the Hour, and He sends down the rain and knows what lies in wombs. And no soul knows what it will earn on the morrow, and no soul knows in what land it will die. Truly God is Knowing, Aware.

34 That knowledge of the end of time, or the Hour, lies only with God is mentioned in several verses (see 7:187; 33:63; 41:47; 43:85; 67:25–26; 79:42–46). Similarly, only God knows when the rain will fall or what is decreed for children in wombs, since with Him are the keys of the Unseen. None knows them but He (6:59). Ibn ʿUmar related that the Prophet said, “The keys of the Unseen are five, and none knows them except God: none knows the timing of the Hour except God; none knows what is hidden in wombs except God; none knows what is in store for tomorrow except God; no soul knows in which land it will die; only God knows this; and none knows when it will rain except God” (IK, Ṭ). According to some accounts, after making this statement, the Prophet recited this verse.

This verse was reportedly revealed in response to a man who asked the Prophet about the Hour and its exact timing, adding, “Our land has dried up. When is it going to rain? And I left my wife pregnant. When is she going to give birth? And I know in which land I was born, but in which land am I going to die?” (W). But according to others, the verse had been revealed before this encounter, and the Prophet simply responded to these questions by saying, “If God wanted to take the soul of a servant in a particular land, He would place within that servant a need, such that he would not cease until he had reached that land,” after which he recited this verse (Q).

That no one knows the time or place of death is understood as an admonition to be always prepared for death and thus ever mindful of God. In this vein, al-Tustarī is reported to have said, “No soul knows what it will earn on the morrow; that is, [no soul knows] what [counts] for it and against it in what has been measured out from the Unseen. So, be wary of [what has been measured out] by upholding the remembrance of Him and crying out to Him for help, until He Himself takes care of your affair; as He has said: God effaces what He will and establishes [13:39; ST].”

Prostration

al-Sajdah

Al-Sajdah is from the Makkan period, although many scholars maintain that vv. 16–20 are from the Madinan period (Āl, IJ, Q), and others maintain that only vv. 18–20 are Madinan, or that only v. 16 is (IJ). Such interpretations may, however, derive from a desire to attach these verses to occasions of revelation for which there is not strong support; al-Ālūsī observes that the strength of the connection of these verses to the preceding verses makes it seem unlikely that they are from a different period. Believed to have been revealed after Sūrah 23, al-Muʾminūn (JJ), this sūrah takes its name from the mention of those who fall prostrate and hymn the praise of their Lord in v. 15. It was also known to some as Sūrat al-Maḍājiʿ, meaning “Sūrah of the Beds,” after the reference to those who shun their beds in order to devote themselves to God in v. 16 (Āl; Sy). Many also refer to this sūrah by its first words, “Alif, Lām, Mīm, the Revelation” (Al, Bq, Q), as a way to distinguish it from other sūrahs that begin with the Arabic letters alif, lām, and mīm.

Many aḥādīth attribute great favor to this sūrah. It is reported that the Prophet would read both al-Mulk (Sūrah 67) and al-Sajdah every night before going to sleep (Āl, Q, Sy, Ṭs), and that he would often recite al-Sajdah and al-Insān (Sūrah 76) during the morning prayer on Fridays (Āl, Q, Sy). Some attribute the reverence for this sūrah to the way it covers the major themes of the Quran in a succinct manner. The first half of the sūrah discusses revelation (vv. 2–3), God (vv. 4–6), creation, especially of human beings (vv. 7–9), and Resurrection and Judgment (vv. 10–14). The second half provides an eloquent contrast between those who prostrate before God in beholding His signs and those who turn away from them (vv. 15–22), employing the Children of Israel as an example of those who were guided so long as they followed God’s signs (vv. 23–25). A call to reflect upon the end of civilizations past and the signs of God in creation (vv. 26–27) then segues into a call for the Prophet to challenge the disbelievers and await the answer (vv. 28–30).

① Alif. Lām. Mīm. ② The revelation of the Book in which there is no doubt, from the Lord of the worlds. ③ Or do they say, “He has fabricated it”? Nay, it is the truth from thy Lord, that thou mayest warn a people to whom no warner has come before thee, that haply they may be guided. ④ God it is Who created the heavens and the earth and whatsoever is between them in six days. Then He mounted the Throne. Apart from Him you have neither protector, nor intercessor. Will you not, then, remember? ⑤ He directs the affair from Heaven unto earth; then it ascends unto Him in a day whose measure is as a thousand years of that which you reckon. ⑥ Such is the Knower of the Unseen and the seen, the Mighty, the Merciful, ⑦ Who made beautiful all that He created, and Who began the creation of man from clay. ⑧ Then He made his seed from a draught of base fluid. ⑨ Then He fashioned him, and breathed into him of His Spirit, and endowed you with hearing, sight, and hearts. Little do you give thanks! ⑩ And they say, “What, when we have become lost in the earth, shall we indeed be created anew?” Nay, they believe not in the meeting with their Lord. ⑪ Say, “The Angel of death, who has been entrusted with you, will take you; then unto your Lord shall you be returned.” ⑫ Couldst thou but see when the guilty bend their heads low before their Lord: “Our Lord! We have seen and we have heard; so send us back that we may work righteousness. Truly we are certain.” ⑬ And had We willed, We would have given every soul its guidance. But the Word from Me comes due: “I shall surely fill Hell with jinn and men all together!” ⑭ So taste [the punishment] for having forgotten the meeting with this your Day!

Verily, We have forgotten you! And taste the punishment everlasting for that which you used to do. ⑮ Truly they believe in Our signs who when reminded of them fall prostrate and hymn the praise of their Lord and do not wax arrogant, ⑯ whose sides shun [their] beds, calling upon their Lord out of fear and hope, and who spend from that which We have provided them. ⑰ No soul knows what comfort is kept hidden for it as a recompense for that which they used to do. ⑱ Is one who believes like one who is iniquitous? They are not equal. ⑲ As for those who believe and perform righteous deeds, theirs shall be Gardens of refuge, as a welcome for that which they used to do. ⑳ And as for those who are iniquitous, their refuge is the Fire. Whenever they desire to go forth therefrom, they are returned unto it, and it is said unto them, “Taste the punishment of the Fire that you used to deny!” ㉑ And We make them taste the lesser punishment before the greater punishment, that they might turn back. ㉒ And who does greater wrong than one who has been reminded of the signs of his Lord, then turns away from them? Truly We shall take vengeance upon the guilty. ㉓ And indeed We gave unto Moses the Book; so be not in doubt regarding the meeting with Him. And We made him a guide for the Children of Israel. ㉔ And We appointed leaders from among them who guided by Our Command when they were patient and were certain of Our signs. ㉕ Truly thy Lord will distinguish between them on the Day of Resurrection regarding that wherein they used to differ. ㉖ Does it not serve as guidance for them, how many generations We destroyed before them, amidst whose dwellings they walk? Truly in that are signs. Will they not listen? ㉗ Have they not considered how We drive the water to the barren earth and bring forth crops thereby, whereof they and their cattle eat? Will they not see? ㉘ And they say, “When is this victory, if you are truthful?” ㉙ Say, “On the Day of Victory, faith will not benefit those who disbelieved; nor shall they be granted respite.” ㉚ Then turn away from them and wait; they, too, are waiting.

1 The Arabic letters alif, lām, and mīm, which also appear in 2:1; 3:1; 29:1; 30:1; and 31:1, are among the separated letters (al-muqaṭṭaʿāt) found at the beginning of twenty-nine sūrahs and whose meaning is considered by most commentators to be ultimately known only to God; see 2:1c. In an allusive commentary upon this verse, al-Maybudī writes, “Alif alludes to God; lām alludes to Gabriel; and mīm alludes to Muhammad. He is saying, ‘It is by My Divinity, by Gabriel’s holiness, and by thy splendor, O Muhammad, that this revelation, which is the Quran that We promised unto thee, would be thy level of prophethood and thy ruling power.’”

2 This is the first of five sūrahs to begin with the revelation of the Book (cf. 39:1; 40:2; 45:2; 46:2). In each of these instances, revelation translates tanzīl, which literally means “descending” or “descent.” From one perspective, “Although the Quran is a single reality, it has many levels of descent and is called by various names corresponding to each particular level of descent” (MŞ). The Book refers to the Quran (JJ). In which there is no doubt may refer to either the Book itself (IK), meaning its contents, or to the revelation of the Book, meaning that there is no doubt regarding its Divine provenance (IK, Ṭ, Z).

③ Or do they say, “He has fabricated it”? Nay, it is the truth from thy Lord, that thou mayest warn a people to whom no warner has come before thee, that haply they may be guided.

3 The beginning question asks whether people attest to the Book or claim the Prophet has fabricated it (cf. 10:38c; 11:13, 35; 46:8). Or translates the particle am, which can be read as an interrogative particle or as particle for continuing the previous discussion, in which case the verse would read, “Yet they say . . .” or “Nay, but they say . . . ,” a reading preferred by several commentators (Ṭ, Z). To whom no warner has come before thee indicates that the Arabs of the Prophet’s generation had not received a revelation (R, Ṭ, Z), though earlier Arabs, such as the tribes of °Ād and Thamūd, had received revelations. In this sense, this verse is similar to 34:44, which says of the Arabs, We have not given them any books that they study; nor have We sent them a warner before thee; and 36:6, which states that the Quran was sent that thou mayest warn a people whose fathers were not warned; so they were heedless. Similar to 36:6, the present verse could also be read to mean “that thou mayest warn a people of that which came to them by a warner before thee,” in which case it refers to the fact that their ancestors were warned in earlier epochs, but these revelations were forgotten over time.

④ God it is Who created the heavens and the earth and whatsoever is between them in six days. Then He mounted the Throne. Apart from Him you have neither protector, nor intercessor. Will you not, then, remember?

④ Regarding the creation of the heavens and the earth . . . in six days (cf. 10:3; 11:7; 25:59; 50:38; 57:4), after which God mounted the Throne on the seventh day (IK, Ṭ), an allusion to God’s Sovereignty (R), see 7:54c. Some maintain that then, here rendering thumma, can be understood to mean “and” (Q), which would appear to contest the interpretation that God mounted the Throne on the seventh day. That people have neither protector, nor intercessor other than God means that none may intercede or help without God’s Permission (IK, Z), as in 10:3: There is no intercessor, save by His Leave (see also 19:87; 20:109; 39:44; 43:86; 53:26; 74:48; 2:48c; 2:255c), which is another means of confirming God’s absolute sovereignty (see 2:107). Will you not, then, remember (cf. 6:80; 45:23) can be understood as a reference to remembering the pretemporal covenant made between God and all human beings in 7:172 (K) or to remembering the Reality of God. The phrase can also be rendered, “Will you not, then, be admonished?” meaning, “Will you not take heed of this warning?”

⑤ He directs the affair from Heaven unto earth; then it ascends unto Him in a day whose measure is as a thousand years of that which you

5 After mounting the Throne, God directs the affair (cf. 10:3, 31; 13:2), making it descend from the highest heaven to the lowest level of the earth (IK), which refers to His control over all affairs (Ṭ) and the carrying out of His Decree (IJ) for the duration of the world (JJ) or to the descent of revelation (IJ). What ascends to God are the angels (IJ) or the Command, meaning that everything that was created by the Command ascends unto Him on the Day of Resurrection (IJ, Z). That its measure is as a thousand years of that which you reckon (cf. 22:47) indicates the severity of the terrors of that Day for the disbelievers and is elsewhere likened to fifty thousand years (70:4; JJ). Such disparity also indicates the difference between duration in the spiritual world and that in the world of form and matter; see 22:47c; 70:4c.

Regarding the importance of understanding the manner in which God directs the affair, al-Tustarī is reported to have said, “He reveals to His servants from His Knowledge that which is a means of guidance and salvation for them. The person who is content with the decreed provision resulting from God’s directing for him will have the evil of his own directing disposed of and removed from him. Thus [God] will have returned him to a state of contentment with the Divine Decree and rectitude in the face of the unfolding of what is destined for him. [Such people] are among those who are brought nigh [unto God (al-muqarrabūn; see 56:11–12c)]. Truly, God created people without any veil, and then made their directing [for themselves] their veil.”

⑥ Such is the Knower of the Unseen and the seen, the Mighty, the Merciful, 6 Regarding God as Knower of the Unseen and the seen (cf. 6:73; 9:94, 105; 13:9; 23:92; 39:46; 59:22; 62:8; 64:18), see 59:22c.

7 Made beautiful translates aḥsana, which can also be understood to mean

“perfected” or “completed with precision,” although in this context some understand it to mean “determined” (ahkama; ٢). Regarding the creation of human beings, God is also said to have made beautiful their forms (40:64). This verse implies that the quality of “making beautiful” is something in which human beings can partake by beautifying the world around them and by beautifying their character. In this vein, the Prophet is reported to have said, “Verily God has enjoined making beautiful (ihsān) for everything. So, when you kill, kill in a beautiful manner; when you sacrifice, sacrifice in a beautiful manner.”

The clay from which Adam and, by extension, all human beings were created is variously described as being like potter’s clay (55:14); dried clay, made of molded mud (15:26); a draught of clay (23:12); and viscous clay (37:11). These different forms of clay can be seen as describing stages of human creation: from dust (3:59), to viscous clay, to molded mud, to dried clay, like earthen vessels (55:14), at which point it is ready for the spirit to be blown into it, as in v. 9.

⑧ Then He made his seed from a draught of base fluid.

8 His seed, meaning human progeny (R, ٢), hence all human beings, is from an extract of clear liquid (Iṣ, ٢). Base fluid (cf. 77:20), like the gushing fluid in 86:6, refers to semen. Draught renders sulālah, which implies something drawn forth or gently flowing forth; the semen is referred to as such because it flows gently from the loins (٢s). It is mentioned in part as a reminder for human beings of their humble origins. God’s Ability to create human beings out of such lowly materials can also be seen as testimony to God’s Ability to resurrect human beings from mere dust and bones.

9 A similar account of the creation of Adam is phrased as an address from God to the angels: When I have proportioned him and breathed into him of My Spirit, fall down before him prostrating (38:72; cf. 15:29). Breathed into him of His Spirit indicates that God made Adam, who had been inanimate, into a living conscious being (JJ). The Spirit can also be understood to represent the bestowal or activation of the intellect by which human beings control hearing, sight, and hearts. The order in which these three terms are mentioned can be understood as an allusion to the path by which one acquires knowledge, first hearing of things from others, then seeing them and attaining to them for oneself, then perceiving their true nature and coming to a more direct and complete understanding of them (R). Those who do not give thanks for these faculties are those whose hearing, sight, and hearts availed them naught, since they rejected God's signs (46:26), meaning that they do not use these faculties to act in accord with God's teachings, but simply to follow their own desires and caprices.

⑩ And they say, “What, when we have become lost in the earth, shall we indeed be created anew?” Nay, they believe not in the meeting with their Lord.

10 The question in this verse may be seen as meaning, “When our bodies have decomposed, are we to be reconstituted?” (IJ, JJ). This is similar to the more common objection voiced by disbelievers, What! When we are dead and have become dust and bones, are we to be resurrected? (56:47; cf. 17:49, 98; 23:82–83; 36:78; 37:16–17, 53; 50:3; 79:11). Regarding those who deny resurrection and the meeting with their Lord (cf. 6:31), see 30:8c.

⑪ Say, “The Angel of death, who has been entrusted with you, will take you; then unto your Lord shall you be returned.”

11 In Islamic angelology, the Angel of death is understood to be Azrael (IK, Q), who is in charge of removing spirits from bodies at the moment of death, for which he is said to have helpers among the angels (IK, Ṭ; see 4:97c; 8:50; 16:32), though it is also said that God takes souls at the moment of their death (39:42). Al-Qurṭubī reconciles these verses by saying that the Angel of Death seizes them, the helping angels, referred to as guardians and as Our messengers in 6:61, attend to them, and God brings about their end; see also 6:61–62c; 7:37; and the essay “Death, Dying, and the Afterlife in the Quran.”

⑫ Couldst thou but see when the guilty bend their heads low before their Lord: “Our Lord! We have seen and we have heard; so send us back that we may work righteousness. Truly we are certain.”

12 Couldst thou but see is an address directly to the Prophet or a general address (R). In either case, it refers to the amazement one would experience upon witnessing the state of the disbelievers in the Hereafter (R). Now that the souls of disbelievers have been taken by the Angel of Death, seen the realities of Resurrection and Judgment that they had denied (cf. 19:38), and been made to admit their sin (67:11; cf. 40:11), they say, We are certain, meaning they believe with certainty or that they are simply claiming to believe in order to avoid the punishment, as in 6:23: Then their contention will be but to say, “By God, our Lord, we were not idolaters” (R). In another verse, God responds to the same request that they be sent back, in their words, so that they may work righteousness, saying, Did We not give you long life, enough for whosoever would reflect to reflect therein? And the warner came unto you; so taste [the punishment]! (35:37). In 23:100, when the same request is made by one person, the evaluation is Nay, indeed these are words that he speaks. God thus denies all such requests, because even if they were sent back, they would return to the very thing they had been forbidden (6:28). For the manner in which this and other verses can be seen as part of an extended discourse between God and the denizens of Hell, see 40:11–12c.

⑬ And had We willed, We would have given every soul its guidance. But the Word from Me comes due: “I shall surely fill Hell with jinn and men all together!”

13 This verse is an address to those who despair over the attitude of the disbelievers, as the Prophet did, letting them know that it is God’s Decree that some turn away, as in 10:99: And had thy Lord willed, all those who are on the earth would have believed all together. Wouldst thou compel men till they become believers? That God will fill Hell with jinn and men all together (cf. 11:119; 38:85) then speaks to the fact that the Prophet can only call people to guidance, but must leave their final end in the Hands of God.

⑭ So taste [the punishment] for having forgotten the meeting with this your Day! Verily, We have forgotten you! And taste the punishment everlasting for that which you used to do.

14 These words are spoken by God or by the angels who serve as the keepers of Hell to the disbelievers as the latter enter Hell (JJ). In other verses, God or the keepers say, Taste the punishment for having disbelieved (3:106; 6:30; 8:35; 46:34; cf. 7:39). This is one of several verses that speak of the disbelievers being forgotten by God, as in 45:34: And it will be said, "Today We forget you just as you forgot the meeting with this your Day; your refuge is the Fire and you have no helpers" (see also 7:51; 9:67; 20:126; 59:19). Such verses mean that they are cast out of God's Mercy or into the state of punishment (Bd), since God does not "forget" (IK). Many understand such verses to mean that disbelievers are left to wallow in the punishment of the Fire (JJ), but it also speaks to the importance for one's spiritual life of remembering the meeting with God and thus death. In this regard, the Prophet is reported to have said, "The intelligent person is one who knows his soul and works for what follows death." And when asked, "Who is the most intelligent of believers?" he replied, "The most frequent in remembering death, and the best prepared for what follows it, they are the most intelligent."

⑮ Truly they believe in Our signs who when reminded of them fall prostrate and hymn the praise of their Lord and do not wax arrogant, 15 Our signs refers to the verses of the Quran (Aj, JJ), to all revelations, to prophetic miracles, or to all of the signs of God in the created world. According to a ḥadīth, "The closest that a servant can be to his Lord is when he is prostrating" (IK, Q). Nonetheless, this verse cautions that for such prostration to be efficacious it must not be mixed with arrogance. According to the Islamic tradition, this is one of fifteen verses after which one prostrates when reciting the Quran; see 19:58c.

⑯ whose sides shun [their] beds, calling upon their Lord out of fear and hope, and who spend from that which We have provided them.

16 This verse was reportedly revealed with regard to some Companions of the Prophet who would stand in prayer from after the sunset prayer (maghrib) until the time of the night prayer (‘ishā’; W), while others say it refers to those who pray the night vigil (tahajjud; W). Given that they shun [their] beds, the second interpretation is more plausible. In this context, fear is understood to mean fear of punishment and hope is understood to mean hope for mercy (JJ). From a spiritual perspective, it can be understood to mean the fear of being separated from God and the hope of meeting Him (Qu, ST). Al-Maybudī writes, “Sleeplessness and wakefulness at night are the cause of nearness to the Truth and evidence of the perfection of love, for the first degree of love is seeking conformity, and the attribute of the Truth is that neither slumber overtakes Him nor sleep [2:255].” In this vein, the Prophet is reported to have said, “My eyes sleep, but my heart waketh” (My).

As the reference to prayer is understood by most to mean the supererogatory night vigil, the reference to spending is understood to mean charity (ṣadaqah) beyond the required alms tax (zakāh). Spending of what God has provided is extolled alongside prayer and belief in several verses (e.g., 2:3; 8:3; 4:39; 35:29), and human beings are called upon to spend of that which We have provided you before death comes upon one of you and he says, “My Lord, wouldst that Thou grant me reprieve until a term nigh, that I might give charity and be among the righteous!” (63:10; cf. 2:254; 14:44).

⑰ No soul knows what comfort is kept hidden for it as a recompense for that which they used to do.

17 Comfort translates qurrat a‘yūn, which literally means “coolness of the eyes” and conveys ease, comfort, and joy. In the Quran, some understand it as an allusion to the vision of God (Aj), because “the eye is only cooled by the vision of the one it loves” (Qu). In relation to this verse, it is reported that the Prophet said, “God says, ‘I have prepared for My righteous servants what no eye has seen and no ear has heard and what has not occurred to the heart of any human being.’” Then the Prophet recited, No soul knows what comfort is kept hidden for it (Q).

One of the Prophet’s Companions, Mu‘ādh ibn Jabal, reported that the Prophet cited this verse and the previous one when teaching him the practice of Islam: “I said, ‘O Messenger of God, tell me of an act that will take me into the Garden and will keep me away from the Fire.’ He replied, ‘You have asked me about a significant matter; yet it is easy for him for whom God Almighty makes it easy. You should worship God, associating nothing with Him, perform the prayers, pay alms (zakāh), fast during Ramadan, and make the pilgrimage to the House.’ Then he said, ‘Shall I not show you the gates of goodness? Fasting, which is a shield; charity, which extinguishes sin as water extinguishes fire; and the prayer of a man in the depths of night.’” Then the Prophet recited vv. 16–17.

Interpreting the comfort or cooling of the eyes as an allusion to the joy one finds in the attainment of spiritual realities, al-Tustarī is reported to have said, “Their eyes [are cooled] at the outward and inward realities that they witness, which are disclosed to them by way of unveiling. Then they behold them and adhere to them, so that their eyes are cooled and their hearts repose in them” (ST).

18 Is one who believes like one who is iniquitous? They are not equal.

19 As for those who believe and perform righteous deeds, theirs shall be Gardens of refuge, as a welcome for that which they used to do.

18–19 V. 18 is one of several verses to ask a rhetorical question aimed at indicating the utter disparity between believers and disbelievers. Elsewhere, their disparity is likened to that between the blind and the seeing (see 11:24; 13:19; 35:19; 40:58), the living and the dead (35:22), or those who know and those who do not know (39:9; see also 3:162; 5:100; 38:28; 39:9; 47:14–15; 59:20; 68:5). These two verses, along with the following two, can be read as part of the continuing response to the disbelievers who in v. 12 asked to be sent back in order to perform righteous deeds. In these four verses, it is made clear that the stark difference between believers and disbelievers in this world portends an even starker contrast in their final ends, since the declaration of faith with the tongue is believed to have little efficacy if it is not put into practice with the limbs and manifest in the heart.

20 And as for those who are iniquitous, their refuge is the Fire. Whenever they desire to go forth therefrom, they are returned unto it, and it is said unto them, “Taste the punishment of the Fire that you used to deny!”

20 The desire of the disbelievers to leave the punishment can be understood as evidence of the continuing inability of some of them to realize that they have in fact earned their punishment through their own actions. Having failed to grasp the true nature of their iniquity, as evidenced by their request to be returned to this world to work righteousness (see v. 12c), they are condemned to be cast in the Fire over and over again. Also see 22:22: Whensoever they desire, in their grief, to leave it, they shall be returned unto it, while [being told], "Taste the punishment of the burning!"

②① And We make them taste the lesser punishment before the greater punishment, that they might turn back.

21 The lesser punishment is punishment in this world (IK, JJ), which can come through the humiliation of defeat, through illness, or by natural disaster (JJ), among other afflictions. Others say it refers to the legal punishments brought against the disbelievers in this world or to the punishment in the grave that comes before the eternal punishment (IK). The greater punishment is that of the Hereafter (JJ). From one perspective, they are afflicted with the lesser punishment as a mercy from God, as it might make them reflect and thus turn back to belief (JJ), which is considered the natural state of human beings (see 7:172c; 30:30c).

②② And who does greater wrong than one who has been reminded of the signs of his Lord, then turns away from them? Truly We shall take vengeance upon the guilty.

22 The first sentence of this verse is repeated in 18:57, followed by Surely We have placed coverings over their hearts, such that they understand not, and in their ears a deafness. Even if thou callest them to guidance, they will never be rightly guided. It is not that such people cannot see the signs if left to themselves, but that God veils the signs from them due to their arrogance and disbelief, as in 7:146: I shall turn away from My signs those who wax arrogant upon the earth without right. Even if they were to see every sign, they would not believe in them. A subtle theme throughout the Quran is that miracles by themselves do not convince people of religious truth if their souls are set against it, as in 6:25, which says of the disbelievers, Were they to see every sign, they would not believe in it, so that when they come to thee, they dispute with thee (see also 2:145; 7:146; 10:96–97). With regard to the present verse, Qatādah is reported to have said, “Whosoever turns away from the remembrance of God has been beguiled by the greatest delusion, rendered destitute by most severe penury, and oppressed by the greatest of sins” (IK), and that is the most severe form of vengeance. Regarding the manner in which God takes vengeance, see also 44:16c.

23 And indeed We gave unto Moses the Book; so be not in doubt regarding the meeting with Him. And We made him a guide for the Children of Israel.

23 This sudden change of subject to a discussion of Moses may suggest that the revelation given to him was among those signs from which one should not turn away (v. 22). As translated, the meeting with Him refers either to Moses’ meeting with God when he received revelation or to the meeting with God that awaits every soul. Many commentators understand the pronoun Him in this phrase as a reference to the Prophet Muhammad’s meeting with Moses on his ascent from Jerusalem to the Throne of God (see 17:1c; 53:1–18), in which case it would be translated “with him” (IK, R, Ṭ); or to the Prophet Muhammad’s receiving revelation (Bḍ, R); or to Moses’ receiving revelation, in which case it would be rendered “with it.” Such interpretations are possible, but would not be consistent with the common Quranic use of “meet” (laqiya) and “meeting” (liqāʾ) to indicate the meeting with God (see 2:4, 223, 249; 6:31, 154; 8:46; 9:77; 10:7, 11, 15, 45; 11:29; 13:2; 18:105, 110; 29:5; 30:8; 32:10; 33:44; 41:54c); the meeting with death (see, e.g., 3:143; 62:8); or the meeting of the Day of Judgment (see, e.g., 6:130; 23:14; 39:71; 45:34). “Meeting” is, however, never used as a direct reference to receiving revelation. The most consistent interpretation of this verse would thus be to see it as a reference to the meeting with God. In this context, it would then mean that any who have received a revelation, like the people of Moses, should not be in doubt about the meeting with God. We made him a guide could also be rendered “We made it a guide,” referring to the Torah (IK, JJ, Ṭ).

24 And We appointed leaders from among them who guided by Our Command when they were patient and were certain of Our signs.

24 The leaders in this verse likely refers to the scribes, priests, Pharisees, and rabbis. The verse indicates that so long as the religious leaders patiently adhered to God's commands, confirming God's messengers and following them, they were guided. But when they altered the scriptures or the correct interpretation of the scriptures (see 4:46; 5:15, 41), they were deprived of that station and their hearts hardened (IK). Their being patient can also be seen as a reference to enduring the attractions of this world and not succumbing to them (IK, Ṭ). Thus some see this verse as evidence that one cannot be a religious leader unless one has attained the virtue of patience (IK). The last phrase could also be read as a new sentence, "And they were certain of Our signs."

25 Truly thy Lord will distinguish between them on the Day of Resurrection regarding that wherein they used to differ.

25 This verse is either specific, referring to the Children of Israel, or general, referring to all of humanity. On the Day of Judgment, God distinguishes between them regarding the different understandings of religious matters, resurrection, reward, and punishment and then sends them to the Garden or the Fire (Ṭ); see also 2:113; 10:93; 16:124c; 39:3; 45:17.

26 Does it not serve as guidance for them, how many generations We destroyed before them, amidst whose dwellings they walk? Truly in that are signs. Will they not listen?

26 This is one of several verses to allude to the towns (6:6; 7:4; 21:11; 22:45, 48; 47:13) and whole generations (17:17; 19:74; 20:128; 36:31; 38:3; 50:36) that were destroyed for their iniquities and for their refusal to accept the messengers whom God had sent to them. Amidst whose dwellings they walk refers to the remains of bygone towns and settlements that the Arabs would pass on their travels.

27 Have they not considered how We drive the water to the barren earth and bring forth crops thereby, whereof they and their cattle eat? Will they not see?

27 They is most likely a reference to disbelievers among the Quraysh. The discussion of God’s reviving barren earth indicates that they fail both to be thankful for the manner in which He provides for them, as in 56:68–70, and to understand the manner in which God can resurrect human beings after they have died. All such verses that refer to the revival of the earth can also be understood as a reference to spiritual revivification, with the dead land serving as a metonym for the dead heart (see, e.g., 25:48–49; 30:19; 36:33; 50:9–11).

28 And they say, “When is this victory, if you are truthful?”

28 The disbelievers ask the believers, When is this victory, if you are truthful? meaning, “When is the Day of Resurrection?” Victory translates fath, which can also mean a decisive arbitration between parties. Fath is thus understood by some commentators as a reference to God’s Decree and to His distinguishing between the believers and disbelievers (IK), as in 34:26: Say, “Our Lord will gather us together; then He will decide between us with truth; and He is the Arbiter, the Knower.”

29 Say, “On the Day of Victory, faith will not benefit those who disbelieved; nor shall they be granted respite.”

29 When the Day of Judgment comes, even though the disbelievers say, Our Lord! We have seen and we have heard. . . . Truly we are certain (v. 12), their acknowledgment of the truth will be of no benefit. They will not be granted respite to make amends, because they had already been warned and been shown God’s signs in this life, but they turned away in arrogance.

30 Then turn away from them and wait; they, too, are waiting.

30 Believers are counseled to wait for the punishment to be sent down upon the disbelievers (JJ). They, too, are waiting means that the disbelievers are expecting and awaiting the believers’ destruction as well (JJ). They, too, are waiting can also be read with a sense of irony, meaning that the disbelievers are waiting for their own destruction, though they do not know that this is what they are awaiting. For other instances of this ironic statement with slight variations, see 6:158c; 7:71; 9:52; 10:20, 102; 11:122; 20:135; 52:31.

The Parties

al-Aḥzāb

A Madinan sūrah, al-Aḥzāb is believed to have been revealed immediately after Sūrah 3, Āl ‘Imrān. The sūrah takes its name from the mention of the parties (al-aḥzāb), or confederates (an alliance consisting of the Makkan Quraysh and other Arab and Jewish tribes), who fought the Muslims at the Battle of the Trench (5/627), also known as the Battle of the Parties and as the Siege of Madinah.

The strength of the confederate armies is estimated to have been around ten thousand men with six hundred horses and many camels; the Madinans numbered around three thousand. When news of the forces marching upon Madinah reached the Prophet, the outnumbered defenders of Madinah, mainly Muslims, had only six days to prepare. They employed a strategy suggested by the Persian Salmān al-Fārsī and heretofore unknown to the Arabs: they dug a trench on the northern outskirts of Madinah that connected its natural fortifications, large lava tracts to the east and west whose rough, irregular surface impeded cavalry attacks. The earth and rock excavated from the trench were heaped up on the defenders’ side, giving them protection from projectiles and providing them with many rocks as ammunition. The trench also made it almost impossible for horses to leap to the other side. Hundreds of high-walled gardens that created serpentine pathways already impeded attack from the south, because any attacking army would be forced to march in long columns that would be open to ambush.

The Muslim forces patrolled the approximately three-and-a-half-mile trench day and night. These defenses limited the fighting to small skirmishes and turned the battle into a test of wits and wills that resulted in a month-long siege. The confederate army made several attempts to cross the trench at night, but repeatedly failed. Hoping to make several attacks at once, the confederates persuaded the Jewish tribe of Banū Qurayzah, who resided in Madinah, to allow them through their fortifications to attack the city from the south. The Muslims, however, caught wind of this plan and managed to sow dissension between the Quraysh and the Banū Qurayzah and thus derail their negotiations. They further weakened the confederacy by offering one of its key tribes, the Banū Ghaṭafān, one-third of the date harvest of Madinah if they left the battlefield. Although terms of the treaty with the Banū Ghaṭafān could not be agreed upon, the fact that a large part of the confederacy had entered into negotiations with the Prophet strained the already tense relations within the confederacy. The dissension between the parties, the sinking of confederate morale, and a sandstorm that lasted several days helped bring the siege to an end.

In the aftermath, the Muslim army laid siege to the Banū Qurayzah and forced their unconditional surrender. For their act of treason in negotiating with an opposing force and thus breaking the treaty of Madinah, the men of the Banū Qurayzah were all sentenced to death and the women and children taken captive. The defeat also caused the Makkans to lose much of their prestige and was the last major battle between the Muslims and the Quraysh before the conquest of Makkah in 8/630.

In addition to addressing this major turning point in early Islamic history, al-Aḥzāb is significant for highlighting the importance of the Prophet in Islam and the status of his wives. He is said to be closer to the believers than they are to themselves (v. 6) and a beautiful example for those who hope for God and the Last Day, and remember God much (v. 21). The believers are thus counseled to obey him (vv. 33, 36, 66, 71), especially when he has decreed a matter (v. 36). The sūrah further confirms that he is not the biological father of any of the men among the believers (v. 40), but in extolling the virtues of the Prophet's wives and declaring them to be the mothers of the believers (v. 6), it confirms his status as a spiritual father to all believers. In addition to affirming that the Prophet is a witness, a warner, a bearer of glad tidings, and one who calls unto God (vv. 45–46), as do many other passages of the Quran, this sūrah refers to him as the Seal of the prophets (v. 40) and a luminous lamp (v. 46).

In one of the most celebrated verses of the Quran, al-Aḥzāb declares that God and His angels invoke blessings upon the Prophet and enjoins the believers to do so as well (vv. 56–57). Finally, the Prophet’s wives are afforded a status above other women (vv. 31–32), and the family of the Prophet, here referred to as the People of the House, are said to be those whom God desires to purify of all defilements (v. 33). Based upon such verses and many aḥādīth, love for the Prophet and his family has long been regarded as a foundational component of faith. In the words of the Prophet, “Love God for how He nourishes you from His Blessings. Love me for the love of God. And love the people of my house for the love of me.” In this regard, the famous scholar and ascetic Sufyān al-Thawrī (d. 161/778) is reported to have said, “Whosoever loves one whom God loves only loves God. And whosoever honors one whom God has honored only honors God.”

① O Prophet! Reverence God and obey not the disbelievers and the hypocrites. Truly God is Knowing, Wise. ② And follow that which is revealed unto thee from thy Lord. Truly God is Aware of whatsoever you do. ③ And trust in God; God suffices as a Guardian. ④ God has not placed two hearts in the breast of any man. Nor has He made your wives whom you repudiate with the practice of ḡihār your mothers. Nor has He made those whom you claim [as sons] your sons. Those are mere words from your mouths. But God speaks the Truth and guides upon the way. ⑤ Call them after their fathers. That is more equitable before God. And if you do not know their fathers, then they are your brethren in religion and your clients. There is no blame upon you for being mistaken therein, but only for that which your hearts intend. And God is Forgiving, Merciful. ⑥ The Prophet is closer to the believers than they are to themselves, and his wives are their mothers. Family relations are closer to one another, according to the Book of God, than are the believers and the emigrants. Nonetheless, you should act rightly toward your friends. That is inscribed in the Book. ﴿7﴾ And [remember] when We made with the prophets their covenant, and with thee, and with Noah, Abraham, Moses, and Jesus the son of Mary; We made with them a solemn covenant, ﴿8﴾ that the truthful may be questioned concerning their truthfulness. And for the disbelievers He has prepared a painful punishment. ﴿9﴾ O you who believe! Remember the Blessing of God upon you when the hosts came upon you and We sent against them a wind and hosts that you saw not—and God sees whatsoever you do— ﴿10﴾ when they came upon you from above you and below you, and when eyes swerved and hearts reached into throats, and you thought many things regarding God. ﴿11﴾ It was there that the believers were tried and shaken in a manner most severe. ﴿12﴾ And when the hypocrites and those in whose hearts is a disease said, “God and His Messenger promised us naught but delusion.” ﴿13﴾ And when a group among them said, “O people of Yathrib! There is no stand for you; so turn back.” And a group among them sought permission from the Prophet, saying, “Truly our houses are exposed,” though they were not exposed. They wanted naught but to flee. ﴿14﴾ Had they been entered upon from the sides of the city, then were exhorted to treachery, they would have committed it and would not have hesitated, save a little, ﴿15﴾ though previously they had made a pact with God that they would not turn their backs; and the pact with God is called to account. ﴿16﴾ Say, “Fleeing will not benefit you if you flee from death or killing, for you will not be granted enjoyment, save a little.” ﴿17﴾ Say, “Who is it who will protect you from God if He desires evil for you or desires mercy for you?” They will find no protector or helper for themselves apart from God. ﴿18﴾ Surely God knows those among you who hinder and those who say unto their brethren, “Come hither unto us”; yet they come not to the battle, save a little, ﴿19﴾ greedy toward you. But when fear comes, thou seest them looking at thee with their eyes rolling like one whom death overwhelms. Then when fear subsides, they assail thee with their sharp tongues, greedy for good things. Such as these have not believed; so God made their deeds come to naught, and that is easy for God. ﴿20﴾ They suppose that the parties have not withdrawn, and if the parties were to come, they would wish they were in the desert among the Bedouin, seeking news of you. And were they among you, they would not fight, save a little. 21 Indeed, you have in the Messenger of God a beautiful example for those who hope for God and the Last Day, and remember God much. 22 When the believers saw the parties, they said, “This is what God and His Messenger promised; God and His Messenger spoke true.” And it increased them in naught but faith and submission. 23 Among the believers are men who have been true to that which they pledged unto God. Among them are those who have fulfilled their vow, and among them are those who wait, and they have not changed in the least, 24 that God may recompense the truthful for their truthfulness and punish the hypocrites if He will, or relent unto them. Truly God is Forgiving, Merciful. 25 And God turned back those who disbelieved in their rage; they attained no good. God sufficed the believers in battle; and God is Strong, Mighty. 26 He brought the People of the Book who supported them down from their strongholds and cast terror into their hearts—some you slew and some you took captive. 27 And He bequeathed unto you their land, their homes, their property, and a land you have not trodden. And God is Powerful over all things. 28 O Prophet! Say unto thy wives, “If you desire the life of this world and its ornament, then come! I shall provide for you and release you in a fair manner. 29 But if you desire God and His Messenger and the Abode of the Hereafter, then truly God has prepared a great reward for the virtuous among you.” 30 O wives of the Prophet! Whosoever among you commits a flagrant indecency, her punishment will be doubled; and that is easy for God. 31 And whosoever among you is devoutly obedient to God and His Messenger and works righteousness, We shall give her her reward twice over, and We have prepared for her a generous provision. 32 O wives of the Prophet! You are not like other women. If you are reverent, then be not overly soft in speech, lest one in whose heart is a disease be moved to desire; and speak in an honorable way. 33 Abide in your homes and flaunt not your charms as they did flaunt them in the prior Age of Ignorance. Perform the prayer, give the alms, and obey God and His Messenger. God only desires to remove defilement from you, O People of the House, and to purify you completely. ③④ And remember that which is recited unto you in your homes from among the signs and Wisdom of God. Truly God is Subtle, Aware. ③⑤ For submitting men and submitting women, believing men and believing women, devout men and devout women, truthful men and truthful women, patient men and patient women, humble men and humble women, charitable men and charitable women, men who fast and women who fast, men who guard their private parts and women who guard [their private parts], men who remember God often and women who remember [God often], God has prepared forgiveness and a great reward. ③⑥ And it is not for a believing man or a believing woman, when God and His Messenger have decreed a matter, to have a choice regarding the matter. Whosoever disobeys God and His Messenger has strayed into manifest error. ③⑦ And [remember] when thou saidst unto him whom God has blessed and whom thou hast blessed, “Retain your wife for yourself and reverence God,” thou wast hiding in thyself that which God was to disclose; and thou didst fear the people, though God has more right to be feared by thee. Then when Zayd relinquished his claim upon her, We wed her to thee, so that there should be no restriction for the believers in respect to the wives of their adopted sons when the latter have relinquished their claims upon them. And the Command of God shall be fulfilled. ③⑧ There is no restriction for the Prophet in what God has ordained for him. [That is] the wont of God with those who passed away before—and God’s Command is a decree determined, ③⑨ those who convey God’s messages and fear Him, and fear none but God. And God suffices as a Reckoner. ④① Muhammad is not the father of any man among you; rather, he is the Messenger of God and the Seal of the prophets. And God is Knower of all things. ④② O you who believe! Remember God with frequent remembrance, ④③ and glorify Him morning and evening. ④④ He it is Who blesses you, as do His angels, that He may bring you out of darkness into light. And He is Merciful unto the believers. ④⑤ Their greeting on the day they meet Him will be “Peace.” And He has prepared for them a generous reward. ④⑥ O

Prophet! Truly We have sent thee as a witness, as a bearer of glad tidings, and as a warner, 46 as one who calls unto God by His Leave, and as a luminous lamp. 47 Give glad tidings to the believers that there will be for them a great bounty from God. 48 Obey not the disbelievers and the hypocrites; disregard their affront, and trust in God. God suffices as a Guardian. 49 O you who believe! If you marry believing women and then divorce them before you have touched them, there shall be no waiting period for you to reckon against them. But provide for them and release them in a fair manner. 50 O Prophet! We have made lawful for thee thy wives to whom thou hast given their bridewealth, as well as those whom thy right hand possesses of those whom God has granted thee as spoils of war, and the daughters of thy paternal uncles and the daughters of thy paternal aunts, and the daughters of thy maternal uncles and the daughters of thy maternal aunts who emigrated with thee, and any believing woman if she gives herself [in marriage] to the Prophet and if the Prophet desires to marry her—for thee alone, not for [the rest of] the believers. We know well what We have enjoined upon them with respect to their wives and those whom their right hands possess, that there may be no blame upon thee. And God is Forgiving, Merciful. 51 Thou mayest put off whomsoever of them thou wilt and receive whomsoever thou wilt. And as for whomsoever thou mightest desire of those whom thou hast set aside, there is no blame upon thee. Thus is it likelier that they will be comforted, that they will not grieve, and that they will be content with that which thou hast given all of them. God knows what is in your hearts. And God is Knowing, Clement. 52 Women are not lawful for thee beyond that, nor [is it lawful] for thee to exchange them for other wives, though their beauty impresses thee, save those whom thy right hand possesses. And God is Watcher over all things. 53 O you who believe! Enter not the dwellings of the Prophet for a meal without waiting for its time to come, unless leave be granted you. But if you are invited, enter; and when you have eaten, disperse. Linger not, seeking discourse. Truly that would affront the Prophet, and he would shrink from telling you, but God shrinks not from the truth. And when you ask anything of [his wives], ask them from behind a veil. That is purer for your hearts and their hearts. And you should never affront the Messenger of God, nor marry his wives after him. Truly that would be an enormity in the sight of God. 54 Whether you disclose something or conceal it, surely God is Knower of all things. 55 There is no blame upon them with regard to their fathers, or their sons, or their brothers, or their brothers' sons, or their sisters' sons, or their own women, or those whom their right hands possess. And reverence God. Truly God is Witness over all things. 56 Truly God and His angels invoke blessings upon the Prophet. O you who believe! Invoke blessings upon him, and greetings of peace! 57 Truly those who affront God and His Messenger, God has cursed them in this life and the Hereafter, and has prepared for them a humiliating punishment. 58 As for those who affront believing men and believing women for other than what they may have committed, they bear the burden of calumny and manifest sin. 59 O Prophet! Tell thy wives and thy daughters, and the women of the believers to draw their cloaks over themselves. Thus is it likelier that they will be known and not be disturbed. And God is Forgiving, Merciful. 60 If the hypocrites do not desist, and likewise those in whose hearts is a disease, as well as those who spread false rumors in the city, We shall surely spur thee against them; then they will not be thy neighbors therein, save for a short while. 61 Accursed! They will be seized wheresoever they are found and utterly slain. 62 [That is] the wont of God with those who passed before; and you will find no alteration in the wont of God. 63 People question thee concerning the Hour. Say, "Knowledge thereof lies only with God. And what will apprise thee, perhaps the Hour is nigh." 64 Truly God curses the disbelievers and prepares for them a blazing flame, 65 therein to abide forever; they will find no protector or helper. 66 On the Day when their faces are turned about in the Fire, they will say, "Oh, would that we had obeyed God and obeyed the Messenger!" 67 They will say, "Our Lord! Truly we obeyed our leaders and elders, and they caused us to stray from the way. 68 Our Lord! Give them a twofold punishment, and curse them with a great curse." 69 O you who believe! Be not as those who affronted Moses, whereat God declared him innocent of what they alleged, and he was honored with God. ﴿70﴾ O you who believe! Reverence God and speak justly, ﴿71﴾ that He may set your deeds aright for you, and forgive you your sins. And whosoever obeys God and His Messenger has achieved a great triumph. ﴿72﴾ Truly We offered the Trust unto the heavens and the earth and the mountains, but they refused to bear it, and were wary of it—yet man bore it; truly he has proved himself an ignorant wrongdoer. ﴿73﴾ That God may punish the hypocritical men and the hypocritical women, the idolatrous men and the idolatrous women, and that God may relent unto the believing men and the believing women. And God is Forgiving, Merciful.

Commentary

① O Prophet! Reverence God and obey not the disbelievers and the hypocrites. Truly God is Knowing, Wise.

1 The Prophet is commanded to not compromise with the disbelievers in a manner that would contravene the revealed law. Throughout the Quran, the Prophet is warned to avoid any such concessions, as in 45:18: Then We placed thee upon a clear path from the Command; so follow it, and follow not the caprices of those who know not (cf. 5:48–49; 42:1). The present verse was reportedly revealed with regard to some leaders of the Quraysh who had traveled to Madinah after the Battle of Uḥud (3/625) to see the Prophet. Muhammad had allowed them to come to speak with him with his assurance of protection. They requested that he cease rejecting their idols and recognize the idols’ ability to intercede on behalf of those who worship them. Upon hearing this, ‘Umar ibn al-Khaṭṭāb said to the Prophet, “Let me kill them, O Messenger of God!” The Prophet replied, “I have given them my assurance of protection,” upon which ‘Umar said to them, “Leave with God’s Curse and Wrath upon you.” The Prophet then ordered ‘Umar to drive them out of Madinah (Ṭs, W). In this context, the command to reverence God, though general, can also be understood as a specific reminder to those who wanted to kill the delegation from the Quraysh that they must honor their agreement to grant them protection (Ṭs).

② And follow that which is revealed unto thee from thy Lord. Truly God is Aware of whatsoever you do.

2 The first verse makes clear who Muslims should not follow, and this verse reiterates what they should follow, namely, the Quran and the revealed laws (Ṭs). In a variant reading, whatsoever you do could also be “whatsoever they do” (Ṭs).

③ And trust in God; God suffices as a Guardian.

3 In this context, that God suffices as a Guardian (cf. 4:81, 132, 171; 33:48; see also 17:65) affirms that the Muslims do not need to make alliances that would compromise the principles of the revelation.

④ God has not placed two hearts in the breast of any man. Nor has He made your wives whom you repudiate with the practice of ḡihār your mothers. Nor has He made those whom you claim [as sons] your sons. Those are mere words from your mouths. But God speaks the Truth and guides upon the way.

4 When viewed in relation to the previous verses, that no one has two hearts refers to one's inability to follow two contrary ways: those who believe in the revelation and the Quran, on the one hand, and the people of disbelief and rebellion, on the other (Ṭs); that is, one cannot both believe and disbelieve at the same time (Ṭs). It can also refer to the Quranic position that no person can have any true guardian other than God (R), just as no person can serve two masters. From a Quranic perspective, true reverence for God does not allow one to rely upon the teachings of God in some matters and upon the caprices of people in others, for one would then not reverence God as He should be revered (3:102). That one cannot have two hearts is also understood as a reminder that a heart preoccupied with one thing is distracted from anything other than that; so a heart preoccupied with this world is separated from the next (Qu), and the heart preoccupied with what is other than God cannot be focused upon God. In this regard al-Tustarī states, "So as long as one is preoccupied with oneself, one will be veiled from God."

When viewed in relation to the remainder of this verse, that no person has two hearts means that just as a man's wife cannot be his mother, because one cannot have two mothers, and that just as someone claimed as a son is not one's true offspring, because no one can have two fathers, so too no one can have "two hearts" (IK, Z). To be both mother and wife of someone would also require existing in two mutually incompatible states (Z), which a heart cannot do.

ḡihār was a pre-Islamic Arabian practice in which a man could repudiate his wife by declaring, "You are to me as my mother's back." By custom this implied that the husband was now free of all duties toward the wife, but the wife was not free to leave the husband and contract another marriage. For a more extensive discussion of ḡihār, see commentary on 58:1–4, which abolished this practice.

Nor has He made those whom you claim [as sons] your sons was reportedly revealed to clarify the nature of the Prophet's relationship with Zayd ibn Ḥārithah, a freed slave of the Prophet who remained a part of the Prophet's extended household. Sometime before the beginning of the revelations, Zayd's father had repudiated him when Zayd declared that he preferred to remain with Muhammad as his slave rather than return to his family. Muhammad then declared Zayd to be his son and proclaimed, "He inherits from me, and I inherit from him." When the Prophet married Zaynab bint Jaḥsh, the ex-wife of Zayd (see 33:37c), some of his detractors said, "Muhammad has married the wife of his son while forbidding people to do the same!" And so this verse was revealed clarifying that, although the Prophet had claimed Zayd as his son, such bonds were not subject to the same restrictions as bonds of blood (IK, Q, Ṭs, W).

Those are mere words from your mouths refers to those who criticized the Prophet, maintaining that Zayd was indeed his son. More generally, it indicates that words from the mouth are nothing more than words, but that words from the heart are true (R). Whereas the words spoken by a human being may arise from the mind, the heart, or the emotions, those spoken by God have only one source (R). God speaks the Truth can also be understood as a reference to God bringing all things into existence through Divine Speech, since His Command when He desires a thing is only to say to it, "Be!" and it is (36:82; cf. 2:117; 3:47; 6:73; 16:40; 19:35; 40:68), and He created the heavens and the earth in truth, or "through truth" (39:5).

⑤ Call them after their fathers. That is more equitable before God. And if you do not know their fathers, then they are your brethren in religion and your clients. There is no blame upon you for being mistaken therein, but only for that which your hearts intend. And God is Forgiving, Merciful.

5 Regarding this verse, ʿAbd Allāh ibn ʿUmar is reported to have said, "We did not use to call Zayd ibn Ḥārithah by any name other than Zayd ibn Muhammad until the Quran revealed, Call them after their fathers. That is more equitable before God" (Q, Ṭs, W). This verse abolished the pre-Islamic custom of adopting others the way the Prophet had adopted Zayd, enjoining Muslims instead to adopt one another as brothers and as clients (Q, Z). Clients translates mawālī (sing. mawlā), which is elsewhere translated heirs (4:33; 19:5), and which in other verses refers to God as Master (e.g., 2:286; 3:150; 6:62; 8:40), and is etymologically related to walī (pl. awliyāʾ), meaning "protector" or "protecting friend." Both mawlā and walī are employed throughout the Quran to refer to a variety of close relations, such as inheritance, kinship, servitude, friendship, and alliance. There is no blame upon those who had engaged in the practice of adoption as the Prophet did in Zayd’s case, since they did not intend to go against God’s Will (Ṭs). Applied more broadly, this verse is understood to mean that people are not taken to account for unintended mistakes, regarding which the Prophet is reported to have said, “God exonerates my community of being mistaken, of forgetting, and of that which they are forced to do” (IK, Z).

⑥ The Prophet is closer to the believers than they are to themselves, and his wives are their mothers. Family relations are closer to one another, according to the Book of God, than are the believers and the emigrants. Nonetheless, you should act rightly toward your friends. That is inscribed in the Book.

6 Closer to the believers could also be rendered, “More worthy of the believers,” meaning he has more right over them than they have over themselves. In both renderings it refers to the centrality of the Prophet in the lives of Muslims. This applies legislatively, as in 4:65: By thy Lord, they will not believe until they have made thee the judge between them in their disputes, and find no resistance in their souls to what thou hast decreed, and surrender with full submission; and spiritually, as in a famous ḥadīth: “By the One in Whose Hand is my soul, none of you truly believes until I am more beloved to him than his own self, his wealth, his children, and mankind all together” (IK). Commenting upon this verse and citing this ḥadīth, al-Tustarī writes, “Whoever does not see himself [or his soul] as belonging to the Messenger and does not see the patronage (wilāyah) of the Messenger in every situation has in no way tasted the sweetness of his wont (sunnah). This is because the Prophet is the closest to the believers” (ST). From the logic of the Quran, this is because the Prophet is troubled by what the believers suffer and is solicitous, kind, and merciful toward them (9:128; Aj). It is also understood to mean that his supplication for the believers is more efficacious than their supplication for themselves (Ṭs).

This verse and v. 53 elevate the status of the Prophet’s wives. Thereafter they were known as the “mothers of the believers,” and marriage to them after the Prophet’s death was forbidden. Their position as the “mothers of the believers” implies by extension that, although the Prophet is not the biological or adoptive father of the believers (see 33:40c), from a spiritual perspective he is the father of all believers (Qm), which is also a basis for their brotherhood (Ṭs). That family relations are closer means that despite the bonds of brotherhood between Muslims, inheritance was based upon blood relations. When the Prophet first arrived in Madinah, he joined the Emigrants from Makkah and the Helpers from Madinah together in pacts of brotherhood, but the Prophet and the members of his family made the pact with one another. Until the revelation of this verse, it was reportedly the practice to observe these pacts of brotherhood when dividing the property of the deceased. After this verse, that practice was no longer followed (IK, Q, Ṭs), but believers were permitted to make limited bequests to nonrelatives (Ṭs). That refers to the abrogation of inheritance based upon religion and emigration (IK, JJ, Ṭs); see also 8:72–75, which is interpreted as having nullified the legal implications of the pacts of brotherhood. Here the Book refers to the Preserved Tablet (85:22; JJ, Ṭs) or to the Quran (Ṭs).

Some Shiite commentaries connect this verse to the events at Ghadīr Khumm, which took place during the Prophet’s return from Makkah to Madinah after the Farewell Pilgrimage in 10/632, at which time 5:67 is reported to have been revealed. After this revelation, the Prophet called for the people to gather. When they had gathered, he delivered a lengthy sermon during which he said, “I have been called [by God], and I shall answer. I am leaving for you two great things. If you adhere to them both, you will never go astray after me. They are the Book of God and my progeny, that is, the People of my Household. The two shall never separate from each other until they come to me by the Pool [of Paradise].” Toward the end of the sermon, he took the hand of ʿAlī ibn Abī Ṭālib and said, “O people! Am I not closer to you than yourselves?” To which they responded, “Indeed! O Messenger of God.” Then he said, “For whosoever I am his master (mawlā), ʿAlī is his master,” to which some report he added, “O God, love those who love him, and be hostile to those who are hostile to him.” He is also reported to have then said to ʿAlī, “You are to me as Aaron to Moses, save that there is no prophethood after me.” For the Shiites, this event is understood to mean that ʿAlī had been designated the successor to the Prophet and to have been given the same rights over the believers that the Prophet had over them, and the reference to family relations is understood as a reference to the Shiite Imams who came after him (Qm). According to this interpretation, the reference to the covenant in the next verse then applies to the Shiite Imams as well.

⑦ And [remember] when We made with the prophets their covenant, and with thee, and with Noah, Abraham, Moses, and Jesus the son of

Mary; We made with them a solemn covenant,

7 Covenant (mīthāq) can be understood as a reference to the covenant made by all of humanity while they were still in Adam's loins (Mw) or to the pacts (ʿuhūd) made by the messengers to convey the message and call to the upright religion (30:30; Bg, Mw, Q, Z). According to some commentators, this verse pertains to a covenant that is particular to the prophets in which they pledged to worship God, call others to worship God, and confirm one another (Mw, Sh). Some say that this was an additional covenant made after the covenant to which all of humanity bore witness on the Day of the Covenant (see 7:172; IK). These five prophets are said to be mentioned for their exalted status as the resolute among the messengers (46:35), who brought the known Divine laws (Bg, Q, Sh) and revealed books (Q). The mention of the five prophets can also be understood to stand for all prophets. With regard to the order in which the prophets are mentioned, the Prophet is reported to have said, "I was the first prophet to be created and the last of them to be sent; so He began with [the mention of] Me before them" (IK, Mw, Q). In this regard, a Companion of the Prophet said, "I asked, 'O Messenger of God, when were you a prophet?' and he replied, 'While Adam was between spirit and body.'" Another ḥadīth states, "Truly I was with God, the Seal of Prophets, when Adam was still kneaded in his clay."

The second mention of covenant in the verse can be seen as a repetition and reaffirmation of the first; or the first mention can be seen as a covenantal affirmation of God's supreme Sovereignty and the second as pertaining to the particularities of prophethood; see 3:81. According to al-Zajjāj, "[God] made the covenant when they were brought forth from Adam's loins as progeny, then He affirmed the covenant He had made with the prophets by repeating the mention of it and describing it as a solemn covenant, meaning 'a pact firm in fulfillment' of that which they had been made to carry and of that which God had enjoined upon them" (Sh).

The present verse could also be understood to mean that God made a covenant with them twice, the first time without "making it solemn" (taghlīz) and without firmness (tashdīd), then a second time making it solemn and firm, as in 3:81 (Sh). Its being solemn can also be understood as a reference to the sobering obligation of bearing God's message and conveying Divine laws (Ṭs). Although the covenant is mentioned throughout the Quran (see the essay "The Quranic View of Sacred History and Other Religions"), a solemn covenant is only mentioned here, in 4:21, where it describes the marriage pact, and in 4:154, where it describes the covenant with Moses and the Israelites.

⑧ that the truthful may be questioned concerning their truthfulness. And for the disbelievers He has prepared a painful punishment.

8 God made the covenant with the prophets so that He could ask “the believers who confirm their pact when He makes them testify about themselves regarding their truthfulness toward their pact” (Bg); for had God not enjoined the prophets to deliver revelation, it would be unjust to hold human beings accountable for having failed to uphold the covenant, as they would have received no specific reminders. In this respect, al-Zamakhsharī relates the mention of the covenant in the previous verse to the pretemporal covenant alluded to in 7:172. When they are questioned, the response of the truthful will be, The messengers of our Lord certainly brought the truth (7:43; IK).

⑨ O you who believe! Remember the Blessing of God upon you when the hosts came upon you and We sent against them a wind and hosts that you saw not—and God sees whatsoever you do—

9 The first mention of hosts refers to the Quraysh and their allies, who came upon Madinah “as parties” at the Battle of the Trench in 5/627; see the introduction to this sūrah. A wind refers to the sandstorm that came at the end of the siege of Madinah and eventually led many members of the confederacy to quit the battlefield. Hosts that you saw not is understood as a reference to angels who untied the tents of the confederacy during the storm, leaving them exposed to the elements (Ṭ). In an alternate reading, the last sentence could also be understood to mean, “God sees whatsoever they do,” referring to the disbelievers (Ṭs).

⑩ when they came upon you from above you and below you, and when eyes swerved and hearts reached into throats, and you thought many things regarding God.

10 From above you and below you (cf. 5:66; 6:65; 29:55) is an idiomatic expression meaning to be enveloped on all sides. In this context it refers to the Muslims being surrounded by the confederate forces on all sides (JJ). From above could thus be seen as a reference to the tribes that came upon Madinah from the east, those of Qurayzah, Naḍīr, and Ghaṭafān. Below you would then refer to those who came from the west, meaning the Quraysh and the smaller tribes that followed them (Ṭs). Eyes swerved to gaze upon the enemy, and hearts reached into throats due to the intensity of their fear (IK, JJ). During the siege of Madinah, in which any severe lapse could have led to the downfall of Madinah, some had misgivings, others thought they would receive Divine assistance, and others despaired (JJ). As the situation worsened, a Companion of the Prophet is reported to have asked, “O Messenger of God, is there anything we should say, for our hearts have reached our throats?” He replied, “Yes. Say, ‘O God, cover our weaknesses and calm our fears’” (IK, Ṭs). The different groups involved thought many things regarding God: the believers were certain that God’s Help would come and they would be victorious; the hypocrites believed that the Prophet and his followers would be eliminated; and others despaired of the situation (IJ, IK, Ṭ, Ṭs). Thought many things regarding God could also refer only to those whose hearts were weak and thus doubted God or to the general state of mind in which those who lack courage might find themselves (Ṭs).

⑪ It was there that the believers were tried and shaken in a manner most severe.

11 The nearly month-long siege the Muslims endured was a test through which their faith and patience became manifest (Ṭs), and the true believers were clearly distinguished from the hypocrites (IJ, Ṭ). For the spiritual benefit of trials, see commentary on 29:2–3.

⑫ And when the hypocrites and those in whose hearts is a disease said, “God and His Messenger promised us naught but delusion.”

12 Those in whose hearts is a disease (2:8–11; 5:52; 24:47–50; 33:60; 47:20, 29; 74:31) is usually employed to describe the hypocrites and those with impure intentions (see v. 32). But its use here for a separate group in addition to the hypocrites may indicate that it refers to those believers whose convictions were weak because they still harbored some doubt within their souls (Ṭs).

⑬ And when a group among them said, “O people of Yathrib! There is no stand for you; so turn back.” And a group among them sought permission from the Prophet, saying, “Truly our houses are exposed,” though they were not exposed. They wanted naught but to flee.

13 A group among them refers to the hypocrites, here identified by most as ʿAbd Allāh ibn Ubayy and those with him. Yathrib was the name of Madinah before Islam; so their call is to all the inhabitants of Madinah. There is no stand for you is meant to communicate to the Madinans that there is no way for them to oppose the forces now gathered against them (JJ) or that their particular strategy of manning the trench leaves them unduly exposed to attack (IJ). Turn back enjoins them to retreat to their houses in the city rather than man the trench on its outskirts. A group sought to leave the hardships of maintaining watch over the trench by claiming that their houses were in need of defense (IJ, JJ). Before the siege, this same group had argued that it was better to fight the confederates from within the city.

⑭ Had they been entered upon from the sides of the city, then were exhorted to treachery, they would have committed it and would not have hesitated, save a little,

14 Had the confederates entered the city and exhorted the hypocrites to revert to polytheism, they would have done so with little hesitation (IJ, Ṭs) and would have fought against the Muslims (Z). Alternately, and would not have hesitated, save a little could mean “and would not have remained in it, save a little”; that is, had they reverted and fought against the Muslims, they would not have remained in Madinah very long, because God would have destroyed them (Z) or the believers would have expelled them soon thereafter (R).

⑮ though previously they had made a pact with God that they would not turn their backs; and the pact with God is called to account.

15 This verse makes clear the corruption of the hypocrites (R). They had previously pledged to fight with the Prophet, aiding him in defending Madinah, just as he had pledged to aid in their defense. Some say that this verse refers to the pledge taken with the Prophet at °Aqabah before the emigration (Ṭs, Z). Others say that it refers to those who were absent from the Battle of Badr, but vowed to fight in the future if called upon to do so (Ṭ, Z). Another opinion names the tribe of Banū Ḥārithah, who had abandoned the Muslim armies at the Battle of Uḥud, leading to their rout that day; they vowed that they would never do the same, but now wavered again in the face of the enemy (Ṭ). That the pact with God is called to account (cf. 17:34) means that one is bound to it until it has been fulfilled (Z) and that one will be held accountable for it in the Hereafter (Ṭs).

16 Say, “Fleeing will not benefit you if you flee from death or killing, for you will not be granted enjoyment, save a little.”

16 Fleeing will benefit the hypocrites in neither a metaphysical sense, because they cannot escape what is destined to befall them, whether natural death or being slain (Z), nor an earthly sense, because they would not be able to escape the confederate army that would deal with them after having dealt with the other forces. You will not be granted enjoyment, save a little then means that there will only be a short respite before they too would be overwhelmed by the Quraysh and the confederates. Alternately, it could mean that they might only have comfort for the remainder of life in this world (JJ), thus indicating that they might receive some comfort during the time that God has decreed for them, but no reward in the Hereafter (Ṭ).

17 Say, “Who is it who will protect you from God if He desires evil for you or desires mercy for you?” They will find no protector or helper for themselves apart from God.

17 That no one can find any protector or helper apart from God is a recurrent Quranic theme (cf., e.g., 2:107; 4:123, 173; 9:74, 116; 11:113; 29:22; 33:65; 42:8, 31), as from a Quranic perspective God suffices as a Protector, and God suffices as a Helper (4:45); see 29:22c. In relation to the Battle of the Trench, this verse also evokes 3:28: Let not the believers take the disbelievers as protectors apart from the believers (cf. 4:144; 5:55–57; 9:71).

⑱ Surely God knows those among you who hinder and those who say unto their brethren, “Come hither unto us”; yet they come not to the battle, save a little,

⑲ greedy toward you. But when fear comes, thou seest them looking at thee with their eyes rolling like one whom death overwhelms. Then when fear subsides, they assail thee with their sharp tongues, greedy for good things. Such as these have not believed; so God made their deeds come to naught, and that is easy for God.

18–19 Those among you who hinder refers to the hypocrites who sought to dissuade others from manning the defenses with the Prophet and the believers (R, Ṭs). They come not to the battle, save a little means that they engage in the battle only for outward show and to maintain their reputations (JJ, Ṭs), or because they are greedy toward you, meaning greedy to attain the material spoils of victory (Ṭ). Greedy toward you could also mean “miserly toward you,” referring to their refusal to “spend in the way of God” (Ṭ, Ṭs) and to the fact that they would not fight on the side of the Muslims (Ṭs). But when they fear defeat, they look to the Prophet as if they were in the throes of death, seeking shelter and aid from him (Ṭ). Yet afterwards they turn their focus again to the objects of this world. Then they assail the Prophet and the believers, claiming it was they themselves who had fought and through whose help the enemy had been defeated (R) and that the Prophet has no more right to the spoils than do they (Ṭs), because they are greedy for good things, that is, for the spoils of war (R, Ṭ). They have not believed; so although they may obtain some of the spoils of victory in this life, in the absence of sincere belief, their deeds will provide no reward in the next life. Regarding the broader Quranic discussion of deeds coming to naught, see 2:217; 5:5, 53; 7:147; 9:17; 11:16; 18:105; 33:19; 47:9, 28, 32; 3:22c; 6:88c; 39:65c.

⑳ They suppose that the parties have not withdrawn, and if the parties were to come, they would wish they were in the desert among the Bedouin, seeking news of you. And were they among you, they would not fight, save a little.

20 That the hypocrites think that the parties had not withdrawn implies the depth of their fear and cowardice (Z), for they fear an enemy that is no longer there. If the parties were to come a second time (Ṭs, Z), the hypocrites would prefer to be with the tribes in the desert awaiting news of the Muslims' defeat (Ṭ). Similar to v. 18, that they would not fight, save a little indicates that they would only do so halfheartedly, out of concern for maintaining their reputations (Ṭs, Z), rather than out of a sincere desire to aid the Prophet and his followers or to strive in the way of God.

21 Indeed, you have in the Messenger of God a beautiful example for those who hope for God and the Last Day, and remember God much.

21 This is among a number of verses that establish the importance of obeying the Prophet and following his example, even in matters not addressed directly by the Quran (see also 3:31; 4:59, 83; 24:63; 33:21). In the immediate context, the beautiful example that is found in the Prophet refers to being steadfast in combat and holding one's ground (JJ), but this verse is also among the most important regarding the position of the Prophet in Islam in general. Although his function as God's messenger is unique and inimitable, the Prophet's words and actions are considered to provide the archetype of a life lived in full submission to God. Regarding the Prophet's example, 'Alī ibn Abī Ṭālib is reported to have said, "He was the most generous of people, the most truthful of the people in speech, the gentlest of them in temperament, and the noblest of them in social affability. If someone saw him unexpectedly, he was awestruck by him, and if someone associated with him knowingly, he loved him. . . . I have never seen the like of him, either before him or after him." The example provided by the Prophet is for those who look forward to reward from God (Q, Ṭs) or to the meeting with God (Q), thus for those who believe in the Resurrection (Q). In this context, and remember God much can be seen as a reference to the heart of the prophetic example, since to live in accord with the prophetic model is to live in constant remembrance of God. For more on the nature of the Prophet, see commentary on 68:4, which addresses the Prophet saying, Truly thou art of an exalted character.

22 When the believers saw the parties, they said, “This is what God and His Messenger promised; God and His Messenger spoke true.” And it increased them in naught but faith and submission.

22 In contrast to the hypocrites, when the disbelievers saw the confederate troops amassed on the other side of the trench, they saw that it was a manifestation of God’s Promise, as in 2:155: And We will indeed test you with something of fear and hunger, and loss of wealth, souls, and fruits (cf. 2:214; 29:2). Whereas the hypocrisy of the hypocrites became manifest when they wavered, as in vv. 12–18, the faith of the believers was strengthened.

23 Among the believers are men who have been true to that which they pledged unto God. Among them are those who have fulfilled their vow, and among them are those who wait, and they have not changed in the least,

23 True to that which they pledged refers to those who remained alongside the Prophet in battle (JJ) and more broadly to those who complete their religious commitments in full (cf. 2:40; 3:76; 5:1; 13:20; 16:91). Those who have fulfilled their vow refers to those who died or were killed while remaining steadfast (JJ), which many take as a reference to those killed at the Battle of Uḥud (Ṭs), such as the Prophet’s uncle Ḥamzah ibn ‘Abd al-Muṭṭalib, regarding whom some say this verse was revealed (Ṭs, Ṭū). Those who wait refers to those who remain true to their vow or those who wait patiently for the help that God has promised and do not waiver or become changed in the least (JJ), as did the hypocrites (IK, Ṭs).

Some relate this verse specifically to the death of Anas ibn al-Nadr, who had been absent from the Battle of Badr and said, “O Messenger of God! I was absent from the first battle you fought against the idolaters. By God, if God affords me the opportunity to fight the pagans, no doubt God will see how I shall fight.” Then at the Battle of Uḥud, when the Muslims turned their backs and fled, he said, “O God! I apologize to Thee for what these [Muslims] have done, and I denounce what these [idolaters] have done.” While advancing toward the enemy, he met Sa‘d ibn Mu‘ādh and said “O Sa‘d! By the Lord of al-Nadr, the Garden! I smell its aroma coming from before [Mount] Uḥud.” Later Saʿd said regarding Anas, “O Messenger of God! I cannot achieve or do what he did. We found more than eighty wounds by swords and arrows on his body” (IK, Q, W).

24 that God may recompense the truthful for their truthfulness and punish the hypocrites if He will, or relent unto them. Truly God is Forgiving, Merciful.

24 Within the context of this sūrah, this verse can be seen as a continuation of v. 11; that is, It was there that the believers were tried and shaken in a manner most severe . . . that God may recompense the truthful for their truthfulness. In this regard, Ibn Kathīr glosses this verse with a reference to 47:31: And We shall test you until We know those among you who strive and those who are patient, and We shall test your proclamations. The truthful are then recompensed for having remained true to their covenant (IK, Ṭs).

25 And God turned back those who disbelieved in their rage; they attained no good. God sufficed the believers in battle; and God is Strong, Mighty.

25 In this context, those who disbelieved refers to the confederate troops that gathered outside of Madinah at the Battle of the Trench (JJ). They attained no good in that their siege of Madinah was unsuccessful (JJ). God sufficed the believers in battle by sending upon the disbelievers a violent sandstorm and a host of angels who untied their tents. This demoralized the confederates, and they disbanded, thus sparing the Muslims from the need to fight. This is also understood as a reference to a major turning point in the relations between the Muslims and the Quraysh, as the Battle of the Trench was the last occasion when the Quraysh sought to launch an assault against Muhammad and his followers. Thus the Prophet is reported to have said, “Now we will attack them, and they will not attack us” (IK).

26 He brought the People of the Book who supported them down from their strongholds and cast terror into their hearts—some you slew and some you took captive.

27 And He bequeathed unto you their land, their homes, their property, and a land you have not trodden. And God is Powerful over all things.

26–27 In this context, the People of the Book refers to the Banū Qurayzah, the last remaining Jewish tribe in Madinah; the others, Banū Naḍīr and Banū Qaynuqā^c, had previously been exiled from Madinah for breaking their treaty with the Prophet and the Muslims. (Regarding the expulsion of Banū Naḍīr, see the introduction to Sūrah 59). After the confederate troops had abandoned the siege of Madinah, the Muslims laid siege to the tribe of Banū Qurayzah for having plotted against the Muslims and having actively supported the efforts of the Quraysh and their allies. Rather than fighting, the Banū Qurayzah retreated to their strongholds, and the Muslims surrounded them for twenty-five days (IK). Eventually both sides agreed to let the matter of the tribe’s treason be decided by Sa^cd ibn Mu^cādh, a prominent Madinan Companion and the leader of the ^cAws tribe, who had been a close ally of the Banū Qurayzah. Despite the pleas of many in his tribe, Ibn Mu^cādh decreed, “My judgment is that their fighters should be killed and their children and wealth should be seized” (IK). The Prophet is said to have approved of Ibn Mu^cādh’s judgment, saying, “You have judged in accord with the judgment of the Sovereign” (IK). Some you slew refers to the adult males who were offered the opportunity to renounce the treason of their tribe and accept Islam or be executed. A few accepted Islam, but the majority (between four and nine hundred, depending upon the account) did not do so and were executed. Some you took captive then refers to the women and children, who were not slain. He bequeathed unto you their land, their homes, their property then sanctions the Muslims’ taking the possessions of the Banū Qurayzah as booty; a land you have not trodden is understood as an allusion to the eventual conquest of Khaybar in 629 (IK, JJ), some of whose inhabitants had been among the confederate forces. Others say it refers to the lands of the Persian and Byzantine empires, or to all three (IK).

28 O Prophet! Say unto thy wives, “If you desire the life of this world and its ornament, then come! I shall provide for you and release you in a fair manner.

29 But if you desire God and His Messenger and the Abode of the Hereafter, then truly God has prepared a great reward for the virtuous among you.”

28–29 These verses shift the discussion from the Battle of the Trench to the Prophet’s marital affairs. The Prophet’s wives, seeing the spoils of war that the Muslims had acquired, reportedly asked the Prophet for more of the “ornaments of this world.” The Prophet is thus told to offer them the option of divorce or remaining married to him. I shall provide for you means, “I will pay you the appropriate compensation for divorce,” and release you in a fair manner means, “I will not coerce you” (JJ), and that his wives would then be free to remarry. When the Prophet offered this choice to his wives, they each chose to remain with him (IK). The juxtaposition between the two choices that the Prophet is here told to offer his wives is similar to the one in 3:145: Whosoever desires the reward of this world, We shall give him of it; and whosoever desires the reward of the Hereafter, We shall give him of it. Throughout the Quran it is emphasized that the Abode of the Hereafter is better than the abode of this world (see 16:30, 41; 28:60, 79–80; 29:64; 40:39; 42:36; 43:35; 57:20–21; 87:16–17; 93:4).

30 O wives of the Prophet! Whosoever among you commits a flagrant indecency, her punishment will be doubled; and that is easy for God.

30 Inasmuch as the Prophet’s wives chose to remain with him, this verse now clarifies that the privilege pertaining to their status carries with it responsibilities. In this context, indecent is understood to mean disobedience toward the Prophet (Q, Z) or “discord and animosity” (nushūz; IK, Z). Indecency (fāḥishah) usually implies more severe transgressions, such as adultery (see 3:135–36c; 4:15c), and is interpreted by some as having that same meaning in this context (Bḍ). But here the use of fāḥishah may also be meant to express the gravity of the offense in bringing discord into the household of the Prophet. Her punishment will be doubled means either that she will be punished in this life and in the Hereafter or that her punishment will be twice the punishment for other women (IK, JJ, Q, Ṭ), because, in view of their greater blessings and place of honor, an offense committed by the Prophet’s wives would be greater than one committed by other women (Q, Z).

31 And whosoever among you is devoutly obedient to God and His Messenger and works righteousness, We shall give her her reward twice over, and We have prepared for her a generous provision.

31 To be devoutly obedient translates the verb qanata, which indicates spiritual and religious obedience rather than obedience (tā'ah) in the general sense (cf. 2:116, 238; 3:17, 43; 4:34; 16:120; 30:26; 33:35; 39:9; 66:12) and also conveys a sense of constancy and serenity. Nonetheless, most commentators interpret devoutly obedient here as obedience (tā'ah) generally (IK, Q, Ṭ, Z). Her reward twice over means that their reward is twice that of others (JJ, Q, Ṭ). A generous provision refers to a life of ease in Paradise (Ṭ).

32 O wives of the Prophet! You are not like other women. If you are reverent, then be not overly soft in speech, lest one in whose heart is a disease be moved to desire; and speak in an honorable way.

32 Previous verses (vv. 28–31) clarified some aspects of the Prophet's relations with his wives and their special status; this verse follows upon v. 6 in clarifying the relationship between the Prophet's wives and the Muslim community. Although the Prophet's wives are the “mothers of the believers” (see 33:6c), they are not to have any unduly familiar interactions with the men of the community. This was ordered to avoid any misunderstandings that could arise. Be not overly soft in speech, though addressed to the wives of the Prophet, is also understood as counsel for all Muslim women; they should avoid the soft, sweet, and flirtatious affectations employed by women in the pre-Islamic period (Q), as this can give rise to sexual desire (Ṭ). More broadly, the Quran enjoins speaking in an honorable (or goodly) way to others (2:83, 235; 4:5, 8) as well as speaking justly (4:9; 33:70).

33 Abide in your homes and flaunt not your charms as they did flaunt them in the prior Age of Ignorance. Perform the prayer, give the alms, and obey God and His Messenger. God only desires to remove defilement from you, O People of the House, and to purify you completely.

33 As with the previous verse, although the injunction is directed to the Prophet's wives, this verse is understood by some as an injunction pertaining to all Muslim women (IK, Q), as in 24:31: And tell the believing women to lower their eyes and to guard their private parts, and to not display their adornment except that which is visible thereof. And let them draw their kerchiefs over their breasts, and not display their adornment.

Abide translates qirna, which derives from either waqara or qarara (R, Ṭ, Z), both of which mean “to stay” or “to settle,” but carry different implications. The latter derivation indicates that one should remain in one's residence, and viewed in this manner, it has led to strident puritanical interpretations that severely limit the freedom of women. Waqara, however, conveys a sense of dignity and sobriety. Abide in your homes can thus be understood as counsel to be people of sobriety and tranquility (Ṭ). The phrase is understood to mean that the Prophet's wives should not leave the home unnecessarily (IJ, IK), an injunction that is then interpreted by some as applying to all women (Q). The “flaunting of charms” renders tabarraja, which is understood to mean “walking flirtatiously” (IJ, IK, Ṭ), exposing one's ornaments (IJ, Ṭ), or exposing one's ornaments that arouse the desire of men (IJ, Sh); see 24:31c.

This is one of four verses counseling Muslims to abandon the ways of pre-Islamic Arabia, referred to as the Age of Ignorance (jāhiliyyah; 3:154; 5:50; 48:26), or the age of impetuous and destructive behavior; for the zealotry of this period, see 48:26c. In this context, the prior Age of Ignorance may mean the period between the prophets Adam and Noah or Idrīs and Noah, the time in which Abraham lived, or the period between Jesus and Muhammad (IJ, Ṭ, Z). To obey God and His Messenger (8:1, 20, 46; 58:13; cf. 3:32; 4:59; 5:92; 24:54; 47:33; 64:12; see also 3:132) is held to be a virtue of the believers (see also 5:80; 24:56; 49:14), since from a Quranic perspective whosoever obeys the Messenger obeys God (4:80; see also 24:56; 49:14c).

According to some commentators, People of the House refers to the wives of the Prophet (IK, JJ, Ṭ, W, Z). Other commentators understand it as a reference to the Prophet's blood relations, and still others say that it refers to both (Bḍ, Q). In this regard, in the famous “Hadīth of the Cloak,” the Prophet's wife Umm Salamah is reported to have said that the Prophet was in her house when he said to his daughter Fāṭimah, “Call for me thine husband and thy sons!” Then ʿAlī ibn Abī Ṭālib and his sons, al-Ḥasan and al-Ḥusayn, came in and sat down to eat while the Prophet was sitting on his bed on top of a cloak. He grabbed the extension of the cloak and covered them with it. Then he raised his hands toward Heaven and said, “O God, these are the people of my house and my closest family members; remove defilement from them and purify them completely.” Umm Salamah reported that when she asked, “And I am with thee, O Messenger of God?” he answered, “Thou shalt obtain good. Thou shalt obtain good” (IK, Sy, Ṭb, W; similar versions of this ḥadīth can be found in Bḍ, Bg, and Qm, among others). Based upon this event, some say People of the House applies only to those who descended from the Prophet through Fāṭimah and ʿAlī. But others say that it also applies to his cousins, such as the families of ʿAbbās and Jaʿfar ibn Abī Ṭālib, or to those among them who were close to the Prophet (Ṭb). The Shiite commentator al-Qummī argues that the use of the second-person plural masculine pronoun in from you means that this verse applies to blood relations and not the Prophet’s wives. Such a position would hold when arguing against limiting the term “People of the House” to the wives of the Prophet, but it does not preclude them from being among the People of the House.

Defilement indicates the evil deeds and false beliefs that arise from the sickness of the heart, as in 9:125: As for those in whose hearts is a sickness, it added defilement to their defilement, and they die while they are disbelievers. God’s desire to purify the People of the House completely of all defilement is thus understood as a reference to God’s wanting to remove any incorrect action or belief from them and to provide them with ʿiṣmah, an innate protection against any and all false beliefs or evil deeds (Ṭb). ʿIṣmah can be understood as a God-given form of knowledge or consciousness that is completely different from other types of knowledge in that it can never be overpowered by any other faculty; rather, it overpowers all other faculties and uses them according to its own wisdom. In this way, one who is endowed with ʿiṣmah is completely protected from going astray and committing sins (Ṭb).

Regarding the importance of the People of the House, the Prophet is reported to have said to his followers, “I am leaving behind two things with you, the first of which is the Book of God, in which is guidance and light; so seize the Book of God and hold fast to it, and [the second] the People of my House. Heed God with regard to the members of my family. Heed God with regard to the members of my family. Heed God with regard to the members of my family” (IK). The Prophet is also reported to have said regarding those who did not exhibit love for his family members, “By Him in Whose Hand is my soul, faith will never enter a person’s heart until he loves them for the sake of God and for the fact that they are my kin.” Furthermore, the Prophet is reported to have said, “The likeness of the People of my House is the ship of Noah: whosoever boards it is saved and whosoever abandons it is drowned.”

34 And remember that which is recited unto you in your homes from among the signs and Wisdom of God. Truly God is Subtle, Aware.

34 The wives of the Prophet are enjoined to remember their special blessings in living in houses in which the verses of the Quran were revealed (Ṭ, Z). The signs . . . of God refers to the verses of the Quran, while Wisdom refers to the wont, or sunnah, of the Prophet (JJ, R, Sy, Ṭ). According to some, this verse is meant to encourage the Prophet's wives to memorize the Quran and his sayings (Ṭs). For the combination of the Divine Names the Subtle and the Aware, see 67:14c.

35 For submitting men and submitting women, believing men and believing women, devout men and devout women, truthful men and truthful women, patient men and patient women, humble men and humble women, charitable men and charitable women, men who fast and women who fast, men who guard their private parts and women who guard [their private parts], men who remember God often and women who remember [God often], God has prepared forgiveness and a great reward.

35 Regarding the revelation of this verse, it is reported that when Asmā^o bint ^oUmayy returned with her husband, Ja^cfar ibn Abī Ṭālib, from Abyssinia, she went to the wives of the Prophet and asked, “Has anything from the Quran been revealed about us [women]?” When they answered that nothing had been revealed about them, she went to the Prophet and said, “O Messenger of God, women are disappointed and at a loss!” He asked, “How is that?” She replied, “They are not mentioned [in the Quran] in goodness as are the men,” after which this verse was revealed (Ṭs, W). Others say that it was revealed after Umm ^oUmārah al-Anṣāriyyah came to the Prophet and said, “I do not see but that everything is about men, and I do not find the women mentioned with regard to anything.” According to another account, Umm Salamah said to the Prophet, “Why is it that we are not mentioned in the Quran as are the men?” Then later that day she heard him reciting this verse in the mosque (IK, Ṭ). This verse may also be related to 4:32 and 3:195, both of which explicitly confirm an otherworldly reward—without differentiation—for both men and women who uphold the moral requirements of Islam; see 4:32c.

Regarding men and women who remember God often, al-Tustarī writes, “One who observes true remembrance (al-dhākir ʿalaʿl-ḥaqīqah) is one who is aware that God witnesses him. He perceives Him with his heart as being close to him, and therefore feels shame before Him. Then he gives Him priority over himself and over everything else in every situation.”

36 And it is not for a believing man or a believing woman, when God and His Messenger have decreed a matter, to have a choice regarding the matter. Whosoever disobeys God and His Messenger has strayed into manifest error.

36 The meaning of this verse is general, indicating that one cannot contravene the Divine Law. In this way, it reiterates the Quranic injunction to obey God and obey the Messenger (3:32; 4:59; 5:92; 24:54; 64:12; see also 3:132; 4:80; 7:156–57; 8:1, 20, 46; 33:33; 49:14; 58:13); see 3:32c; 4:59c. The revelation of this verse was reportedly connected to one of two historical events. In the first account, it is said to refer to Zaynab bint Jaḥsh, who at first declined the Prophet’s recommendation that she marry Zayd ibn Ḥārithah (IJ, IK, Ṭ, Z), but then accepted after the revelation of this verse (IK, Ṭ). In the second account, it is said to refer to Umm Kulthūm, who offered herself in marriage to the Prophet, but the Prophet suggested she marry Zayd ibn Ḥārithah, to which both she and her brother objected (IJ, IK, Ṭ, Z). For manifest error, see 36:24c.

37 And [remember] when thou said unto him whom God has blessed and whom thou hast blessed, “Retain your wife for yourself and reverence God,” thou wast hiding in thyself that which God was to disclose; and thou didst fear the people, though God has more right to be feared by thee. Then when Zayd relinquished his claim upon her, We wed her to thee, so that there should be no restriction for the believers in respect to the wives of their adopted sons when the latter have relinquished their claims upon them. And the Command of God shall be fulfilled.

37 Him whom God has blessed and whom thou hast blessed refers to Zayd ibn

Ḥārithah, who was blessed by God when He guided him to Islam and by the Prophet when he set him free (JJ). When Zayd told the Prophet that his wife, Zaynab bint Jahsh, wished to divorce him, the Prophet replied, Retain your wife for yourself and reverence God (IJ, IK, Q), in order to dispel the appearance that he was in favor of the divorce so that he himself could marry Zaynab. Apparently he was hiding what was in his soul, which could have been his love for Zaynab, or that God had willed Zaynab to be His wife, or that he preferred that she divorce Zayd, or that he would marry Zaynab, were Zayd to divorce her (IJ). That the Prophet “feared the people” refers to his worrying that people would misunderstand and say, “He commands a man to divorce his wife and then marries her” (IJ, Q), or, “He has married his son’s wife,” since at that time Zayd was still known by his adopted name, Zayd ibn Muhammad (JJ). The Prophet is thus reminded that God has more right to be feared than do people. Given the rebuke that is here delivered to the Prophet, it is said that no verse was more severe with him and that were the Prophet to have hidden any verse of the revelation, it would have been this verse (IJ, Q).

Despite the Prophet’s advice to remain married, Zayd divorced Zaynab. Then God reportedly announced to the Prophet that Zaynab was now his wife. Thus Zaynab is said to have boasted to the Prophet’s other wives, “You were given in marriage by your family, but I was given in marriage by God from above the seven heavens” (Q).

38 There is no restriction for the Prophet in what God has ordained for him. [That is] the wont of God with those who passed away before—and God’s Command is a decree determined, 39 those who convey God’s messages and fear Him, and fear none but God. And God suffices as a Reckoner.

38–39 As God is reported to have commanded the Prophet to marry Zaynab, he is here reminded that he cannot be blamed for following anything that God has ordained for him (IK, JJ), even though others may deride him for it. That is the wont of God (cf. 3:137; 33:62; 35:43; 40:85; 48:23) with the prophets who came before him (IK, JJ, Q). These verses also refer to God having allowed the Prophet to now take more than four wives, which was the wont of God with previous prophets such as David and Solomon (Q). The prophets fear none but God, as their function is to implement His Law rather than follow human laws. In this vein, 49:7 states, Know that the Messenger of God is among you. Were he to obey you in many matters, you would suffer. In the context of this passage, the idea that God suffices as a Reckoner (cf. 4:6) thus alludes to the belief that in the end the only account with which one must reckon is the one kept by God.

④ Muhammad is not the father of any man among you; rather, he is the Messenger of God and the Seal of the prophets. And God is Knower of all things.

40 Muhammad is not the father of any man among you refers to the Prophet's relationship with Zayd ibn Ḥārithah, whom the Prophet had claimed as his son after Zayd's father disowned him and whom others had referred to thereafter as the "Son of Muhammad" before the revelation of this sūrah; see 33:5c. Although this proclamation clarifies the Prophet's biological relationship with members of his community and the rights and restrictions pertaining thereto, it is also understood as opening onto the spiritual reality of the Prophet as the father of all true believers (Aj, Ṭs); see 33:6c. That the Prophet is the Seal of the prophets is understood to mean that he is the last Prophet sent to humanity. The Prophet is reported to have said, "No prophethood shall remain after me, save for true visions" (IK, Q), and "Messengerhood and prophethood have ceased. There will be no messenger or prophet after me" (IK). The most frequently cited ḥadīth pertaining to his place as the Seal of the prophets states, "My likeness among the prophets before me is that of a man who has built a house, completed it, and beautified it, yet left empty a place for a brick. Then the people come to the house, are amazed by it, and say, 'If only you were to place this brick, your house would be complete!' I am this brick" (IK, Q). According to the Prophet, being the Seal of the prophets is one of six qualities that distinguish him from other prophets: "I have been favored above the prophets in six things: I have been endowed with consummate succinctness of speech; I have been made triumphant through dread; war booty has been made lawful for me; the whole earth has been made a place of worship for me and a means of purification; I have been sent to all created beings; and the succession of prophets has been completed in me" (IK).

④ O you who believe! Remember God with frequent remembrance,

41 This verse instructs one to not forget God ever, at any moment (Aj), as when the Prophet counseled a man, “Let thy tongue be always moist with the remembrance of God,” and when he is reported to have said, “Remember God much, till they call [you] mad” (Aj). Regarding this verse, Ibn ‘Abbās is reported to have said, “God did not enjoin any duty upon His servants without setting known limits and accepting the excuses of those who have a valid reason, except for remembrance, for God has not set any limits for it, and no one has any excuse for not remembering God, unless he is oppressed and forced to neglect it” (IK). It is said that remembering God frequently arises from the sincerity of the heart, while remembering God little arises from hypocrisy, like the remembrance that is only upon the tongue (Q). Thus Ibn ‘Ajībah says that what is meant by this verse is remembrance of the heart, as that is the one type of remembrance that does not cease. The remembrance and invocation of God (dhikr Allāh) is considered the quintessential prayer and thus to be at the core of every act of worship. In this vein, it is reported that when the Prophet was asked, “Which of those who strive has the greatest reward?” he responded, “Those who remember God most.” When asked, “Which of the righteous has the greatest reward?” he replied, “Those who remember God most.” Then when asked the same about prayer, alms (zakāh), pilgrimage, and charity, he said, regarding each, “Those who remember God most.” Then Abū Bakr said to ‘Umar, “Those who remember have acquired every good,” to which the Prophet replied, “Indeed” (Aj). For more on the remembrance of God, see 13:28c; 29:45c.

42 and glorify Him morning and evening.

42 Glorify Him morning and evening (cf. 6:52; 18:28; 19:11; 24:36; 48:9; 76:25) can be understood as an injunction to glorify God at all times. It is also interpreted as a reference to the morning prayer and the afternoon prayer, or to the five daily prayers, or to performing supererogatory devotions such as night vigil (R, Ṭ); cf. 30:17–18. Some relate this verse specifically to acts of prayer and invocation performed between the morning prayer and sunrise, and then between the sunset prayer and the night prayer.

43 He it is Who blesses you, as do His angels, that He may bring you out of darkness into light. And He is Merciful unto the believers.

43 God has mercy upon the believers who remember God much and perform the prayers enjoined in the previous verses, and His angels watch over them and make supplications for them, thus bringing them out of darkness into light (2:257; 5:16; 14:1, 5; 57:9; 65:11; see also Isaiah 42:16: “I will turn the darkness before them into light,” and 1 Peter 2:9), which is understood to mean bringing them from being astray to being guided (Ṭ), from disbelief to belief (Aj, JJ), from disobedience to obedience (Aj), or from the darkness of heedlessness to the light of awareness (Aj). For a fuller discussion of the Quranic symbolism of light, see 6:1c; 24:35c.

44 Their greeting on the day they meet Him will be “Peace.” And He has prepared for them a generous reward.

44 The greeting of “Peace” may be from God, the angels (Aj), the other people of Paradise (Ṭ), or perhaps all of them. This is one of several verses that speak of the greeting of “Peace” that awaits believers in the Hereafter, as in 16:32: Those whom the angels take while they are in a state of goodness. They will say, “Peace be upon you! Enter the Garden for that which you used to do” (see also 7:46; 10:10; 13:23–24; 14:23; 19:62; 25:75; 36:58c; 39:73; 56:25–26).

45 O Prophet! Truly We have sent thee as a witness, as a bearer of glad tidings, and as a warner, 45 Cf. 48:8. The Prophet is a witness to the Oneness of God and for the people, as in 2:143: Thus did We make you a middle community, that you may be witnesses for mankind and that the Messenger may be a witness for you (cf. 4:41; IK), or against the disbelievers and for the believers in the Hereafter, as in 73:15: We have indeed sent you a messenger as a witness concerning you, just as We sent unto Pharaoh a messenger. This is one of several passages that refer to the Prophet as a bearer of glad tidings and as a warner (5:19; 7:188; 11:2; 17:105; 25:56; 34:28; 35:24; 48:8); in other verses these functions are also attributed to all prophets (2:213; 4:165; 6:48; 18:56).

46 as one who calls unto God by His Leave, and as a luminous lamp.

47 Give glad tidings to the believers that there will be for them a great bounty from God.

46–47 That the Prophet was sent as a luminous lamp refers foremost to his function as a spiritual guide. According to many reports this inner reality was also manifest in his outward physical nature and countenance. When asked to describe the Prophet, one of his Companions replied, “My son, had you seen him, you would have seen the shining sun.” The Prophet’s stepson is also reported to have said, “He was dignified and awe-inspiring, and radiant like the radiance of the moon on the night when it is full.” In this same vein, the Prophet’s servant Anas ibn Mālik is reported to have said, “On the day when the Messenger of God entered Madinah, everything in it was illuminated. Then, on the day when he died, everything in it became dark. And we had barely dusted off our hands after burying him when our hearts changed.”

48 Obey not the disbelievers and the hypocrites; disregard their affront, and trust in God. God suffices as a Guardian.

48 The Prophet is enjoined to not follow the disbelievers’ and hypocrites’ caprice and thus not assent to what contravenes the revelation. Similarly, the believers are told, And know that the Messenger of God is among you. Were he to obey you in many matters, you would suffer (49:7). Here, disregard their affront means not to retaliate against them unless a command to do so is issued (JJ) and to bear their insults patiently (Ṭ). In this regard, the Prophet is also told to bear patiently that which they say (20:130; 38:17; 50:39; 73:10). That God suffices as a Guardian (4:81, 132, 171; 33:3; see also 17:65) means that one should entrust all of one’s affairs to Him (Ṭ).

49 O you who believe! If you marry believing women and then divorce them before you have touched them, there shall be no waiting period for you to reckon against them. But provide for them and release them in a fair manner.

49 Before you have touched them refers to the consummation of marriage; see also 2:236c. This verse clarifies that women do not need to observe any waiting period before contracting another marriage, if the previous marriage had not been consummated (IK, Q). Nonetheless, some jurists maintain that a woman must still observe the waiting period of four months and ten days, if the woman's husband dies before the consummation of the marriage (IK). In the case of divorce, when the bridewealth has been paid, women are entitled to retain half the bridewealth even if the marriage has not been consummated (JJ), and all of it if the marriage has been consummated. When the amount of the bridewealth has not yet been settled, the man should provide something for the woman according to his means; this is what some understand by release them in a fair manner (IK).

50 O Prophet! We have made lawful for thee thy wives to whom thou hast given their bridewealth, as well as those whom thy right hand possesses of those whom God has granted thee as spoils of war, and the daughters of thy paternal uncles and the daughters of thy paternal aunts, and the daughters of thy maternal uncles and the daughters of thy maternal aunts who emigrated with thee, and any believing woman if she gives herself [in marriage] to the Prophet and if the Prophet desires to marry her—for thee alone, not for [the rest of] the believers. We know well what We have enjoined upon them with respect to their wives and those whom their right hands possess, that there may be no blame upon thee. And God is Forgiving, Merciful.

50 That God has made lawful the Prophet's wives indicates that God has made lawful the various means by which the Prophet obtained his wives (IJ). In this context, those whom thy right hand possesses . . . as spoils of war refers to two of the Prophet's wives, Şafiyah bint Ḥuyayy, who had been among the captives of the Battle of Khaybar and whose father had been among the staunchest opponents of the Prophet, and Juwayriyah bint Ḥārithah, whom the Prophet had purchased from Thābit ibn Qays after the Muslims had defeated her tribe, the Banū Muşṭaliq. After the marriage, the Muslims released the captives from the Banū Muşṭaliq, as they were now kinsmen of the Prophet. In both instances the Prophet freed his prospective wives before marrying them (IJ).

The reference to women who emigrated with thee is understood to mean that Muslim women who had the opportunity to emigrate and did not do so were not permitted to become wives of the Prophet (IJ, Q). The Prophet is then told that he may take in marriage the believing women who offered themselves to him, without the need to pay a bridewealth (IJ, IK), a ruling for him alone, not for [the rest of] the believers. Some maintain that despite the permission granted here and in the following verse, the Prophet did not marry any of the women who had offered themselves to him (IK), while others maintain that he did, but that he did not consummate the marriages (IJ, Q), and they were thus annulled. We know well what We have enjoined upon them with respect to their wives refers to the limit of four wives for Muslims, which this verse makes clear is not the same limit set for the Prophet. With this verse, all the limitations of marriage set for other Muslims were removed for the Prophet. He does not need to pay the bridewealth, the woman does not need a protector (as in the case of Zaynab), the marriage does not need to have witnesses (as in the marriage to Zaynab), and he may marry as many women as he wishes.

51 Thou mayest put off whomsoever of them thou wilt and receive whomsoever thou wilt. And as for whomsoever thou mightest desire of those whom thou hast set aside, there is no blame upon thee. Thus is it likelier that they will be comforted, that they will not grieve, and that they will be content with that which thou hast given all of them. God knows what is in your hearts. And God is Knowing, Clement.

51 Put off . . . and receive whomsoever thou wilt means that the Prophet may accept or decline marriage to the women who offered themselves to him as he desires (IK). The next sentence then allows the Prophet to return to those whom he had previously declined to marry (IK). According to others, this verse was revealed in relation to those to whom the Prophet was already married. Some of his wives were jealous of other wives and asked that their own maintenance be increased. Their jealousy reached the point where they became harsh with him, and the Prophet said to ‘Umar ibn al-Khaṭṭāb, “They ask of me what I do not have.” The Prophet was vexed by this matter and did not sleep in the same bed with them for a month until vv. 28–29 were revealed, granting them the choice between remaining wed to the Prophet or accepting an amicable divorce. God commanded him to ask them to choose between this life and the Hereafter and then to divorce those who chose this life and keep those who chose the Hereafter. They all chose the latter, were then referred to as “mothers of the believers,” and undertook to never remarry after him. Then in this verse he was given permission to receive any of his wives he wanted to receive and defer anyone he wanted to defer (W), meaning that he could postpone the days allotted to spending time with them. He nonetheless continued to divide his time equally between each of his wives. This made it likelier that they will be comforted, that they will not grieve, because they would know that he did not spend time with them out of an obligation toward God, but out of a genuine desire on his own part (IK). Some reconcile these two interpretations by saying that this verse applied to both those who had offered themselves to the Prophet in marriage and his wives (IK, Ṭ).

52 Women are not lawful for thee beyond that, nor [is it lawful] for thee to exchange them for other wives, though their beauty impresses thee, save those whom thy right hand possesses. And God is Watcher over all things.

52 According to many early commentators, although the permission granted to the Prophet to marry Zaynab bint Jaḥsh (see 33:50c) allowed him to marry more than four wives, this verse, revealed some time later, restricted the Prophet to the wives he had already chosen (IK, Ṭ). In this way it was revealed as a reward to the wives for their decision to choose the Prophet in vv. 28–29 (IK, Ṭ). Though the Prophet is said to have been granted the opportunity to take more wives again before he died (IK, Q), he nonetheless took no more wives after the revelation of this verse. Beyond that would thus refer to the number of his wives, which was nine at this time, and the prohibition against exchanging them for other wives would mean that he could not divorce them and take other wives (IK). According to others, beyond that means beyond the types of women described in v. 50 (IK, Ṭ).

53 O you who believe! Enter not the dwellings of the Prophet for a meal without waiting for its time to come, unless leave be granted you. But if you are invited, enter; and when you have eaten, disperse. Linger not, seeking discourse. Truly that would affront the Prophet, and he would shrink from telling you, but God shrinks not from the truth. And when you ask anything of [his wives], ask them from behind a veil. That is purer for your hearts and their hearts. And you should never affront the Messenger of God, nor marry his wives after him. Truly that would be an enormity in the sight of God.

53 The first part of this verse, known as the “Veiling Verse,” was reportedly revealed to clarify proper conduct with the Prophet. Anas ibn Mālik said, “When the Messenger of God married Zaynab bint Jahsh, he invited people to a wedding ceremony. People ate and then remained in their seats talking to each other. The Prophet acted as if he was preparing himself to leave, but people did not take the hint. He then left the room and people left with him, except for three people who remained sitting. When the Prophet returned and found them still sitting, he went out again. When they saw this, the three men left. I went and informed the Messenger of God that they had left. He returned and entered his room. I wanted to enter with him, but he drew the curtain between us. Then God revealed [this verse]” (IK, Q, Sy, T, W). If you are invited, enter is also understood as a general injunction to accept invitations from other Muslims, as in a saying attributed to the Prophet, “When one of you invites his brother, be it for a wedding or something else, he should respond” (IK). In the immediate context, God shrinks not from the truth refers to God’s telling others to respect the Prophet’s privacy (JJ). More broadly, it means that God does not prevent truth from being manifested and clarified (Q).

That men must ask the Prophet’s wives from behind a veil indicates that, just as it is forbidden for a man to be alone in an intimate manner with a woman to whom he is not related, so too it is forbidden for a man to look upon the wives of the Prophet. This injunction may be a clarification, lest anyone think that the Prophet’s wives’ status as “mothers of the believers” would allow for the same familiarity that a man would have with his biological mother. The prohibition against marrying the Prophet’s wives is linked by some to the prohibition against marrying one’s mother (4:23) and against marrying those women whom your fathers married (4:22), since the Prophet is closer to the believers than they are to themselves, and his wives are their mothers (33:6). This may also be because the Prophet’s wives are believed to continue to be his wives in the Hereafter (IK, Q).

54 Whether you disclose something or conceal it, surely God is Knower of all things.

54 All human beings will be taken to account for everything that they have done and said in this world, as in 2:284: And whether you disclose what is in your souls or hide it, God will bring you to account for it (cf. 4:149), an idea mentioned throughout the Quran, since God knows what lies within breasts (3:119, 154; 5:7c; 8:43; 11:5; 31:23; 35:38; 39:7; 42:24; 57:6; 64:4; 67:13).

55 There is no blame upon them with regard to their fathers, or their sons, or their brothers, or their brothers' sons, or their sisters' sons, or their own women, or those whom their right hands possess. And reverence God. Truly God is Witness over all things.

55 This verse clarifies which of the relations of the Prophet's wives were exempt from the requirement to address them from behind a veil (Q). The list is similar to those men in whose presence women are not required to wear the veil in 24:31. For God as Witness over all things, see also 4:33; 5:117; 22:17; 34:47; 41:53; 58:6; 85:9. Regarding the requirements of the veil, or ḥijāb, see 24:31c.

56 Truly God and His angels invoke blessings upon the Prophet. O you who believe! Invoke blessings upon him, and greetings of peace!

56 This frequently cited verse is among the most important in the Quran for understanding the place of the Prophet in Islam. In its immediate context, it answers questions one might ask of the previous verses: why the Prophet should be obeyed (v. 33), why he is a beautiful example (v. 21), and how it is that he is a luminous lamp (v. 46). That he is a human being of another order also explains why he is permitted more than four wives (v. 50), why he can marry without giving a bridewealth (v. 50), why his wives are “the mothers of the believers” (v. 6), and why they may not remarry after his passing (v. 53).

Invoke blessings translates the verb ṣallā/yuṣallī, which is from the same root as ṣalāh, “prayer.” In this context, commentators differentiate between the manner in which this verb relates to God and the angels, saying that God's ṣalāh is loving Mercy and that of the angels is seeking forgiveness (IK, Ṭ). Human beings then invoke blessings by supplicating for the Prophet (Aj) and by following him and loving him (Su). Regarding the role of human beings in invoking blessings upon the Prophet, the Companions are reported to have asked the Prophet after this verse was revealed, “We know how to give thee greetings of peace, but how do we invoke blessings upon thee?” To which he answered, “O God! Bless Muhammad and the family of Muhammad as Thou hast blessed Abraham and the family of Abraham. And shower grace upon Muhammad and upon the family of Muhammad as Thou hast showered grace upon Abraham and upon the family of Abraham in all the worlds. Truly Thou art Praised, Glorious” (IK, Ṭ, R). As al-Ālūsī observes, the manner in which human beings invoke blessings upon the Prophet, by calling for God’s Blessings upon him, means that they are in fact realizing their inability to do anything more than to ask God to shower His Blessings upon the Prophet. In this sense, to say, “O God! Grant blessings upon the Messenger!” is not so much a request as it is participation in and affirmation of the Divine Act (see also 3:194c). Thus from a metaphysical perspective, in all modes of asking blessing upon the Prophet, it is only God Who invokes blessings upon him (K).

On one occasion the Prophet told his Companions that the Angel Gabriel came to him and said, “O Muhammad, does it not please thee that thy Lord says, ‘No member of thy community invokes blessings upon thee but that I bless him tenfold, and no member of thy community offers thee greetings of peace but that I offer him greetings of peace tenfold?’” To which the Prophet responded, “Indeed!” (IK). In another account, the Prophet said, “The miser is one who when I am mentioned in his presence does not invoke blessings upon me” (IK). Once when the Prophet overheard a man making supplications in a hasty manner, he called to him and said, “When one makes supplication, let him begin by praising God. Then let him invoke blessings upon the Prophet. Then let him make supplication after that as he wishes” (IK). In this regard, ‘Umar ibn al-Khaṭṭāb is reported to have said, “A supplication is suspended between Heaven and earth and does not ascend any further until you invoke blessings upon your Prophet” (IK).

In all such sayings, invoking blessings upon the Prophet is not a benefit for the Prophet, but for the believers themselves. For this reason this verse is understood as a command for all believers. Some say that invoking blessings upon the Prophet is a commendable deed (mandūb), while others consider it to be obligatory (wājib; IK, Q, R). Some maintain that its being obligatory may simply mean that such blessings must be invoked at some point during the course of one’s life, while others maintain that it must be said in every prayer (Aj). According to Imam al-Shāfi‘ī and many followers of his legal tradition, one must invoke blessings upon the Prophet in every prayer in order for that prayer to be valid (Aj, Q). From a spiritual perspective, invoking blessings upon the Prophet is essential for drawing closer to God. Increasing invocation of blessings upon the Prophet therefore engenders love for him, which in turn engenders love for God, and God's Love for the human being attracts the human being to His Presence (Aj).

The injunction to invoke . . . greetings of peace refers to the standard Muslim greeting, "Peace be upon you," but it also indicates being at peace with the Prophet, in accord with what he has brought, and yielding to him and the Divine Law (Āl). According to Islamic tradition, just as trees, stones, and all creation prostrate to God (see 16:40; 22:18; 55:6), so too do they extend greetings of peace to the Prophet. °Alī ibn Abī Ṭālib is reported to have said, "I went out with the Prophet through the environs of Makkah. Every rock and tree welcomed him, saying, 'Peace be upon thee, O Messenger of God.'"

57 Truly those who affront God and His Messenger, God has cursed them in this life and the Hereafter, and has prepared for them a humiliating punishment.

57 An affront to God is understood as disbelief and attributing partners to Him (Q). Although this verse is addressed to all who do the Prophet harm in word or deed (IK), it is said to have been revealed in response to those who criticized the Prophet for his marriage to Ṣafīyyah bint Ḥuyayy (IJ, IK), whose father had been among the staunchest of the Prophet's opponents. It may also refer to all those who remained opposed to him (IJ, Ṭ). Others say that it refers to those who created graven images (IJ, IK, Ṭ).

58 As for those who affront believing men and believing women for other than what they may have committed, they bear the burden of calumny and manifest sin.

58 This verse is understood by some as a reference to those who accused others falsely (IK, JJ), as calumny is considered a serious crime in 24:4: And as for those who accuse chaste women, but then do not bring four witnesses, flog them eighty lashes, and never accept any testimony from them. See also 49:12c. Others understand this verse as having been revealed regarding adulterers who would follow women when they would leave their houses at night to answer a call of nature. When they saw a woman, they would make an advance. If the woman did not say anything, they would follow her; but if she rebuked them, they would leave her alone. These adulterers were only after slave girls. But at that time, free women were indistinguishable from slave girls, since all women used to go out wearing a long dress and a headscarf. The women complained of these advances, and so God revealed this and the following verse (W, Z on v. 59).

59 O Prophet! Tell your wives and daughters, and the women of the believers to draw their cloaks over themselves. Thus is it likelier that they will be known and not be disturbed. And God is Forgiving, Merciful.

59 This is one of the most important verses for understanding the Quranic teaching regarding wearing the veil (see also 24:31c). As with the previous verse, it seeks to establish social norms that will protect all members of society. The injunction to draw their cloaks over themselves is thus meant to ensure modesty and distinguish the free women from the slave women (Ṭ), so that men do not seek illicit relations with the former (R). Cloaks translates jilbāb, which means a piece of fabric that is larger than a shawl but smaller than a large sheet and derives from the root j-l-b, which describes an object that completely covers something, like the darkness of night (Lisān al-‘Arab). It is here employed to mean the outer cover (IK), which would cover the entire body (Āl, Ṭ). The manner in which one draws the cover has been debated. Some say that it is to be done in such a way that it covers all but one eye, while others say it means that it must cover the forehead and most of the face, but not the eyes (Āl, IK, Ṭ, Q).

60 If the hypocrites do not desist, and likewise those in whose hearts is a disease, as well as those who spread false rumors in the city, We shall surely spur thee against them; then they will not be your neighbors therein, save for a short while.

61 Accursed! They will be seized wheresoever they are found and utterly slain.

60–61 Those in whose hearts is a disease describes those of impure intentions (v. 32) or those who “secretly harbor in their souls” deep religious hypocrisy or doubt (2:8–11; 5:52; 24:47–50; 33:12; 47:20; 74:31). In this instance, some understand it as a specific reference to adulterers (IK, Ṭ, Z), and others see it as a general reference to those whose faith is weak (Z). Those who spread false rumors refers to hypocrites who would attempt to undermine the Madinan community by reporting that the Prophet’s expeditions had been defeated or its members slain (Z). We shall surely spur thee against them means that God will grant the Prophet power over the hypocrites and inform him about them, after which they will soon cease to dwell in Madinah (IK, Ṭ). Then, wherever they may flee, they will be seized by God, taken to task for their disbelief, and utterly slain if they manifest their hypocrisy in word or deed (Ṭ).

62 [That is] the wont of God with those who passed before; and you will find no alteration in the wont of God.

62 The wont of God (cf. 3:137c; 33:38; 35:43c; 40:85; 48:23) refers in general to the manner in which God conducts all affairs. In this context, it refers specifically to the manner in which God deals with the likes of the hypocrites mentioned in v. 60, who seek to sow dissension among the followers of a prophet. That there is no alteration in the wont of God (cf. 35:43; 48:23) thus means that God will not deal differently with the hypocrites of Madinah than He did with the hypocrites and disbelievers among previous communities (Ṭ, Z); see 35:43c.

63 People question thee concerning the Hour. Say, “Knowledge thereof lies only with God. And what will apprise thee, perhaps the Hour is nigh.”

63 That knowledge of the end of time lies only with God is mentioned in several Quranic verses; see, e.g., 7:187; 31:34; 41:47; 43:85; 67:25–26; 79:42–46. That the Hour may be nigh (cf. 42:17) is understood as an injunction to prepare for death and the end of time, since both will come upon people while they are unaware (12:107; 26:202; 29:53; 43:66; cf. 39:55). It is said that the time of the final hour is hidden and known only to God so that people will always be prepared for it (Q); see

64 Truly God curses the disbelievers and prepares for them a blazing flame, 65 therein to abide forever; they will find no protector or helper.

64–65 That God curses the disbelievers means that God casts them far from any good and drives them far away from Himself (Ṭ). It also indicates that no one can save them from this predicament, since whomsoever God curses, thou wilt not find for him any helper (4:52).

66 On the Day when their faces are turned about in the Fire, they will say, “Oh, would that we had obeyed God and obeyed the Messenger!”

66 That their faces are turned about in the Fire indicates that whichever way they turn, the Fire smites their faces (Ṭ) and that they are tormented by the Fire in different ways (Q). As the face is considered the most noble part of the human body, revealing the soul most directly, that it is subject to the Fire indicates that they are completely debased (Z). Elsewhere it is said that their faces shall be cast down into the Fire (27:90), and the Fire is said to cover their faces (14:50) or to smite their faces (23:104), while the angels are said to strike their faces (8:50) and they are gathered upon their faces (25:34; cf. 17:97), all of which points to their utter humiliation and suffering in the Hereafter. This is one of several passages to convey the regrets of the disbelievers in the Hereafter. Elsewhere, it is reported that they will say, “Would that we were sent back! Then we would not deny the signs of our Lord, but we would be among the believers!” (6:27). That they express such regrets and admit their sin (67:11; cf. 40:11) is, nonetheless, of no avail to them, since they had been offered ample opportunity to repent and make amends during the life of this world; see 32:12c; 35:37c.

67 They will say, “Our Lord! Truly we obeyed our leaders and elders, and they caused us to stray from the way.

68 Our Lord! Give them a twofold punishment, and curse them with a great curse.”

67–68 Rather than following God and His Messenger, the disbelievers followed human beings who led them astray (R). Leaders are often considered partially responsible for people’s rejection of the messages with which prophets have been sent, since the leaders have influence over their communities and usually stand to gain the most from the maintenance of a corrupt social order, alluded to in 6:123: Thus have We made great ones among the guilty in every town, that they may plot therein (cf. 25:31), and stated most clearly in 43:23: We sent no warner unto a town before thee, but that those living in luxury therein said, “We found our fathers upon a creed, and we are surely following in their footsteps” (cf. 34:34). One who chooses to follow the leaders and reaffirm their creed will then bite his hands, saying, “Would that I had taken a way with the Messenger! Oh, woe unto me! Would that I had not taken so-and-so for a friend!” (25:27–28). But when people realize they have been led astray, they ask that the leaders receive twice the punishment that they themselves are to receive (JJ), that is, punishment for having been astray and punishment for having led others astray (Z). In this vein, 29:13 says of those who sought to lead others astray, Surely they will bear their own burdens, and others’ burdens along with their own (see also 7:38–39c).

69 O you who believe! Be not as those who affronted Moses, whereat God declared him innocent of what they alleged, and he was honored with God.

69 This verse was reportedly revealed to chastise those who spoke ill of the Prophet because of his marriage to Zaynab bint Jaḥsh (Z); see 33:37c. The affront to Moses is said to refer to the people’s suspicion that Moses had a physical defect, because he was extremely modest and never showed his skin. Then at one point when bathing, he was forced to chase after his clothing and suddenly came upon a group of his followers, who then knew that what had been said of him was false, because God had shown him to be innocent of what they alleged (IK, Q).

70 O you who believe! Reverence God and speak justly, 71 that He may set your deeds aright for you, and forgive you your sins. And whosoever obeys God and His Messenger has achieved a great triumph.

70–71 Speak justly (cf. 4:9) enjoins testifying truthfully, speaking in a manner that is upright and free from any corruption, and speaking so that the outward locution corresponds to the inward meaning (Ṭs). The injunction to truthful testimony is most evident in 6:152: And when you speak, be just, even if it be [against] a kinsman (cf. 4:135). The injunction to speak with integrity is found in other verses that enjoin speaking in an honorable (or goodly) way (2:83, 235; 4:5, 8; 33:32). If one does so, then God will rectify one’s deeds by facilitating travel upon the straight path and purifying them (Ṭs). Forgiveness in this context is understood to be manifest through the ability to perform good deeds that will be accepted by God (ST, Ṭs). Obeying God and His Messenger leads to the Garden, the attainment of which is referred to as a great triumph in over a dozen verses; for the blessings of the Garden, see commentary on 5:119; 44:51–57. In contrast, whosoever takes Satan as a protector apart from God has surely suffered a manifest loss (4:119).

72 Truly We offered the Trust unto the heavens and the earth and the mountains, but they refused to bear it, and were wary of it—yet man bore it; truly he has proved himself an ignorant wrongdoer.

72 The Trust is understood as relating to the dictates of faith and belief, as in a famous saying: “Whosoever has no trust has no belief” (Q, Sy). Many relate the Trust to obedience (IK, Ṭ, Ṭs, Z), and it is thus understood by most as a reference to the requirements (farāʾid) of religion (IJ, JJ, Q, Ṭ), though others see it as a reference to prayer alone (Q). The Trust can also be understood as pertaining to the manner in which one manages each aspect of one’s being, such as the tongue, the eye, the stomach, the private parts, and so forth (IJ, Q). Thus some connect it to 8:27: Betray not God and the Messenger, and betray not your trusts knowingly (M). It is also said that the Trust pertains to faith inwardly and performing the requirements of religion outwardly (Aj). Some also allow that the Trust refers to the pact or covenant of tawḥīd (Divine Oneness) and the witness to God’s Lordship made with all of humanity before they came into this world (Aj; see 7:172c).

That the Trust was offered to the heavens and the earth and the mountains is taken literally by many commentators, but is understood by some to mean that it was offered to their inhabitants (R), that is, to all the people of the earth, the jinn, and the angels (Ṭs, Ṭū). They refused to bear it not out of defiance, but because they shrank from what they knew to be too heavy a burden. Many understand this to mean that they knew they would be subject to reward and punishment and thus chose to remain passively obedient rather than risk the consequences of being held accountable before God (Bđ, IJ, IK, Q, Ṭ). In this sense, the heavens, the earth, and the mountains saw their own weakness, but human beings realized their place and assumed their responsibility (R) as creatures possessing intellect and thus fit to observe the obligations of religion (Z).

This passage can also be seen as a metaphorical account to show that the heavens, the earth, and the mountains, despite their tremendous size and magnificent bearing, do not have the capacity to undertake the burdens of revealed laws (Q, Ṭū), as in 59:21: Had We made this Quran descend upon a mountain, thou wouldst have seen it humbled, rent asunder by the fear of God. That man bore it thus indicates the unique responsibility human beings bear to remain in a state of tawḥīd and to follow the practices of their respective religious laws. When they do not, they break the covenant they made with God before entering this world (see 7:172c) and thus fail to live in accord with their true nature.

Man . . . has proved himself an ignorant wrongdoer insofar as he has failed to bear the full weight of the Trust. Thus some understand this phrase as a reference only to disbelievers and hypocrites, who are ignorant of God, and tyrants or wrongdoers (Q), though others take it as a reference to Adam, meaning that when he accepted the Trust, he did not realize its full import (M). It can also be understood as a reference to all human beings who are ignorant of the responsibility of the Trust and wrong themselves by committing acts of disobedience (Ṭū), thus failing to fulfill the Trust (Z).

In a minority reading, the expression “bear the Trust” is understood to mean failing to uphold it and thus failing to bear the burden that it implies (IJ, Ṭū). In this sense it is said that Cain bore the burden of the Trust for having murdered Abel (IJ).

73 That God may punish the hypocritical men and the hypocritical women, the idolatrous men and the idolatrous women, and that God may relent unto the believing men and the believing women. And God is Forgiving, Merciful.

73 God punishes the hypocrites and the idolaters, because they have broken the Trust that man bore; yet God relents to the believers who keep the Trust and forgives their sins (JJ, M).

Sheba

*Saba*⁷ is a Makkan sūrah, although some scholars maintain that v. 6 is from the Madinan period (Aj, Āl, IJ, Q). It takes its name from the mention of the story of Sheba in vv. 15–21. Although some relate the story here to the queen of Sheba mentioned in 27:22–44, it more likely refers to a tribe in the same region of Yemen from later times. When asked, “O Messenger of God, what is Sheba, a land or a woman?” the Prophet is reported to have replied, “Neither a land nor a woman, but a man who had ten Arab sons, six of whom he regarded auspicious and four inauspicious” (Āl).

The beginning of this sūrah, with the mention of God’s Praise and Omnipotence, can be seen as following upon the mention of the Trust in the second to last verse of the previous sūrah (Aj, Bq). Such praise reiterates God’s complete independence of those who carry the Trust and those who neglect to carry it, thus emphasizing that those who carry the Trust do so to their own benefit, while those who neglect to carry it do so to their own detriment (Aj); they do not do so for God, because all praise is already His.

After the first two verses reaffirming the Nature of God, *Saba*⁷ launches into its primary subject, a critique of the disbelievers that emphasizes the vacuity of their claims (vv. 3–9). Brief allusions to the accomplishments of the prophets David (vv. 10–11) and Solomon (vv. 12–14) are then followed by a discussion of the people of Sheba, whose arrogance at their good fortune led them to be destroyed by a flood (vv. 15–19). Two verses regarding the nature of Iblīs (vv. 20–21) then segue into a series of challenges the Prophet Muhammad is told to pose to the disbelievers (vv. 22–30). An account of the discussion described as taking place sometime in the Hereafter between the leaders among the disbelievers and those who followed them in rejecting the prophets (vv. 31–33) then leads into a critique of those whose wealth, power, and social status delude them into believing they are arbiters of truth (vv. 34–45). This is followed by injunctions to the Prophet Muhammad to clarify the nature of his mission (vv. 46–50), which transitions into a concluding section on the consequences that will befall the disbelievers (vv. 51–54).

① Praise be to God, unto Whom belongs whatsoever is in the heavens and whatsoever is on the earth. His is the praise in the Hereafter, and He is the Wise, the Aware. ② He knows that which enters the earth and that which issues therefrom, that which descends from Heaven and that which ascends thereto. And He is the Merciful, the Forgiving. ③ Those who disbelieve say, “The Hour will never come upon us.” Say, “Nay! By my Lord, by the Knower of the Unseen, it will surely come unto you.” Not a mote’s weight evades Him in the heavens or on the earth, nor smaller than that, nor larger, but that it is in a clear Book, ④ that He may recompense those who believe and perform righteous deeds; theirs shall be forgiveness and a generous provision. ⑤ But those who endeavor to thwart Our signs, for them there shall be a painful punishment of torment. ⑥ Those who have been given knowledge see that what is sent down upon thee from thy Lord is the truth and that it guides to the path of the Mighty, the Praised. ⑦ And those who disbelieve say, “Shall we show you a man who will inform you that, when you have been completely torn to pieces, you shall be in a new creation? ⑧ Has he fabricated a lie against God, or is he possessed?” Nay, but those who believe not in the Hereafter shall be in punishment and extreme error. ⑨ Have they not considered that which is before them and that which is behind them of the sky and the earth? If We will, We cause the earth to engulf them or fragments from the sky to fall upon them. Truly in that is a sign for every penitent servant. ⑩ And indeed We gave David bounty from Us: “O mountains! Echo God’s praises with him, likewise you birds!” And We made iron supple for him, ¹¹ [saying], “Make coats of mail, and measure well the links thereof, and work righteousness. Truly I see whatsoever you do.” ¹² And unto Solomon the wind, whose morning course was a month and whose evening course was a month. And We caused a fount of molten copper to flow for him. And of the jinn some worked before him by the leave of his Lord—and those of them that deviated from Our Command, We would cause them to taste the punishment of the Blaze, ¹³ making for him whatsoever he willed: places of worship, statues, basins like reservoirs, and cauldrons firmly anchored. “Work, O family of David, in thankfulness, though few of My servants are thankful.” ¹⁴ And when We decreed death for him, naught showed his death to them save a creeping creature of the earth eating his staff. And when he fell down, the jinn saw clearly that, had they known the Unseen, they would not have tarried in humiliating punishment. ¹⁵ For Sheba too there was certainly a sign in their dwelling—two gardens, one to the right and one to the left: “Eat of the provision of your Lord and give thanks to Him—a good land, and a forgiving Lord.” ¹⁶ But they turned away. So We sent the flood of °Arim upon them and exchanged their two gardens for two gardens bearing bitter fruit, tamarisks, and a few lote trees. ¹⁷ Thus did We recompense them for having disbelieved. And do We recompense any but the disbeliever? ¹⁸ And We set between them and the towns that We had blessed towns easily seen, and We measured the distance between them: “Journey between them in security by night and by day.” ¹⁹ But they said, “Our Lord, increase the distance of our journeys.” And they wronged themselves; so We made them as tales [of old] and tore them completely to pieces. Truly in that are signs for all who are patient, thankful. ²⁰ And Iblīs did indeed prove his opinion of them to be true; and they followed him, save for a group among the believers. ²¹ And yet he had no authority over them, save that We might know one who believes in the Hereafter from one who is in doubt thereof. And thy Lord guards over all things. ²² Say, “Call upon those whom you claim apart from God; they have not a mote’s weight of power in the heavens or on the earth, and they have no share in either;

nor has He a helper among them.” 23 And intercession will benefit none with Him, save whomsoever He gives leave, such that when terror is banished from their hearts, they will ask, “What did your Lord say?” They will reply, “The truth, and He is the Exalted, the Great.” 24 Say, “Who provides for you from the heavens and the earth?” Say, “God. And surely either we or you are upon guidance or in manifest error.” 25 Say, “You will not be questioned concerning that of which we were guilty; nor will we be questioned concerning what you do.” 26 Say, “Our Lord will gather us together; then He will decide between us with truth; and He is the Arbiter, the Knower.” 27 Say, “Show me those whom you have joined with Him as partners. Nay! Rather, He is God, the Mighty, the Wise.” 28 And We sent thee not, save as a bearer of glad tidings and a warner to mankind entire. But most of mankind know not. 29 And they say, “When will this promise come to pass, if you are truthful?” 30 Say, “Yours shall be the tryst of a Day that you cannot delay by a single hour, nor advance.” 31 The disbelievers say, “We shall not believe in this Quran, nor in that which was before it.” Couldst thou but see when the wrongdoers are made to stand before their Lord, hurling reproach upon one another! Those who had been weak and oppressed will say to those who had waxed arrogant, “If not for you, we would have been believers.” 32 Those who waxed arrogant will say to those who had been weak and oppressed, “Did we turn you away from guidance after it had come unto you? Nay! But you were guilty.” 33 Those who had been weak and oppressed will say to those who waxed arrogant, “Nay! But there was plotting by night and day when you ordered us to disbelieve in God, and to set up equals unto Him.” And they will hide their remorse when they see the punishment, and We put shackles upon the necks of those who disbelieve. Will they be requited for aught but what they used to do? 34 And We sent no warner unto a town, but that those living in luxury therein said, “We disbelieve in that wherewith you have been sent.” 35 And they say, “We are greater in wealth and children, and we shall not be punished.” 36 Say, “Truly my Lord outspreads and straitens provision for whomsoever He will, but most of mankind know not.” 37 It is not your wealth or your children that bring you nigh in nearness unto Us, save those who believe and work righteousness—theirs is a manifold reward for what they did, and they will be secure in lofty chambers. 38 And those who endeavor to thwart Our signs, they will be arraigned unto the punishment. 39 Say, “Truly my Lord outspreads and straitens provision for whomsoever He will among His servants. Whatsoever you have spent, He will replace; and He is the best of providers.” 40 Upon the Day when He will gather them all together, then He shall say unto the angels, “Were these the ones worshipping you?” 41 They will reply, “Glory be to Thee! Thou art our Protector, apart from them!” Nay, they worshipped jinn, most of them believing in them. 42 And on that Day no one of you will have power over what benefit or harm may come to the other, and We shall say to those who do wrong, “Taste the punishment of the Fire that you used to deny!” 43 And when Our signs are recited unto them as clear proofs, they say, “This is naught but a man who desires to turn you from that which your fathers used to worship.” And they say, “This is naught but a fabricated perversion.” And those who disbelieve say to the Truth when it comes to them, “This is naught but manifest sorcery,” 44 though We have not given them any books that they study; nor have We sent them a warner before thee. 45 And those before them denied; and these have not attained a tenth of that which We gave them; yet they denied My messengers. How, then, was the change I wrought! 46 Say, “I exhort you unto one thing only, that you stand for God in pairs or singly and then reflect. There is no madness in your companion. He is naught but a warner unto you before a severe punishment.” 47 Say, “I ask not of you any reward; that shall be yours. My reward lies only with God, and He is Witness over all things.” 48 Say, “Truly my Lord doth cast the truth, Knower of things unseen.” 49 Say, “Truth has come, and falsehood originates naught, nor restores.” 50 Say, “If I have gone astray, I have only gone astray to my own loss. And if I am rightly guided, it is through that which my Lord reveals unto me. Truly He is Hearing, Near.” 51 Couldst thou but see when they are terrified and there is no escape, and they are seized from a place near at hand. 52 And they will say, “We believe in it.” But how can they attain from a place far off, 53 when they had disbelieved in it beforehand, while impugning the unseen from a place far off? 54 And a barrier is set between them and that which they desire, as was done with the likes of them before. Truly they were confounded by doubt.

Commentary

① Praise be to God, unto Whom belongs whatsoever is in the heavens and whatsoever is on the earth. His is the praise in the Hereafter, and He is the Wise, the Aware.

1 This is one of five *sūrah*s that begin with Praise be to God (see 1:2; 6:1; 18:1; 35:1). That whatsoever is in the heavens and whatsoever is on the earth belongs to God is reiterated in several verses (cf. 2:255, 284; 3:109, 129; 4:126, 171; 14:2; 22:64; 42:4, 53) and mentioned in various ways throughout the Quran. In this verse His is the praise in the Hereafter, but elsewhere it is stated that His is the praise in the heavens and on the earth (30:18) and at the beginning and at the end (28:70), meaning that God is praised in every place and at every time; see 1:2c.

② He knows that which enters the earth and that which issues therefrom, that which descends from Heaven and that which ascends thereto. And He is the Merciful, the Forgiving.

2 That which enters the earth could refer to rain (JJ, Q), corpses (Q, R), or seeds (R), among other things, while that which issues therefrom refers to vegetation and things extracted from the ground (JJ, Q), such as minerals and jewels. That which descends from Heaven can refer to natural elements, such as rain (Q, R), or to God's decrees (maqādīr) and blessings (barakāt; Q), or other mercies, such as His angels and the Quran (R), while that which ascends thereto can refer to the angels (Q), a good word (35:10) and righteous deeds (Q, R), or the souls of human beings that ascend upon death (R). Together these four realities can also be seen as allusions to all the phases of existence. God is the Merciful in what He sends down to the earth and the Forgiving in allowing souls to return to Him (R).

③ Those who disbelieve say, “The Hour will never come upon us.” Say, “Nay! By my Lord, by the Knower of the Unseen, it will surely come unto you.” Not a mote's weight evades Him in the heavens or on the earth, nor smaller than that, nor larger, but that it is in a clear Book,

3 That the disbelievers deny the coming of the Hour (cf. 25:11; 41:50; 45:32) indicates that they do not understand the full cycle of life alluded to in v. 2. Nay translates the emphatic particle kallā, which in this context can be read as either “Nay” or “Yea.” The former negates their belief that the Hour will not come upon them. The latter affirms that the Hour will come even though they do not believe in it. To deny the Hour in which there is no doubt (see 18:21; 40:59; 45:32) is to also deny the meeting with God; thus 6:31 states, Lost indeed are those who deny the meeting with God till, when the Hour comes upon them suddenly, they say, “Alas for us, that we neglected it!” In this context, the idea that not a mote’s weight evades Him (cf. 10:61; 99:7–8) alludes to the reckoning when all deeds will be weighed on the Day of Judgment. From one perspective, what does not evade God in the heavens refers to the inner reality of the human spirit, as the spirit is closer to the heavens than the body. What does not evade God on the earth then refers to actions performed with the body, whose realm is this world (R). That everything is recorded in a clear Book (6:59; 10:61; 11:6; 27:75; see also 20:52; 22:70; 35:11; 57:22; 78:29) refers to all deeds being recorded in the books that are handed to people on the Day of Judgment (see commentary on 18:49; 84:7–12) or to all that exists being inscribed upon the Preserved Tablet (85:22).

④ that He may recompense those who believe and perform righteous deeds; theirs shall be forgiveness and a generous provision.

4 Cf. 30:45. From one perspective, God’s Forgiveness is the reward for faith and belief, while a generous provision is the reward for performing righteous deeds (R). Elsewhere, those who believe and perform righteous deeds are promised recompense with justice (10:4).

⑤ But those who endeavor to thwart Our signs, for them there shall be a painful punishment of torment.

5 Cf. 45:11. Those who endeavor to thwart God’s signs are also said to be the inhabitants of Hellfire (22:51) who will be arraigned unto the punishment (v. 38; 30:16). In all of these verses, signs could refer to revelations in general, the verses of the Quran in particular, the signs of God in the created order, the signs of the end of time, or to all of these, as each is one type of God's signs; for the different meanings of sign in the Quran, see 2:106c. In an alternate reading of the present verse, punishment is read as the attribute of torment (rijz), meaning, "Theirs shall be the torment of a painful punishment." Rijz (also used in 2:59; 7:134) can also be understood either to mean "defilement," as in 8:11, where God purifies Lot and his people from the defilement (rijz) of Satan, or to mean "plague." This verse could then be read, "Theirs shall be a painful punishment due to defilement," or it could allude to punishment through the sending of a plague.

⑥ Those who have been given knowledge see that what is sent down upon thee from thy Lord is the truth and that it guides to the path of the Mighty, the Praised.

6 Those who have been given knowledge (cf. 22:54; 29:49; 58:11) is understood to mean the Companions of the Prophet (Ṭ) or the People of the Book (JJ, Q, Ṭ); see 22:54c. The latter interpretation likely follows upon 17:107, which refers to those who were given knowledge before it, meaning before the Quran. Nonetheless, those who have been given knowledge could simply be understood to mean anyone who has knowledge, since from a Quranic perspective authentic knowledge leads to truth and guidance (R). In this way, they stand in direct opposition to those mentioned in v. 5. Regarding the place of knowledge in the spiritual life and its relationship to faith and belief, see commentary on 58:11: And God will raise in degrees those among you who believe and those who have been given knowledge. God is Aware of whatsoever you do.

⑦ And those who disbelieve say, "Shall we show you a man who will inform you that, when you have been completely torn to pieces, you shall be in a new creation?"

7 This is one of several verses where the disbelievers are said to mock the claim of bodily resurrection, though it is usually expressed with reference to bones and dust, as in 17:49: What! When we are bones and dust, shall we indeed be resurrected as a new creation? (cf. 13:5; 17:98; 23:35, 82–83; 27:67; 36:78–79; 37:16–17, 53; 50:3; 56:47–48; 79:11). Although new creation usually refers to the Resurrection (see 13:5; 14:19; 35:16), it can also be understood as a reference to the ongoing renewal (tajdīd) of the world in which God's creative act renews the world at every instant, an interpretation often evoked by Sufis and philosophers.

⑧ Has he fabricated a lie against God, or is he possessed?" Nay, but those who believe not in the Hereafter shall be in punishment and extreme error.

⑨ Have they not considered that which is before them and that which is behind them of the sky and the earth? If We will, We cause the earth to engulf them or fragments from the sky to fall upon them. Truly in that is a sign for every penitent servant.

9 Here, as in many verses, the created order is cited as evidence of God's Oneness and Omnipotence, as in 30:25: And among His signs is that the sky and the earth stand fast by His Command; and 36:81: Is not He Who created the heavens and the earth able to create the like thereof? (R); see especially the story of Abraham's spiritual argument in 6:75–78. That the heavens and the earth continue to function as they do is also a sign of God's Mercy, for they could crumble at any moment, as they did in some of the forms of punishment that came upon certain disbelievers in the past. In this regard, the prophet Shu'ayb's people challenged him, saying, so make fragments from the sky fall upon us, if you are among the truthful (26:187), and the Quran asks whether wrongdoers feel secure that God will not cause the earth to engulf them (16:45; cf. 17:68; 67:16). Several verses speak of signs for the believers (15:77; 29:44; 48:20) and those who reflect (16:11, 13, 69; 45:13), but this is the only reference to signs for every penitent servant. In the present context, it implies that reflecting upon the true nature of the created order can protect one from the punishments mentioned in this verse, as an understanding of them would bring one to believe and thus to turn to God in repentance. Elsewhere, the wonders of the created order are cited as a source of insight and a reminder for every penitent servant (50:8) and for a people who understand (16:67).

⑩ And indeed We gave David bounty from Us: “O mountains! Echo God’s praises with him, likewise you birds!” And We made iron supple for him,

⑪ [saying], “Make coats of mail, and measure well the links thereof, and work righteousness. Truly I see whatsoever you do.”

10–11 Bounty from Us may be a reference to prophethood and revelation (JJ), as in 4:163, And unto David We gave the Psalms, or to the judgment and knowledge that God is said to have given both David and Solomon (21:79; cf. 27:15). The mountains and birds are compelled to glorify God with David (cf. 21:79; 38:18–19), because he has been appointed as a vicegerent upon the earth (38:26), meaning that in him are all things contained in principle (see 6:165c; 35:39c). That iron was made supple for David indicates that God taught him the art of metalworking, which allowed him to make coats of mail (cf. 21:80) and weapons. The prophets David and Solomon are cited in several Quranic passages as rulers who were given power over certain aspects of nature and who exercised these powers wisely. For a more extensive discussion of the powers bestowed upon David, see 38:17–20c.

⑫ And unto Solomon the wind, whose morning course was a month and whose evening course was a month. And We caused a fount of molten copper to flow for him. And of the jinn some worked before him by the leave of his Lord—and those of them that deviated from Our Command, We would cause them to taste the punishment of the Blaze, 12 The verb in the first clause is implied and could be either “gave,” following upon v. 10, or “made . . . subservient,” as in 38:36: So We made the wind subservient unto him, coursing gently by his command whither he wished (cf. 21:81). Though David figures more prominently in the Bible than does his son Solomon, Solomon figures more prominently in the Quran and is described as having greater powers. In addition to inheriting David’s kingdom and being given judgment and knowledge (21:79) and the ability to communicate with the animals, Solomon was also given power over the winds. Similarly, he is said to have had power over the jinn. Just as iron was made pliable for David, so too were more aspects of metallurgy taught to Solomon. The jinn who deviated from God’s Command to serve Solomon are said to have been punished in the Fire in the Hereafter (JJ, Ṭ) or to have been punished in this world with a strike from an angel that would scorch them (JJ).

13 making for him whatsoever he willed: places of worship, statues, basins like reservoirs, and cauldrons firmly anchored. “Work, O family of David, in thankfulness, though few of My servants are thankful.”

13 Places of worship translates maḥārīb, the plural of miḥrāb, which is the word most commonly used to designate the niche that marks the direction of prayer in a mosque. In pre-Islamic times, miḥrāb was used to designate the private chamber within a house or a large Bedouin tent to which one could retire alone and which was thus a sanctuary of sorts, or the most honored sitting place in the tent. Thus miḥrāb came to be used to designate the prayer niche, because it was regarded as a place of honor in the mosque (Iṣ). Other etymological derivations propose that the miḥrāb is so named because it is the place in which one combats (ḥāraba, from the same root as miḥrāb) Satan and caprice, or because it is a place in which one is displaced from (ḥarīb min) the preoccupations of the world (Iṣ). In this context, it can also be understood to mean the honored places in which people would sit, alluding to castles (Ṭ), or places in which the direction of prayer was clearly delineated, thus places of worship or prostration (Ṭ).

Here the Command to work is understood to mean work in obedience to God (Aj, Ṭ) and strive to serve or worship God (Aj). In thankfulness can also be read as a direct object (Aj), so that the sentence would mean, “Work or offer thanks to God.” Though few of My servants are thankful can be understood as the end of God’s address to Solomon or as the beginning of a new sentence (Aj), in which case “though” would be replaced with “and” or “yet.”

⑭ And when We decreed death for him, naught showed his death to them save a creeping creature of the earth eating his staff. And when he fell down, the jinn saw clearly that, had they known the Unseen, they would not have tarried in humiliating punishment.

14 When Solomon died, he reportedly remained supported by his staff while the jinn continued working to carry out his command, until, when a termite ate through his staff, he fell to the ground (JJ, Q). This was reportedly done at Solomon's request to demonstrate to the jinn that they did not have the knowledge of the Unseen that they had claimed (Q). That they would not have tarried in humiliating punishment is understood to mean that, had the jinn been aware that Solomon had passed away and thus had the knowledge they claimed, they would have immediately ceased to carry out the tasks that he had appointed them (JJ).

⑮ For Sheba too there was certainly a sign in their dwelling—two gardens, one to the right and one to the left: “Eat of the provision of your Lord and give thanks to Him—a good land, and a forgiving Lord.”

⑯ But they turned away. So We sent the flood of °Arim upon them and exchanged their two gardens for two gardens bearing bitter fruit, tamarisks, and a few lote trees.

⑰ Thus did We recompense them for having disbelieved. And do We recompense any but the disbeliever?

15–17 Sheba is the name of a tribe in Yemen whose land is said to have had pure air and to have been free of dung, gnats, flies, fleas, scorpions, and snakes (JJ). Despite the great fortune that God had bestowed upon them, they turned away, meaning from worshipping God alone (IK), failed to give thanks, and thus became disbelievers (IK, JJ). Some commentators connect these verses to the reference to the people ruled by the Queen of Sheba, who are said to have prostrated to the sun (see 27:22–24; IK), but as the people ruled by the Queen of Sheba lived at the time of Solomon, the present verses likely refer to a much later group of people from the same region. ‘Arim can be understood as a proper name, to mean “powerful” or “violent,” or to mean “dam.” The latter meaning appears to be substantiated by inscriptions from around AD 450 to 540 that use this same root, ‘ayn-rā’-mīm, to refer to a dam system in southern Arabia. This passage would then refer to the ancient society of Mārib, whose people had constructed a sophisticated dam system that enabled them to create two vast irrigated tracts. When the dams gave way, the rich landscape of these irrigated tracts, or gardens, was then returned to desert, thus bearing bitter fruit.

The last sentence of v. 17 can also be read, “And is any recompensed but the disbelievers” (Q, Ṭ). In both readings the implication is that God forgives the sins of believers but makes the disbelievers bear the consequences of their sins (Q). In both readings, the Arabic interrogative particle hal can alternately be read as a particle of negation, meaning, “We do not recompense any but the disbeliever,” or “None but the disbeliever is recompensed” (Ṭ).

18 And We set between them and the towns that We had blessed towns easily seen, and We measured the distance between them: “Journey between them in security by night and by day.”

18 Another of the blessings God had given Sheba was to facilitate trade for them by providing towns where they could rest and obtain water during their journeys from Yemen to those lands blessed with water and trees in Syria (IK, JJ). Measured the distance between them indicates that the towns were spaced so that they would always find a resting place where they could renew their provisions without needing to travel too far (IK). The final enjoinder thus means that one should journey in security and peace protected by God. In this manner it is similar to the blessings that God is said to have bestowed upon the Quraysh; see 106:1–2c.

19 But they said, “Our Lord, increase the distance of our journeys.” And they wronged themselves; so We made them as tales [of old] and tore them completely to pieces. Truly in that are signs for all who are patient, thankful.

19 The people of Sheba had reportedly wanted the distances between the way stations of their journeys to be lengthened, so that they could boast of traveling long distances and of being able to carry all of their provisions with them (JJ). God made them as tales [of old], that is, as a bygone people of whose might, wealth, and destruction others would speak, and tore them completely to pieces, that is, scattered them throughout the land (IK, JJ). In this context, Truly in that are signs for all who are patient, thankful (cf. 14:5; 31:31; 42:33) indicates that reflecting upon the manner in which past societies had their fortunes and blessings removed from them should cause one to be thankful for what one has received from God and to bear afflictions with patience.

20 And Iblīs did indeed prove his opinion of them to be true; and they followed him, save for a group among the believers.

20 The opinion of Iblīs, or Satan, regarding human beings is most likely what he expresses in 17:62: If Thou dost grant me reprieve till the Day of Resurrection, I shall surely gain mastery over his progeny, all save a few; and in 7:17: And Thou wilt not find most of them thankful. The phrase and they followed him would then mean that his assessment was correct (JJ), except with regard to a group among the believers.

21 And yet he had no authority over them, save that We might know one who believes in the Hereafter from one who is in doubt thereof. And thy Lord guards over all things.

21 That he had no authority over them means that the only ability Satan has to make human beings swerve from the truth is what was granted to him by God. Satan only has authority to lead astray those who already have the tendency to stray; thus God says to him in 15:42, As for My servants, truly thou hast no authority over them, save for those in error who follow thee (cf. 16:99; 17:65). God grants Satan the opportunity to lead human beings astray, so that He might know one who believes in the Hereafter from one who is in doubt thereof, meaning to let their true natures become manifest, for ultimately God already knows those who are truthful, and surely He knows the liars (29:3; see 29:3c).

22 Say, “Call upon those whom you claim apart from God; they have not a mote’s weight of power in the heavens or on the earth, and they have no share in either; nor has He a helper among them.”

22 Those whom you claim means “those whom you claim to be gods” (JJ). Whereas the Prophet is commanded to challenge the disbelievers to call upon their deities here and in 7:195; 10:38; 11:13; 17:56; 46:4, a statement with similar effect is made in 35:13: As for those upon whom you call apart from Him, they do not possess so much as the husk of a date stone (cf. 7:194; 22:73). Then on the Day of Judgment, it will be said, “Call upon your partners.” So they will call upon them, but they will not answer them. And they will see the punishment—if only they had been rightly guided! (28:64), and that is because God, He is the Truth, and whatsoever they call upon other than Him is false (31:30). The statement that God has no helper among them is a response to the attitude of some of the idolaters who maintained that their idols and deities could function as intercessors, saying, We do not worship them, save to bring us nigh in nearness unto God (39:3).

23 And intercession will benefit none with Him, save whomsoever He gives leave, such that when terror is banished from their hearts, they will ask, “What did your Lord say?” They will reply, “The truth, and He is the Exalted, the Great.”

23 Continuing the last line of the previous verse, this verse responds to those who maintained that their gods could intercede for them with God (JJ). Whomsoever He gives leave then clarifies that there can be intercession through others, understood in Islamic tradition to mean specifically prophets, angels, and God’s pious servants, but only insofar as God permits. For the Quranic understanding of intercession, see 2:48c; 2:255c. When terror is banished from their hearts—that is, from the hearts of the angels—the angels will turn to one another and ask, “What did your Lord say?” meaning, “What did He command?” (Q). The angels’ hearts are filled with terror or fear, because of the awe they have for God, as in 21:28, They are wary, for fear of Him (Q), where they are in awe of His Word or in awe of the end of the world (IJ). They thus do nothing until they receive the Command from God.

24 Say, “Who provides for you from the heavens and the earth?” Say, “God. And surely either we or you are upon guidance or in manifest error.”

24 The question means, “Is there a creator other than God who provides for you from the heavens and the earth?” (35:3; cf. 10:31; 27:64); from the heavens alludes to rain and the earth, to plants (IJ). These verses can also be understood to imply, Who is it that will provide for you if He withholds His provision? (67:21). In the second part of the verse, some commentators interpret or, which here translates the particle aw, to mean “and” and thus interpret this verse to mean, “And surely we (the believers) are guided and you (the disbelievers) are in manifest error” (IJ, Ṭ). Others maintain that the verse means, “We are astray or guided and you are astray or guided” (IJ, Ṭ). The slight ambiguity that disbelievers might see in this verse is then understood by some as a gentle invitation to embrace faith (JJ). For manifest error, see 36:24c.

25 Say, “You will not be questioned concerning that of which we were guilty; nor will we be questioned concerning what you do.”

25 On the one hand, this verse recalls that the Muslims and the disbelievers bear no responsibility for the religion of the other, similar to 10:41, where the Prophet is enjoined, And if they deny thee, say, “Unto me, my deeds, and unto you, your deeds. You are quit of that which I do, and I am quit of that which you do” (IK). On the other hand, it evokes the general principle that none shall bear the burden of another (6:164; 17:15; 35:18; 39:7; 53:38).

26 Say, “Our Lord will gather us together; then He will decide between us with truth; and He is the Arbiter, the Knower.”

26 On the Day of Judgment, God will gather all human beings together on an open plain (18:47) and judge between them, and their differences will be made clear. Those who are truthful will then be admitted to the Garden and the deniers to the Fire (IK, JJ). Hence it is also known as the Day of Gathering (42:7; 64:9). The Arbiter translates al-Fattāḥ, from the root f-t-ḥ, which can also mean “to open.” It could thus also be rendered “the Opener.” Here al-Fattāḥ indicates the One Who judges in accord with the truth and makes that truth clear by piercing through what had been closed.

27 Say, “Show me those whom you have joined with Him as partners. Nay! Rather, He is God, the Mighty, the Wise.”

27 Regarding the challenge to disbelievers to show those whom they claim to be God’s partners, see 34:22c. Here Nay! means that there are no equals to God (IK) or that there is no way that they could show them, since in reality they do not exist.

28 And We sent thee not, save as a bearer of glad tidings and a warner to mankind entire. But most of mankind know not.

28 That the Prophet is sent to mankind entire is taken as an indication that his mission is of universal scope for all races and lands (IK, R, Ṭ), as in 21:107: And We sent thee not, save as a mercy unto the worlds and 4:79: We sent thee as a messenger unto mankind (see also 7:158). Entire translates kāffah, which could also be understood to modify the manner in which the Prophet was sent, thus meaning that he was sent “combining” the functions of bearing glad tidings and delivering warnings (Q, R, Z). The Prophet is referred to as both a bearer of glad tidings and a warner in several verses (5:19; 7:188; 11:2; 17:105; 25:56; 33:45; 35:24; 48:8), while in other verses these functions are attributed to all prophets (2:213; 4:165; 6:48; 18:56).

29 Cf. 10:48; 21:38; 27:71; 36:48; 67:25. This line of questioning is one of the ways in which the disbelievers would mock the Prophet when he spoke of matters pertaining to the Resurrection and Judgment; see 36:48c.

30 Say, “Yours shall be the tryst of a Day that you cannot delay by a single hour, nor advance.”

30 In other verses the assertion that the moment in question cannot be delayed by a single hour, advanced, or hastened comes in reference to the particular end that iniquitous civilizations face (see 7:34c; 10:49; 15:5; 16:61; 23:43). Here it most likely refers to the Day of Judgment, the tryst, which is the moment of gathering that is fixed and cannot be changed, as in 71:4: Truly when the term of God comes, it will not be delayed; see also 11:104.

31 The disbelievers say, “We shall not believe in this Quran, nor in that which was before it.” Couldst thou but see when the wrongdoers are made to stand before their Lord, hurling reproach upon one another! Those who had been weak and oppressed will say to those who had waxed arrogant, “If not for you, we would have been believers.”

31 In the preceding verses the idolaters’ disbelief in the Oneness of God, the reality of prophethood, and the reality of the Resurrection were exposed. It thus follows that they do not believe in the revelations that contain these teachings, namely, the Quran and that which was before it. This phrase is understood by the majority of commentators to mean the Torah and the Gospel, but could also be seen as a general reference to every revealed book denied by disbelievers in any land. The implied answer to the conditional phrase beginning couldst thou but see is “thou wouldst be amazed” (R) or something to this effect. Those who had been weak and oppressed refers to the followers of disbelievers, while those who had waxed arrogant refers to their leaders (IK, JJ, R), whose influence prevented many of their followers who otherwise would have believed from doing so (R). Those who merely claim that they were weak and oppressed and thus unable to practice religion as they desired are understood to have their refuge in Hell (4:97), but in some instances for those who truly were oppressed it may be that God will pardon them, for God is Pardoning, Forgiving (4:99).

32 Those who waxed arrogant will say to those who had been weak and oppressed, “Did we turn you away from guidance after it had come unto you? Nay! But you were guilty.”

32 The response of the oppressors to those whom they oppressed and sought to turn from the way of God is to say that they had only called them; the oppressed who followed went against the evidence and proof that the messengers brought because of their own desires (IK). They thus disbelieved of their own accord (IK, JJ), because they followed freely the wealthy and influential rather than God and His Messenger; see 33:66–68; 71:21.

33 Those who had been weak and oppressed will say to those who waxed arrogant, “Nay! But there was plotting by night and day when you ordered us to disbelieve in God, and to set up equals unto Him.” And they will hide their remorse when they see the punishment, and We put shackles upon the necks of those who disbelieve. Will they be requited for aught but what they used to do?

33 The weak and oppressed here claim that, although they did follow the wealthy and influential, they would not have done so had they not been confused by the lies and false deities set up by their oppressors (IK). They—that is, both the oppressors and the oppressed (JJ)—hide their remorse (cf. 10:54). That the dispute concludes in a state of remorse for both sides could be understood to mean that they realize the truth of one another’s claims. On the one hand, the rulers have a greater share in guilt for having sought to preserve their power by establishing false religions and false deities. On the other hand, many of those who followed them still chose to do so without attempting to discern the matter for themselves. The concealment of their remorse is understood by some to come after their having made it manifest, as in 32:12: Couldst thou but see when the guilty bend their heads low before their Lord: “Our Lord! We have seen and we have heard; so send us back that we may work righteousness. Truly we are certain.” Then, after being informed that there is no opportunity for them to make amends, they are no longer able to voice their remorse (R). Regarding the shackles that are put upon them, see 36:8c. The concluding rhetorical question is answered in 37:39: And you shall not be requited, save for that which you used to do (cf. 40:40). In this context it indicates that both the oppressors and the oppressed will be requited in accordance with the degree of their guilt (IK), though some verses allude to the leaders receiving a twofold punishment (33:68; cf. 7:38), one punishment for having been astray and another punishment for leading others astray.

34 And We sent no warner unto a town, but that those living in luxury therein said, “We disbelieve in that wherewith you have been sent.”

34 Cf. 43:23. Here, those living in luxury translates mutrafū, which could also be translated “the indulgent” or “the sybarites.” In other verses, it is the notables (mala') who are said to reject God’s prophets and revelations; see 7:60, 66, 75, 88, 90, 103, 109, 127; 10:75, 83; 11:27, 38, 97; 23:24, 33, 46; 38:6. Like Jesus in the New Testament and many prophets in the Hebrew Bible, the Prophet Muhammad was rejected by those of his native city and suffered for his testimony. As in the Hebrew Bible, it is implied that Divine Punishment will soon come for those who reject God’s prophets; see Kings 19:10–14; Jeremiah 11:18–19; 18:18–20; 20:1–2; 26:7–11; 38:4–6. This widespread teaching of the Abrahamic scriptures is perhaps best expressed in Luke 4:24: “Truly, I tell you, no prophet is accepted in the prophet’s hometown” (see also Matthew 13:57; Mark 6:4; John 4:44).

35 And they say, “We are greater in wealth and children, and we shall not be punished.”

36 Say, “Truly my Lord outspreads and straitens provision for whomsoever He will, but most of mankind know not.”

37 It is not your wealth or your children that bring you nigh in nearness unto Us, save those who believe and work righteousness—theirs is a manifold reward for what they did, and they will be secure in lofty chambers.

35–37 The objection expressed in these verses reflects a common response of those who reject revelation because they think only in terms of this world, rather than in terms of this world and the next, as when the people said to Noah, We see none who follow you, save the lowliest among us (11:27), and asked, Shall we believe you, when the lowliest follow you? (26:111). On the one hand, wealth and status should be a cause for gratitude and should be managed properly, as in 28:77: And forget not your portion in this world. On the other hand, the Quran cautions, Your property and your children are only a trial (8:28; 64:15). In this sense, God outspreads . . . provision for whomsoever He will as a test, and then straitens provision as a trial (JJ); cf. 13:26; 17:30; 28:82; 29:62; 30:37; 34:36, 39; 39:52; 42:12. From this perspective, the provisions of wealth and children, among other things, can only be a source of good when one conducts oneself righteously in relation to them, for wealth and children are the adornment of the life of this world, but that which endures—righteous deeds—are better in reward with thy Lord (18:46). The Day of Judgment is thus described as the Day when neither wealth nor children avail, save for him who comes to God with a sound heart (26:88–89). Those who meet the challenge, dealing justly with their worldly possessions and responsibilities, shall be rewarded, but for those who disbelieve, neither their wealth nor their children shall avail them aught against God (3:10, 116). In this vein, 9:55 and 9:85 caution, And let not their wealth or their children impress thee. God desires but to punish them thereby in the life of this world, and that their souls should depart while they are disbelievers (cf. 68:14c); see also 2:212; 3:14; 9:69; 26:88; 60:3; 63:9; 64:14–15; 68:14; 71:21. Those who believe and work righteousness will then have a manifold reward, meaning their good deeds will be multiplied ten to seven hundred fold (IK); see 2:261c; 6:160c. They are secure from any harm (IK) and from death (JJ).

38 And those who endeavor to thwart Our signs, they will be arraigned unto the punishment.

38 Cf. 22:51; 34:5. See 34:5c. All human beings will be arraigned before God (see 36:32, 53; 36:32c), but only the disbelievers will be arraigned unto the punishment (cf. 30:16).

39 Say, “Truly my Lord outspreads and straitens provision for whomsoever He will among His servants. Whatsoever you have spent,

He will replace; and He is the best of providers.”

39 The first instance of God outspreads and straitens provision for whomsoever He will (cf. 13:26; 17:30; 28:82; 29:62; 30:37; 34:36; 39:52; 42:12) in this sūrah (v. 36) points to the fact that one’s worldly status and possessions do not indicate one’s true status before God (R). Here the addition of among His servants can be understood to mean that the phrase relates specifically to the believers (R). Whatsoever you have spent means what believers have spent in the way of God. God will replace it with something else in this world and with something better in the Hereafter (IK, Q), because He is the best of providers (cf. 5:114; 22:58; 23:72; 62:11). Regarding this verse, al-Tustarī is reported to have said, “Provision is of two kinds. One is a provision that is remembrance, which is for the spirit itself, the intellect, and the heart. This is like the sustenance of the angels—their very life is through remembrance. Were it withheld from them, they would die. The other provision is that which is eaten, drunk, and the like for the benefit of one’s [physical] nature” (ST).

④ Upon the Day when He will gather them all together, then He shall say unto the angels, “Were these the ones worshipping you?”

40 Gather them refers to either the gathering of all human beings or the gathering of the disbelievers. Here it is the angels who are questioned, rather than the jinn and idols that were worshipped, because the angels are the highest of those beings to whom the idolaters had attributed divinity and whom they worshipped (R). Regarding the manner in which God questions the angels, 25:17 states, And on the Day He gathers them and that which they worship apart from God, He will say, “Was it you who caused these servants of Mine to go astray, or did they [themselves] go astray from the way?” (see 25:17–18c).

④ They will reply, “Glory be to Thee! Thou art our Protector, apart from them!” Nay, they worshipped jinn, most of them believing in them.

41 That the angels say to God, Thou art our Protector, apart from them indicates that the angels claim to have no bonds of association with those who worshipped them (JJ).

④⁴² And on that Day no one of you will have power over what benefit or harm may come to the other, and We shall say to those who do wrong, “Taste the punishment of the Fire that you used to deny!”

42 This verse can be understood as an address to the angels, saying that they will have no power to aid those who worshipped them, as in 19:87: They have no power of intercession, save the one who has made a pact with the Compassionate; see 25:3c. It can also be understood as an address to the disbelievers, saying that they cannot harm or aid one another (R), since the Day of Judgment is a day when no soul will avail another soul in any way, and no intercession shall be accepted from it, nor ransom taken from it; nor shall they be helped (2:48; cf. 2:123; 82:19).

④⁴³ And when Our signs are recited unto them as clear proofs, they say, “This is naught but a man who desires to turn you from that which your fathers used to worship.” And they say, “This is naught but a fabricated perversion.” And those who disbelieve say to the Truth when it comes to them, “This is naught but manifest sorcery,” 43 This is one of many verses to speak of the negative reactions of the disbelievers to the recitation of God’s signs, that is, the verses of the Quran; see 8:31; 19:73; 22:72; 31:7; 42:25; 46:7c; 68:15; 83:13. Their assertion that it is naught but a fabricated perversion can be understood to mean the Quran or the belief in the Oneness of God, as in 37:86, when Abraham asks his father and other disbelievers, Is it a perversion, gods apart from God, that you desire? and in 46:22, when the disbelievers ask, Have you come to us to pervert us from our gods? (R). This latter interpretation is most likely, since their assertion that this is naught but manifest sorcery would then refer to the Quran.

④⁴⁴ though We have not given them any books that they study; nor have We sent them a warner before thee.

44 We have not given them any books means they have not been given any revealed scriptures, as the force of their claims regarding the nature of the unseen implies that they are privy to such information. Elsewhere, the Quran asks rhetorically, Or did We give them a book, such that they stand upon a clear proof from it? (35:40; cf. 43:21; 46:4; 52:36–37, 41; 68:37–38); see 35:40c; 46:4c.

45 And those before them denied; and these have not attained a tenth of that which We gave them; yet they denied My messengers. How, then, was the change I wrought!

45 The disbelievers in the time of the Prophet do not have a tenth of the power, blessings, wealth, and length of life as the communities that had been destroyed before them. If God was able to punish those previous communities for having rejected His messengers, then how is it that the disbelievers of this generation think they will be protected from punishment (R)? How, then, was the change I wrought! (cf. 22:44; 35:26; 67:18) could also be rendered, “And how was the nature of My reproach?” Both translations indicate that their punishment will be as severe as the punishment that befell earlier generations; also see 22:44–45c.

46 Say, “I exhort you unto one thing only, that you stand for God in pairs or singly and then reflect. There is no madness in your companion. He is naught but a warner unto you before a severe punishment.”

46 The Prophet is told to enjoin his followers to one characteristic above all others (Bd, Z), to stand for God or to “rise up for God,” meaning to stand before God in complete sincerity without being influenced by caprice, falsehood, or tribalism (IK) and thus to turn away from doubt and blind imitation (taqlīd; Bd). They are to do so in pairs, that is, discussing the matter with one another, or singly, that is, thinking individually to themselves and reflecting upon what the Prophet says and does without being swayed by inherited beliefs (Z). Or they are not to allow the crowds to sway them from the remembrance of God or leave off the remembrance of God when alone (R). In pairs or singly can also be taken together as a reference to reflecting upon religious issues away from large crowds of people who may influence one’s mind and cloud one’s thoughts (Aj, Bd). Then, having dropped these matters, they should reflect honestly upon the Prophet and what he has brought (Bd, Z), implying that when they reflect honestly upon the evidence at hand, they will see that he is indeed a messenger from God and is not mad, as in 7:184: Have they not reflected? There is no madness in their companion. He is naught but a clear warner.

47 Say, “I ask not of you any reward; that shall be yours. My reward lies only with God, and He is Witness over all things.”

47 Cf. 10:72; 26:109. Just as the Prophet displays no signs of being mad, neither does he display signs of having brought the message for worldly gain, as he asks nothing of the people other than that they follow the message with which God has sent him. The Prophet is enjoined to make similar statements in 6:90; 25:57; 36:21; 38:86; 42:23, and other prophets are reported to have made the same statement in 11:29; 26:109, 127, 145, 164, 180. For He is Witness over all things, see 4:33; 5:117; 22:17; 33:55; 41:53c; 58:6; 85:9.

48 Say, “Truly my Lord doth cast the truth, Knower of things unseen.”

48 Cast the truth refers to both God’s casting of the truth into the hearts of believers (R) and God’s overcoming falsehood with truth, as in 21:18: We cast truth against falsehood, and it crushes it, and, behold, it vanishes (cf. 17:81; IK, R).

49 Say, “Truth has come, and falsehood originates naught, nor restores.”

49 Truth has come implies that falsehood has been vanquished, as in 17:81: Say, “Truth has come, and falsehood has vanished. Truly falsehood is ever vanishing.” That falsehood originates naught, nor restores refers back to the criticism of those who worshipped idols and jinn in vv. 40–42, as such objects of worship have no ability to create anew or to resurrect, as does God, since nothing will come of nothing; see commentary on 25:3: But they have taken gods apart from Him, who create naught and are themselves created, and who have no power over what harm or benefit may come to themselves, and who have no power over death, or life, or resurrection.

50 Say, “If I have gone astray, I have only gone astray to my own loss. And if I am rightly guided, it is through that which my Lord reveals unto me. Truly He is Hearing, Near.”

50 Here the implication is that if the Prophet is astray, then his condition is just like that of those who oppose him, but if he is indeed guided, then his guidance comes directly from revelation and is not the same as the guidance that others may claim to have obtained. The Divine Name the Hearing is employed throughout the Quran, but this is the only verse where it is combined with Near, thus indicating that the Lord is the Hearer of supplications (14:39), which evokes 2:186: When My servants ask thee about Me, truly I am near. I answer the call of the caller when he calls Me. So let them respond to Me and believe in Me, that they may be led aright.

51 Couldst thou but see when they are terrified and there is no escape, and they are seized from a place near at hand.

51 In this context, from a place near at hand further emphasizes that there is no possible escape from God’s Judgment (IK, R), as disbelievers are seized immediately upon being resurrected from their graves (IK).

52 And they will say, “We believe in it.” But how can they attain from a place far off, 53 when they had disbelieved in it beforehand, while impugning the unseen from a place far off?

52–53 Those who denied the Prophet and the Quran disbelieved in it beforehand, meaning during the life of this world, but now, having seen the truth on the Day of Judgment, they believe, as in 32:12, in which the guilty say on the Day of Judgment, Our Lord! We have seen and we have heard; so send us back that we may work righteousness. Truly we are certain (IK). The disbelievers thus admit their sins (see 40:11; 41:47; 67:11) and are terrified of what will become of them. How can they attain from a place far off? means, “How can they attain to the opportunities for repentance and guidance that were offered them during the life of this world, as that is a place to which they can never return?” (R). It in They had disbelieved in it can mean the truth (R), discussed in vv. 48–49, but it can also mean God (Q) in which case it would be translated, “He,” the Prophet (Q, R), or the Quran (R). In Arabic the phrase translated impugning the unseen is directly related to my Lord doth cast the truth (v. 48), as both “impugn” and “cast” render the same verb, qadhafa. In this sense, those who disbelieve are the exact opposite of those who believe, as God casts the truth into the hearts of the believers, while the disbelievers cast the truth away. That they impugned or cast off the unseen from a place far off indicates that they had no knowledge upon which to base their position.

54 And a barrier is set between them and that which they desire, as was done with the likes of them before. Truly they were confounded by doubt.

54 That which they desire refers to a return to the world in order to repent and make amends, though now it is too late (R), or to repentance itself (IK), or to the delights of this world (R) in which they used to indulge. Regarding their being confounded by doubt, see 11:62, 110; 14:9; 41:45; 42:14.

The Originator

Fāṭir

A Makkan sūrah, Fāṭir was reportedly revealed immediately after Sūrah 25, al-Furqān. According to some, vv. 27 and 32 are from the Madinan period (Ṭs), while others maintain that vv. 29 and 32 are Madinan (Āl). The sūrah takes its name from the reference to God as the Originator of the heavens and the earth in v. 1, but is often known as al-Malāʾikah, “The Angels” (Āl; IJ; Sy, al-Itqān), since v. 1 provides the only description of some aspects of the angels’ physical appearance in the Quran.

The main focus of the sūrah is upon the Oneness of God as the only Creator and Sustainer of existence. It begins with an affirmation of God as the sole Originator and Provider (vv. 1–3) and returns to this theme throughout (vv. 13–17, 27–28), contrasting the Power of God with the claims the polytheists make for their idols (vv. 13–14, 40–41). A discussion of Satan as the Deluder and enemy (vv. 5–8) leads into the other major theme of this sūrah, the contrast between the believers and the disbelievers (vv. 7–8, 10); vv. 19–22 provide one of the most poetic contrasts between the two groups. The longest comparison between the two groups (vv. 29–39), followed by a final contrast between the Power of God and that of the idols (vv. 40–41), segues into a final passage on the nature of disbelief and the ends to which it leads (vv. 42–45).

In the Name of God, the Compassionate, the Merciful

① Praise be to God, Originator of the heavens and the earth, Who appoints the angels as messengers, of wings two, three, and four, increasing creation as He will. Truly God is Powerful over all things. ② Whatsoever mercy God opens unto mankind, none shall withhold. And whatsoever He withholds, none shall release thereafter. And He is the Mighty, the Wise. ③ O mankind! Remember God's Blessing upon you.

Is there a creator other than God who provides for you from Heaven and earth? There is no god but He. How, then, are you perverted? ④ If they deny thee, messengers before thee were denied, and unto God are all matters returned. ⑤ O mankind! Surely God's Promise is true. So let not the life of this world delude you, nor let the Deluder delude you concerning God. ⑥ Truly Satan is an enemy unto you; so take him as an enemy. He only calls upon his party that they may be among the inhabitants of the Blaze. ⑦ Those who disbelieve, theirs shall be a severe punishment. And those who believe and perform righteous deeds, theirs shall be forgiveness and a great reward. ⑧ And what of one, the evil of whose deeds has been made to seem fair to him, such that he thinks it beautiful? Truly God leads astray whomsoever He will and guides whomsoever He will; so let not thy soul be expended in regrets over them. Truly God knows that which they do. ⑨ And God is He Who sends the winds; then they cause clouds to rise. Then We drive them to a land that is dead, and thereby revive the earth after its death.
Thus shall be the Resurrection! ⑩ Whosoever desires might—to God belongs might altogether. Unto Him ascends the good word, and He uplifts the righteous deed. As for those who plot evil deeds, theirs shall be a severe punishment, and their plotting shall come to ruin. ⑪ God created you from dust, then from a drop, then He made you pairs; and no female bears or brings forth save with His Knowledge. And none who grows old grows old, nor has aught lessened of his life, but that it is in a Book. Truly that is easy for God. ⑫ Not equal are the two seas: one sweet, satisfying, pleasant to drink, and the other salty, bitter. Yet from each you eat fresh meat, and bring out ornaments that you wear. And you see the ships therein plowing through, that you may seek of His Bounty, and that haply you may give thanks. ⑬ He makes the night pass into the day and makes the day pass into the night, and He has made the sun and the moon subservient, each running for a term appointed. That is God, your Lord; to Him belongs sovereignty. As for those upon whom you call apart from Him, they do not possess so much as the husk of a date stone. ⑭ If you call upon them, they hear not your call, and even if they heard, they would not respond to you; and on the Day of Resurrection they will disown your ascribing partners unto God. And none informs you like one who is Aware. ⑮ O mankind! You are needful of God; and He is the Self-Sufficient, the Praised. ⑯ If He will, He could remove you and bring a new creation. ⑰ That is no great matter for God. ⑱ And none shall bear the burden of another. And though one burdened heavily calls for his burden to be borne, naught of it will be borne, even if it be kin. Thou warnest only those who fear their Lord unseen and perform the prayer. And whosoever purifies himself purifies himself only for his own soul. And unto God is the journey's end. ⑲ Not equal are the blind and the seeing, ⑳ nor the darkness and the light, ㉑ nor the shade and the scorching heat. ㉒ Not equal are the living and the dead. Truly God causes whomsoever He will to hear, but thou canst not cause those in graves to hear. ㉓ Thou art naught but a warner. ㉔ Truly We have sent thee with the truth as a bearer of glad tidings and as a warner. And there has been no community but that a warner has passed among them. ㉕ If they deny thee, those before them also denied: their messengers brought them clear proofs, scriptures, and the luminous Book. ㉖ Then I seized those who disbelieved. How, then, was the change I wrought! ㉗ Hast thou not considered that God sends down water from the sky, wherewith We bring forth fruits of diverse colors? And in the mountains are streaks of white and red, of diverse hues, and others pitch-black. ㉘ And of mankind, beasts, and cattle there are, likewise, those of diverse colors. [Yet] only those among His servants who know fear God. Truly God is Mighty, Forgiving. ㉙ Truly those who recite the Book of God, perform the prayer, and spend from that which We have provided them secretly and openly hope for a commerce that will never perish, ㉚ that He may pay them their rewards in full and increase them from His Bounty. Truly He is Forgiving, Thankful. ㉛ And that which We have revealed unto thee from the Book is the truth, confirming what came before it. Verily

God is of His servants Aware, Seeing. 32 Then We bequeathed the Book to those of Our servants whom We had chosen. Among them are those who wrong themselves, those who take a middle course, and those who are foremost in good deeds, by God's Leave. That is the great bounty: 33 Gardens of Eden which they will enter, adorned therein with bracelets of gold and pearls; and their garments therein will be of silk. 34 And they will say, "Praise be to God, Who has dispelled grief from us. Truly our Lord is Forgiving, Thankful, 35 Who, of His Bounty, has caused us to dwell in the Abode of Everlasting Life, wherein no weariness shall touch us, nor fatigue befall us." 36 As for those who disbelieve, theirs shall be the Fire of Hell. They will neither be done away with so as to die; nor will aught of its punishment be lightened for them. Thus do We requite every disbeliever. 37 They will cry out therein, "Our Lord! Remove us, that we may work righteousness other than that which we used to do." "Did We not give you long life, enough for whosoever would reflect to reflect therein? And the warner came unto you, so taste [the punishment]! The wrongdoers shall have no helpers." 38 Truly God knows the unseen of the heavens and the earth. Truly He knows what lies within breasts. 39 He it is Who appointed you vicegerents upon the earth. So whosoever disbelieves, his disbelief is to his detriment. The disbelief of the disbelievers increases them with their Lord in naught but odium. And the disbelief of the disbelievers increases them in naught but loss. 40 Say, "Have you considered your partners upon whom you call apart from God? Show me what they have created of the earth. Do they have a share in the heavens, or did We give them a book, such that they stand upon a clear proof from it?" Nay, the wrongdoers promise one another naught but delusion. 41 Truly God maintains the heavens and the earth, lest they fall apart. And were they to fall apart, none would maintain them after Him. Truly He is Clement, Forgiving. 42 And they swore by God their most solemn oaths that, were a warner to come unto them, they would be more rightly guided than any of the communities. Yet when a warner came unto them, it increased them in naught but aversion, 43 waxing arrogant upon the earth and plotting evil; yet evil plotting besets none but its authors. So do they await aught but the wont of those of old? Thou shalt find no alteration in the wont of God, and thou shalt find no change in the wont of God. ④④ Have they not journeyed upon the earth and observed how those before them fared in the end, though they were greater than them in strength? Naught in the heavens or upon the earth can thwart God. Truly He is Knowing, Powerful. ④⑤ Were God to take mankind to task for that which they have earned, He would not leave a single creature upon the surface of the earth. But He grants them reprieve till a term appointed. And when their term comes, truly God sees His servants.

Commentary

① Praise be to God, Originator of the heavens and the earth, Who appoints the angels as messengers, of wings two, three, and four, increasing creation as He will. Truly God is Powerful over all things.

1 This is one of five *sūrah*s that begin with Praise be to God (see 1:2; 6:1; 18:1; 34:1). Originator translates Fāṭir, a Divine Name related to the verb faṭara, meaning to “split” or “cleave.” In the Quran, Fāṭir always occurs as part of the larger phrase Originator of the heavens and the earth (cf. 6:14; 12:101; 14:10; 39:46; 42:11). The verbal form of this word, however, is also used in the context of God’s creation of human beings (11:51; 17:51; 20:72; 32:22; 43:27), hence its etymological relation to the fiṭrah, or primordial nature, in which God creates or “originates” human beings (see 30:30c). That God is Fāṭir can also be understood to mean that He is the “Cleaver” or “Splitter,” in that God cleaves open the heavens to prepare for the descent of spirits into bodies and then cleaves open the earth for the ascension of the spirits of human beings at the moment of resurrection (R). This relates directly to the function of the angels, who are messengers “conveying” the spirits from Heaven to earth and from earth to Heaven (R), though others understand their function as messengers to be related to the role they play in bringing revelation to the prophets (IK). Increasing creation as He will can be understood to mean that God increases the number of angels (Q) or their wings (Q, Z), as there are many reports of angels with more than two or three wings, and the Angel Gabriel is reported to have appeared to the Prophet with six hundred wings (IK). The phrase can also be understood more generally to mean that God increases whomever and whatever He wills in creation (Ṭ, Z).

2 The reference to God “opening” mercy can be understood as an allusion to 42:12, Unto Him belong the keys of the heavens and the earth. He outspreads and straitens provision for whomsoever He will (cf. 39:63), since none can open these treasuries but God (Ṭ). In this sense, this verse provides a general assertion that none can withhold what God wills to bestow or release what He withholds, as in 10:107: And if God should touch thee with affliction, none can remove it save He; and if He desires some good for thee, none can hold back His Bounty (IK). The order of the present verse, in which God's opening of mercy is mentioned before the withholding of mercy is related to the idea found in a famous ḥadīth qudsī: "My Mercy precedes My Wrath" (R, Z). None shall release thereafter could also be rendered, "none shall release after Him" (R), meaning that no one can dispense what God has chosen to withhold. In this regard the Prophet is reported to have said, "I cannot put mercy in your heart after God has removed it."

③ O mankind! Remember God's Blessing upon you. Is there a creator other than God who provides for you from Heaven and earth? There is no god but He. How, then, are you perverted?

3 This is one of six verses to enjoin Remember God's Blessing upon you (2:231; 5:7, 11, 20; 14:6; see 5:7c). Though some read the present verse as being addressed specifically to the people of Makkah, it can also be extended to all human beings, since all human beings have benefitted from God's blessings (Z). Throughout his commentary, al-Rāzī maintains that there are two general categories of blessings: those of creation, or bringing into being (ījād), and those of perpetuation (ibqā'). He interprets Is there a creator other than God as a reference to the blessing of creation and who provides for you from Heaven and earth as a reference to the blessing of perpetuation. In this context, How, then, are you perverted? (cf. 6:95; 10:34; 40:62) is answered by the statement There is no god but He, meaning that, since God has provided all the blessings of both creation and perpetuation, how can any turn away from Him and attribute partners to Him (R)?

4 That previous messengers and prophets have been denied is a major theme of the Quran found in the stories of previous prophets and stated explicitly in several verses; see 3:184; 6:10; 13:32; 21:41; 35:4; 38:12; 40:5; 41:43; 54:9. Elsewhere, this reminder to the Prophet is followed by an additional reminder: And they bore patiently their being denied and persecuted till Our Help came to them (6:34). In this sense, the denial and persecution of previous prophets serves to console the Prophet Muhammad and encourage him to bear denial on the part of disbelievers patiently, since from a Quranic perspective all prophetic missions are ultimately victorious (see 9:33; 37:171–73; 40:51; 48:28; 58:21; 61:9). In this context, unto God are all matters returned (cf. 2:210; 3:109; 8:44; 22:76; 57:5) indicates that those who denied God’s messengers will be requited in full for what they have done (IK).

⑤ O mankind! Surely God’s Promise is true. So let not the life of this world delude you, nor let the Deluder delude you concerning God.

5 Cf. 31:33. Here the statement that God’s Promise is true (cf., e.g., 4:122; 10:4, 55; 18:21) refers to the promise of Divine Punishment for the disbelievers in the previous verse (Ṭ) or to all of the events pertaining to the Hereafter (IK, JJ). Concerning the last phrase, see 31:33c.

⑥ Truly Satan is an enemy unto you; so take him as an enemy. He only calls upon his party that they may be among the inhabitants of the Blaze.

6 That Satan is an enemy of human beings is stated throughout the Quran (see, e.g., 2:168, 208; 6:142; 7:22; 12:5; 17:53; 28:15; 36:60; 43:62) and voiced by Satan himself in 4:119: And surely I will lead them astray, and arouse desires in them. I will command them and they will slit the ears of cattle; I will command them and they will alter God’s creation; and 7:16–17: Because Thou hast caused me to err, I shall surely lie in wait for them on Thy straight path. Then I shall come upon them from in front of them and from behind them, and from their right and from their left. And Thou wilt not find most of them thankful. The warning to take Satan as an enemy is understood as an injunction to obey God rather than Satan (JJ, Ṭ) and to perform righteous deeds (R). In this regard, al-Rāzī writes: “Whosoever knows that he has an enemy from whom he has no escape and is certain of that, then focuses upon [opposing him], and forbears in fighting him and being patient shall triumph. Likewise for Satan, the human being cannot escape him, for he is with him. And he ceases not to follow him until he focuses upon him and routs him, for routing Satan comes through a human being's determination, and the path is being firm in intent and trusting in servitude [to God]."

Those who are in the party of Satan are those who do not take him as an enemy and follow him rather than God and the messengers (JJ). He only calls upon his party thus means that Satan summons "the people of caprice, innovation, and error" who obey him and hearken to those who declare such things (ST). Then when they are among the inhabitants of the Blaze, Satan declares himself innocent of all that they have done; see 14:22c; 59:16.

⑦ Those who disbelieve, theirs shall be a severe punishment. And those who believe and perform righteous deeds, theirs shall be forgiveness and a great reward.

7 This verse juxtaposes those who follow Satan and are thus among his party with those who take him as an enemy and follow God.

⑧ And what of one, the evil of whose deeds has been made to seem fair to him, such that he thinks it beautiful? Truly God leads astray whomsoever He will and guides whomsoever He will; so let not thy soul be expended in regrets over them. Truly God knows that which they do.

8 One for whom the evil of his deeds has been made to seem fair to him is one who has failed to consider Satan an enemy, since it is Satan who has made their deeds seem fair unto them (8:48; 16:63; 27:24; 29:38). Deeds seeming fair and being led astray are one and the same, since it is as a result of following caprice that one comes to see what is ugly as beautiful and what is beautiful as ugly (Z). Such people think their bad deeds are good or that their vice is virtue, for few who commit evil deeds are aware of it, just as few who are ignorant are aware of their ignorance (R). In this context, that God leads astray whomsoever He will and guides whomsoever He will (cf. 13:27; 14:4; 16:93; 74:31) can be understood as the reason why the Prophet should not expend regrets over their being astray (Ṭ). Let not thy soul be expended in regrets over them is one of several injunctions enjoining the Prophet not to grieve for those who reject the message (see 3:176; 5:41, 68; 6:33; 10:65; 16:127; 18:6; 26:3; 27:70; 31:23; 36:76). Such passages indicate that the Prophet need not worry about the condition of the disbelievers, but should simply spread the Word of God as he has been enjoined, since God knows that which they do.

⑨ And God is He Who sends the winds; then they cause clouds to rise. Then We drive them to a land that is dead, and thereby revive the earth after its death. Thus shall be the Resurrection!

9 The positive, revivifying dimension of winds (in the plural) occurs ten times in the Quran and each time conveys an aspect of God's Mercy, as in 7:57 and 25:48: He it is Who sends the winds as glad tidings ahead of His Mercy (see also 30:46). In contrast, wind (in the singular) is often used to express God's Wrath and Punishment (see 3:117; 10:22; 17:69; 22:81; 30:51; 33:9; 41:16; 46:24; 51:41; 54:19; 69:6). This verse is one of many where the manner in which God revives the dead earth is employed as a metaphor for the Resurrection (IK); see also 7:57; 16:65; 22:5; 25:48–49; 29:63; 30:19, 24, 50; 36:33; 41:31, 39; 43:11; 45:5; 50:9–11.

⑩ Whosoever desires might—to God belongs might altogether. Unto Him ascends the good word, and He uplifts the righteous deed. As for those who plot evil deeds, theirs shall be a severe punishment, and their plotting shall come to ruin.

10 Whosoever desires might means whoever desires honor, power, and glory in this world and the next. To God belongs might altogether reminds one to be obedient toward God, as all such qualities come from God (IK); it is thus understood as a command not to seek such might from idols or other gods (IK, †) or from disbelievers, as in 4:139: Those who take disbelievers as protectors instead of believers—do they seek might through them? Truly might belongs altogether to God (IK). It is also understood to mean that any who seek true honor, power, and glory and are sincere in their desire, so that they seek with humility and poverty before God, will find these qualities with God and they will be unveiled to them (Q); see 10:65c.

The good word may refer to the remembrance and invocation of God, the recitation of the Quran, and supplicatory prayer (IK) or to the declaration of God's Oneness (Q). This sentence can be understood to mean that all good words and righteous deeds ascend to God and that one is thus rewarded for them, or that God uplifts the righteous deed over the good word because the deed constitutes the verification of the word (Q), since it is putting faith into action. The subtle phrasing of this verse also allows for it to be read, “Unto Him ascends the good word and the righteous deed uplifts it,” meaning the deed uplifts the word (Q), as in a saying attributed to Ibn ‘Abbās: “The good word is the remembrance of God, which is taken up to God, and the righteous deed is the performance of obligatory duties. Whosoever remembers God while performing an obligatory duty, his deed carries his remembrance of God and takes it up to God. Whosoever remembers God and does not perform the obligatory duties, his words will be rejected, as will his deed” (IK). But it must also be recognized that the good word is a good deed in and of itself (Q). The phrase could also be understood to mean, “Unto Him ascends the good word, and as for the righteous deed, it uplifts it” (Q), meaning that the good word uplifts the righteous deed in the sense that no good deed is accepted by God unless there is a sincere declaration of faith that precedes or accompanies it (Q). He uplifts it is thus understood to mean that God makes it reach Him “due to the presence of sincerity toward God within it” (ST). Those who plot evil deeds is understood as a reference to people of duplicity and hypocrisy (IK, Q, T) who perform “righteous deeds” only to deceive others into thinking that they obey God (IK) and whose deeds do not ascend. Their plotting shall come to ruin, because God knows that they perform such deeds only to be seen of others (see 2:264; 4:38, 142; 8:47) and not because of belief in God (see 4:37–39c).

⑪ God created you from dust, then from a drop, then He made you pairs; and no female bears or brings forth save with His Knowledge. And none who grows old grows old, nor has aught lessened of his life, but that it is in a Book. Truly that is easy for God.

11 Following upon v. 9, the mention of the stages of creation here is in part a reminder of God’s Ability to resurrect, as in 22:5: O mankind! If you are in doubt concerning the Resurrection, [remember] We created you from dust, then from a drop, then from a blood clot, then from a lump of flesh, formed and unformed, that We may make clear for you. As the drop from which human beings were created (cf. 16:4; 18:37; 22:5; 36:77; 40:67; 53:46; 76:2; 80:19) is a draught of base fluid (32:8; cf. 77:20) and was preceded by dust, that God created you from dust, then from a drop also serves to remind human beings of their lowly origins. That God created mates for human beings is attested in several verses (4:1; 16:72; 42:11; 78:8). Here, as in 16:72 and 42:11, the connection to procreation is emphasized. Elsewhere, the emotional, psychological, and spiritual benefits of marriage are emphasized; see 2:187; 30:21c. The remainder of the verse means that the term of one's life has been decreed by God, that one may reach a term appointed (40:67); see 40:67c.

⑫ Not equal are the two seas: one sweet, satisfying, pleasant to drink, and the other salty, bitter. Yet from each you eat fresh meat, and bring out ornaments that you wear. And you see the ships therein plowing through, that you may seek of His Bounty, and that haply you may give thanks.

12 Regarding the two seas, also see 25:53, which adds that God has set between them a divide and a barrier, forbidden (cf. 55:20). The fresh meat refers to all the fruits of the sea, and the ornaments that you wear to pearls and coral stones (55:22; JJ, Z). Many commentators understand the two seas as a metaphor for the believer and the disbeliever (Bḍ, Z). But, as al-Rāzī observes, the fact that one brings fresh meat from each sea makes this metaphor difficult to apply. Drawing a spiritual lesson from this metaphor, Ibn ʿAjībah likens the Law to the ocean that is sweet, satisfying, pleasant to drink and the ocean of Reality to the one that is salty, bitter, because the latter requires exerting one's innermost self, lowering one's head, spending of one's wealth, and abandoning the world and its people, whereas the Law does not require as much. Fresh meat and ornaments are retrieved from each sea. From the ocean of the Law "one obtains the sweetness of proper conduct," while from the ocean of Reality one tastes "the sweetness of witnessing [God] and of spiritual knowledge" (Aj). The ships are then seen as the spiritual reflections that are plowing through the seas of Dominion (malakūt) and Majesty (jabarūt) to the completion of spiritual knowledge from God's Bounty in order to be among those who give thanks (Aj).

⑬ He makes the night pass into the day and makes the day pass into the night, and He has made the sun and the moon subservient, each running for a term appointed. That is God, your Lord; to Him belongs sovereignty. As for those upon whom you call apart from Him, they do not possess so much as the husk of a date stone.

⑭ If you call upon them, they hear not your call, and even if they heard, they would not respond to you; and on the Day of Resurrection they will disown your ascribing partners unto God. And none informs you like one who is Aware.

13–14 Regarding the first sentence of v. 13, see commentary on the almost identical phrasing in 31:29. That the deities called upon do not possess so much as the husk of a date stone reaffirms God's absolute sovereignty in that it underlines the complete powerlessness of all upon whom people call apart from God, as in 22:73: Truly those upon whom you call apart from God will never create a fly, even if they gathered together to do so. And if the fly should rob them of aught, they could not rescue it from it. Feeble are the seeker and the sought! (cf. 34:22). Elsewhere, the idolaters are challenged, So call upon them! Let them answer you, if you are truthful (7:194). The idols and gods they call upon are heedless of their calling (46:5). They then disown the idolatry of the disbelievers, as in 10:28, where it is reported that they will say, It was not us that you worshipped, which reflects the manner in which Satan disavows the disbelievers, saying, Surely I am quit of you. Truly I fear God, the Lord of the worlds (59:16), and I cannot respond to your cries for help, nor can you respond to my cries for help. Truly I disbelieved in your ascribing me as partner aforetime (14:22; see commentary). Thus, when mankind is gathered together, such will be enemies unto them and deniers of their worship (46:6). In general, that none informs you like one who is Aware means that no one can inform you in the manner that God informs you (Aj, Q, Z). In context, this phrase can also refer to the account of the idols, meaning that only God tells you the truth regarding this matter (Aj, Z), especially as it pertains to the Unseen and cannot be deduced through reasoning (R). That none informs you like one who is Aware can also refer to the events on the Day of Resurrection (IK, T).

⑮ O mankind! You are needful of God; and He is the Self-Sufficient, the Praised.

15 Like God is the Rich, and you are the poor in 47:38, this verse has played an important role in the Sufi understanding of the relationship between the Divine and the created order, especially human beings: God is completely Rich and Self-Sufficient and human beings completely poor, in utter need of God with regard to being both brought into existence and provided sustenance (Aj). From this perspective, realizing the Fullness or Richness of God depends upon the realization of one's complete poverty before God. As al-Tustarī writes, "You [depend] upon Him in your very selves, for when God created creation, He ordained (ḥakama) poverty for His servants in relation to Him, while He is the Rich. So whosoever claims wealth has been veiled from God. And whosoever shows his poverty in relation to Him, God will join his poverty to His wealth. The servant must feel poverty toward Him in his innermost being (sirr), cutting himself off from all that is other than Him, so that his servanthood may be pure; for pure servanthood is abasement and humility" (ST). From this perspective one must cut oneself off from all that is other than God, because poverty toward and need for God is intrinsic to human nature, whereas poverty toward or need for other things is accidental. Therefore, every need that one experiences is ultimately a need for God, since the phenomena for which one experiences need are veils that hide God and also reveal God. That God is the Praised thus indicates that being praised is intrinsic to the Divine Nature and not dependent upon anything to praise Him. In this respect, al-Maybudī states that only those who fully realize poverty truly praise God.

①⑥ If He will, He could remove you and bring a new creation.

①⑦ That is no great matter for God.

16–17 In this context, that God can make people disappear underlines His Self-Sufficiency (R) and the utter poverty of human beings in that God's making them disappear depends only upon God's Will. Bring a new creation means that God will replace them with other people (IK), either another people who already exist or a whole new people whom He will create who are better and more perfect than the previous ones (R); see also 4:133; 5:54c; 6:133; 14:19–20; 47:38.

①⑧ And none shall bear the burden of another. And though one burdened heavily calls for his burden to be borne, naught of it will be borne, even if it be kin. Thou warnest only those who fear their Lord unseen and perform the prayer. And whosoever purifies himself purifies himself only for his own soul. And unto God is the journey's end.

18 That none shall bear the burden of another (cf. 6:164; 17:15; 39:7; 53:38)—that is, that no one will bear the sins or duties of others (Aj, IK, R, Ṭ)—points to God's Justice (Aj). In this context, the phrase can be understood as the introduction of a new discussion (Q), or as connected to the previous verses in that being poor in relation to God (see 35:15c) also means that one cannot take on the burden of another or cast one's burden upon another (R), since human beings are powerless to make such determinations. Commentators reconcile this phrase with 29:13, Surely they will bear their own burdens, and others' burdens along with their own, by saying that their own burdens refers to what corrupt leaders will endure for the sin of having been misled themselves and that others' burdens refers to that for having misled others (Aj). That one who purifies himself purifies himself only for his own soul means that whoever performs good deeds receives the benefit of those deeds (IK), just as the first part of this verse indicates that only those who commit evil deeds suffer the punishment for such deeds. This verse thus demonstrates a moral reflexivity in which the ultimate impact of actions, good or bad, is always upon the one who performs these actions (see 2:9, 272; 3:69; 6:123; 8:60; 9:34–35; 10:23; 29:6).

19 Not equal are the blind and the seeing,

19 Here, seeing is used as a metaphor for belief and blindness for disbelief (Aj, Ṭ, Q), as in 40:58: And the blind and the seer are not equal; nor are those who believe and perform righteous deeds and the evildoer. Little do you reflect (cf. 6:50; 11:24; 13:16). This juxtaposition can also be seen as a metaphor for knowledge and ignorance, as in 39:9: Are those who know and those who do not know equal? Some also read the present verse as a contrast between God and the idols (Aj), since the Quran often notes the powerlessness and lifelessness of the idols (e.g., 7:194; 22:73; 34:22).

20 nor the darkness and the light,

21 nor the shade and the scorching heat.

20–21 The contrasts between the darkness and the light and the living and the dead (v. 22) are combined in 6:122: Is he who was dead, and to whom We give life, making for him a light by which to walk among mankind, like unto one who is in darkness from which he does not emerge? Combining vv. 19–22, Ibn Kathīr writes, “The believer sees and hears, and walks in the light upon a straight path in this world and the Hereafter, so that he comes to settle in Gardens wherein are shade and springs. The disbeliever is blind and deaf, walking in darkness from which he cannot escape; he is lost in his misguidance in this world and the Hereafter, so that he ends up amidst scorching wind and boiling liquid, and the shadow of black smoke, neither cool nor refreshing [56:42–44].”

22 Not equal are the living and the dead. Truly God causes whomsoever He will to hear, but thou canst not cause those in graves to hear.

22 This verse can be seen as a response to the rhetorical questions posed in 6:122 and 39:22; that is, not equal are the living, those whose hearts are alive with faith in God, and the dead, those whose hearts are dead because they are covered with disbelief (Ṭ). That God causes whomsoever He will to hear, but thou canst not cause those in graves to hear is related to the first part of the verse in that those whose hearts are alive are those who hear the truth of the revelation, while those whose hearts are buried in the grave of ignorance cannot hear it (Ṭ). God’s causing them to hear thus refers to His guiding them and supporting them (Aj); see also 30:52–53.

23 Thou art naught but a warner.

23 In this context, that the Prophet is naught but a warner (cf. 11:12; 13:7; 27:92; 34:46; 38:65; 79:45) indicates that it is not his function to cause those in graves to hear; it is only his function to deliver the message, so that those who believe or may come to believe will hear, as in 30:53: Thou makest none to hear, save those who believe in Our signs and are submitters. The Prophet is thus enjoined to leave their belief or disbelief in the Hands of God. In this way, this verse is an extension of v. 8: So let not thy soul be expended in regrets over them (T).

24 Truly We have sent thee with the truth as a bearer of glad tidings and as a warner. And there has been no community but that a warner has passed among them.

24 The Prophet is also referred to as both a bearer of glad tidings and a warner in 5:19; 7:188; 11:2; 17:105; 25:56; 33:45; 34:28; 48:8; in other verses these functions are attributed to all prophets (2:213; 4:165; 6:48; 18:56). According to Islamic belief, every human collectivity has been sent a warner (cf. 16:36) or messenger (10:47) and will thus be held accountable for heeding or ignoring the warning; see 67:9c.

25 If they deny thee, those before them also denied: their messengers brought them clear proofs, scriptures, and the luminous Book.

25 Cf. 3:184. Regarding the denial of previous prophets, see 35:4c. That their messengers brought them clear proofs (cf. 7:101; 10:13; 14:9; 30:9; 40:83) refers to the miracles that bear witness to the truth of their prophetic missions (Q, Z) as well as the revealed laws (Q). Scriptures translates zukur, which is the plural of zabūr, a word employed elsewhere to designate the revelation sent to David, hence “the Psalms” (see 4:163; 17:56; 21:105). Zukur, however, is used more broadly in the Quran to denote various different revelations (see 3:184; 16:44; 23:53; 26:196; 54:43).

26 Then I seized those who disbelieved. How, then, was the change I wrought!

26 God’s seizing the disbelievers indicates that they are being punished, as in 40:5: they disputed by means of falsehood in order to reject the truth thereby; so I seized them. How, then, was My Retribution! (cf. 13:32). How, then, was the change I wrought! (cf. 22:44; 34:45; 67:18) could also be rendered, “How was the nature of My reproach!” Both translations imply “How severe was My Punishment!” (Q), indicating that the punishment that befalls the disbelievers of this generation will be as severe as the punishment that befell earlier ones.

27 Hast thou not considered that God sends down water from the sky, wherewith We bring forth fruits of diverse colors? And in the mountains are streaks of white and red, of diverse hues, and others pitch-black.

27 Hast thou not considered is addressed to the Prophet, but can also be read as a direct address to the reader or listener (R). It refers to seeing with the vision of the heart (Q), which enables one to know the true nature of things. In this vein, Ibn ‘Ajībah relates the fruits of diverse colors to different forms of knowledge, and the different streaks upon mountains to the various paths by which knowledge is obtained; regarding the many signs in God’s sending down water from the sky, see 6:99c.

28 And of mankind, beasts, and cattle there are, likewise, those of diverse colors. [Yet] only those among His servants who know fear God. Truly God is Mighty, Forgiving.

28 This verse refers to the differentiation between races and ethnicities, as in 30:22, And among His signs are the creation of the heavens and the earth and the variation in your tongues and colors (IK), but it can also be understood as a reference to the manner in which the inner states of human beings differ (Q). Those . . . who know is understood by many to mean those who know that God is Powerful over all things (IK, Q, T). In this regard, the Prophet is reported to have said, “The one among you who has the most knowledge of God is the one whose fear of Him is most intense” (Z). That only those among His servants who know fear God is understood to indicate the superiority of knowledge over worship (R), as in a famous ḥadīth: “Whosoever sets upon a path to seek knowledge, God will set him upon a path to the Garden. Verily the angels lower their wings being content with the one who seeks knowledge. And whosoever is in the heavens and on earth, even the fish in the sea, ask forgiveness for the person of knowledge. The superiority of one who has knowledge over the worshipper is as that of the moon over all other heavenly bodies. Those who have knowledge are the heirs of the prophets, for the prophets did not leave behind dīnārs and dirhams; they only left behind knowledge; and whosoever receives it, receives an abundance of good fortune.” Yet the manner in which this verse is followed by the mention of the obligatory acts of worship demonstrates that such knowledge must be combined with worship and manifest in one’s actions in order to be of benefit (Bḏ).

29 Truly those who recite the Book of God, perform the prayer, and spend from that which We have provided them secretly and openly hope for a commerce that will never perish, 29 Both the obligatory and supererogatory manifestations of the three religious practices mentioned here are extolled (Q). The mention of the three together may be understood as an allusion to worshipping with one’s tongue, worshipping with one’s body, and expending one’s wealth, while the reference to fearing God in the previous verse alludes to remembering God with one’s heart (R). Regarding the recitation of the Quran, see 73:3–4c; 47:16c. In this context, some see those who recite the Book of God as a reference to those who recite the Quran constantly (Aj). The injunction to spend of one’s wealth secretly and openly (cf. 2:274; 13:22; 14:31; 16:75) indicates that one should give both openly, so that others are encouraged to do the same, and privately, so as not to be boastful. That those who perform these actions hope for a commerce that will never perish (cf. 61:10) alludes to their sincerity in seeking only the Face of God (R), as they do not perform such deeds to be seen of men (2:264; 4:38, 142; 8:47).

30 that He may pay them their rewards in full and increase them from His Bounty. Truly He is Forgiving, Thankful.

30 Cf. 3:57; 4:152, 173. God will reward the devout believers mentioned in the previous verse for what they have done and increase it to an extent that they could not fathom (IK). That God is Forgiving, Thankful (cf. 35:34; 42:23) indicates that He forgives bad deeds and accepts good deeds.

31 And that which We have revealed unto thee from the Book is the truth, confirming what came before it. Verily God is of His servants Aware, Seeing.

31 From the Book refers either to the guidance and clarifications from the Quran or else to the Quran itself being from the Preserved Tablet (85:22; R), which is held to be the source of all revelation. The Book confirms what came before it, so that there is no difference between it and previous revelations (R), as in 41:43, which addresses the Prophet, saying, Naught has been said unto thee save that which has been said unto the messengers before thee. From this perspective, the Quran cannot but confirm previous scriptures; see 2:41, 89, 91, 97, 101; 3:3, 81; 5:48; 6:92; 10:37; 46:30.

32 Then We bequeathed the Book to those of Our servants whom We had chosen. Among them are those who wrong themselves, those who take a middle course, and those who are foremost in good deeds, by God's Leave. That is the great bounty:

32 The Book refers to the Quran (IK, JJ) or to all revealed books (Ṭ). With regard to the latter, that God has bequeathed it means that God has bequeathed the truth conveyed by all revelations to those who follow the Quran, as these truths are preserved in this revelation. Some see God's having bequeathed it after having revealed it (in v. 31) as an allusion to the fact that there is no revelation after the Quran (R, Ṭs). The chosen to whom the Book is bequeathed refers to the prophets (Ṭb, Ṭs); or the people of knowledge, as in a famous ḥadīth, "The people of knowledge are the heirs of the prophets" (Ṭs, Ṭū); or the whole of the Muslim community (Ṭb, Ṭs). In this last sense, it would be similar to 40:53, which says of the Jews, And indeed We gave Moses guidance, and We bequeathed the Book to the Children of Israel (Ṭb). According to the Shiite tradition, Our servants whom We had chosen refers to descendants of the Prophet (Ṭb) or to the Imams specifically (Qm). The fifth and sixth Shiite Imams are reported to have said of this verse, "This refers specifically to us" (Ṭs). From this perspective, those who wrong themselves refers to those of Our servants who do not follow the Imams (Qm).

From a Sunni perspective, the three types of people listed here refer to three categories of believers (R): those who wrong themselves are believers who are careless, omitting some obligatory actions and committing some that are forbidden; those who take a middle course are those who perform the obligatory actions and avoid what is forbidden, but neglect praiseworthy deeds and do some things that are disliked by God; and those who are foremost in good deeds are those who perform both obligatory and praiseworthy acts and avoid both what is forbidden and what is disliked (IK). Those who wrong themselves are thus forgiven, while those who take a middle course are given an easy reckoning, and the foremost enter the Garden with no reckoning (IK, Q, Ṭ). From this perspective, the Book has been bequeathed to all three groups, and even those who believe yet wrong themselves will be forgiven (IK, Q). Others understand those who wrong themselves as a reference to disbelievers or hypocrites, those who take a middle course as a reference to believers who may still be disobedient, and the foremost as a reference to those who are truly reverent (Q, Ṭ). In this vein, they liken those who wrong themselves to the companions of the left (56:9), those who take a middle course to the companions of the right (56:8), and those who are foremost in good deeds to the foremost (56:10; Q, Ṭ). Those who wrong themselves are then said to be in the Fire, while the two categories of believers attain Paradise (Ṭ). Al-Tustarī is reported to have related these three categories to the attainment of knowledge: “The one who is foremost is the one who is learned; the one who takes a middle course is the one who is learning; and the one who wrongs himself is the one who is ignorant” (ST). Al-Ḥasan al-Baṣrī is also reported to have said, “The foremost are those whose good deeds outweigh their misdeeds; those who take a middle course are those whose good deeds and misdeeds balance each other; and the wrongdoers are those whose misdeeds outweigh their good deeds” (ST).

That is the great bounty may refer to the Gardens of Eden (v. 33), but is also understood as a reference to the bequest of the Book (JJ) or to the fact that being foremost in good deeds is a bounty that God may bestow upon those who take a middle course and those who wrong themselves (Ṭ), as it is a degree only attained by God’s Leave.

That the Book is bequeathed to all of God’s servants may not necessarily introduce the complication that all of the commentators are trying to address here, namely, “How it is that the Book can be bequeathed to those who wrong themselves”? From an Islamic perspective, revelation can be understood as bequeathed to all human beings, even the disbelievers, in that, as the Prophet has said, “The Quran is a proof, either for you or against you,” since its truth shows each human being his or her true nature (see 36:7c; 40:6c). This verse could then be understood as addressing the three tendencies within human beings: those who wrong themselves are those who experience God’s Anger; those who take a middle course are those who at times are astray; and the foremost are those who follow a straight path. The way they are presented here, from lowest to highest, could also be understood as an allusion to the manner in which the bequest of the Book can bring one from the lowest state, in which one wrongs oneself, to the highest state, in which one is among the foremost, by God's Leave, which is the great bounty.

33 Gardens of Eden which they will enter, adorned therein with bracelets of gold and pearls; and their garments therein will be of silk.

33 Other references to the raiment and ornaments of the inhabitants of the Garden include 18:31; 22:23; 44:53; 76:21. Regarding bracelets of gold, see 18:31c. The inhabitants of the Garden are also said to be adorned with silver bracelets (76:21). Elsewhere, their garments are said to be of fine silk and rich brocade (18:31; 76:21).

34 And they will say, "Praise be to God, Who has dispelled grief from us. Truly our Lord is Forgiving, Thankful, 34 Those who praise God for removing their sorrow are either all those who enter Paradise or those who wrong themselves (v. 32) when the latter is understood to mean those believers who nonetheless remained somewhat disobedient to God. In this vein, the Prophet is reported to have said, "As for one who wrongs himself, he will be afflicted by distress and sorrow in that state, and that is [the meaning of] Praise be to God, Who has dispelled grief from us" (Ṭ). In either interpretation, the grief that God dispels is the sorrow that arises from the fear of the Fire (Ṭ), the anxieties of this life and the next (IK, Z), or Satan and his whispering (Z). It may also refer to death (Ṭ), as they will not die again. Hence the Quran says of those who attain Paradise, No fear shall come upon them; nor shall they grieve (2:38, 62, 112, 262, 274, 277; 3:170; 5:69; 6:48; 7:35; 10:62; 46:13).

35 Who, of His Bounty, has caused us to dwell in the Abode of Everlasting Life, wherein no weariness shall touch us, nor fatigue befall

35 Of His Bounty is understood by some as an allusion to the fact that entry into the Garden is entirely in God’s Hands, as when the Prophet said to some of his Companions, “None will enter Paradise by virtue of good deeds, not even me, unless God encompasses me with Mercy and Bounty” (IK). In Arabic, weariness (naṣab) and fatigue (lughūb) are practically synonymous. Here, however, many commentators distinguish between them by saying that lughūb is fatigue and weariness, while naṣab is the toil and work that brings it about (R). Others say that these synonyms are used to refer to different types of “weariness,” naṣab being weariness of the body and lughūb being that of the soul or spirit (IK).

36 As for those who disbelieve, theirs shall be the Fire of Hell. They will neither be done away with so as to die; nor will aught of its punishment be lightened for them. Thus do We requite every disbeliever.

36 They will neither be done away with so as to die is similar to 20:74: Verily, whosoever comes unto his Lord guilty, surely his shall be Hell, wherein he neither dies nor lives. The punishment is not lightened after the disbelievers have been sentenced, because they had already been granted respite and thus had many opportunities to repent during the life of this world; see 2:162 and 3:88: The punishment shall not be lightened for them; nor shall they be granted respite (cf. 2:86; 16:85; 43:74–75). Rather, God promises, Every time it abates, We shall increase for them a blazing flame (17:97; cf. 78:30).

37 They will cry out therein, “Our Lord! Remove us, that we may work righteousness other than that which we used to do.” “Did We not give you long life, enough for whosoever would reflect to reflect therein? And the warner came unto you, so taste [the punishment]! The wrongdoers shall have no helpers.”

37 Having witnessed the realities of Resurrection and Judgment that they had denied (see 32:12; 19:38) and been made to admit their sin (67:11; cf. 40:11), the disbelievers ask for a reprieve, claiming that they will now work righteousness, or as they say in 6:27: Would that we were sent back! Then we would not deny the signs of our Lord, but we would be among the believers! (cf. 7:53; 26:102). Yet the warners who had been sent to them and the opportunity to reflect throughout their life constitute such a reprieve; thus 4:18 says, And repentance is not accepted from those who do evil deeds till, when death confronts one of them, he says, "Truly now I repent," nor from those who die as disbelievers. For those We have prepared a painful punishment. In 23:100 it is said of their requests to be sent back and of their repentance, Nay, indeed these are words that he speaks. God thus denies all such requests, because even if they were sent back, they would return to the very thing they had been forbidden (6:28). Thus the wrongdoers shall have no helpers (cf. 2:270; 3:192; 5:72; 22:71), because they turned away from God and the help that He sent them during their life in this world. For the manner in which this and other verses can be seen as part of an extended discourse between God and the denizens of Hell, see 40:11–12c.

③8 Truly God knows the unseen of the heavens and the earth. Truly He knows what lies within breasts.

38 Elsewhere God is said to be Knower of the Unseen and the seen (6:73; 9:94, 105; 13:9; 23:92; 32:6; 39:46; 59:22; 62:8; 64:18), but this is one of only two verses to assert that God knows the unseen of the heavens and the earth (cf. 49:18). That God knows what lies within breasts is repeated in 3:119, 154; 5:7; 8:43; 11:5; 29:10; 31:23; 39:7; 42:24; 57:6; 64:4; 67:13. This warning can be understood as a reminder not to break the covenant either outwardly or intentionally or secretly, for God always knows and holds one accountable for what lies within breasts (R, in commentary on 5:7).

③9 He it is Who appointed you vicegerents upon the earth. So whosoever disbelieves, his disbelief is to his detriment. The disbelief of the disbelievers increases them with their Lord in naught but odium. And the disbelief of the disbelievers increases them in naught but loss.

39 Just as God created Adam as a vicegerent upon the earth (2:30), so too has God appointed all human beings as vicegerents upon the earth (cf. 6:165). Thus humanity is asked, Hast thou not considered that God has made whatsoever is on the earth subservient unto you (22:65; cf. 14:33; 31:20; 45:13); see 2:30c; 6:165c. That a person's disbelief is to his detriment (cf. 30:44) relates to v. 18 (None shall bear the burden of another), since no one can carry the burden of another's disbelief. It also relates to the role of human beings as vicegerents, for insofar as any disbelief is concerned, they reject their true nature and responsibility toward God. Their disbelief increases them in naught but odium means that the longer they persist in their disbelief, the more they will lose on the Day of Resurrection (IK). For other passages where the call of God's messengers increases disbelievers in opposition and other negative reactions, see, for example, 9:125; 17:41; 25:60; 35:42; 71:6.

40 Say, "Have you considered your partners upon whom you call apart from God? Show me what they have created of the earth. Do they have a share in the heavens, or did We give them a book, such that they stand upon a clear proof from it?" Nay, the wrongdoers promise one another naught but delusion.

40 This is one of several verses that challenge the idolaters to bring proof that their idols do indeed have the powers attributed to them. Elsewhere, the Prophet is told to say, Bring me your proof! (21:24). This verse and several others (46:4; 10:34; 21:24) address the inability of their "gods" to create; 25:3 denies all of the powers attributed to them: But they have taken gods apart from Him, who create naught and are themselves created, and who have no power over what harm or benefit may come to themselves, and who have no power over death, or life, or resurrection. The question Do they have a share in the heavens? (cf. 46:4) is connected to the preceding mention of your partners, meaning, "Do the idols they worship have a share in God's Powers?" Alternately, it is connected to what follows, meaning, "Do the idolaters have some access to the heavens by which they perceive these things they claim?" (R). A book means a revelation; so the question asks, "Were they given a revelation that tells them of the things they claim?" (R). This second interpretation could thus allude to their having no way to substantiate their claims through intellect (‘aql) or transmission (naql; R). Their claims are thus based upon nothing more than their promises to one another, which, having no foundation, are naught but delusion. Did We give them a book? is similar to challenges posed to the idolaters in several verses, such as 43:21: Or did We give them a book beforehand to which they hold fast? (cf. 34:44; 46:4; 68:37–38); see 46:4c.

④1 Truly God maintains the heavens and the earth, lest they fall apart. And were they to fall apart, none would maintain them after Him. Truly He is Clement, Forgiving.

41 Similar to 22:65, And He maintains the sky lest it fall upon the earth, save by His Leave, this verse confirms that none but God maintains the created order, since the sky and the earth stand fast by His Command (30:25). In this context, that God is Clement, Forgiving (cf. 17:44) alludes to God continuing to uphold the heavens even when the disbelievers declare that others uphold them, thus giving them time to repent (IK, R, T).

④2 And they swore by God their most solemn oaths that, were a warner to come unto them, they would be more rightly guided than any of the communities. Yet when a warner came unto them, it increased them in naught but aversion, 42 Whereas the previous verses (vv. 38–41) discussed the disbelievers' denial of Divine Oneness (tawḥīd), this verse addresses their denial of the Prophet. Before the Prophet had been sent to them, they denied only tawḥīd; afterwards they denied the Prophet and hence the revelation as well (R). It thus increased the idolaters in naught but aversion. Similarly, the disbelievers “increase in aversion” when the Prophet calls them to prostrate before the Compassionate (25:60), and when God expounds His signs in the Quran that they might reflect (17:41); see also 17:60, 82; 71:6, 24. According to some accounts, the Makkans had criticized the Jews, claiming that, were a messenger to be sent to them (the Makkans), they would not deny the messenger in the same way that previous communities had denied their messengers (R), as in 6:157: Or lest you should say, “If the Book had been sent down upon us, we would surely have been better guided than they.” Now there has come unto you a clear proof from your Lord, a guidance and a mercy. So who does greater wrong than one who denies the signs of God and turns away from them?

43 waxing arrogant upon the earth and plotting evil; yet evil plotting besets none but its authors. So do they await aught but the wont of those of old? Thou shalt find no alteration in the wont of God, and thou shalt find no change in the wont of God.

43 Waxing arrogant translates istikbāran, which can be also be read in relation to the previous verse to mean, “It increased them in naught but aversion and arrogance,” or “. . . aversion due to arrogance” (R, Z). The verse could also be read to mean, “It increased them in naught but delusion, waxing arrogant upon the earth, and evil plotting” (Z). According to some, waxing arrogant refers to their preventing the weaker ones among them from following the Prophet, while plotting evil refers to their polytheism (Ṭ). Their plotting evil (or evil plotting) could also mean their plotting against the Prophet (Z). That evil plotting besets none but its authors evokes the Quranic theme of moral reflexivity, as in 10:23: O mankind! Your tyranny is only against yourselves; see 35:18c.

This is one of several verses that reference the wonts or customs of previous peoples (see 3:137; 4:26; 8:38; 15:13; 17:77; 18:55). In this context, the wont of those of old is understood to mean God’s wont concerning them (Bḍ, R, Ṭ), thus the forms of punishment with which God afflicted them (Q). That there is no change in the wont of God (cf. 33:62; 48:23) can be understood as a reference to the permanence of the laws and principles God established for creation. In this context, it indicates both that God always allows the plotting of the disbelievers to close in upon them and that the outcome is something decreed, which none can avert (70:2; R). It also has a note of irony, as if to say to those who persist in disbelief, “You want to follow the wont of those of old? Then God will bring a wont in which there is no alteration or change” (R), meaning that their end will be like the end of those before them. The absence of alteration in God’s wont can be seen as a reference to the fact that God will always recompense the disbelievers with their just deserts, while the absence of change can be seen as a reference to the fact that none can avert God’s Punishment by making the recompense due for one fall upon another (Bḍ, Q, R); for the wont of God, see also 3:137c; 33:38, 62; 40:85; 48:23.

44 Have they not journeyed upon the earth and observed how those before them fared in the end, though they were greater than them in strength? Naught in the heavens or upon the earth can thwart God. Truly He is Knowing, Powerful.

44 The injunction to observe how those before them fared in the end, which is here directly connected to the mention of the wont of those of old in v. 43, is repeated several times in the Quran (12:109; 30:9, 42; 40:21, 82; 47:10). The Quran frequently mentions the fate of the guilty, the corrupt, the wrongdoers, and those who denied God's messengers as an admonition to the disbelievers (see 3:137; 6:11; 7:84, 86, 103; 10:39, 73; 16:36; 27:14, 69; 37:73; 43:25). Those before them is thus understood as a reference to previous tribes and peoples who were destroyed despite being mightier than those who opposed the Prophet (see also 40:21, 82). For more on the Quranic discussion of journeying upon the earth and the spiritual and moral edification to be derived from it, see 30:9c.

In this context, that naught in the heavens or upon the earth can thwart God (cf. 8:59; 9:2–3; 11:20; 24:57; 29:22; 42:31; 46:32; 72:12) reaffirms that those of old could not in any way escape the punishment merited by their aversion, arrogance, and plotting, despite their great material and physical strength (R); thus the disbelievers to whom these verses are addressed will also not be able to avert the punishment that is their due, as in 6:134: Indeed, that which you are promised shall come to pass, and you cannot thwart [it].

45 Were God to take mankind to task for that which they have earned, He would not leave a single creature upon the surface of the earth. But He grants them reprieve till a term appointed. And when their term comes, truly God sees His servants.

45 Were God to give human beings the recompense for their acts of disobedience immediately, rather than granting them respite (Ṭū), no creature would remain upon the face of the earth (Ṭū). The reference to a single creature can be understood to mean only human beings and jinn (Q) or only human beings (Bḍ, Q). But it most likely refers to all living creatures, who will suffer from the sins of human beings, as they did in the flood of Noah (Q), though others say the reference to a term appointed indicates that this applies only to human beings. It is proposed that one of the ways in which God would not leave a single creature upon the surface of the earth is by withholding the rain, which would destroy all living things (Q, Z). The elimination of the creatures of the earth can also be seen as part of the punishment for human beings, since creatures are a means of provision (R). Their elimination from the surface of the earth can also indicate the severity of the punishment and point to the fact that the lives of human beings are integrated with those of the creatures around them, so that the punishment they bring upon themselves cannot but affect other forms of life (R).

In this context, a term appointed (cf. 6:60; 7:34; 10:49; 14:10; 16:61; 39:5, 42; 71:4) indicates the Day of Resurrection (Q, Z). All individuals and communities (7:34; 10:49) as well as all created phenomena (see 13:2; 31:29; 35:13; 39:5; 46:3) have a term appointed, meaning a final end that has been determined or “measured out” by God. That people are granted reprieve until a term appointed points to God’s Mercy, but also warns that one has only this life to repent and perform good deeds; otherwise when the punishment comes, those who did wrong will say, “Our Lord! Grant us reprieve for a term nigh, that we might respond to Thy call and follow the messengers” (14:44). The respite granted to all in this life may give some the opportunity to repent, but 3:178 warns, Let not those who disbelieve suppose that the respite We grant them is good for them. We only grant them respite that they may increase in sin, and theirs shall be a humiliating punishment (see also 11:8; 14:42). That God sees His servants when the appointed term has come alludes to His requiting them for all that they have done (Aj, Bđ).

Yā Sīn

Yā Sīn

There is consensus among all scholars that Yā Sīn is a Makkan sūrah from the early part of the middle Makkan period. Some maintain that the whole of the sūrah is Makkan, though many commentators believe that v. 12 is from the Madinan period. The sūrah takes its name from the mention of the Arabic letters yā and sīn in the opening verse. Some also refer to it as “The Heart of the Quran,” after a well-known ḥadīth: “Everything has a heart, and the heart of the Quran is Yā Sīn. Whosoever recites Yā Sīn, God records for him the recitation of the Quran ten times for his recitation of it” (Āl, Q).

Seen as the heart of the Quran, this sūrah plays a very important role in traditional Islamic piety. Many Muslims recite Yā Sīn regularly as part of their supererogatory devotions, and it is often the only sūrah longer than a page or so that Muslims have memorized in full. A famous ḥadīth says, “Recite Yā Sīn over your dead” (Q, Sy). It is thus recited for those who are close to death, those who have just died, and at the graves of loved ones. It is also recited for those who are sick, for another ḥadīth states, “Verily in the Quran there is a sūrah that intercedes through its recitation and forgives through its being heard—indeed, that is Sūrat Yā Sīn” (Āl, Q). Yā Sīn is also recited by many Muslims after the performance of the obligatory prayers in the morning and the evening. Regarding the latter, another report, sometimes recorded as a ḥadīth, states, “Whosoever recites Sūrat Yā Sīn at night, desiring the Face of God, is forgiven during that night” (IK, Q). Although many believe that the exhortation to recite Yā Sīn in the morning is a ḥadīth, it most likely derives from a saying attributed to Ibn ʿAbbās: “Whosoever recites Yā Sīn when he awakens is given ease for his day until the evening comes. And whosoever reads it in the midst of the night is given ease for his night until he awakens” (Q).

Several scholars maintain that Yā Sīn is the heart of the Quran because it addresses its central teachings regarding God, prophethood, and the Hereafter. The sūrah begins with an address to the Prophet that clarifies both his mission and the nature of revelation (vv. 1–12) followed by a parable regarding those who reject prophets (vv. 13–30) that segues into a discussion of Resurrection and the signs of it in the natural world (vv. 31–44). Responses to various objections common to the disbelievers and the consequences of them (vv. 45–52) then lead into a discussion of the disparate ends of the disbelievers and the believers (vv. 53–68), which concludes with another reflection on the nature of Muhammad’s prophethood (vv. 69–70). The final section returns to a discussion of the signs in the created order that serve to inform one of God’s creative Power and ability to resurrect (vv. 71–81) and concludes with an affirmation of God’s Omnipotence (vv. 82–83).

① Yā. Sīn. ② By the Wise Quran, ③ truly thou art among the message bearers, ④ upon a straight path, ⑤ a revelation of the Mighty, the Merciful, ⑥ that thou mayest warn a people whose fathers were not warned; so they were heedless. ⑦ The Word has indeed come due for most of them, for they do not believe. ⑧ Truly We have put shackles upon their necks, and they are up to their chins, so that they are forced up. ⑨ And We placed a barrier before them and a barrier behind them and veiled them; so they see not. ⑩ It is the same for them whether thou warnest them or warnest them not; they do not believe. ⑪ Thou only warnest whomsoever follows the Reminder and fears the Compassionate unseen. So give such a one glad tidings of forgiveness and a generous reward. ⑫ Truly We give life to the dead and record that which they have sent forth and that which they have left behind. And We have counted all things in a clear registry. ⑬ And set forth for them as a parable the people of the town, when the message bearers came unto it. ¹⁴ When We sent two unto them, they denied them. So We strengthened them with a third, and they said, “Verily, we have been sent unto you!” ¹⁵ They said, “You are but human beings like us, and the Compassionate has not sent down anything. You are but lying.” ¹⁶ They said, “Our Lord knows. Verily we have indeed been sent unto you!” ¹⁷ And naught is incumbent upon us save the clear proclamation.” ¹⁸ They said, “Truly we augur ill of you. If you cease not, we shall certainly stone you, and a painful punishment will certainly befall you from us.” ¹⁹ They said, “Your auguring ill is upon yourselves though you have been reminded. Nay, you are a prodigal people!” ²⁰ And from the outskirts of the city, a man came running. He said, “O my people! Follow the message bearers! ²¹ Follow those who ask not of you any reward and who are guided. ²² Why should I not worship Him who originated me, and unto Whom you will be returned? ²³ Shall I take gods apart from Him? If the Compassionate desired harm for me, their intercession would avail me naught, nor would they save me. ²⁴ Truly would I then be in manifest error. ²⁵ Truly I believe in your Lord, so listen to me.” ²⁶ It was said unto him, “Enter the Garden!” He said, “Would that my people knew ²⁷ how my Lord forgave me and placed me among the honored.” ²⁸ And after him We did not send down a host from Heaven against his people; nor would We send down. ²⁹ It was but a single cry. Then, behold, they were extinguished. ³⁰ Alas for the servants! Never did a messenger come unto them, but that they mocked him. ³¹ Have they not considered how many generations before them We destroyed, such that they return not unto them? ³² Each of them shall be a group arraigned before Us. ³³ A sign unto them is the dead earth: We revive it and bring forth grain therefrom, that they may eat thereof. ³⁴ And We place gardens of date palms and grapevines therein and make springs flow forth, ³⁵ that they may eat of its fruit and of that which their hands have worked. Will they not then give thanks? ³⁶ Glory be unto Him, Who has created the pairs, all of them, from what the earth makes grow, and from themselves, and from what they know not. ³⁷ And a sign unto them is the night: We strip the day therefrom, and behold, they are in darkness. ³⁸ And the sun runs to a dwelling place of its own. That is the decree of the Mighty, the Knowing. 39 And for the moon, We have decreed mansions, till it returns like an old palm stalk. 40 It befits not the sun to overtake the moon, nor the night to outstrip the day. Each glides in an orbit. 41 And a sign unto them is that We carried their progeny in the full-laden Ark. 42 And We created for them the like thereof upon which they ride. 43 And if We will, We drown them, such that they would have none to call upon and would not be saved, 44 save as a mercy from Us and an enjoyment for a while. 45 And when it is said unto them, “Be mindful of that which is before you and of that which is behind you, that haply you may receive mercy.” 46 Never did a sign from among the signs of their Lord come unto them but that they turned away from it. 47 And when it is said unto them, “Spend of that wherewith God has provided you,” those who disbelieve say to those who believe, “Are we to feed one whom, if God willed, He would feed him? You are in naught but manifest error.” 48 And they say, “When will this promise come to pass, if you are truthful?” 49 They await naught but a single cry that will seize them while they dispute among themselves, 50 and then they can make no bequest, nor return to their people. 51 And the trumpet will be blown. Then, behold, they will rush forth from their graves unto their Lord. 52 They will say, “Oh, woe unto us! Who has raised us from our place of sleep?” “This is that which the Compassionate did promise; and the message bearers spoke true.” 53 There shall be but a single cry. Then, behold, they will all be arraigned before Us! 54 This day no soul will be wronged in any way, and you will not be recompensed, save for that which you used to do. 55 Truly the inhabitants of the Garden on that Day will be busy rejoicing, 56 they and their spouses reclining upon couches in the shade. 57 Therein they have fruit and whatsoever they call for. 58 “Peace!” a word from a Lord most Merciful. 59 Stand apart this Day, O guilty ones! 60 Did I not enjoin upon you, O Children of Adam, that you not worship Satan—truly he is a manifest enemy unto you— 61 and that you worship Me? This is a straight path. 62 For indeed he has led many among you astray. Did you not understand? 63 This is the Hell that you were promised. 64 Burn therein today for having disbelieved! 65 On that Day We shall seal their mouths. Their hands will speak to Us, and their feet will bear witness to that which they used to earn. 66 And had We willed, We would have blotted out their eyes. Then they would race to the path; yet how would they see? 67 And had We willed, We would have transformed them in their places. Then they could neither advance nor go back. 68 And whomsoever We give long life, We cause him to regress in creation. Do they not understand? 69 And We have not taught him poetry; nor would it befit him. It is but a reminder and a clear Quran, 70 to warn whomsoever is alive, and so that the Word may come due for the disbelievers. 71 Have they not considered that among that which Our Hands have wrought We created cattle for them, and that they are their masters, 72 and that We have subdued these for them, such that some are a mount for them and of some they eat? 73 And they have benefits and drinks therein. Will they not then give thanks? 74 Yet they have taken gods other than God, that perhaps they might be helped. 75 They cannot help them, though they be a host made ready for them. 76 So let not their speech grieve thee. Truly We know what they hide and what they disclose. 77 Has not man seen that We created him from a drop, and behold, he is a manifest adversary. 78 And he has set forth for Us a parable and forgotten his own creation, saying, “Who revives these bones, decayed as they are?” 79 Say, “He will revive them Who brought them forth the first time, and He knows every creation, 80 Who made for you fire from the green tree, and, behold, you kindle from it.” 81 Is not He Who created the heavens and the earth able to create the like thereof? Yea, indeed, He is the knowing Creator. 82 His Command when He desires a thing is only to say to it, “Be!” and it is. 83 So glory be to Him in Whose Hand lies the dominion of all things, and unto Whom you shall be returned.

1 The Arabic letters *yā*³ and sīn are among the separated letters (al-muqattaʿāt) that are found at the beginning of twenty-nine sūrahs and whose meaning is considered by most to be known only to God; see 2:1c. Some allow that *yā*³ sīn could be an abbreviation meaning “O human being” (Q). In this interpretation, the *yā*³ is the vocative “O,” used in many Quranic verses, and the sīn is an abbreviation for unsayn, the diminutive of insān (“human being”). In this context, the diminutive “O little human being” is a term of endearment interpreted as God’s address to the Prophet Muhammad. Others say that Yā Sīn is a name given to the Prophet by God whose exact meaning is unknown (Q). For this reason it is sometimes used in the Islamic world as the name for a male. ʿAlī ibn Abī Ṭālib is reported to have said, “I heard the Messenger of God say, ‘Verily God has named me by seven names in the Quran: Muhammad [3:144; 33:40; 47:2; 48:29], Aḥmad [61:6], Ṭā Hā [20:1], Yā Sīn [36:1], thou enwrapped [al-Muzzammil; 73:1], thou who art covered [al-Mudaththir; 74:1], and servant of God [ʿAbd Allāh; 72:19]” (IA, Q). Other commentators take Yā Sīn to be a name of the Quran itself, while al-Qushayrī identifies it with the Day of the Covenant (yawm al-mīthāq), when God made a covenant with all the children of Adam (see 7:172c).

② By the Wise Quran,

2 Ḥakīm, here translated Wise, can also mean “determined” or “made firm” (muḥkam), as in 11:1, where the Quran is described as a Book whose signs have been determined (uḥkimat; Q). According to Ibn Kathīr, its being determined (muḥkam) indicates that falsehood comes not upon it from before it or from behind it (41:42). Ḥakīm could also mean something that makes wise (muḥkim), indicating that the Quran teaches the truth. According to Ibn Kathīr, the use of ḥakīm here alludes to the Quran as a revealed book. The Quran is also described as wise in 10:1; 31:2; 43:3–4.

③ truly thou art among the message bearers,

④ upon a straight path,

3–4 These verses affirm the Prophet’s mission, thus supporting the interpretations that see Yā Sīn as a reference to the Prophet himself. For straight path, see 1:6c.

⑤ a revelation of the Mighty, the Merciful,

5 Revelation can be read as the object of an implied verb, meaning, “We revealed it as a revelation,” in which case it refers back to the Wise Quran, or it can be read in the nominative, meaning, “It is a revelation.” Most commentators say revelation in either reading refers to the Quran, although some say it refers to the Prophet (Q, R), in which case “it” in the elided phrase would be rendered “he.” Both interpretations are possible, as the Prophet is also said to be sent down, as in 65:10–11: God has certainly sent down unto you a reminder: a Messenger reciting unto you the clear signs of God. The juxtaposition of Mighty and Merciful here and in other verses (esp. throughout Sūrah 26) is seen as an allusion to God being both just and merciful, vengeful toward those who oppose Him and merciful toward those who obey Him.

6 This verse is similar to 32:3, which states that the Quran was sent so that the Prophet might warn a people to whom no warner has come before. Regarding the absence of a previous Arabic revelation, 34:44 says of the Arabs, We have not given them any books that they study; nor have We sent them a warner before. Although the Arabs had been sent messengers before in the intervening generations from the time of Ishmael, who was both a prophet and the progenitor of the Arabs (as Isaac was of the Jews), the pure monotheism of Abraham had become lost, and from the point of view of the Arabs the religion of their fathers was pagan. Read in connection to the following verse and the context of the entire Quran, there is an ominous tone to this verse, for as other verses state, Thy Lord never destroys towns until He sends a messenger to their mother city to recite unto them Our signs

(28:59), and Never did We destroy a town save that it had warners (26:208); see also 6:131; 10:13. Some propose that the verse should be read, “of that of which their fathers were warned.”

⑦ The Word has indeed come due for most of them, for they do not believe.

7 The Word has indeed come due for most of them translates ḥaqqā al-qawlu ‘alā aktharihim, which could also be translated, “the Word has indeed proved true against most of them.” The Word most likely refers to the Word of punishment (39:71; see also 22:18); it indicates that they will be in Hell, for as 40:6 states, Likewise did the Word of thy Lord come due for those who disbelieve, that they are the inhabitants of the Fire. This is because they do not believe in the warning referred to in v. 6, in the Wise Quran (v. 2), or that the Prophet Muhammad is among the message bearers (v. 3). The Word that comes due or proves true is seen by some as God’s threat in 32:13: But the Word from Me comes due: “I shall surely fill Hell with jinn and men all together!” Similar threats occur in 11:119 and 38:84–5. The Word could also be a reference to the Quran itself, for it is thought that when one turns away from revelation, it proves one’s true nature. In this regard, a famous ḥadīth states, “The Quran is a proof, either for you or against you.”

⑧ Truly We have put shackles upon their necks, and they are up to their chins, so that they are forced up.

8 The disbelievers’ hands are bound to their necks with shackles, which translates aghlāl, specifically indicating iron shackles that bind the hands in cuffs that are attached to an iron ring around the neck. They is thus taken by most to indicate the hands that are bound to their necks (Q, Ṭ’s) and is seen as related to 17:29, And let not thine hand be shackled to thy neck (IK, Q, Ṭ), which is a warning against miserliness. The binding of their hands to their necks is taken by some to indicate their state on the Day of Resurrection (Ṭ’s) or in the Hereafter, as in 40:71: They will be dragged, with shackles and chains around their necks (Q). Others say it refers to the state of the idolaters in this life, meaning that those who turn away from the Prophet’s call are like those whose hands are shackled to their necks so that they cannot extend them toward what is good (IK, Ṭ, Ṭs). In this interpretation their chins being forced up alludes to their arrogance in the face of the truth (Q).

⑨ And We placed a barrier before them and a barrier behind them and veiled them; so they see not.

9 This verse is interpreted to mean, “We have placed a barrier between them (the disbelievers) and the truth” or “We have blinded them to the truth” (IK), in light of 10:96–97: Truly those for whom the Word of thy Lord has come due will not believe, though every sign should come unto them, till they see the painful punishment. Understood in this way, it means that they cannot benefit from guidance, no matter what the Prophet does. Thus God counsels the Prophet in v. 76, Let not their speech grieve thee. Some say the barrier before them refers to their being deluded in the life of this world and the barrier behind them refers to their denying the life of the Hereafter (Q). Others maintain that vv. 8–9 refer to a specific incident in which a leader from the tribe of Quraysh saw the Prophet praying and went to smash his head with a rock; as he moved his hand forward to cast the rock, his hand returned to his neck and the rock was stuck in it (Q, Ṭs). Then another man took the rock with the same purpose, but when he did so, he could hear the Prophet but not see him. When a third man went to smash the Prophet’s head, he saw before him a tremendous camel that was about to swallow him (Q). These particular examples of the incident to which this verse may refer are not, however, taken to contravene the more general implications, but rather to be manifestations of particular forms of denial and disbelief represented by the acts described.

⑩ It is the same for them whether thou warnest them or warnest them not; they do not believe.

⑪ Thou only warnest whomsoever follows the Reminder and fears the Compassionate unseen. So give such a one glad tidings of forgiveness and a generous reward.

10–11 Cf. 2:6. The last phrase of v. 10 could also be read, “they will not believe.” For similar verses where warnings and guidance are of no avail to disbelievers, see 7:193; 26:136; 63:6. These verses remind the Prophet that he cannot guide those whom God has not guided and should simply leave them to God: Truly God leads astray whomsoever He will and guides whomsoever He will; so let not thy soul be expended in regrets over them. Truly God knows that which they do (35:8). The Reminder is a reference to the Quran itself (IK, Q, R, Ṭ); for the Quran as Reminder, see 36:69c. Fears the Compassionate unseen (cf. 50:33) can be interpreted as a reference to worshipping God while God remains unseen or to worshipping God in seclusion (Q, Ṭs). A generous reward here means Paradise or the Garden. See also 67:12c.

⑫ Truly We give life to the dead and record that which they have sent forth and that which they have left behind. And We have counted all things in a clear registry.

12 This verse follows upon the counsel to the Prophet to deliver the warning and leave the disbelievers to their own devices, since the price of their wrongdoing will come due upon the Resurrection. We give life to the dead can be seen as a reference to the Resurrection; to God's bringing the earth back to life, as in 57:17: Know that God revives the earth after its death (IK); to bringing people from idolatry to faith (Z); or to the revivification, through knowledge and truth, of hearts made dead through heedlessness and ignorance (Aj, IK). That which they have sent forth refers to the deeds that will testify for or against them in the Hereafter; see 5:80; 75:13c; 82:5c. Here, that which they have left behind literally means "their footsteps" or "their traces." It is said to refer to one of the tribes of Madinah, the Banū Salimah, who were settled far from the Prophet's mosque and desired to relocate closer to it. This verse was then revealed. So the Prophet said to them, "Your footprints are recorded [i.e., you receive reward for walking to the mosque]. Why then do you want to move?" (IK, Q, Ṭ, W). More broadly, it is understood as a reference to the traces of good deeds that one leaves behind (Aj, Ṭ). As a well-known ḥadīth states, "When the son of Adam dies, all his deeds come to an end except three: knowledge that is beneficial, a righteous child who prays for him, or ongoing charity that he leaves behind" (IK); see 75:13c. And We have counted all things in a clear registry (imām) is taken by some to allude to the inscription of all things from the beginning of time to its end on the Preserved Tablet (85:22; Aj, Ṭb, Ṭs), which is the imām ("leader") of all other books (Aj) and which is said to comprise all of God's Decrees (Ṭb, Ṭs); for the inscription of God's Decrees, see 68:1c. Others say imām refers to the book or “registry” in which all human actions are recorded (Aj, IK, Q, Ṭs); see 17:71c; 18:49c. This is also one of the central verses cited by Shiite theologians as Quranic support for the Shiite understanding of Divinely ordained leadership in the form of the imamate after the death of the Prophet. In this vein al-Qummī relates a saying from °Alī ibn Abī Ṭālib: “I, by God, am the clear imām; I clarify truth from falsehood. I inherited it from the Messenger of God” (Qm, Ṭb). Shiite sources also relate that the Prophet said regarding °Alī, “He is the Imam in whom God records the knowledge of all things” (Qm, Ṭb).

13 And set forth for them as a parable the people of the town, when the message bearers came unto it.

14 When We sent two unto them, they denied them. So We strengthened them with a third, and they said, “Verily, we have been sent unto you!”

13–14 The Prophet is here commanded to provide the Quraysh with an example of the fate that befell those who treated previous message bearers as they were treating him. The first phrase of v. 13 could also be rendered, “Set forth for them a parable, the people of the town.” Most identify the town as Antioch (IK, Q, Ṭ, Ṭs), though this identification cannot be verified (IK). Most commentators view the message bearers (mursalīn, rather than rusul, “messengers”) as apostles sent to the town by Jesus. In this interpretation, that God is said to have sent them indicates that Jesus was commanded by God to send them (Q, Ṭs). After the first two were sent, the people of the town beat and imprisoned them (Q, Ṭ, Ṭs). Some say this punishment was ordered by the king (Aj), after which a third message bearer, whom some identify as Jonas, was sent.

According to another opinion, the message bearers are prophets (Aj, Ṭs) rather than apostles sent by a prophet. This interpretation seems more likely, as the Prophet Muhammad is referred to as a mursal (message bearer) in v. 3 and in 2:252, and other prophets are referred to as mursalūn (message bearers) in over a dozen verses. We have been sent unto you here and in v. 16 could also be rendered, “we are message bearers unto you.”

⑮ They said, “You are but human beings like us, and the Compassionate has not sent down anything. You are but lying.”

15 In other passages, many communities reject prophets because they are human, claiming that if God had wanted to send a message, He would have chosen an angel as His message bearer or messenger. As 17:94 states, And naught hindered men from believing when guidance came unto them, save that they said, “Has God sent a human being as a messenger?” (see also 6:8–9, 50; 11:12; 14:10; 23:33; 41:14; 64:6). In other verses, this same objection is attributed to those who opposed the Prophet Muhammad: And they say, “What ails this Messenger, who eats food and walks in the markets? Why is there not an angel sent down unto him to be a warner with him?” (25:7).

⑯ They said, “Our Lord knows. Verily we have indeed been sent unto you!

16 The message bearers’ second statement of their mission is more emphatic than the first (v. 14), because it is a reaffirmation in the face of denial and rejection.

⑰ And naught is incumbent upon us save the clear proclamation.”

17 Like the Prophet Muhammad, the message bearers are only instructed to deliver the message and to guide those who heed it; they are not responsible for those who deny it; see 36:10–11c. That the prophets are only responsible for delivering the message is emphasized in many passages; see, e.g., 3:20; 5:92, 99; 13:40; 16:35, 82; 24:54; 29:18; 42:48; 64:12.

⑱ They said, “Truly we augur ill of you. If you cease not, we shall certainly stone you, and a painful punishment will certainly befall you from us.”

18 This is the response of the disbelievers to the message bearers, meaning,

“We see an ill omen or foretell a punishment that will befall you.”

19 They said, “Your auguring ill is upon yourselves though you have been reminded? Nay, you are a prodigal people!”

19 The response from the message bearers to the disbelievers is that the punishment the disbelievers foretell will befall them because of their disbelief. In the most widespread reading of this verse, though you are reminded (in dhukkirtum) is read a in dukkirtum, meaning, “Even if you are reminded . . .” In this reading, the ellipsis indicates a rhetorical elision that constitutes the object of the interrogative and serves as a rebuke, as if to say, “Do you augur ill and disbelieve, even when you have been reminded?” In another canonical reading, a in dhukkirtum is read ayna dhukkirtum, meaning, “now that you have been reminded” (al-an dhukkirtum; Q, Ṭ). Another reading is an dhukkirtum, meaning, “because you have been reminded” (Z). Cf. 17:13: And [for] every man We have fastened his omen upon his neck, and We shall bring it forth for him on the Day of Resurrection; see also 7:131; 27:47. That the disbelievers’ auguring ill rebounds upon them indicates the “reflexive” nature of good and evil deeds, which is emphasized throughout the Quran. For example, if one spends in charity, one spends it for oneself, as in 2:272: Whatever good you spend, it is for yourselves, when you spend only seeking the Face of God. Conversely, whosoever is miserly is only miserly unto himself (47:38); if one tries to deceive, one only deceives oneself (2:9); if one tries to lead astray, one only goes astray (3:69; 4:113); and if some devise a plot against God and His Messenger, God will devise a plot against them (52:42); see 4:111c. For the meaning of prodigal people, see 10:12c.

20 And from the outskirts of the city, a man came running. He said, “O my people! Follow the message bearers!”

20 The man in this verse is usually identified by the name Ḥabīb al-Najjār. Some claim that he worshipped God in seclusion, and when the news of the message bearers came, he proclaimed his faith (Aj). Others attribute a saying to the Prophet: “The foremost among the people are three who did not disbelieve in God for the blinking of an eye: ‘Alī ibn Abī Ṭālib, the companion of Yā Sīn, and the believer among the people of Pharaoh [see 40:28–29]. They are the truthful (ṣiddīq)” (Sy, Th, Ṭs). Another interpretation says that Ḥabīb al-Najjār followed the first two message bearers after they healed his son (Aj, Q).

21 Follow those who ask not of you any reward and who are guided.

21 A mark of prophethood is to ask for nothing from the people, except that they follow the message the prophets are sent to deliver. As Noah says, And if you turn your backs, I have not asked of you any reward. My reward lies only with God, and I am commanded to be among those who submit (10:72). Thus the Prophet Muhammad is commanded in 6:90; 38:86; and 42:23, Say, “I ask not of you any reward for it” (see also 26:109, 127, 145, 164, 180).

22 Why should I not worship Him who originated me, and unto Whom you will be returned?

22 Originated me translates faṭaranī, which derives from the same root as fiṭrah, or primordial nature, alluded to in 30:30: Set thy face to religion as a ḥanīf, in the primordial nature from God upon which He originated mankind—there is no altering the creation of God; that is the upright religion, but most of mankind know not. Read in light of 30:30 and 51:56, And I did not create jinn and mankind, save to worship Me, this verse implies that the worship of God is central to the primordial nature with which human beings were created.

23 Shall I take gods apart from Him? If the Compassionate desired harm for me, their intercession would avail me naught, nor would they save me.

23 The question means, “Shall I take gods other than God, worship them, and leave the worship of the One Who is worthy of worship?” (Sh). The Quran indicates that angels and prophets will be able to intercede on the Day of Judgment, but that intercession is entirely by the Will of God. As 20:109 states, On that Day intercession will be of no benefit, save [that of] those whom the Compassionate has granted leave and with whose word He is content. Thus 2: 255 asks rhetorically, Who is there who may intercede with Him save by His Leave? For intercession, see 2:48c; 2:255c.

②④ Truly would I then be in manifest error.

24 Manifest error (ḍalāl mubīn) is employed throughout the Quran to indicate one whose wrongdoing makes him stray from the path of truth (Ṭ). It can also be understood to mean “error that makes manifest” or “makes clear.” It is also read by some as ḍalāl mubayyan (Bḍ), which would then indicate “error that has been made manifest” or “made clear.”

②⑤ Truly I believe in your Lord, so listen to me.”

25 According to some, so listen to me is a call to the people to follow God and His message bearers; others say it is a call to the message bearers, asking them to bear witness for the man before God (IK).

②⑥ It was said unto him, “Enter the Garden!” He said, “Would that my people knew 26 Some say that after his declaration to the people (v. 25), the man was stoned and killed (Aj, IK, Ṭs). Then he was told by God, or by the angels and the righteous, Enter the Garden! (Aj, R). Others maintain that God took him alive to heaven.

②⑦ how my Lord forgave me and placed me among the honored.”

27 This verse could also mean “for what my Lord forgave me and that He placed me among the honored” (Ṭs), which may imply the bad deeds that were forgiven or the good deed(s) for which God forgave him his sins. According to Qatādah (d. 117/726), one of the foremost commentators from the third generation of Muslim scholars, the people began to stone him while he was praying for God to guide them, and as they continued to stone him, he continued to pray for them, even while suffering a gruesome death at their hands (IK).

28 And after him We did not send down a host from Heaven against his people; nor would We send down.

28 This verse is taken by many as a reference to the punishment that God inflicted upon his people for rejecting the message bearers and for killing (or seeking to kill) Ḥabīb al-Najjār, in which case it indicates that God wiped them out with a single cry (v. 29) rather than sending angels against them (IK, Q). Others say that a host from Heaven refers to the angels of revelation (Ṭs), meaning that God did not send another revelation after having sent the message bearers (Ṭ). The second interpretation is more consistent with this story in its function as a warning to the Quraysh, for it implies that accepting the revelation sent to the Prophet Muhammad is their only opportunity and they will not receive another. The last phrase could also be rendered “nor what We used to send down” (Ka, Ṭs).

29 It was but a single cry. Then, behold, they were extinguished.

29 This verse indicates that the destruction for having disbelieved was instant.

30 Alas for the servants! Never did a messenger come unto them, but that they mocked him.

30 Cf. 15:11. Alas for the servants! is interpreted by most to indicate amazement at the extreme injustice disbelievers do to themselves and the punishment they will suffer (IK, Q). Others take servants as a reference to the prophets, in which case the verse expresses God’s lament for the hardships they endure when mocked by disbelievers (Q, Ṭs).

31 Have they not considered how many generations before them We destroyed, such that they return not unto them?

31 They and them can be read as a reference to the former peoples who were destroyed, to the inhabitants of Makkah who deny the prophethood of the Prophet Muhammad, or to both.

32 Each of them shall be a group arraigned before Us.

32 This verse and v. 53 indicate that all human beings, believers and disbelievers alike, will be arraigned on the Day of Judgment. But other verses indicate that only the disbelievers will be arraigned unto the punishment (30:16; 34:38). It appears that these verses indicate two arraignments: the first is the gathering of all human beings referred to here and in v. 53; the second, which comes after the gathering of all human beings, is the Reckoning the disbelievers will endure before they are cast into Hell.

33 A sign unto them is the dead earth: We revive it and bring forth grain therefrom, that they may eat thereof.

34 And We place gardens of date palms and grapevines therein and make springs flow forth,

33–34 These verses mark the beginning of what can be seen as the second section of the sūrah. They employ a common Quranic rhetorical device by which the wonders of creation are cited as signs of God's Oneness, Perfection, Wisdom, and Omnipotence; see 3:190–91c; 41:53c. The phrase a sign unto them can have three meanings: it is something to be contemplated; it is a blessing upon human beings; or it is a warning to human beings (Q). Here God's ability to revive the earth is cited as evidence of His ability to resurrect (cf. 7:57; 16:65; 22:5; 29:63; 30:19, 24, 50; 35:9; 41:31, 39; 43:11; 45:5; 50:9–11). As in v. 12, it can also be seen as an allusion to the revivification, through faith and knowledge, of a heart that has been hardened. Gardens of date palms and grapevines (cf. 2:266; 23:19) are specified because they were thought by Arabs to be the best of fruits; they can thus be seen as an allusion to all forms of plant life by which people are nourished (Q).

35 that they may eat of its fruit and of that which their hands have worked. Will they not then give thanks?

35 Its fruit refers to the fruit produced by plants through the water from the springs (Q). Or it could be rendered “His fruit,” meaning the fruit that God has produced (Aj, IK). As translated, the verse can be read as a positive affirmation of eating the fruits of one’s own labor, for as a ḥadīth says, “No one eats any food that is better than that from the work of his own hand.” That which their hands have worked could also be rendered “though their hands did not make it” (IK, Q, R, Ṭ), a reference to the fact that all fruits are ultimately produced by God (cf. 27:60; 56:64). People’s lack of gratitude is a common Quranic theme, as in 2:243: Truly God is Possessed of Bounty for mankind, but most of mankind do not give thanks (cf. 10:60; 12:38; 22:66; 25:50; 40:61).

36 Glory be unto Him, Who has created the pairs, all of them, from what the earth makes grow, and from themselves, and from what they know not.

36 Glory be indicates both God’s being beyond all that the idolaters associate with Him and amazement at what they say. Pairs translates azwāj, which can also mean “kinds” in the sense of species, thus indicating the many different kinds of things that God has created (Q). It can also be seen as a reference to the creation of all things in pairs, as in 51:49: And of all things We created pairs, that haply you may remember (IK). From themselves could also mean “from their souls,” in which case it can be seen as a reference to the male and female, as in 53:45, And that He creates the two (zawjayn)—male and female, which are said to be mates (azwāj) created from a single soul (4:1; 6:98; 7:189; 39:6). From what they know not can be seen as an allusion to the unseen realm or to the many things in the created world that humans have not experienced, as in 16:8: And He creates that which you know not.

37 And a sign unto them is the night: We strip the day therefrom, and behold, they are in darkness.

37 The alternation of night and day are cited throughout the Quran as a sign of God's Power and Perfection, as are the sun and the moon. As 39:5 says, He rolls the night up into the day and rolls the day up into the night, and He made the sun and the moon subservient, each running for a term appointed. For the relationship between night and day, see 10:6c; 17:12c. Strip translates naslakha, which originally means to remove the skin from an animal.

38 And the sun runs to a dwelling place of its own. That is the decree of the Mighty, the Knowing.

38 It is reported that a Companion of the Prophet, Abū Dharr, said, "The Prophet asked me at sunset, 'Do you know where the sun goes [when it sets]?' I replied, 'God and His Messenger know best.' He said, 'It travels till it prostrates itself underneath the Throne and asks permission to rise again, and it is permitted. Then it is about to prostrate itself, but its prostration will not be accepted, and it will ask permission to go on its course, but it will not be permitted and will instead be ordered to return whence it has come, and so it will rise in the west'" (IK). In light of this account, the verse alludes to the sun's final dwelling place on the Day of Judgment. Others see the verse as a reference to the sun following its winter and summer orbits until each solstice, when it reaches its northernmost or southernmost extreme before reversing direction (IK). Dwelling place then indicates the solstice. In this interpretation it bears a close resemblance to the word "solstice," which derives from the Latin solstitium, meaning "sun-stopping." Another reading, "And the sun runs; it has no dwelling place (lā mustaqarra lahā)," was reportedly preferred by some of the Prophet's Companions, such as the famous Quran scholars Ibn Mas'ūd and Ibn 'Abbās (IK, Ṭ, Ṭs).

39 And for the moon, We have decreed mansions, till it returns like an old palm stalk.

39 This verse is a reference to the waxing and waning of the moon through the twenty-eight stations (manāzil) of a single lunar month (Q). Like an old palm stalk is a reference to the appearance of what remains from a date cluster after its fruit has been removed and it has withered, when it resembles the thin crescent moon in shape, width, and color (Q, Z).

40 It befits not the sun to overtake the moon, nor the night to outstrip the day. Each glides in an orbit.

40 Cf. 21:33. The sun, moon, and other celestial bodies move in separate measurable orbits that are essential for navigating space and calculating time; without them human beings would lose their bearings and not be able to continue their lives on earth; more specifically, they would not be able to perform the religious rites required of them. In this way they can be seen as manifestations of God's Guidance and Mercy. As 10:5 states, He it is Who made the sun a radiance, and the moon a light, and determined for it stations, that you might know the number of years and the reckoning [of time] (see also 17:12). In 2:189 the stations of the moon are specifically linked to performing the pilgrimage: They ask thee about the new moons. Say, "They are markers of time for mankind and for the ḥajj." In this way, the sun and the moon serve humanity in this life, though on the Day of Judgment the sun and the moon are brought together (75:9).

41 And a sign unto them is that We carried their progeny in the full-laden Ark.

41 According to most commentators, this verse refers to Noah's Ark, by which God preserved one generation of humanity and thereby all of humanity (IK, Q, Ṭ, Ṭs, Z). Others interpret it as a reference to past generations being carried in the wombs of women, which are here likened to the full-laden Ark (Q, Z).

42 And We created for them the like thereof upon which they ride.

42 This verse is taken by many as a reference to other ships that are similar to Noah's Ark (IK, Q, T, Ts), though many understand it as a reference to camels, which were known as "the ships of the desert" (IK, Q, T, Ts, Z). Others say that it is a reference to all beasts of burden (Q, T, Ts).

43 And if We will, We drown them, such that they would have none to call upon and would not be saved, 43 This verse indicates that God could drown people at any moment (IK). In this sense it is a reminder that one's life is always in God's Hands, as in other passages that speak of those who remember God when they are on the verge of drowning, yet forget Him when danger is no longer imminent; see 10:22–23; 17:66–67. They would have none to call upon for help or protection. This phrase could also be rendered, "None would call upon them," indicating that they are completely forgotten. This latter interpretation is supported by several verses that speak of the disbelievers being forgotten (e.g., 7:51; 9:67; 20:126; 32:14; 45:34; 59:19).

44 save as a mercy from Us and an enjoyment for a while.

44 For a while indicates that God will postpone the disbelievers' punishment, thus giving them time until the moment of their death to repent or to prove their true nature, as in 3:178: And let not those who disbelieve suppose that the respite We grant them is good for them. We only grant them respite that they may increase in sin, and theirs shall be a humiliating punishment. In this context, enjoyment for a while indicates the ephemeral delights of this world, which are naught but the enjoyment of delusion (3:185; 57:20) and stand in stark contrast to the rewards of the next life (see 3:14; 4:77; 9:38; 13:26; 20:131; 28:60; 40:39; 42:36).

45 And when it is said unto them, "Be mindful of that which is before you and of that which is behind you, that haply you may receive mercy."

45 That which is before you can be taken as a reference to the Hereafter, which is to come and for which one must work, and that which is behind you as a reference to this world, by which one should not be deluded (Q, Ṭs). According to others, the first phrase refers to what is apparent, and the second to what is hidden (Q), as in 34:9: Have they not considered that which is before them and that which is behind them of the sky and the earth? If We will, We cause the earth to engulf them or fragments from the sky to fall upon them. Truly in that is a sign for every penitent servant. According to Mujāhid and Ibn °Abbās, the former refers to the sins one has committed (IK, Q), and the latter to the sins one will commit (Q), meaning that one should be mindful of God so as to avoid sin in the future and repent for the sins of the past (Ṭs). “They turn away from it” could be placed at the end of the verse as an implied response to the conditional phrase when is it said unto them (Q, Ṭs).

46 Never did a sign from among the signs of their Lord come unto them but that they turned away from it.

46 Cf. 6:4. This verse can be understood as a reference to the signs mentioned in the preceding verses, to the whole of the created order, to the whole of revelation, or to all three, as all are said to be signs for those who possess intellect (3:190). Thus 18:57 says, And who does greater wrong than one who has been reminded of the signs of his Lord, then turns away from them and forgets that which his hands have sent forth? Surely We have placed coverings over their hearts, such that they understand not, and in their ears a deafness. Even if thou callest them to guidance, they will never be rightly guided (see also 32:22). It is not that these people cannot see the signs, but that God veils them due to their arrogance and disbelief, as in 7:146: I shall turn away from My signs those who wax arrogant upon the earth without right. Even if they were to see every sign, they would not believe in them.

47 And when it is said unto them, “Spend of that wherewith God has provided you,” those who disbelieve say to those who believe, “Are we to feed one whom, if God willed, He would feed him? You are in naught but manifest error.”

47 Although there are several different accounts identifying the subject of this verse, they all agree that it responds to those who scoffed at the injunction to spend in the way of God—to feed the poor—found throughout the Quran. It is said that some disbelievers among the Quraysh said to Abū Bakr, who used to feed the destitute among the Muslims from his own wealth, “O Abū Bakr, do you claim that God is able to feed these people?” He replied, “Yes.” To which they replied, “So why is it that he does not feed them?” He said, “Some people are tried with poverty, others with wealth. The poor are commanded to be patient, and the wealthy are commanded to give.” So they replied, “O Abū Bakr, surely you are in error. Do you claim that God is able to feed these people, yet He does not feed them, then you feed them?” Then this verse was revealed, as were 92:5–6 (Q).

④⁴⁸ And they say, “When will this promise come to pass, if you are truthful?”

48 Cf. 10:48; 21:38; 27:71; 34:29; 67:25. The disbelievers are said to have mocked the Prophet for not knowing exactly when the Hour and the Day of Resurrection, about which he warned them, would come to pass, for they expected a prophet to be able to see the future. In response to this expectation, 7:187 states: They question thee about the Hour, when it will set in. Say, “Knowledge thereof lies only with my Lord. None save He shall manifest it at its proper time. Heavy shall it weigh upon the heavens and the earth. It shall not come upon you but suddenly.” They question thee as if thou knew it well. Say, “Knowledge thereof lies only with God, but most of mankind know not.” According to some, the disbelievers referred to the Resurrection as this promise, because they thought they would be the ones to be rewarded with good. Thus Ibn Kathīr glosses this verse with 42:18: Those who believe not in it seek to hasten it.

④⁴⁹ They await naught but a single cry that will seize them while they dispute among themselves, 49 A single cry refers to the first blast of Seraphiel’s trumpet (see 39:68c), which will level all that is on the earth. It will come while they are oblivious to it, disputing, bargaining, eating and drinking, and engaging in other affairs of the world.

50 and then they can make no bequest, nor return to their people.

50 The Hour will come upon people in an instant, so that they cannot attend to any affairs of this world, thus indicating that one should be ready for death at every moment. Make no bequest could also mean, “Do not exhort or enjoin” or “Give no advice,” which would then imply that there must be no delay in following the command to exhort one another to truth, and exhort one another to patience (103:3).

51 And the trumpet will be blown. Then, behold, they will rush forth from their graves unto their Lord.

51 The second blast from Seraphiel’s trumpet will herald the Resurrection. Between the two blasts there is said to be an interval of forty years (Āl, IK, Q, Ṭ); see also 70:43. For the relation between the two cries or blasts, see 39:68–70.

52 They will say, “Oh, woe unto us! Who has raised us from our place of sleep?” “This is that which the Compassionate did promise; and the message bearers spoke true.”

52 In an alternate reading, Oh, woe unto us! Who has raised us (waylanā man ba^cathanā) is understood to mean, “Oh, woe unto us for our having been raised” (waylanā min ba^cthinā; Āl, Q). From our place of sleep could also be read “from our sleep” (Āl). The last sentence of the verse is an answer to the question posed by the disbelievers in v. 48, as if to say that it does not matter when the promise will come to pass, only that people must be prepared for it. It can be seen as a continuation of what the disbelievers say to themselves, or as words of the angels addressed to them (IK).

53 There shall be but a single cry. Then, behold, they will all be arraigned before Us!

53 Cf. 79:13–14; that it is but a single cry is said to imply that the matter of the Hour is as the blinking of an eye, or nearer still (16:77). For arraigned, see 36:32c.

54 This day no soul will be wronged in any way, and you will not be recompensed, save for that which you used to do.

54 This verse does not mean that none shall be punished; rather, it indicates that the punishment the disbelievers receive is because they have wronged themselves by having disbelieved and turned away from God's signs. This idea is mentioned throughout the Quran, as in 3:117: God wrongs them not, but themselves do they wrong; and 10:44: Truly God does not wrong human beings in the least, but rather human beings wrong themselves. In this respect, even those who receive the worst of punishments are not wronged in the sense of having been treated unjustly; rather, Judgment will be made between them in truth, and they shall not be wronged (39:69); see also 45:22; 46:19.

55 Truly the inhabitants of the Garden on that Day will be busy rejoicing, 55 This verse implies that the inhabitants of the Garden are busy with the delights of Paradise and spiritual realities (IK, Q) rather than preoccupied by the concerns of this world. According to some, those in different levels of Paradise are occupied with different delights (Q), the highest of which involves being absorbed in the vision of God (R).

56 they and their spouses reclining upon couches in the shade.

56 Cf. 43:70. Those in Paradise are reclining upon couches, indicating that they are content and at peace (R on 18:31; 55:54). Some also view the couches as thrones, indicating that they have attained a high rank. Believers are to be rewarded with spouses made pure (2:25; 3:15; 4:57), which can be understood as an allusion to spiritual beings particular to Paradise, spouses of this world who have also attained to Paradise, or both. For the connotations of the Quranic use of shade, see 56:30c.

57 Therein they have fruit and whatsoever they call for.

57 According to several aḥādīth, the fruits of Paradise are far superior to those of this world. There are several accounts in which the Prophet is said to have stretched forth his hand as if reaching for something and, when asked about it, responded, “I was shown the Garden and wanted to have a bunch of fruit from it. Had I taken it, you would have eaten from it as long as the world remains.” The inhabitants of Paradise will receive whatsoever they call for (cf. 41:31; 44:55), will, or desire (see 16:31; 25:16; 39:34; 41:31; 42:22; 43:71; 50:35; 52:22; 56:20–24; 77:41–44), whereas for the disbelievers a barrier is set between them and that which they desire (34:54).

58 “Peace!” a word from a Lord most Merciful.

58 According to a saying attributed to Ibn ʿAbbās, “God Himself is peace upon the people of the Garden” (IK), perhaps referring to Peace (al-Salām) as one of the Names of God. This is similar to 33:44: Their greeting on the day they meet Him will be “Peace” (IK). According to a ḥadīth, “While the people of the Garden are in their bliss, a light shines upon them. Then they lift their heads, and it is God beholding them from above. Then He says, ‘Peace be upon you, O people of the Garden.’ And that is [the meaning of] His saying, ‘Peace!’ a word from a Lord most Merciful. So He looks at them and they look at Him, and they are not distracted by anything from that bliss so long as they are looking upon Him, until He is unveiled to them and His Light and His Blessing remain upon them in their abodes” (IK, Q).

59 Stand apart this Day, O guilty ones!

59 This verse is an allusion to the separation of believers and disbelievers on the Day of Judgment, which because of this separation is also referred to as the Day of Division (37:21; 44:40; 77:13–14, 38; 78:17; see also 10:28; 30:14).

60 Did I not enjoin upon you, O Children of Adam, that you not worship Satan—truly he is a manifest enemy unto you—

61 and that you worship Me? This is a straight path.

60–61 Enjoin translates a‘had, which is from the same root as ‘ahd, meaning “vow,” “pact,” or “covenant.” In this sense it relates to the covenant that all human beings made with God before coming into this world, for in acknowledging that God is their Lord, they acknowledge that only He is worthy of worship; see 7:172c and the essay “The Quranic View of Sacred History and Other Religions.” For references to Satan as a manifest enemy, also see 2:168; 2:208; 6:142; 7:22; 12:5; 17:53; 28:15; 43:62. For straight path, see 1:6c.

62 For indeed he has led many among you astray. Did you not understand?

62 This verse asks, “Did you not understand the fundamental difference between worshipping God and worshipping Satan?” (IK).

63 This is the Hell that you were promised.

64 Burn therein today for having disbelieved!

63–64 These verses say essentially, “This is the Fire the prophets warned you about, but you denied, so taste the punishment of the Fire that you used to deny!” (32:20; 34:42).

65 On that Day We shall seal their mouths. Their hands will speak to Us, and their feet will bear witness to that which they used to earn.

65 On the Day of Judgment people will no longer be able to make excuses and hide their sins with lies and duplicity. Hands and feet are also spoken of in 24:24 as testifying on the Day of Judgment, but there tongues are mentioned as well. According to 41:20, their ears, their eyes, and their skins will bear witness against them for that which they used to do. For a more extensive account of the manner in which one's members and faculties bear witness against one's soul, see 41:20–23. A famous ḥadīth reported by Anas ibn Mālik (d. ca. 91/709), who served the Prophet for many years, says, “We were with the Messenger of God when he laughed and said, ‘Do you know at what I am laughing?’ We replied, ‘God and His Messenger know best.’ He said, ‘At what a servant says to his Lord. He says, “O Lord will you not protect me from injustice (ẓulm)?” He replies, “But of course.” He says, “I will not accept any witness against myself but myself.” God replies, “Today your soul suffices as a witness against you, as do the noble scribes [i.e., the angels who have recorded your deeds; see 80:15–16c].” Then his mouth will be sealed and it will be said unto his limbs, “Speak!” So they will speak of his deeds. Then he will be permitted to speak and will say [to his limbs], “Away with you! Be doomed! It was on your behalf that I contended””” (IK, Q).

66 And had We willed, We would have blotted out their eyes. Then they would race to the path; yet how would they see?

66 Blotted out their eyes indicates that God will make them blind to guidance and the straight path (Q, Ṭ); cf. 4:47.

67 And had We willed, We would have transformed them in their places. Then they could neither advance nor go back.

67 In their places could also mean “in their dwellings.” In either reading it indicates that no matter where they may be, God can alter people's state instantly or destroy them if He wills. This is seen by some as an allusion to God punishing disbelievers by transforming them into animals such as monkeys and pigs (Ṭ's). See also 4:47c.

68 And whomsoever We give long life, We cause him to regress in creation. Do they not understand?

68 We cause him to regress in creation refers to physical and mental decline in old age. Here it is meant as an argument, as if to say, “Does not the One who has power to do this have the power to resurrect you?” This is similar to 30:54: God is He Who created you from weakness, then ordained strength after weakness, then ordained weakness and old age after strength. See also 22:5, in which all of the stages of earthly life from conception to old age are cited as signs of God’s Power.

69 And We have not taught him poetry; nor would it befit him. It is but a reminder and a clear Quran, 69 This verse returns to the discussion of the nature of revelation from the beginning of the sūrah. As in 26:224–27, it alludes to those who accused the Prophet of being merely a poet. According to several accounts, the Prophet did not have any facility with poetry, either its rhyme or meter (IK, Q). Regarding the accusations that the Prophet had himself authored the Quran, 29:48 replies, And thou didst not recite before this any Book; nor didst thou write it with thy right hand, for then those who make false claims would have doubted. That the Quran is but a reminder is repeated in several verses (6:69, 90; 12:104; 38:87; 68:52; 74:31; 81:27). To remind is the function of all revelation; hence the Torah is called a Reminder (40:54) and the People of the Book (Jews and Christians) are referred to as the people of the Reminder (16:43; 21:7). In this vein, the Quran is presented as a continuation of the previous Reminders that clarifies what humans may have forgotten from them. Thus 16:44 addresses the Prophet Muhammad: And We have sent down the Reminder unto thee that thou mightest clarify for mankind that which has been sent down unto them, that haply they may reflect.

70 to warn whomsoever is alive, and so that the Word may come due for the disbelievers.

70 From one perspective, to warn whomsoever is alive indicates all of humanity, as in 6:19: And this Quran has been revealed unto me, that thereby I may warn you and whomsoever it may reach (IK). From another perspective, it refers to those whose hearts are alive (Q) and thus able to hear the warning and soften unto the remembrance of God (39:23). For the meaning of the Word coming due, see 36:7c.

71 Have they not considered that among that which Our Hands have wrought We created cattle for them, and that they are their masters, 72 and that We have subdued these for them, such that some are a mount for them and of some they eat?

73 And they have benefits and drinks therein. Will they not then give thanks?

71–73 God created Adam as a vicegerent upon the earth (2:30) and has also appointed human beings as vicegerents upon the earth (6:165; 35:39); humanity is thus told, Hast thou not considered that God has made whatsoever is on the earth subservient unto you? (22:65). But this vicegerency requires that a human being remain a servant of God (‘abd Allāh), recognizing that all these benefits are from that which God’s Hands have wrought, and thus be thankful. For vicegerent, see 2:30c; 6:165c.

This passage is one of several to invoke the benefits of cattle—their usefulness for riding and transporting goods, for providing clothing and furnishings, food and drink, and even their beauty—as signs of God’s beneficence toward human beings; see 6:142; 16:5, 66, 79; 23:21–22; 40:79; 43:12–13. For v. 73, cf. 16:66; 23:21. Drinks could also mean “drinking places.”

74 Yet they have taken gods other than God, that perhaps they might be helped.

74 This verse refers not only to polytheism and idolatry, but also to the fact that in not giving thanks to God and failing to acknowledge that He is the Creator and Sustainer of all things, human beings arrogate powers to themselves and others that have in fact only been lent to them by God. In a ḥadīth the Prophet warns against the subtler forms of idolatry: “The most frightening thing that I fear for my community is associating others with God. I do not mean that they will worship the sun, the moon, or idols. I mean that they will perform works for other than God with a hidden desire.”

75 They cannot help them, though they be a host made ready for them.

75 Though they be a host made ready for them may be seen as a reference to the idolaters who are ready to fight on behalf of their gods, though their gods will not be able to fight for them (Ṭ). Some take it as a reference to the gods they worship becoming a host who will testify against them at the Reckoning (IK, Q, Ṭ), but this interpretation is problematic, because it implies that such gods are real beings. The verse also implies that the hidden desires for which deeds are performed are a host of difficulties that continue to create obstacles in this life until one achieves full sincerity and strives only for God.

76 So let not their speech grieve thee. Truly We know what they hide and what they disclose.

76 On the one hand, this verse counsels the Prophet that he should not be grieved by the disbelievers’ accusations or their plotting against him in secret, since God will protect him in this world and they will receive the proper punishment for their deeds, either in this life or the next. On the other hand, it indicates that the Prophet must not be concerned with their continuing disbelief, for once he has warned them, he has fulfilled his responsibilities (see 3:176; 5:41, 68; 6:33; 10:65; 15:88; 16:127; 18:6; 26:3; 27:70; 31:23; 35:8). As 2:272 says in addressing the Prophet, Thou art not tasked with their guidance, but God guides whomsoever He will (also see 28:56).

77 Has not man seen that We created him from a drop, and behold, he is a manifest adversary.

77 Cf. 16:4; the creation of the human being from a drop (cf. 18:37; 22:5; 35:11; 40:67; 53:46; 75:37; 76:2; 80:19), meaning sperm or as phrased elsewhere a draught of base fluid (32:8; cf. 77:20), is cited in several verses as testimony to God’s ability to resurrect human beings in the Hereafter; see commentary on 32:7–11. For the phases of gestation, see also 22:5; 23:14. An argument implied here and elsewhere is that in not recognizing the nature of one’s own creation and that to which it bears witness, one is a manifest adversary to oneself.

78 And he has set forth for Us a parable and forgotten his own creation, saying, “Who revives these bones, decayed as they are?”

79 Say, “He will revive them Who brought them forth the first time, and He knows every creation, 78–79 These verses express a common objection to the Quranic understanding of bodily resurrection (cf. 13:5; 17:49, 98; 23:35, 82–83; 27:67; 37:16–17, 53; 50:3; 56:47–48; 79:11). Regarding this particular instance, it is reported that a man by the name of Ubayy ibn Khalaf brought some withered bones to the Prophet and crushed them into pieces saying, “Do you think that God can revive these [bones] after they have decayed and become rot?” The Prophet answered, “Yes, indeed! And He will also throw you into the Fire.” Then these verses were revealed (IK, JJ, Q, W). And forgotten his own creation could also be rendered “having forgotten his own creation.” For a passage similar to v. 79, see 17:51.

80 Who made for you fire from the green tree, and, behold, you kindle from it.”

80 Just as God makes fire emerge from wood that is wet and moist, or that had been wet and moist, so too can He make life emerge from bones that are dead and decayed (Q). According to Ibn ‘Abbās, this refers to the Markh and ‘Afār trees that grow in the Hijaz, in western Arabia; rubbing two green branches from these trees together is known to produce fire (IK).

81 Is not He Who created the heavens and the earth able to create the like thereof? Yea, indeed, He is the knowing Creator.

81 Several passages maintain that the first creation itself is clear evidence of God's Ability to re-create and to resurrect: He created you the first time and unto Him shall you be returned (41:21); As We began the first creation, so shall We bring it back—a promise binding upon Us. Surely We shall do it (21:104); see also 50:1; 79:27.

82 His Command when He desires a thing is only to say to it, “Be!” and it is.

82 This verse is one of the most frequently cited verses of the Quran (cf. 2:117; 3:47; 6:73; 16:40; 19:35; 40:68), and points to the fact that God's creative act is dependent upon no other and is like the blinking of an eye (54:50); see 2:117c. Be! and it is (kun fa-yakūn) has become an aphorism in Arabic and other Islamic languages that is used often in daily discourse.

83 So glory be to Him in Whose Hand lies the dominion of all things, and unto Whom you shall be returned.

83 Glory be indicates both God's being beyond all that the idolaters associate with Him and amazement at what they say. Dominion translates malakūt, which is closely related to mulk, meaning sovereignty and found in the recurring phrase Unto God belongs sovereignty over the heavens and the earth (e.g., 2:107; 3:189; 5:17, 18, 40, 120; 9:116). Both words derive from the same root, m-l-k, which in verbal form means “to possess,” “to control,” “to rule,” or “to reign.” According to some, malakūt and mulk have the same meaning (IK). According to others, malakūt refers to God's Lordship over the unseen realm, and mulk refers to His Lordship over the visible world. In some Islamic cosmologies, this world is designated by mulk, while malakūt is understood as the level of being above this world, and above that lies the archangelic realm, which is designated by the term jabarūt. From one perspective this verse is an answer to the question posed in 23:88: Who is it in Whose Hand lies the dominion of everything, who protects but is not protected against, if you know?

The phrase shall be returned could also be rendered “are being returned,” which would emphasize the ongoing process of return to God experienced by all beings. The fact that both renderings are in the passive voice indicates that humans have no choice regarding whether they return or not.

Those Ranged in Ranks

al-Şaffāt

A Makkan sūrah, al-Şaffāt is believed to have been revealed directly after Sūrah 6, al-An^cām (JJ). It takes its name from the reference to those ranged in ranks in vv. 1 and 165, both of which refer to the angels. The sūrah can be seen as connected to the previous sūrah in that it tells the stories of several generations or civilizations that were destroyed for rejecting God's messengers, material upon which readers or listeners are enjoined to reflect in 36:31: Have they not considered how many generations before them We destroyed, such that they return not unto them? (Āl).

After a brief reaffirmation of God's Oneness and Omnipotence (vv. 1–5), al-Şaffāt describes the futility of the efforts of those who attempt to obtain knowledge of the Unseen through the jinn (vv. 6–10). It then chastises the disbelievers for rejecting the Oneness of God, the prophethood of Muhammad, and the Resurrection, warning of the ignominious end they will face in the Hereafter and of the manner in which they will challenge and question one another regarding the fate that has befallen them (vv. 11–39). This is followed by a description of the rewards God's sincere servants receive in the Garden (vv. 40–49) and the exchange they will have with the disbelievers they had known in this world, who are now in Hell (vv. 50–60). A description of the punishments in the form of food and drink given to the denizens of Hell (vv. 61–68) is followed by an explanation of their fate (vv. 69–73).

The sūrah then provides accounts of several prophets and the blessings God bestowed upon them: Noah (vv. 75–82), Abraham (vv. 83–113, a passage in which the near sacrifice of his son is also discussed, vv. 101–8), Moses and Aaron (vv. 114–22), Elias (Elijah; vv. 123–32), Lot (vv. 133–38), and Jonah (vv. 139–48). In these accounts, it is only in the story of Jonah that the people repent (vv. 147–48); the people associated with all the others are destroyed for having rejected God’s messenger. The discussion of the prophets is followed by a challenge to the worldview of the idolaters of the Prophet Muhammad’s time (vv. 149–63) and a refutation in particular of the Divine powers they ascribe to the angels (vv. 164–66). The sūrah concludes with a final address to the disbelievers and a promise that the Prophet and his followers will triumph, as did the other prophets mentioned in the sūrah (vv. 167–82).

① By those ranged in ranks, ② and the drivers driving, ③ and the reciters of a reminder, ④ truly your God is One, ⑤ Lord of the heavens and the earth and whatsoever is between them, and Lord of the easts. ⑥ Truly We adorned the lowest heaven with an ornament, the stars, ⑦ and a guard against every defiant satan. ⑧ They listen not to the Highest Assembly, for they are repelled from every side— ⑨ cast out, and theirs shall be a punishment everlasting— ⑩ save one who snatches a fragment as a piercing flame pursues him. ⑪ So ask them, are they more difficult to create, or those whom We created? Truly We created them from a viscous clay. ⑫ Indeed, but thou dost marvel, while they scoff. ⑬ And when they are reminded, they do not remember. ⑭ And when they see a sign, they seek to scoff, ⑮ and say, “This is naught but manifest sorcery. ⑯ What! When we have died and are dust and bones are we to be resurrected, ⑰ and our fathers of old?” ⑱ Say, “Yes, and debased will you be.” ⑲ Then there will be but a single cry. And they will then behold. ⑳ They will say, “Oh, woe unto us! This is the Day of Judgment.” ㉑ This is the Day of Division that you used to deny. ㉒ Gather those who did wrong together with their spouses and that which they used to worship ㉓ apart from God, and guide them unto the path of Hellfire. ㉔ And stop them. Surely they are to be questioned: ㉕ “What ails you that you do not help one another?”

26 Nay, but this Day they will surrender. 27 And they will turn to one another, questioning each other, 28 saying, “Truly you used to come to us from the right.” 29 They reply, “Nay, but you were not believers. 30 And we had no authority over you. Rather, you were a rebellious people. 31 So the Word of our Lord has come due for us; truly we shall taste [it]. 32 We caused you to err for truly we were errant.” 33 Verily that Day they will share in the punishment. 34 Thus do We deal with the guilty. 35 Indeed, when it was said unto them, “There is no god but God,” they waxed arrogant, 36 saying, “Are we to forsake our gods for a poet possessed?” 37 Nay! He has come with the truth and confirmed the messengers. 38 Truly you shall taste the painful punishment. 39 And you shall not be requited, save for that which you used to do. 40 Not so for God’s sincere servants. 41 For them there shall be a known provision, 42 fruits. And they will be honored 43 in Gardens of bliss, 44 upon couches, facing one another, 45 with a cup from a gushing spring brought round, 46 white, delicious to those who drink thereof. 47 No headiness lies therein; nor are they intoxicated by it. 48 And theirs shall be maidens of modest gaze with lustrous eyes, 49 as if they were hidden eggs. 50 And they will turn to one another, questioning each other. 51 One among them will say, “I had a companion 52 who would say, ‘Are you among those who confirm? 53 What! When we have died and are dust and bones, are we to be requited?’” 54 He will say, “Will you look?” 55 So he will look and see him in the midst of Hellfire. 56 He will say, “By God! You did well-nigh destroy me; 57 and if not for the blessing of my Lord, I would have been among the arraigned. 58 Are we then not to die, 59 but our first death, and are we not to be punished? 60 This indeed is the great triumph!” 61 For the like of this, then, let the laborers labor. 62 Is this a better welcome or the tree of Zaqqūm? 63 Truly We have made it a trial for the wrongdoers. 64 Truly it is a tree that emerges in the depths of Hellfire. 65 Its spathes are as the heads of satans. 66 They will eat thereof and fill their bellies therewith. 67 Then on top of it they will have a brew of a boiling liquid. 68 Then their return shall be unto Hellfire. 69 Truly they found their fathers astray; 70 yet they hasten in their footsteps. 71 And before them most of those of old had indeed gone astray, 72 though We had indeed sent warners among them. 73 So behold how those who were warned fared in the end. 74 Not so for God's sincere servants. 75 And indeed Noah cried out to Us. How excellent are those who respond! 76 We saved him and his people from great distress, 77 and We made his progeny endure, 78 and We left [a blessing] upon him among later generations: 79 "Peace be upon Noah throughout the worlds." 80 Thus do We recompense the virtuous. 81 Truly he was among Our believing servants. 82 Then We drowned the others. 83 And surely among his party was Abraham, 84 when he came unto his Lord with a sound heart, 85 when he said unto his father and his people, "What do you worship? 86 Is it a perversion, gods apart from God, that you desire? 87 What, then, think you of the Lord of the worlds?" 88 Then he cast a glance at the stars 89 and said, "Truly I am sick." 90 But they turned their backs on him. 91 Then he went quietly to their gods and said, "Will you not eat? 92 What ails you that you speak not?" 93 Then he turned upon them, striking with his right hand. 94 Then they came to him rushing. 95 He said, "Do you worship that which you carve, 96 while God created you and that which you make?" 97 They said, "Erect a building for him and cast him into the fire." 98 They desired to scheme against him, so We made them the lowest. 99 And he said, "Truly I am going unto my Lord. He will guide me. 100 My Lord, give unto me from among the righteous." 101 So We gave him glad tidings of a gentle son. 102 When he had become old enough to partake of his father's endeavors, Abraham said, "O my son! I see while dreaming that I am to sacrifice you. So consider, what do you see?" He replied, "O my father! Do as you are commanded. You will find me, God willing, among those who are patient." 103 But when they had submitted and Abraham had laid him upon his forehead, 104 We called unto him, "O Abraham! 105 Thou hast been true to the vision." Thus indeed do We recompense the virtuous. 106 Truly this was the manifest trial. 107 Then We ransomed him with a great sacrifice. 108 And We left [a blessing] upon him among later generations: 109 “Peace be upon Abraham.” 110 Thus do We recompense the virtuous. 111 Truly he was among Our believing servants. 112 And We gave him glad tidings of Isaac, a prophet from among the righteous. 113 And We blessed him and Isaac. And among their progeny are the virtuous and those who clearly wrong themselves. 114 And We were gracious unto Moses and Aaron. 115 We saved them and their people from great distress 116 and helped them, so that they were the victors. 117 And We gave the two of them the Book that makes clear, 118 and guided the two of them upon the straight path. 119 And We left [a blessing] upon them among later generations: 120 “Peace be upon Moses and Aaron.” 121 Thus indeed do We recompense the virtuous. 122 Truly they were among Our believing servants. 123 And truly Elias was among the message bearers 124 when he said to his people, “Will you not reverence? 125 Do you call upon Baal and leave the most beautiful of creators? 126 God is your Lord and the Lord of your fathers of old.” 127 But they denied him; so they are surely to be arraigned. 128 Not so for God’s sincere servants. 129 And We left [a blessing] upon him among later generations: 130 “Peace be upon Elias.” 131 Thus indeed do We recompense the virtuous. 49 4 Truly he was among Our believing servants. 69 6 And truly Lot was among the message bearers. 134 Behold! We saved him and his family all together, 135 save for an old woman who was among those who lagged behind. 136 Then We destroyed the others. 137 And truly you pass by them in the morning 138 and at night. Do you not understand? 139 And truly Jonah was among the message bearers. 140 Behold! He fled to the full-laden ship, 141 and then cast lots and was among those rejected. 142 Then the fish swallowed him, for he was blameworthy. 143 And had he not been among those who glorify, 144 he would have tarried in its belly till the Day they are resurrected. 145 So We cast him, sick, upon the barren shore. 146 And We caused a gourd tree to grow over him. 147 Then We sent him unto a hundred thousand or more. 148 And they believed; so We granted them enjoyment for a while. 149 So ask them, does your Lord have daughters while they have sons? 150 Or did We create the angels female, while they were witnesses? ¹⁵¹ Behold! It is of their own perversion that they say, ¹⁵² “God has begotten,” while truly they are liars. ¹⁵³ Has He chosen daughters over sons? ¹⁵⁴ What ails you? How do you judge? ¹⁵⁵ Do you not reflect? ¹⁵⁶ Or have you a manifest authority? ¹⁵⁷ Bring your Book, then, if you are truthful. ¹⁵⁸ They have made kinship between Him and the jinn—yet the jinn know that they will surely be arraigned; ¹⁵⁹ Glory be to God above that which they ascribe. ¹⁶⁰ Not so for God’s sincere servants. ¹⁶¹ For truly neither you nor that which you worship ¹⁶² can tempt any against Him, ¹⁶³ save he who is to burn in Hellfire. ¹⁶⁴ “There is none among us, but that he has a known station. ¹⁶⁵ And truly we are those who are ranged [in ranks]. ¹⁶⁶ Truly we are those who glorify.” ¹⁶⁷ Indeed, they used to say, ¹⁶⁸ “If only we had a reminder from those of old, ¹⁶⁹ then we would indeed be God’s sincere servants.” ¹⁷⁰ But they disbelieved in it. So soon they will know, ¹⁷¹ for indeed Our Word has already gone forth unto Our message bearers ¹⁷² that they will surely be helped, ¹⁷³ and that Our host will surely be victorious. ¹⁷⁴ So turn away from them for a time, ¹⁷⁵ and observe them; for they will soon observe. ¹⁷⁶ Do they seek to hasten Our Punishment? ¹⁷⁷ When it alights in their very midst, evil will be the morning of those who were warned! ¹⁷⁸ So turn away from them for a time, ¹⁷⁹ and observe; for they will soon observe. ¹⁸⁰ Glory be to thy Lord, the Lord of Might, above that which they ascribe. ¹⁸¹ Peace be upon the message bearers. ¹⁸² And praise be to God, Lord of the worlds.

Commentary

- ① By those ranged in ranks,
- ② and the drivers driving,
- ③ and the reciters of a reminder,

1–3 These verses are in the form of a Divine oath, common in the Quran, in which God swears by various created phenomena. The three verses can be understood as descriptions of a single reality or of three different realities (R). Most read them as references to three sets of angels: angels ranged in ranks before God, angels who drive the clouds, and angels who recite the Quran (IJ, Q, T, Z). Ranged in ranks renders ṣāffāt ṣaffan, which can also mean “the spreaders spreading,” a reading that may refer to the angels spreading their wings (R) or to birds, as in 24:41, by the birds spreading their wings (ṣāffāt; cf. 67:19; Z). Drivers can also mean the angels who drive human beings away from committing acts of disobedience or who drive the satans away from human beings (Aj, R). Driving renders zajara, which can also mean “to rebuke.” In light of this interpretation, some understand reminder as a reference to the Quran, by which God rebukes the disbelievers (T), or to everything that rebukes those who are disobedient to God (Z). Reciters is then read to mean anyone who recites the Book of God (Z). Additionally, these three verses could also be read as a description of the stages in prayer: ranged in ranks refers to people as they stand for prayer; driving refers to the recitation of the formula “I seek refuge in God from the accursed Satan” (a‘ūdhu bi’Llāhi min al-shayṭān al-rajīm), which is recited at the beginning of the prayer and at the commencement of the recitation of the Quran (see 16:98c); and the reciters of a reminder refers to the recitation of the Quran during the prayer (R). A few more speculative interpretations relate these groups to different types of scholars (AJ, R, Z), mujtahids (interpreters of Islamic Law; R), types of Quranic verses (R), or spiritual types (Aj).

- ④ truly your God is One,
- ⑤ Lord of the heavens and the earth and whatsoever is between them, and Lord of the easts.

4–5 These verses constitute the “answer to the oath” invoked in the previous three verses, as if to say, “The Lord of all that is mentioned above is One” (IJ). Lord of the easts refers to the succession of points on the horizon through the year from which the sun rises (IJ). The rising of the sun, sharaqa, derives from the same root, sh-r-q, as the word for “east,” mashriq (cf. 55:17; 70:40). In this sense, easts (mashāriq) evokes the sense of “places of rising” for the sun or even “horizons.”

⑥ Truly We adorned the lowest heaven with an ornament, the stars,

⑦ and a guard against every defiant satan.

⑧ They listen not to the Highest Assembly, for they are repelled from every side—

⑨ cast out, and theirs shall be a punishment everlasting—

⑩ save one who snatches a fragment as a piercing flame pursues him.

6–10 These verses refer to God’s having prevented evil jinn, here referred to as every defiant satan, from listening to the discourse of the heavenly assembly, as in 67:5: Truly We have adorned the lowest heaven with lamps and made them missiles against the satans; and We have prepared for them the punishment of the Blaze. The role that certain jinn are said to have played in facilitating the work of fortune-tellers and sorcerers is alluded to in 15:16–18; 67:5; 72:8–9. Made of a more ethereal substance than human beings, the jinn gained access to some aspects of the discourse between the angels, but then deceived human beings, leading them astray with half-truths; see the introduction to Sūrah 72; 72:8–9c; 67:5c. It is believed that after the Prophet Muhammad began receiving revelations, God cut off all such access to angelic discussions for the jinn, establishing angels as sentries and repelling the jinn with meteors.

The Highest Assembly (v. 8) refers to the assembly of the angels, regarding which no one has knowledge unless it is provided directly from God. The Prophet is reported to have said that God asked him about what the Highest Assembly disputed (see 38:69), to which he responded that he did not know. Then he said, “So He put His Hand between my shoulders, and I felt its coolness in my innermost being, and knowledge of all things between the East and the West came unto me.” For more on the Highest Assembly, see 38:69–70c.

Save one who snatches a fragment (v. 10) refers to the few jinn who are able to eavesdrop on some part of the heavenly discourse, after which they are struck by a piercing flame (IJ, IK), though on occasion they are able to send what they have heard down to a soothsayer before being struck (IK).

⑪ So ask them, are they more difficult to create, or those whom We created? Truly We created them from a viscous clay.

11 A command to the Prophet to ask those who deny the Resurrection whether resurrecting them after they have died would be more difficult than resurrecting other beings God has created (Ṭ). Those whom We created refers either to the angels, the jinn, and all that is in the heavens and on the earth or to previous generations of human beings (IJ). The verse can also be seen as a reference to v. 5 and thus to all of the created order, as in 40:57: Surely the creation of the heavens and the earth is greater than the creation of mankind. But most of mankind know not (Ṭ). Several verses describe the creation of the human being from various forms of earth: from dust (3:59); from dried clay, made of molded mud (15:26); from dried clay, like earthen vessels (55:14); and, in the present verse, from a viscous clay; for the manner in which these can be seen as representing different phases of human development, see 55:14c.

⑫ Indeed, but thou dost marvel, while they scoff.

12 The Prophet marvels at the Quran, while the disbelievers scoff at it (Ṭ). Or the Prophet marvels at their disbelief in the Quran and the Resurrection, while they scoff at him (IJ).

⑬ And when they are reminded, they do not remember.

⑭ And when they see a sign, they seek to scoff,

13–14 The disbelievers do not benefit from being reminded (T), or when the Quran admonishes them, they do not remember or take heed (IJ). They then scoff at the Quran or at clear evidence and proof of Muhammad’s prophethood, such as the splitting of the moon (see 54:1c; IJ).

15 and say, “This is naught but manifest sorcery.

15 This verse may be a response to the miracles sent as proofs (IJ) or to the Quran itself, as in 46:7: Yet when Our signs are recited unto them as clear proofs, those who disbelieve say to the truth when it comes to them, “This is manifest sorcery.” In deriding the Prophet, the disbelievers often labeled him a sorcerer (see also 10:2; 11:7; 34:43; 38:4; 46:7; 51:52; 54:2; 74:24), a charge also leveled against Moses (see 7:109; 10:76; 20:57, 63; 26:34; 27:13; 28:36; 40:24; 51:39) and Jesus (see 5:110; 61:6) by those who rejected the messages they brought.

16 What! When we have died and are dust and bones are we to be resurrected, 17 and our fathers of old?”

18 Say, “Yes, and debased will you be.”

16–18 These verses express a common objection to the Quranic understanding of bodily resurrection (cf. 13:5; 17:49, 98; 23:35, 82–83; 27:67; 36:78–79; 37:53; 50:3; 56:47–48; 79:11); see 36:78–79c.

19 Then there will be but a single cry. And they will then behold.

19 Cf. 79:13. This is the cry that will call human beings to rise from the grave for the Day of Judgment. Cry translates zajrah, which indicates a sudden cry or shout that directs some kind of behavior, like halting an animal or making it start (Z). Two cries or blasts are spoken of in 39:68: at the first creation will come to an end, whereupon whosoever is in the heavens and on the earth will swoon, save those whom God wills; at the second everyone will be resurrected for the Judgment. A single cry (ṣayḥah or zajrah; cf. 36:29; 36:49; 38:15; 79:13) is understood as a reference to the second blast (Z), at which the disbelievers will then behold what they had denied.

②① They will say, “Oh, woe unto us! This is the Day of Judgment.”

②① This is the Day of Division that you used to deny.

20–21 Woe unto us translates waylatanā; wayl, or woe, is an exclamation of existential and spiritual regret found elsewhere in the Quran (see 2:79c; 5:31; 18:49; 21:14, 47, 97; 25:28; 36:52; 68:31), often when the certainty of Divine Punishment is realized. Here it comes when the disbelievers behold the realities of the Judgment that they had denied. The Day of Division (44:40; 77:13–14, 38; 78:17; see also 10:28; 30:14, 43) is another name for the Day of Judgment, evoking the manner in which God will judge between the virtuous and the iniquitous and then divide them from one another in a categorical manner.

②② Gather those who did wrong together with their spouses and that which they used to worship

②③ apart from God, and guide them unto the path of Hellfire.

22–23 Here those who did wrong may refer to all wrongdoers, only to the idolaters (IJ), or to all those who disbelieve in God (Ṭ). Their spouses translates azwājahum, meaning that the idolatrous men and women would be gathered together (Q, R, Z). Azwājahum can also mean “their companions” or “those of their kind,” indicating that those given to particular vices would be gathered with wrongdoers of the same disposition (IJ, IK, Q, Z). It could also mean those of their particular sect or creed (IJ) or their comrades among the satans (IJ, Z, R), to which reference is made in 43:36: And whosoever turns blindly away from the remembrance of the Compassionate, We assign to him a satan who is then a companion unto him. Three different things can be meant by that which they used to worship: idols, Satan himself, or the many satans (IJ). In this context, some understand guide them to mean “show them” or “demonstrate to them” (IJ, Q, R) by informing them about the path of Hellfire that they are following (Z). It can also be understood as a command to the angels to lead them to the Fire (IK).

24 And stop them. Surely they are to be questioned:

24 Stop them means to detain them (IJ, R, Ṭ). The content of the question appears in v. 25, but some propose that they are to be questioned means the disbelievers will be asked whether the Fire pleases them (Ṭ) or about the deeds they have committed (IJ, Ṭ).

25 “What ails you that you do not help one another?”

26 Nay, but this Day they will surrender.

25–26 By way of rebuke, the disbelievers are asked why they did not help one another as they had claimed they would (IK). But they will be subject to God’s Command and Decree; they will not be able to avoid them (IK, Ṭ), and should thus be certain of receiving punishment (Ṭ).

27 And they will turn to one another, questioning each other,

27 Human beings will turn to the jinn and question them (Ṭ), or human beings will question one another, blaming each other for their fate (IK), similar to their lamenting the companionship of other disbelievers in 25:28–29, when they say, Oh, woe unto me! Would that I had not taken so-and-so for a friend! He did indeed cause me to go astray from the Reminder after its having come to me.

28 saying, “Truly you used to come to us from the right.”

29 They reply, “Nay, but you were not believers.

30 And we had no authority over you. Rather, you were a rebellious people.

31 So the Word of our Lord has come due for us; truly we shall taste [it].

32 We caused you to err for truly we were errant.”

33 Verily that Day they will share in the punishment.

34 Thus do We deal with the guilty.

28–34 Those who were weak and oppressed will say to those who were in power and used their power to lead others astray, You used to come to us from the right, meaning, “You came to us from a position of power and influence over us and led us astray,” or “You made falsehood attractive and concealed the truth” (IK; see also 33:66–68; 34:31–33; 40:47–48). To which the leaders respond that they (their followers) would not have been led astray if they had not already been inclined to disbelief. The leaders’ saying, We had no authority over you, is similar to Satan’s statement to his followers, And I had no authority over you, save that I called you, and you responded to me. So do not blame me, but blame yourselves (14:22). Neither the leaders nor Satan had any authority or proof to substantiate their claims; thus the people who followed them did so because they themselves were a rebellious people. For this reason, the corrupt leaders remind those who followed them of their own folly, saying, Nay! But you were guilty (34:32). Although the leaders among the disbelievers and those they led astray will share in the punishment, 29:13 says of those who sought to lead others astray, Surely they will bear their own burdens, and others’ burdens along with their own. Those who were led astray by others are also said to request, Our Lord! Give them a twofold punishment, and curse them with a great curse (33:68); see 7:38–39c.

35 Indeed, when it was said unto them, “There is no god but God,” they waxed arrogant,

36 saying, “Are we to forsake our gods for a poet possessed?”

35–36 When, during their life in this world, the disbelievers were told to testify that There is no god but God, they rejected it. And when they were told to hearken to the revelation, their reaction was the same, as in 5:104: And when it is said unto them, “Come unto that which God has sent down, and unto the Messenger,” they say, “Sufficient for us is that which we have found our fathers practicing.” In the same vein, when it is said unto them, “Believe as the people believe,” they say, “Shall we believe as fools believe?” (2:13). They accuse the Prophet of being a poet possessed (see also 52:30; 69:41), because they have no ability to address the content of the message; they thus seek to discredit the messenger, as when the disbelievers scoff, Confused dreams! Nay, he has fabricated it! Nay, he is a poet! (21:5).

37 Nay! He has come with the truth and confirmed the messengers.

37 This is a response to the accusation that the Prophet is a poet possessed (v. 36). Here the truth refers to the Quran (IJ, Q, T) and its message of Divine Oneness (IJ, Q). Just as the Quran confirms the revelations before it (see 2:41, 89, 91, 97, 101; 3:3, 81; 5:48; 6:92; 35:31; 46:30), so too does the Prophet Muhammad confirm the messengers before him, meaning that he brings what they had brought (IJ).

38 Truly you shall taste the painful punishment.

38 See commentary on 32:14: And taste the punishment everlasting for that which you used to do: and 32:20: Taste the punishment of the Fire that you used to deny.

39 And you shall not be requited, save for that which you used to do.

39 That the disbelievers are only requited for that which they used to do (cf. 27:90; 52:16; 66:7) indicates that they are only punished for what they have committed and brought upon themselves, as in 10:44: Truly God does not wrong human beings in the least, but rather human beings wrong themselves.

④① Not so for God's sincere servants.

④① Those who are sincere will be spared being taken to account for their bad deeds and will be forgiven (IJ); see commentary on 39:10: Surely those who are patient shall be paid their reward in full without reckoning.

④① For them there shall be a known provision,

④② fruits. And they will be honored

④③ in Gardens of bliss,

④④ upon couches, facing one another,

④①-④④ Some say the provision is the Garden itself (IJ, IK), while others say it refers to the provisions of the Garden (IJ, Ṭ, Z). That it is a known provision indicates that, unlike the provisions of this world, those in Paradise are certain that heavenly provisions will always be available (R) or that they will receive the provision that they have merited for their deeds in this world (R). That they are honored is considered the greatest recompense (Z) in Gardens of bliss (cf. 5:65; 10:9; 22:56; 31:8; 56:12; 68:34). They are facing one another (cf. 15:47; 56:16), so that no one is facing the back of another (IK, Q, Ṭ); that no one shall be made to sit behind another is thus a sign that they are all being honored. Elsewhere the couches of Paradise are described as embroidered couches (56:15), arrayed (52:20), upon which they recline in the shade with their spouses (36:56); see 52:20c.

④⑤ with a cup from a gushing spring brought round,

④⑤ See also 43:71 and 76:15, where those in Paradise are served from goblets made of gold, silver, and crystal. That the cup, here indicating the drink within the cup, is from a gushing spring (cf. 56:18) indicates that it is pure and the source never runs dry. Every such mention of the heavenly cups or goblets is seen by some as a reference to the wine of heaven (Ṭ); for the positive nature of this paradisaal wine, see 56:18–19c. That it is brought round implies that there are servants in attendance (Ṭ).

④⑥ white, delicious to those who drink thereof.

46 The wine of heaven is said to be whiter than milk (IJ, R), though here some say that white describes the cup rather than the wine (IJ, Ṭ, Z).

④⑦ No headiness lies therein; nor are they intoxicated by it.

47 Cf. 56:18. Headiness translates ghawl, which derives from the verb ghāla, meaning to snatch or grab something or to destroy it. Here the absence of ghawl is understood to mean that heavenly wine does not cause headache or stomach ailment, that it does not destroy the intellect, or that there is nothing harmful, disdainful, or sinful in it (IJ, T). In fact, it can be understood to mean that this wine contains none of the negative effects found in earthly wine (IJ, Ṭ), in which there is great sin and [some] benefits for mankind (2:219), but the harm of which is greater than the benefits. In 5:90 wine is said to be a means of defilement of Satan's doing and is therefore forbidden in Islamic Law.

④⑧ And theirs shall be maidens of modest gaze with lustrous eyes,

48 Of modest gaze indicates maidens who look at none but their own husbands (Aj, Q). For other references to the maidens who await the righteous in Paradise, see 38:52; 44:54c; 52:20; 55:56, 72; 56:22; 78:33. Other verses indicate that righteous earthly spouses will join one in the Garden (see 13:23; 36:56; 40:8; 43:70). The sexual joys of Paradise alluded to in this verse are not a sublimated form of the joys of earthly sexuality, but symbolize spiritual union. What one experiences here below is a mere reflection of paradisaical joy, but allusion cannot be made to it except by using the language of earthly sexual union, since it is the most intense form of pristine sensual pleasure known in this world.

49 as if they were hidden eggs.

49 The word for “egg” (bayḍ) is closely related to the word for “white” (bayyāḍ or abyaḍ), which in the context of the maidens of Paradise (Iṣ), as in English, is taken as an allusion to purity. The mention of eggs can also be connected to the use of white in v. 46 to describe the wine of Paradise. In 3:106–7 those who enter Paradise are spoken of as those whose faces whiten. Some say that what is intended by eggs is pearls (IJ, IK, Ṭ), as in 56:22–23: Wide-eyed maidens, the likeness of concealed pearls (Q). Hidden refers to the inside of the egg (or pearl), or it means that the egg (or pearl) itself is never touched (IK, Ṭ).

50 And they will turn to one another, questioning each other.

51 One among them will say, “I had a companion

52 who would say, ‘Are you among those who confirm?’

53 What! When we have died and are dust and bones, are we to be requited?’”

50–53 The inhabitants of the Garden ask one another about their state in the world (IJ). A companion refers to the satan assigned to each person (see 43:36c; IJ, Ṭ) or to a believer’s companion who denied the Resurrection and would ask the believer in astonishment, “Are you among those who confirm the Resurrection?” (IJ, IK, Ṭ). The first part of v. 53 reflects a question posed in several Quranic verses (cf. 13:5; 17:49, 98; 23:35, 82–83; 27:67; 36:78–79; 37:16–17; 50:3; 56:47–48; 79:11), while the second part of v. 53 mocks the belief in a final reckoning. When they have died, and the believer goes to the Garden and the idolater goes to the Fire, the believer sees the state of the disbeliever (Ṭ), and according to 7:46–50, the disbelievers in Hell can see the believers in Paradise. Thus some say this passage refers to the two companions discussed in 18:32–43 (IJ).

54 He will say, “Will you look?”

55 So he will look and see him in the midst of Hellfire.

56 He will say, “By God! You did well-nigh destroy me;

57 and if not for the blessing of my Lord, I would have been among the arraigned.

54–57 The believer then says to his companions in the Garden, Will you look? (IJ, IK, Ṭ). Then he sees his companion from this world in the midst of Hellfire in the Hereafter and knows that, had he followed him, he would have suffered the same fate and that if not for God’s Blessing in guiding him, he too would have been arraigned unto the punishment (30:16; 34:38). Thus Ibn Kathīr glosses these verses with 7:43, where the believers say, Praise be to God, Who guided us unto this. We would not have been rightly guided, had God not guided us.

58 Are we then not to die,

59 but our first death, and are we not to be punished?

60 This indeed is the great triumph!”

58–60 These verses are a continuation of the words of the believer from the previous verses or the words of all of the believers in Paradise expressing joy at realizing that they will not suffer death again and that they have avoided Divine Punishment. Attaining to the Garden is referred to as the great triumph in over a dozen verses; for the blessings of the Garden, see commentary on 5:119; 44:51–57.

61 For the like of this, then, let the laborers labor.

61 The message of this verse is to let those in this world perform righteous deeds, so that they too may attain the honor that God has bestowed upon these believers in the Hereafter (Ṭ). This verse can be understood as the words of God (Z) or as the words of the believers in the Garden.

62 Is this a better welcome or the tree of Zaqqūm?

63 Truly We have made it a trial for the wrongdoers.

62–63 In contrast to the fruits bestowed upon the believers as a known provision in the Garden (vv. 41–42), the disbelievers are given the tree of Zaqqūm, which is said to bear pain and sorrow (Z). As it is known that there is no good in Zaqqūm, the rhetorical question is posed here as a rebuke to the disbelievers for the course they have chosen (Z). Its effects are best described in 44:43–46: Truly the tree of Zaqqūm is the food of the sinner, like molten lead boiling in their bellies, like the boiling of boiling liquid (also see 56:51–53; commentary on 44:43–46). That Zaqqūm is a trial (fitnah) means that eating from it is a punishment in the Hereafter (IJ, Z).

64 Truly it is a tree that emerges in the depths of Hellfire.

64 That the tree of Zaqqūm emerges from Hell or in the depths of Hellfire means that its roots grow from the bottom of Hell and it is nourished by fire (IK). Some say that its roots reach to the depths of Hell, while its branches rise through its other levels (Z).

65 Its spathes are as the heads of satans.

66 They will eat thereof and fill their bellies therewith.

67 Then on top of it they will have a brew of a boiling liquid.

65–67 That its spathes are as the heads of satans indicates that it bears sheer evil (Z) or that its spathes are like snakes (IJ). The disbelievers eat thereof because they are commanded to do so (see 56:53); they fill their bellies either because of severe hunger or because they are forced to eat it even though they despise it (Z). Both interpretations allude to the fact that their own avaricious natures have forced them to continue to eat from Zaqqūm. But if they are satiated, then thirst overwhelms them, and they are given a drink that burns their faces and tears apart their intestines (Z). The brew of a boiling liquid (cf. 6:70; 10:4; 18:29; 38:57; 44:46; 47:15; 78:24–25; 88:5) that the disbelievers are made to drink stands in sharp contrast to the cool and pleasing drinks presented to the believers in the Garden (see 37:45–47; 76:5–6, 17–18, 21; 83:25–28) and to the rivers of water, milk, honey, and wine described in 47:15.

68 Then their return shall be unto Hellfire.

68 After receiving the punishment outlined in vv. 62–67, the disbelievers will be returned to Hellfire (IJ, Z). This verse is thus understood to mean that the boiling water lies outside of Hellfire and that they go back and forth between these punishments, as in 55:43–44: This is Hell, which the guilty denied; to and fro shall they pass, between it and boiling waters (IK, R).

69 Truly they found their fathers astray;

70 yet they hasten in their footsteps.

69–70 Because their fathers had followed a different set of beliefs, the disbelievers waxed arrogant when told to bear witness that there is no god but God (Ṭ), preferring the way of their forefathers to the one to which the Prophet called them (R), as in 2:170: When it is said unto them, “Follow what God has sent down,” they say, “Nay, we follow that which we found our fathers doing.” What! Even though their fathers understood nothing, and were not rightly guided? (cf. 5:104; 7:28; 11:109; 43:22–23).

71 And before them most of those of old had indeed gone astray, 72 though We had indeed sent warners among them.

71–72 These verses serve as an affirmation that most human collectivities have gone astray and rejected the prophets God sent to them. This aspect of history may be cited as counsel for the Prophet to be patient and to continue in calling the people to religion, since the prophets before him, whose stories are recounted in the remainder of this sūrah, had also been rejected, but ultimately prevailed (R).

73 So behold how those who were warned fared in the end.

73 Addressed to the Prophet, this verse also serves as a warning to the disbelievers (R) and as a segue to the stories of Noah, Abraham, Lot, and other prophets in the remainder of the sūrah. This verse, about those who were warned, is repeated as part of 10:73; other verses enjoin people to consider the final ends of the deniers (3:137; 6:11; 16:36; 43:25), the guilty (7:84; 27:69), the workers of corruption (7:86, 103; 27:14), and the wrongdoers (10:39; 28:40); see 10:39c.

74 Not so for God’s sincere servants.

74 This verse follows upon v. 71, meaning that those who are sincere have not gone astray, or upon v. 73, meaning that the end of those who are sincere is not the same as that of the disbelievers (R). The latter interpretation is borne out by the following accounts, in which prophets such as Noah and Lot are saved along with small groups of their followers.

75 And indeed Noah cried out to Us. How excellent are those who respond!

75–82 These verses give the broad contours of Noah’s story. For more detailed accounts, see 11:25–48; 23:23–30; 26:105–21, and Sūrah 71. Additional brief accounts are also found in 7:59–64; 10:71–73; 21:76–77; 29:14–15; 54:9–15.

75 Noah cried out may be a reference to Noah’s calling upon God to help him against his opponents or to save him from the flood (IJ) or to Noah’s supplication to God in 71:5–26 (T). Those who respond would then refer to God and the blessings He brought upon Noah by saving him and his small group of followers from the flood (IJ).

76 We saved him and his people from great distress,

76 His people refers to those who responded to Noah’s call to follow God. According to traditional accounts, though Noah called people to God for hundreds of years (see 29:14), few people followed him. Great distress refers to the insults he suffered (IJ, IK) or to his being separated from his people (IJ).

77 and We made his progeny endure,

78 and We left [a blessing] upon him among later generations:

79 “Peace be upon Noah throughout the worlds.”

77–79 As the only line of human beings to survive the flood, Noah’s progeny endured. He was also blessed with being remembered well, in a manner befitting his status, by later generations (IK). His story is thus left as a sign for the worlds (29:15; cf. 54:15). The prayer for peace upon Noah throughout the worlds means, “May all of mankind, the jinn, and the angels wish him peace” (R, Z).

80 Thus do We recompense the virtuous.

80 Cf. 6:84; 12:22; 28:14; 37:105, 110, 121, 131; 77:44. For the virtuous, see 29:69c. The manner in which God rewards the virtuous, or those who do what is good and beautiful, is with greater beauty, as in 42:23: And whosoever accomplishes a good deed, We shall increase him in goodness thereby; and 55:60: Is the reward of goodness aught but goodness?

81 Truly he was among Our believing servants.

81 This refrain appears here for Noah and at the end of three of the other accounts of prophets that follow in this sūrah (Abraham, v. 111; Moses, v. 122; and Elias, v. 132).

82 Then We drowned the others.

82 Those who drowned are elsewhere said to be those who denied God's signs (see 7:64; 10:73), since they were an evil people (21:77).

83 And surely among his party was Abraham,

83 His party could refer to the party of Noah or to that of Muhammad (IJ, R, Ṭ) and in either case means that they were of the same religion and creed (IJ, Ṭ). According to some, the only two prophets between Noah and Abraham were the Arabian prophets Hūd and Ṣāliḥ (R, Z).

84 when he came unto his Lord with a sound heart,

84 That Abraham had a sound heart means that he never inclined to idolatry (IJ, R, Ṭ, Z), that his heart was free from doubt (Qm, Ṭb), that his heart was free from all vice and he only desired for others what he desired for himself (R), or that there was none but God in his heart (Ṭb), and that he was completely submitted to Him; see 26:89c.

85 when he said unto his father and his people, “What do you worship?”

86 Is it a perversion, gods apart from God, that you desire?

85–96 This is one of several passages in which Abraham argues with his people regarding the inanity of their idolatry (cf. 2:258; 6:83; 21:51–67). As al-Rāzī observes, the Quran invokes the story of Abraham in the context of the Prophet Muhammad’s disputations with the idolaters, because even the idolatrous Arabs had great respect for Abraham as one of their most prominent forefathers; see 43:26–27c.

86 The subtle grammatical structure of this verse allows it to be read in several different ways: “Do you perform perversion and worship gods other than God!” (IJ); “Do you desire gods apart from God out of perversion” (R, Z); “Do you desire perversion—gods apart from God?” (R); or “Do you desire gods apart from God in perversion?” (R). In all four readings, the verse is an expression of rebuke and amazement.

87 What, then, think you of the Lord of the worlds?”

87 This verse may mean, “Do you think that God would permit inanimate objects to share in the worship that is His due alone, or do you think that He is of their same genus, such that you should make them equal in worship?” (R). It could also be understood to mean, “What, then, do you think God will do with you when you meet Him, while you have been worshipping other gods?” (IK, T).

88 Then he cast a glance at the stars

89 and said, “Truly I am sick.”

88–89 Cast a glance at the stars is an idiomatic expression meaning to contemplate something, interpreted here to mean that Abraham cast his glance upward while contemplating what to do. Some say he feigned reading his own future, which is then the basis for his claiming to be sick (IJ). His claim to be sick could also mean that his heart was sickened because of the worshipping of other gods (IJ, IK) or that he was feigning an illness in order to avoid going to a religious festival where idol worship would have occurred (IK, T). The Prophet Muhammad is reported to have said, “Abraham did not lie, save three times: two were for the sake of God, his saying, Truly I am sick, and his saying, Nay, but it was the largest of them that did this [21:63]; and his saying regarding Sarah, ‘She is my sister’” (T).

90 But they turned their backs on him.

91 Then he went quietly to their gods and said, “Will you not eat?”

92 What ails you that you speak not?”

93 Then he turned upon them, striking with his right hand.

90–93 Elsewhere, Abraham warns his people, And by God, I shall scheme against your idols after you have turned your backs (21:57). The people had placed food before the idols, so Abraham mockingly asked why the idols did not eat it (IK). Then he destroyed all but the largest of them (see 21:58–59c), which he accused of having been responsible for smashing the other idols, as a means of mocking their beliefs; see 21:62–63c.

94 Then they came to him rushing.

95 He said, “Do you worship that which you carve, 96 while God created you and that which you make?”

94–96 The question in these verses is, “Do you worship what you make rather than the One Who made you?” V. 96 can also be understood to mean that God creates human beings and all that they do (IK), since He is the only one who can create. In this latter sense, it is related to the affirmation of God’s Omnipotence in such verses as 3:128: Naught is thine in the matter; 3:154: The decision belongs entirely to God; and 12:21: And God prevails over His affair, but most of mankind know not.

97 They said, “Erect a building for him and cast him into the fire.”

98 They desired to scheme against him, so We made them the lowest.

99 And he said, “Truly I am going unto my Lord. He will guide me.

97–99 For the story of the attempt to burn Abraham in a fire, which God then commanded, Be coolness and peace for Abraham (21:69), see commentary on 21:68–70. Abraham says, I am going unto my Lord, when he decides to leave his people, declaring that he will go where God commands him; or he says it before he is cast into the fire, meaning that he is prepared to die and that God will guide him to the Garden or save him from the Fire (IJ). From a spiritual perspective, this passage alludes to the manner in which people should smash the idols of the things upon which they rely and depend only upon God (Aj).

100 My Lord, give unto me from among the righteous.”

100 This verse, which is understood by most to be a prayer for a righteous son, can also be interpreted as a prayer asking God to allow Abraham to be among the righteous.

101 So We gave him glad tidings of a gentle son.

101 The son announced here is understood to be either Isaac or Ishmael (IJ, T). Here it is God Who gives Abraham glad tidings; in all the other accounts angels come to Abraham with glad tidings of a son (see 11:69c; 15:53; 29:31; 51:28). Together these verses indicate that God gave glad tidings through the intermediary of the angels.

102 When he had become old enough to partake of his father's endeavors, Abraham said, "O my son! I see while dreaming that I am to sacrifice you. So consider, what do you see?" He replied, "O my father! Do as you are commanded. You will find me, God willing, among those who are patient."

102 Although various aspects of Abraham's prophetic mission are addressed in over two hundred Quranic verses, this is the only passage to address what is known in the Biblical tradition as the Binding of Isaac. Partaking of his father's endeavors refers to joining Abraham in his work, being able to travel with him, or having reached the age at which he could worship (IJ, Ṭ). Some say this phrase refers to his being thirteen years old (IJ). It could also be understood as an allusion to his having begun to manifest some aspects of the gift of prophethood. The Arabic literally reads, "I see in the dream that I sacrifice you," but because the visions of all prophets are said to be true, it is interpreted to mean that he received the command to do so in his dream, not that he had a vision of the actual sacrificing (IJ, Ṭ). What do you see employs the same verb, "to see" (raʿā), used in the announcement of Abraham's dream. In this sense, it may allude to the prophethood of Abraham's son.

Commentators are divided as to whether the son to be slain was Isaac or Ishmael (IJ). While many earlier commentators, such as al-Ṭabarī, take Isaac to be the son in question, several later commentators, such as al-Rāzī and Ibn Kathīr, favor Ishmael, some of whom go so far as to assert that the attribution to Isaac derived from a corruption of the Bible (IK). Those who see this verse as a reference to Ishmael interpret 19:54–55 as a reference to his fulfilling his promise to allow himself to be sacrificed: And remember Ishmael in the Book. Verily he was true to the promise, and he was a messenger, a prophet. He used to bid his people to prayer and almsgiving, and he was pleasing unto his Lord (IK, Q, R).

Although this story may appear to be similar to the Biblical account, it differs in several significant details. Abraham does not act immediately upon his dream, but asks the potential "sacrifice," his son, for his opinion. His son then becomes a willing participant in the sacrifice, surrendering himself to the Will of God when he says, You will find me, God willing, among those who are patient. Some say that it was the son who suggested he be laid upon his forehead (v. 103) and that he told his father to use his garment as a shroud when the sacrifice was complete (IK, Ṭ). Thus Abraham's son is not a passive participant, as in the Biblical account, where he remains unaware of the Divine Command and asks, "Where is the lamb for a burnt offering?" (Genesis 22:7). Rather, he is a free and active participant who chooses complete obedience to God at the greatest personal sacrifice.

103 But when they had submitted and Abraham had laid him upon his forehead, 103 That they submitted means they submitted to God's Command (I, IK) or that they devoted themselves completely to God (R). Abraham laid his son upon his forehead, so that he would not have to see his face when sacrificing him (IK, T). According to Islamic tradition, the ritual of stoning Satan on the ḥajj is connected to this event, as Satan is said to have attempted to intervene in the performance of the sacrifice, at which time Abraham twice stoned him, each time with seven pebbles, until he disappeared (IK, Q, T).

104 We called unto him, "O Abraham!

104 Before Abraham could sacrifice his son, God called to him, and when he turned, Abraham found a fine white-horned ram to take his son's place in the sacrifice (IK). According to some accounts, the horns of this ram were kept in the Ka'bah, but were lost when the Ka'bah burned down in 63/683. This substitution of a ram for Abraham's son serves as the basis for the ritual of slaughtering an animal that is required as the final rite of the ḥajj.

105 Thou hast been true to the vision." Thus indeed do We recompense the virtuous.

105 That Abraham was true to the vision means that he carried out what he was commanded and that he achieved its goal by demonstrating complete obedience to God (R). Regarding the last sentence, which serves as a refrain in this sūrah, see 29:69c; 37:80c.

106 Truly this was the manifest trial.

106 That the command to sacrifice is described as a trial is also understood to mean that it was a blessing (Q), as it is through severe trials that God brings His pious servants the best reward in this life and the next, if they are able to faithfully endure them, as did Abraham (Ṭb).

107 Then We ransomed him with a great sacrifice.

107 According to tradition, the great sacrifice that ransomed the son was a ram that had grazed in the Garden of Paradise for forty years (IK, Q, Ṭ) and was brought to Abraham by the Archangel Gabriel (Ṭb).

108 And We left [a blessing] upon him among later generations:

109 “Peace be upon Abraham.”

108–9 See 37:77–79c.

110 Thus do We recompense the virtuous.

110 Cf. 6:84; 12:22; 28:14; 37:80, 105, 121, 131; 77:44; see 29:69c; 37:80c.

111 Truly he was among Our believing servants.

111 See 37:81c.

112 And We gave him glad tidings of Isaac, a prophet from among the righteous.

112 Cf. 11:71; 15:53–54. That Isaac is mentioned here is cited by some as support for the argument that it is Ishmael who is mentioned in v. 101 (IK, Ṭb), since Abraham’s fulfillment of the test with his first son is presented as the basis for his being given glad tidings of a second son. Others understand this verse as a separate statement affirming that Isaac was the subject of the sacrifice and was to be given the gift of prophethood (Q, Ṭ).

113 And We blessed him and Isaac. And among their progeny are the virtuous and those who clearly wrong themselves.

113 Him can refer to Abraham or Ishmael (Q). The blessing upon them is understood either as a multitude of offspring or the line of prophethood issuing through them (Q). That there will be both the virtuous and those who clearly wrong themselves among their progeny can be understood as a reminder that merely being descendants is not sufficient for salvation; they must also be believers and perform good deeds. In this way it is seen as a response to the attitude of some Jews and Christians when they say, We are the children of God, and His beloved ones (5:18).

114 And We were gracious unto Moses and Aaron.

114–20 For the Quranic account of Moses, see 7:103–55; 10:75–93; 17:101–4; 18:60–82; 20:9–97; 26:10–66; 27:7–14; 28:3–46; 40:23–45; 43:46–56; 44:17–31.

115 We saved them and their people from great distress

114–15 That God was gracious unto Moses and Aaron is a reference to either all of the worldly and religious blessings they were given (Ṭs) or specifically the gift of prophethood (IJ). Their being saved from the great distress means either that they were saved from the rule of Pharaoh and his people (Z; cf. 44:30–31) or that they were spared from being drowned in the sea like Pharaoh and his host (Q, R, Z).

116 and helped them, so that they were the victors.

116 Some see them and they here as references to Moses, Aaron, and their people, though others maintain that they refers only to Moses and Aaron (IJ, Q).

117 And We gave the two of them the Book that makes clear, 118 and guided the two of them upon the straight path.

117–18 The Book that makes clear is the Torah, which, like all revealed books, clarifies hidden matters of which people are ignorant (Ṭb). Thus it is also described as a Book wherein is a guidance and a light, by which the prophets who submitted [unto God] judged those who are Jews, as did the sages and the rabbis, in accordance with such of God’s Book as they were bidden to preserve and to which they were witnesses (5:44). Regarding their being guided upon the straight path, see 1:6c.

119 And We left [a blessing] upon them among later generations:

120 “Peace be upon Moses and Aaron.”

119–20 See 37:77–79c.

121 Thus indeed do We recompense the virtuous.

121 Cf. 6:84; 12:22; 28:14; 37:80, 105, 110, 131; 77:44; see 29:69c; 37:80c.

122 Truly they were among Our believing servants.

122 See 37:81c.

123 And truly Elias was among the message bearers

123 Elias (Ilyās) is regarded by many as another name for the prophet Idrīs (see 19:56–57; 21:85; IK, Q, Ṭ), though it is more likely that they are two different prophets, Elias (or Elijah) and Idrīs (or Enoch).

124 when he said to his people, “Will you not reverence?”

125 Do you call upon Baal and leave the most beautiful of creators?

126 God is your Lord and the Lord of your fathers of old.”

127 But they denied him; so they are surely to be arraigned.

128 Not so for God’s sincere servants.

124–28 As in the story of Abraham above, Elias rebukes his people for failing to worship God alone. Baal is said to be the name of an idol that the people worshipped, a word in their language for “Lord” (IJ, IK, Q), or the name of a woman whom they worshipped (IJ, Q). For their denial, they are arraigned unto the punishment, except for God’s sincere servants (Q).

129 And We left [a blessing] upon him among later generations:

130 “Peace be upon Elias.”

129–30 See 37:77–79c. The Arabic for Elias in v. 123 (as well as 6:85) is Ilyās, but here it is Ilyāsīn, which many believe is another rendering of the same name (Q, Ṭ). But it can also be read as a plural form, meaning “the Ilyāses,” or “the family of Ilyās,” which is then understood to mean Ilyās and those who followed his religion (Q, Ṭ, Z).

131 Thus indeed do We recompense the virtuous.

131 Cf. 6:84; 12:22; 28:14; 37:80, 105, 110, 121; 77:44; see 29:69c; 37:80c.

49 4 Truly he was among Our believing servants.

132 See 37:81c.

69 6 And truly Lot was among the message bearers.

133 For other narrative accounts of Lot, who is considered to be either Abraham's nephew or cousin, and Lot's people, see 7:80–84; 11:77–83; 15:57–77; 26:160–73; 27:54–58; 29:26–35; 54:33–38, and the similar Biblical narrative in Genesis 19.

134 Behold! We saved him and his family all together, 135 save for an old woman who was among those who lagged behind.

134–35 Him and his family refers either to Lot's immediate family or to all those who followed him. The old woman who . . . lagged behind is Lot's wife; see 7:83; 15:59–60; 26:171; 27:57; 29:32.

136 Then We destroyed the others.

136 After they refused to pay him any heed, the people of Lot's town were destroyed by stones of baked clay (11:82; 15:74) or a torrent of stones (54:34) that are said to have rained down upon them as a torment from Heaven (29:34); see also 7:84.

137 And truly you pass by them in the morning

138 and at night. Do you not understand?

137–38 These verses are addressed to the people of Makkah, who some say would pass by the remnants of Lot’s town on their travels to Syria (IJ, Ṭ). Others say that they refer to God’s having made the region of Lot’s people into a foul body of water that is on a well-traveled route (IK). But they fail to reflect upon the implications of these ruins (Ṭ).

139 And truly Jonah was among the message bearers.

139 For other accounts of the story of Jonah, see 6:86; 10:98; 21:87–88; 68:48–50. As in the Bible, Jonah is said to have fled from his prophetic mission upon a ship. Thus in 68:48 Muhammad is counseled, Be not like the companion of the fish, who cried out while choking with anguish. Raised as a poor child and in the care of ascetics and scholars from the age of seven until the age of twenty-five, Jonah was called to deliver God’s message to the people of Nineveh (Kisā’ī, Qiṣas al-anbiyā’).

140 Behold! He fled to the full-laden ship,

141 and then cast lots and was among those rejected.

140–41 According to the Biblical book of Jonah, Jonah, having fled “from the presence of the Lord” (1:3), is presented as having brought a tempest upon the ship (1:4–6). Realizing that some evil had beset them, the sailors cast lots to see on whose account they were beset. When the lots fell to Jonah, they said, “Tell us why this calamity has come upon us? What is your occupation? Where do you come from? What is your country? And of what people are you?” (1:7–8). When they discerned that it was on account of Jonah’s “fleeing from the presence of the Lord” that the tempest had come upon them, Jonah told them to cast him into the sea (1:12). They nonetheless strived to reach shore without sacrificing Jonah, but when the seas continued to rage, “they picked Jonah up and threw him into the sea; and the sea ceased from its raging” (1:15). According to some Quranic commentators, the sailors remained hesitant to throw Jonah in the sea; so he threw himself directly into the fish’s mouth when it rose, by God’s Command, to carry him away (IK). He then remained in the belly of the fish for three, seven, or forty days according to different accounts; according to another account he was swallowed in the morning and cast out in the evening (IK).

142 Then the fish swallowed him, for he was blameworthy.

142 Jonah was blameworthy for having fled Nineveh. It is reported that when he began calling them to repent, the Ninevites beat him. He continued preaching to them for forty days, but they dismissed him as mad (Kisāʾī, Qiṣaṣ al-anbiyāʾ). God then told Jonah to retreat to a hill above the city to watch the punishment come upon them, but when they repented and were spared, Jonah went away in anger, and thought We had no power over him (21:87). Some say that he was angry that they were not punished for having rejected him, and thus he fled on the ship (Kisāʾī, Qiṣaṣ).

143 And had he not been among those who glorify,

144 he would have tarried in its belly till the Day they are resurrected.

143–44 Had it not been for the life of devotion lived before these events, Jonah would have remained in the belly of the fish (IK, Ṭ). Thus some relate this story to a saying of the Prophet Muhammad, “Seek to know God in times of ease, and He will know you in times of difficulty” (IK). This verse can also be understood as a reference to Jonah’s having cried out in the darkness, “There is no god but Thee! Glory be to Thee! Truly I have been among the wrongdoers” (21:87; Aj, IK, Ṭ); for the more extensive prayer and repentance of Jonah in the Bible, see Jonah 2:1–9. If not for his praising God, he would have remained in the belly of the fish alive until the day on which human beings are resurrected (Aj), or the belly of the fish would have been his grave until the Day of Resurrection (Aj, T).

145 So We cast him, sick, upon the barren shore.

145 Jonah was washed up on the shore in answer to his prayers while in the belly of the fish, as in 21:88: So We answered him, and saved him from grief. Thus do We save the believers. Jonah's sickness was either that his body was weak or his heart was sick at having disobeyed God.

146 And We caused a gourd tree to grow over him.

146 The gourd tree is understood to be beneficial for both the shade and the nourishment it provides (IK). In the Book of Jonah, the tree appears at the end of the story (4:6–10), growing and withering in a miraculous fashion.

147 Then We sent him unto a hundred thousand or more.

147 Having repented, Jonah was then sent back to Nineveh, whose people had also repented and now accepted Jonah. Thus 10:98 says of them, Why has not a single town believed and benefitted from its belief, other than the people of Jonah? When they believed, We removed from them the punishment of disgrace in the life of this world, and We granted them enjoyment for a while.

148 And they believed; so We granted them enjoyment for a while.

148 The people of Nineveh now heeded Jonah's warning and, according to the Biblical account, declared a fast to atone for their sins; the king issued a decree declaring that human beings and animals should refrain from food and water, and all people must turn away from evil and violence (see Jonah 3:7–9). God then allowed them to enjoy their life on earth, spared of any Divine Punishment, until their appointed end (IK).

149 So ask them, does your Lord have daughters while they have sons?

149–53 These verses, similar to 43:16 and 52:39, now turn to criticism of the belief that God has sons or daughters (cf. 2:116; 6:100; 9:30; 10:68; 17:40, 111; 18:4; 19:35, 88–93; 21:26; 25:2; 39:4; 43:16, 81–82; 52:39; 72:3). The idolaters are initially asked how they can attribute daughters to God, when they themselves prefer sons and are distressed by daughters, as in 16:57–58: And they assign unto God daughters—glory be to Him!—while they have that which they desire. And when one of them receives tidings of a female [child], his face darkens, and he is choked with anguish (cf. 43:17). Criticism is aimed not only at the belief itself, but also at its lack of internal logic; see also 43:16; 52:39; 53:21–22.

150 Or did We create the angels female, while they were witnesses?

150 The question asks, “How have they been able to assign gender to the angels, whom they view as consorts of God, when they have no knowledge of their creation?” See also 43:19: And they have made the angels, who are servants of the Compassionate, females. Did they witness their creation?

151 Behold! It is of their own perversion that they say, 152 “God has begotten,” while truly they are liars.

151–52 Perversion renders ifk, which is also understood to mean “delusion,” “deception,” or “falsehood”; see 29:61c. The idolaters’ assertion that God has begotten is related to their saying that angels are females, as some of them conceived of God as having consorts with whom He begat other deities. Thus 6:101 asks, How should He have a child when He has no consort, and He created all things?

153 Has He chosen daughters over sons?

153 Similar to this verse, 17:40 asks, Did your Lord favor you with sons, while He took females from among the angels [for Himself]? Surely you speak a monstrous word!

154 What ails you? How do you judge?

154 This verse asks, in effect, “What kind of reasoning would make you say such things?” (IK) or “Given the incoherency of your worldview, how can you maintain such things?” Cf. 10:35; 68:36.

155 Do you not reflect?

155 This verse is one of the Quran’s many invitations to reflect upon the nature of God’s creation in order to facilitate spiritual understanding; see also 3:191c; 11:24, 30; 16:17; 30:8; 45:23c; 56:62. Here the implication is that if the idolaters did indeed reflect, they would see the falsity of their claims and the vacuity of their worldview.

156 Or have you a manifest authority?

157 Bring your Book, then, if you are truthful.

156–57 Manifest authority is understood as a reference to revelation, as when Moses is reported to have been sent with a manifest authority (4:153; 11:96; 23:45; 40:23; 44:19; 51:38). Thus, while vv. 154–55 reproach the idolaters for having no intellectual proofs to substantiate their assertion that God has begotten offspring, these verses reproach them for having no revealed source to substantiate their claims. In the same vein, 35:40 asks rhetorically, Do they have a share in the heavens, or did We give them a book, such that they stand upon a clear proof from it? (cf. 34:44; 46:4; 57:37–38; 68:47); see 35:40c; 46:4c.

158 They have made kinship between Him and the jinn—yet the jinn know that they will surely be arraigned;

158 Despite all of the claims that the idolaters make regarding the jinn, the jinn themselves know that they are powerless before God and that, like human beings, they will be arraigned before God on the Day of Judgment. Thus Satan, regarded by most as the head of the evil jinn, will say to human beings after they have disbelieved as a result of following his prompting, Surely I am quit of you. Truly I fear God, the Lord of the worlds (59:16; cf. 14:22).

159 Glory be to God above that which they ascribe.

159 Cf. 21:22; 23:91; 37:180c.

160 Not so for God's sincere servants.

160 Cf. vv. 74, 128. God's sincere servants do not ascribe to the jinn kinship with God, as do the idolaters.

161 For truly neither you nor that which you worship

162 can tempt any against Him,

163 save he who is to burn in Hellfire.

161–63 Neither the disbelievers nor the jinn have any power to misguide or mislead, as God has already decreed each individual's final end. This passage thus reflects another aspect of God's Words to Satan, As for My servants, truly thou hast no authority over them (17:65). Satan himself acknowledges this, saying, I shall cause them to err all together, save Thy sincere servants among them (38:82–83; cf.

①64 There is none among us, but that he has a known station.

164 These are understood to be the words of the angels (R, Ṭ), each of whom is assigned a station that is never left; some remain bowing, never straightening their spines; others remain prostrating, never lifting their heads (Z). In the immediate context, this verse is a declaration that they, like the jinn, know that any worship of them is misplaced (R). More broadly speaking, that all angels have a known station indicates that they have, like all created things other than human beings and jinn, no freedom to move from one station or level of being to another. In contrast, human beings and jinn have unknown stations and only reach their final known stations at the moment of death. As Ibn ʿArabī writes of human beings and jinn, “[Their] stations are designated and ordained within God’s Knowledge and unseen by them. Each of them reaches his station at the end of his breaths. Thus his last breath is in his known station upon which he dies. That is why they have been called to travel. Hence they travel, either upwardly by answering the summons or the revealed Law (Sharīʿah) or downwardly by answering the command of desire whence they know not, until after the object of desire has been attained. Hence each individual among man and jinn reaches in his traveling the known station for which he was created” (Futūḥāt, I 258.35–40).

①65 And truly we are those who are ranged [in ranks].

①66 Truly we are those who glorify.

165–66 The combination of the reference to their being ranged [in ranks] for prayer and worship (IK, R) and their glorifying God indicates that it is the angels who are meant. Ranged [in ranks] can also be understood as a reference to the hierarchy in which the angels are arranged, which is part of the universal hierarchy of existence.

167 Indeed, they used to say,

168 “If only we had a reminder from those of old,

169 then we would indeed be God’s sincere servants.”

170 But they disbelieved in it. So soon they will know, 167–70 Before the revelation of the Quran, the idolaters reportedly claimed that were a reminder, meaning a revealed Book like the Torah or the Gospel, to come to them, they would devote themselves to worshipping God. Then when the Quran came, they denied it (R); see also 6:155–57c. This is similar to their denial of the Prophet in 35:42–3. Nonetheless on the Day of Judgment, they will know the truth of what they rejected (cf. 15:3, 96; 29:66; 40:70; 43:89).

171 for indeed Our Word has already gone forth unto Our message bearers

172 that they will surely be helped,

173 and that Our host will surely be victorious.

171–73 God has already informed His messengers that they will prevail over the disbelievers, in both this world and the next (IK), as in 40:51–52: Truly We shall help Our messengers and those who believe during the life of this world and on the Day when the witnesses arise, the Day when the excuses of the wrongdoers will not benefit them and theirs will be the curse, and theirs will be the evil abode. From a Quranic perspective, all prophetic missions are ultimately victorious, because God has decreed, “I shall surely prevail, I and My messengers!” (58:21).

174 So turn away from them for a time,

174 Cf. 3:178. On the one hand, the Prophet is told to turn away from the disbelievers so that he can concentrate upon tending to the believers, as in 51:54–55:

So turn away from them, for thou shalt not be blamed. And remind, for truly the reminder benefits the believers. On the other hand, he is told to turn away from them, because God will deal justly with them in due time, as in 54:6: So turn away from them on the Day wherein the Caller will call unto a terrible thing. The words for a time are understood to mean until death (IJ, Q), until the Day of Resurrection (R), until the Command is given to fight the disbelievers (IJ), until the Battle of Badr, (IJ, Q, R), or until the conquest of Makkah (IJ, Q, R). Thus some claim that this verse has been abrogated by other verses enjoining the Prophet and his followers to fight (IJ, IK, Q); see also commentary on 9:1–5, 29.

175 and observe them; for they will soon observe.

175 Cf. 3:179. The Prophet is told to observe what befalls the disbelievers in this life and the next, for they will observe the Divine Aid and Support that comes to him in this life and the great reward that he will receive in the next (R). It could also be understood to mean that they will soon observe the punishment of the Day of Resurrection (Q).

176 Do they seek to hasten Our Punishment?

176 The Prophet had warned the idolaters of an impending punishment, but they mocked the warning, saying things such as When will this promise come to pass, if you are truthful? (10:48; 21:38; 27:71; 34:29; 36:48; 67:25), and going so far as to say, O God, if this be the truth from Thee, rain down stones upon us from the sky, or bring upon us a painful punishment (8:32). For other passages where the disbelievers challenge the Prophet to hasten their punishment, see 10:50–51; 13:6; 22:47; 26:204; 27:46, 72; 29:53; 38:16; 51:14.

177 When it alights in their very midst, evil will be the morning of those who were warned!

177 The punishment will then alight upon the disbelievers when they least expect it, as in 29:53: And it will surely come upon them suddenly, while they are unaware (cf. 21:40; 26:201–2; 39:56).

178 So turn away from them for a time,

179 and observe; for they will soon observe.

178–79 Cf. vv. 174–75. The repetition of these verses can be seen as a reaffirmation of this essential lesson (IK), or the first instance can be understood as a reference to observing things in this world and this second instance as a reference to observing the events of the Hereafter (R).

180 Glory be to thy Lord, the Lord of Might, above that which they ascribe.

180 Cf. 23:91; 37:159. On one level, above that which they ascribe refers to the partners that the idolaters ascribe to God (IJ), but on another level it refers to God’s complete transcendence beyond all that is other than Him (Q) and the inability of any human description of God to attain to God’s true Nature, since naught is like unto Him (42:11). In this vein, the sixth Shiite Imam, Ja^cfar al-Şādiq, is reported to have said, “Whosoever likens God to His creatures assigns partners unto Him. God does not resemble anything, and nothing resembles Him. And whatever occurs to the mind, He is other than that.”

181 Peace be upon the message bearers.

182 And praise be to God, Lord of the worlds.

181–82 Regarding the messengers, the Prophet is reported to have said, “If you send peace upon me, send peace upon the messengers, for I am a messenger among the messengers” (IK, Q, T); regarding greetings of peace upon the Prophet, see 33:56c. It is reported that the Prophet would often recite vv. 180–82 at the end of his prayers (Q) and that °Alī ibn Abī Ṭālib, in a saying sometimes attributed to the Prophet (IK), counseled, “Whosoever desires that the greatest measure of reward be measured for him on the Day of Resurrection, let his last words at any gathering be Glory be to thy Lord, the Lord of Might, above that which they ascribe. Peace be upon the message bearers. And praise be to God, Lord of the worlds” (Bg).

Şād

Şād

Şād is a Makkan sūrah believed to have been revealed directly after Sūrah 54, al-Qamar (JJ). It takes its name from the opening letter, şād, one of the separated letters with which twenty-nine sūrahs begin. It also is known to some as Dā'ūd, or “David” (Aj), since it provides the most extensive account of the Prophet David in the Quran.

From one perspective, the opening verses are a response to the claim of the disbelievers in 37:168–69: If only we had a reminder from those of old, then we would indeed be God's sincere servants (Aj, Āl). V. 1 alludes to the fact that the Quran contains what they claim to desire, but v. 2 explains that they will not accept it, because of their disposition toward vainglory and schism. From another perspective, this sūrah follows upon the promise that God's host will surely be victorious (37:173) in that it begins by denouncing the Quraysh as a mere host among the parties yonder routed (v. 11), refers to other tribes that were routed for their defiance (vv. 12–16), and then shows the ways in which different prophets triumphed over the trials sent to them by God (Bq).

Şād begins by denouncing the Quraysh for their disbelief in the Prophet Muhammad and questioning the internal logic of their beliefs (vv. 1–11). A general recounting of the fate that befell the parties who had denied previous prophets (vv. 12–16) then leads into accounts of the trials that confronted the prophets David (vv. 17–26), Solomon (vv. 30–40), and Job (vv. 41–44). A brief mention of other prophets (vv. 45–48) then segues into a discussion of the blessings of Paradise (vv. 49–54), the punishments of Hell (vv. 55–61), and the way the denizens of Hell wonder why those whom they had thought to be astray are not in Hell with them (vv. 62–64). A brief affirmation of God’s Omnipotence and the Prophet’s inability to produce anything more than what God has revealed to him (vv. 65–70) introduces the last section (vv. 71–85), which discusses the creation of Adam, God’s commanding the angels to prostrate to him, and the refusal of Iblīs, or Satan, to do so. The sūrah closes with a final address in which the Prophet is instructed to promise the Quraysh that they will eventually know the truth of the revelation (vv. 86–88).

① Ṣād. By the Quran possessed of remembrance. ② Nay, but those who disbelieve are in vainglory and schism. ③ How many a generation before them have We destroyed? And they called out when the time for escape had passed. ④ Now they marvel that a warner from among themselves has come unto them, and the disbelievers say, “This is a lying sorcerer. ⑤ Has he made the gods one God? Truly this is an astounding thing!” ⑥ And the notables among them set out, [saying], “Go! Be steadfast to your gods. Truly this is a thing desired. ⑦ We did not hear of this in the creed of latter days. This is naught but an invention. ⑧ Has the Reminder been sent down upon him among all of us?” Nay, but they are in doubt regarding My Reminder! Nay, they have not yet tasted My Punishment! ⑨ Or have they the treasures of thy Lord’s Mercy, the Mighty, the Bestower? ⑩ Or have they sovereignty over the heavens and the earth and whatsoever is between them? Then let them ascend by some means; ⑪ a host among the parties yonder routed. ⑫ The people of Noah denied before them, as did ʿĀd and Pharaoh of the tent poles, ⑬ Thamūd, the people of Lot, and the inhabitants of the thicket; they are the parties. ⑭ Each of them did naught but deny the messengers; so My Retribution came due. ⑮ They await naught but a single cry for which there is no delay. ⑯ And they say, “Our Lord, hasten our share unto us before the Day of Reckoning.” ⑰ Bear patiently that which they say, and remember Our servant David, possessed of might; truly he turned oft [unto God]. ⑱ Truly We compelled the mountains to join him in glorifying at eventide and at the break of day. ¹⁹ And the birds gathered, each turning oft unto Him. ²⁰ And We strengthened his sovereignty and gave him wisdom and decisive speech. ²¹ Has the report of the dispute come unto thee, when they scaled the sanctuary? ²² When they entered upon David, he was frightened of them. They said, “Fear not! We are two disputants: one of us has transgressed against the other; so judge between us with truth. Be not unjust, and guide us unto the right path. ²³ Behold, this, my brother, has ninety-nine ewes, and I have one ewe. Yet he has said, ‘Place her under my care,’ and has overpowered me in speech.” ²⁴ He said, “He has indeed wronged you in asking that your ewe be added to his ewes. Truly many associates transgress against one another, save those who believe and perform righteous deeds. Yet how few are they!” And David understood that We had tried him; so he sought forgiveness from his Lord, fell down kneeling, and repented. ²⁵ Thus did We forgive him that. Truly nearness unto Us shall be his, and a beautiful return. ²⁶ O David! Truly We have appointed thee as a vicegerent upon the earth; so judge among the people with truth and follow not caprice, lest it lead thee astray from the way of God. Truly those who stray from the way of God, theirs shall be a severe punishment for having forgotten the Day of Reckoning. ²⁷ And We did not create Heaven and earth and whatsoever is between them in vain; that is the conjecture of those who disbelieve. So woe before the Fire unto those who disbelieve in the Fire! ²⁸ Or shall We make those who believe and perform righteous deeds like those who work corruption upon the earth? Or shall We make the reverent like the profligate? ²⁹ A blessed Book that We have sent down upon thee, that they may contemplate His signs and that those possessed of intellect may reflect. ³⁰ And We bestowed Solomon upon David; how excellent a servant! Truly he turned oft [unto God]. ³¹ When at eventide noble steeds swift of foot were displayed before him, ³² he said, “I have loved the love of good things over the remembrance of my Lord, until [the sun] was taken behind the veil. ³³ Bring them back unto me!” Then he began to stroke their legs and necks. ³⁴ And We did indeed try Solomon, and We cast a corpse upon his throne. He then repented, 35 saying, “My Lord, forgive me and bestow a kingdom upon me such as shall not befit anyone after me. Truly Thou art the Bestower.” 36 So We made the wind subservient unto him, coursing gently by his command whither he wished, 37 as well as the satans, every builder and diver, 38 and others, bound together in fetters: 39 “This is Our Gift; so bestow graciously or withhold without reckoning.” 40 Truly nearness unto Us shall be his, and a beautiful return. 41 And remember Our servant Job, when he called upon his Lord, “Truly Satan has afflicted me with weariness and punishment.” 42 “Strike with thy foot; this is cool water wherewith to wash and to drink.” 43 And We bestowed upon him his family and their like along with them as a mercy from Us and a reminder for possessors of intellect. 44 And, “Take with thy hand a bundle of rushes and strike therewith, and break not thine oath.” Truly We found him to be steadfast. What an excellent servant! Truly he turned oft [unto God]. 45 And remember Our servants Abraham, Isaac and Jacob, possessed of strength and sight. 46 Truly We purified them with that which is pure—remembrance of the Abode. 47 And truly in Our Sight they are among the chosen, the elect. 48 And remember Ishmael, Elisha, and Dhu’l-Kifl; each is among the excellent. 49 This is a reminder. And for the reverent there will surely be a beautiful return, 50 Gardens of Eden, the gates whereof are open unto them, 51 reclining therein, they call therein for abundant fruit and drink. 52 And theirs shall be maidens of modest gaze, of like age. 53 This is that which you are promised for the Day of Reckoning. 54 This indeed is Our provision which shall never be spent. 55 This it shall be! Yet for the rebellious there will surely be a most evil return, 56 Hell, wherein they will burn. What an evil resting place! 57 This it shall be! So let them taste it, a boiling liquid and a cold, murky fluid, 58 coupled with other [punishments] similar in kind. 59 This troop rushing in with you—no greeting for them! They will surely burn in the Fire. 60 They will say, “Nay, but no greeting for you! You have sent it forth for us. What an evil dwelling place!” 61 They will say, “O Lord! Whosoever has sent this forth for us, increase him twofold in punishment in the Fire.” 62 And they will say, “How is it that we do not see men here whom we had counted among the evil? 63 Did we take them in mockery? Or have our eyes swerved away from them?” 64 Surely that is true: the disputing of the people of the Fire. 65 Say, “I am only a warner, and there is no god but God, the One, the Paramount, 66 Lord of the heavens and the earth and whatsoever is between them, the Mighty, the Forgiving.” 67 Say, “It is a great tiding 68 from which you turn away. 69 I have no knowledge of the Highest Assembly, when they dispute. 70 Naught is revealed unto me but that I am only a clear warner.” 71 [Remember] when thy Lord said unto the angels, “Behold! I am creating a human being from clay. 72 When I have proportioned him and breathed into him of My Spirit, fall down before him prostrating.” 73 Then the angels prostrated, all of them together. 74 Not so Iblīs. He waxed arrogant, and was among the disbelievers. 75 [God] said, “O Iblīs! What has prevented thee from prostrating unto that which I created with My two Hands? Dost thou wax arrogant, or art thou among the exalted?” 76 He said, “I am better than him. Thou hast created me from fire, while Thou hast created him from clay.” 77 He said, “Go forth from it! Surely thou art outcast! 78 And surely My Curse shall be upon thee till the Day of Judgment.” 79 He said, “My Lord! Grant me respite till the Day they are resurrected.” 80 He said, “Then verily thou art among those granted respite 81 till the Day of the Moment Known.” 82 He said, “Then, by Thy Might, I shall cause them to err all together, 83 save Thy sincere servants among them.” 84 He said, “This is the truth, and the truth I speak, 85 ‘I shall surely fill Hell with thee and with such of them as follow thee, all together.’” 86 Say, “I ask not of you any reward for it, nor am I among the pretenders. 87 It is naught but a reminder for the worlds, 88 and you will certainly know its tiding after a time.”

Commentary

① Ṣād. By the Quran possessed of remembrance.

1 The Arabic letter ṣād is among the separated letters (al-muqattaʿāt), which are found at the beginning of twenty-nine sūrahs and whose meaning is considered by most commentators to be known only to God; see 2:1c. Ṣād is given several possible meanings. It may be an allusion to the Names of God beginning with the letter ṣād (IJ, Ṭs), such as al-Ṣamad, “the Eternally Sufficient unto Himself,” al-Ṣāniʿ, “the Maker,” and al-Ṣādiq, “the Truthful” (R); an abbreviation for a phrase, such as ṣadaqa Allāh, “God has spoken the truth,” or al-Ṣādiq Allāh, “the Truthful One is God,” or ṣadaqa Muḥammad, “Muhammad has spoken the truth” (R); one of the names of the Quran (IJ, Ṭs); or a name for this sūrah (IJ, R, Ṭs). Remembrance translates dhikr, which in this context is understood to mean “honor” or “renown” (sharaf; IJ, IK, Ṭ), as it is also understood in 43:44 and 94:4 (R, Ṭs), or clarification (bayān; IJ, R), because the verse mentions those things that, when reflected upon, lead one to the truth (Ṭs). Dhikr is also employed in several verses as a name for the Quran, in which case it is rendered “the Reminder,” as in 21:10: We have indeed sent down unto you a Book wherein is your Reminder; see also 36:69c. This verse can thus be understood as an oath invoking the Quran, which is possessed of remembrance, because it possesses those things that remind one of God, His Oneness, His Names and Attributes, His prophets, stories of previous communities, the Resurrection, and the Divine Decree, as alluded to in 6:38: We have neglected nothing in the Book (Ṭs).

② Nay, but those who disbelieve are in vainglory and schism.

2 Vainglory renders ʿizzah, which, when used to describe a human attitude, connotes the belief that one is exempt from following anyone other than oneself, as in 2:206: And when it is said to him, “Reverence God,” vainglory seizes him sinfully (R). Schism renders shiqāq (cf. 2:137, 176; 22:53; 41:52), which conveys a sense of fracture or separation and connotes an attitude of enmity, disobedience, opposition, and defiance (Ṭs), because one deems oneself equal or superior to someone whom one opposes (R), in this case the Prophet.

③ How many a generation before them have We destroyed? And they called out when the time for escape had passed.

3 God then warns the disbelievers of the destruction that befell those before them who had an attitude of vainglory and schism toward the prophets God had sent them. This is one of several verses to refer to towns (6:6; 7:4; 21:11; 22:45, 48; 47:13) and whole generations (17:17; 19:74; 20:128; 36:31; 38:3; 50:36) that were destroyed for their iniquities and their refusal to accept the messengers God sent. That they called out when the time for escape had passed means that only when the punishment came upon them did they actually believe, but as God had already given them warning and a reprieve so that they could heed the warning, there was no more opportunity for them to achieve salvation; see also 21:12–13; 23:63–65; commentary on 40:83–85; as well as the story of Pharaoh in 10:90–91.

④ Now they marvel that a warner from among themselves has come unto them, and the disbelievers say, “This is a lying sorcerer.

4 Here and in the almost identical 50:2, the incredulity of the idolaters is directed toward God for having chosen as a prophet either someone who did not formerly have high social standing among them, as in v. 8, or a human being rather than an angel, as in 25:7, where the disbelievers ask, What ails this Messenger, who eats food and walks in the markets? Why is there not an angel sent down unto him to be a warner with him? (see also 6:8–9; 11:12; 14:10; 17:94; 23:33; 36:15; 41:14; 54:24; 64:6c). For other verses that speak of their marveling at this phenomenon, see 7:69; 10:2. In deriding the Prophet, the disbelievers labeled him a sorcerer (see also 10:2; 51:52), a charge also leveled against Moses (7:109; 26:34; 51:39) and Jesus (5:110; 61:6).

⑤ Has he made the gods one God? Truly this is an astounding thing!”

Rather than heeding the Prophet or considering what he said, the leaders of the Quraysh hardened their opposition to him, agreeing to be steadfast to their gods and firm in their own religion. This was in part because they believed that if they abandoned the worship of their idols, they would be afflicted with famine and distress (Ṭs). Their reasoning was that if they had not heard this message from their predecessors, then it must be something false (R). Thus to their minds the Quran must have been an invention or a fabrication by Muhammad (see 21:5; 25:4; 32:3; 34:8, 43; 42:24; 46:8), a charge also brought against Noah by the leaders among his people (23:38) and against Moses by Pharaoh and his hosts (28:36). For responses to this charge, see 10:37–38; 11:13, 35; 12:11; 46:8. Regarding the tendency of leaders and notables to reject revelation, see 34:34c.

⑥ And the notables among them set out, [saying], “Go! Be steadfast to your gods. Truly this is a thing desired.

⑦ We did not hear of this in the creed of latter days. This is naught but an invention.

5–7 These verses reportedly repeat the words expressed by some of the leaders among the Quraysh. They had gone with the Prophet to his uncle and protector, Abū Ṭālib, to complain about the Prophet’s preaching. When asked by his uncle, “What do you want from your people?” the Prophet responded, “O my uncle! I only want from them a single declaration, which if they say it, the Arabs will follow them and the non-Arabs will pay tribute to them.” The leaders of the Quraysh said, “One declaration! By thy father! We will say ten! What is it?” And Abū Ṭālib asked, “What is the declaration, O son of my brother?” And the Prophet responded, “There is no god but God.” At which the leaders stood up and scoffed, Has he made the gods one God? Truly this is an astounding thing! (IK, Q, R, Ṭ). According to other accounts, this event occasioned the revelation of vv. 1–7 (IJ).

⑧ Has the Reminder been sent down upon him among all of us?” Nay, but they are in doubt regarding My Reminder! Nay, they have not yet tasted My Punishment!

8 V. 4 reflects the disbelievers’ astonishment that a human being rather than an angel was sent to them with a revelation, and this verse shows their reticence to accept the fact that, if God were to choose a human being, He would have chosen an orphan with little wealth or political power. Their reaction is similar to the idolaters' question in 43:31: Why was this Quran not sent down to a great man from one of the two towns (i.e., Makkah and Ṭā'if)? In this sense, while v. 4 expresses their amazement, this verse and 43:31 reveal their jealousy. They doubt God's Reminder, meaning the Quran. The last sentence can be understood to mean that they continue to doubt, because they have not yet tasted God's Punishment, but that, were they to taste it, they would know (R). Nay translates the emphatic particle bal, which can either negate or affirm. If understood as affirming, the verse would be rendered, "Indeed, they are in doubt regarding My Reminder! Indeed, they will taste My Punishment!"

9 Or have they the treasures of thy Lord's Mercy, the Mighty, the Bestower?

9 This verse asks whether the disbelievers have the keys to prophecy, so that they can have it come upon whomever they will (IJ, Ṭs). It can also be understood more broadly as a reference to all of the mercies bestowed by God, as in 43:32: Is it they who apportion the Mercy of thy Lord? We have apportioned for them their livelihood in the life of this world and have raised some of them above others in rank, that some of them may take others into service. And the Mercy of thy Lord is better than that which they amass. Elsewhere, the Prophet is told to say to the disbelievers, Were you to possess the treasures of my Lord's Mercy, you would surely withhold them, out of fear of spending. Man is ever miserly! (17:100).

10 Or have they sovereignty over the heavens and the earth and whatsoever is between them? Then let them ascend by some means;

10 This rhetorical question, posed as both rebuke and derision, is similar to questions posed in 4:53–55; 42:21; 43:79. If the disbelievers do indeed possess such power, then let them ascend through the doors of Heaven by their own machinations (IJ), then send the revelation down upon those whom they choose (R, Z). This verse also evokes imagery similar to that found in 22:15: Whosoever thinks that God will not help him in this world and the Hereafter, let him stretch out a rope to Heaven.

⑪ a host among the parties yonder routed.

11 This verse serves as a segue into the discussion of earlier peoples who were destroyed for denying the messengers sent to them and promises that those who oppose the Prophet will face the same fate. Yonder is thus understood as an allusion to a point in the future when the disbelievers will be defeated or vanquished or to a place at a distance. Some say that it refers to the Battle of Badr (IJ, Ṭs), which would take place some years later in 2/624, while others consider it to be a reference to the Battle of the Trench in the year 5/627 (Ṭs).

⑫ The people of Noah denied before them, as did °Ād and Pharaoh of the tent poles, 12 For the Quranic account of Noah, see 7:59–64; 10:71–73; 11:25–48; 21:76–77; 23:23–30; 26:105–21; 37:75–82; 54:9–15, and Sūrah 71. °Ād was a pre-Islamic Arabian tribe who rejected the prophet Hūd; see 7:65–72; 11:50–60. The precise meaning of awtād (cf. 89:10), here translated tent poles, is debated. Ibn °Abbās says that awtād refers to the large army that served to establish Pharaoh’s rule, as many tent poles bespeak a large army (IJ). Awtād is also said to refer to Pharaoh’s alleged practice of using four stakes (awtād) to impale his victims and then leaving them for dead (IJ, Ṭs). Awtād can also mean “pillars,” thus evoking an Arabic expression for someone who is always severe or firm, “He has firm pillars” (IJ).

⑬ Thamūd, the people of Lot, and the inhabitants of the thicket; they are the parties.

⑭ Each of them did naught but deny the messengers; so My Retribution came due.

13–14 Like the tribe of °Ād, with whom it is often mentioned, the tribe of Thamūd was a pre-Islamic Arabian tribe who rejected the prophet sent to them; see 7:73–79; 11:61–68. For Lot’s rejection by his people, see 15:57–77; 26:160–73. For the inhabitants of the thicket, who are said to have rejected the prophet Shu^ʿayb, see 26:176–89. In this context, that they are the parties is meant to convey that the Quraysh constitute another of these parties (IJ, R, Ṭs), all of whom share the same fate of being punished for having denied the messengers sent to them, though in different ways. This last phrase could also be understood to mean, “They were the parties,” alluding to the fact that the people of these previous tribes were wealthier and mightier than the Quraysh, but were defeated nonetheless (IK, R).

⑮ They await naught but a single cry for which there is no delay.

15 Here they refers either to the Quraysh or to all of the groups mentioned in the previous verses. When taken as a reference to the Quraysh, a single cry (cf. 36:29, 49; 37:19; 79:13) refers to the first blast of Seraphiel’s trumpet, which will level all that is on the earth. When taken as a reference to all of the groups, a single cry refers to the second blast, which heralds the Resurrection. For the relation between the two blasts or cries, see 39:68c.

⑯ And they say, “Our Lord, hasten our share unto us before the Day of Reckoning.”

16 This verse is understood to be one of many verses in which the disbelievers mockingly seek to hasten their punishment (see 10:50–51; 13:6; 22:47; 26:204; 27:46, 72; 29:53; 37:176; 51:14). It may also refer to their asking for the rewards of the Garden when the Prophet described them (IJ, IK), thus alluding to their belief that they are in fact good and will receive reward rather than punishment when their account is taken, as in 2:11: And when it is said unto them, “Do not work corruption upon the earth,” they say, “We are only working righteousness.” Here our share renders qitṭanā, which is also understood to mean “our book on which the record of our deeds is inscribed,” “our account,” or “our decree” (IJ).

⑰ Bear patiently that which they say, and remember Our servant David, possessed of might; truly he turned oft [unto God].

17 The injunction to bear patiently in the face of insults from the disbelievers (cf. 20:130; 50:39; 73:10) is addressed to the Prophet (IJ, Q), but can also be understood as counsel for all believers. It can also be understood to convey an attitude of tolerance and forbearance that should prevail whenever circumstances permit, though many claim it is abrogated by 9:5 (IJ, Q). The combination of injunctions, to be patient and to tell the stories of David and other prophets, implies that conveying these stories may serve to persuade the disbelievers of the reality of Muhammad’s prophethood (Q) or to console the Prophet to know of the trials that other prophets faced and their ability to overcome them. That David is possessed of might means that he had strength in both obeying and serving God (IK, Q, Sy) or in both prophethood and kingship, as he was given great strength in both domains (Aj). That he turned oft [unto God] (cf. 38:30, 44) means either that he repented, in the same way that the Prophet would regularly ask forgiveness of God a hundred times every day (Q), that he turned to God in all of his affairs (Aj, IK, R), or that he lived in a state of perpetual servanthood (Futūḥāt II 227.11). The Prophet Muhammad is reported to have said of David, “The prayer most loved by God is the prayer of David, and the fast most loved by God is the fast of David. He would sleep half the night, stand in prayer one-third of the night, and then sleep for its sixth part. And he would fast one day and break fast another day” (IJ, IK).

18 Truly We compelled the mountains to join him in glorifying at eventide and at the break of day.

18 It is already in the nature of the mountains and the birds to glorify God, since whatsoever is in the heavens and whatsoever is on the earth glorify God (59:1; 61:1; 62:1; 64:1; cf. 57:1; 59:24). That they are compelled to glorify God with David (cf. 21:79; 34:10) thus alludes to his properly fulfilling the function of God’s vicegerent upon the earth (v. 26; cf. 6:165), in whose prayer all of creation takes part. At eventide and at the break of day may be understood to mean at the two ends of the day or at all times. David’s prayer at the break of day is understood by many commentators to mean in the early morning after the time of the obligatory fajr prayer. It is thus taken as an allusion to the supererogatory prayer after sunrise but before noon, al-duḥā (Aj, IJ, IK, Q).

19 And the birds gathered, each turning oft unto Him.

19 The birds would gather, many say, because of the beauty of David's voice when he sang his prayers and would turn to God with their own praise. The pronoun in unto Him could also be rendered "him" if understood as a reference to David, meaning that the birds followed his commands (Aj, IK) and glorified God with him (Q).

20 And We strengthened his sovereignty and gave him wisdom and decisive speech.

20 In the Islamic tradition, David's kingdom was considered to have been the most powerful in the world (IK), but its strength and power derived from Divine Aid (R). Wisdom is understood here as a reference to prophethood (IJ, IK, Q) or to understanding and sound reasoning (IJ, Q). This verse could also be understood to mean that his kingdom was strengthened through the gift of virtuous and truthful ministers to assist him (ST). Decisive speech means clarity and truth of speech, the knowledge of giving decrees and administering justice (IJ), or the ability to make clear and decisive judgments between a plaintiff and a defendant (IJ), and thus denotes sound reasoning or sage judgment. From another perspective, decisive speech is related to the gift of revelation, in which case it refers to God's Speech. Decisive renders faṣl, which means "division" or "separation." Here it connotes speech that makes a clear division between right and wrong or truth and falsehood. Faṣl is also related to faṣṣala, meaning "to expound," which is used to describe the Quran as a Book whose signs have been expounded as an Arabic Quran for a people who know (41:3; cf. 7:52; 11:1). The wisdom given to David and other prophets thus includes the ability to "differentiate" (faṣṣala) between different aspects of reality and to "expound" them for others in a decisive and clear manner, just as God expounded them for the prophets.

21 Has the report of the dispute come unto thee, when they scaled the sanctuary?

22 When they entered upon David, he was frightened of them. They said, “Fear not! We are two disputants: one of us has transgressed against the other; so judge between us with truth. Be not unjust, and guide us unto the right path.

23 Behold, this, my brother, has ninety-nine ewes, and I have one ewe. Yet he has said, ‘Place her under my care,’ and has overpowered me in speech.”

24 He said, “He has indeed wronged you in asking that your ewe be added to his ewes. Truly many associates transgress against one another, save those who believe and perform righteous deeds. Yet how few are they!” And David understood that We had tried him; so he sought forgiveness from his Lord, fell down kneeling, and repented.

21–24 The plain sense of this story provides an example of David’s judging equitably between two parties. Many commentators, however, connect it to the Biblical account in which David fell in love with Bathsheba (transliterated as Bathshabā^c or translated as Bint al-Qasam, “Daughter of the Oath”) and then sent her husband, Uriah the Hittite, to the front lines of the battlefield, where he would be killed, so that David would be free to marry her (Q, T; see 2 Samuel 11). But the idea that David had adulterous relations with Bathsheba before Uriah’s death, found in 2 Samuel 11:4–5, is considered by Muslims to be an abomination that could not have been committed by a prophet. Hence this detail is not found in most Islamic accounts.

The basis for relating these verses to the Biblical account of Bathsheba is interpreting the case of the one ewe being taken into the flock of ninety-nine ewes as a metaphor for David’s actions—David, who had many wives, took Bathsheba, Uriah’s only wife (IJ, Q, T)—and their similarity to the challenge that Nathan puts to David in 2 Samuel 12. This interpretation is supported by David’s passing judgment after hearing the words of the plaintiff, representing Uriah’s position, without having heard the argument of the defendant, representing David’s position. Thus David realized that this was a metaphor for his own misdeeds, and his words in v. 24 are a condemnation of his own actions. He then sought forgiveness, fell prostrate, and repented. According to this interpretation, the two visitors were angels sent by God in the form of human beings (Āl, IJ, Q, T). God’s trial of David (that We had tried him) would then refer to the entire story, from David’s desiring Bathsheba to his moment of self-reckoning. It is said that God sent this trial because David had asked to be raised to the station of Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob; God responded by sending him a trial similar to those he had sent upon them (Ṭ).

Other commentators maintain that such details do not in and of themselves merit a connection with the story of Bathsheba, especially as such an interpretation must extrapolate beyond the plain sense of the text. Furthermore, there is little in the Quranic text to substantiate this connection and, as Ibn Kathīr observes, the basis for relating these verses to the story of Bathsheba are not grounded in sound accounts. Al-Rāzī also maintains that even the sanitized version of the story, in which there is no adultery, runs counter to the qualities attributed to David here and in other sūrahs. It also appears to be as a result of the effort to connect this verse to the story of Bathsheba that the disputants are said to be angels in the form of human beings, since it would then constitute a message coming directly from God.

David was most likely frightened when the disputants entered upon him, because his sanctuary was difficult to access and he had ordered that no one be allowed to enter (IK); he initially thought they sought to harm him (Āl, R). This, my brother means that they are either brothers in religion (Āl, Ṭ) or brothers by blood (Āl). That the one brother overpowered the other in speech means that he overcame him with his arguments (Āl), because his speech was clearer and more eloquent (Ṭ).

24 Yet how few are they is one of many places where the Quran laments the paucity of true believers, similar to 2:243 and 40:61: But most of mankind does not give thanks (cf. 10:60; 12:38; 27:73) and 11:17: But most of mankind believe not (cf. 12:103–6; 13:1; 17:89; 26:8, 67, 103, 121, 139, 158, 174, 190; 40:59). Those who interpret the disputants to be angels say that David knew he was being tested when one of the angels looked to the other and smiled and they then ascended into the sky (Āl, IJ, Q, Ṭ). But it can also be understood to mean that David simply understood that the dispute was put before him by God to test his wisdom and justice. That David sought forgiveness from his Lord appears to be the main message of the text that leads many to link this pericope to the story of Bathsheba. But al-Rāzī argues that David more likely asked forgiveness because he initially suspected the disputants of entering upon him with ill intent and was thus frightened of them, when in fact they only sought his counsel (R). It may also be on account of his having passed judgment in favor of the plaintiff before hearing the testimony of the accused (R), an interpretation supported by the command to judge among the people with truth and follow not caprice (v. 26). It could also be understood to mean that David sought forgiveness for the disputants (R), in which case repented would be rendered “turned,” and the first sentence of v. 25 would be rendered, “And we forgave that [sin] for him.”

25 Thus did We forgive him that. Truly nearness unto Us shall be his, and a beautiful return.

25 Cf. v. 40. That one shall have nearness unto Us implies being among those brought nigh to God (56:11, 88; 83:21, 28), a term taken by some as a reference to the highest spiritual rank among human beings. It is said to result from obedient and virtuous acts (9:99; 34:37), while elsewhere those who seek to achieve nearness by other means, such as through the intercession of false deities, are rebuked (39:3; 46:28).

This is one of fifteen passages after which one should prostrate when reciting the Quran; see 19:58c. Whereas most other prostrations are considered obligatory, this prostration is considered one of gratitude (IK). The Prophet himself is said to have usually prostrated after the recitation of this verse, but to have told the people that it was not obligatory (IK).

26 O David! Truly We have appointed thee as a vicegerent upon the earth; so judge among the people with truth and follow not caprice, lest it lead thee astray from the way of God. Truly those who stray from the way of God, theirs shall be a severe punishment for having forgotten the Day of Reckoning.

26 Regarding the meaning of vicegerent upon the earth, see 6:165c. Here caprice is understood by Ibn ‘Arabī to mean everything that a person loves; thus he interprets this verse to mean, “Follow not that which you love, but follow that which I love” (Futūḥāt II 336.7). Lest it lead thee astray from the way of God then means, “Lest caprice confound you, ruin you, and make you blind to the way that I have laid down as Law for you and upon which I have asked you to walk” (Futūḥāt II 336.8). Those who have forgotten the Day of Reckoning refers to those who deny it, those who have forgotten the reality of the human condition (see 7:172c; 3:30c), and those who are heedless and have thus neglected to do what they must to prepare for the Day of Judgment (IK). The phrase can also be rendered, “for that which they have forgotten on the Day of Reckoning,” in which case it can refer to their having forgotten the acts of obedience that were enjoined upon them (Ṭs), a part of that whereof they were reminded (5:13–14), the remembrance of God (58:19), or even their own creation (36:78). It can also be understood to mean that they have forgotten their very selves, as alluded to in 59:19: And be not like those who forget God, such that He makes them forget their souls (cf. 20:126; 45:34).

27 And We did not create Heaven and earth and whatsoever is between them in vain; that is the conjecture of those who disbelieve. So woe unto those who disbelieve in the Fire!

27 A similar verse is 44:38: And We did not create the heavens and the earth and whatsoever is between them in play (cf. 21:16); see 44:38–39c. In this same vein, other verses state, We did not create the heavens and the earth and whatsoever is between them, save in truth (15:85; 46:3). That is the conjecture of those who disbelieve refers to their refusal to believe in a resurrection and a final abode to which human beings return (IK), as when they say, There is naught but our life in this world: we die and we live, and we will not be resurrected (23:37; cf. 45:24).

28 Or shall We make those who believe and perform righteous deeds like those who work corruption upon the earth? Or shall We make the reverent like the profligate?

28 Here, those who work corruption are placed in direct opposition to those who believe and perform righteous deeds, though in the Quran the opposite of working corruption (ifsād) is usually iṣlāh, “setting things aright” or “making amends.” For the Quranic understanding of corruption (fasād), see 30:41c. For more on the prohibition against working corruption upon the earth, see 7:56c. This verse is similar to 68:35: Are We then to treat the submitters like the guilty? The rhetorical questions posed in both verses are similar to the one posed and answered in 32:18: Is one who believes like one who is iniquitous? They are not equal. From this perspective, this verse can be read as a continuation of the counsel given in v. 17 (R), meaning bear patiently, since the disbelievers will surely receive their due.

29 A blessed Book that We have sent down upon thee, that they may contemplate His signs and that those possessed of intellect may reflect.

29 This verse can be read with an implied “This is” at the beginning (IJ, Q). From an Islamic perspective, all scriptures are revealed so that people will contemplate and act in accord with them (Aj). That the Quran is a blessed Book is understood to mean that it contains good things and blessings pertaining to both religious and worldly affairs (Aj), for both ordinary believers and the spiritual elite (Ṭb). According to some commentators, when the people contemplate it, they are guided by it, while when those possessed of intellect (2:179, 197, 269; 3:7, 190; 5:100; 12:111; 13:19; 14:52; 38:43; 39:9, 18, 21; 40:54; 65:10) reflect upon it, they are guided to the truth by its proofs and by its capacity to make things clear (Ṭb), as they are literally “those who possess the kernel,” meaning those who possess true knowledge of the inner essence of things; see 5:100c; 39:9c. From one perspective, it is only through the presence of the heart (ḥudūr al-qalb), understood to be the seat of the intellect, that one can contemplate and reflect, because the Quran is a reminder for whosoever has a heart (50:37). Thus 47:24 asks, Do they not contemplate the Quran? Or do hearts have their locks upon them?

30 And We bestowed Solomon upon David; how excellent a servant! Truly he turned oft [unto God].

30 Solomon was one of David’s many sons, but among them Solomon inherited from David (27:16), meaning that he inherited the gift of prophethood and earthly sovereignty. Both David and Solomon were given judgment and knowledge (21:79; cf. 27:15). Regarding he turned oft [unto God] (cf. vv. 17, 44), see 38:17c.

31 When at eventide noble steeds swift of foot were displayed before him, 32 he said, “I have loved the love of good things over the remembrance of my Lord, until [the sun] was taken behind the veil.

33 Bring them back unto me!” Then he began to stroke their legs and necks.

31–33 It is reported that Solomon’s horses, which he had inherited from David or which he was assembling for a campaign, were displayed before him and that he was so engrossed with them that the sun had set and the time for performing the prescribed prayers had passed (IK, JJ, Ṭ, Ṭs). Until [the sun] was taken behind the veil could also be read, “until they were taken behind the veil,” meaning that Solomon was engrossed with the horses until they left his sight (Ṭs). Bring them back unto me takes the pronoun as a reference to the horses, but some understand the pronoun them (which can also mean “it”) as a reference to the sun, meaning that Solomon asked that the sun be brought back so that he could say his prayers during the proper time (Ṭs). Stroke translates masaha, which can also mean “rub.” In the interpretation preferred by most commentators, masaha stands for the idiomatic expression “he stroked them with his sword,” meaning that, to atone for having been distracted from the remembrance of God, Solomon sacrificed the horses (IJ, IK, JJ, Ṭ, Ṭs) and then offered the meat to the poor as alms (IJ, JJ). Others understand it to mean that he stroked them with his hand out of love for them (IJ, Ṭ), as it would seem unjust for Solomon to slay the horses for his own slip (Ṭ). The most reasonable interpretation, though rarely cited, is that he branded their legs and necks and committed them to God (IJ).

The interpretations given above reflect those found in almost all commentaries, with slight variations. But al-Rāzī gives this story a different interpretation. He begins by understanding I have loved the love of good things over the remembrance of my Lord to mean, “I have loved the love of good things on account of the remembrance of my Lord”; that is, his love of anything in this world is by the Command of God. He then understands the horses to be what were taken behind the veil, meaning that they passed by him until they were out of his sight. Then he ordered that they be returned and rubbed them to honor them and to be sure that they were fit for battle. Although such an interpretation may arise from al-Rāzī’s zealous defense of the infallibility of prophets, it also leads to a more internally consistent interpretation that is not based on accounts whose reliability is questionable.

34 And We did indeed try Solomon, and We cast a corpse upon his throne. He then repented, 34 The trial faced by Solomon is difficult to discern. It most likely refers to some manner in which his sovereignty was stolen by the jinn when a satan—referring to an evil jinn—was placed upon his throne (IJ). Most commentaries propose various ways in which the jinn took the ring to which the power of Solomon's rule was attached and explain that the corpse was that of a jinn who was punished for his rebelliousness. Many even go so far as to propose different names for the jinn (IJ, Q). Others propose that the corpse was that of Solomon's son, whom he had tried to conceal from the jinn (IJ, Ṭs). According to another interpretation, a corpse refers to Solomon's own body, which was like a corpse due to the severity of an illness with which God had tried him (Ṭs). But these various accounts are mutually contradictory, and as al-Rāzī observes, they are fanciful interpretations that rely upon unsubstantiated sources. He then repented can also be read as "then he returned," meaning that Solomon returned to health after the trial from God (Ṭs) or that he returned to his throne (IJ, Ṭ). Some of the accounts of how he returned to his throne indicate that he repented and as a result returned to his throne (Ṭ). Seen in this light, the story could be understood as an allegory foretelling what would beset the kingdom, were the king to succumb to his desires.

35 saying, "My Lord, forgive me and bestow a kingdom upon me such as shall not befit anyone after me. Truly Thou art the Bestower."

35 After passing the trial sent upon him by God, Solomon prayed for a kingdom that would never be surpassed. Here kingdom renders mulk, which can also be understood to mean "rule" or "sovereignty." After me renders min ba^cdī, which in this context some interpret to mean "besides me" or "other than me" (Ṭs, Z). Viewed in the context of Solomon's trial (v. 34), in which his rule was threatened or even taken away, his supplication is understood to mean that he desired a kingdom that no one would be able to steal from him as the jinn had done (IJ, Ṭ). Solomon is reported to have presided over a kingdom (the united Northern and Southern Kingdoms) that no one after him was capable of ruling successfully. In contrast, al-Maybudī states that Solomon did not seek an outward kingdom, but instead sought dominion over the inner kingdom, his own soul, so that it would not obey anything other than God.

36 So We made the wind subservient unto him, coursing gently by his command whither he wished,

36 Those who interpret vv. 31–33 as describing Solomon’s distraction from the remembrance of God by the love of the world say that, when Solomon gave up his love for the things of this world and atoned for his sins, God compensated him with command over the wind (cf. 21:81), something better and swifter than the horses that some say he had sacrificed (IK, JJ), though this interpretation does not depend on his actually having slaughtered the horses.

37 as well as the satans, every builder and diver,

38 and others, bound together in fetters:

37–38 Solomon was also granted power over the satans, that is, the evil jinn, as in 27:17: And gathered for Solomon were his hosts of jinn and men and birds, and they were marshaled [in ordered ranks]. Here, every builder and diver means that the jinn would do whatever Solomon willed by way of building on the earth and extracting riches from the sea (Ṭ). When combined with his control over the wind, Solomon had sovereignty over air, land, and sea. Other jinn were bound together in fetters due to their recalcitrance (Ṭ, Ṭs).

39 “This is Our Gift; so bestow graciously or withhold without reckoning.”

39 This is understood as a reference to the kingdom or sovereignty that God gave Solomon (Ṭ, Ṭs), the power over the jinn (Ṭ), or all of the powers given to him (Ṭ). Solomon is then given permission to bestow or withhold these gifts as he deems best (Ṭ).

40 Truly nearness unto Us shall be his, and a beautiful return.

40 See 38:25c.

④¹ And remember Our servant Job, when he called upon his Lord, “Truly Satan has afflicted me with weariness and punishment.”

41 Vv. 41–44 provide the longest account of Job in the Quran; see also 4:163; 6:84; 21:83–84. In 6:84 he is listed with other Old Testament prophets among those whom God guided aforesaid, and in 4:163 he is included among those to whom God gave revelation. As in the Bible and 21:83–84, Job provides an example of patience and forbearance. But unlike the Bible, the Quranic accounts do not comprise a didactic meditation on the problem of evil. The weariness and punishment with which Satan afflicts Job are understood to be the loss of property and family and incurring a painful disease (Ṭ); he is said to have been afflicted for seven years and seven months (Ṭ).

④² “Strike with thy foot; this is cool water wherewith to wash and to drink.”

42 Cf. 21:84. Job is commanded to strike the ground in order to bring forth a spring whose water would heal the disease that afflicted him (Ṭ). Most commentators understand this verse as a reference to two separate springs; he washed with water from one and it healed his exterior ailments, and he drank water from the other and it healed his internal ailments (I, IK, R, Ṭ, Z). Sayings attributed to the Prophet report that God sent rain upon Job’s fields until they were full (IK, Ṭ), and that “when the Prophet Job was taking a bath naked, golden locusts began to fall upon him. Job started collecting them in his clothes. Then his Lord addressed him, ‘O Job! Have I not made thee rich enough that thou art not in need of what you see?’ Job replied, ‘Yes, O Lord! But I am not without need of Thy blessings’ (IK).

④³ And We bestowed upon him his family and their like along with them as a mercy from Us and a reminder for possessors of intellect.

43 That God bestowed upon him his family is understood to mean that he brought them back to life (IK, Ṭ, Ṭs), that they too were healed, or that they were returned to him after having been absent for some time (R). Their like along with them means that he also received an increase in family members (Ṭ); see 21:83–84c. This presents an interesting contrast to the Biblical account, in which Job’s livestock is doubled, but the number of his sons and daughters remains the same (see Job 42:12–16). Possessors of intellect (2:179, 197, 269; 3:7, 190; 5:100; 12:111; 13:19; 14:52; 38:29; 39:9, 18, 21; 40:54; 65:10) indicates those who possess true knowledge of the inner essence and meaning of things; see 38:29c; 5:100c; 39:9c.

④ And, “Take with thy hand a bundle of rushes and strike therewith, and break not thine oath.” Truly We found him to be steadfast. What an excellent servant! Truly he turned oft [unto God].

44 To explain this verse, commentators report that Job’s wife listened to Satan’s promptings to urge Job to “say a single word” (which remains unmentioned) or perform some other act by which he would be healed and his property and family would be returned to him (IJ, R, Ṭ, Z), though there is no support for this story in the Quran or the Ḥadīth. Knowing that she had listened to “the enemy of God,” Job rebuked her and vowed to punish her. God then told him to strike her with a sprig of leaves, so that he could fulfill his vow without harming her unjustly (IK, R, Ṭ, Z). As there is no support for this widespread interpretation in the Quranic text itself, it seems more consistent to read the bundle of rushes as a reference to herbs or leaves that were part of Job’s treatment, and break not thine oath as a general injunction or an assurance that in using the herbs he was not breaking the oaths he had made to God. Regarding he turned oft [unto God] (cf. vv. 17, 30), see 38:17c.

④ And remember Our servants Abraham, Isaac and Jacob, possessed of strength and sight.

④ Truly We purified them with that which is pure—remembrance of the Abode.

④ And truly in Our Sight they are among the chosen, the elect.

45–47 Possessed of strength and sight refers to the three prophets’ having strength in performing acts of worship and insight into religious matters (IK, Ṭ), and thus into truth, as their vision was that of the heart (Ṭ). That God purified them, or “chose them,” through remembrance of the Abode means that God removed the love of this world from their hearts and made them always mindful of the Hereafter (IK). Al-Tustarī is reported to have said of this phrase, “God purified them for remembrance of God for God alone, not for attaining recompense. . . . They remembered Him through Him and for Him” (ST).

④ And remember Ishmael, Elisha, and Dhu’l-Kifl; each is among the excellent.

48 Cf. 21:85, which, like this verse, immediately follows the only other account of Job’s story in the Quran and says that Ishmael, Idrīs, and Dhu’l-Kifl were among the patient. For the Quranic story of Ishmael, see 2:125–28. Elisha (al-Yasa^c) is only mentioned here and in 6:86, where he is listed with Ishmael, Jonah, and Lot among those whom God favored above the worlds. Most understand him to be the same Elisha whose account is given in 2 Kings, a disciple of Elijah who took his place as a prophet in Israel (2 Kings 2:13–15) after Elijah ascended to Heaven (2:11).

Dhu’l-Kifl, here transcribed as a proper name, literally means “the possessor of kifl,” that is, of the “portion” or “share,” as in 57:28: He will give you a twofold portion (kiflayn) of His Mercy. Thus he is said to be a prophet who had a twofold share of the work and reward of prophets (Q, R, Z on 21:85). As kifl derives from the same root, k-f-l, as the verb takaffala, meaning “to assume responsibility” or “to pledge,” it is interpreted by some to indicate a prophet, or a righteous king or man, who “pledged himself to a prophet” (takaffala li nabī; R, Ṭ on 21:85) or who pledged to fast every day, stand in prayer every night, and judge between the people without succumbing to anger (JJ, Q, R, Ṭ on 21:85). As he is mentioned among other prophets here and in 21:85, commentators have endeavored to identify Dhu’l-Kifl with various prophets, such as Elias (Elijah), Joshua, or Zachariah (R, Z on 21:85). The basis for this last may be 3:37, where God is said to place Mary under the care of Zachariah; the Arabic for “place under the care” is kaffala, from the same root as kifl. Nonetheless, the majority maintain that he is not a prophet (Q on 21:85). Some translators link Dhu’l-Kifl to Ezekiel, which may derive from attempts to relate the idea of kifl and takaffala, “assuming responsibility,” to Ezekiel 4:4, where God lays “the punishment of the house of Israel” upon Ezekiel. But such a link does not seem justified.

④⁴⁹ This is a reminder. And for the reverent there will surely be a beautiful return, 49 The Quran is a reminder (IK), or these stories recounted above are a beautiful reminder (Q, R). Here the reverent are promised the same reward that is promised to David in v. 25.

⑤⁵⁰ Gardens of Eden, the gates whereof are open unto them,

50 Paradise is said to have Gardens of many varieties. Gardens of Eden (cf. 9:72; 13:23; 16:31; 18:31; 19:61; 20:76; 35:33; 40:8) are understood to refer to an especially exalted or blessed place within Paradise; see 9:72c. According to a ḥadīth, “Heaven has eight gates. [Four are:] Whosoever was among the people of prayer shall be called from the gate of prayer. Whosoever was among the people of fasting shall be called from the gate of fasting. Whosoever was among the people of charity (ṣadaqah) shall be called from the gate of charity. Whosoever was among the people of striving (jihād) shall be called from the gate of striving.” See also 39:73: Those who reverence their Lord will be driven to the Garden in throngs, till when they reach it, its gates will be opened and its keepers will say unto them, “Peace be upon you; you have done well; so enter it, to abide [therein].” Elsewhere it is said, Angels shall enter upon them from every gate. “Peace be upon you because you were patient.” How excellent is the Ultimate Abode! (13:23–24).

51 Those in Paradise recline upon couches arrayed (52:20), facing one another (37:44; 56:16), in the shade with their spouses (36:56), and are given fruits and meat as they desire (52:22) and partake of every fruit (47:15), while they pass a cup to one another wherein is no idle talk, nor incitement to sin (52:23).

52 And theirs shall be maidens of modest gaze, of like age.

52 Of modest gaze indicates that the maidens look upon none but their own spouses (Aj, Q). For other references to the maidens who await the righteous in Paradise, see 44:54c; 52:20; 55:56, 72; 56:22; 78:33; and the essay “Death, Dying, and the Afterlife in the Quran.”

53 This is that which you are promised for the Day of Reckoning.

54 This indeed is Our provision which shall never be spent.

53–54 The food and drink that God promises the reverent is a provision that, unlike the provisions of this world, will never run out, as in 16:96: That which is with you comes to an end, but that which is with God subsists; also see 13:35.

55 This it shall be! Yet for the rebellious there will surely be a most evil return, 56 Hell, wherein they will burn. What an evil resting place!

57 This it shall be! So let them taste it, a boiling liquid and a cold, murky fluid, 58 coupled with other [punishments] similar in kind.

55–58 After mentioning some provisions of the beautiful return in vv. 49–54, the Quran turns in these verses to the torturous provisions of the evil return. The rebellious are those who disobey God and oppose God’s messengers (IK). The boiling liquid that they are here made to drink (cf. 6:70; 10:4; 37:67; 40:72; 44:46; 47:15; 56:42, 54; 78:24–25; 88:5) indicates something that has reached its maximum temperature and causes extreme pain. In 22:19 the boiling liquid is poured over their heads (cf. 44:48). Cold, murky fluid translates ghassāq (cf. 78:25), which means something so frigid that one cannot bear it. The two drinks show that Hell is a place of extremes; every time one escapes from one type of torture, one is cast into another that is its opposite. This is the meaning of punishments being coupled with other [punishments] similar in kind (IK).

59 This troop rushing in with you—no greeting for them! They will surely burn in the Fire.

60 They will say, “Nay, but no greeting for you! You have sent it forth for us. What an evil dwelling place!”

59–60 Whereas the believers enter the gates of Heaven, the disbelievers burn in the Fire. And whereas the believers are greeted with the greeting of “Peace” by the angels (see 10:10; 16:32; 19:62; 33:44; 36:58; 39:73; 56:25–26c), in Hell every time a community enters, it curses its sister (7:38).

61 They will say, “O Lord! Whosoever has sent this forth for us, increase him twofold in punishment in the Fire.”

61 Those in Hell are asking for a twofold punishment upon those who led them into disbelief, as in 7:38, where the disbelievers who followed those before them say, “Our Lord, it was they who led us astray; so give them a double punishment in the Fire.” He will say, “For each of you it shall be doubled, but you know not” (cf. 33:67–68), meaning let them receive one punishment for having been astray and another punishment for leading others astray. In this vein 29:13 says of those who sought to lead others astray, Surely they will bear their own burdens, and others’ burdens along with their own. Nonetheless, the punishment of those whom they led astray will not be lessened; see 7:38–39c.

62 And they will say, “How is that we do not see men here whom we had counted among the evil?”

63 Did we take them in mockery? Or have our eyes swerved away from them?”

62–63 The denizens of Hell will be surprised to see that those whom they thought to be misguided are not in Hell. Thus in 7:49, as they see the believers being told to enter the Garden, they are asked, Are these the ones concerning whom you swore that God would not extend any mercy? That they continue to ask such questions implies that, despite having received the punishment, they still do not fully understand. Alternatively, the first sentence of v. 63 can be read, “We took them in mockery” (Q, R).

64 Surely that is true: the disputing of the people of the Fire.

64 The people of the Fire dispute with one another regarding what has led them to their final outcome, and with God. Though they do not dispute with the people of the Garden, in other passages they do speak with them (see commentary on 7:44–51; 57:13–15), asking for their light (57:13), some water, or some of what God has provided for them (7:50), though the inhabitants of the Garden cannot share these blessings, as such blessings are forbidden to the denizens of Hell.

65 Say, “I am only a warner, and there is no god but God, the One, the Paramount, 66 Lord of the heavens and the earth and whatsoever is between them, the Mighty, the Forgiving.”

65–66 That the Prophet is only a warner or, as expressed elsewhere, naught but a warner (11:12; 13:7; 27:92; 34:46; 35:23; 46:9; 79:45) means that his function is only to deliver the message; he does not have knowledge of the Unseen, save as is given to him by God, as indicated in vv. 69–70. The Divine Name the Paramount (al-Qahhār) derives from the same root as the Dominant (al-Qāhir) and always occurs in the phrase the One, the Paramount (12:39; 13:16; 14:48; 39:4; 40:16). The combination of the Divine Names the Mighty and the Forgiving (cf. 39:5; 40:42; 67:2) refers to God’s threat to the disbelievers and God’s promise to the believers (Aj), similar to the more frequent combination of the Names the Mighty and the Merciful (26:9, 68, 104, 122, 140, 159, 175, 191, 217; 30:5; 32:6; 36:5; 44:42).

67 Say, “It is a great tiding

68 from which you turn away.

67–68 A great tiding refers to the Quran (Aj, Q, T) or, as in 78:1, to the Day of Resurrection (Aj, Q). It could also mean that the message the Prophet brings, that of God’s Oneness, is a great tiding issuing directly from God, and only the heedless would turn from it (Aj).

69 I have no knowledge of the Highest Assembly, when they dispute.

70 Naught is revealed unto me but that I am only a clear warner.”

69–70 The Highest Assembly refers to the assembly of angels (IK, Q, T). The dispute mentioned here is understood by most to be that regarding the creation of Adam (Q, T), as in 2:30, when they say to God, Wilt Thou place therein one who will work corruption therein, and shed blood, while we hymn Thy praise and call Thee Holy? (IJ). In this sense, these verses instruct the Prophet to say that he could have no knowledge of the discussion that transpired between God, the angels, and Satan, were it not for the revelation from God (IJ, IK, T). The nature of the angels’ disputation may also be the one conveyed in a saying of the Prophet: “My Lord came to me at night in the most beautiful form. He said, ‘O Muhammad!’ I replied, ‘Here I am, my Lord, at Thy service.’ He said, ‘What is the Highest Assembly disputing about?’ I replied, ‘I know not, my Lord.’ He said that two or three times. Then He placed His palm between my shoulders. I felt its coolness between my breasts, and everything in the heavens and on the earth was disclosed to me. . . . Then He said, ‘O Muhammad! What is the Highest Assembly disputing about?’ I replied, ‘About expiations.’ And He asked, ‘What are expiations?’ I said, ‘Going on foot to gatherings, sitting in the mosque after the prayers, and performing the ablutions completely in difficult circumstances. He who does that lives well and dies well. His offenses are like the day his mother bore him’” (Q). In another version, the Prophet was then told that he could make supplication for anything, and he responded, “O God! I ask Thee that I may perform good deeds and shun bad deeds, and that I may love the poor, and that Thou shouldst forgive me and have mercy upon me, and that when Thou decidest to put a people to trial, take me away without a trial. And I ask Thee for Thy Love, for the love of those who love Thee, and for the love of deeds that bring one near to Thy Love.”

70 See 38:65–66c.

71 [Remember] when thy Lord said unto the angels, “Behold! I am creating a human being from clay.

71–85 This is the last account of the creation of Adam in the textual order of the Quran, but most likely the first in the chronological order of revelation. The other accounts are found in 2:30–39; 7:11–25; 17:61–65; 20:115–24; see also 15:28–43.

71 I am creating a human being is an abbreviated version of what God says to the angels in 15:28: Behold! I am creating a human being from dried clay, made of molded mud; and in 2:30 God tells the angels, I am placing a vicegerent upon the earth.

72 When I have proportioned him and breathed into him of My Spirit, fall down before him prostrating.”

72 Cf. 15:29. Also see 32:9, where what is here God’s statement to the angels is phrased in the third person. Insisting upon God’s complete transcendence and the createdness of anything outside of God, most commentators seek to read I breathed into him of My Spirit figuratively. Some gloss My Spirit as “My Power” (Ṭ) or say that this is not God’s Spirit, but that God refers to it as such as a means of honoring Adam (IK, JJ), or that My Spirit means “the Spirit that I possess and no one else possesses” (Q, Sh), while others make little comment on it (Bḍ). Al-Rāzī notes that the breathing of the Spirit into Adam indicates that the creation of the human being is only completed through both the formation of the physical body and the breathing of the Spirit into it, which he understands to mean that human beings have both a body and a soul. He then takes My Spirit to mean that the soul is a noble, heavenly (‘ulwī), and holy (qudsī) substance. He, nonetheless, maintains that it is a created, though subtle and luminous, substance. In this interpretation, he would appear to understand the soul as what arises to form the bridge between the body and the spirit. Some Sufi commentators also maintain that what is “breathed into Adam” is a created substance (Qu). But others understand this to mean that the spirit within the human being is of a supernal nature and this explains how it is that the angels could be commanded to prostrate before Adam (2:34; 7:11; 18:50; 20:116). Rūzbihān al-Baqlī thus glosses this passage: “I am creating a human being out of clay, that is, out of incapacity and weakness, whom I will clothe in the lights of My Greatness and Magnificence. Then when I have perfected him, distinguished him with My Attributes, illuminated him with the Light of My Essence, and breathed into him of My Spirit, that is, given him life through My Life and My Spirit, which came forth from the disclosure of Magnificence and Beauty, prostrate unto him.”

73 Then the angels prostrated, all of them together.

74 Not so Iblīs. He waxed arrogant, and was among the disbelievers.

73–74 Regarding the prostration of the angels before Adam and Iblīs’s refusal to follow God’s Command to do so, key elements in all accounts of Adam’s creation, see 2:34; 15:29–33; 17:61; 18:50; 20:116; commentary on 7:11–12. In the present sūrah, Iblīs waxes arrogant, but in 7:13 he is told by God, It is not for thee to wax arrogant here. So go forth! Thou art surely among those who are humbled.

75 [God] said, “O Iblīs! What has prevented thee from prostrating unto that which I created with My two Hands? Dost thou wax arrogant, or art thou among the exalted?”

75 In 7:12, God asks, What prevented thee from prostrating when I commanded thee? That God created the human being with His two Hands is understood in a symbolic manner, since God’s Command when He desires a thing is only to say to it, “Be!” and it is (36:82; cf. 2:117; 3:47; 6:73; 16:40; 19:35; 40:68). Thus some take the creation of the human being with God’s two Hands as an allusion to the greatness of the human being (Q) or as an allusion to two of God’s Attributes (Q), God’s Majesty and Beauty, God’s Dominance and Gentleness (qahr wa lutf), or all of the Divine Names that fall under the two categories of Dominance and Love (K), which would then allude to the human being as the locus in which such attributes become manifest. The rhetorical question posed by God to Iblīs would then mean, “Are you truly a creation more exalted than this creation?”

76 He said, “I am better than him. Thou hast created me from fire, while Thou hast created him from clay.”

76 In 7:12, Iblīs makes this same explicit argument. In 15:33, he does so implicitly in his dismissive remarks about Adam’s being created from dried clay, made of molded mud; and in 17:61, he asks, Shall I prostrate before one whom Thou hast created of clay? See 7:12c; 15:32–33c; 17:61c.

77 He said, “Go forth from it! Surely thou art outcast!

78 And surely My Curse shall be upon thee till the Day of Judgment.”

77–78 See commentary on the identical verses, 15:34–35. Elsewhere God says to Satan, Go forth from it, disgraced and banished! (7:18).

79 He said, “My Lord! Grant me respite till the Day they are resurrected.”

80 He said, “Then verily thou art among those granted respite 81 till the Day of the Moment Known.”

82 He said, “Then, by Thy Might, I shall cause them to err all together, 83 save Thy sincere servants among them.”

79–83 Despite Iblīs’s banishment, here he requests and is granted respite from God, so that he will neither die nor be punished (Bḏ), till the Day they are resurrected (7:14), referring to the Day of universal Resurrection and Judgment (cf.

7:14–15; 15:36–38; 17:62), which is the Moment Known to God. Vv. 80–81 are repeated verbatim in 15:37–38. While the accounts of the creation of Adam and Satan’s refusal to prostrate in 2:30–34 and 7:14–18 are followed by accounts of the manner in which Satan causes Adam and Eve to fall from the Garden, the accounts here and in 15:25–33 are followed by more general discussions of the manner in which Satan vows to make things seem fair unto them on earth and to cause them to err all together (15:39). Making things seem fair to human beings is the way in which his misleading them is most often described (see 6:43; 8:48; 16:63; 27:24; 29:38). He is also referred to as the stealthy whisperer (114:4) and the Deluder (31:33; 35:5; 57:14), who enjoins indecency (2:268; 24:21) and makes false promises (4:120; 14:22; 17:64). From one perspective, while Satan is misleading people, he is in fact doing the work of God by bringing those whom God has already destined for Hell toward the end that God has decreed for them. Perhaps it is in this vein that God says to him, So incite whomsoever thou canst among them with thy voice, and bear down upon them with thy cavalry and thy infantry, and be their partner in wealth and children, and make them promises (17:64).

Although God has permitted Satan to tempt people and lead those who disbelieve astray, he has no authority over God’s servants (cf. 17:65). Thus when those who followed Satan receive their punishment and turn to him on the Day of Judgment, he will say, Verily God made you the promise of truth; and I made you a promise, but I failed you. And I had no authority over you, save that I called you, and you responded to me. So do not blame me, but blame yourselves. I cannot respond to your cries for help; nor can you respond to my cries for help (14:22).

84 He said, “This is the truth, and the truth I speak, 84 This enigmatic verse, which literally reads, “The truth, and I speak the truth,” can be understood as a continuation of God’s Words to Satan (Ṭ), in which case it is interpreted to mean, “I am the Truth, and I speak the truth” (IK, Ṭ) or “The truth is from Me, and I speak the truth” (IK, Ṭ). It may also mean, “I establish the truth, and the truth that is spoken” (JJ), referring to what is said in v. 85, thus giving the meaning, “It is true that I shall surely fill Hell with thee and with such of them as follow thee, all together, and I speak the truth” (Ṭ). It could also be understood to mean, “God is the Truth, and I speak the truth” (Ṭ) or “To God belongs the truth, and I speak the truth” (Ṭ).

85 ‘I shall surely fill Hell with thee and with such of them as follow thee, all together.’”

85 Similar threats to fill Hell with (wrongdoing) men, women, and jinn (which here includes Satan) are made in 11:119 and 32:13. Here and in 7:18 the promise is made directly to Satan; see 7:18c; 32:13c.

86 Say, “I ask not of you any reward for it, nor am I among the pretenders.

86 I ask not of you any reward for it (cf. 6:90; 25:57; 42:23) is also said by the prophets Noah, Hūd, Ṣāliḥ, Lot, and Shu‘ayb in 26:109, 127, 145, 164, 180, respectively. It is understood as a reference to delivering the revelation (IJ, IK, JJ). A mark of true prophethood is that those claiming it ask for no reward from the people. They only ask that the people follow the message with which they have been sent. As Noah says, in 10:72, And if you turn your backs, I have not asked of you any reward. My reward lies only with God, and I am commanded to be among those who submit (see also 36:21c).

The Prophet’s statement that he is not from among the pretenders, or mutakallifūn, which can also mean “imposters,” is addressed to the Quraysh, reminding them that he had never feigned or sought a position that was not his right or sought to claim something that was not his (Z). According to a saying attributed to the Prophet, but not in canonical collections, “The pretender has three characteristics: he contends with those above him; he claims [for himself] what has not been conferred [upon him]; and he speaks about that of which he knows not” (Q, Sy, Z). The phrase could also mean, “nor am I among those who impose [themselves].”

87 It is naught but a reminder for the worlds,

87 Cf. 6:90; 12:104; 68:52; 81:27. The Quran is only sent to remind people of God and the Hereafter and is naught but a revelation revealed (53:4).

88 and you will certainly know its tiding after a time.”

88 People will come to see that what the Quran says is true after they die, after the Resurrection (IK, Q, T, Z), or after the victory and spread of Islam (Z).

The Throngs

al-Zumar

Most of al-Zumar is believed to have been revealed in the middle of the Makkan period, directly after Sūrah 34, *Saba*³ (JJ). Many commentators maintain that vv. 53–55 are from the Madinan period (Aj, Āl, IJ), as they are said to have been revealed regarding Waḥshī, an Abyssinian slave who gained his freedom by killing the Prophet’s cousin Ḥamzah at the Battle of Uḥud in 3/625. Some say that only v. 53 pertains to this incident (IJ, Q, Ṭs), while others say that vv. 53–59 were all revealed in regard to it (Āl, Q). Others suggest that vv. 10 and 23 were also revealed during the Madinan period (Āl, IJ). The sūrah takes its title from the mention of the disbelievers being driven to Hell in throngs in v. 71 and the believers being driven to the Garden in throngs in v. 73. It is also known as al-Ghuraf, or “The Abodes,” after the mention in v. 20 of the lofty abodes that await the reverent in Paradise (Āl, Bq, Q, Ṭs). The opening verse of the sūrah can be read as a continuation of the last two verses of the previous sūrah (Aj, Āl).

From one perspective, the central theme of al-Zumar is devout or pure religious practice, as it emphasizes devoting religion entirely to God (vv. 2, 11, 14) more than any other sūrah and maintains that the pure religion belongs only to God and is devoid of worship of anything other than Him (v. 3). To highlight the importance of the pure religion, the sūrah juxtaposes the believers and the disbelievers throughout. After an opening injunction to be sincere in worship (vv. 1–4), the sūrah turns to the contrast between the two groups, comparing their attitudes toward the signs of God and punctuating the discussion with rhetorical questions such as, Are those who know and those who do not know equal? (v. 9), and statements such as, Whomsoever God leads astray, no guide has he. And whomsoever God guides, none shall lead him astray (vv. 36–37).

A passage on death emphasizes the desperate circumstances of those who disbelieve when they meet their final end (vv. 42–52). But v. 53, which many have referred to as the most hopeful verse of the Quran, underlines the enduring availability of God’s Mercy and Forgiveness even to those who have been prodigal to the detriment of their own souls. This is followed by an exhortation to turn to God in repentance (vv. 54–67), which leads into the extended contrast between the disparate ends of the two groups in the Hereafter (vv. 68–75) with which the sūrah ends.

According to a report from the Prophet’s wife ‘Ā’ishah, the Prophet would not sleep until he had recited al-Zumar and Banū Isrā’īl, the latter being another name for Sūrah 17, al-Isrā’, “The Night Journey” (IK, Q).

In the Name of God, the Compassionate, the Merciful

① The revelation of the Book from God, the Mighty, the Wise. ② Indeed, We have sent down unto thee the Book in truth; so worship God, devoting religion entirely to Him. ③ Behold! Unto God belongs the pure religion, and those who take protectors apart from Him [say], “We do not worship them, save to bring us nigh in nearness unto God.” Truly God will judge between them regarding that wherein they differ. Truly God does not guide one who is a disbelieving liar. ④ Had God wanted to take a child, He would have chosen whatsoever He willed from that which He created. Glory be to Him; He is the One, the Paramount. ⑤ He created the heavens and the earth in truth. He rolls the night up into the day and rolls the day up into the night, and He made the sun and the moon subservient, each running for a term appointed. Is He not the Mighty, the Forgiving? ⑥ He created you from a single soul, then made from it its mate, and sent down for you of cattle eight pairs. He creates you in your mothers’ wombs, creation after creation, in threefold darkness. That is God, your Lord; to Him belongs sovereignty. There is no god but He. How, then, are you turned away? ⑦ If you do not believe, surely God is beyond need of you. He is not pleased with disbelief for His servants. And if you are grateful, He is pleased therewith for you; and none shall bear the burden of another. Then unto your Lord is your return, and He shall inform you of that which you used to do. Truly He knows what lies within breasts. ⑧ And when harm befalls man, he calls upon his Lord, turning unto Him. Then when He bestows a blessing from Himself upon him, he forgets the One upon whom he called before and sets up equals unto God to lead astray from His path. Say, “Enjoy your disbelief a little; truly you shall be among the inhabitants of the Fire.” ⑨ What of one who is devoutly obedient during the watches of the night, prostrating and standing [in prayer], wary of the Hereafter and hoping for the Mercy of his Lord [. . .]? Say, “Are those who know and those who do not know equal? Only possessors of intellect reflect.” ⑩ Say, “O My servants who believe, reverence your Lord. For those who do good in this world there is good; and God’s earth is vast.” Surely those who are patient shall be paid their reward in full without reckoning. ⑪ Say, “Truly I have been commanded to worship God, devoting religion entirely to Him. ⑫ And I have been commanded to be the first of those who submit.” ⑬ Say, “Truly I fear, should I disobey my Lord, the punishment of a tremendous day.” ⑭ Say, “God do I worship, devoting my religion entirely to Him. ⑮ So worship whatsoever you will apart from Him.” Say, “Truly the losers are those who lose their souls and their families on the Day of Resurrection. Yea! That is the manifest loss.” ⑯ Above them they shall have canopies of fire and below them canopies; with that does God strike fear into His servants. O My servants! Reverence Me! ⑰ And as for those who shun false deities and worshipping them, and turn unto God, unto them glad tidings. So give glad tidings to My servants, ⑱ who listen to the Word, then follow what is most beautiful of it. It is they whom God has guided; it is they who are the possessors of intellect. ⑲ What of one for whom the Word of punishment comes due? Wilt thou save one who is in the Fire? ⑳ But as for those who reverence their Lord, they will have lofty abodes above which are lofty abodes, and rivers running below. That is God’s Promise; God will not fail the tryst. ㉑ Hast thou not considered that God sends down water from the sky, conducts it as springs in the earth, then brings forth crops of diverse colors? Then they wither and thou seest them yellowing. Then He turns them to chaff. Truly in that is a reminder for possessors of intellect. 22 What of one whose breast God has expanded for submission, such that he follows a light from his Lord? Woe unto those whose hearts are hardened to the remembrance of God! They are in manifest error. 23 God has sent down the most beautiful discourse, a Book consimilar, paired, whereat quivers the skin of those who fear their Lord. Then their skin and their hearts soften unto the remembrance of God. That is God's Guidance, wherewith He guides whomsoever He will; and whomsoever God leads astray, no guide has he. 24 What of one who guards with his face against the evil punishment on the Day of Resurrection? And it shall be said unto the wrongdoers, "Taste that which you used to earn." 25 Those before them denied, and the punishment came upon them whence they were not aware. 26 Thus God had them taste disgrace in the life of this world; yet the punishment of the Hereafter is surely greater, if they but knew. 27 And indeed We have set forth for mankind in this Quran every kind of parable, that haply they may remember, 28 an Arabic Quran, bearing no crookedness, that haply they may be reverent. 29 God sets forth a parable: a man in whom quarreling partners share, and a man belonging to one man: are the two equal in likeness? Praise be to God! Nay, but most of them know not. 30 Surely thou wilt die, and surely they will die. 31 Then on the Day of Resurrection, before thy Lord will you dispute. 32 So who does greater wrong than one who lies against God and denies the truth when it comes to him? Is there not within Hell an abode for the disbelievers? 33 And whosoever comes with the truth and confirms it, it is they who are reverent. 34 With their Lord they shall have whatsoever they will—that is the recompense of the virtuous— 35 that God may absolve them of the worst of that which they have done and render unto them their reward for the best of that which they used to do. 36 Does God not suffice His servant? Yet they would frighten thee with those apart from Him; and whomsoever God leads astray, no guide has he. 37 And whomsoever God guides, none shall lead him astray. Is not God Mighty, Possessor of Vengeance? ³⁸ And wert thou to ask them, “Who created the heavens and the earth?” They would surely say, “God.” Say, “Then have you considered those upon whom you call, apart from God? If God desires some harm for me, could they remove His Harm, or if He desires some mercy, could they withhold His Mercy?” Say, “God suffices me; in Him trust those who trust.” ³⁹ Say, “O my people! Act according to your position; I, too, am acting. Soon you shall know ⁴⁰ upon whom there comes a punishment that disgraces him and upon whom there falls a punishment enduring.” ⁴¹ Truly We have sent down unto thee the Book for mankind in truth. Whosoever is rightly guided, it is for the sake of his own soul. And whosoever goes astray only goes astray to the detriment thereof. And thou art not a guardian over them. ⁴² God takes souls at the moment of their death, and those who die not, during their sleep. He withholds those for whom He has decreed death, and sends forth the others till a term appointed. Truly in that are signs for a people who reflect. ⁴³ Or do they take intercessors apart from God? Say, “Even though they have not any power and do not understand?” ⁴⁴ Say, “Unto God belongs intercession altogether. To Him belongs sovereignty over the heavens and the earth. Then unto Him shall you be returned.” ⁴⁵ And when God is mentioned alone, the hearts of those who believe not in the Hereafter recoil. But when those apart from Him are mentioned, behold, they rejoice. ⁴⁶ Say, “O God! Originator of the heavens and the earth, Knower of the Unseen and the seen, Thou judgest between Thy servants regarding that wherein they differ.” ⁴⁷ Were those who work evil to possess all that is on the earth and the like of it besides, they would seek to ransom themselves with it from the terrible punishment on the Day of Resurrection. And there will appear unto them from God that which they had not reckoned. ⁴⁸ The evils of that which they have earned will appear unto them, and that which they used to mock will beset them. ⁴⁹ And when harm befalls man, he calls upon Us. Then, when We confer upon him a blessing from Us, he says, “I was only given it because of knowledge.” Nay, it is a trial, but most of them know not. ⁵⁰ Those before them did say the same; yet that which they used to earn availed them not. 51 So the evils of that which they earned befell them. And as for those who do wrong among these, the evils of that which they have earned will befall them, and they cannot thwart [it]. 52 Do they not know that God outspreads and straitens provision for whomsoever He will? Truly in that are signs for a people who believe. 53 Say, “O My servants who have been prodigal to the detriment of their own souls! Despair not of God’s Mercy. Truly God forgives all sins. Truly He is the Forgiving, the Merciful. 54 Turn unto your Lord and submit to Him before the punishment comes upon you, whereupon you will not be helped. 55 And follow the most beautiful of that which has been sent down unto you from your Lord, before the punishment comes suddenly upon you while you are unaware,” 56 lest any soul should say, “Alas for me, for what I neglected of my duty to God! Indeed, I was among the scoffers.” 57 Or lest it say, “If only God had guided me, I would have been among the reverent.” 58 Or lest it say, when it sees the punishment, “If only I had another chance, I would be among the virtuous.” 59 Nay, My signs did indeed come unto you; yet you denied them, waxed arrogant, and were among the disbelievers. 60 And on the Day of Resurrection thou wilt see those who lied against God having blackened faces. Is there not in Hell an abode for the arrogant? 61 And God saves those who are reverent by their triumph; evil will not befall them; nor will they grieve. 62 God is the Creator of all things, and He is Guardian over all things. 63 Unto Him belong the keys of the heavens and the earth. And those who disbelieve in the signs of God, it is they who are the losers. 64 Say, “Do you bid me worship other than God, O ignorant ones?” 65 Surely it has been revealed unto thee and unto those before thee that if thou dost ascribe partners [unto God], thy work will surely come to naught and thou shalt be among the losers. 66 Rather, worship God and be among the thankful! 67 They did not measure God with His true measure. The whole earth shall be but a handful to Him on the Day of Resurrection, and the heavens will be enfolded in His right Hand. Glory be to Him, exalted is He above the partners they ascribe. 68 And the trumpet will be blown, whereupon whosoever is in the heavens and on the earth will swoon, save those whom God wills. Then it will be blown again, and, behold, they will be standing, beholding. 69

The earth will shine with the Light of its Lord, the Book will be set down, and the prophets and the witnesses will be brought forth. Judgment will be made between them in truth, and they shall not be wronged. 70 Every soul will be paid in full for that which it has done, and He knows best what they do. 71 And those who disbelieve will be driven unto Hell in throngs, till when they reach it, its gates will be opened and its keepers will say unto them, “Did not messengers from among you come to you, reciting unto you the signs of your Lord and warning you of the meeting with this your Day?” They will say, “Yea, indeed!” But the Word of punishment has come due for the disbelievers. 72 It will be said, “Enter the gates of Hell, to abide therein.” How evil is the abode of the arrogant! 73 And those who reverence their Lord will be driven to the Garden in throngs, till when they reach it, its gates will be opened and its keepers will say unto them, “Peace be upon you; you have done well; so enter it, to abide [therein].” 74 They will say, “Praise be to God, Who was faithful to us in His Promise, and has caused us to inherit the land, that we may settle in the Garden wheresoever we will.” How excellent is the reward of the workers! 75 And thou shalt see the angels encircling all around the Throne, hymning the praise of their Lord. Judgment shall be made between them in truth, and it will be said, “Praise be to God, Lord of the worlds.”

Commentary

① The revelation of the Book from God, the Mighty, the Wise.

1 Cf. 40:2; 45:2; 46:2. As this verse has no verb, it could alternately be rendered with an implied demonstrative at the beginning: “This is the revelation of the Book from God” (IJ, R, Z). In discussions of the levels of Quranic recitation, Sufis say that one should first hear the Quran as if it were being recited by the Prophet, then as if it were being recited by the Archangel Gabriel, and then as if it were being recited by God Himself. They sometimes cite this verse and 40:2, which differs only in that the last word is the Knower, in support of this third and last level.

② Indeed, We have sent down unto thee the Book in truth; so worship God, devoting religion entirely to Him.

2 Here God’s revelation of the Quran in truth or with truth (cf. 2:176, 213; 3:3; 4:105; 5:48; 6:114; 39:41; 42:17) is followed by an injunction to worship God; in 4:105, it is sent down . . . in truth, that thou mightest judge between men according to what God has shown thee. In both verses, the Book refers to the Quran, but in 2:213, the same phrase refers to the revelations sent to all prophets: And with them He sent down the Book in truth, to judge among mankind concerning that wherein they differed; also see 5:48c. Devoting religion entirely to Him (cf. 7:29; 10:22; 29:65; 31:32; 39:11; 40:14, 65; 98:5) indicates sincerity, purification, and complete devotion; see 7:29c; 31:32c; 98:5c.

③ Behold! Unto God belongs the pure religion, and those who take protectors apart from Him [say], “We do not worship them, save to bring us nigh in nearness unto God.” Truly God will judge between them regarding that wherein they differ. Truly God does not guide one who is a disbelieving liar.

3 Pure translates khālīṣ, from the same root, kh-l-ṣ, as the word rendered devoting (mukhlīṣ) in v. 2, and carries the same connotations of sincerity and devotion. Together the attributes of devotion and purity could be understood to mean that God requires that religion be devoted entirely to Him, so that obedience to Him is total and purified of any defects (Z), or to mean that ikhhlāṣ (sincerity and purity of devotion) is the “leader of all devotional acts” (R). In contrast, the idolaters who, although they recognize that there is some power greater than themselves, nonetheless fall short of pure devotion, or ikhhlāṣ, by worshipping many deities. Then they try to have it both ways, saying, We do not worship them, save to bring us nigh in nearness unto God. But since this is not the pure religion, God will not guide them and they will be forsaken by their deities, as in 46:28: Why, then, did they—whom they had taken as gods apart from God and as a means of drawing nigh [unto God]—not help them? Nay, they forsook them (cf. 34:40–41). For God’s judging between them regarding that wherein they differ, see 2:113c; 10:93; 16:124; 32:25; 45:17.

④ Had God wanted to take a child, He would have chosen whatsoever He willed from that which He created. Glory be to Him; He is the One, the Paramount.

④ This verse is read by some as a rejection of the idolaters’ attribution of offspring to God as well as the assertion by Christians that Jesus is the son of God and the claim attributed by Muslims to some Jews (see 9:30) that Ezra is the son of God (IK). But given the criticism of the Makkan idolaters in the previous verse and the widespread view that this sūrah is from the Makkan period, the rejection, as al-Zamakhsharī maintains, is most likely directed toward the idolaters’ attribution of sons and daughters to God, a notion criticized in many verses (see, e.g., 2:116; 6:100; 9:30; 10:68; 17:40, 111; 18:4; 19:35, 88–93; 21:26; 25:2; 37:149, 153; 43:16, 81–82; 52:39; 72:3). Regarding the Divine Name the Paramount (al-Qahhār), see 38:65–66c.

⑤ He created the heavens and the earth in truth. He rolls the night up into the day and rolls the day up into the night, and He made the sun and the moon subservient, each running for a term appointed. Is He not the Mighty, the Forgiving?

45:22; 64:3) is reiterated in various ways in several verses (see 10:5; 14:19; 15:85; 30:8; 44:39; 46:3); see 29:44c; 44:38–39c. In this context, creation is related to God’s sending revelation in truth (v. 2), alluding to the subtle way in which revelation and creation are bound together by the same underlying reality; creation itself is in a sense God’s first revelation. God’s rolling the day into the night and the night into the day is elsewhere expressed as His making the night pass into the day and . . . the day pass into the night (22:61; 31:29; 35:13; 57:6; cf. 3:27); see 31:29c. That the sun and the moon are made subservient (cf. 7:54; 13:2; 29:61; 31:29; 35:13) indicates the manner in which the truth in and through which they are created continues to determine their reality and evokes the dominion and responsibility that God has given human beings in making them His vicegerents (see 6:165c; 10:14; 35:39), which is made more explicit in 14:33: And He has made the sun and the moon subservient unto you, constant, and He made the night and the day subservient unto you (cf. 16:12; 22:36–37, 65; 31:20; 45:12–13).

⑥ He created you from a single soul, then made from it its mate, and sent down for you of cattle eight pairs. He creates you in your mothers’ wombs, creation after creation, in threefold darkness. That is God, your Lord; to Him belongs sovereignty. There is no god but He. How, then, are you turned away?

6 That God created human beings from a single soul (see 4:1; 6:98; 7:189; 31:28) points to the origin of all human beings in Adam (IK); see 4:1c. Elsewhere, God’s having created for human beings mates from themselves (or “from their souls”) is a gift for which humanity should feel awe and gratitude; see 16:72; 30:21; 35:11; 42:11; 78:8. That God sends down cattle refers to His having provided all manner of grazing livestock for human use, some for burden and some for slaughter (6:142). The eight pairs refers to the male and female of sheep, goats, camel, and oxen; see 6:142c. Creation after creation most likely alludes to the three stages of gestation mentioned in 23:13–14: Then We made him a drop in a secure dwelling place. Then of the drop We created a blood clot, then of the blood clot We created a lump of flesh (cf. 22:5). Threefold darkness is then seen as an allusion to the layers in which the fetus is wrapped: the placenta, the uterus, and the belly (IK, JJ). How, then, are you turned away? (cf. 10:32) is an expression of amazement asking how one could possibly turn away from the worship of the One who is responsible for all the realities mentioned in vv. 5–6, preferring to worship the sons and daughters falsely ascribed to Him who it is claimed will bring one nigh in nearness unto God (v. 3).

⑦ If you do not believe, surely God is beyond need of you. He is not pleased with disbelief for His servants. And if you are grateful, He is pleased therewith for you; and none shall bear the burden of another. Then unto your Lord is your return, and He shall inform you of that which you used to do. Truly He knows what lies within breasts.

7 That God is beyond need of you (cf. 3:97; 29:6) is related to the idea that unto God belongs the pure religion (v. 3), for neither God nor His religion are in need of human beings, but human beings are in need of both. That God is not pleased with disbelief or ingratitude for His servants may imply God's Mercy toward the believers and guidance of them by preventing them from falling into a state that would lead to their ruin, which can be seen as following upon His declaration to Satan, As for My servants, truly thou hast no authority over them (15:42; 17:65; Ṭ, Z). Others say that this verse applies to all human beings (Ṭ). In this sense the verse clarifies that it is not because God has any need of people's belief in Him that He punishes them, but because it displeases Him (Ṭ). God is then pleased with gratitude, not for His own sake, but because it leads to His servants' salvation (Z). All of this together indicates that God Himself derives no benefit from human beings' faith in Him (Z), but rewards them for it out of His Mercy. In this vein, a ḥadīth qudsī reports that God says, "O My servants! If the first of you and the last of you, the jinn among you and the human beings among you, were to have hearts like the most profligate of hearts among you, it would not diminish aught from My Sovereignty" (IK). That none shall bear the burden of another (cf. 6:164; 17:15; 35:18; 53:38) is a testament to God's Justice, meaning that no one will be forced to endure the punishments accrued through deeds committed by others; see 35:18c. This is one of several verses where it is said that at the Final Judgment, God will inform people about their actions in this life; see 5:14, 105; 6:60, 108, 159; 9:94, 105; 10:23; 24:64; 29:8; 31:15, 23; 41:50; 58:6–7; 62:8; 64:7; 75:13. That God knows what lies within breasts (3:119; 5:7; 8:43; 11:5; 31:23; 35:38; 42:24; 57:6; 64:4; 67:13) means that He knows what is within the hearts of all human beings (JJ) and implies that He will inform them not only of their deeds, but also of the intentions behind their deeds.

8 And when harm befalls man, he calls upon his Lord, turning unto Him. Then when He bestows a blessing from Himself upon him, he forgets the One upon whom he called before and sets up equals unto God to lead astray from His path. Say, “Enjoy your disbelief a little; truly you shall be among the inhabitants of the Fire.”

8 This is one of several verses to mention people’s tendency to call upon the Lord in times of peril or adversity (Ṭ) or times of need (IK; see also 6:40–41c; 10:12; 17:67; 30:33). Then when He bestows a blessing upon them or when He lets them taste of His Mercy (30:33) by relieving them of such afflictions, they revert to heedlessness and the pursuit of their caprices (Ṭ, Ṭb); see also 7:189–90c; 10:12c. Disbelief translates kufr, whose root meaning is “covering over” and here invokes a sense of ingratitude, as one is “covering over” the blessings one has received. The phrase could thus be rendered, “Revel in your ingratitude” a little, that is, for the duration of your life (JJ), which is little compared to the duration of the Hereafter. A little could also be understood as a reference to the delights of this world being “little” (Q) in comparison to the delights one would experience in the Hereafter.

9 What of one who is devoutly obedient during the watches of the night, prostrating and standing [in prayer], wary of the Hereafter and hoping for the Mercy of his Lord [. . .]? Say, “Are those who know and those who do not know equal? Only possessors of intellect reflect.”

9 The final phrase of the rhetorical question is elided, implying “Is he like those mentioned in the previous verse?” (IJ). The need for an elided phrase can be removed by reading what of one who (am man) as “O one who” (a man; IJ, Q, R, Ṭ). In this latter reading, “O one who is devoutly obedient,” the verse would refer to those in a state of spiritual obedience, constancy, and serenity (cf. 2:116, 238; 3:17, 43; 4:34; 16:120; 30:26; 33:31, 35; 66:12). Regarding the state of being wary of the punishment that may befall one in the Hereafter and of hoping for mercy or forgiveness from God, the Prophet is reported to have asked a man who was on his deathbed, “How do you feel?” When the man responded, “I am fearful and hopeful,” the Prophet said, “These two are not joined together in a man’s heart at a moment like this, but that God grants him that for which he hopes and protects him from that which he fears” (IK).

The difference between believers and disbelievers is also likened to the difference between the blind and the seeing (6:50; 11:24; 13:16; 35:19; 40:58), the deaf and the hearing (11:24), and light and darkness (13:16). Such comparisons can also be used to differentiate between types of believers, as in a ḥadīth: “The virtue of the pious scholar over the devoted worshipper is as the virtue of the full moon over all the other heavenly bodies.” Possessors of intellect (2:179, 197, 269; 3:7, 190; 5:100c; 12:111; 13:19; 14:52; 38:29, 43; 39:18, 21; 40:54; 65:10) are those who possess true knowledge of the inner reality of things. Intellect renders lubb (pl. albāb), which literally means “kernel,” “pith,” or “core”; as an allusion to knowledge and insight, intellect represents the “pith” or “core” of the human being. In commenting upon this verse, Ibn ʿArabī gives the word another interpretation, seeing it as a reference to the “kernel” or “pith” of knowledge, which is sent down from God, while reason is its “shell,” which must be used to reach the “pith” if reason is to be employed effectively. Possessors of intellect are thus those who employ reason as it should be employed, knowing that the “kernel” or “pith” is their true sustenance, not reason in and of itself independent of revelation (Futūḥāt III 120.32–35).

⑩ Say, “O My servants who believe, reverence your Lord. For those who do good in this world there is good; and God’s earth is vast.” Surely those who are patient shall be paid their reward in full without reckoning.

10 Those who are devoutly obedient and perform righteous deeds in this life will receive the gift of Paradise (JJ) or good in this life (such as health and peace) and in the next (Ṭs). God’s earth is vast implies that one should emigrate away from the company of idolaters (IK, JJ, Ṭ) and is thus viewed as encouragement to the Muslims of the Prophet’s time to emigrate from Makkah. It can also be understood as a reference to the “land of God” in the Garden, which one should seek by performing righteous deeds (Ṭs). In this context, those who are patient contrasts with those who waver in v. 8. Without reckoning refers to their not having to endure the weighing of their deeds in the balance on the Day of Judgment (Ṭ, Z).

⑪ Say, “Truly I have been commanded to worship God, devoting religion entirely to Him.

11 Devoting religion entirely to Him (cf. 7:29; 10:22; 29:65; 31:32; 39:2; 40:14, 65; 98:5) indicates sincerity, purification, and complete devotion; see 7:29c; 31:32c; 98:5c.

12 And I have been commanded to be the first of those who submit.”

12 That the Prophet was commanded to be the first of those who submit (cf. 6:14, 163) refers specifically to his community or his generation (IJ). Earlier prophets and their followers are also designated as submitters (muslims) in several verses; see the essay “The Quranic View of Sacred History and Other Religions.” Similarly, Moses declares, I am the first of the believers (7:143; cf. 26:51), not because he is the first to have ever believed, but because he is the first among his community to have believed in the revelation that has been sent to him. In such contexts, the first can also be understood to mean “the foremost”; see 3:96c; 6:14c.

13 Say, “Truly I fear, should I disobey my Lord, the punishment of a tremendous day.”

13 This verse is repeated verbatim in 6:15 and 10:15; see 6:15c.

14 Say, “God do I worship, devoting my religion entirely to Him.

14 See 39:2c.

15 So worship whatsoever you will apart from Him.” Say, “Truly the losers are those who lose their souls and their families on the Day of Resurrection. Yea! That is the manifest loss.”

15 The first sentence of this verse is both a threat to the disbelievers and a means of repudiating them (IK), as in 6:19, where the Prophet is told to say, He is only one God, and truly I am quit of that which you ascribe as partners unto Him (cf. 6:78; 10:41). In this sense, this verse is similar to the declaration of a complete separation between Islam and the religion of the idolaters found in Sūrah 109, which concludes unto you your religion and unto me my religion (109:6). The losers, who have lost this world and the Hereafter (22:11), have lost themselves insofar as they have wasted the opportunity to perform righteous deeds and repent in this world, and they have lost their families insofar as they will have no family in the Hereafter (Ṭ). They are thus left with no one to whom they can turn and in whom they might find comfort, or even with whom they can commiserate. In contrast, when the righteous approach Paradise, they shall enter along with those who were righteous from among their fathers, their spouses, and their progeny (13:23; cf. 40:8; 43:70).

16 Above them they shall have canopies of fire and below them canopies; with that does God strike fear into His servants. O My servants! Reverence Me!

16 Canopies here refers to layers of fire (JJ); cf. 29:55. With this threat does God strike fear into His believing servants, as indicated by the final address (JJ). Others take servants here as a reference to all human beings (Ṭ).

17 And as for those who shun false deities and worshipping them, and turn unto God, unto them glad tidings. So give glad tidings to My servants, 17 False deities translates al-ṭāghūt, which denotes a variety of false sources of authority, false objects of worship, and false causes (cf. 2:256–57; 4:51–52, 60, 76; 5:60; 16:36). To shun them thus implies shunning the worship of all that is other than God (Ṭ). Some take al-ṭāghūt to be singular and thus understand it to mean Satan (Ṭ); see also 4:51–52c.

18 who listen to the Word, then follow what is most beautiful of it. It is they whom God has guided; it is they who are the possessors of intellect.

18 Those who listen to the Word, then follow are those who understand it and act in accord with it (IK), similar to what is said to Moses regarding the commandments of the Torah in 7:145: Take hold of them with strength, and command thy people to hold to the best of them (IK). They are possessors of intellect because they follow and act in accord with revelation; see 39:9c; 5:100c. Following what is most beautiful of the revelation can also be understood to mean that one distinguishes between what is good and what is best, what is virtuous and what is most virtuous, and chooses the best or most virtuous course of action, desiring what is closer to God and what merits greater reward (Z).

19 What of one for whom the Word of punishment comes due? Wilt thou save one who is in the Fire?

19 The opening rhetorical question of this verse is answered by an elided or implied phrase something to the effect of “Is he to be delivered from the Fire.” The question, posed to the Prophet, Wilt thou save one who is in the Fire? means that the function of the Prophet is simply to deliver the message and then help guide those whom God has chosen, since God leads astray whomsoever He will and guides whomsoever He will (14:4; 16:93; 35:8). This verse resembles other verses that emphasize that human beings find guidance when God has chosen to guide them, as in 16:9: And it is for God to show the way, for some of them lead astray. Had He willed, He would have guided you all together (cf. 13:31). According to another reading, this verse can also be read, “As for one for whom the Word of punishment comes due, wilt thou save one who is in the fire?” (R, Z).

20 But as for those who reverence their Lord, they will have lofty abodes above which are lofty abodes, and rivers running below. That is God’s Promise; God will not fail the tryst.

20 The lofty abodes of Paradise are described in several sayings of the Prophet: “In the Garden there are abodes whose inside can be seen from the outside and whose outside from the inside.” When asked whom these rooms were for, he replied, “For those who speak kindly, feed the hungry, and stand in prayer at night while people are sleeping” (IK). In a ḥadīth that appears to allude to these lofty abodes, he said, “The people of the Garden will look upon one another in the abodes, just as you look upon the stars of the east and the stars of the west rising on the horizon according to their excellence in rank.” When asked, “Are they the prophets?” he replied, “Yea! By Him in Whose Hand is my soul, and the people who believed in God and His Messenger and who affirmed the messengers” (IK). God will not fail the tryst (cf. 3:9, 195; 13:31) means that the Day of Reckoning is guaranteed and, in this context, that God will grant them what He has promised.

21 Hast thou not considered that God sends down water from the sky, conducts it as springs in the earth, then brings forth crops of diverse colors? Then they wither and thou seest them yellowing. Then He turns them to chaff. Truly in that is a reminder for possessors of intellect.

21 Regarding God’s sending down water from the sky, see 6:99c. Here the various stages of plant life are posed as a metaphor for the stages of human life, as in 18:45: Set forth for them a parable of the life of this world: [It is] like water We send down from the sky. Then it mixes with the vegetation of the earth. Then it becomes chaff, scattered by the winds (cf. 57:20). Both verses indicate God’s Power over all things and that all things perish, save His Face (28:88).

22 What of one whose breast God has expanded for submission, such that he follows a light from his Lord? Woe unto those whose hearts are hardened to the remembrance of God! They are in manifest error.

22 This first phrase is followed by an elided phrase that is understood to be something to the effect of “[is he] like he who is not” or “[is he] like one whose heart He has sealed” (JJ). The breast is understood to be the locus of the heart and the fountainhead of the spirit (Bḍ) and is thus identified with the seat of inspirations, thoughts, and intentions. The Quran mentions frequently that God knows what lies within breasts (e.g., 3:119, 154; 5:7c; 8:43; 11:5) and in 100:10 alludes to the Day of Judgment as a day on which what lies within breasts is made known. While the breast's expansion is associated with belief (see 94:1c), its contraction is associated with disbelief (see 6:125c). When one follows a light from his Lord it means that God has opened one's heart to spiritual knowledge (ma'rifah) and guidance (Bḍ). The manner in which light expands the breast is described by the Prophet: "When light enters the heart, it expands and it becomes spacious." When asked what the mark of that was, he responded, "Constant turning to the Abode of Eternity, shunning the abode of delusion, and preparing for death before it arrives" (Bḍ, N, Q). By contrast, those whose hearts are hardened to the remembrance of God stew in the dark recesses of desire and seek the things of this world, far from the lights of knowledge and guidance; see 8:29c. People's hearts may be described as "hardened," "sealed," or "covered" as a result of their own wrongdoing and the consequent loss of Divine Favor, so that they are no longer receptive to Divine messages or to the remembrance of God; cf. 2:7, 74; 5:13; 6:25, 43; 7:101; 9:87, 93; 10:74; 16:108; 17:46; 18:57; 30:59; 47:16; 57:16; 63:3. Also see 10:88, where Moses asks God to harden the hearts of Pharaoh and his people.

23 God has sent down the most beautiful discourse, a Book consimilar, paired, whereat quivers the skin of those who fear their Lord. Then their skin and their hearts soften unto the remembrance of God. That is God's Guidance, wherewith He guides whomsoever He will; and whomsoever God leads astray, no guide has he.

23 The most beautiful discourse refers to the Quran (Bḍ, IK, Q), which is considered most beautiful in both meaning and expression, its verses being consimilar and paired, signifying aspects of this beauty (R). That it is consimilar can be understood to mean that each part is as eloquent as the next (R); to allude to the manner in which many parts resemble others, with various recurring phrases (IK, Ṭ); to refer to the manner in which particular qualities such as beauty and wisdom (Q) or truth and inimitability (Bḍ) are found throughout; or to mean that each part confirms the other parts (Q). Consimilar renders mutashābih, a word that is also used to describe some verses of the Quran in 3:7, but with a very different, more technical meaning of the word (IK); see 3:7c. Paired refers to the way that many opposites are juxtaposed in the Quran, such as Heaven and Hell, believers and disbelievers, the pious and the profligate, and reward and punishment (IK). An example of such juxtaposition is then provided through reference to the skin that quivers out of fear of God's Might and Punishment and the skins and hearts that soften out of hope for His Mercy and Forgiveness.

That the Quran makes skins quiver and then soften along with hearts is another attribute that makes it most beautiful (Aj). While other verses mention those whose hearts respond to the recitation of the Quran (see 8:2; 5:83), or when God is mentioned (22:35), this is the only verse to mention those whose skins quiver and soften unto the remembrance of God. According to some commentators, this is a description of the Companions of the Prophet, whose eyes would water and skins would quiver when the Quran was recited (Q). In this interpretation, remembrance is often understood to mean "Reminder," as a reference to the Quran, one of whose names is "the Reminder" (al-Dhikr). But as translated here, it is understood as a reference to the remembrance of God referred to in such verses as 13:28: Those who believe and whose hearts are at peace in the remembrance of God. Are not hearts at peace in the remembrance of God? It could also be understood to mean that when God remembers a person, that person's heart cannot but soften; see commentary on 29:45: But the remembrance of God is surely greater.

That is God's Guidance refers to the Quran as described in this verse (Q) or to what God has granted by way of fear of His Punishment and hope for His Reward (Q). As for those whom God leads astray, the Quran says that there is no way (4:88, 143; 42:46), no guide (7:186; 13:33; 39:36; 40:33), and no protector (18:17; 42:44). In this context no guide has he can be understood to mean that for one whose skin does not quiver and then soften along with the heart, there is no guidance.

24 What of one who guards with his face against the evil punishment on the Day of Resurrection? And it shall be said unto the wrongdoers, "Taste that which you used to earn."

24 There is an elided phrase here something to the effect of "Is he as one who does right." In this sense this verse is similar in meaning to 41:40: Is one who is cast in the Fire better, or one who comes in security on the Day of Resurrection? (IK, †) and 67:22: Is one who walks with his face stooped down more guided, or one who walks upright upon a straight path? (IK). Guards with his face indicates either that the first thing to touch the Fire is his face or that he is dragged upon his face into the Fire (Q, †). Taste that which you used to earn evokes a similar statement in 7:39: So taste of the punishment for that which you have earned.

25 Those before them denied, and the punishment came upon them whence they were not aware.

25 The punishment came upon them whence they were not aware (cf. 16:26, 45) refers to the punishments that came upon peoples of the past, such as the flood upon the people of Noah, the plagues upon the Egyptians, and the storms upon the people of Lot as well as the destruction of the Arabian tribes of ʿĀd and Thamūd, among others.

26 Thus God had them taste disgrace in the life of this world; yet the punishment of the Hereafter is surely greater, if they but knew.

26 This verse is a warning to the disbelievers that, as bad as any disgrace they can imagine in this life may be, that of the Hereafter will be infinitely greater.

27 And indeed We have set forth for mankind in this Quran every kind of parable, that haply they may remember, 27 Every kind of parable can also be understood to mean “every parable,” in which case it is read either as a reference to the accounts of the people alluded to in vv. 25–26 (Ṭ) or to mean all the parables that people would need for understanding religious matters (Bḍ, Q); see 30:58–59c. That haply they may remember can also be understood to mean “that they may take heed” (Bḍ). While the parables of the Quran are sent down for all of humanity, none understand them, save those who know (29:43).

28 an Arabic Quran, bearing no crookedness, that haply they may be reverent.

28 An Arabic Quran is literally “an Arabic recitation” (cf. 12:2; 20:113; 41:3; 42:7; 43:3) and is understood as an allusion to the supreme eloquence of the Quran, which cannot be matched, as in 17:88, where the Prophet is enjoined, Say, “Surely if mankind and jinn banded together to bring the like of this Quran, they would not bring the like thereof, even if they supported one another” (R). Bearing no crookedness (cf. 18:1) is understood to mean that there is no contradiction in the Quran (IK, JJ, R), as in 4:82: Had it been from other than God, they would surely have found much discrepancy therein. That a verse ending with that haply they may remember is followed by this one ending with that haply they may be reverent can be understood to mean that remembrance, knowledge, and understanding precede and are thus necessary for true reverence (R).

29 God sets forth a parable: a man in whom quarreling partners share, and a man belonging to one man: are the two equal in likeness? Praise be to God! Nay, but most of them know not.

29 In this analogy, a man in whom quarreling partners share represents the idolater, who serves many masters, while a man belonging to one man represents the believer, who serves only God (IK, Q, R, Ṭ). The two parts of this analogy can also be understood as representing a heart that is divided among many interests and one that is devoted entirely to God (Aj). In this vein, the Prophet is reported to have said, “Whosoever makes his aspirations one aspiration—that is, God—God suffices him for aspiration in this world. Yet whosoever is dispersed by his aspirations, in whichever valley of the world he may be destroyed, God has no concern for him” (Aj). And in another ḥadīth, “One for whom the world is his aspiration, God divides his affairs for him, places his poverty (faqr) before his eyes, and nothing of the world comes to him but what has been apportioned for him. Yet one for whom the Hereafter is his aspiration, God gathers his affairs together for him, places his wealth (ghināhu) in his heart, and the world comes to him, though it be slight” (Aj). Read in this way, this verse echoes the underlying theme of this sūrah, devoting religion entirely to Him (vv. 2, 11, 14) and following the pure religion (v. 3), since only the heart that has God as its single aspiration can be completely devoted to Him.

Most of them, meaning humanity in general or the disbelievers in particular, know not (cf. 7:187; 16:75, 101; 21:24; 27:61; 30:30; 31:25; 34:36; 40:57; 45:26) or understand not (5:103; 29:63; 49:4), thus most of mankind do not give thanks (2:243; 40:61; cf. 10:60; 12:38; 27:73) because they are not believers (11:17; 12:103–6; 13:1; 17:89; 26:8, 67, 103, 121, 139, 158, 174, 190; 40:59).

30 Surely thou wilt die, and surely they will die.

31 Then on the Day of Resurrection, before thy Lord will you dispute.

30–31 After v. 31 was revealed, the Prophet is reported to have been asked by his Companion al-Zubayr, “Shall the worst sins that passed between us in this world return to us?” The Prophet said, “Yes. They will indeed return to you until everyone who has a claim has presented that to which he has a claim.” Al-Zubayr replied, “By God, the affair is severe” (IK). This verse can thus be understood as a reference to those who have been wronged disputing with those who wronged them, the truthful disputing with liars, and other such pairings (IK, Ṭs). It is also reported that Ibn ʿAbbās said, “People will dispute on the Day of Resurrection to the point that the soul will dispute with the body. The soul will say to the body, ‘You did such and such.’ And the body will say to the soul, ‘You told me to do it and you tempted me.’ . . . Then an angel will say to them, ‘You have passed judgment against yourselves’” (IK). In this sense, v. 31 is similar to 41:19–21: And on that Day the enemies of God are gathered unto the Fire and are marshaled in [ordered ranks], till, when they come upon it, their ears, their eyes, and their skins will bear witness against them for that which they used to do. And they will say to their skins, “Why did you bear witness against us?”

Some also read the present verses as a reference to the disputes that arose among the Muslims soon after the death of the Prophet (IK, Ṭs). Some Shiites interpret them as a reference to those they believe usurped ʿAlī ibn Abī Ṭālib’s rightful place as the commander of the faithful (amīr al-muʾminīn; Qm).

32 So who does greater wrong than one who lies against God and denies the truth when it comes to him? Is there not within Hell an abode for the disbelievers?

32 Lies against God can also mean “lies regarding God,” in reference to those who claim that God has partners or offspring (IK). It is similar to the frequently repeated question, Who does greater wrong than one who fabricates a lie against God? (6:21, 93, 144; 7:37; 10:17; 11:18; 18:15; 29:68; cf. 61:7). Similarly, 6:157 asks, Who does greater wrong than one who denies the signs of God and turns away from them? Regarding the rhetorical question, Is there not within Hell an abode for the disbelievers? see 39:60; 29:68c.

33 And whosoever comes with the truth and confirms it, it is they who are reverent.

33 This verse is best understood as a general statement referring to all who are called to believe in the Oneness of God, affirm the Prophet, and act in accord with the message with which he was sent, or to those who come with the Quran on the Day of Resurrection saying, “This is what you gave to us and we have followed what is in it” (Ṭ). Some, however, interpret whosoever comes with the truth as a reference to the Prophet (R, Ṭ, Ṭs, Ṭū) or to the Archangel Gabriel (Ṭs, Ṭū) and then read an additional but unstated phrase into the verse, so that it would be “and [he who] confirms it,” referring to Abū Bakr, or “and [those who] confirm it,” referring to Muslims in general (IK, R, Ṭ). But as al-Ṭabarī notes, such an addition is not warranted. Others read whosoever comes with the truth and confirms it as a reference to ʿAlī ibn Abī Ṭālib (Qm).

34 With their Lord they shall have whatsoever they will—that is the recompense of the virtuous—

34 Whatsoever they will (cf. 16:31; 25:16; 42:22; 50:35) refers to the many bounties of Paradise that are said to be granted to the reverent (16:31) as a binding promise upon your Lord (25:16); see also 52:22; 56:21; 77:41–44.

35 that God may absolve them of the worst of that which they have done and render unto them their reward for the best of that which they used to do.

35 This is one of several verses to confirm that the believers are rewarded for the best of that which they used to do (9:121; 16:96–97; 24:38; 29:7; 46:16); see 29:7c.

36 Does God not suffice His servant? Yet they would frighten thee with those apart from Him; and whomsoever God leads astray, no guide has he.

37 And whomsoever God guides, none shall lead him astray. Is not God Mighty, Possessor of Vengeance?

36–37 The initial question asks, “Did not God suffice Muhammad, as He sufficed the prophets before him?” The idolaters think that raising the specter of their idols’ displeasure and wrath will somehow influence the Prophet (ﷺ). His servant can also be understood to mean any believer, meaning that God suffices for anyone who worships only Him and relies solely upon Him (IK). In this sense, it follows upon the analogy of v. 29: in addition to not being divided between many masters and having a heart dispersed by many aspirations like the idolater, the believing monotheist has in God all that he or she needs. The one who does not believe and trust in God is allowed to go astray and has no way (4:88, 143; 42:46), no guide (7:186; 13:33; 39:23; 40:33), and no protector (17:97; 18:17; 42:44); and it is they who are the losers (7:178). In contrast, whomsoever God guides, he is rightly guided (7:178; 17:97; 18:17) and none can undo His Guidance, since God is Powerful over all things (2:20, 106, 148, 284; 3:29, 165). In this context, that God is Mighty, Possessor of Vengeance (cf. 3:5; 5:95; 14:47) indicates that, unlike the idols of whom the idolaters warn the Prophet, God will have vengeance upon those who deny Him.

38 And wert thou to ask them, “Who created the heavens and the earth?” They would surely say, “God.” Say, “Then have you considered those upon whom you call, apart from God? If God desires some harm for me, could they remove His Harm, or if He desires some mercy, could they withhold His Mercy?” Say, “God suffices me; in Him trust those who trust.”

38 When questioned about the source of creation, they—that is, the idolaters among the Quraysh—would surely say, “God” (cf. 10:31; 23:84–89; 29:61, 63;

31:25; 43:9, 87), because the agency of a Creator above all others is evident to them (Aj), given that many of them still believed in one supreme deity at the head of a pantheon. Their belief in a supreme deity is then used to argue that there is no way that any of their other deities could avert what God desires or has ordained, as in 10:107: And if God should touch thee with affliction, none can remove it save He; and if He desires some good for thee, none can hold back His Bounty. He causes it to fall upon whomsoever He will among His servants (cf. 3:160; 36:23; 48:11). God suffices me (cf. 3:173; 9:59, 129) means both that God suffices as a Witness (4:79, 167; 10:29; 17:96; 29:52; 48:29) between the Prophet and the disbelievers and that, since none can remove God's harm, only God suffices as a Guardian (4:81, 132, 171; 33:3, 48).

39 Say, "O my people! Act according to your position; I, too, am acting. Soon you shall know 40 upon whom there comes a punishment that disgraces him and upon whom there falls a punishment enduring."

39–40 The injunction to act serves as a threat and a warning to the disbelievers (IK) meaning, "Perform the deeds prescribed by your religion, just as I will perform the deeds prescribed by my religion, and soon you shall know whose religion is true" and thus who will be punished with a punishment that disgraces him (cf. 11:39, 93) in this life and who will have a punishment enduring (cf. 5:37; 9:68; 11:39) in the Hereafter.

41 Truly We have sent down unto thee the Book for mankind in truth. Whosoever is rightly guided, it is for the sake of his own soul. And whosoever goes astray only goes astray to the detriment thereof. And thou art not a guardian over them.

41 Regarding the Quran having been sent down in truth or with truth (cf. 2:176, 213; 3:3; 4:105; 5:48; 6:114; 39:2; 42:17), see 39:2c. Here for mankind is added to the phrase, indicating that it is out of God's Mercy that such revelation occurs, communicating truth and guidance to human beings. That one is guided for the sake of his own soul (which can also mean “for himself”) means that the benefit of guidance is for the human being alone; God has no need of it, but simply offers it as a mercy. In contrast, those who go astray harm only themselves, just as those who do wrong wrong only themselves; see commentary on the almost identical passages in 17:15 and 10:108. That the Prophet is not a guardian over them (cf. 6:107; 42:6; also 6:66; 10:108; 17:54; 25:43) also indicates that the Prophet should not torment himself (see 18:6; 26:3) or let his soul be expended in regrets (35:8) over the state and actions of the disbelievers (R). Elsewhere, the Prophet is told, Thou art only a warner, and God is Guardian over all things (11:12), and that he is not their keeper (4:80; 6:104; 11:86; 42:48), since in the end, only God suffices as a Guardian (4:81, 132, 171; 33:3, 48; see also 17:65).

④2 God takes souls at the moment of their death, and those who die not, during their sleep. He withholds those for whom He has decreed death, and sends forth the others till a term appointed. Truly in that are signs for a people who reflect.

42 God takes souls by sending the Angel of Death to them, as in 32:11: Say, “The Angel of death, who has been entrusted with you, will take you; then unto your Lord shall you be returned.” In death souls are completely detached from the body, and in sleep they are partially detached (R), as in 6:60: He it is Who takes your souls by night. Regarding the relationship between the two, a ḥadīth states, “Sleep is the brother of death, and the people of the Garden do not die” (Q); see also 6:60–61c and the essay, “Death, Dying, and the Afterlife.” Regarding the taking of the soul while human beings are sleeping, the Prophet advised his Companions to say when going to bed, “In Thy Name, my Lord, I lay down my body, and in Thee do I raise it. If Thou dost take my soul, have mercy upon it. And if Thou dost send it back, protect it with that with which Thou protectest Thy righteous servants” (IK, Q). A term appointed indicates the moment of death or the Day of Judgment, when all things are returned to God. For all human beings, as for all creation, this term is decreed, as in 6:2: He it is Who created you from clay, then decreed a term. A term is appointed with Him (see also 6:60; 10:49; 13:2; 42:14; 46:3). In this particular context, till a term appointed refers to the return of souls to their bodies when they awaken (R), thus granting them reprieve until they are taken in death and then called to account; see 35:45c.

43 Or do they take intercessors apart from God? Say, “Even though they have not any power and do not understand?”

44 Say, “Unto God belongs intercession altogether. To Him belongs sovereignty over the heavens and the earth. Then unto Him shall you be returned.”

43–44 Even though it is only God Who takes souls, the idolaters still turn to their idols for intercession or as a means of bringing them nigh in nearness unto God (v. 3), because they do not understand (Q). Those upon whom they call apart from Him have no power of intercession, save such as have borne witness to the truth knowingly (43:86; cf. 19:87). Thus although unto God belongs intercession altogether, others, especially prophets, can be granted powers of intercession by His Leave, as in 20:109: On that Day intercession will be of no benefit, save [that of] those whom the Compassionate has granted leave and with whose word He is content (cf. 34:23; 53:26). Regarding the Quranic presentation of intercession, see 2:48c; 2:255c. Then unto Him shall you be returned is a common Quranic refrain, here referring to the Judgment before God (IK), when the disbelievers will be taken to account for their idolatry (Ṭ).

45 And when God is mentioned alone, the hearts of those who believe not in the Hereafter recoil. But when those apart from Him are mentioned, behold, they rejoice.

45 When God is mentioned without any acknowledgment of the deities and idols the idolaters worship, their hearts shudder and withdraw in disgust and disdain (Ṭ), as they are filled with distress and rancor (Z). But when their deities are acknowledged, they rejoice (Z). That they rejoice in idolatry and recoil from monotheism reveals the depth of their disbelief. According to some commentators, this verse refers to their reaction on the day when, in front of the Ka‘bah, the Prophet recited to them Sūrah 53, al-Najm, “The Star” (Ṭ, Z), which some contend had at one point contained a mistaken reference to their idols as “exalted cranes” (see 22:52c; 53:19–20c). This caused the idolaters to rejoice, thinking their religion had found acceptance in the new revelation, until 53:23 was revealed and said of their deities, They are naught but names that you have named—you and your fathers—for which God has sent down no authority.

④ Say, “O God! Originator of the heavens and the earth, Knower of the Unseen and the seen, Thou judgest between Thy servants regarding that wherein they differ.”

46 Originator translates Fāṭir, a Divine Name related to the verb faṭara, meaning to “split” or “cleave.” In the Quran, Fāṭir always occurs in the phrase Originator of the heavens and the earth (cf. 6:14; 12:101; 14:10; 35:1; 42:11). Regarding God as Knower of the Unseen and the seen (cf. 6:73; 9:94, 105; 13:9; 23:92; 32:6; 59:22; 62:8; 64:18), see 59:22c. When the Prophet’s wife ‘Ā’ishah was asked how he began his supererogatory prayers at night, she replied that he would say, “O God, Lord of Gabriel, Michael, and Seraphiel, Originator of the heavens and the earth, Knower of the Unseen and the seen, Thou judgest between Thy servants regarding that wherein they differ. By Thy Leave, guide me with regard to that of the truth wherein there is dispute. Truly Thou guidest whomsoever Thou wilt unto a straight path” (IK, Q, R).

④ Were those who work evil to possess all that is on the earth and the like of it besides, they would seek to ransom themselves with it from the terrible punishment on the Day of Resurrection. And there will appear unto them from God that which they had not reckoned.

47 The certainty of the reckoning after death is a central theme of the Quran, and it is considered futile to seek to ransom oneself with worldly goods from punishment in the Hereafter. Several verses are more emphatic, such as 3:91: An earth full of gold would not be accepted from any one of them, were he to offer it in ransom (see also 2:48, 123; 10:54; 13:18; 57:15). The overwhelming fright of the Day of Resurrection is said to be such that the guilty would wish to ransom himself from the punishment of that Day at the price of his children, his spouse and his brother, his kin who had sheltered him, and all who are on the earth, that it might save him (70:11–14). That which they had not reckoned may refer to the evildoers’ denial that they would be taken to account for anything (Ṭ); to bad deeds that they had thought were in fact good deeds (Q), such as their worship of idols; to deeds from which they thought they would be able to repent before they died, though they were never able to do so; or to their failure to realize that they could not be forgiven without repentance (Q). It can thus be understood as a reference to everything of which a human being may be heedless in this life, as in 50:22, when every soul is addressed with the words, You were indeed heedless of this. Now We have removed from you your cover; so today your sight is piercing. In this vein, the present verse can also be seen as a warning. As the prominent Quran reciter Muhammad ibn al-Munkadir (d. 130/747–8) is reported to have said of this verse, “I fear that there will appear unto me from God that which I had not reckoned” (Aj, Q, Z).

④8 The evils of that which they have earned will appear unto them, and that which they used to mock will beset them.

48 The evil deeds committed in this life will be presented to the evildoers when they are given the books of their deeds (see 17:13–14c; 18:49c; 69:25; 78:29; 84:7–10) in their left hands (Ṭ); or what will appear are the effects of the evil deeds, that is, the types of retribution these deeds have earned them (R). And that which they used to mock will beset them (cf. 6:10; 11:8; 16:34; 21:41; 40:83; 45:33; 46:26) indicates that there is now no escape from their punishment (Ṭ), which will come upon them from every direction (R), and that what they will receive is a direct result of their own iniquity, since God does not wrong human beings in the least, but rather human beings wrong themselves (10:44).

④9 And when harm befalls man, he calls upon Us. Then, when We confer upon him a blessing from Us, he says, “I was only given it because of knowledge.” Nay, it is a trial, but most of them know not.

49 Cf. 10:12; 30:33; 39:8; see 39:8c. In this context, that people turn to God in a time of need and then turn away, waxing arrogant in a time of blessing, is another indication of utter corruption, since they have in effect acknowledged that none but God can protect them from what afflicts them, but then they ascribe their gains and achievements to their own striving. And this is a great contradiction (R). I was only given it because of knowledge means, “I was given these blessings because God knew that I deserved them” (IK, R), “because I have a special position” (IK, Q), “because I myself knew that I deserved them” (IK, R), “because my own knowledge earned this benefit for me” (Q, R), or “because of some knowledge that God has taught me” (Q). Such blessings are a trial from God because one must manifest gratitude upon receiving them and patience upon their disappearance (R).

50 Those before them did say the same; yet that which they used to earn availed them not.

50 The same refers to the statement I was only given it because of knowledge in v. 49 (Q, R, Ṭ, Z), which is similar to what Korah, a wealthy member of Pharaoh’s court, says in 28:78, I have only been given it on account of knowledge I possess. But for those earlier people who made this statement, in this life and the Hereafter that which they used to earn availed them not (cf. 15:84; 40:82). That phrase can also be understood as a rhetorical question when the particle mā, here rendered as a negative particle, is understood as an interrogative particle; it would then read, “Then in what way did that which they used to earn avail them?” (Q). Both renderings indicate the frailty and ephemerality of the things that consume people in this life before there will appear unto them from God that which they had not reckoned (v. 47), on the Day when neither wealth nor children avail, save for him who comes to God with a sound heart (26:88–89).

51 So the evils of that which they earned befell them. And as for those who do wrong among these, the evils of that which they have earned will befall them, and they cannot thwart [it].

51 The first part of this verse refers to those before them (v. 50), while among these refers to the disbelievers among the Quraysh and the contemporaries of the Prophet, who will be beset by the evil consequences of their disbelief and misdeeds, as were previous generations. They cannot thwart God in this life or the next (R; see 35:44; 72:12) or thwart the punishment they have been promised, as in 6:134: Indeed, that which you are promised shall come to pass, and you cannot thwart it.

52 Do they not know that God outspreads and straitens provision for whomsoever He will? Truly in that are signs for a people who believe.

52 God outspreads . . . provision for whomsoever He will as a test and straitens provision for whomsoever He will as a trial (JJ); cf. 13:6; 17:30; 28:82; 29:62; 30:37; 34:39; 42:12. In this context, this phrase indicates that one does not receive blessings or suffer misfortune based on one's intelligence or ignorance (R), as the disbelievers are said to think in v. 49, or because of one's natural disposition or other outside forces (R), but rather because God provides and withholds provision as He wills. People who believe, affirming the truth and consenting to it when it is made clear to them, know that the one who does this could only be God (Ṭ), and in that are signs for a people who believe (cf. 6:99; 16:79; 27:86; 29:24; 30:37).

53 Say, "O My servants who have been prodigal to the detriment of their own souls! Despair not of God's Mercy. Truly God forgives all sins. Truly He is the Forgiving, the Merciful.

53 This verse is similar to 4:110: Whosoever does evil or wrongs himself, and then seeks forgiveness of God, he will find God Forgiving, Merciful. Many scholars consider this to be among the most hopeful verses of the Quran (others include 4:48, 116; 24:22; 33:47; 42:19, 22; 93:5) or among "the most joyous verses of the Quran" (Ṭ). Although this verse addresses all of humanity (Ṭ), many understand it to have initially addressed the situation of some Makkans who feared that they could not repent and follow the Prophet because they had worshipped idols, called upon other deities, killed people whose lives God had declared inviolable (IK, Ṭ), or fornicated (IK). Their being prodigal to the detriment of their own souls would then refer to all manner of sin, even their having killed innocent people in the pre-Islamic Age of Ignorance (jāhiliyyah; see 3:154; 5:50; 33:33; 48:26c; Ṭ); for the Quranic usage of "prodigal," see 10:12c.

Others understand this verse to have been revealed in reference to a small group of Muslims whom the Makkans had prevented from migrating to Madinah with the Prophet and then forced, under the pain of persecution, to renounce Islam; for this they feared they could not repent (Ṭ). According to Thawbān, a freed slave of the Prophet, the Prophet said, "I would not wish to have the entire world and all that is in it [in exchange] for this verse: O My servants who have been prodigal to the detriment of their own souls! Despair not of God's Mercy." A man asked, "O Messenger of God, what about someone who associates partners with God?" The Prophet was silent and then said three times, "And why not one who associates partners with God?" (Ṭ). Such forgiveness would, however, be contingent upon the renouncement of idolatry and repentance for it, since 4:48 states, Truly God forgives not that any partner be ascribed unto Him, but He forgives what is less than that for whomsoever He will (cf. 4:116).

According to a third opinion, this verse was revealed to correct a group of Muslims who held that anyone who committed a major sin was among the people of the Fire (Ṭ). Regarding the manner in which God's Forgiveness is intrinsic to the human experience, the Prophet said, "If you did not sin [and seek forgiveness], God would remove you and come with a people who would sin and seek forgiveness from God, and He would forgive them."

54 Turn unto your Lord and submit to Him before the punishment comes upon you, whereupon you will not be helped.

54 Here turn unto your Lord indicates turning in repentance (Ṭ), responding to God, returning to obedience to God, and withdrawing from the acts of disobedience before one is punished for being a disbeliever (Ṭ). This verse thus provides the reason why one should despair not of God's Mercy, as in 9:104: Know they not that God accepts repentance from His servants, and receives the charitable offerings, and that God is the Relenting, the Merciful? The combination of turning to God in repentance and submitting to Him can then evoke the opening injunction of this sūrah to worship God, devoting religion entirely to Him (vv. 2, 11, 14), which can be seen as embracing the original or primordial human state of pure faith (Ṭ), as expressed in a prayer of Abraham, Truly I have turned my face toward Him Who created the heavens and the earth, as a ḥanīf, and I am not of the idolaters (6:79; Ṭ).

55 And follow the most beautiful of that which has been sent down unto you from your Lord, before the punishment comes suddenly upon you while you are unaware,"

55 As in v. 18, what is most beautiful of what God has revealed is not understood to mean that one part is more beautiful than another (Q, Ṭ), but that one should act in accord with the revelation, thus maintaining obedience and avoiding disobedience (Q, R) or practicing what God has enjoined and avoiding what He has forbidden (Ṭ), since it is only when the injunctions contained in revelation have been put into practice that their purpose is achieved; see also 39:18c. Some understand this verse to mean that the Quran is the best or most beautiful of the books that God has sent down (IK, Q), as in v. 23, where it is referred to as the most beautiful discourse (R).

56 lest any soul should say, “Alas for me, for what I neglected of my duty to God! Indeed, I was among the scoffers.”

56 Lest any soul should say, that is, lest anyone should seek to repent only when it is too late. Alas for me is understood as an expression of utmost regret and grief (R) for having failed to perform the deeds enjoined by God (Q, R, Ṭ). Of my duty to God renders min janbi’Llāh, which literally means “of” or “from the side of God” and is interpreted to mean, “of God’s Right” (Bḍ), “of obedience to God” (Q, Ṭs, Z), or “of the reward of God” (Q, Ṭs). In Arabic, “side” (janb) can allude to physical, emotional, and spiritual closeness, as when one speaks of being by another’s side in English. “Of the side of God” could then refer to being near to God and thus in Paradise, to being in the proximity of what leads to God (Q), or to seeking nearness to God (Ṭs). The scoffers are those who scoffed at the Quran and the Messenger (Q, Ṭ).

57 Or lest it say, “If only God had guided me, I would have been among the reverent.”

57 On the one hand, this lament is understood as correct (Q, R), since God guides whomsoever He will unto a straight path (2:213; 24:46; cf. 2:142; 10:25). But, on the other hand, people are responsible for not having followed God’s guidance, for God offered signs, but some chose not to look at or reflect upon them, turning away from the Quran and being preoccupied with the world and its vanities. Thus God responds, Nay, My signs did indeed come unto you (v. 59; Ṭs).

58 Or lest it say, when it sees the punishment, “If only I had another chance, I would be among the virtuous.”

58 While those represented in the previous verse blame God for their having not been guided, those represented in this verse acknowledge some culpability and ask to be given a second chance, as in 32:12, when the guilty say, Send us back that we may work righteousness. Truly we are certain. But as they have been given revelation in this world as well as a reprieve until the moment of death, such lamentations are not considered sincere and are of no avail, for even if they were sent back, they would return to the very thing they had been forbidden. Truly they are liars (6:28).

59 Nay, My signs did indeed come unto you; yet you denied them, waxed arrogant, and were among the disbelievers.

59 This is God’s response to the laments expressed in vv. 56–58, meaning that those voicing them had been informed of what would befall them through God’s signs, meaning revelation as well as the Divine signs in the created order, that is, God’s signs upon the horizons and within themselves (41:53), and thus have no excuse.

60 And on the Day of Resurrection thou wilt see those who lied against God having blackened faces. Is there not in Hell an abode for the arrogant?

60 For the phenomenon of faces being blackened or covered, see 3:106–7c, where those with whitened faces are contrasted to those with blackened faces; commentary on 80:38–42, which contrasts shining, radiant faces with those that are covered with dust, overspread with darkness; as well as 10:27, which speaks of the faces being covered with dark patches of night.

61 And God saves those who are reverent by their triumph; evil will not befall them; nor will they grieve.

61 Their triumph may refer to the virtues or deeds of the reverent (Ṭ), to their being delivered from the Fire (Ṭs), or to the triumph of spiritual concerns over worldly ones. Attaining to the Garden is referred to as the great triumph in over a dozen verses; for the blessings of the Garden, see 5:119; 44:51–57. The torments of Hell will not befall them; nor will they grieve regarding the things of this world, which have now passed (Ṭ). Alternately, that they are not touched by evil or grief refers to their being spared any punishment on the Day of Resurrection (IK).

62 God is the Creator of all things, and He is Guardian over all things.

62 Elsewhere the Prophet is told, Thou art only a warner, and God is Guardian over all things (11:12); see 39:41c.

63 Unto Him belong the keys of the heavens and the earth. And those who disbelieve in the signs of God, it is they who are the losers.

63 That God holds the keys of the heavens and the earth (cf. 42:12) indicates that He has sovereignty over them and protects them (Z). It is understood to mean “the keys to the treasures” (Ṭ) and thus to be an indirect reference to the treasures themselves (R, Z), an allusion to 15:21, Naught is there, but that its treasures lie with Us, and We do not send it down, save in a known measure (cf. 63:7), meaning that God opens the treasures of provision and mercy unto whomsoever He wills and closes them as He alone desires (Z), dispersing provisions and mercy (Ṭs). It may also refer to God’s Knowledge, as in 6:59: And with Him are the keys of the Unseen. None knows them but He. On a spiritual level, it can be understood to mean that God possesses the keys to all hearts (ST); see 6:59c. Having denied God’s signs, the disbelievers lose any share of the good that God measures out from His treasures, in this life and the next (Ṭ).

64 Say, “Do you bid me to worship other than God, O ignorant ones?”

64 This rhetorical question serves as an expression of amazement that the disbelievers could ask the Prophet to worship those who have none of the keys to the treasuries alongside the One Who has them all, as in 38:9, which asks about their deities, or have they the treasuries of thy Lord’s Mercy, the Mighty, the Bestower? (cf. 52:32).

65 Surely it has been revealed unto thee and unto those before thee that if thou dost ascribe partners [unto God], thy work will surely come to naught and thou shalt be among the losers.

65 This verse repeats the Quranic assertion that, in the absence of correct and proper belief, good deeds come to naught, providing no reward in the next life, because, as the Prophet is reported to have said, “Deeds are only in accord with their intentions, and every person has only what he intended.” See also 2:217; 3:22; 5:5, 53; 6:88; 7:147; 9:17; 11:16; 18:105; 33:19; 47:9, 28, 32.

66 Rather, worship God and be among the thankful!

66 One should be thankful to God for His Guidance in worshipping Him alone and repudiating the worship of idols (Ṭ) and, in the context of the preceding verses, for what He has measured out for human beings from His treasuries.

67 They did not measure God with His true measure. The whole earth shall be but a handful to Him on the Day of Resurrection, and the heavens will be enfolded in His right Hand. Glory be to Him, exalted is He above the partners they ascribe.

67 The idolaters did not honor God as He should be honored (Q, Ṭ) when they assigned partners to Him, described Him by attributes that do not pertain to Him (Bḍ), and did not believe that God has complete power over all things (IK, Ṭ).

Almost all commentators relate this verse to the idolaters of Makkah, but those who provide multiple opinions also relate it to an instance when a Jew, some say a rabbi, said to the Prophet, “O Muhammad! God will put the heavens on a finger, the earths on another finger, the mountains on a finger, and the rest of creation on another finger. Then He will say, ‘I am the King.’” At this the Prophet smiled broadly until his molars could be seen and recited this verse (IK, Q, Ṭ), some say in confirmation of what had been said (IK, Ṭ), indicating that the Prophet recognized that the Muslims and the Jews were both monotheists, the opposite of the idolaters. Less reliable accounts say that this verse was actually revealed as a rebuke to the position expressed by the Jew (Ṭ); for they did not measure God with His true measure, see also 6:91c; 22:74c. That the whole earth shall be but a handful to Him indicates the ease with which God can bring creation to an end (Bḍ). Glory be to Him, exalted is He above the partners they ascribe (cf. 10:18; 16:1; 30:40) is an affirmation of God’s utter transcendence.

68 And the trumpet will be blown, whereupon whosoever is in the heavens and on the earth will swoon, save those whom God wills. Then it will be blown again, and, behold, they will be standing, beholding.

68 This verse stands apart from others that mention the blowing of the trumpet heralding the apocalypse and the onset of the Final Judgment (see 6:73; 18:99; 20:102; 23:101; 27:87; 36:51; 50:20; 69:13; 74:8; 78:18) in that it speaks of the trumpet being blown twice by the Archangel Seraphiel. The first blow, blast, or call (as it is named in other contexts) results in the destruction of all creation, and the second heralds the Resurrection. Those who are exempted from swooning at the first trumpet blast are said to be the archangels Gabriel, Michael, and Seraphiel and the Angel of Death, ‘Izrā’īl (or Azrael; Ṭ, Ṭs). Others say that eventually everything swoons; then God resurrects Seraphiel to blow the trumpet another time, summoning the Resurrection (IK); this second blast is what is referred to in 79:13–14: Yet it shall be but a single cry, then, behold, they will be upon a wide expanse (cf. 30:25). The Prophet is reported to have said that the period between the two blasts will be forty, though he did not specify if he meant hours, days, months, or years. The Prophet continued, “Then God will send down a rain from the sky, and the dead body will sprout just as a green plant sprouts. Every part of the person will deteriorate except for one bone, and it is the coccyx bone. From it creation will be assembled on the Day of Judgment” (IK).

69 The earth will shine with the Light of its Lord, the Book will be set down, and the prophets and the witnesses will be brought forth. Judgment will be made between them in truth, and they shall not be wronged.

70 Every soul will be paid in full for that which it has done, and He knows best what they do.

69–70 The earth will shine on the barren plain upon which all human beings will be gathered for the Resurrection, but it will not be as the earth we know, since on that Day the earth shall be changed into other than the earth (14:48). Rather, God will leave it a barren plain. You will see no crookedness or curvature therein (20:106–7). Human beings, and some say all creatures, will come from their graves to this plain in throngs (78:18). They will gather, according to a ḥadīth, “barefoot, naked, and uncircumcised, engulfed by their sweat, which will reach to their very nostrils.” They will not, however, look upon one another, since for every man that Day his affair shall suffice him (80:37). Each person will then be presented the book of his or her deeds, which leaves out nothing, small or great (18:49); see 17:71c; 69:19–29c.

The prophets and the witnesses from among the angels who recorded their deeds in their books (IK, Ṭs; see 43:80c; 50:17–18c; 82:10–11) will then be brought forth to bear witness for or against human beings. Others understand the witnesses as a reference to those who bear witness that the prophets delivered the revelations and that the people denied them (Ṭs) or as a reference to those who were martyred in the path of God (Ṭs). It could also be understood as a reference to everything that will bear witness for them or against them (Ṭs), from the angels to their own limbs, regarding the latter of which 41:20 states, Their ears, their eyes, and their skins will bear witness against them for that which they used to do. When all of their deeds are laid bare, the deeds will be weighed against one another, as in 21:47: We shall set the just scales for the Day of Resurrection, and no soul shall be wronged in aught. Even if it be the weight of a mustard seed, We shall bring it. Thus they shall not be wronged (cf. 2:281; 6:160; 10:47, 54; 16:111; 21:47; 36:54c; 45:22; 46:19). Then every soul will be paid in full for what good or evil it has done (cf. 16:111) or what it has earned (2:281; 3:25).

71 And those who disbelieve will be driven unto Hell in throngs, till when they reach it, its gates will be opened and its keepers will say unto them, “Did not messengers from among you come to you, reciting unto you the signs of your Lord and warning you of the meeting with this your Day?” They will say, “Yea, indeed!” But the Word of punishment has come due for the disbelievers.

72 It will be said, “Enter the gates of Hell, to abide therein.” How evil is the abode of the arrogant!

71–72 Those whose scales are heavy with good deeds will then be separated from those whose scales are light (see 23:102–3; 101:6–9c), and the latter are driven and thrust into the Fire of Hell with [violent] thrusting (52:13). After the gates of Hell are opened (cf. 16:29), its keepers, who are said to be nineteen angels (see 74:30c), will ask the disbelievers this rhetorical question by way of rebuke (cf. 40:50; 67:8–9). The disbelievers will answer in the affirmative, saying, Indeed, a warner came unto us, but we denied him and said, “God did not send anything down; you are in naught but great error.” . . . Had we listened or had we understood, we would not be among the inhabitants of the Blaze (67:9–10). But their now belated affirmation can do nothing to forestall their impending punishment, because they were indeed “warned” and given ample opportunity to repent, thus the Word of punishment has come due (cf. 10:33; 22:18; 36:7; 40:6). Having been made to realize and admit their error, the disbelievers are then cast into Hell.

73 And those who reverence their Lord will be driven to the Garden in throngs, till when they reach it, its gates will be opened and its keepers will say unto them, “Peace be upon you; you have done well; so enter it, to abide [therein].”

73 In contrast to the disbelievers, the reverent believers, whose scales are heavy, will enter the gates of the Garden, of which, according to several ahādīth, there are eight (IK, Q, Ṭs). The throngs are understood as a reference to one throng coming after another, starting with the best, then the next best, and then the next (IK). In this regard, the Prophet is reported to have said, “I will be the first to enter Paradise” (IK). Among the throngs, the first to enter is said to be a group “appearing like the moon on the night when it is full, and they will be followed by a group that looks like the brightest star shining in the sky” (IK). In other aḥādīth, this group is reported to number seventy thousand or seven hundred thousand (IK). Elsewhere it is said that angels shall enter upon them from every gate. “Peace be upon you because you were patient.” How excellent is the Ultimate Abode! (13:23–24). Regarding the gates of the Garden, see 13:23–24c; 38:50c. This is one of several verses that speak of the greeting of Peace or Peace be upon you that awaits believers in the Hereafter (see also 7:46; 10:10; 13:23–24; 14:23; 16:32; 19:62; 25:75; 33:44; 36:58c; 56:25–26).

74 They will say, “Praise be to God, Who was faithful to us in His Promise, and has caused us to inherit the land, that we may settle in the Garden wheresoever we will.” How excellent is the reward of the workers!

74 These are the words of the inhabitants of the Garden in response to the greetings from the angels. His Promise refers to that given to all human beings in 10:4, whether they are destined for Heaven or for Hell: Unto Him is your return all together; God’s Promise is true, a promise at which the disbelievers scoff in several verses, saying, When will this promise come to pass, if you are truthful? (10:48; 21:38; 27:71; 34:29; 36:48; 67:25). In this case, His Promise also refers more specifically to the various promises given to the believers, as in v. 20 as well as 31:8–9: Truly those who believe and perform righteous deeds, theirs shall be Gardens of bliss, therein to abide—God’s Promise in truth (cf. 4:122). The righteous are also said to “inherit” Paradise in 7:43 and 23:10–11 and to inherit the earth in 21:105, which can be understood to mean that they may do with it as they please and, in their own words, settle wheresoever we will.

For more on the events pertaining to the end of time described in vv. 68–74, see the essay “Death, Dying, and the Afterlife in the Quran.”

75 And thou shalt see the angels encircling all around the Throne, hymning the praise of their Lord. Judgment shall be made between them in truth, and it will be said, “Praise be to God, Lord of the worlds.”

75 While the angels encircling all around the Throne of God hymn His praise, those who bear the Throne and those who dwell nigh unto it (40:7), the latter of whom may be the same as those mentioned here, supplicate God saying, Our Lord, Thou dost encompass all things in Mercy and Knowledge. Forgive those who repent and follow Thy way, and shield them from the punishment of Hellfire. Our Lord, make them enter Gardens of Eden that Thou hast promised them and those among their fathers, their spouses, and their progeny who were righteous. Truly Thou art the Mighty, the Wise (40:7–8).

This final Praise be to God is uttered by the angels or by God Himself (IK). Some commentators note the significance of the fact that this account of the end of creation finishes with Praise be to God and another account of the beginning of creation starts in the same way (Praise be to God, Who created the heavens and the earth, and made darkness and light, 6:1; IK, Q, Ṭs); they take this to imply that creation begins and ends with God's praise.

The Forgiver

Ghāfir

Some maintain that Ghāfir, a Makkan sūrah, was revealed directly after Sūrah 39, al-Zumar (JJ). According to some, vv. 56–57 are Madinan (IJ, JJ, Q, Ṭs), and others add v. 55 to those as well (Q, Ṭs). Still others say that only v. 55 is Madinan (Āl), since the injunction to hymn the praise of thy Lord at eventide and at dawn is interpreted as a reference to the morning and sunset prayers, which did not become obligatory until the last few years of the Makkan period. The sūrah takes its name from the reference to God as the Forgiver of sins in v. 3, but it is also known as “The Believer” (al-Mu’min), because of the discussion of a believing man from the House of Pharaoh (v. 28). It is also known by the title “The Bounty” (al-Faḍl), because of the reference to God as Possessed of Bounty in v. 3 (IJ, Q).

Ghāfir is the first in a series of seven sūrahs whose opening verses begin with the separated Arabic letters ḥā° and mīm and are followed by a reference to the Quran. Revealed during the same period, these sūrahs are known collectively as the Ḥawāmīm (ḥā° wa mīm), and as “The Brides” (IK, Q). Addressing several recurring themes, they provide solace to the Muslim community at a time of persecution, foretelling the triumph of the revelation and the demise of those who oppose it.

The sūrah opens with an affirmation of the revelation and of God’s Mercy and Forgiveness (vv. 2–3), followed by a repudiation of those who dispute the signs of God (vv. 4–6), which becomes a recurring theme of the sūrah, and an extended prayer uttered by the angels for human beings (vv. 7–9). Vv. 10–20 then tell of the place of the disbelievers in the Hereafter, warning of their ultimate demise. This section serves as the thematic backdrop for an extended account of the story of Moses and Pharaoh (vv. 21–50), the main feature of which is the story of a believing man from the House of Pharaoh who challenges Pharaoh’s opposition to Moses (vv. 28–45).

An affirmation of the Divine Aid that God sends upon His messengers (vv. 51–60) concludes with a condemnation of those who are too arrogant to worship God (v. 60), which segues into a discussion of God’s Power over all of creation (vv. 61–68). The sūrah then discusses the punishment that awaits the disbelievers (vv. 69–76) and counsels the Prophet to have patience, citing the examples of prophets who prevailed before him (vv. 77–78). After a reflection on some signs of God’s Generosity and Power (vv. 79–82), the sūrah concludes with an assurance that those who oppose God’s messengers will be defeated in the end (vv. 83–85).

In the Name of God, the Compassionate, the Merciful

① Hā. Mīm. ② The revelation of the Book from God, the Mighty, the Knower, ③ Forgiver of sins, Acceptor of Repentance, severe in retribution, Possessed of Bounty. There is no god but He; unto Him is the journey’s end. ④ None but those who disbelieve dispute concerning the signs of God. So let it not delude thee that they are free to come and go in the land. ⑤ The people of Noah denied before them, as did the parties after them. And every community contrived against its messenger, to take him. They disputed by means of falsehood in order to refute the truth thereby; so I seized them. How, then, was My Retribution! ⑥ Likewise did the Word of thy Lord come due for those who disbelieve, that they are the inhabitants of the Fire. ⑦ Those who bear the Throne and those who dwell nigh unto it hymn the praise of their Lord and believe in Him and seek forgiveness for those who believe: “Our Lord, Thou dost encompass all things in Mercy and Knowledge. Forgive those who repent and follow Thy way, and shield them from the punishment of Hellfire. ⑧ Our Lord, make them enter Gardens of Eden that Thou hast promised them and those among their fathers, their spouses, and their progeny who were righteous. Truly

Thou art the Mighty, the Wise. ⑨ And protect them from evil deeds. Whomsoever Thou shieldest from evil deeds on that Day, upon him hast Thou had mercy. And that indeed is the great triumph.” ⑩ Truly those who disbelieve shall be addressed: “God’s odium is greater than your odium for yourselves when you were called to belief, but then disbelieved.” ⑪ They will say, “Our Lord, Thou hast caused us to die twice over, and given us life twice over; so we admit our sins. Is there any way out?” ⑫ That is because when God was invoked as One, you disbelieved, and when partners were ascribed unto Him, you believed. Judgment lies with God, the Exalted, the Great. ⑬ He it is Who shows you His signs and sends down provision for you from Heaven. And none reflect, save those who turn in repentance. ⑭ So call upon God, devoting religion entirely to Him, though the disbelievers be averse. ⑮ The Raiser of degrees, the Possessor of the Throne, He casts the Spirit from His Command upon whomsoever He will among His servants to warn of the Day of the Meeting, ⑯ the Day when they come forth with naught concerning them hidden from God. Whose is the sovereignty this Day? It is God’s, the One, the Paramount. ⑰ On that Day every soul shall be recompensed for that which it has earned. No wrong will be done that Day. Truly God is swift in reckoning. ⑱ So warn them of the Day of the Imminent Event, when hearts will be in throats, choking in agony. The wrongdoers shall have no loyal friend, nor any intercessor to be obeyed. ⑲ He knows the treachery of eyes and that which breasts conceal. ⑳ God decrees with truth, and those upon whom they call apart from Him do not decree by means of aught. Truly God is the Hearer, the Seer. ㉑ Have they not journeyed upon the earth and observed how those before them fared in the end? They were greater than them in strength and left firmer traces upon the earth; yet God seized them for their sins, and they had none to shield them from God. ㉒ That is because their messengers brought them clear proofs, yet they disbelieved; so God seized them. Truly He is Strong, severe in retribution. ㉓ And indeed We sent Moses with Our signs and a manifest authority ㉔ unto Pharaoh, Hāmān, and Korah. And they said, “A lying sorcerer.” ㉕ So when he came unto them with the truth from

Us, they said, “Slay the sons of those who believe with him and spare their women.” The scheming of the disbelievers is naught but astray. 26 And Pharaoh said, “Leave me to kill Moses, and let him call upon his Lord. Truly I fear that he will alter your religion or that he will cause corruption to appear in the land.” 27 And Moses said, “Truly I have sought refuge in my Lord and your Lord from everyone who is arrogant and believes not in the Day of Reckoning.” 28 And a believing man from the House of Pharaoh who was concealing his belief said, “Will you kill a man for saying, ‘My Lord is God,’ though he has brought you clear proofs from your Lord? If he is a liar, then his lying is to his own detriment. But if he is truthful, some of that which he promises you will befall you. Truly God guides not one who is a prodigal liar. 29 O my people! Sovereignty is yours this day, while you prevail over the land. But who will help us against God’s Might should it come upon us?” Pharaoh said, “I show you naught but what I see, and I guide you unto naught but the way of rectitude.” 30 And he who believed said, “O my people! Truly I fear for you [a day] like the day of the parties [of old], 31 like the plight of the people of Noah, ʿĀd, and Thamūd, and those after them. Yet God does not desire wrong for His servants. 32 O my people! Truly I fear for you the Day of Mutual Calling, 33 the Day you will turn away to flee, having none to protect you from God. And whomsoever God leads astray, no guide has he. 34 And Joseph brought you clear proofs before; yet still you were in doubt regarding that which he brought unto you, so much so that when he perished, you said, ‘God will not send a messenger after him.’ Thus does God lead astray whosoever is a prodigal doubter, 35 those who dispute concerning God’s signs without any authority having come to them, grievously odious is it in the sight of God and in the sight of those who believe. Thus does God put a seal upon the heart of every arrogant tyrant.” 36 And Pharaoh said, “O Hāmān! Build for me a tower, that perhaps I may attain the means— 37 the means to reach the heavens—that I may look upon the God of Moses. Truly I deem him a liar.” Thus was the evil of his conduct made to seem fair unto Pharaoh, and he was turned from the way. Pharaoh’s scheming led to naught but ruin. 38 And he who believed said, “O my people! Follow me; I shall guide you unto the way of rectitude. 39 O my people! The life of this world is but fleeting enjoyment, whereas the Hereafter is truly the Abode of Permanence. 40 Whosoever commits an evil deed will not be requited, save with the like thereof; but whosoever, whether male or female, performs a righteous deed and is a believer shall enter the Garden wherein they will be provided for without reckoning. 41 O my people! How is it that I call you unto salvation while you call me unto the Fire? 42 You call upon me to disbelieve in God and to ascribe as a partner unto Him that whereof I have no knowledge, whereas I call you unto the Mighty, the Forgiving. 43 There is no doubt that that unto which you call me has no call in this world or in the Hereafter, and that our return will be unto God, and that the prodigal are the inhabitants of the Fire. 44 You will soon remember what I have said to you. I entrust my affair to God. Truly God sees His servants.” 45 So God shielded him from the evils of that which they had plotted, while a terrible punishment beset the House of Pharaoh— 46 the Fire, to which they are exposed morning and evening. And on the Day when the Hour is come, [it will be said], “Cause the House of Pharaoh to enter the punishment most severe!” 47 And when they are arguing with one another in the Fire, the weak will say to those who waxed arrogant, “Truly we were your followers; so can you avail us against any portion of the Fire?” 48 Those who waxed arrogant will say, “Truly we are all in it. God has indeed judged between His servants.” 49 And those who are in the Fire will say to the keepers of Hell, “Call upon your Lord to relieve us from the punishment for a day.” 50 They will reply, “Did not your messengers bring you clear proofs?” They will say, “Yea, indeed.” They will say, “Then make supplications!” But the supplication of the disbelievers is naught but astray. 51 Truly We shall help Our messengers and those who believe during the life of this world and on the Day when the witnesses arise, 52 the Day when the excuses of the wrongdoers will not benefit them, and theirs will be the curse, and theirs will be the evil abode. 53 And indeed We gave Moses guidance, and We bequeathed the Book unto the Children of Israel, 54 as a guidance, and as a reminder for possessors of intellect. 55 So be patient. Surely God's Promise is true. And ask forgiveness for thy sin, and hymn the praise of thy Lord at eventide and at dawn. 56 Truly those who dispute concerning the signs of God without any authority having come to them, there is naught in their breasts but a sense of greatness that they will never attain. So seek refuge in God. Truly He is the Hearer, the Seer. 57 Surely the creation of the heavens and the earth is greater than the creation of mankind. But most of mankind know not. 58 And the blind and the seer are not equal; nor are those who believe and perform righteous deeds and the evildoer. Little do you reflect! 59 Surely the Hour is coming; in it there is no doubt. But most of mankind believe not. 60 And your Lord has said, "Call upon Me, and I shall respond to you. Truly those who are too arrogant to worship Me shall enter Hell debased." 61 God it is Who made the night for you, that you might rest therein, and the day by which to see. Truly God is Possessed of Bounty for mankind, but most of mankind do not give thanks. 62 That is God, your Lord, Creator of all things; there is no god but He. How, then, are you perverted? 63 In this way were those who used to reject the signs of God perverted. 64 God it is Who made the earth a dwelling place for you and the sky a canopy. And He formed you and made beautiful your forms, and provided you with good things. That is God, your Lord; so blessed is God, Lord of the worlds. 65 He is the Living; there is no god but He. So call upon Him, devoting religion entirely to Him. Praise be to God, Lord of the worlds. 66 Say, "I have been forbidden to worship those upon whom you call apart from God, since clear proofs have come unto me from my Lord, and I am commanded to submit to the Lord of the worlds." 67 He it is Who created you from dust, then from a drop, then from a blood clot. Then He brings you forth as infants, that you may then reach maturity, then that you may grow old—though some of you are taken earlier—that you may reach a term appointed, and that haply you may understand. 68 He it is Who gives life and causes death. So when He decrees a thing, He only says to it, "Be!" and it is. 69 Hast thou not considered those who dispute concerning the signs of God, how they are turned away, 70 those who deny the Book, and that wherewith We have sent

Our messengers? But soon they will know, 71 since they will be dragged, with shackles and chains around their necks, 72 into boiling liquid; then they will be set aflame in the Fire. 73 Then it will be said unto them, “Where are those whom you used to ascribe as partners 74 apart from God?” They will reply, “They have forsaken us. Nay, but we were not calling upon aught before.” Thus does God lead astray the disbelievers. 75 “That is because you used to exult upon the earth without right and because you were insolent. 76 Enter the gates of Hell, therein to abide.” How evil is the abode of the arrogant! 77 So be patient. Surely God’s Promise is true. And whether We show thee a part of that which We promise them, or We take thee, unto Us will they be returned. 78 Indeed We have sent messengers before thee. Among them are those whom We have recounted unto thee, and among them are those whom We have not recounted unto thee. And it was not for a messenger to bring a sign, save by God’s Leave. So when God’s Command comes, judgment is passed in truth; and those who make false claims will then be losers. 79 God it is Who made cattle for you, that some of them you may ride and some of them you may eat— 80 and there are benefits for you therein—and that through them you may attain any need that is in your breasts. And upon them and upon ships are you carried. 81 And He shows you His signs. So which of God’s signs do you reject? 82 Have they not journeyed upon the earth and observed how those before them fared in the end? They were more numerous than them, greater than them in strength, and left firmer traces upon the earth. But that which they used to earn availed them not. 83 And when their messengers brought them clear proofs, they exulted in the knowledge they possessed, and that which they used to mock beset them. 84 Then, when they saw Our Might, they said, “We believe in God alone, and we disavow that which we used to ascribe as partners unto Him.” 85 But their believing benefited them not when they saw Our Might. [That is] the wont of God which has passed among His servants; and the disbelievers were then lost.

1 Ghāfir is the first in a series of seven *sūrah*s that open with the Arabic letters ḥā° and mīm and are referred to collectively as the Ḥawāmīm. The Arabic letters ḥā° and mīm are among the separated letters (al-muqattaʿāt) that are found at the beginning of twenty-nine *sūrah*s and whose meaning is considered to be known only to God; see 2:1c. Some commentators connect all of the *sūrah*s that begin with ḥā° mīm to 39:63—to Him belong the keys of the heavens and the earth—and suggest that ḥā° mīm is a name for the keys of God’s treasures (Q). Connecting ḥā° mīm to the separated letters at the beginning of other *sūrah*s, other commentators suggest that the letters alif lām rā° (a-l-r; 10:1; 11:1; 12:1; 13:1, 14:1; 15:1), ḥā° mīm (ḥ-m), and nūn (n; 68:1) combine to make the Divine Name al-Raḥmān, “the Compassionate” (Q). In this same vein, some suggest that each letter stands for a Divine Name that begins with that letter, such as, for the letter ḥā°, al-Ḥamīd, “the Praised,” al-Ḥalīm, “the Clement,” and al-Ḥakīm, “The Wise,” and for the letter mīm, Mālik, “the Sovereign,” al-Majīd, “the Illustrious,” and al-Mutakabbir, “the Proud” (Q). Others say that ḥā° mīm is a name of the Quran (Q) or of this sūrah (R).

② The revelation of the Book from God, the Mighty, the Knower,

2 Here and in similar verses (cf. 39:1; 45:2; 46:2) this statement could also be read, “This is the revelation of the Book from God” (Q, Ṭs), while here and in 45:2 and 46:2 it could be read, “Ḥā mīm is the revelation of the Book” (Q). For the meaning of the verse, see commentary on 39:1, which differs from this verse only in that the last Divine Name is the Wise.

③ Forgiver of sins, Acceptor of Repentance, severe in retribution, Possessed of Bounty. There is no god but He; unto Him is the journey’s end.

3 This is one of many verses that join the mention of God’s Forgiveness and Mercy with that of God's Retribution and Rigor, as in 15:49–50: Tell My servants that I am indeed the Forgiving, the Merciful, and that My Punishment is the painful punishment (IK). According to some, the first of the Divine Attributes listed here indicates that God forgives small sins if one performs acts of obedience that outweigh these sins, but only forgives grave sins through acts of repentance. But al-Rāzī maintains that it is greater praise to say that God can and sometimes does forgive great sins even without repentance. The placement of severe in retribution between three descriptions of God's Mercy, the first two of which indicate the disappearance of Divine Retribution, shows the precedence and preponderance of God's Mercy over His Wrath (R), as in 7:156, My Mercy encompasses all things, and the famous ḥadīth qudsī, "My Mercy outstrips My Wrath." This relation is present in the structure of the text as well; in Acceptor of Repentance, severe in retribution, the absence of "and" (wa) between these two Attributes indicates that God's severity is not detached from His accepting repentance, hence not detached from His Mercy (R).

Possessed of Bounty indicates that God bestows blessings (Q), conferring largesse upon human beings (R). Attached as it is to severe in retribution, Possessed of Bounty can be understood to mean that God is magnanimous in bestowing absolution for sins and thus relinquishing His Retribution (R). Given the Divine Attributes that precede it, there is no god but He indicates that there is no other reality that possesses these seemingly contradictory attributes in perfect balance. One should thus worship God in full, with hope for His Mercy and fear of His Retribution (R), as God is the only One from Whom and to Whom one flees at the same time. That the journey's end is unto God then completes this verse, because there would be no purpose in fearing Him and hoping for the meeting with Him if this were not the case.

④ None but those who disbelieve dispute concerning the signs of God. So let it not delude thee that they are free to come and go in the land.

④ Those who dispute concerning the signs of God are a central concern of this sūrah; they are rebuked again in vv. 35, 56, and 69, and only once outside of this sūrah, in 42:35. This first instance clarifies that the freedom and affluence of the disbelievers in no way reflects any favor that God has bestowed upon them, as in 3:196–97: Let it not delude thee that those who disbelieve are free to come and go in the land. It is a little enjoyment. Then their refuge is Hell, an evil resting place! Thus the Prophet should not concern himself with their affairs or be grieved by their disbelief (see 3:176; 5:41; 10:65; 31:23; 36:76). Instead, he is enjoined to dispute with them in the most virtuous manner (16:125) and to respond to their disputes by saying, God knows best what you do. God will judge between you on the Day of Resurrection concerning that wherein you used to differ (22:68–69).

⑤ The people of Noah denied before them, as did the parties after them. And every community contrived against its messenger, to take him. They disputed by means of falsehood in order to refute the truth thereby; so I seized them. How, then, was My Retribution!

5 As in many other passages, the Prophet is here comforted by an example of a previous prophet who endured the same opposition. For the Quranic account of Noah and the manner in which his people denied him, see 7:59–64; 10:71–73; 11:25–48; 21:76–77; 23:23–30; 26:105–21; 37:75–82; 54:9–15; and Sūrah 71. In addition, other communities are said to have rejected their prophets, as in 51:52: Likewise, there came no messenger unto those before them, but that they said, “A sorcerer or one possessed”; and 34:34: We sent no warner unto a town, but that those living in luxury therein said, “Truly we disbelieve in that wherewith you have been sent” (cf. 43:23). When the people disputed with their prophets, they are said to have used weak and specious arguments (IK), as they dispute . . . without any authority having come to them (40:35, 56). Therefore, God destroyed them because of the sins they had committed (IK). How, then, was My Retribution! (cf. 13:32) means, “How severe and painful was My Retribution!”

⑥ Likewise did the Word of thy Lord come due for those who disbelieve, that they are the inhabitants of the Fire.

6 Just as punishment came upon those who rejected their prophets in the past, so too has the Word of thy Lord has come due (cf. 10:33; 22:18; 36:7; 39:71) for those who oppose the Prophet Muhammad (IK).

⑦ Those who bear the Throne and those who dwell nigh unto it hymn the praise of their Lord and believe in Him and seek forgiveness for those who believe: “Our Lord, Thou dost encompass all things in Mercy and Knowledge. Forgive those who repent and follow Thy way, and shield them from the punishment of Hellfire.

7 Those who bear the Throne are eight angels, as in 69:17: And the angels shall be at its sides; that Day eight shall carry the Throne of thy Lord above them. These may be the same as the angels encircling all around the Throne (39:75) or a distinct group among them. For the meaning of the Throne, from which God’s Commands and Decrees issue and from which He directs the cosmos (Ṭb), see 7:54c. In this context the prayers of the highest angels, those brought nigh unto God (4:172), show the great difference between the believers and the disbelievers, whose fate is mentioned in the previous verse (R), thus giving the Prophet and his followers further evidence that they need not concern themselves with the disputations of the disbelievers.

That God encompasses all things in Mercy is attested in 7:156; that He encompasses all things in knowledge is also attested in 6:80; 20:98; 65:12. Some understand the structure of this sentence to indicate that God’s Mercy precedes or outstrips His Knowledge (R, Ṭb); for the priority and principiality of God’s Mercy in Islamic metaphysics and cosmology, see 1:3c. Here the angels seek forgiveness for those who believe; elsewhere they seek forgiveness for those on earth (42:5). For further discussion of seeking forgiveness for others (istighfār) and intercession (shafā’ah), see 2:48c; 2:255c. Regarding God’s shielding from the punishment of Hellfire, see 44:56c.

8 Gardens of Eden (cf. 9:72; 13:23; 16:31; 18:31; 19:61; 20:76; 35:33; 38:50) is understood to refer to an especially exalted or blessed place in the Garden, a place entered only by prophets, the righteous, the witnesses, and just leaders (Q); see 9:72c. The righteous family members of those who believe will benefit from their rank in this station, as in 52:21: And those who believe and whose progeny followed them in faith, We shall cause their progeny to join them and will not stint aught of their deeds (cf. 13:23). Some understand these two verses to mean that all of one's family members who are righteous believers will be raised to the exalted Gardens of Eden, where, in addition to the beauties of that exalted domain of Paradise, they may delight in one another's company (IK, R). In this way, the pious deeds one performs may benefit both oneself and one's loved ones (IK, T).

⑨ And protect them from evil deeds. Whosoever Thou shieldest from evil deeds on that Day, upon him hast Thou had mercy. And that indeed is the great triumph.”

9 Protect them from evil deeds is a plea to God to protect believers from performing evil deeds (IK), from the ill effects of the sins they committed before they repented (T), or from punishment (T, Ts). Those whom God has turned away from the evil of disobedience have had God's Mercy and Blessings bestowed upon them (T, Ts). Attaining Paradise is referred to as the great triumph in over a dozen verses; for the blessings of Paradise, see commentary on 5:119; 44:51–57.

⑩ Truly those who disbelieve shall be addressed: “God's odium is greater than your odium for yourselves when you were called to belief, but then disbelieved.”

10 God's odium for the disbelievers when they were called to belief in God and turned away from it in this world is greater than their odium for themselves when they see their deeds (see 2:167) and realize the punishment that is to befall them from God's Anger (IK, T).

⑪ They will say, “Our Lord, Thou hast caused us to die twice over, and given us life twice over; so we admit our sins. Is there any way out?”

⑫ That is because when God was invoked as One, you disbelieved, and when partners were ascribed unto Him, you believed. Judgment lies with God, the Exalted, the Great.

11–12 Now that they have experienced the Resurrection, the disbelievers admit their sins; see 67:10–11c. Realizing their fate, they plead with God to be offered a second opportunity. But it will not be granted, since even if they were sent back, they would return to the very thing they had been forbidden (6:28). That God caused them to die and live twice refers to their death at the end of their worldly existence, then their resurrection for the questioning of the grave, then their dying again and being resurrected for the Hereafter (Q, Ṭs); or it refers to their being dead (as yet nonexistent) in the loins of their ancestors, after which they were given life, followed by their natural death, after which they were resurrected (Q, Ṭ, Ṭs).

Abū Ḥāmid al-Ghazzālī interprets these verses as part of an extended discourse between God and the disbelievers. The denizens of Hell first say, Our Lord, Thou hast caused us to die twice over, and given us life twice over; so we admit our sins. Is there any way out? To which God responds, That is because when God was invoked as One, you disbelieved, and when partners were ascribed unto Him, you believed. Judgment lies with God, the Exalted, the Great. Then they say, Our Lord! We have seen and we have heard; so send us back that we may work righteousness. Truly we are certain (32:12). But God replies, Did you not earlier swear that there would be no end for you? (14:44). Then they cry out, Our Lord! Remove us, that we may work righteousness other than that which we used to do (35:37). To this God replies, Did We not give you long life, enough for whosoever would reflect to reflect therein? And the warner came unto you; so taste [the punishment]! And the wrongdoers shall have no helpers (35:37). Then they say, Our Lord! Our wretchedness overwhelmed us, and we were a people astray. Our Lord! Remove us from it! Then if we revert, we shall be wrongdoers (23:106–7). Then God replies, Be gone therein, and speak not to Me (23:108).

⑬ He it is Who shows you His signs and sends down provision for you from Heaven. And none reflect, save those who turn in repentance.

13 God surrounds human beings with signs upon the horizons and within themselves till it becomes clear to them that it is the truth (41:53) or signs that He is the Truth and that He is One and Powerful over all things. So if one repents, the veiling over the intellect vanishes (R) and one is given insight (IK). In this vein, the Prophet is reported to have said, “Be mindful of the insight of the believer, for verily he sees by the light of Truth.”

⑭ So call upon God, devoting religion entirely to Him, though the disbelievers be averse.

14 The injunction to call upon God means to supplicate to God for one’s needs, although some consider it to be a reference to canonical prayer or worship (R, Z); see 7:55c. As in several other verses, this injunction is followed by the mention of devoting religion entirely to Him (cf. 7:29; 10:22; 29:65; 31:32; 39:2, 11, 14; 40:65; 98:5), a phrase that indicates worship of God exclusively and invoking His Name (73:8) and connotes sincere worship for the sake of God alone (see 7:29c; 31:32c; 98:5c). According to several accounts, the Prophet used to recite this verse at the end of each prayer, saying, “There is no god but God, alone, with no partner. His is the Sovereignty and His is the Praise, and He is Powerful over all things [5:120; 11:4; 30:50; 57:2; 64:1; 67:1]. There is no strength and no power, save with God. There is no god but God, and we worship none but Him. His is the Blessing, His is the Bounty, and His is the Beautiful Praise. There is no god but God, devoting religion entirely to Him” (IK).

⑮ The Raiser of degrees, the Possessor of the Throne, He casts the Spirit from His Command upon whomsoever He will among His servants to warn of the Day of the Meeting,

15 The Raiser of degrees, or in another rendering “Exalter of ranks,” means the One who raises the seven heavens (Q) or the One who exalts the ranks of His saints and friends in the Garden (Q). For Possessor of the Throne, see 17:42; 81:20; 85:15. God is also described as Lord of the Throne (9:129; 21:22; 23:86, 116; 27:26; 43:82), which is borne by angels (40:7; 69:17). Casts the Spirit is understood to mean the Spirit of revelation or of prophethood (Q, Ṭs). It is also understood as a reference to the Quran itself, to all revealed books, or to the Archangel Gabriel (Ṭs). The Day of the Meeting most likely refers to the day of the meeting between God and His creation, but it can also be understood to mean the day on which many types of meetings will take place: the people of Heaven will meet the people of the earth (Ṭs); the first generations of human beings will meet the later generations of human beings (Q, Ṭs); the oppressed will meet their oppressors (Q, Ṭs), as it is also a day of retribution; and every person will meet his or her deeds (Q, Ṭs), since that is part of the Judgment.

①⑥ the Day when they come forth with naught concerning them hidden from God. Whose is the sovereignty this Day? It is God's, the One, the Paramount.

16 When all human beings come forth from their graves and are gathered on a single plain, God will say, Whose is the sovereignty this Day? and then all who are gathered will respond, It is God's, the One, the Paramount (Q, Ṭs), or it is God Himself who answers the question (IK, Q, Ṭs).

①⑦ On that Day every soul shall be recompensed for that which it has earned. No wrong will be done that Day. Truly God is swift in reckoning.

17 Every soul is then recompensed in accord with the good or evil it has done (Q, Ṭs; cf. 3:161; 45:22; 74:38). No wrong or injustice will be done that Day, in that no good deed will remain unaccounted for, and no one will be punished for something he or she did not do. That no wrong will be done also indicates that all of the punishments that afflict the disbelievers on the Day of Judgment come from themselves, since God wrongs them not, but themselves do they wrong (3:117; cf. 3:165; 4:179). In this vein, a sacred saying, or ḥadīth qudsī, states, “O My servants! I have forbidden injustice for Myself and have made it unlawful among you; so be not unjust to one another. O My servants! Verily, these are your deeds. I record them for you; then I pay you back for them in full. Whosoever finds something good, let him praise God. And whosoever finds something other than that, let him blame none but himself” (IK). God's being swift in reckoning (2:202; 3:19, 199; 5:4; 13:41; 14:51; 24:39; cf. 6:62) or in retribution (6:165; 7:167) indicates that the Judgment is not something over which He will need to ponder and deliberate (Q), since the Command of God is naught but one, like the blinking of an eye (54:50; IK).

18 So warn them of the Day of the Imminent Event, when hearts will be in throats, choking in agony. The wrongdoers shall have no loyal friend, nor any intercessor to be obeyed.

18 On the Day of Judgment, hearts will be in throats due to fear (IK, T, Ts), choking in agony, so that they will be unable to speak (R). The second part of this verse is similar to both 2:254 and 14:31, which add bargaining (bay^c) as another of those things that will no longer avail one on the Day of Judgment. No loyal friend indicates that on that Day everyone will be too consumed with his or her own state to ask about that of another, as in 70:10: And no loyal friend shall ask about a loyal friend; and 80:37: For every man that Day his affair shall suffice him (see also 43:67; 44:41). This condition will, however, be even more severe for the disbelievers, who are said to have no one upon whom they can rely, since the folly of everything upon which they had depended is now exposed and all recourse will be cut off from them (2:166); so today they have no loyal friend here (69:35); see commentary on 70:10–14. That no intercessor will be obeyed indicates that none of those idols or powers that human beings, the disbelievers in particular, thought would intercede for them will be able to do so, save by God's Leave. Regarding intercession, see 2:48c; 2:255c.

19 He knows the treachery of eyes and that which breasts conceal.

19 The treachery of eyes refers either to eyes that have looked upon something forbidden (R, T, Ts) or to a person's false claims about what he or she saw (IK, Q, Ts). That which breasts conceal refers to the secrets of the heart (R), thus to the intentions behind actions and to one's true nature, since the Day of Judgment only benefits one who comes to God with a sound heart (26:89). Viewed in light of the previous verse, this verse indicates that the disbelievers cannot plead their own case, as they will be choking in agony, and that no friends or intercessors will plead on their behalf (R); rather, they will be judged in accord with their true nature, which their breasts conceal.

20 God decrees with truth, and those upon whom they call apart from Him do not decree by means of aught. Truly God is the Hearer, the Seer.

20 In the context of the previous verse, that God decrees with truth (al-ḥaqq), or “in accord with the truth,” means that He differentiates between people in accord with their true natures, which their breasts conceal, not according to their outward appearances, and gives each his or her due (ḥaqq). That those whom the disbelievers call upon do not decree by means of aught means both that their idols do not decree because they are simply inanimate objects (Ṭs) and that nothing they call upon possesses any authority or knowledge in accord with which it can decree (IK).

21 Have they not journeyed upon the earth and observed how those before them fared in the end? They were greater than them in strength and left firmer traces upon the earth; yet God seized them for their sins, and they had none to shield them from God.

22 That is because their messengers brought them clear proofs, yet they disbelieved; so God seized them. Truly He is Strong, severe in retribution.

21–22 For journeying upon the earth and the spiritual and moral edification that derives from it, see 12:109; 22:46; 30:9, 42; 35:44; 40:82; 47:10; 30:9c. The Quran frequently mentions the fate of the guilty, the corrupt, the wrongdoers, and those who denied God’s messengers in days gone by as an admonition to the disbelievers (see 3:137; 6:11; 7:84, 86, 103; 10:39, 73; 16:36; 27:14, 69; 37:73; 43:25). Those before them is thus understood as a reference to the ruins of previous people who were destroyed despite being mightier than those who opposed the Prophet (see 35:44; 40:82). Here, as in other instances, the destruction of previous generations despite their superior might is cited as evidence that the disbelievers among the Quraysh will not be able to withstand Divine Punishment when it comes upon them.

23 And indeed We sent Moses with Our signs and a manifest authority

23–45 Moses is featured more prominently than any other prophet in the Quran. Here his account is given more as a spiritual example than as history and serves as an allegory for some of the Prophet Muhammad's own challenges (see also 43:46–56; 44:17–31; 51:38–40; 79:15–25). For more detailed accounts of Moses' mission, see 2:49–61; 7:103–55; 10:75–93; 17:101–4; 20:9–97; 26:10–66; 27:7–14; 28:3–46.

23 This verse is found verbatim in 11:96, and We sent Moses with Our signs, meaning with proofs and evidence (Ṭ, Ṭs), is also found in 14:5 and 43:46 (cf. 51:38); also see 23:45, where Moses and Aaron are sent with Our signs. More specifically, Our signs can be read as a reference to the nine clear signs mentioned in 17:101 (cf. 27:12; Q). A manifest authority means a clear proof and is understood as a reference to the Torah (Q) or to the miracles that Moses performed (Ṭs, Z).

24 unto Pharaoh, Hāmān, and Korah. And they said, “A lying sorcerer.”

24 Hāmān was a member of Pharaoh's court, most likely the head of his quarries, who was ordered to light a fire and make me a tower (28:38) to proclaim Pharaoh a deity; see 28:6, 8, 38; 40:36–37; 28:6c. Korah, another member of Pharaoh's court and a grandson of Levi (Numbers 16:21), had vast wealth, but was swallowed by the ground for opposing Moses (Numbers 16:41); see commentary on 28:76–82. The reaction of Pharaoh, Hāmān, and Korah to the signs and the manifest authority was to accuse Moses of being a sorcerer (see also 7:109; 26:34; 51:39), an accusation also leveled against the Prophet Muhammad by the Quraysh (see 10:2; 38:4; 51:52).

25 So when he came unto them with the truth from Us, they said, “Slay the sons of those who believe with him and spare their women.” The scheming of the disbelievers is naught but astray.

25 This is the second time that Pharaoh commanded that the sons of the Israelites be slain: the first was to eliminate the possibility of a prophet such as Moses arising among them; the second was to humiliate them, to reduce their numbers, or both (IK). In 7:127 it appears to be a form of collective punishment for following Moses: The notables among Pharaoh's people said, “Will you leave Moses and his people to work corruption in the land and to leave you and your gods?” He said, “We shall slay their sons and spare their women. Truly we are above them, dominant”; see also 2:49c; 7:141; 14:6; 28:4. The women were not spared out of mercy, but so that they could continue to live as servants (Ṭ), which was a further humiliation (Ṭ, Ṭs). According to some, God distracted Pharaoh and his people from carrying out this punishment by sending the plague upon them (Q), in which case the scheming of the disbelievers is naught but astray can be understood as a reference to the failure of Pharaoh’s plan (Ṭ). Most commentators do not say whether the plan was carried out. Al-Rāzī, who says elsewhere that it was (see 7:127c), interprets the scheming of the disbelievers is naught but astray as a more general reference to the schemes of all disbelievers eventually coming to naught. In this context, it could also be understood as a reference to the fact that the first time Pharaoh ordered that the sons of the Israelites be slain, the plan failed, since Moses was spared; so this time it would fail again.

26 And Pharaoh said, “Leave me to kill Moses, and let him call upon his Lord. Truly I fear that he will alter your religion or that he will cause corruption to appear in the land.”

27 And Moses said, “Truly I have sought refuge in my Lord and your Lord from everyone who is arrogant and believes not in the Day of Reckoning.”

26–27 Pharaoh’s command, Leave me to kill Moses, implies that among Pharaoh’s retinue were some who feared Moses and warned against killing him, sensing that Moses would bring destruction upon them (IJ, Ṭs). Pharaoh’s fear that Moses would alter their religion is in fact the fear that he would turn them away from their worship of Pharaoh himself (IJ) and their belief in his divinity (Ṭs). The accusation that Moses will cause corruption to appear in the land reflects the question posed to Pharaoh by his notables in 7:127: Will you leave Moses and his people to work corruption in the land and to leave you and your gods? Moses’ response is then to seek refuge in God. In general, those who work corruption cast themselves as the righteous and their opponents as the corrupt, as in 2:11: And when it is said unto them, “Do not work corruption upon the earth,” they say, “We are only working righteousness.” For the greater Quranic significance of working corruption, see 30:41c.

28 And a believing man from the House of Pharaoh who was concealing his belief said, “Will you kill a man for saying, ‘My Lord is God,’ though he has brought you clear proofs from your Lord? If he is a liar, then his lying is to his own detriment. But if he is truthful, some of that which he promises you will befall you. Truly God guides not one who is a prodigal liar.

28 The precise identity of the believing man from the House of Pharaoh is unknown. Many propose that he was a cousin of Pharaoh (IJ, IK, Q, Ṭ). Others say that he was an Israelite, in which case the meaning of this opening phrase is understood to be “a believing man who was concealing his belief from the family of Pharaoh” (IJ, Ṭ). Al-Ṭabarī argues that he was a man from Pharaoh’s family, since if he had been an Israelite or another person outside of Pharaoh’s court, no one in the court would have listened to him. In either interpretation, the believing man is the same person to whom reference is made in 28:20: Then from the outskirts of the city a man came running. He said, “O Moses! Truly the notables are conspiring against you, that they might slay you. So leave! Truly I am among your sincere advisers” (IJ, IK). The question, Will you kill a man for saying, “My Lord is God”? is similar to the sorcerers’ complaint to Pharaoh after he sentences them to death for believing in Moses, You take vengeance upon us only because we believed in the signs of our Lord when they came unto us (7:126); see also 5:59 and 85:9, which chastise those who would “be vengeful” toward others simply on account of their belief in God and His signs.

The argument posed by the believing man is twofold. On the one hand, if Moses is truthful, he cannot be punished for speaking the truth, especially since he has brought clear proofs in the form of evidentiary miracles. On the other hand, if he is a liar, he will suffer the consequences of his lies; so there is no need to punish him. Furthermore, if he is punished for telling the truth, then even greater afflictions will befall those who punish him. In this context, some understand prodigal (muṣrif) to mean “idolater” (mushrik; Ṭ) or one who transgresses the limits set by God by lying about God (Ṭs); for the Quranic usage of prodigal, see 10:12c.

29 O my people! Sovereignty is yours this day, while you prevail over the land. But who will help us against God’s Might should it come upon us?” Pharaoh said, “I show you naught but what I see, and I guide you unto naught but the way of rectitude.”

29 The land refers to Egypt. That the Egyptians have sovereignty over it and prevail over it indicates their power over the Israelites (Ṭ). Some understand the believing man to be enjoining them to have gratitude for their position of power (IK, Ṭs). In this context, he is also using their unsurpassed power to argue that they must recognize the God of Moses, since there is no one other than themselves to protect them against punishment from Him. In his response, Pharaoh avoids engaging the argument of the believing man, instead relying upon his authority. I show you naught but what I see means, “I do not indicate to you anything other than what I believe to be right,” or “I do not teach you anything other than what I know” (Ṭs). Ibn Kathīr argues that in the context of other verses pertaining to the story of Moses, this statement is a lie, since 27:14 says of Pharaoh and his people: They rejected them—though their souls were convinced of them—wrongfully and exultantly. In Pharaoh’s view the way of rectitude means denying and killing Moses and taking Pharaoh as a god (Ṭs). Thus Pharaoh led his people astray, and guided them not (20:79). Nonetheless, they followed the command of Pharaoh, and the command of Pharaoh was not sound (11:97).

30 And he who believed said, “O my people! Truly I fear for you [a day] like the day of the parties [of old], 31 like the plight of the people of Noah, °Ād, and Thamūd, and those after them. Yet God does not desire wrong for His servants.

30–31 Parties [of old] refers to those who joined forces to make common cause against a prophet (Ṭs). The day of the parties [of old] refers to the day that each of them eventually faced when God’s Punishment came upon them and they had no one to protect them (IK). The °Ād and the Thamūd are pre-Islamic Arabian tribes that rejected the prophets sent to them. For the account of the °Ād, see 7:65–72; 11:50–60; for that of the Thamūd, see 7:73–79; 11:61–68. This warning is akin to similar warnings issued to the disbelievers throughout the Quran, though it differs in that a prophet does not issue it. Yet God does not desire wrong for His servants indicates that God's destruction of them was just and equitable (Z) and that God does not desire the wrong or injustice that occurs in the world (Ṭs), a position that is central to both the Shiite and the Mu^ctazilite understanding of Divine Justice.

32 O my people! Truly I fear for you the Day of Mutual Calling, 32 Here the Day of Resurrection is referred to as the Day of Mutual Calling, because the inhabitants of the Garden will call out to the inhabitants of the Fire, "We have found that which our Lord promised us to be true. Have you found that which your Lord promised to be true?" They will respond, "Yes" (7:44); and the inhabitants of the Fire will call out to the inhabitants of the Garden, "Pour some water down upon us, or some of that which God has provided you." They will respond, "Truly God has forbidden them both to the disbelievers" (7:50; JJ, Q, R, Ṭ). In addition, the hypocrites will call out to the believers (see 57:13–14) and the angels will call out to the inhabitants of the Garden, This is the Garden. You have inherited it for that which you used to do (7:43).

33 the Day you will turn away to flee, having none to protect you from God. And whomsoever God leads astray, no guide has he.

33 The disbelievers will turn away to flee from the Fire, but they will also flee from one another; thus 80:34–36 describes the Day of Resurrection as that Day when a man will flee from his brother, his mother and his father, his spouse and his children. For those whom God leads astray the Quran says there is no way (4:88, 143; 42:46), no guide (7:186; 13:33; 39:23, 36), and no protector (18:17; 42:44); cf. 10:27.

34 And Joseph brought you clear proofs before; yet still you were in doubt regarding that which he brought unto you, so much so that when he perished, you said, 'God will not send a messenger after him.' Thus does God lead astray whosoever is a prodigal doubter, 34 The story of Joseph is found in Sūrah 12. According to some commentators, clear proofs refers to Joseph’s rhetorical argument in 12:39–40: Are diverse lords better, or God, the One, the Paramount? You worship apart from Him naught but names that you have named—you and your fathers—for which God has sent down no authority (Q, R). Others say that clear proofs refers to Joseph’s evidentiary miracles (R, Z) or his visions and his corresponding ability to interpret dreams (Q). Here the contention appears to be that the people were willing to follow Joseph’s judgment in worldly matters related to his high position in the Egyptian government, but not with regard to religious matters (IK). Their saying, God will not send a messenger after him, would then express their wish and demonstrate their disbelief in and rejection of prophethood (IK, R). According to al-Ṭabarī, this is among the ways in which God turns disbelievers away from attaining the truth and following the way.

35 those who dispute concerning God’s signs without any authority having come to them, grievously odious is it in the sight of God and in the sight of those who believe. Thus does God put a seal upon the heart of every arrogant tyrant.”

35 This is the second of four verses in this sūrah to rebuke those who dispute concerning God’s signs; also see vv. 4, 56, and 69; 40:4c. To dispute without authority (cf. v. 56) means to argue without proof or from a position grounded in unquestioning imitation (taqlīd) and base sophisms (shubuhāt; R). God’s sealing hearts indicates that He has closed their ability to understand (see also 2:7c; 6:46; 7:100–101; 9:87, 93; 10:74; 16:108; 30:59; 63:3c). The heart of every arrogant tyrant can also be read, “every arrogant tyrannical heart” (Q, R, Ṭ). In one way, this reading is more apt because, as al-Qurṭubī observes, it is the heart that first becomes arrogant and then the rest of one’s faculties follow, as in the famous saying of the Prophet, “In the body there is a lump of flesh. When it is sound, the entire body is sound, and when it is corrupt, the entire body is corrupt. Verily it is the heart.”

36 And Pharaoh said, “O Hāmān! Build for me a tower, that perhaps I may attain the means—

37 the means to reach the heavens—that I may look upon the God of Moses. Truly I deem him a liar.” Thus was the evil of his conduct made to seem fair unto Pharaoh, and he was turned from the way. Pharaoh’s scheming led to naught but ruin.

36–37 Pharaoh’s response provides an illustration of the manner in which the heart of an arrogant tyrant is sealed, as he seeks to dispute not only God’s signs, but also God’s very Being. Some interpret Pharaoh’s response to mean that he feared that the words of the believing man would enter into the hearts of his people (Q). See commentary on 28:38, where Pharaoh says, O notables! I know of no god for you other than myself. So kindle for me a fire, o Hāmān, for clay, and make me a tower, that haply I may behold the God of Moses, though truly I think he is among the liars. Here the means to reach the heavens renders asbāb al-samāwāt (cf. 22:15), which is usually understood to mean “paths to the heavens” (IK, Q, Ṭ, Ṭs), “doors to the heavens” (IK, Q, Ṭ, Ṭs), or those things by means of which one can attain what one seeks (Ṭ, Ṭs). Pharaoh’s desire to look upon the God of Moses demonstrates his complete misunderstanding, in that he takes God to be a physical being occupying a particular space (Q). It also provides a notable contrast to Moses’ request to God on Mt. Sinai, My Lord, show me, that I might look upon Thee (7:143). Moses, however, repents to God when he is unable to endure this vision; see 7:143c.

Those who are corrupt are often portrayed as deluded, sometimes by Satan (see 8:48; 16:63; 27:24; 29:38), but ultimately by God (see 27:4), into thinking that their conduct is good. Here it may also have been Pharaoh’s council of notables that made the evil of his conduct seem fair unto him (Ṭs). Pharaoh was thus turned from the way by God, a phrase that could also be read, “and he turned from the way,” meaning that he turned himself away and that he prevented others from following the right way (Q, Ṭs).

38 And he who believed said, “O my people! Follow me; I shall guide you unto the way of rectitude.

38 The way of rectitude is what Pharaoh promised to guide the people to in v. 29. The term renders sabīl al-rashād, which is similar to the way of sound judgment (sabīl al-rushd), in relation to which it is said of those who wax arrogant, If they were to see the way of sound judgment, they would not take it as a way (7:146). The latter phrase aptly describes the case of Pharaoh and his notables, who were presented not only with the arguments posed here and elsewhere, but also with evidentiary miracles whose Divine Origin they continued to deny (see 7:132c; 7:136c).

③⑨ O my people! The life of this world is but fleeting enjoyment, whereas the Hereafter is truly the Abode of Permanence.

39 This is one of several verses to affirm that the ephemeral delights of this world are naught but the enjoyment of delusion (3:185; 57:20) and stand in stark contrast to the rewards of the Hereafter, which is life indeed (29:64); see also 3:14; 4:77; 9:38; 13:26; 20:131; 28:60; 42:36; 57:20c. In this vein, a famous ḥadīth transmitted by ʿAbd Allāh ibn Masʿūd states, “The Messenger of God was lying down on a straw mat, and it left marks on his side. Then when he woke up he began to rub his side. So I said, ‘O Messenger of God! Will you allow us to spread something soft over this straw mat?’ He replied, ‘What have I and the world to do with one another? The likeness of me and this world is as that of a rider who rests in the shade of a tree, then passes on and leaves it.’”

④⑩ Whosoever commits an evil deed will not be requited, save with the like thereof; but whosoever, whether male or female, performs a righteous deed and is a believer shall enter the Garden wherein they will be provided for without reckoning.

40 This is one of several verses indicating that God shows mercy and bounty in judging human actions, but requites evil deeds with nothing but their like (cf. 6:160; 28:84), because God commits not so much as a mote’s weight of wrong (4:40). Al-Rāzī notes that this is also a fundamental principle in Islamic Law, according to which the punishment must never exceed the crime. In contrast to God’s treatment of evil deeds, He multiplies good deeds ten times the like thereof (6:160) or even seven hundred fold (see 2:261); also see 27:89 and 28:84, where it is said that whoever brings a good deed, he will have what is better than it. Such rewards relate to the human condition irrespective of gender; for statements about the irrelevance of gender for moral and spiritual potential and reward, see 3:195; 4:124; 16:97; as well as 33:35, which goes to great lengths to affirm that men and women are rewarded equally for all their various acts of religious observance; see 33:35c.

Without reckoning could be understood as a reference to the rewards of Paradise being without end (R) or to the fact that the recompense for bad deeds requires a reckoning, while the recompense for good deeds does not (R, Z). Alternately, it could be understood to mean that were people to be recompensed in accord with their deeds alone, there would be a reckoning (Ṭs), implying that it is their faith and belief that allow them to enter the Garden without reckoning.

④① O my people! How is it that I call you unto salvation while you call me unto the Fire?

④② You call upon me to disbelieve in God and to ascribe as a partner unto Him that whereof I have no knowledge, whereas I call you unto the Mighty, the Forgiving.

41–42 This verse means, “How is it that when I call you to belief, which leads to salvation, you call me to disbelief, which leads to the Fire?” (R). That whereof I have no knowledge indicates that there is nothing in revelation or reason that would verify the disbelievers’ claims (Ṭs). The combination of the Divine Names the Mighty and the Forgiving (cf. 39:5; 38:66; 67:2) expresses the manner in which God brings together all of the seemingly disparate Divine Attributes (Aj), as in v. 3. This is similar to the more frequent combination of the Names the Mighty and the Merciful (26:9, 68, 104, 122, 140, 159, 175, 191, 217; 30:5; 32:6; 36:5; 44:42).

④③ There is no doubt that that unto which you call me has no call in this world or in the Hereafter, and that our return will be unto God, and that the prodigal are the inhabitants of the Fire.

43 No call in this world or in the Hereafter refers to the idols’ inability to intercede on behalf of those who worship them, in this life or the next (Q), harm or benefit them (Ṭ), or respond to their pleas (R). It could also be understood to mean that although the idolaters call people to worship the idols, the idols themselves do not call them (Aj, R, Z). Both meanings can be present at the same time, as in 46:5–6: Who is more astray than one who calls, apart from God, upon such as do not answer him, [even] unto the Day of Resurrection, and who are heedless of their calling. When mankind is gathered, such will be enemies unto them and deniers of their worship. For the Quranic usage of prodigal, see 10:12c.

④ You will soon remember what I have said to you. I entrust my affair to God. Truly God sees His servants.”

44 The man who believed (v. 38) closes his discourse with a final warning that the punishment of which he speaks will come upon the disbelievers and they will know the truth of what he enjoined, but then it will be too late for this knowledge to help them (IK). In this sense, the verse may foretell Pharaoh’s belated testimony, uttered when the sea closes in upon him: I believe that there is no god but the One in whom the Children of Israel believe (10:90); see 10:90–92c. I entrust my affair to God could indicate that the man feared Pharaoh and that his followers intended to kill him (Q, R). In this way, it reflects the response of Moses to Pharaoh’s threat to kill him, Truly I have sought refuge in my Lord and your Lord from everyone who is arrogant and believes not in the Day of Reckoning (40:27; R). According to some, “entrusting” (tafwīḍ) oneself to God precedes the execution of God’s Decree, while “submitting” (taslīm) oneself to God follows it (Aj, Bq, Su). The famous Egyptian Sufi Dhu’l-Nūn al-Miṣrī was reportedly asked, “When does the servant entrust [his affair to God]?” to which he responded, “When he despairs of his own actions and his own soul, takes refuge in God in all his states, and has no attachment to anything except his Lord” (Aj, Bq, Su). According to the Persian Sufi Rūzbihān al-Baqlī, “The perfection of entrusting is to not see oneself or anything else as having any power to benefit or harm, and to see God through the existentiating of existence in every breath.” God sees His servants in all of their affairs, knowing their states and their needs at all times (R).

④ So God shielded him from the evils of that which they had plotted, while a terrible punishment beset the House of Pharaoh—

45 For his faith and his affirming Moses, God protected the believing man from Pharaoh’s people (Ṭ). That which they had plotted may refer to the severe punishments Pharaoh was known to inflict upon those who opposed him, as in 20:71, where Pharaoh tells the sorcerers who believed in Moses without Pharaoh's permission, Now I shall surely cut off your hands and your feet on alternate sides, and I shall surely crucify you on the trunks of palm trees. And you will surely know which of us [inflicts] a more severe and lasting punishment! (cf. 7:124). His being spared such punishment can be seen as a result of his entrusting his affair to God (Aj). While the punishment that encompassed Pharaoh and his people most likely refers to their drowning in the sea as they pursued Moses and the Israelites (see 2:50c; 10:90–92c), the use of beset (ḥāqqa bi) or, more literally, “enclosed,” alludes to the punishment resulting from their own plotting, as in 35:43, Evil plotting besets none but its authors, and to their mockery of Moses, as in 16:34, That which they used to mock beset them (also 40:83; 46:26; cf. 11:8; 39:48; 45:33).

④ the Fire, to which they are exposed morning and evening. And on the Day when the Hour is come, [it will be said], “Cause the House of Pharaoh to enter the punishment most severe!”

46 This is one of several Quranic verses cited to support the Islamic understanding of a period in the grave that comes after death and before the final Resurrection (IK, R), a phase of existence spoken of in 80:21–22: He caused him to die and buried him. Then, when He willed, He resurrected him. This period in the grave is known as the barzakh, or “isthmus,” between the two worlds, in which people experience their first rewards or punishments before experiencing greater reward or punishment after the Resurrection and Judgment; see the essay “Death, Dying, and the Afterlife in the Quran.” These two punishments are reflected in 9:101: We shall punish them twice. Then shall they be relegated to a great punishment. Interpreted in light of such verses, in the present verse the Fire, to which they are exposed morning and evening refers to the punishment that Pharaoh and his people experience in the grave, while the punishment most severe, which they will enter on the Day when the Hour is come, refers to the punishment of Hell.

④ And when they are arguing with one another in the Fire, the weak will say to those who waxed arrogant, “Truly we were your followers; so can you avail us against any portion of the Fire?”

④⑧ Those who waxed arrogant will say, “Truly we are all in it. God has indeed judged between His servants.”

47–48 This is one of several passages in which in the Hereafter those who were led astray by others challenge the leaders who led them astray. In this passage they still seek some form of intercession and remain deluded, but elsewhere they realize that they have been led astray and call upon God to increase the punishment of their leaders: Our Lord! Truly we obeyed our leaders and elders, and they caused us to stray from the way. Our Lord! Give them a twofold punishment, and curse them with a great curse (33:67–68). In 29:13, they are then promised that their leaders will bear their own burdens, and others’ burdens along with their own (see also 7:38–39c), that is to say, punishment for being astray themselves and punishment for leading others astray.

④⑨ And those who are in the Fire will say to the keepers of Hell, “Call upon your Lord to relieve us from a day of the punishment.”

⑤⑩ They will reply, “Did not your messengers bring you clear proofs?” They will say, “Yea, indeed.” They will say, “Then make supplications!” But the supplication of the disbelievers is naught but astray.

49–50 Realizing that those whom they had followed and had taken as protectors in the world cannot avail them in the Hereafter, those who were astray now seek intercession from those angels who function as the keepers of Hell; see also 6:27–28c; 14:44. Rather than interceding, the angels remind the denizens of Hell that they had in fact been granted guidance before, but had rejected God’s messengers (cf. 6:130; 39:71; 67:8–9). As in other passages, the denizens of Hell recognize their situation, but their now belated affirmation can do nothing to forestall or alleviate their punishment; nor can their supplications; see, for example, 14:44: Our Lord! Grant us reprieve for a term nigh, that we might respond to Thy Call and follow the messengers; and 32:12: Our Lord! We have seen and we have heard; so send us back that we may work righteousness. Truly we are certain (cf. 6:27). Yet, as 6:28 contends, even if they were sent back, they would return to the very thing they had been forbidden.

51 Truly We shall help Our messengers and those who believe during the life of this world and on the Day when the witnesses arise, 52 the Day when the excuses of the wrongdoers will not benefit them, and theirs will be the curse, and theirs will be the evil abode.

51–52 This is one of several passages interpreted to mean that all prophetic missions are ultimately victorious (cf. 6:34; 37:171–73; 58:21). Such victory can be like that of the prophets David, Solomon, and Muhammad, who vanquished the armies of those who denied and opposed them, or like that of Noah and Moses, whose enemies God destroyed by means of natural disasters, or like that of Jesus, whose religion prevailed by means of those who carried out his message (Ṭ). Here the witnesses refers to those among the prophets, angels, and believers who will bear witness for the believers and against the disbelievers on the Day of Resurrection and Judgment (Ṭ, Ṭs). Some say that it refers only to the angels (Ṭ, Ṭs) or only to the prophets (Ṭs). This reference to the Resurrection and Judgment then indicates that God will also make His messengers and the believers victorious in the Hereafter by taking vengeance upon those who opposed them. The wrongdoers' excuses will not benefit them, because the book of their deeds will be open and because their ears, their eyes, and their skins will bear witness against them for that which they used to do (41:20), and they will even say, We bear witness against ourselves (6:130). The curse is their being made distant from God's Mercy, while the evil abode refers to Hell (Q).

53 And indeed We gave Moses guidance, and We bequeathed the Book unto the Children of Israel, 54 as a guidance, and as a reminder for possessors of intellect.

53–54 Guidance is here read by some as “the Guidance,” a title for or reference to the Torah (Q), in which there were clear indications of the Knowledge of God and God's Oneness (Ṭs). The Torah was then entrusted to the Israelites, and it contained instructions that made their religious affairs clear for them (Ṭ, Ṭs), and they were guided in accord with it so long as they remained patient (see 32:23c). Possessors of intellect (2:179, 197, 269; 3:7, 190; 5:100; 12:111; 13:19; 14:52; 38:29, 43; 39:9, 18, 21; 40:54; 65:10) refers to those who possess true knowledge of the inner meaning and essence of things; see 5:100c; 39:9c.

55 So be patient. Surely God's Promise is true. And ask forgiveness for thy sin, and hymn the praise of thy Lord at eventide and at dawn.

55 This verse is addressed to the Prophet Muhammad, counseling him to patience in a manner that implies that he will emerge victorious over his adversaries, just as Moses and other prophets did. That God's Promise is true (cf. 4:122; 10:4, 55; 18:21; 28:13; 31:33; 35:5; 40:55, 77; 45:32; 46:17) refers in general to the promise of Divine Aid in this world and reward in the Hereafter (Ṭs) or to the specific promise given in vv. 51–52. For those who maintain that prophets do commit minor sins, the command to ask forgiveness for thy sin (dhanb) means to repent for such sins. For the majority of Muslims, who maintain that prophets are protected by God from committing sins (ma^cṣūm), it is understood as a command to the Prophet to devote himself to worship through supplications and asking forgiveness, so that God might raise him in degrees and his practice would become the model for those who would come after him (Q, Ṭs). At eventide and at dawn (cf. 3:41) refers to the time from the declining of the sun until its setting and the time from daybreak until sunrise, respectively, since in Makkah what was required before the full institution of the five daily prayers was two cycles of prayer in the morning and two in the evening (Bḍ). Others understand this phrase as a command to perform the night prayer (‘ishā’) and the morning prayer (fajr; Q).

56 Truly those who dispute concerning the signs of God without any authority having come to them, there is naught in their breasts but a sense of greatness that they will never attain. So seek refuge in God. Truly He is the Hearer, the Seer.

56 This is the third of four verses in this sūrah to rebuke those who dispute concerning the signs of God; also see vv. 4, 35, and 69; 40:4c; 40:35c. Such individuals have a sense of greatness or pride that prevents them from following the Prophet and accepting the truth when it comes to them (Ṭ). The greatness that they will never attain refers to the favors that God has bestowed upon the Prophet, which they envy, or to the fact that God will debase them (Ṭs), or to both. So the Prophet should seek refuge from the scheming of those who dispute him (R) and from being like the disputants (IK).

57 Surely the creation of the heavens and the earth is greater than the creation of mankind. But most of mankind know not.

57 This verse presents one of the Quranic arguments for God's ability to resurrect human beings (IK, Q), an argument made more explicit in 46:33: Have they not considered that God, Who created the heavens and the earth and did not weary in their creation, is able to give life to the dead? Yea! He is Powerful over all things (cf. 50:15). Nonetheless, most of mankind, or more specifically most of the disbelievers, know not (cf. 7:187; 16:75, 101; 21:24; 27:61; 30:30; 31:25; 34:36; 45:26) or understand not (5:103; 29:63; 49:4), because they turn away from God's signs (Ṭs), such as those pertaining to the cycles of life mentioned in vv. 61–68.

58 And the blind and the seer are not equal; nor are those who believe and perform righteous deeds and the evildoer. Little do you reflect!

58 This same metaphor is employed in 35:19–20: Not equal are the blind and the seeing, nor the darkness and the light (cf. 6:50; 11:24; 13:16). This juxtaposition can also be seen as a symbol for the contrast between knowledge and ignorance, as in 39:9, Are those who know and those who do not know equal, or between faith and disbelief.

59 Surely the Hour is coming; in it there is no doubt. But most of mankind believe not.

59 Although those who disbelieve maintain that the Hour, meaning the Final Judgment, will never come upon us (34:3), the Quran is adamant in maintaining that it is coming (cf. 15:85; 20:15; 22:7) and, moreover, that it has drawn nigh (54:1; cf. 33:63) as well as that it is an event in which there is no doubt (17:99; 22:7).

Nonetheless, most of mankind believe not (11:17; 13:1; cf. 12:103–6; 17:89; 26:8, 67, 103, 121, 139, 158, 174, 190).

60 And your Lord has said, “Call upon Me, and I shall respond to you. Truly those who are too arrogant to worship Me shall enter Hell debased.”

60 Call upon Me, or “Supplicate unto Me,” is understood by many to mean, “Worship Me,” as when the Prophet said, “Supplication is worship,” and then recited this verse (Q, Ṭ, Ṭs), and because it is followed by a reference to those whose pride prevents them from worshipping God (R). The verse can also be understood as an injunction to call upon God, which would itself imply worship, as the custom of many Muslims who follow the example of the Prophet is to supplicate God immediately after the completion the obligatory canonical prayers. I shall respond to you is a promise from God, but it is not understood to mean that all supplications will be answered in this life. In this vein, Ibn ‘Ajībah writes, “There is no believer who calls upon God and asks Him for something but that God gives it to him, in either this life or the Hereafter, where God says to him, ‘This is what you requested in the world. I have stored it for you until this day.’” Supplication is considered among the most meritorious of acts, because in humbly imploring God one admits to one’s servitude and abasement before Him (R) as well as complete poverty before God and utter need of Him (ST). Thus most who fail to call upon God do so out of pride and arrogance (R). There can, however, be those whose immersion in the remembrance of God keeps them from making a separate supplication, as stated in a famous ḥadīth qudsī: “For one whose remembrance of Me has distracted him from imploring Me, I shall give him that which is more bountiful than that which I give to those who implore Me” (R); for more on the importance of “calling upon God,” see 2:186c.

61 God it is Who made the night for you, that you might rest therein, and the day by which to see. Truly God is Possessed of Bounty for mankind, but most of mankind does not give thanks.

61 That God created the night for rest and repose is invoked in several verses as a mercy God has bestowed upon human beings (cf. 25:47; 78:9; 10:67; 27:86; 28:73). That He made the day by which to see, or “made the day giving sight” (cf. 10:67; 28:73), indicates that it was made so that people could pursue their livelihood (IK, ٢); cf. 78:11. It could also be rendered “made the day seeing,” indicating the manner in which the day bears witness to the good and bad actions that human beings perform; see also 10:67c. Truly God is Possessed of Bounty for mankind (cf. 2:243; 10:60; 27:73), or for the worlds (2:251). Nonetheless, most of mankind does not give thanks (cf. 2:243; 10:60; 12:38), because they are unaware (7:187; 12:21, 40, 68; 16:38, 75; 27:61; 30:6, 30; 34:28, 36; 39:29, 49; 40:57; 44:39; 45:26) and are not believers (11:17; 12:103–6; 13:1; 17:89; 26:8, 67, 103, 121, 139, 158, 174, 190; 40:59).

62 That is God, your Lord, Creator of all things; there is no god but He. How, then, are you perverted?

63 In this way were those who used to reject the signs of God perverted.

62–63 In this context, How, then, are you perverted (or “How, then, are you turned away”; cf. 6:95; 10:34; 35:3) means, “How, given that there is only one God and that He has provided the day and the night and infinite bounty for you, could you turn away from Him, deny Him, and attribute partners to Him?” Just as the Quraysh went astray, worshipping gods apart from God, so too those before them were perverted, or turned away, from God, worshipping other gods with no evidence or proof, solely on the basis of ignorance and caprice, and rejecting God’s proofs and signs (IK).

64 God it is Who made the earth a dwelling place for you and the sky a canopy. And He formed you and made beautiful your forms, and provided you with good things. That is God, your Lord; so blessed is God, Lord of the worlds.

64 Dwelling place renders qarār, which indicates that God made the earth firm and stable so that people could dwell in it and travel upon it; see 21:30–31c . He made the sky a roof protecting the world (IK), holding it aloft without pillars that you see (31:10; ٢). That God formed you and made beautiful your forms (see also 64:3) can mean the form of the human body; the inner reality of the human being, as in 95:4, Truly We created man in the most beautiful stature; or the forms of all things, as it is God Who made beautiful all that He created (32:7); see 32:7c; 95:4c.

65 He is the Living; there is no god but He. So call upon Him, devoting religion entirely to Him. Praise be to God, Lord of the worlds.

65 Regarding God as the Living, see 2:255c. Regarding the injunction to call upon God, see 40:14c; 40:60c. Devoting religion entirely to Him (cf. 7:29; 10:22; 29:65; 31:32; 39:2, 11, 14; 40:14; 98:5) indicates practicing with total sincerity, in purity, and with complete devotion; see 7:29c; 31:32c; 98:5c.

66 Say, “I have been forbidden to worship those upon whom you call apart from God, since clear proofs have come unto me from my Lord, and I am commanded to submit to the Lord of the worlds.”

66 Having put forward a series of arguments in the preceding verses, the Quran here enjoins the Prophet to declare his implacable rejection of the Quraysh’s idolatry (cf. 6:56; 10:104; 109:1–6). In 6:56 he is enjoined to follow the same opening phrase with the declaration, I will not follow your caprices, for then I would have gone astray, and I would not be among the rightly guided; and in 6:71, the believers are instructed to join him in saying, We are commanded to submit to the Lord of the worlds.

67 He it is Who created you from dust, then from a drop, then from a blood clot. Then He brings you forth as infants, that you may then reach maturity, then that you may grow old—though some of you are taken earlier—that you may reach a term appointed, and that haply you may understand.

67 This is one of several verses to cite the stages of gestation and life as evidence of God's Mercy and Power as well as His ability to resurrect the dead; see 22:5–6c. As human beings are created from dust, then from a drop (cf. 16:4; 18:37; 22:5; 36:77; 53:46; 75:37; 76:2; 80:19), referring to a drop of sperm or to a recently fertilized egg (Ṭs)—that is a draught of a base fluid (32:8; cf. 77:20)—this verse also serves to remind human beings of the lowly origin of their material nature. To reach maturity indicates the completion of one's bodily strength and intellectual and mental capabilities (Q, Ṭs); see 46:15c. Yet some are taken earlier—that is, before they grow old (Aj, Q, Ṭ, Ṭs), before they reach maturity (Aj, Ṭs), or even before they are brought forth as infants (Aj, Q). Here a term appointed refers to the term decreed for one's life span, short of which none die and beyond which none live (Ṭ), or to the Day of Resurrection (Ṭs).

68 He it is Who gives life and causes death. So when He decrees a thing, He only says to it, “Be!” and it is.

68 That He gives life and causes death (cf. 2:258; 3:156; 7:158; 9:116; 10:56; 22:6; 23:80; 44:8; 53:44; 57:2) indicates God's Power over all phases of existence at all times. He only says to it, “Be!” and it is (cf. 2:117; 3:47; 6:73; 16:40; 19:35; 36:82) points to the fact that God's creative act is dependent upon nothing else and instantaneous, like the blinking of an eye (54:50); see 2:117c.

69 Hast thou not considered those who dispute concerning the signs of God, how they are turned away, 69 This is the last of four verses in this sūrah to rebuke those who dispute concerning the signs of God; see also vv. 4, 35, and 56. Signs can refer to verses of the Quran, but their mention here follows directly upon the mention of the signs of God within the created order and the cycles of human life in vv. 61–68, so that the term would appear to refer in this instance first and foremost to the signs upon the horizons and within themselves (i.e., within human beings; 41:53). Those who dispute concerning these signs are turned away from the truth and sound judgment (Ṭ) or from the straight path to the path that leads astray (Ṭs).

70 those who deny the Book, and that wherewith We have sent Our messengers? But soon they will know,

71 since they will be dragged, with shackles and chains around their necks,

72 into boiling liquid; then they will be set aflame in the Fire.

70–72 Here the Book refers to the Quran, and that wherewith We have sent Our messengers refers to all revealed books (Ṭs); or the Book could refer to all revealed books, the Quran included (Aj), and that wherewith We have sent Our messengers could refer to the Divine laws (Aj) or to the teachings with which God sent His prophets (Ṭ). On the Day of Judgment, the disbelievers will know the truth of what they disputed and denied (cf. 15:3, 96; 29:66; 37:170; 43:89), when they are dragged in shackles (see 36:8c) and chains into boiling liquid and set aflame in the Fire of Hell, which is understood to mean that they will be dragged back and forth between the two, as in 55:43–44: This is Hell that the guilty deny; to and fro shall they pass, between it and boiling waters (also see 37:68c).

73 Then it will be said unto them, “Where are those whom you used to ascribe as partners 74 apart from God?” They will reply, “They have forsaken us. Nay, but we were not calling upon aught before.” Thus does God lead astray the disbelievers.

73–74 This is one of several passages stating that the partners the disbelievers ascribe to God, or in other instances “that which they fabricated,” in this life will forsake them in the next life (cf. 6:22–24; 7:37, 53; 10:30; 11:21; 16:86–87; 28:62–65; 41:47–48). In some instances the disbelievers deny that they were in fact idolaters (see 6:23) or continue to call upon their false deities to no avail (see 28:64), but here and in 7:37 they admit their error, though it is too late for this realization to help them. In this same vein, Satan says to the disbelievers after God’s Decree has been passed, Verily, God made you the Promise of truth; and I made you a promise, but I failed you. And I had no authority over you, save that I called you, and you responded to me. So do not blame me, but blame yourselves. I cannot respond to your cries for help; nor can you respond to my cries for help. Truly I disbelieved in your ascribing me as partner aforesaid (14:22). Thus the disbelievers say about him, Satan is a forsaker of man (25:29).

75 “That is because you used to exult upon the earth without right and because you were insolent.

76 Enter the gates of Hell, therein to abide.” How evil is the abode of the arrogant!

75–76 These are the words of the angels to the denizens of Hell (IK), telling them that the punishments they are now receiving are the result of acts of disobedience and exulting in vanities not permitted to them (Ṭ). Though one can exult or rejoice rightfully (Ṭs), as in 13:36, Those to whom We have given the Book rejoice in that which has been sent down unto thee, in the Quran “exult” is almost always used with a negative connotation, implying that one is heedless of God while enjoying the life of this world. In contrast, “insolence” (marah) can only indicate enjoying something in complete vanity (Ṭs). Thus you used to exult indicates being heedless of the gifts God has given and not being grateful for them, while being insolent or haughty indicates direct acts of disobedience. Regarding the gates of Hell, which are said to number seven (Ṭs), see 39:71–72c and the essay “Death, Dying, and the Afterlife in the Quran.” The abode in which those who were too proud and haughty to worship God will dwell forever is too evil to be described (cf. 3:151; 16:29; 39:72).

77 So be patient. Surely God’s Promise is true. And whether We show thee a part of that which We promise them, or We take thee, unto Us will they be returned.

77 Be patient is an injunction addressed directly to the Prophet, as it is in the second-person singular, but by extension it applies to all his followers, as God’s Promise will always be fulfilled, whether in this life or the next; see 40:55c on the identical phrase. Patience is said to be an attribute of the resolute among God’s messengers (see 46:35c). Whether We show thee a part of that which We promise them refers to their receiving punishment while the Prophet is alive (Ṭ) and thus alludes to the possibility of the Prophet's triumph over his enemies during the life of this world in the manner of David and Solomon or Noah and Moses (see 40:55c). Or We take thee thus refers to the possibility of the Prophet's death before the punishment comes upon the disbelievers, meaning God's Promise coming upon them either in this world after the Prophet's death or on the Day of Judgment.

78 Indeed We have sent messengers before thee. Among them are those whom We have recounted unto thee, and among them are those whom We have not recounted unto thee. And it was not for a messenger to bring a sign, save by God's Leave. So when God's Command comes, judgment is passed in truth; and those who make false claims will then be losers.

78 Here, as in 4:164, which speaks of messengers We have recounted unto thee before, and messengers We have not recounted unto thee, the Quran explicitly indicates that there are prophets whose stories God has not recounted to Muhammad and his followers. The Quran mentions twenty-six prophets by name, but Islamic tradition holds that there were many more, 315 messengers (rasūl) and 124,000 prophets (nabī) according to a ḥadīth; see 4:164c and the essay "The Quranic View of Sacred History and Other Religions." That it was not for a messenger to bring a sign, save by God's Leave (cf. 13:38) functions to let the Prophet know that he does not need to bring to his people everything that they demand of him in order to prove his claim to prophethood, just as it was not given to prophets before him to bring a sign, save by God's Leave (Ṭ). Were he in fact to do so, they still would not believe, as was demonstrated by the miracle of the splitting of the moon (see the introduction to Sūrah 54). For other instances of disingenuous requests made by the disbelievers, see, e.g., 6:8, 36; 17:90–93; commentary on 6:7–9.

79 God it is Who made cattle for you, that some of them you may ride and some of them you may eat—

80 and there are benefits for you therein—and that through them you may attain any need that is in your breasts. And upon them and upon ships are you carried.

79–80 This is one of many passages to invoke the benefits of cattle (referring not only to cows, but also other four-legged domesticated animals): their usefulness for riding and transporting goods, for providing warmth and clothing, for providing food and drink, and even their beauty, as signs of God’s Beneficence toward humanity; see 6:142c; 16:5, 66, 79; 23:21–22; 36:72–73; 39:6; 43:12–13. As in 23:21–22 and 43:12–13, the mention of cattle is here combined with that of ships, alluding to God’s providing for human beings on both land and sea; for seafaring as a blessing from God, see 2:164; 14:32; 17:66; 22:65; 30:46; 31:31; 35:12; 42:32–34c; 45:12.

81 And He shows you His signs. So which of God’s signs do you reject?

81 Regarding God’s showing people His signs, see 40:13c. Which of God’s signs do you reject? could be understood to mean, “If you admit that the realities mentioned above are from God, how could you deny God’s ability to resurrect?” (Q). Others take it as an expression of amazement and admonition, as if to say that one cannot deny God’s signs and proofs unless one is stubborn and arrogant (IK). Another possible meaning is, “When you reflect upon these signs, how could you call upon or worship anything apart from God?” (Ṭ). See also the refrain Which of your Lord’s boons do you two deny? throughout Sūrah 55 (beginning with v. 13).

82 Have they not journeyed upon the earth and observed how those before them fared in the end? They were more numerous than them, greater than them in strength, and left firmer traces upon the earth. But that which they used to earn availed them not.

82 Have they not journeyed upon the earth and observed how those before them fared in the end? is repeated several times in the Quran (12:109; 30:9, 42; 35:44; 40:21; 47:10); see 40:21–22c; 30:9c. That which they used to earn availed them not (cf. 15:84; 39:50) means that when God’s Promise of punishment was fulfilled for the disbelievers from generations of old, their great power and wealth could not defend them against it (Q, T̄). The phrase could also be rendered, “So what will that which they used to earn avail them?” (Q, T̄), in which case it refers to those among the Quraysh who disputed with the Prophet regarding God’s signs, given that only traces remain of those who disputed God’s messengers in the past (T̄).

83 And when their messengers brought them clear proofs, they exulted in the knowledge they possessed, and that which they used to mock beset them.

83 That the disbelievers exulted in the knowledge they possessed implies that they declared that they knew more than the Prophet, saying that they would not be punished, resurrected (Q), or taken to account; or else that they exulted in what they knew of worldly affairs (IJ), as in 30:7: They know some outward aspect of the life of this world, but of the Hereafter they are heedless (Q). And that which they used to mock beset them (cf. 6:10; 11:8; 16:34; 21:41; 39:48; 45:33; 46:26) indicates that the punishment they receive is a direct result of their own iniquity, as in 10:44: Truly God does not wrong human beings in the least, but rather human beings wrong themselves. Alternately, it could be read as a reference to the prophets exulting or rejoicing in the knowledge given to them by God (T̄s).

84 Then, when they saw Our Might, they said, “We believe in God alone, and we disavow that which we used to ascribe as partners unto Him.”

85 But their believing benefited them not when they saw Our Might. [That is] the wont of God which has passed among His servants; and the disbelievers were then lost.

84–85 When the disbelievers saw God’s Punishment descending upon them, they declared belief in God and disavowed their idolatry, but their newly found belief was of no benefit to them, because they had already had ample time to repent yet had not done so. Thus their admission of wrongdoing comes too late for repentance. In this sense, it is similar to 4:18: And repentance is not accepted from those who do evil deeds till, when death confronts one of them, he says, “Truly now I repent,” nor from those who die as disbelievers (cf. 23:106–8; 30:57; 74:43–48).

[That is] represents an elided word or phrase that some interpret as “Beware the wont of God” or “Like the wont of God” (Q). Here the wont of God (cf. 3:137; 33:38, 62; 35:43; 48:23) refers to God’s establishment of the principle with all previous generations that He does not accept a declaration of belief at the moment when people are confronted with the punishment they had denied (Ij, Ṭs), since they had been warned and granted respite yet denied it up until that moment. The disbelievers were lost before that moment, but now the complete nature of their loss has become clear to them (Ij, Q), as they are cast into the Fire, suffer God’s Vengeance, and lose the reward of the Garden (Ṭs).

Expounded

Fuṣṣilat

F*uṣṣilat* is a Makkan sūrah believed to have been revealed directly after the preceding sūrah, Ghāfir (JJ). It takes its name from the reference to the Quran in v. 3 as a Book whose signs have been expounded. This sūrah is also known as Sajdah, “Prostration,” and as ḥā Mīm Sajdah (Āl). Other less common names for this sūrah are “The Lamps” (al-Maṣābīḥ), for the phrase We adorned the lowest heaven with lamps and a guard in v. 12 (Āl, IJ), and “Means of Sustenance” (al-Aqwāt), from the reference to God having apportioned means of sustenance for all things on the earth in v. 10 (Āl).

According to some, Fuṣṣilat follows the previous sūrah, because the discussion of the punishments that befell the pre-Islamic Arabian tribes of ʿĀd and Thamūd and the similar punishments that are foretold for the Quraysh echo the warnings of 40:82: Have they not journeyed upon the earth and observed how those before them fared in the end? They were more numerous than them, and greater than them in strength, and left firmer traces upon the earth. But that which they used to earn availed them not (Āl). In this same vein, v. 2 can be seen as a warning to the Quraysh that echoes 40:83, And when their messengers brought them clear proofs, they exulted in the knowledge they possessed, and that which they used to mock beset them, since the Quraysh were said to mock the Quran, as in v. 26: And those who disbelieve will say, “Listen not to this Quran, but speak dismissively of it, that haply you might prevail” (Aj).

The sūrah begins with a brief discussion of the nature of the Quran (vv. 1–4), which is followed by advice to the Prophet regarding those who refuse to pay it heed (vv. 5–6), juxtaposing the disbelievers and the believers (vv. 7–8). After calling for reflection upon the manner in which God created the heavens and the earth (vv. 9–12), the sūrah invokes the calamities that befell the pre-Islamic Arabian tribes of ʿĀd and Thamūd as examples of the fate that awaits disbelievers in this world (vv. 13–18), followed by a warning of the fate that awaits them in the Hereafter (vv. 19–25). A discussion of the fate that awaits those who reject the Quran (vv. 26–28) then transitions into another juxtaposition of the believers and the disbelievers (vv. 29–32) and an exhortation to the believers to maintain respectful speech and conduct even with the disbelievers (vv. 33–39). This is followed by a return to a discussion of the nature of the Quran and the fate that awaits those who reject it (vv. 40–46). The final section (vv. 47–54), which reflects upon the vagaries of the human condition, includes one of the most important verses for the discussion of the manner in which God reveals the truth to human beings (v. 53).

① Hā. Mīm. ② A revelation from the Compassionate, the Merciful, ③ a Book whose signs have been expounded as an Arabic Quran for a people who know, ④ as a bringer of glad tidings, and as a warner. But most of them have turned away, such that they hear not. ⑤ They say, “Our hearts are under coverings from that to which you call us, and in our ears there is deafness, and between us and you there is a veil. So do [as you will]; we shall do [as we will].” ⑥ Say, “I am only a human being like you. It is revealed unto me that your God is only one God. So go straight unto Him and seek forgiveness from Him.” Woe unto the idolaters, ⑦ those who do not give alms and who disbelieve in the Hereafter. ⑧ Truly those who believe and perform righteous deeds, theirs shall be a reward unceasing. ⑨ Say, “Do you indeed disbelieve in the One Who created the earth in two days, and do you set up equals unto Him? That is the Lord of the worlds.” ⑩ He placed firm mountains therein rising above it, blessed it, and apportioned its means of sustenance therein in four days, alike for all who ask. ⑪ Then He turned to heaven while it was smoke and said unto it and unto the earth, “Come willingly or unwillingly!” They said, “We come willingly.” 12 Then He decreed that they be seven heavens in two days and revealed to each heaven its command. And We adorned the lowest heaven with lamps and a guard. That is the Decree of the Mighty, the Knowing. 13 So if they turn away, then say, “I warned you of a thunderbolt, like the thunderbolt of ʿĀd and Thamūd: 14 when messengers came unto them from before them and behind them, [saying], ‘Worship none but God,’ they said, ‘Had our Lord willed, He would have sent down angels; so truly we disbelieve in that wherewith you have been sent.’” 15 As for ʿĀd, they waxed arrogant upon the earth without right and said, “Who is greater than us in strength?” Have they not considered that God, Who created them, is greater than them in strength? Yet they rejected Our signs. 16 So We sent a howling wind against them in days of ill fortune, that they might taste the punishment of disgrace in the life of this world; yet the punishment of the Hereafter is more disgraceful, and they will not be helped. 17 As for Thamūd, We guided them, but they preferred blindness to guidance; so the thunderbolt of humiliating punishment overtook them for that which they used to earn. 18 And We saved those who believed and were reverent. 19 And on that Day the enemies of God are gathered unto the Fire and are marshaled in [ordered ranks], 20 till, when they come upon it, their ears, their eyes, and their skins will bear witness against them for that which they used to do. 21 They will say to their skins, “Why did you bear witness against us?” They will reply, “God, Who makes all things speak, made us speak. He created you the first time, and unto Him shall you be returned. 22 You did not seek to conceal, lest your ears, your eyes, and your skins bear witness against you. But you thought that God knew not much of that which you did. 23 That thought which you thought about your Lord has destroyed you, such that you have come to be among the losers.” 24 Then if they are patient, the Fire shall be an abode for them. And if they seek favor, they will not be granted favor. 25 We assigned to them companions, and they made that which is before them and that which is behind them seem fair to them. So the Word among the communities of jinn and men that have passed away before them came due for them.

Truly they were lost. 26 And those who disbelieve will say, “Listen not to this Quran, but speak dismissively of it, that haply you might prevail.” 27 We shall surely make those who disbelieve taste a severe punishment, and We shall surely requite them for the worst of that which they used to do. 28 That is the recompense of the enemies of God—the Fire. The Abode of Perpetuity shall be theirs therein, a recompense for their having rejected Our signs. 29 And those who disbelieve will say, “Our Lord, show us those who led us astray among jinn and men. Let us put them under our feet, that they might be among the lowliest.” 30 Truly those who say, “Our Lord is God,” then stand firm, the angels will descend upon them, [saying], “Fear not, nor grieve, and rejoice in the Garden that you have been promised. 31 We are your protectors in the life of this world and in the Hereafter; therein you shall have whatsoever your souls desire, and therein you shall have whatsoever you call for: 32 a welcome from One Forgiving, Merciful.” 33 And who is more beautiful in speech than one who calls unto God, works righteousness, and says, “Truly I am among those who submit”? 34 The good deed and the evil deed are not equal. Repel by that which is better; then behold, the one between whom and thee there is enmity shall be as if he were a loyal, protecting friend. 35 Yet none shall receive it, save those who are patient; and none shall receive it, save those who possess great fortune. 36 And should a temptation from Satan provoke thee, seek refuge in God. Truly He is the Hearing, the Knowing. 37 Among His signs are the night and the day, the sun and the moon. Prostrate not unto the sun, nor unto the moon. Prostrate unto God, Who created them, if it is He Whom you worship. 38 And if they wax arrogant, then those who are with thy Lord glorify Him night and day, and they never weary. 39 Among His signs is that thou seest the earth diminished; then, when We send down water upon it, it quivers and swells. He Who gives it life is surely the One Who gives life to the dead. Truly He is Powerful over all things. 40 Truly those who deviate with regard to Our signs are not hidden from Us. Is one who is cast in the Fire better, or one who comes in security on the Day of Resurrection? Do what you will; truly He sees whatsoever you do. 41

Truly those who disbelieve in the Reminder when it comes unto them [. . .]. And truly it is a mighty Book. 42 Falsehood comes not upon it from before it or from behind it; a revelation from One Wise, Praised. 43 Naught has been said unto thee save that which has been said unto the messengers before thee. Truly thy Lord is Possessed of Forgiveness and Possessed of a Painful Retribution. 44 Had We made it a Quran in a foreign tongue, they would say, "If only its signs were expounded. What! A foreign tongue and an Arab [messenger]?" Say, "It is a guidance and a healing for those who believe, and those who do not believe have a deafness in their ears, and it is a blindness for them. Such are called from a place far off." 45 Indeed, We gave Moses the Book; then difference arose concerning it. And were it not for a Word that had already gone forth from thy Lord, judgment would have been made between them. Yet truly they are confounded by doubt regarding it. 46 Whosoever works righteousness, it is for his own soul. And whosoever commits evil, it is to the detriment thereof. It is not for thy Lord to wrong His servants. 47 Unto Him is knowledge of the Hour referred. No fruits come forth from their sheaths, nor does any female bear or bring forth, save by His Knowledge. And on the Day when He will call unto them, "Where are My partners?" they will say, "We admit unto Thee that none among us bears witness." 48 That which they used to call upon before will forsake them, and they will know for certain that they have no refuge. 49 Man wearies not of supplicating for good, and if evil befalls him, he is despondent, despairing. 50 And if We make him taste some mercy from Us after hardship has befallen him, surely he will say, "This is mine; I think not that the Hour will come. If I am returned unto my Lord, surely with Him shall I have that which is most beautiful." So We shall inform those who disbelieved of that which they have done, and We shall cause them to taste of a grave punishment. 51 And when We bless man, he turns away and withdraws. Yet when evil befalls him, he is full of prolonged supplication. 52 Say, "What think you, if it is from God, yet you disbelieve in it? Who is more astray than one in extreme schism?" 53 We shall show them Our signs upon the horizons and within themselves till it becomes clear to them that it is the truth.

Does it not suffice that thy Lord is Witness over all things? 54 Behold!
They are in doubt regarding the meeting with their Lord. Behold! Truly
He encompasses all things.

1 Sūrah 41 is the second in a series of seven sūrahs that open with the Arabic letters ḥā° and mīm and are referred to collectively as the ḥawāmīm. The letters ḥā° and mīm are among the separated letters (al-muqattaʿāt) that are found at the beginning of twenty-nine sūrahs and whose meaning is considered by most commentators to be known only to God; see 2:1c. For some possible meanings of these letters, see 40:1c. Some propose that the ḥā° mīm here could allude to the “wisdom of Muhammad” (Hikmat Muḥammad; Bq).

② A revelation from the Compassionate, the Merciful,

2 As with the other seven sūrahs that begin with the letters ḥā° and mīm, this sūrah opens with a description of the Quran. For those who take ḥā Mīm as a name of the Quran, vv. 1–2 can be read to mean, “ḥā Mīm is a revelation from the Compassionate, the Merciful” (Q). The connection of revelation to the Divine Names of Mercy bespeaks its being sent to benefit the world and particularly religion, as when the Quran says of the Prophet, And We sent thee not, save as a mercy unto the worlds (21:107; Aj).

③ a Book whose signs have been expounded as an Arabic Quran for a people who know,

3 That the signs, or verses, of the Quran have been expounded means that they have been explained and made clear (Q, Ṭ) through the variety of arguments and proofs for the Oneness of God and the truth of prophethood given throughout (cf. 6:55, 97–98, 126; 7:32, 174; 9:11; 10:5, 24; 13:2; 30:28). The Quran is thus described as a Book whose signs have been determined, then expounded, from the Presence of One Wise, Aware (11:1; IK). In this context, Quran is best understood in accord with its linguistic meaning, “recitation,” indicating that God expounded the signs in the form of an Arabic recitation; see also 12:2; 16:103; 20:113; 26:195; 39:28c; 42:7; 43:3. In other verses this expounding is said to have been done for a people who know (cf. 7:32; 9:11; 10:5), for a people who take heed (6:126), for a people who reflect (10:24), and for a people who understand (30:28), so that people may be certain of the meeting with their Lord (13:2), and so that haply they may return (7:174).

④ as a bringer of glad tidings, and as a warner. But most of them have turned away, such that they hear not.

4 The Quran is a bringer of glad tidings for the believers and a warner for the disbelievers (Q, Ṭs). But most of the people of Makkah at the time of the revelation of this sūrah (Q, Ṭ, Ṭs) had turned away from the Quran (Ṭ), or from belief in God (Ṭs), and refused to listen to it. This verse could thus be understood to refer to their failure to both hear with their ears and reflect, consider, and understand (Aj), meaning that they did not “hear” with their hearts, as alluded to in the next verse.

⑤ They say, “Our hearts are under coverings from that to which you call us, and in our ears there is deafness, and between us and you there is a veil. So do [as you will]; we shall do [as we will].”

5 The objection posed here by the disbelievers is similar to that stated by the Jews of Madinah in 2:88: And they say, “Our hearts are uncircumcised” (see also 4:155c). The present verse is one of several where the hearts of the disbelievers are said to be “veiled,” “covered,” or “sealed” to prevent spiritual comprehension (see 2:7c; 6:25c, 46; 7:100–101; 9:87, 93; 10:74; 16:108; 17:46; 18:57c, 101; 30:59; 45:23; 47:16c; 63:3c; 83:14c; 83:15c). From one perspective, when the disbelievers say this of themselves, they in fact speak the truth about their spiritual condition, but it is God Who has placed coverings over their hearts, such that they understand it not, and in their ears a deafness (6:25; 17:46; 18:57). Thus their hearts are veiled with the coverings of spiritual neglect, inclining toward worldliness, lust, caprice, and other sins, so that they cannot comprehend the call, and their ears are deaf to the good, so that they cannot hear the call of God (ST); see 6:25c. Their declaration that there is a veil between them and the Prophet indicates that they see no possibility of rapprochement with him. Thus they say, “Act and pray according to the dictates of your religion, and we will act and pray according to the dictates of our religion” (Ṭ, Ṭs). This is reported to have been a declaration by Abū Jahl and other leaders of the Quraysh (Ṭs).

⑥ Say, “I am only a human being like you. It is revealed unto me that your God is only one God. So go straight unto Him and seek forgiveness from Him.” Woe unto the idolaters, ⑦ those who do not give alms and who disbelieve in the Hereafter.

6–7 Cf. 18:110. That the Prophet is only a human being is seen by the Quraysh as evidence that he has not come with a true revelation (see 6:8–9; 11:12; 14:10; 17:94; 21:3c; 23:33; 25:7; 36:15; 41:14; 54:24; 64:6c). But here it illustrates that there is not in reality a veil between them. Rather, the Prophet brings them a revelation in their language, an Arabic Quran, whose signs have been expounded, but they choose to ignore it and not act in accord with it. Go straight unto Him derives from the same word as the central Quranic concept of the straight path. It thus indicates not deviating from the worship of the One God and remaining steadfast; see 1:6c. In this context, give alms may refer to required alms (Ṭs), but as this is a Makkan sūrah and alms were not formally instituted until the second year of the Madinan period (see 2:43c; 2:215c), it most likely refers to charity in general, as in 19:31 and 19:55, where Jesus and Ishmael refer to alms (zakāh) and more broadly to the purification of the soul (IK); as in 91:9, which employs the same root, z-k-y, in saying of the soul, Indeed, he prospers who purifies it (zakkāhā); and as in 87:14: He indeed prospers who is purified (tazakkā).

⑧ Truly those who believe and perform righteous deeds, theirs shall be a reward unceasing.

8 Cf. 84:25; 95:6. A reward unceasing (cf. 68:3) indicates a reward that comes directly from God and is never cut off, as opposed to the rewards of this world; see 95:6c. Also see 11:108, which refers to the Garden as a gift unfailing.

9 Say, “Do you indeed disbelieve in the One Who created the earth in two days, and do you set up equals unto Him? That is the Lord of the worlds.”

9 This verse is an expression of rebuke in the form of a question (IK, R). As in other instances, this line of questioning is meant to challenge the logic of the pre-Islamic system of polytheism, since many idolaters believed in a supreme deity, but ascribed to that deity partners who had a share in the creative process; see 23:85–89; 29:61c; 31:25.

10 He placed firm mountains therein rising above it, blessed it, and apportioned its means of sustenance therein in four days, alike for all who ask.

10 Placed firm mountains therein (cf. 13:3; 21:31; 27:61; 77:27) or cast therein firm mountains (15:19; 50:7; cf. 16:15; 31:10) refers to God’s making the earth firm. That God apportioned its means of sustenance refers to God’s placing the mountains, rivers, and trees in various lands (IJ, Ṭ); providing sustenance for human beings and animals (IJ, Ṭ, Ṭs); apportioning the rains (IJ, Ṭ); apportioning different things to each land, so that they would remain interdependent (IJ, Ṭ, Ṭs); or all of these functions. The days mentioned here and in the surrounding verses do not denote the same measure of time as the days ordinarily experienced by human beings; see 22:47: Truly a day with your Lord is as a thousand years of that which you reckon (cf. 32:5). The reference to creating the earth in two days in v. 9, apportioning its means of sustenance therein in four days in this verse, then to creating the seven heavens in two days in v. 12 can be understood as further elaboration of other verses that state that God created the heavens and the earth in six days (7:54; 10:3; 11:7; 57:4; cf. 25:59; 32:4; 50:38; IK). The two days in v. 9 would then be a part of the four days in which the apportioning took place (IK, R, Ṭs). In this vein, the Prophet is reported to have said, “God created the earth on Sunday and Monday; He created the mountains on Tuesday; and He created the trees, the water, and the populated and the unpopulated [lands] on Wednesday; so these are the four days. Then He created the sky on Thursday, and the sun, the moon, the stars, the angels, and Adam on Friday” (Ṭs).

⑪ Then He turned to heaven while it was smoke and said unto it and unto the earth, “Come willingly or unwillingly!” They said, “We come willingly.”

11 Turned to renders the verb istawā, which is also translated “mounted” when employed in relation to God’s Throne (see 7:54c; 10:3; 20:5; 25:59; 32:4; 57:4). In this context, as in 2:29, it means that after creating the earth God turned His attention to the creation of the heavens (Ṭs). That the heavens and the earth agreed to come willingly indicates that all things are obedient and subservient to God, as in 2:116: Unto Him belongs whatsoever is in the heavens and on the earth. All are devoutly obedient to Him (cf. 16:52); and 19:93: There is none in the heavens and on the earth, save that it comes unto the Compassionate as a servant.

⑫ Then He decreed that they be seven heavens in two days and revealed to each heaven its command. And We adorned the lowest heaven with lamps and a guard. That is the Decree of the Mighty, the Knowing.

12 Most commentators understand the two days to be Thursday and Friday (IJ, Ṭ), though others who say that the heavens were created before the earth say that the two days are Sunday and Monday (IJ); for the seven heavens, see 23:17c; 65:12; 67:3; 71:15. That God revealed to each heaven its command, or its affair, is understood to mean that He created for each all that would pertain to it, such as angels, stars, the sun, and the moon (IJ, Ṭ). This is one of several instances where the Quran employs the verb “to reveal” (awḥā), which can also mean “to inspire,” when speaking outside the context of sending prophetic revelations, as in 16:68: And thy Lord revealed unto the bee; and 99:5, which says of the earth at the end of time: thy Lord inspired her (awḥāhā). Such passages can be understood as references to making all aspects of creation fulfill the purpose for which they were created. Regarding the adornment of the lowest heaven with lamps, which are said to protect against intrusions from those who wish to listen to the heavenly discourse (cf. 15:16–18; 37:6–10; 67:5; 72:8–9), see the introduction to Sūrah 72.

⑬ So if they turn away, then say, “I warned you of a thunderbolt, like the thunderbolt of °Ād and Thamūd:

13 Here the Prophet is told to warn the Quraysh that if they turn away, as did other Arabian tribes before them, namely, the °Ād and the Thamūd, who rejected the prophets sent to them, they might suffer a similar fate. For the account of the °Ād, also see 7:65–72; 11:50–60; and for that of the Thamūd, see 7:73–79; 11:61–68; 26:141–58; 54:23–31. The tribe of Thamūd is also said to have been destroyed by a thunderbolt in 51:44, by the Cry in 11:67 (cf. 54:31), and by an earthquake in 7:78. These are not contradictory, but rather different aspects of the overwhelming (Tāghiyah) that befalls them, as described in 69:5.

⑭ when messengers came unto them from before them and behind them, [saying], ‘Worship none but God,’ they said, ‘Had our Lord willed, He would have sent down angels; so truly we disbelieve in that wherewith you have been sent.’”

14 The °Ād and the Thamūd’s rejection of their prophets, saying, Had our Lord willed, He would have sent down angels, reflects the manner in which other communities are said to have rejected their prophets. As 17:94 states, And naught hindered men from believing when guidance came unto them, save that they said, “Has God sent a human being as a messenger?” (see also 6:8–9; 6:50; 11:12; 14:10–11; 23:24, 33–34, 47; 26:154, 186; 36:15; 54:24; 64:6c; 74:25). In other verses, this same objection is attributed to those who rejected the prophethood of Muhammad: And they say, “What ails this Messenger, who eats food and walks in the markets? Why is there not an angel sent down unto him to be a warner with him?” (25:7). In 6:8 it is said that had an angel been sent, it would have come not with a revelation, but to carry out God’s Judgment: Had We sent down an angel, then the matter would be decreed, and they would be granted no respite; see also 17:94–95c.

⑮ As for °Ād, they waxed arrogant upon the earth without right and said, “Who is greater than us in strength?” Have they not considered that God, Who created them, is greater than them in strength? Yet they rejected Our signs.

①⑥ So We sent a howling wind against them in days of ill fortune, that they might taste the punishment of disgrace in the life of this world; yet the punishment of the Hereafter is more disgraceful, and they will not be helped.

15–16 Here the tribe of °Ād displays the same attitude as the tribe of Quraysh, believing that their worldly power will somehow protect them from God’s Power. While this wind is also described as howling in 54:19 and as the barren wind in 51:41, 69:6 is more emphatic: And as for °Ād, they were destroyed by a howling, raging wind. When employed in the singular, “wind” conveys God’s Wrath and Punishment (also see 3:117; 10:22; 17:69; 22:31; 30:51; 33:9; 46:24). But the plural, “winds,” conveys the coming of God’s Mercy, as in 7:57: He it is Who sends forth the winds as glad tidings ahead of His Mercy (see also 25:48; 35:9). Regarding the wind that came upon the tribe of °Ād, the Prophet is reported to have said, “I have been helped by the east wind and the °Ād was destroyed by the west wind.”

①⑦ As for Thamūd, We guided them, but they preferred blindness to guidance; so the thunderbolt of humiliating punishment overtook them for that which they used to earn.

①⑧ And We saved those who believed and were reverent.

17–18 God guided the tribe of Thamūd by showing them the truth and making it clear when He sent them the prophet Šāliḥ. But they opposed and rejected him and slaughtered the she-camel that had been sent to them as a sign from God (IK); regarding the she-camel, see commentary on 7:73, 77–78; 11:64–65. In this way they willfully chose to ignore the sign God had sent them and thus preferred blindness. After three days (see 11:65) they were overcome by God’s Punishment. After the punishment, morning found them lying lifeless in their abode (7:78; 11:67). But as in the case of other prophets, God saved Šāliḥ and those who believed in his message from the punishment He had sent upon those who opposed him (see 11:66).

19 And on that Day the enemies of God are gathered unto the Fire and are marshaled in [ordered ranks], 19 On the Day when the enemies of God from all generations are gathered together before the Fire, they will be driven unto Hell (39:71) by those angels who are the keepers of Hell; see 39:71–72c. In a variant reading of the text, several commentators prefer “We gather” (nahshuru; Aj, Q, R) in place of are gathered (yuhsharu).

20 till, when they come upon it, their ears, their eyes, and their skins will bear witness against them for that which they used to do.

21 They will say to their skins, “Why did you bear witness against us?” They will reply, “God, Who makes all things speak, made us speak. He created you the first time, and unto Him shall you be returned.

20–21 This is one of a few passages asserting that human beings’ faculties or body parts will bear witness against them on the Day of Judgment (cf. 24:24; 36:65); that is, they will testify to the deeds that issued from them (R). Human beings are thus forced to bear witness against themselves that they were disbelievers (6:130; 7:37), and to each of them it is said, On this Day, your soul suffices as a reckoner against you (17:14). Some commentators understand v. 20 to mean that God will bestow upon each limb or organ a voice with which it will speak, or that each will exhibit states that indicate the actions committed with it (R). The reference to skins can be understood as an allusion to the sensation of touch (R), the hands and feet (IJ), or the private parts (Aj, IJ, Q, R, Ṭs); or it can simply mean the skins themselves (IJ).

According to several aḥādīth, the limbs and organs will speak after a man has denied some of the actions recorded for him: “Then he will say, ‘My Lord, didst Thou not promise me that Thou wouldst not wrong me.’ God will say, ‘Yea.’ The man will say, ‘I will not accept anyone other than myself as a witness.’ Then God will say, ‘Does it suffice to have Me and My angels, the noble scribes [see 80:15–16c], as witness?’ Then these words will be repeated several times, and a seal will be placed over [the man's] mouth [see 36:65c], and his limbs (arkān) will speak about what he used to do. Then [the man] will say, 'Away with you! For your sake did I argue'" (Aj, IK, Q, Ṭ).

The response of the limbs and organs indicates that they will not speak of their own volition, but only by God's Command (Aj). Their reference to God's creating human beings and returning them can be understood to mean that people should not be amazed that God made them speak, since His ability to create and resurrect human beings is even more amazing (Aj). According to some commentators, the response of the limbs and organs ends after made us speak (IJ, Ṭs), though most do not specify where the discourse ends.

22 You did not seek to conceal, lest your ears, your eyes, and your skins bear witness against you. But you thought that God knew not much of that which you did.

23 That thought which you thought about your Lord has destroyed you, such that you have come to be among the losers."

22–23 Their limbs and organs continue speaking to the disbelievers, chastising them for having had no shame regarding the sins they committed in this world. Some say that these verses mean that they were not being reverent (Ṭ). To conceal can thus be understood to mean refraining from bad deeds and in this sense concealing them from oneself (Q, Ṭ). Those who do not conceal or leave off bad deeds act as if they are oblivious to the fact that not a mote's weight evades Him in the heavens or on earth, nor smaller than that, nor larger, but that it is in a clear Book (34:3; cf. 6:59; 10:61; 27:75). Their underestimation of God's Omnipotence has thus led to their being cast in the Fire. Expanding upon this issue, al-Ṭabarī observes that it leaves hope for those who are disobedient but nonetheless know that they will be taken to account for their actions, since such persons do not underestimate God or think poorly of Him, but instead hope for His Forgiveness, as in a saying attributed to the Prophet, "God is in accord with the thought that His servant has of Him; if it is good, then good; but if it is bad, then bad" (Aj, Ṭ, Ṭs).

24 Then if they are patient, the Fire shall be an abode for them. And if they seek favor, they will not be granted favor.

24 Most commentators understand this verse to mean that evildoers will not be rewarded for patience in the Hereafter if they had not already turned to God (IJ, Ṭs), since God had provided them ample opportunity to repent and conduct themselves with virtue before the punishment came upon them (see 23:63–67; 40:84–85c; as well as the story of Pharaoh in 10:90–91). Alternately, this verse can be understood to mean that if they were patient with evil deeds during the life of this world, not seeking to avoid them or (at least) to conceal their own evil deeds, then the Fire will be their abode in the Hereafter (Q). Likewise, if they seek favor by asking that what they love be returned to them, it will not be returned to them, since they do not deserve that response (IJ), or by asking that God be pleased with them, God will not be pleased with them (Q, Ṭs), since their excuses will not be accepted (Ṭs).

25 We assigned to them companions, and they made that which is before them and that which is behind them seem fair to them. So the Word among the communities of jinn and men that have passed away before them came due for them. Truly they were lost.

25 The companions that God decrees for the disbelievers could be the human beings and jinn who lead them astray, both of whom are referred to as “satans” when they suggest evil to others, as in 6:112: Thus have We made for every prophet an enemy—satans from among mankind and jinn, who inspire each other with flowery discourse in order to deceive. God condemns these “satans” to one another, as in 43:36: And whosoever turns blindly away from the remembrance of the Compassionate, We assign to him a satan who is then a companion unto him (cf. 17:27). These companions then delude such human beings into preferring that which is before them of the adornments of this world, into working to attain such delusions, and into thinking that there will be no resurrection and no recompense in the Hereafter (Ṭ, Ṭs). Such people have thus become like communities before them for whom the Word—that is, God’s threat of an impending punishment—came due; regarding the concept of “the Word coming due,” see 10:33c; 36:7c.

26 And those who disbelieve will say, “Listen not to this Quran, but “speak dismissively of it, that haply you might prevail.”

26 The leaders among the Quraysh would tell people not to listen to the Quran. But speak dismissively renders the command wa ʾlghaw, which conveys the sense of “nullify” or “render ineffectual.” The injunction is therefore understood to mean that the Quraysh should make a ruckus, whistle, or speak loudly when the Prophet is reciting the Quran, so that the noise would prevail over his recitation and prevent others from hearing it (Ṭs). Such conduct with regard to the revelation is precisely the opposite of what is enjoined in 7:204: And when the Quran is recited, hearken unto it, and listen, that haply you may receive mercy. In 49:3 it is stated that those who lower their voices before the Messenger of God, they are the ones whose hearts God has tested for reverence. Theirs shall be forgiveness and a great reward.

27 We shall surely make those who disbelieve taste a severe punishment, and We shall surely requite them for the worst of that which they used to do.

28 That is the recompense of the enemies of God—the Fire. The Abode of Perpetuity shall be theirs therein, a recompense for their having rejected Our signs.

27–28 The enemies of God who seek to turn others away from the Quran will taste a severe punishment in this world and will also be requited in the Hereafter for the worst of that which they used to do (Ṭs). None of their good deeds, such as honoring guests and maintaining family ties, will avail them, because their actions have been rendered invalid by their disbelief (Aj), as in 47:28: They followed that which angers God and were averse to His good pleasure; so He made their deeds come to naught. In contrast, God is said to absolve the evil deeds of those who believe and perform righteous deeds and to recompense them according to the best of that which they used to do (29:7; cf. 9:121; 16:96–97; 39:35; 46:16). The Abode of Perpetuity refers here to the Fire itself (Ṭ, Ṭs, Z).

29 And those who disbelieve will say, “Our Lord, show us those who led us astray among jinn and men. Let us put them under our feet, that they might be among the lowliest.”

29 Those who were misguided by the companions that God decreed for them in v. 25 will seek vengeance against the satans among human beings and jinn whose deceptions led them to the Fire. Elsewhere the disbelievers say of those who led them astray, Our Lord! Give them a twofold punishment, and curse them with a great curse (33:68; cf. 7:38), and God responds by promising, For each of you it shall be doubled (7:38). Some say that in this verse those who led us astray among jinn and men refers specifically to Satan and Cain, as they began the practices of disbelief and murder, respectively (IJ, Z).

30 Truly those who say, “Our Lord is God,” then stand firm, the angels will descend upon them, [saying], “Fear not, nor grieve, and rejoice in the Garden that you have been promised.

30 Cf. 46:13. Stand firm translates istaqāmū, a word closely related to the common phrase “perform the prayer” (aqīmū ’l-ṣalāh) and to the central Quranic idea of the “straight path” (al-ṣirāṭ al-mustaqīm; see 1:7c). In this context, it is understood to mean those who continue to say that God is One and do not turn to other gods (IJ, IK, Q, Ṭs), those who remain obedient to God and maintain their religious obligations (IJ, Q, Ṭs), or those who remain sincere and continue to perform good deeds until death (IJ). These and other interpretations all indicate maintaining obedience toward God in belief, speech, and action (Q). It is reported that the Prophet recited this verse and then said, “Some people have said it [“Our Lord is God”], and then most of them disbelieved. So whosoever says it until he dies is among those who stand firm” (Ṭs). The angels descend upon such believers either at the moment of death, at the moment they are drawn from their graves (Aj, IJ, Ṭs), or at the Resurrection, when all human beings are gathered (Aj, Ṭs). It can also be understood as a reference to angels descending upon people in this world, inspiring them to do good, expanding their breasts, and helping them in religious matters (Aj). Fear not refers to what is to come, while nor grieve refers to what has passed (IJ, Ṭs). And rejoice in the Garden, for Blessed indeed is the reward of the workers [of righteousness]! (3:136; My).

31 We are your protectors in the life of this world and in the Hereafter; therein you shall have whatsoever your souls desire, and therein you shall have whatsoever you call for:

31 Protectors translates awliyā' (sing. walī), which can also mean “friends” or “allies.” In this context it means both that the angels take responsibility for the believers by guarding them and that they love them (IJ). That they continue to do so in the Hereafter means that they will watch over the believers until the believers enter Paradise (IJ, Ṭs), providing them comfort while they are in their graves and when the trumpet is blown (see 39:68c) and escorting them across the traverse that leads from the plain of Judgment to the Garden (IK). Drawing upon the multiple meanings of awliyā' and the various functions of angels in relation to human beings, al-Qushayrī and al-Maybudī provide several interpretations for this verse: In the life of this world through the realization of gnosis and in the Hereafter by obtaining forgiveness; in the life of this world through contentment with the Decree and in the Hereafter through the meeting in the Abode of Subsistence; in the life of this world through faith and in the Hereafter through forgiveness; in the life of this world through love and in the Hereafter through nearness.

For the idea that the believers will have whatsoever they desire in the Hereafter, see commentary on 56:20–24. That such protection is afforded those who say, “Our Lord is God,” then stand firm could also be an allusion to the salvific nature of all revealed religions, as in 2:62: Truly those who believe, and those who are Jews, and the Christians, and the Sabceans—whosoever believes in God and the Last Day and works righteousness shall have their reward with their Lord. No fear shall come upon them, nor shall they grieve (cf. 5:59).

32 a welcome from One Forgiving, Merciful.”

32 A welcome renders nuzul, which derives from the root nazala, meaning, “to descend,” and refers to what has been prepared for and offered to a guest. Here it could also be rendered “as a welcome,” meaning, “Therein you will have whatsoever your souls desire, as a welcome from God.” That it is from One Forgiving, Merciful means that it is not from the angels, but only from God (Ṭs) and alludes to the idea that were it not for God’s Mercy, none would attain His Forgiveness (Qu).

33 And who is more beautiful in speech than one who calls unto God, works righteousness, and says, “Truly I am among those who submit”?

33 The one who calls unto God is understood to be a reference to the Prophet (Qu, Ṭs, Z), to all the prophets (Qu), to those who call to prayer (IJ, IK, Ṭs, Ṭū, Z), to the leaders who call people to God (Qu), or to everyone who calls people to the good, works righteousness, and is among the submitters (IK, Z). For many Shiites, it is considered to refer to the Prophet and the Imams (Ṭs) or to the Prophet and his family (Ṭū). The combination of qualifications listed in this verse indicates that people cannot call to God unless they also act in accord with what they truly know, so that people will accept it (Ṭs). From a Sufi perspective, those who call unto God and work righteousness are those who seek no share for themselves in calling to God (Su) and “Those who know the path of God, then traverse upon the path of God, then call the people to God” (Qu).

34 The good deed and the evil deed are not equal. Repel by that which is better; then behold, the one between whom and thee there is enmity shall be as if he were a loyal, protecting friend.

34 Cf. 23:96: Repel evil by that which is better (see also 29:46). Better can also mean “more beautiful” or “more virtuous.” In the present verse, the absence of a direct object after repel opens the meaning to other possibilities: people should repel anger with patience (IJ), error with truth (Ṭs), ignorance with clemency (Ṭs), and the commission of evil with pardon (IJ, Ṭs); if others disobey God in how they treat an individual, then that person should obey God in how he or she treats them (IK). Such conduct can lead to reconciliation, love, and empathy (IK). To repel evil with good (cf. 13:27; 23:96; 28:54) does not mean to surrender before one’s enemy or to accept falsehood over truth, but instead to avoid reciprocating harm whenever such avoidance will not lead to greater evil. In this vein, a ḥadīth taken by many as a foundational principle of Islam states, “Let there be no harming and no reciprocating harm.” Another states, “Keep relations with those who cut them off with you, give to those who deny you, and ignore those who oppress you.” Repel with that which is better can also be understood to apply to oneself, meaning that one should repel one’s own base tendencies toward vice by practicing virtue.

35 Yet none shall receive it, save those who are patient; and none shall receive it, save those who possess great fortune.

35 The ability to repel evil with good is attained only by those who conceal their anger and bear what harm is done to them with patience (Ṭs). A great share refers to one of good fortune (IJ), an abundance of intellect and vision (Ṭs), or a high degree of virtue, spiritual strength, and inner purity (R). Great fortune may also be understood as a reference to Paradise (IJ, Ṭ, Ṭs).

36 And should a temptation from Satan provoke thee, seek refuge in God. Truly He is the Hearing, the Knowing.

36 Cf. 7:200; 23:97–98. This verse repeats a general injunction stated in various ways in the Quran. In this context it also implies that if one is enticed to anger and thus to requite evil in a manner that is not better or “more virtuous” than the action of which one has been the object, one should seek refuge in God (Ṭ); see 7:200c.

37 Among His signs are the night and the day, the sun and the moon. Prostrate not unto the sun, nor unto the moon. Prostrate unto God, Who created them, if it is He Whom you worship.

37 This is one of many verses to mention the signs that can be found in the night and the day, and the movement of the sun and the moon, as in 31:29: Hast thou not considered that God makes the night pass into the day and makes the day pass into the night, and that He made the sun and the moon subservient (cf. 16:12; 35:13; 39:5); see commentary on 36:37–40. Outwardly, the command to prostrate only to God is clear, but it can also be understood as an injunction to overcome the baser self, which turns toward all kinds of worldly distractions at the expense of remembering God (Aj, Q).

38 And if they wax arrogant, then those who are with thy Lord glorify Him night and day, and they never weary.

38 Whether the disbelievers prostrate to God or not makes no difference to God or to those who worship God; it is only to the detriment of those who fail to do so (see 41:46c). Those who are with thy Lord is understood by most commentators as a reference to the angels (Aj, IJ, IK, Ṭ, Ṭs), but it can also mean all human beings who are near to God and honored by Him (Z) and could thus be understood as a reference to the foremost among them (K), who are said to be the ones brought nigh (56:11). The angels never weary of worshipping, since they never disobey God in what He commands of them (66:6); see also 21:19–20c. The foremost among human beings never weary, because they worship God devoid of veils, remembering Him at all times (K).

Together with the previous verse, this is one of fifteen passages after which one should prostrate when reciting the Quran; see 19:58c. In this instance, there is debate as to whether one should prostrate at the end of v. 37 or at the end of v. 38 (IJ, Ṭs).

39 Among His signs is that thou seest the earth diminished; then, when We send down water upon it, it quivers and swells. He Who gives it life is surely the One Who gives life to the dead. Truly He is Powerful over all things.

39 This is one of several verses to invoke God's ability to revive barren land as an argument for His ability to resurrect human beings (cf. 7:57; 16:65; 22:5; 25:48–89; 29:63; 30:19, 24, 50; 35:9; 36:33; 43:11; 45:5; 50:9–11). The use of this metaphor can also be seen as a reference to the state of the soul that has become desiccated through heedlessness and hardened by ignorance. Yet when the water of life or the wine of Divine Love is poured upon it, it stirs and rises and is revived by the remembrance of God and knowledge of Him (Aj). Similarly, al-Qushayrī sees this verse as a metaphor for the condition of a heart to which God draws near when it is humbled by the awareness of the sins that afflict it and then exhibits the blessings of regret and repentance.

40 Truly those who deviate with regard to Our signs are not hidden from Us. Is one who is cast in the Fire better, or one who comes in security on the Day of Resurrection? Do what you will; truly He sees whatsoever you do.

40 Deviate translates ilḥād, which literally means “to incline toward” or “to refrain from” (Q) and is here understood to mean altering the words of the Quran and putting them in an improper order (IJ, IK, Q, Ṭs, Z); making clamor and whistling when the Quran is recited (IJ, Ṭs), as in v. 26 (Q); being obstinate (IJ, IK, Q); denying God’s signs (IJ, Q); inclining away from belief in them (IJ, Ṭs); or inclining away from the truth and what points to it (Q). Though many attempt to identify one who is cast in the Fire with certain of the Prophet’s enemies, especially Abū Jahl, and one who comes in security with the Prophet or one of his Companions (IJ, Q, Ṭs), the meaning of the sentence is also considered more general (IJ, Ṭs). In its immediate context, one who is cast in the Fire is best understood as referring back to those who deviate with regard to Our signs and more broadly to the contrast between the believer and the disbeliever (Ṭs). Do what you will is a threat, meaning that since He sees whatsoever you do (cf. 2:110, 233, 237, 265; 3:156; 8:72; 11:112; 33:9; 48:24; 49:18; 57:4; 60:3; 64:2), all people will be requited for their evil deeds (IK, Q).

41 Truly those who disbelieve in the Reminder when it comes unto them [. . .]. And truly it is a mighty Book.

42 Falsehood comes not upon it from before it or from behind it; a revelation from One Wise, Praised.

41–42 Those who disbelieve in the Reminder are those who disbelieve in the Quran (IJ, IK, Q, Ṭs, Z). The elided phrase indicated by the ellipsis in this verse is understood to be “are punished” (Q, Ṭs), “are destroyed” (Bḍ, Q), “are obstinate” (Bḍ), or “are recompensed for their disbelief” (IJ). It could also be understood as a form of emphasis, in which case the elided phrase would be “disbelieve” (IJ). Others say that the phrase is completed by the last part of v. 44: Such are called from a place far off (IJ, Q, Ṭs).

Mighty renders ʿAzīz, which is also one of the Names of God, meaning Powerful, Overwhelming, and without peer (R). In relation to the Quran, it is understood to indicate that the Quran is protected by God from corruption by Satan or any other being (IJ, IK), that it is honored by God (IJ), and that no one can produce its like (IJ, IK, Ṭs). V. 42 can then be understood as a confirmation that nothing can corrupt the Quran (IJ, IK, Ṭs), as in 15:9: Truly it is We Who have sent down the Reminder, and surely We are its Preserver (R). Alternately, that falsehood comes not upon it from before it indicates that none of the scriptures before it contradicts it, while from behind it, which can also mean “after it,” indicates that no revelation will come after it that would contradict or abrogate it (Q, R, Ṭs).

V. 42 also represents one of several responses to the challenges posed by the Quran’s detractors in order to convince them of its Divine Origin, as in 18:1: Praise be to God, Who sent down the Book unto His servant, and placed no crookedness therein; and 4:82: Had it been from other than God, they would surely have found much discrepancy therein. Elsewhere the Quran challenges those who disbelieve to produce a single sūrah like it (see 2:23; 10:38) or ten sūrahs like it (11:13), suggesting that they will be unable to do so.

④ Naught has been said unto thee save that which has been said unto the messengers before thee. Truly thy Lord is Possessed of Forgiveness and Possessed of a Painful Retribution.

43 In the context of the previous verses, this verse is understood to mean that the message sent to the Prophet is in principle the same as that sent to the prophets before him (IJ, Ṭs), as in 87:18–19, which says of the Quranic teachings, Truly this is in the scriptures of old, the scriptures of Abraham and Moses. Nonetheless, the particular laws with which each prophet is sent are different, as in 5:48: For each among you We have appointed a law and a way. And had God willed, He would have made you one community, but [He willed otherwise], that He might try you in that which He has given you; see the essay “The Quranic View of Sacred History and Other Religions.”

The most widespread reading of this verse is that the insults and denials that have been hurled at the Prophet are no different from those employed against prophets before him (IJ, IK, Q, R, Ṭs). This reading would fit better with the second half of the verse, meaning that God is then Possessed of Forgiveness for those who repent for what they have said to the messengers, but Possessed of a Painful Retribution for those who do not.

④ Had We made it a Quran in a foreign tongue, they would say, “If only its signs were expounded. What! A foreign tongue and an Arab [messenger]?” Say, “It is a guidance and a healing for those who believe, and those who do not believe have a deafness in their ears, and it is a blindness for them. Such are called from a place far off.”

44 In this context, Quran should be understood in accord with its lexical definition, “recitation,” meaning, “If We had recited this revelation in a language other than Arabic, people would reject it saying ‘What! Not in Arabic and from an Arab!’ or ‘A foreign book and an Arab prophet!’” (IK, Ṭs), as in 26:198–99: And had We sent it down upon some non-Arab, and he recited it unto them, they would not have believed in it. But they have a revelation in their own language from a person of their own kind and thus have no excuse for rejecting it (see also 14:4). Yet it is still not clear to them, for although they hear the Quran, they are spiritually deaf and thus do not understand (cf. 2:171; 5:71; 6:25, 39; 8:22; 10:42; 17:46; 18:57; 21:45; 31:7; 41:5; 47:23). Thus they are not able to benefit from the “healing” that the revelation is said to contain, as in 17:82: And We send down of the Quran that which is a cure and a mercy for the believers. And it increases the wrongdoers in naught but loss (see also 10:57). That they are called from a place far off means a place far away from their hearts (IK, Ṭ), so that when one addresses them directly, it is as if one is calling them from afar (IK, Ṭs). In this sense they are like cattle (R), as in 25:44: Or do you suppose that most of them hear or understand? Truly they are but as cattle. Nay, they are further astray from the way (see also 7:179c).

④ Indeed, We gave Moses the Book; then difference arose concerning it. And were it not for a Word that had already gone forth from thy Lord, judgment would have been made between them. Yet truly they are confounded by doubt regarding it.

45 Cf. 11:110. The example of Moses and the manner in which his people became divided is cited by way of consolation for the Prophet (IJ, Ṭs), as if God is saying to the Prophet, Be patient, as the resolute among the messengers were patient (46:35; IK); see 11:110–11c. If not for a Word that had preceded from thy Lord means that, had God not promised to grant the disbelievers respite until an appointed term, judgment would have been made at the moment that difference arose, and they would have had no opportunity to repent (see 3:19c; 10:19; 42:14). Truly they are confounded by doubt means that their rejection of the Prophet and the Quran does not derive from any form of wisdom or insight; rather, they speak without examining God's Word (IK, T).

④⑥ Whosoever works righteousness, it is for his own soul. And whosoever commits evil, it is to the detriment thereof. It is not for thy Lord to wrong His servants.

46 Whosoever works righteousness in obedience to God during the life of this world will receive the reward for it in the Hereafter, while whosoever commits evil and is thus disobedient will receive a painful punishment (T); cf. 45:15. That it is not for thy Lord to wrong His servants (cf. 3:182; 8:51; 22:10; 50:29) reiterates a major theme of the Quran. On the one hand, it means that God will not punish individuals for things they have not done. On the other hand, it means that God will not punish a people unless He has sent them a messenger to remind them (IK). According to the Quran, every human community has been sent a warner (see 16:36), and thus its members will be held accountable for heeding or rejecting the warning; see 67:9c.

④⑦ Unto Him is knowledge of the Hour referred. No fruits come forth from their sheaths, nor does any female bear or bring forth, save by His Knowledge. And on the Day when He will call unto them, "Where are My partners?" they will say, "We admit unto Thee that none among us bears witness."

47 That knowledge of the Hour, or the end of time, lies only with God is mentioned in several verses (see 7:187; 31:34; 33:63; 43:85; 67:25–26; 79:42–46); thus none save He shall manifest it at its proper time (7:187). This exclusion applies to the Prophet as well, who said to the Archangel Gabriel when asked of the Hour, "The one questioned about it knows no more than the questioner" (IK). The allusion to the exclusivity of such knowledge in this verse can be seen as an answer to one who asks when the rewards and punishments alluded to in v. 46 will come to pass

(R). Just as only God knows the ends of all things, so too God alone knows the beginnings of all things, and only He has certain knowledge of future events in this world (cf. 6:59; 13:8; 35:11). Those who admit are either the idolaters, who now profess that none of them bear witness to the partners they had once ascribed to God (IJ, IK, R, Ṭ; cf. 6:23), or the idols and false deities, who now declare that none of them attests to the partnership that the idolaters had attributed to them (IJ, R; cf. 16:86).

④⑧ That which they used to call upon before will forsake them, and they will know for certain that they have no refuge.

48 The partners the disbelievers ascribe to God in this life will forsake them or fail them in the Hereafter (see also 6:22–24, 94; 7:37, 53; 10:30; 11:21; 14:22; 16:86–87; 28:75; 40:73–74c). Upon this realization, the idolaters will say, They have forsaken us. Nay, but we were not calling upon aught before (40:74). Thus they know for certain that those whom they thought they could turn to for help and protection have no power and realize that they themselves have no refuge (cf. 18:53).

④⑨ Man wearies not of supplicating for good, and if evil befalls him, he is despondent, despairing.

⑤⑩ And if We make him taste some mercy from Us after hardship has befallen him, surely he will say, “This is mine; I think not that the Hour will come. If I am returned unto my Lord, surely with Him shall I have that which is most beautiful.” So We shall inform those who disbelieved of that which they have done, and We shall cause them to taste of a grave punishment.

49–50 The attitudes of human beings toward God are often conditioned by their relative circumstances rather than by true belief, as in 70:19–21: Truly man was created anxious; when evil befalls him, fretful; and when good befalls him, begrudging (cf. 11:9–10; 17:83; 22:11). Man wearies not of asking God for wealth, health, and other blessings (IJ, IK, Ṭ), meaning there is no amount that will sate them so that they cease asking for more (R). Conversely, there is no end to the despair they feel when afflicted with trials and privations. Although some view v. 49 as a reference to disbelievers (IJ, Ṭ), it can also be understood as a more general reflection upon the frailty of the human condition, in which people vacillate between hope and despair, from one state to the other (R). When individuals of this disposition receive a blessing or mercy from God, they say, This is mine, meaning that it is something they feel they deserve (IJ, IK, R) because God is pleased with them (Ṭ), as when one says, I was only given it because of knowledge (39:49); or else they think that there will be no end to what they will be given (R). Such an attitude reveals that they do not ultimately believe in the Hour, the Judgment, and the Reckoning before God. Believing that they deserve what they have received from God, such individuals also believe that if there is in fact a return to God, they will be among those who are rewarded, just as they were rewarded in this life (IJ, R). But when the Hour does come, God will “inform” them of the true nature of their actions in this life; see also 5:14, 105; 6:60, 108, 159; 9:94, 105; 10:23; 24:64; 29:8; 31:15, 23; 39:7; 58:6–7; 62:8; 64:7; 75:13.

51 And when We bless man, he turns away and withdraws. Yet when evil befalls him, he is full of prolonged supplication.

51 Human beings turn away and withdraw because they consider themselves self-sufficient, beyond the need for God, as in 96:6–7: Nay, truly man is rebellious in that he considers himself beyond need. But when misfortune befalls them, they nonetheless take recourse to God. Some understand prolonged supplication to indicate supplication that is long on words but short on meaning (IK), while others understand it to mean that the disbelievers genuinely beseech God (Q, Ṭs), but that they only acknowledge God when afflicted by trial and not when blessed with ease (Q).

52 Say, “What think you, if it is from God, yet you disbelieve in it? Who is more astray than one in extreme schism?”

52 Cf. 46:10. This command to the Prophet to challenge the people of Makkah regarding their refusal to accept the Quran can be seen as a response to their claims in v. 5: Our hearts are under coverings from that to which you call us, and in our ears there is deafness, and between us and you there is a veil. So do [as you will]; we shall do [as we will] (R). Schism renders shiqāq (also in 2:137, 176; 22:53; 38:2), which conveys a sense of fracture or separation together with a sense of defiance and indicates that they are far from God in both conduct and character (R).

53 We shall show them Our signs upon the horizons and within themselves till it becomes clear to them that it is the truth. Does it not suffice that thy Lord is Witness over all things?

53 This verse is among the most famous of the Quran as it provides a succinct summation of the broad Quranic theme of God’s displaying His signs in various ways to reveal the truth and to guide human beings. In the immediate context, many understand Our signs upon the horizons as a reference to the conquering of the lands surrounding Makkah (R) or the various regions to which Islam eventually spread (IJ, Q, Ṭ), and those within themselves, or “among themselves,” as a reference to the conquest of Makkah itself (Q, R, Ṭ) or to the Prophet’s victory at the Battle of Badr (IJ). Others understand upon the horizons as a reference to God’s victories over other peoples, and within themselves as a reference to the defeat of the Makkans at the Battle of Badr (IJ, Q). Alternately, upon the horizons could mean the destruction of other civilizations (Q) or God’s withholding rain from the earth (IJ), and within themselves could mean the afflictions and illnesses people experience in their own bodies (IJ, Q). Others say that signs upon the horizons refers to celestial bodies as well as the night and the day and the signs of the created order referred to throughout the Quran, and those within themselves refers to the many phases of human life (Q, R), from conception, through gestation, to birth, maturation, and death, as in 22:5 and 23:13–14, or to the wisdom behind the composition of human beings (Q) and the various natures and inclinations they exhibit (IK). Still others propose that signs upon the horizons refers only to the celestial bodies that are signs in the sky, while the signs within or among themselves refer to the signs upon the earth (IJ, Q).

The antecedent of the pronoun it (hu) in it is the truth is ambiguous and is variously understood as a reference to the Quran (IJ, Q), the religion of Islam (Q), everything to which the Prophet calls the people (IJ), or the true prophethood of Muhammad (Q). Alternately, it could be seen as a reference to an unstated “everything,” meaning all of creation, both macrocosmic and microcosmic, or to God, in which case it would be rendered “that He is the Truth.” In this regard, Sufis understand this verse as a reference to the Self-Manifestation (zuhūr) or Self-Disclosure (tajallī) of God in all things. As the early Sufi Abū Bakr al-Wāsiṭī (d. 320/932) is reported to have said, “He is manifest in everything through that of it which He makes manifest, and His making things manifest is His Own manifestation through them. So if one scrutinizes them, one does not find [anything] other than God” (Su). This cosmological understanding is developed extensively in the school of Ibn ʿArabī, who often cites this verse. In establishing the correspondence between the microcosm, the macrocosm, and the verses of the Quran, he understands Our signs upon the horizons as a reference to everything outside of the human being, thus the entire cosmos, and those within themselves as a reference to all that is within the human being, a microcosm in which are brought together all of the realities of the cosmos. Concerning this reality, Ibn ʿArabī writes, “When we come to understand these two affairs together, we come to know Him and it becomes clear to us that ‘He is the Truth.’” (Futūḥāt, II 298). From this perspective, does it not suffice that thy Lord is Witness over all things (cf. 4:33; 5:117; 22:17; 33:55; 34:47; 58:6; 85:9) refers to God’s bearing witness to His own Self-Disclosure and Self-Manifestation within each existent thing (Futūḥāt, II 151.5). In this sense, the present verse echoes 51:20–21: And upon the earth are signs for those possessing certainty, and within your souls. Do you not then behold?

54 Behold! They are in doubt regarding the meeting with their Lord. Behold! Truly He encompasses all things.

54 That people doubt the meeting with God refers in general to their denial of Resurrection and Judgment and in other verses is associated with disbelieving or rejecting God’s signs; see 10:7; 18:105; 29:23; 30:16. In this vein, the present verse can be seen as a reference to those who are veiled from recognizing the signs on the horizons and within themselves due to the fact that they are veiled from the Creator by that which is created (K). Most understand God’s encompassing all things as a reference to God’s Power and Knowledge (IK, Q, R), but, seen in light of the other verses, it may refer to God’s Knowledge and Mercy, the only two Attributes said to encompass all things, as when the angels say, Our Lord, Thou dost encompass all things in Mercy and Knowledge (40:7; cf. 6:80; 7:89, 156; 20:98; 65:12). Viewed in relation to the interpretation of v. 53 offered by Ibn ʿArabī, God’s encompassing all things would refer to the idea that nothing would exist, were it not for His Reality, by which every existent thing is made manifest and then returns unto Him, as in 28:88: All things perish, save His Face; and 55:26–27: All upon it passes away. And there remains the Face of thy Lord, Possessed of Majesty and Bounty (K). As al-Kāshānī writes, “Nothing escapes His Encompassing; otherwise it would not exist, since the true nature of everything is the reality of His Knowledge and His Being through it, and His Knowledge is the reality of His Self (Dhāt) and His Self is the reality of His Being. So nothing escapes His Encompassing, since nothing has being, or reality, or self other than Him” (K).

Counsel

al-Shūrā

Al-Shūrā is considered to be a Makkan sūrah revealed directly after the previous sūrah, Fuṣṣilat (JJ), although some maintain that vv. 23–26 are from the Madinan period (Āl, IJ, Ṭs), since they are understood as a reference to the Helpers (Anṣār) of Madinah. Some add v. 27 to the list of Madinan verses when v. 27 is understood as a reference to the poorest members of the nascent Muslim community in Madinah, known as the People of the Veranda (Āl; see 2:273c). Others maintain that vv. 23–24 and vv. 39–41 are from the Madinan period (Āl, IJ) or that only vv. 38–40 are Madinan (Ṭs). Al-Shūrā takes its name from v. 38, which describes their affair being counsel among them as a characteristic of the believers; it is also known by its first two verses, ḥā Mīm ʿAyn Sīn Qāf (Āl, Ṭs).

The sūrah is framed by references to the continuity of Divine revelations (v. 3 and vv. 51–52), each of which is followed by an assertion of God’s Omnipotence (v. 4 and v. 53). The continuity between the teachings of Islam and previous religions is also addressed in v. 7 and vv. 13–15. This discourse culminates in vv. 51–52, which are understood as a reference to the various modes by which God delivers revelation as well as an affirmation that the Prophet has received revelation in the same manner as did previous prophets. In relation to the discussion of revelation, this sūrah emphasizes God’s function as the Provider and Sustainer unto Whom belong the keys of the heavens and the earth (v. 12) and Who provides as He wills in accord with His Wisdom (vv. 11–12, 19–20, 26–29, 32–34, 49–50), a characteristic that applies to the bestowal of wealth, offspring, and revelation. Nonetheless, most human beings seek sustenance elsewhere, taking protectors apart from Him (vv. 6, 9), arguing about God (vv. 16–19), disputing the Hour (v. 18), and disputing His signs (v. 35). In this vein, the sūrah outlines the contrast between those who seek the harvest of this world and those who seek the harvest of the Hereafter (v. 20; cf. vv. 22, 36–39) and emphasizes that no one has any protector beyond or apart from God (vv. 8–9, 29, 44, 46).

In the Name of God, the Compassionate, the Merciful

① Hā. Mīm. ② °Ayn. Sīn. Qāf. ③ Thus does He reveal unto thee and unto those before thee—God, the Mighty, the Wise. ④ Unto Him belongs whatsoever is in the heavens and whatsoever is on the earth, and He is the Exalted, the Magnificent. ⑤ The heavens are well-nigh rent asunder from above, while the angels hymn the praise of their Lord and seek forgiveness for those on earth. Yea! Truly God is the Forgiving, the Merciful. ⑥ As for those who take protectors apart from Him, God is Keeper over them, and thou art not a guardian over them. ⑦ Thus have We revealed unto thee an Arabic Quran that thou mayest warn the Mother of Cities and those around it, and that thou mayest warn of the Day of Gathering in which there is no doubt. A group shall be in the Garden and a group shall be in the Blaze. ⑧ Had God willed, He would have made them all one community. But He causes whomsoever He will to enter into His Mercy. And the wrongdoers have no protector and no helper. ⑨ Or have they taken protectors apart from Him? Yet God, He is the Protector; He gives life to the dead; and He is Powerful over all things. ⑩ As for anything wherein you differ, judgment thereof lies with God. That is God, my Lord. In Him do I trust and unto Him do I turn. ⑪ The Originator of the heavens and the earth, He has appointed for you mates from among yourselves, and has appointed mates also among the cattle. He multiplies you thereby; naught is like unto Him, yet He is the Hearer, the Seer. ⑫ Unto Him belong the keys of the heavens and the earth. He outspreads and straitens provision for whomsoever He will. Truly He is Knower of all things. ⑬ He has prescribed for you as religion that which He enjoined upon Noah, and that which We revealed unto thee, and that which We enjoined upon Abraham, Moses, and Jesus, that you uphold religion and not become divided therein. Grievous for the idolaters is that to which thou callest them. God chooses for Himself whomsoever He will and guides unto Himself whosoever turns in repentance. ⑭ They did not become divided till after knowledge had come unto them, out of envy among themselves. And were it not for a Word that had preceded from thy Lord unto a term appointed, judgment would have been made between them. Yet truly those who were bequeathed the Book after them are indeed confounded by doubt regarding it. ⑮ Therefore, summon, and stand firm as thou hast been commanded. Follow not their caprices, and say, “I believe in that which God has sent down as a Book, and I have been commanded to establish justice among you. God is our Lord and your Lord. Unto us our deeds, and unto you your deeds; there is no argument between us and you. God will gather us together and unto Him is the journey’s end.” ⑯ As for those who argue about God after having responded to Him, their argument is baseless in the eyes of their Lord. Upon them shall be wrath, and theirs shall be a severe punishment. ⑰ God it is Who sent down the Book in truth, and the Balance. And what will apprise thee? Perhaps the Hour is nigh? ⑱ Those who believe not in it seek to hasten it, and those who believe are wary of it and know that it is the truth. Are not those who dispute the Hour far astray? ⑲ God is kind unto His servants; He provides for whomsoever He will, and He is the Strong, the Mighty. ⑳ Whosoever desires the harvest of the Hereafter, We shall increase for him his harvest. And whosoever desires the harvest of this world, We shall give him some thereof, but he will have no share in the Hereafter. ㉑ Or have they partners who have prescribed for them as religion that which God did not permit? Were it not for the Word of Division, judgment would have been made between them. And truly the wrongdoers shall have a painful punishment. ㉒ Thou seest the wrongdoers wary of that which they have earned; for it will fall upon them. And those who believe and perform righteous deeds shall be in flowering meadows of the Gardens. With their Lord they shall have whatsoever they will. That is the great bounty. ²³ This is that whereof God gives glad tidings to His servants, those who believe and perform righteous deeds. Say, “I ask not of you any reward for it, save affection among kinsfolk.” And whosoever accomplishes a good deed, We shall increase him in goodness thereby. Truly God is Forgiving, Thankful. ²⁴ Or do they say, “He has fabricated a lie against God?” If God willed, He would put a seal upon thy heart. God wipes out falsehood and verifies the truth through His Words. Truly He knows what lies within breasts. ²⁵ He it is Who accepts repentance from His servants and pardons evil deeds. And He knows whatsoever you do. ²⁶ He responds to those who believe and perform righteous deeds, and will increase them from His Bounty. Yet as for the disbelievers, theirs shall be a severe punishment. ²⁷ Had God outspread His provision for His servants, they would have behaved tyrannically upon the earth. But He sends down whatsoever He will according to a measure. Verily of His servants He is Aware, Seeing. ²⁸ He it is Who sends down the rain after they have despaired and spreads forth His Mercy. And He is the Protector, the Praised. ²⁹ And among His signs is the creation of the heavens and the earth and all moving creatures that He has scattered therein, and He is able to gather them together whensoever He will. ³⁰ Whatsoever misfortune befalls you is because of that which your hands have earned; and He pardons much. ³¹ You thwart not on earth, and you have no protector or helper apart from God. ³² Among His signs are the ships upon the sea like mountains; ³³ if He so wills, He stills the wind, and they lie motionless upon its surface. Truly in that are signs for all who are patient, thankful. ³⁴ Or He causes them to perish for that which they have earned—and He pardons much— ³⁵ and so that those who dispute concerning Our signs will know that they have no refuge. ³⁶ Whatsoever you have been given, it is the enjoyment of the life of this world, and that which lies with God is better and more lasting for those who believe and trust in their Lord, ³⁷ who shun grave sins and indecencies and who when they are angry, they forgive, ³⁸ who respond to their Lord and perform the prayer, their affair being counsel among them, who spend from that which We have provided them, ³⁹ and who, when tyranny befalls them, they defend themselves. ④⑩ The recompense of an evil is an evil like unto it. Yet whosoever pardons and sets matters aright, his reward is with God. Truly He loves not the wrongdoers. ④⑪ And whosoever defends himself after having been wronged, for such there is no way against them. ④⑫ There is only a way against those who wrong people and behave tyrannically upon the earth without right. For them, there shall be a painful punishment. ④⑬ And whosoever is patient and forgives, that is indeed a course worthy of resolve. ④⑭ And whomsoever God leads astray has no protector beyond Him. Thou shalt see the wrongdoers, when they see the punishment, saying, "Is there any way of return?" ④⑮ And thou shalt see them exposed to it, diminished through abasement, looking furtively. And those who believe will say, "Truly the losers are those who have lost themselves and their families on the Day of Resurrection." Behold! Truly, the wrongdoers are in lasting punishment. ④⑯ They have no protectors to help them apart from God. And whomsoever God leads astray, no way has he. ④⑰ Respond to your Lord before there comes a day from God that none can repel. You will have no refuge that Day; nor shall you have any denial. ④⑱ And if they turn away, We sent thee not as a keeper over them. Naught is incumbent upon thee, save the proclamation. Truly when We cause man to taste mercy from Us, he rejoices in it. Yet if an evil befalls them because of that which their hands have sent forth, truly man is ungrateful. ④⑲ Unto God belongs sovereignty over the heavens and the earth; He creates whatsoever He will, bestowing females upon whomsoever He will, and bestowing males upon whomsoever He will, ④⑳ or He couples males and females and causes whomsoever He will to be barren. Truly He is Knowing, Powerful. ㉑ It is not for any human being that God should speak unto him, save by revelation, or from behind a veil, or that He should send a messenger in order to reveal what He will by His Leave. Truly He is Exalted, Wise. ㉒ Thus have We revealed unto thee a Spirit from Our Command. Thou knewest not what scripture was, nor faith. But We made it a light whereby We guide whomsoever We will among Our servants. Truly thou dost guide unto a straight path, ㉓ the path of God, unto Whom belongs whatsoever is in the heavens and whatsoever is on the earth. Behold! All affairs are journeying unto God.

1 Al-Shūrā is the third in a series of seven sūrahs that open with the Arabic letters ḥā° and mīm and are referred to collectively as the Ḥawāmīm. The letters ḥā° and mīm are among the separated letters (al-muqattaʿāt) that are found at the beginning of twenty-nine sūrahs and whose meaning is considered by most commentators to be known only to God; see 2:1c. For some possible meanings of the letters ḥā° and mīm, see 40:1c.

② ʿAyn. Sīn. Qāf.

2 This is the only one of the ḥā mīm sūrahs to have additional separated letters. Some say they were added to make this sūrah distinct, since it is the only ḥā mīm sūrah that does not begin with a declaration regarding the Quran; it begins instead with an allusion to what has been revealed to all prophets (Ṭs). Others say that the letters here represent an oath that God takes upon His Names; that they are simply a reference to certain of His Attributes (IJ), with the ʿayn referring to God’s Knowledge (ʿilm), the sīn to His Resplendence (sanāʾ), and the qāf to His Power (qudrah; IJ); or that they refer, respectively, to the Divine Names the Mighty (al-ʿAzīz), the Peace (al-Salām), and the Powerful (al-Qādir; IJ). Others propose that ʿAyn Sīn Qāf is a name for the Quran (IJ, Ṭs).

③ Thus does He reveal unto thee and unto those before thee—God, the Mighty, the Wise.

3 Just as God revealed His Words to Muhammad, so too did He reveal them to the prophets before him (IJ, IK, Ṭs). This verse could also refer to the contents of this sūrah as something all prophets have received (IJ, Ṭs) or more generally to God’s delivering reports from the realm of the Unseen to all prophets (IJ, Ṭs). The word thus could be understood as a reference to the manner in which God reveals, meaning, “In this way do We reveal unto thee” (IJ), an interpretation that harmonizes well with the final verses of the sūrah (vv. 51–53) which speak of the ways in which God communicates with human beings. When combined with the Name the Mighty, the Divine Name the Wise (al-ḥakīm) can also be understood to mean “the Determiner” (al-Muḥkim; Ṭs).

④ Unto Him belongs whatsoever is in the heavens and whatsoever is on the earth, and He is the Exalted, the Magnificent.

4 The first phrase of this verse is repeated throughout the Quran in various iterations (see, e.g., 2:255, 284; 3:109, 129; 4:126, 131–32; 171; 10:68; 22:64; 53:31).

⑤ The heavens are well-nigh rent asunder from above, while the angels hymn the praise of their Lord and seek forgiveness for those on earth. Yea! Truly God is the Forgiving, the Merciful.

5 That the heavens are well-nigh rent asunder may mean that they are separated from the greatness of what is above them (Ṭs), meaning the angels and the higher heavens, or from the Might and Greatness of God Himself (IJ, IK, Ṭ, Z). Viewed in light of a similar passage—The heavens are well-nigh rent thereby, and the earth split asunder, and the mountains made to come crashing down, that they should claim for the Compassionate a child (19:90–91)—this verse is also interpreted by some to mean that the heavens are nearly rent asunder because of the claim by the idolaters that God has offspring (IJ, Ṭs, Z). The rending asunder of the skies or heavens is referred to in several verses as one of the signs of the end of time: see 25:25; 55:37; 69:16c; 73:18; 82:1; 84:1. Regarding the angels hymning the praises of God and seeking forgiveness for those on the earth, see 40:7c.

⑥ As for those who take protectors apart from Him, God is Keeper over them, and thou art not a guardian over them.

6 Regarding those who take protectors apart from God, see also 7:3, 30; 29:41c; 39:3; 45:10. That God is Keeper over the idolaters means that He witnesses them, keeps a full account of their deeds, and will requite them in full (IK). That the Prophet is not a guardian over them (cf. 6:66, 107; 10:108; 17:54; 39:41) nor a keeper over them (cf. 4:80; 6:104; 11:86; 42:48) means that he has not been granted the authority to make them believers and that it is not his place to record their deeds (Ṭs), as he has only been sent as a warner (IK, Ṭs). In this respect, there is an aspect of consolation for the Prophet in this verse (Ṭs). That prophets are only responsible for proclaiming the message is emphasized in many passages (see, e.g., 3:20; 5:92, 99; 13:40; 16:35, 82; 24:54; 29:18; 36:17; 64:12).

⑦ Thus have We revealed unto thee an Arabic Quran that thou mayest warn the Mother of Cities and those around it, and that thou mayest warn of the Day of Gathering in which there is no doubt. A group shall be in the Garden and a group shall be in the Blaze.

7 Similar to v. 3, just as previous prophets were given revelations in the language of their respective peoples, so too was the Prophet Muhammad given revelation in the form of an Arabic Quran (cf. 12:2; 16:103; 20:113; 26:195; 39:28; 41:3; 43:3; Q, Ṭs), which should here be understood in its literal sense as an “Arabic recitation”; see 39:28c. Makkah is the Mother of Cities, a name understood to mean that it is nobler than all other cities (IK). In this regard, the Prophet is reported to have addressed Makkah saying, “By God! Thou art the best land of God, the most beloved land of God. Were it not for the fact that I was driven from thee, I would never have left thee” (IK). Regarding the nobility of Makkah, see commentary on 6:92; 27:91; 90:1–2. The Day of Gathering (cf. 64:9) refers to the Day of Resurrection, when all human beings of all generations and all jinn will be gathered, each community behind its prophet (see 17:71c), on a single open, barren plain for judgment (see, e.g., 3:25; 4:87; 6:128; 18:47; 20:106; 79:14); see also 64:9c.

⑧ Had God willed, He would have made them all one community. But He causes whomsoever He will to enter into His Mercy. And the wrongdoers have no protector and no helper.

8 Rather than sending these multiple revelations in various languages, God could have made all human beings one community following one religion and could have gathered them all to guidance (6:35; IJ, T); see also 2:213c. But God made people into different communities, that He might try them in that which He has given them (5:48); see 5:48c; 11:118–19c; 16:93c. From one perspective, this verse alludes to God’s providing various revelations so that people might vie with one another in good deeds (5:48). From another perspective, it could be said that God did not join all people in a single religion and save all from the punishment, since this would have removed the charge of moral and legal responsibility (taklīf) that can only be confirmed by also giving human beings choice (T’s).

9 Or have they taken protectors apart from Him? Yet God, He is the Protector; He gives life to the dead; and He is Powerful over all things.

9 This question is posed by way of rebuke (R). That God is the only Protector for human beings is a common Quranic theme (cf. 2:107, 120; 4:123, 173; 9:74, 116; 29:22; 33:18, 65; 42:31; 48:22).

10 As for anything wherein you differ, judgment thereof lies with God. That is God, my Lord. In Him do I trust and unto Him do I turn.

10 Although from a Quranic perspective the true and final judgment in all matters lies with God alone (see 6:57, 62; 12:40, 67), the means by which human beings come to know God’s Will and act accordingly are believed to be found in all revelations. The Torah (see 5:43; 45:16) and the Quran (see 13:37) are mentioned specifically, but the fact that messages about God’s Judgment of human beings on the basis of whether they have followed His Will are found in the revelations given to all prophets is alluded to in 6:84–89 (see also 21:78–79, which refer to David and Solomon in particular). Thus 4:59 enjoins believers, If you differ among yourselves concerning any matter, refer it to God and the Messenger, if you believe in God and the Last Day; and 5:44 warns, Whosoever judges not by that which God has sent down—it is they who are disbelievers. The present verse can also be understood as a reference to the Final Judgment, meaning that all people will be recompensed according to what each merits (T’s). Seen in this light, it provides assurance that the division between the two groups mentioned at the end of v. 7 will be just and that one should not be disheartened by the apparent injustices of this world, but rather trust in

God and turn to Him, since unto God are all matters returned (2:110; 3:109; 8:44; 11:123; 22:76; 35:4; 57:5). Unto Him do I turn renders ilayhi unīb (cf. 11:88; 13:30), which in this context can also be understood to mean, “Unto Him do I return” (IJ) or “Unto Him do I turn in all my affairs” (IK, Ṭs).

⑪ The Originator of the heavens and the earth, He has appointed for you mates from among yourselves, and has appointed mates also among the cattle. He multiplies you thereby; naught is like unto Him, yet He is the Hearer, the Seer.

11 Originator translates Fāṭir, a Divine Name related to the verb faṭara, meaning to “split” or “cleave.” In the Quran, Fāṭir always occurs as part of the phrase Originator of the heavens and the earth (cf. 6:14; 12:101; 14:10; 35:1; 39:46). When the end of the previous verse is understood as an allusion to returning to God, and thus to one’s final end, this phrase complements it by alluding to one’s beginning. That God appointed or created mates for all human beings is attested in several verses (see 4:1c; 16:72; 35:11; 78:8). Here, as in 16:72 and 35:11, the connection is made between mates and procreation. Elsewhere the emotional, psychological, and spiritual benefits of having mates are emphasized: And among His signs is that He created mates for you from among yourselves, that you might find rest in them, and that He established affection and mercy between you (30:21).

He multiplies you is also understood to mean, “He creates you” or “He sustains you” (IJ, Ṭ), which could be interpreted to mean that God creates human beings by means of human procreation, which occurs through the “pairing” of spouses. He then sustains human beings by providing them with cattle, whose numbers are maintained through analogous means of procreation between animal mates (Ṭ). Thereby renders fīhi, which literally means “in it” or “therein,” but is here interpreted to mean bihi, or “through it,” meaning He multiplies you through the mates that He appoints (IJ). If understood to mean “He multiplies you in it,” “it” is seen as a reference to the wombs in which creatures are generated (IJ), or the pairs from which human beings are generated and sustained (IJ), or the earth, meaning, “He multiplies you in that which He creates from the heavens and the earth” (IJ).

Naught is like unto Him (cf. 112:4) is among the most famous phrases of the Quran, as it provides a succinct and unequivocal assertion of God’s complete and utter transcendence (tanzīh). Like unto Him renders ka mithlihi, which literally reads “like His likeness.” But the ka is understood by the vast majority of exegetes to be added for emphasis (IJ, Q, Ṭ, Ṭs). Some Sufis maintain that the phrase alludes to both God’s Transcendence and His Immanence, or “likeness” (tashbīh). Thus, while they maintain that reading the ka as a particle added for emphasis is valid, they also maintain that the more literal reading—“like unto His likeness”—is valid, in which case the phrase alludes to the manner in which God’s creation must be subtly linked to God as His own Self-Manifestation or Self-Disclosure in order for creation to exist, lest there be any form of existence independent of God’s Being. In this vein, Ibn ‘Arabī observes that God says naught is like unto Him in many different ways. The highest of these ways is that there is nothing in existence that resembles God or is a likeness of God, since existence is nothing but God’s own Self-Disclosure. So there is nothing in existence other than Him that might be His “likeness” or opposite (Futūḥāt, II 516.31–32). This reading provides an emphatic statement of God’s absolute transcendence in that it affirms not only that there is nothing like unto God, but that there cannot possibly be anything other than Him that is like unto Him or unto His likeness, since there is no existence other than emanations or theophanies of His Being. From this perspective, God’s absolute immanence becomes the greatest testimony to His absolute transcendence. Only in this way can one fully explain how it is that God is with you wheresoever you are (57:4) and nearer to human beings than their jugular vein (50:16) and at the same time completely transcendent.

⑫ Unto Him belong the keys of the heavens and the earth. He outspreads and straitens provision for whomsoever He will. Truly He is Knower of all things.

12 For the first phrase, see 39:63c; also see 6:50c. God outspreads provision for whomsoever He will as a test and straitens provision for whomsoever He will as a trial (JJ); cf. 13:6; 17:30; 28:82; 29:62; 30:37; 34:39; 39:52. In the context of this sūrah and especially the next verse, this verse can be seen as an allusion to the “keys to the treasuries” of provision, mercy, and knowledge, which belong only to God and which He provides or withholds as He wills; see 6:59c; 39:63c.

⑬ He has prescribed for you as religion that which He enjoined upon Noah, and that which We revealed unto thee, and that which We enjoined upon Abraham, Moses, and Jesus, that you uphold religion and not become divided therein. Grievous for the idolaters is that to which thou callest them. God chooses for Himself whomsoever He will and guides unto Himself whosoever turns in repentance.

13 The first part of this verse is similar to 4:163–64: Verily We have revealed unto thee, as We revealed unto Noah and the prophets after him, and as We revealed unto Abraham and Ishmael and Isaac and Jacob and the Tribes, and Jesus and Job and Jonah and Aaron and Solomon, and unto David We gave the Psalms, and messengers We have recounted unto thee before, and messengers We have not recounted unto thee; and unto Moses God spoke directly. Regarding the universality of revelation in the Quran, see the essay “The Quranic View of Sacred History and Other Religions.”

To uphold religion means that to act in accord with it (Ṭ) or to hold fast to it, perform its obligations, remain faithful to it, and call others to it (Ṭs), and to not become divided means to not be like earlier religious communities that divided into sects (Ṭ), but rather to remain united in religion as brothers (Ṭs). In this vein, al-Ṭabarī says that division is destruction and being unified is something upon which one can rely; regarding the importance of brotherhood within the Muslim community, see 49:6–12. The Prophet’s call to belief in Divine Unity and sincere devotion to God is grievous for the idolaters both because it undermines their religion and because it arouses jealousy that Muhammad and not someone else was given the revelation (see commentary on 38:5–8; Ṭs), as when they ask, Why was this Quran not sent down to a great man from one of the two towns? (43:31).

The antecedent of the pronoun here rendered Himself is not completely clear. The sentence could also be read, “God chooses for it whomsoever He will and guides unto it whomsoever He will,” in which case “it” is understood as a reference to religion (Z) or to bearing witness to Divine Unity (tawḥīd; Q). That God guides whosoever turns in repentance (cf. 13:27) evokes the famous ḥadīth qudsī, “If my servant draws nearer to Me by a span, I draw nearer to him by a cubit; and if he draws nearer to Me by a cubit, I draw nearer to him by the span of an outstretched arm; and if he comes to Me walking, I go to him running” (R).

14 They did not become divided till after knowledge had come unto them, out of envy among themselves. And were it not for a Word that had preceded from thy Lord unto a term appointed, judgment would have been made between them. Yet truly those who were bequeathed the Book after them are indeed confounded by doubt regarding it.

14 In this context, they did not become divided till after knowledge had come unto them is understood as a reference to the disbelievers who had not differed in their opinions regarding the Prophet until after the declaration of his prophethood (Ṭs). They then turned away out of jealousy and greed, as they did not want him to become their leader (Ṭs). In connection with v. 13, al-Ṭabarī understands this verse to be a reference to the people of Noah, who became divided after they became aware of the revelation sent to him (Ṭ). Others understand this verse to be similar to 3:19 and 98:4, which speak of the People of the Book differing among themselves after knowledge or the clear proof had come to them, out of envy of the revelation that had been given to the Prophet Muhammad (IJ); see also 2:213; 3:19c, 105; 10:93; 23:53; 43:63–65; 45:17; 98:4c. In this later context, dividing religion into factions is an error said to have been committed by previous religious communities, an error that Muslims are enjoined to avoid (cf. 6:65, 159; 3:103–5); regarding the nature of envy, see 113:5c.

If not for a word that had preceded from thy Lord means that if God had not promised to grant them respite until an appointed term, judgment would have been made at the moment that difference arose, and they would have had no opportunity to repent (cf. 10:19; 11:110; 41:45; 42:20). When viewed as a reference to the people of Noah, those who were bequeathed the Book is understood to mean those given subsequent revelations who are in doubt regarding the religion that God enjoined upon Noah and revealed to Muhammad and that they have been ordered to uphold (Ṭ). Others understand it to mean those who are in doubt regarding the Quran (Ṭs) and the prophethood of Muhammad (IJ).

15 Therefore, summon, and stand firm as thou hast been commanded. Follow not their caprices, and say, “I believe in that which God has sent down from a Book, and I have been commanded to establish justice among you. God is our Lord and your Lord. Unto us our deeds, and unto you your deeds; there is no argument between us and you. God will gather us together and unto Him is the journey’s end.”

15 As rendered, this opening phrase means that, because people are confounded by doubt, the Prophet must call them to the Truth (Ṭs). The phrase can also be read “and unto that, summon,” meaning “unto the Quran” (IJ, Ṭ), but it can be understood more broadly as an injunction to summon people to the religion that has been prescribed for them (v. 13) and that was enjoined upon the prophets before them (IK, Q, Ṭ, Ṭs). Then the Prophet is to stand firm by adhering to what God has enjoined and holding fast to it (Ṭs), worshipping as God has commanded (IK), or “holding firm” to the Quran (Q). The antecedent of their in their caprices could be the idolaters (IK), the People of the Book (IJ), or all who doubt what has been revealed to the Prophet (Ṭ). To follow their caprices would then be the opposite of following what God enjoined upon the messengers (see also 2:120, 145; 5:48–49; 6:56, 150; 13:37; 45:18; 2:145c; 45:18c). It is thus the opposite of affirming the underlying unity of revelations, as the Prophet is here commanded to do; see the essay “The Quranic View of Sacred History and Other Religions.” To establish justice among you means either “to be equitable among you” in spreading the message, calling everyone to the Truth and not being partial to anyone (IJ, Q, Ṭ, Ṭs), or “to judge according to the decrees of revelation” (IJ, IK, Q, Ṭs), as when the Prophet is told, Verily We have sent down unto thee the Book in truth, that thou mightest judge between men according to what God has shown thee (4:105).

That each group has its own deeds means that each will receive the reward or recompense commensurate with those deeds (IJ, Ṭ, Ṭs) and bears no responsibility for those of others, as in 10:41: And if they deny thee, say, “Unto me, my deeds, and unto you, your deeds. You are quit of that which I do, and I am quit of that which you do” (cf. 2:139; 28:55). That there is no argument or dispute between the believers and the disbelievers means that, since the truth has appeared, the dispute is settled (Ṭs) or, as implied by the final sentence of the verse, that as God will gather all people together and judge between them, there is no need to dispute the matter, since unto God are all matters returned (2:210; 3:109; 8:44; 11:123; 22:76; 35:4; 57:5).

16 As for those who argue about God after having responded to Him, their argument is baseless in the eyes of their Lord. Upon them shall be wrath, and theirs shall be a severe punishment.

16 Those who argue about God after having responded to Him are those who argue about religion after people have responded to the revelation sent to Muhammad. Although this verse most likely refers to the Makkan idolaters and their efforts to prevent those who responded to the Prophet's call from following him, some interpret it as a reference to Jews and Christians who argue that their religion is superior because their prophets and scriptures were sent prior to those of Islam (IJ, IK, Ṭs). It may also be seen as a criticism of those who argue, in contrast to the affirmation of the underlying unity of revelations advocated in v. 15, that there is no unity between the message of the Quran and that of the Torah and the Gospel and refuse to accept the validity of Muhammad's prophethood (R).

①7 God it is Who sent down the Book in truth, and the Balance. And what will apprise thee? Perhaps the Hour is nigh?

17 Regarding the sending down of the Quran in truth or “with truth” (cf. 2:176, 213; 3:3; 4:105; 5:48; 6:114; 39:2, 41), see 39:2c. God establishes justice in the world at large by setting the Balance (mīzān) within creation itself (15:19; 55:7; 57:25); He does so among human beings by commanding justice through revelation (4:135; 6:152; 7:29, 85; 11:85; 16:90; 42:17; 57:25) and by weighing deeds on scales (mawāzīn) on the Day of Judgment (see 7:8–9; 21:47; 23:102–3; 101:6–9); see commentary on 57:25, where the Book is also coupled with the Balance. That the Hour may be nigh (cf. 33:63) is understood as an injunction to prepare for it and the judgment that will ensue, as when a man asked the Prophet, “When will the Hour come?” The Prophet responded, “Woe unto you! What have you done to prepare for it?” To which the man replied, “Love for God and His Messenger.” The Prophet then said, “You will be with those whom you love” (IK).

①8 Those who believe not in it seek to hasten it, and those who believe are wary of it and know that it is the truth. Are not those who dispute the Hour far astray?

18 The disbelievers seek to hasten the Hour and hence the punishment when they mock it, saying, When will this promise come to pass, if you are truthful? (10:48; 21:38; 27:71; 34:29; 36:48; 67:25), and, O God, if this be the truth from Thee, rain down stones upon us from the sky, or bring us a painful punishment (8:32); see also 6:57; 10:50–51; 22:47; 26:204–7; 29:53–54c; 37:176–77. In contrast, those who believe seek to prepare for it out of fear of what may befall them.

19 God is kind unto His servants; He provides for whomsoever He will, and He is the Strong, the Mighty.

19 Some scholars consider this verse to be among the most hopeful verses of the Quran (others are 24:22; 33:47; 39:53, 42:22; 93:5). Kind translates laṭīf, which when used in relation to God means that He is Kind, receiving His servants with honor (Ṭs), as well as Righteous and Merciful (R), and that He is Subtle in that He is aware of the most intimate and minute details (Ṭs); hence the repeated reference to God as the Subtle, the Aware (6:103; 22:63; 31:16; 33:34; 67:14). Laṭīf thus conveys both gentleness in action and acuteness in perception. In relation to other Divine Attributes, al-Ghazzālī writes, “He is Wise insofar as He directs things, Generous insofar as He brings them into existence, Fashioner insofar as He gives them order, Just insofar as He puts each thing in its proper place, and Subtle insofar as He does not overlook the intricacies of gentleness regarding them” (Asmāʾ Allāh al-ḥusnā, 111). Thus it is through the Attribute of kindness and subtlety that God provides for whomsoever He will, since it is by virtue of this Attribute that God knows the precise needs of every created thing and provides for them, as in 11:6: There is no creature that crawls upon the earth, but that its provision lies with God. And He knows its dwelling place and its repository.

20 Whosoever desires the harvest of the Hereafter, We shall increase for him his harvest. And whosoever desires the harvest of this world, We shall give him some thereof, but he will have no share in the Hereafter.

20 This verse is similar to several passages contrasting those who desire the fruits of the Hereafter with those who desire the fruits of this world; see 3:145, 152; 4:134; 17:18–19; 18:28; 28:79–80. In 2:86 there is also a warning for those who have purchased the world at the price of the Hereafter. To desire the harvest of the Hereafter means to work for its sake (IK, Ṭs). God will increase their reward tenfold or even seven hundred fold (IK), as in 2:261: The parable of those who spend their wealth in the way of God is that of a grain that grows seven ears, in every ear a hundred grains. In contrast, whoever strives only for worldly gains may or may not receive benefits in this world, but will receive none in the Hereafter; see 102:1c. In this vein, the Prophet said of the Muslim community, “Whosoever among them performs the deeds of the Hereafter for the sake of this world will have no portion in the Hereafter” (IK).

Several Sufi commentaries add that for those who work for God out of love for him, not desiring recompense, all things other than God will be diminished in their eyes and they will not seek the harvest of this world or of the Hereafter; rather, they will seek God alone (Aj, Bq, Su).

21 Or have they partners who have prescribed for them as religion that which God did not permit? Were it not for the Word of Division, judgment would have been made between them. And truly the wrongdoers shall have a painful punishment.

21 This question asks, “Do they have gods who have created another religion for them that God did not prescribe for them?” (IJ); see also 10:34–35, and “Do they follow what the satans among human beings and jinn have prescribed, such as the contrived rulings and superstitious customs practiced in pre-Islamic Arabia?” In this regard, see 5:103–4, which criticizes the custom of making certain kinds of camels sacred; see also 6:136–39, 143–45; 10:59. Division translates faṣl, which denotes making one of two things clear from the other (Iṣ). The Word of Division refers to the Divine Judgment, which divides the believers and the disbelievers and makes truth distinct from falsehood. In this same vein, the Day of Judgment is referred to as the Day of Division (37:21; 44:40; 77:13, 38; 78:17). In this context Word of Division indicates that, had God not already decreed that the division between the believers and disbelievers would take place on the Day of the Resurrection, those who make the innovations alluded to in the first part of the verse would already have been judged (cf. 10:19; 11:110; 41:45; 42:14). Faṣl can also be understood to mean “decisive,” as in 86:13, where the decree of the Day of Judgment is referred to as a decisive Word (qawl faṣl).

22 Thou seest the wrongdoers wary of that which they have earned; for it will fall upon them. And those who believe and perform righteous deeds shall be in flowering meadows of the Gardens. With their Lord they shall have whatsoever they will. That is the great bounty.

22 When everyone is gathered on the plain of Resurrection (see 17:71c; 18:47; 79:14c), the wrongdoers will be wary of the recompense they will receive for the deeds they committed in this world (IK, Ṭ). In contrast, the believers were wary in this world (see v. 18) and therefore performed righteous deeds for which they will be rewarded with meadows in the Hereafter. Meadows renders rawdāt, the plural of rawdāh, a word meaning a place in which vegetation is plentiful (Ṭ), and is used to designate the most pleasing part of a garden (R). Some read this verse to mean that even the iniquitous among those who performed their prayers will be in the Garden, while those who performed righteous deeds will be in a specially designated part of Paradise (R). Some also understand being in meadows of the Gardens as a figurative reference to the happiness and blessings they enjoy (Ṭ). That they shall have whatsoever they will (cf. 16:31; 25:16; 39:34; 50:35) refers to the many bounties of Paradise being already prepared for them (R); see also 52:22; 56:21; 77:41–44.

23 This is that whereof God gives glad tidings to His servants, those who believe and perform righteous deeds. Say, “I ask not of you any reward for it, save affection among kinsfolk.” And whosoever accomplishes a good deed, We shall increase him in goodness thereby. Truly God is Forgiving, Thankful.

23 This refers to what was said regarding the Gardens in the previous verse (IJ) or to the great bounty (Ṭs). No prophet seeks personal gain from the transmission of revelation. Thus the Prophet is enjoined, Say, “I ask not of you any reward for it. It is naught but a reminder for the worlds” (6:90; cf. 25:57; 38:86) and the prophets Noah (26:109), Hūd (11:51; 26:127), Ṣāliḥ (26:145), Lot (26:164), and Shu‘ayb (26:180) all say to their respective communities, I ask not of you any reward for it. Elsewhere the Prophet states that he only delivers the message so that whosoever will may take a way unto his Lord (25:57), but here he enjoins affection among kinsfolk; that is, he is asking the Makkans to honor and uphold the ties of kinship that he had with them (IJ, IK, Q, Ṭ, Ṭū), as nearly all of the Makkans were related by virtue of being members of the same tribe, the Quraysh. In this vein, Ibn ‘Abbās said, “There was not a single house [i.e., subtribe] of the Quraysh, but that it had kinship with the Prophet, and so [42:23] was revealed in this regard, and its interpretation is, ‘O Quraysh! You should keep good relations between me and you’” (IK, Ṭ). Others say that the call to affection among kinsfolk is an appeal to follow the Prophet's kin (Aj, IJ, Qm, Ṭ, Ṭs), specifically his cousin and son-in-law ʿAlī ibn Abī Ṭālib and his daughter Fāṭimah and their descendants (Aj, IJ, Q), though al-Ṭabarī argues that it would need to be phrased “affection for kinsfolk” (mawaddat al-qurbā) for this meaning to obtain. Ibn ʿAjībah, however, maintains that the manner in which it is phrased provides a more emphatic injunction to love the Prophet's kinsfolk. Still others understand the phrase to mean that one should love the Prophet as one loves one's own kinsfolk (IJ) or that one should love one's kinsfolk and maintain relations with them (IJ, Ṭ). Kinsfolk renders qurbā, which derives from a root (q-r-b) that indicates nearness and approach. Thus some suggest this verse means “love through nearness” and that it enjoins love for God and drawing near to Him through pious deeds (Aj, IJ, Q, Ṭ, Ṭū).

For increase in goodness, cf. 10:26: Unto those who are virtuous shall be that which is most beautiful and more besides (see also 2:245, 261; 4:40; 6:160; 64:17; 10:26–27c; 55:60c). That God is Forgiving, Thankful (cf. 35:30, 34) indicates that He forgives bad deeds and accepts good ones.

24 Or do they say, “He has fabricated a lie against God?” If God willed, He would put a seal upon thy heart. God wipes out falsehood and verifies the truth through His Words. Truly He knows what lies within breasts.

24 Regarding the charge that the Prophet fabricated the revelation, see 10:38: Or do they say, “He has fabricated it”? Say, “Then bring a sūrah like it, and call upon whomsoever you can apart from God, if you are truthful” (cf. 11:13, 35; 32:3; 46:8; 52:33). That God would put a seal upon thy heart indicates either that God would fortify the Prophet's heart with patience to endure the insults hurled against him (JJ) or that He would not allow the Prophet's heart to continue to understand the revelation, had the Prophet added anything to it, since God would then cause him to forget what He had already revealed (IJ, IK, Ṭ). This latter interpretation is more in line with the use of “sealing,” “veiling,” and “covering” hearts that is employed throughout the Quran to indicate the condition in which people are closed to spiritual comprehension (see 2:7c; 6:25, 46; 7:100–101; 9:87, 93; 10:74; 16:108; 17:46; 18:57, 101; 30:59; 41:5; 45:23; 47:16; 63:3; 83:14–15). In this sense, this verse is similar to 69:44–47: Had he ascribed any statements to Us, We would have taken him by the right hand. And then We would have severed his life vein. And none among you could have shielded him from it.

God wipes out falsehood by means of the truth, as in 17:81: Truth has come, and falsehood has vanished. Truly falsehood is ever vanishing; and 21:18: Nay, but We cast truth against falsehood, and it crushes it, and, behold, it vanishes. Then God verifies the truth (cf. 10:82) through revelation. The idea that God knows what lies within breasts (3:119, 154; 5:7; 8:43; 11:5; 29:10; 31:23; 35:38; 39:7; 57:6; 64:4; 67:13) is usually a general statement regarding all human beings, but in this context it also implies that, were the Prophet's own soul to suggest that he fabricate a lie against God, God would seal his heart, since He eradicates falsehood and verifies the truth (Ṭ). In this sense, this verse provides an unequivocal rejection of the charge that the Prophet could have fabricated the Quran or any part of it.

25 He it is Who accepts repentance from His servants and pardons evil deeds. And He knows whatsoever you do.

25 Although repentance is enjoined throughout the Quran, this is one of two verses to state that God accepts repentance (see also 9:104; cf. 20:82). In 40:3 God is referred to as Acceptor of Repentance. In this vein, the Prophet said, "God rejoices more emphatically over the repentance of His servant than one of you who finds his stray camel in a place where he had feared that thirst would slay him" (IK). The extent of God's Forgiveness toward those who repent was expressed by 'Abd Allāh ibn Mas'ūd, who recited this verse when asked about a man who fornicates with a woman and then marries her (IK). God then pardons past sins for those who repent (Ṭ). Nonetheless, such repentance must be sincere, for truly those who disbelieve after having believed, then increase in disbelief, their repentance shall not be accepted, and they are the ones astray (3:90); And repentance is not accepted from those who do evil deeds till, when death confronts one of them, he says, "Truly, now I repent," nor from those who die as disbelievers (4:18).

26 He responds to those who believe and perform righteous deeds, and will increase them from His Bounty. Yet as for the disbelievers, theirs shall be a severe punishment.

26 God answers the supplications of those who believe and perform righteous deeds (Bg, IK, Ṭ) and rewards them (Bg), and He will increase them by granting them even more than what they requested (Ṭ). Some understand this verse to mean that God allows them to intercede for their companions; the increase then means that they can intercede for the companions of their companions (Bg, IK, Q, Ṭ). Alternately, those who could be understood as the subject of this sentence, meaning that those who believe and perform righteous deeds respond to their Lord when He calls them to faith and obedience (Ṭ), and in return He grants them increase.

27 Had God outspread His provision for His servants, they would have behaved tyrannically upon the earth. But He sends down whatsoever He will according to a measure. Verily of His servants He is Aware, Seeing.

27 In relation to v. 26, this verse emphasizes that one's focus should be upon increase in the Hereafter rather than in this world. It can thus be seen as clarifying what is meant by We shall increase him in goodness in v. 23. This verse is reported to have been revealed regarding some of the poor and destitute among the early believers who desired the wealth and ease of this world (Ṭ). Some say that it pertained specifically to the homeless emigrants known as the "People of the Veranda" (Ṭ), who may have looked with desire upon the wealth of other tribes in Madinah (Bg, Q). The verse suggests that, were God to have increased the provision He had destined for some people, they would transgress the limits set by God (Ṭ) by being tyrannical and acting disobediently toward Him (Q). They would seek one abode, then another, one mount and then another, one outfit and then another (Q), meaning that, were God to give them much wealth, they would only seek more, as stated in a famous ḥadīth, "If the son of Adam had a valley of gold, he would wish that he had two valleys" (Q). Rather, God gives provision according to what He knows to be in the best interest of His servants (IK) and what suffices them (Q). In this regard, Islamic scholars note that God knows best the state of His servants and when increasing their provision will lead to corruption. Thus reduction of provision is not abasement and increase in provision is not necessarily a sign of Divine Favor (Q), as in a ḥadīth qudsī, "Among My believing servants are those for whom nothing but wealth will make them righteous; were I to make them poor, poverty would corrupt them. And among My believing servants are those for whom nothing but poverty will make them righteous; were I to make them wealthy, wealth would corrupt them. Verily, I arrange for My servants according to My Knowledge of their hearts; for truly I am Knowing, Aware” (Q).

28 He it is Who sends down the rain after they have despaired and spreads forth His Mercy. And He is the Protector, the Praised.

28 When people have given up hope that rain will fall, God sends it upon them at their time of need (cf. 30:49; 41:39) and bestows it upon all who are in that region (IK). From a spiritual perspective, “God sends the rain of Divine inspirations down upon dead hearts such that they are revived through remembrance [of God] and knowledge, after they have despaired” (Aj).

29 And among His signs is the creation of the heavens and the earth and all moving creatures that He has scattered therein, and He is able to gather them together whensoever He will.

29 This is one of many verses to cite, as a sign of Divine Omnipotence, God’s creation of all that exists (IK) and His ability to resurrect the dead (Ṭ); see 2:165; 3:190–91; 30:20–26; 56:57–73. Moving creatures refers to human beings and angels (Q, Ṭ); or to human beings, angels, jinn, and all the various kinds of animals that God has distributed throughout the earth (IK); or just to all animals (Ṭs). Just as He created them the first time, He is able to gather them all together on the Day of Resurrection (IK, Ṭ).

30 Whatsoever misfortune befalls you is because of that which your hands have earned; and He pardons much.

31 You thwart not on earth, and you have no protector or helper apart from God.

30–31 Here misfortune is understood as a general reference to all afflictions that may befall human beings (IK, Ṭ, Ṭs), similar to 4:79: Whatever good befalls thee, it is from God, and whatever evil befalls thee, it is from thyself. It may also be a specific reference to the punishments for violations of Islamic Law (Q, Ṭs). In this sense, the small afflictions one bears are seen as alleviating the burden of sins for which one would have to pay a greater price in the Hereafter, as stated in a ḥadīth, “No believer is afflicted with fatigue, exhaustion, anxiety, or sorrow but that God absolves him of some of his sins thereby—even the prick of a thorn” (IK, Ṭ). But should God desire to punish someone, there is nothing anyone can do to thwart it (IJ); this is a recurring Quranic theme: see 8:59; 9:2–3; 11:20; 24:57; 29:22; 35:44; 46:32; 72:12. That no one has any protector or helper apart from God and that God is the only Protector for human beings is also reiterated in several verses throughout the Quran (see, e.g., 2:107, 120; 4:123, 173; 9:74, 116; 11:20, 113; 29:22; 33:17–18, 65; 42:8–9; 48:22).

32 Among His signs are the ships upon the sea like mountains;

33 if He so wills, He stills the wind, and they lie motionless upon its surface. Truly in that are signs for all who are patient, thankful.

34 Or He causes them to perish for that which they have earned—and He pardons much—

32–34 That God subjugates the sea and allows ships to travel upon it without hindering their travel by withholding the wind or causing travelers to perish by sending too much wind is here invoked as a sign of His Mercy toward human beings (see also 2:164c; 14:32; 17:66; 23:21–22; 30:46; 31:31; 35:12; 40:80; 43:12; 45:12; 55:24). In these verses, the ships also indicate the frailty of the human condition, and the metaphor relates to the manner in which God bestows and withholds provision in accord with what He knows is best for each individual (IK), as in vv. 27–28. Those who are patient when affliction befalls them, which could be seen as the times of too much or too little wind, and who are thankful when able to travel with ease, benefit from reflecting upon these signs. As in v. 30, people only perish and are punished because of their own iniquities, since God does not wrong human beings in the least, but rather human beings wrong themselves (10:44; see also 27:90; 36:54; 37:39; 52:16; 66:7). For more on the symbolism of seafaring as it pertains to the spiritual life, see 30:46c.

35 and so that those who dispute concerning Our signs will know that they have no refuge.

35 The disbelievers know that they have no refuge when the water overcomes them and they drown (IJ), or after the Resurrection they know that there is no escape from the punishment (Aj, IJ, Ṭ).

36 Whatsoever you have been given, it is the enjoyment of the life of this world, and that which lies with God is better and more lasting for those who believe and trust in their Lord, 36 Cf. 28:60. Enjoyment of the life of this world indicates the ephemeral delights of this world, which are naught but the enjoyment of delusion (3:185; 57:20). They stand in stark contrast to the rewards of the next life (see 3:14; 4:77; 9:38; 13:26; 20:131; 28:60; 40:39; 43:35), which are more lasting; see 29:64c.

37 who shun grave sins and indecencies and who when they are angry, they forgive,

37 Grave sins refers to transgressions such as idolatry, murder, and usury, though there is no agreement on a single definition; see 4:31c, where they are compared with minor evil deeds (sayyi'āt). Indecencies translates fawāḥish (sing. fāḥishah), which may refer specifically to sexual transgressions (IJ, Ṭ; see 4:15c; 4:22c) or more broadly to transgressing the limits set by God (IJ). Other verses specify that one must avoid sin or indecency, both outward and inward (see 6:120c; 6:151–52c); for more on the various categories of sins, see 4:31c; 7:33c. To forgive when angry implies also controlling one's rage, as in 3:134, which extols those who curb their rage, and pardon others. Regarding the virtue of restraining one's anger, the Prophet said, "A strong person is not one who throws his adversaries to the ground. A strong person is one who contains himself when he is angry." He also advised, "Anger comes from the Devil; the Devil was created of fire, and fire is extinguished only with water; so when one of you becomes angry, he should perform ablution." In this regard, °Alī ibn Abī Ṭālib is reported to have said, "Anger is a ball of fire, but when you swallow it, it is sweeter than honey."

38 who respond to their Lord and perform the prayer, their affair being counsel among them, who spend from that which We have provided them, 38 Those who respond to their Lord are those who testify to God's Oneness (Ṭ), fulfill the dictates of religion (Ṭs), and establish the prayer in the manner prescribed at the designated times (Ṭ, Ṭs) or those in whose hearts there is no dispute with any of God's Commands (R). In this sense, they stand in direct contrast to those who dispute concerning Our signs (v. 35). The reference to counsel is understood as an allusion to the Helpers (Anṣār) of Madinah who responded with faith to the call from the Prophet and sought counsel with one another before embracing Islam (Q, Ṭs). It also invokes a general principle, as it is said that if people seek counsel with one another, they will be guided to sound judgment (Q, R, Ṭs). From another perspective, those whose affair is counsel among them refers to those who refer all matters back to the religion, as in 4:83: And whenever tidings come unto them, whether of security or fear, they spread it about, whereas had they referred it to the Messenger and to those in authority among them, those of them whose task it is to investigate would have known it (Qm).

In 3:159, the Prophet is also instructed to consult them in affairs, that is, to seek the opinion of his Companions, especially in governance and military questions, but not in questions pertaining to Divine Decrees, since the Prophet has direct guidance from God for such matters (Q). But after the death of the Prophet, the Companions would seek counsel from one another in seeking to understand the Divine Decrees and finding the means of extracting them from the Quran and the teachings of the Prophet (Q). Regarding the importance of counsel in governing the affairs of the community, the Prophet is reported to have said, "If your leaders are the best of you and your wealthy are the magnanimous among you and your affair is counsel among you, the outside of the earth will be better for you than its inside" (Q).

Regarding those who spend from that which We have provided them, see 2:3c; 8:3; 13:22; 28:54; 32:16.

39 and who, when tyranny befalls them, they defend themselves.

39 When tyranny befalls them (Q, Ṭ) refers to the idolaters' expulsion of the Muslims from Makkah (Q), after which they were granted permission to defend themselves, as in 22:39–40: Permission is granted to those who are fought, because they have been wronged—and truly God is able to help them—who were expelled from their homes without right, only for saying, “Our Lord is God” (Q). The present verse establishes a general principle that no one should submit to the tyranny of an oppressor and thus reaffirms the Quranic injunction to enjoin right and forbid wrong (see 3:104c; Q).

④ The recompense of an evil is an evil like unto it. Yet whosoever pardons and sets matters aright, his reward is with God. Truly He loves not the wrongdoers.

40 If understood as a general statement, this verse alludes to the Quranic dictum that people are only punished for their bad deeds in a measure that is equal to the sins they have committed, but that they are rewarded tenfold or greater for good deeds; see 6:160c; 28:84; 40:40c. In the present context, it refers to the bounds within which justice can be pursued when defending against those who are tyrannical or when seeking retribution after an offense; see the essay “Conquest and Conversion, War and Peace in the Quran.” According to some, evil here refers to physical harm, cursing another, or insulting another (Bg). With regard to seeking retribution for the sins or misdeeds of individuals, if the offender is an inveterate wrongdoer who engages in immoral acts publicly and shamelessly while bringing harm to society, then seeking retribution is preferable, as in v. 39. If, however, the insult or crime is a minor slip and the wrongdoer acknowledges the error and seeks forgiveness, then pardoning is preferable, as in 24:22: And let them pardon and forbear. Do you not desire that God forgive you? (IA, Q). In this sense, this passage gives permission for self-defense or seeking retribution when wronged, but does not enjoin them, as alluded to by the praise given to those who are patient and forgive in v. 43 after permission to seek retribution is granted in v. 41 (Q). From another perspective, v. 39 is general, enjoining Muslims to defend one another in the face of oppression, while v. 40 applies to particular instances when a person is allowed to seek retribution for an offense, which is then limited in scope and degree to the like of the offense (see 2:190–94c; 5:45c; 16:26), or when a person chooses to pardon and forgive (Ts).

④① And whosoever defends himself after having been wronged, for such there is no way against them.

④② There is only a way against those who wrong people and behave tyrannically upon the earth without right. For them, there shall be a painful punishment.

41–42 In this context, a way against means “blame upon” (IK) or a means of recourse against someone. Although pardoning and forgiveness may be preferred, there is still no blame upon one who seeks retribution (IK); see 5:45c. There is only blame upon one who transgresses the rights of another or seeks retribution greater than the initial offense, as stated in a ḥadīth: “When two people insult one another, the one who began it is at fault, so long as the one who is wronged does not transgress” (IK). One is also prevented from seeking retribution after having already made amends; see 2:178c.

④③ And whosoever is patient and forgives, that is indeed a course worthy of resolve.

43 Whoever bears an injury or insult with patience and conceals the evil deeds of others (IK) has chosen a course worthy of resolve (cf. 3:186; 31:17), a course for which there is much reward and great praise (IK). Regarding the virtue of patience, see 11:11c.

④④ And whomsoever God leads astray has no protector beyond Him. Thou shalt see the wrongdoers, when they see the punishment, saying, “Is there any way of return?”

44 For those whom God leads astray the Quran says, there is no way (4:88, 143; 42:46), no guide (7:186; 13:33; 39:23, 36; 40:33), and no protector (18:17). Hence on the Day of Judgment, their fate is sealed, and there is no one upon whom they can call in seeking to return to this world and make amends (Bg). They are denied such requests because even if they were sent back, they would return to the very thing they had been forbidden (6:28); see 32:12c; 35:37c.

45 And thou shalt see them exposed to it, diminished through abasement, looking furtively. And those who believe will say, “Truly the losers are those who have lost themselves and their families on the Day of Resurrection.” Behold! Truly, the wrongdoers are in lasting punishment.

45 What the wrongdoers will be exposed to is the Fire; they will lower their eyes because of their abasement and steal glances at the Fire because of their fear of it (Bg, IK). Looking furtively could also be understood to mean “looking with veiled eyes,” implying that they look with their hearts since they have been resurrected blind (Ṭ, Z), as in 17:72: And whosoever was blind in this [life] will be blind in the Hereafter, and further astray from the way. Such people have lost themselves by virtue of coming to dwell in the Fire and lost their families because, if they themselves are in the Fire, they can be of no benefit to their family members; yet if their family members are in the Garden, they are given others in the place of those family members who are in the Fire (Q). That the wrongdoers are in lasting punishment is understood to mean that the punishment is perpetual and there is no possibility of escaping it (IK). But interpreting this verse in light of 2:254, The disbelievers, they are the wrongdoers, al-Rāzī argues that this reference applies only to those who are “absolute wrongdoers,” that is, the disbelievers. This interpretation, he maintains, is supported by v. 46 when it is understood to mean that the idols they had worshipped will not be able to intercede for them.

46 They have no protectors to help them apart from God. And whomsoever God leads astray, no way has he.

46 Regarding protectors . . . apart from God, see 29:41c. That those who are led astray by God have no way means that they have no path to the truth or path toward God (Ṭ). It also indicates that God is the only guide (R) and that guiding and leading astray lie in His Hands alone (Ṭ). For those whom God leads astray, see 42:44c.

④⑦ Respond to your Lord before there comes a day from God that none can repel. You will have no refuge that Day; nor shall you have any denial.

47 Respond to your Lord is understood to mean, “Respond to the one who calls you to your Lord, believe in him, and follow him” (Bg, Ṭ), that is, the Prophet Muhammad (Bg), or “Respond to that which calls you to Him, such as faith and obedience” (Q). Responding to God is also understood to mean maintaining the covenant with God (see 7:172c) and observing His due (Qu). The Day of Judgment is referred to as a day that none can repel (cf. 13:11; 30:43) or avert, because once the Divine Command has been decreed, God will no longer grant reprieve (Q). Therefore, after the Decree has been made, there is no opportunity for repentance and atonement, as expressed in 75:10–12: That Day man will say, “Where is the escape?” Nay! But there shall be no refuge. Unto your Lord that Day is the dwelling place. Unable to deny the reality of their condition, those who had been profligate or who had disbelieved will no longer be able to deny their iniquity and will admit their sins, as in 67:10–11: They say, “Had we listened or had we understood, we would not be among the inhabitants of the Blaze.” Thus do they admit their sin; so away with the inhabitants of the Blaze! (cf. 40:11; 41:47). A day from God that none can repel can also be understood as a reference to the moment of death, in which case this verse also implies that the door of response and thus repentance is open until that time.

④⑧ And if they turn away, We sent thee not as a keeper over them. Naught is incumbent upon thee, save the proclamation. Truly when We cause man to taste mercy from Us, he rejoices in it. Yet if an evil befalls them because of that which their hands have sent forth, truly man is ungrateful.

48 The Prophet is not the keeper over those to whom he delivers the message (cf. 4:80; 11:86); nor is he their guardian (6:66, 107; 10:108; 17:54; 39:41; 42:6; also see 25:43), since prophets are only responsible for proclaiming the message with which they have been sent; see also 3:20; 5:92, 99; 13:40; 16:35, 82; 24:54; 29:18; 36:17; 64:12. Regarding the last two sentences of this verse, see 30:36c. The judgment wrongdoers receive in the next life is the result of that which their hands have sent forth (2:95; 4:62; 28:47–48; 62:7; see also 5:80; 18:57; 36:12; 78:40), meaning the deeds they have committed. Likewise, much of the evil that befalls them in this life results from their own actions. In this context, ungrateful renders kafūr, which derives from the root k-f-r, indicating “covering over,” a root from which the Quranic words for “disbelief” (kufr) and “disbeliever” (kāfir) also derive.

④⁹ Unto God belongs sovereignty over the heavens and the earth; He creates whatsoever He will, bestowing females upon whomsoever He will, and bestowing males upon whomsoever He will, ⑤⁰ or He couples males and females and causes whomsoever He will to be barren. Truly He is Knowing, Powerful.

49–50 In the context of the various kinds of offspring mentioned here, that unto God belongs sovereignty over the heavens and the earth (2:107; 3:189; 5:17, 18, 40, 120; 9:116; 24:42; 45:27; 48:14) and that He creates whatsoever He will (cf. 5:17; 24:45; 30:54) indicate that offspring come as a blessing willed by God and are not due to the particular merits of the parents to whom children are born (R). The mention of the different ways in which God grants offspring to people—only daughters, only sons, a mixture of the two, or no children at all—is in part a response to the pre-Islamic belief that daughters were a burden or trial, as expressed in 16:58–59: And when one of them receives tidings of a female [child], his face darkens, and he is choked with anguish. He hides from the people on account of the evil of the tidings he has been given. Shall he keep it in humiliation, or bury it in the dust? Behold! Evil indeed is the judgment they make!

⑤¹ It is not for any human being that God should speak unto him, save by revelation, or from behind a veil, or that He should send a messenger in order to reveal what He will by His Leave. Truly He is Exalted, Wise.

51 This verse is understood to refer to the various modes in which God delivers revelation to prophets (IK, Q, R, Ṭ, Z). Save by revelation is interpreted as a reference to a revelation that is cast into the breast or heart of a prophet, a means by which some say the Psalms were revealed to David (R, Z), or to revelation that comes in a dream, as when Abraham saw that he was to sacrifice his son (see 37:102c; Q, R, Z). From behind a veil is then interpreted as a reference to the moments when prophets hear the Speech of God directly with no intermediary, but do not see God, as when God spoke to Moses on Mt. Sinai but did not grant him the vision of Himself (IK, Q, R, Ṭ, Z), and when God spoke to the Prophet Muhammad during the Night Journey, as in 53:10: Then He revealed to His servant what He revealed (see also 17:1c). That God should send a messenger in order to reveal then refers to the moments when prophets receive revelation through the intermediary of an angel (IK, Q, R, Ṭ, Z), as when the Prophet Muhammad received the first revelation through the agency of the Archangel Gabriel; see the introduction to Sūrah 96. That God should send a messenger can also be understood as a general reference to God sending various prophets to human beings (Z).

Mullā Ṣadrā sees these three modes of Divine Speech as allusions to the manner in which God pours knowledge upon the human heart through revelation or inspiration or by means of messengers and teachers (al-Mabda' wa-l-ma'ād, 609). A message that comes by means of revelation and inspiration is whole, without fragmentation, whereas one that comes through other means can be disjointed. The only receptacle for sheer unfragmented knowledge is the pure human heart. In this vein, Mullā Ṣadrā writes, “When God becomes the master of the heart, Mercy pours forth and light shines upon it, the breast is expanded, the secrets of Divine Sovereignty (malakūt) are unveiled to it, and the greatest veil is removed from the face of the heart through the benevolence of Mercy, and the realities of Divine Affairs illumine it” (al-Mabda' wa-l-ma'ād, 609).

52 Thus have We revealed unto thee a Spirit from Our Command. Thou knewest not what scripture was, nor faith. But We made it a light whereby We guide whomsoever We will among Our servants. Truly thou dost guide unto a straight path, 53 the path of God, unto Whom belongs whatsoever is in the heavens and whatsoever is on the earth. Behold! All affairs are journeying unto God.

52–53 Thus have We revealed unto thee indicates that the Prophet Muhammad received revelation as did the prophets before him (Q, Ṭū) or that he received revelation in all three modes mentioned in the previous verse (Ṭb). In the context of the previous verse, a Spirit from Our Command can here be understood as a reference to the Quran (IK, Q, R, Ṭb, Ṭū), which is referred to as a Spirit because it brings life forth from the death of ignorance and disbelief (Q, R) and revives hearts with guidance (Ṭb). Others see a Spirit as a reference to prophethood (Q); the Archangel Gabriel (Q, Ṭb), who is also known as the Holy Spirit, by which revelation is said to have been brought down (see 16:102c); or the capacity for understanding that God grants to those to whom He grants knowledge (Ka). Scripture renders kitāb, which is usually translated “book,” but is rendered here as scripture, since in this context it could refer to revelation in general or to the Quran in particular (R).

A light refers to the Quran (IK, Ṭb) or to the Quran and faith (R). Light is frequently associated with the guidance that comes through the prophets and revelation (see 6:91; 7:157; 21:48; 57:9, 28; 64:8), and in 9:32–33 and 61:8–9 the Quran mentions those who would try to extinguish the Light of God, which, in its context, could be read to mean those who attempt to conceal Divine Revelation. That God guides whomsoever He will with it is similar to 41:44, which enjoins the Prophet to say of the Quran, It is a guidance and a healing for those who believe. In the present verse, the antecedent of it in We made it a light is understood by some commentators to be a Spirit from Our Command (Ṭb). From a Shiite perspective, it is seen as a reference to the Holy Spirit, which is said to have been with the Prophet and the Imams, supporting them and protecting them from sin and error (Qm). A light is then interpreted as a reference to the first Imam, ʿAlī ibn Abī Ṭālib (Ka, Qm). In this sense, some commentators connect this verse to 21:73: And We made them leaders, guiding according to Our Command. And We revealed unto them the doing of good deeds, the performance of prayer, and the giving of alms. And they were worshippers of Us.

Regarding a straight path, see 1:6c. Although God is said to be the only guide, the Prophet is a guide insofar as he is the messenger appointed to call a particular people to God and therefore to function as a means of Divine Guidance, as in 13:7: For every people there is a guide (Ṭ). In this sense, he guides people insofar as he assists them in following the message that God has revealed through him; see 28:56: Surely thou dost not guide whomsoever thou lovest, but God guides whomsoever He will. And He knows best those who are rightly guided. According to some Shiite commentators, this phrase means that the Prophet guides people to believe in the walāyah/wilāyah, or sanctified authority, that God has bestowed upon the Prophet and upon ʿAlī ibn Abī Ṭālib and the subsequent Imams (Ka, Qm).

That all affairs are journeying unto God (cf. 2:210; 3:109; 8:44; 22:76; 35:4; 57:5) alludes to the Resurrection, when all human affairs will be brought before God in the Hereafter and He will judge between the people with justice (T), and to the fact that there is no judge other than God (R).

Gold Ornaments

al-Zukhruf

A*l-Zukhruf* is a Makkan sūrah, believed to have been revealed directly after Sūrah 42, al-Shūrā, although some maintain that v. 45 is from the Madinan period (Āl, IJ). It takes its name from the mention of gold ornaments in v. 35. Some propose that in discussing the nature of the Quran and the Mother of the Book in the first verses, this sūrah follows directly upon a statement from the end of the previous sūrah: Thou knewest not what scripture was, nor faith. But We made it a light whereby We guide whomsoever We will among Our servants (42:52; Aj).

After opening with a brief discussion of revelation (vv. 2–5), the sūrah cites the fate of previous communities who rejected the prophets sent to them (vv. 6–8) and challenges the worldview of the Makkan idolaters (vv. 9–35). The first half of the sūrah responds to different objections that the Makkan idolaters are reported to have posed to the message of the Quran and in doing so addresses several forms of disbelief, such as assigning partners to God (vv. 15), claiming that the angels are God’s female offspring (v. 19), saying that God willed for them to worship the angels (v. 20), claiming that the Quran should have been revealed to someone who was already of high social standing (v. 31), and likening the place of deities in their religion to the place of Jesus in Christianity (vv. 57–58).

A major theme of al-Zukhruf is the incorrect ways in which human beings seek to measure truth, such as claiming to follow the tradition of one’s forefathers (vv. 22–25) and seeing the wealth of this world as an indicator of one’s true station (vv. 31–36). Regarding the former claim, Abraham is cited as an example of someone who opposed his people’s attachment to their forefathers (vv. 26–28); for the latter claim, the opposition of the idolaters to the Prophet is likened to the opposition of Pharaoh and his “notables” toward Moses (vv. 46–56). The idolaters’ attempt to liken their worship of idols to the Christian worship of Jesus is also firmly rebuked (vv. 57–65). After these examples are provided, there is an extended contrast of the fate of believers and disbelievers in the Hereafter (vv. 66–78), followed by another challenge to the belief system of the idolaters (vv. 79–87). Having cited and rebuked many different modes of disbelief, the sūrah ends with an injunction to the Prophet to remain calm in the face of the disbelievers’ opposition to his message (vv. 88–89).

In the Name of God, the Compassionate, the Merciful

① Hā. Mīm. ② By the clear Book, ③ truly We have made it an Arabic Quran, that haply you may understand, ④ and truly it is with Us in the Mother of the Book, sublime indeed, wise. ⑤ Shall We withdraw the reminder from you altogether for your having been a prodigal people? ⑥ How many a prophet did We send among those of old? ⑦ Yet never did a prophet come unto them, but that they mocked him. ⑧ So We destroyed those of greater prowess than them, and the example of those of old has passed. ⑨ Wert thou to ask them, “Who created the heavens and the earth?” they would surely say, “The Mighty, the Knowing created them.” ⑩ He it is Who made the earth a cradle for you and made paths for you therein, that haply you may be guided; ⑪ Who sent down water from the sky in due measure, whereby We revived a dead land—thus shall you be brought forth; ⑫ and Who created the pairs, all of them, and appointed for you ships and cattle that you ride, ⑬ that you may mount their backs and then remember the blessing of your Lord when you are mounted thereon and say, “Glory be to God, Who made this subservient unto us, though we were not equal to it. ⑭ Truly unto our Lord do we turn.” ⑮ Yet they assign to Him a portion from some of His servants. Truly man is a manifest ingrate. ⑯ Or has He taken daughters from that which He creates and favored you with sons? ⑰ And when one of them receives glad tidings of that which he has set forth as a description of the Compassionate, his face blackens and he chokes with anguish. ⑱ “What! One who is reared amid ornaments and is incoherent in dispute?” ⑲ And they have made the angels, who are servants of the Compassionate, females. Did they witness their creation? Their witnessing shall be recorded, and they will be questioned. ⑳ They say, “Had the Compassionate willed, we would not have worshipped them.” They have no knowledge thereof. They do naught but guess. ㉑ Or did We give them a book beforehand to which they hold fast? ㉒ Nay! They say, “We found our fathers upon a creed, and surely we are rightly guided in their footsteps.” ㉓ Likewise, We sent no warner unto a town before thee, but that those living in luxury therein said, “We found our fathers upon a creed, and we are surely following in their footsteps.” ㉔ He replied, “What! Though I bring you better guidance than that which you found your fathers following?” They said, “Truly we disbelieve in that wherewith you have been sent.” ㉕ So We took vengeance upon them. And behold how the deniers fared in the end. ㉖ And [remember] when Abraham said to his father and his people, “Truly I am quit of that which you worship, ㉗ save Him who originated me, for surely He will guide me.” ㉘ And He made it a word enduring among his posterity, that haply they may return. ㉙ Nay, I provided for these and their fathers until the Truth came unto them and a clear messenger. ㉚ And when the Truth came unto them, they said, “This is sorcery, and we do not believe in it.” ㉛ And they said, “Why was this Quran not sent down to a great man from one of the two towns?” ㉜ Is it they who apportion the Mercy of thy Lord? We have apportioned for them their livelihood in the life of this world and have raised some of them above others in rank, that some of them may take others into service. And the Mercy of thy Lord is better than that which they amass. ㉝ And were it not that mankind would be one community, We would have made for those who disbelieve in the Compassionate silver roofs for their houses, stairways whereon to ascend, ㉞ doors to their houses, couches whereon to recline, ㉟ and gold ornaments. Yet all of that would be but enjoyment of the life of this world. And the Hereafter, in the presence of thy Lord, is for the reverent. ㊱

Whosoever turns blindly away from the remembrance of the Compassionate, We assign to him a satan who is then a companion unto him. 37 And they turn them from the way; yet they suppose that they are rightly guided, 38 till, when he comes unto Us, he will say, "Would that there were between me and thee the distance of the two easts! What an evil companion!" 39 Yet on that Day it will not benefit you, since you did wrong, to share in the punishment. 40 Dost thou, then, make the deaf to hear or guide the blind and those in manifest error? 41 Either We shall take thee away, and then take vengeance upon them, 42 or We shall show thee that which We have promised them. For surely We have power over them. 43 So hold fast to that which We have revealed unto thee. Truly thou art upon a straight path. 44 Truly it is a reminder unto thee and thy people, and you will be questioned. 45 Ask those of Our messengers whom We sent before thee, "Have We appointed gods to be worshipped apart from the Compassionate?" 46 We did indeed send Moses with Our signs unto Pharaoh and his notables. And he said, "I am a messenger of the Lord of the worlds." 47 But when he brought them Our signs, behold, they laughed at them. 48 Not a sign did We show them, but that it was greater than its sister. And We seized them with the punishment, that haply they may return. 49 They said, "O sorcerer, call upon your Lord for us in accord with that which He has covenanted with you; surely we shall then be guided." 50 Yet when We removed the punishment from them, behold, they reneged. 51 And Pharaoh called out among his people, saying, "O my people! Is not the sovereignty of Egypt mine, and do these streams not flow beneath me? Do you not, then, see? 52 Am I not better than this one who is vile and can scarcely speak plain? 53 Why, then, have armlets of gold not been cast upon him, and why do angels not accompany him?" 54 Then he incited his people to make light, and they obeyed him. Truly they were an iniquitous people. 55 So when they roused Our Anger, We took vengeance upon them and drowned them all together. 56 We made them a bygone people and an example for those of later times. 57 And when the son of Mary is set forth as an example, behold, thy people turn away from it. 58 They say, "Are our gods better, or is he?” They do not cite him to thee, save to dispute. Nay, they are a contentious people. 59 He was naught but a servant whom We blessed and whom We made an example for the Children of Israel. 60 Had We willed, We would have appointed angels among you, succeeding one another upon the earth. 61 And he is indeed a portent of the Hour; so doubt not concerning it and follow Me. This is a straight path. 62 And let not Satan turn you away; truly he is a manifest enemy unto you. 63 When Jesus brought clear proofs, he said, “I have come unto you with wisdom and to make clear to you some of that wherein you differ. So reverence God and obey me. 64 Truly God is my Lord and your Lord; so worship Him. This is a straight path.” 65 But, then, the parties differed among themselves. Woe unto those who do wrong for the punishment of a painful day. 66 Do they await aught but that the Hour should come upon them suddenly, while they are unaware. 67 Friends on that Day will be enemies to one another, save for the reverent. 68 O My servants! No fear shall be upon you this Day; nor shall it be you who grieve, 69 you who believed in Our signs and who were submitters; 70 enter the Garden, you and your spouses, made joyous. 71 For them are brought round trays and goblets of gold. Therein is whatsoever souls desire and eyes find pleasing. And you shall abide therein. 72 This is the Garden that you have inherited for that which you used to do. 73 Abundant fruit from which you will eat shall be yours therein. 74 Truly the guilty are abiding in the punishment of Hell. 75 It will not be lightened for them, and therein will they despair. 76 We did not wrong them; rather, it is they who were the wrongdoers. 77 And they will call, “O Mālik, let thy Lord put an end to us.” He will reply, “You will surely remain. 78 We did indeed bring you the truth, but most of you were averse to the truth.” 79 Or have they devised anything? Truly it is We Who devise. 80 Or do they suppose that We hear not their secret and their secret converse? Yea, and Our envoys are present with them, recording. 81 Say, “If the Compassionate had a child, then I would be the first of the worshippers.” 82 Glory be to the Lord of the heavens and the earth, the Lord of the Throne, above that which they ascribe. 83 And leave them to indulge in idle talk and play until they meet the Day that they are promised. 84 He it is Who is God in Heaven and God on earth. And He is the Wise, the Knowing. 85 Blessed is He unto Whom belongs sovereignty over the heavens and the earth and whatsoever is between them, and with Whom lies knowledge of the Hour, and unto Whom you will be returned. 86 Those upon whom they call apart from Him have no power of intercession, save such as have borne witness to the truth knowingly. 87 Wert thou to ask them, “Who created you?” they would surely say, “God.” How, then, are they perverted? 88 And as for his saying, “O my Lord, truly these are a people who believe not,” 89 bear with them and say, “Peace.” For soon they will know.

1 This sūrah is the fourth in a series of seven sūrahs that open with the Arabic letters ḥā^ᵇ and mīm and are referred to collectively as the ḥawāmīm; see 40:1c.

② By the clear Book,

2 Cf. 44:2. The Quran is described as a clear Book (cf. 5:15; 12:1; 26:2; 27:1; 28:2; 44:2), clear in both wording and meaning (IK). This appellation is understood to allude to its being sent down by God rather than composed by human beings (Ṭ). It is also said that all things in Heaven and on earth are recorded in a clear Book (10:61; 27:75; 34:3). Clear renders mubīn, which is in the form of an active participle and could thus be understood to mean that it makes clear or clarifies, implying that the Quran makes the path of guidance clear from the path of misguidance (R, Z) and truth from error and that it clarifies what is needed in order to follow religion properly (JJ, Z).

③ truly We have made it an Arabic Quran, that haply you may understand,

3 That God has revealed an Arabic Quran (cf. 12:2; 20:113; 39:28; 41:3; 42:7) in a clear, Arabic tongue (26:195; cf. 16:103; 46:12) indicates that it should be clear to the Arabs (Ṭ), who then have no excuse for rejecting it; see 39:28c.

④ and truly it is with Us in the Mother of the Book, sublime indeed, wise.

4 Mother of the Book (cf. 3:7; 13:39) is interpreted by most as a reference to the Preserved Tablet (85:22; IK, JJ, R, Z), which is said to be the source of all revealed scripture, and interpreted by some as a reference to the Quran itself (see

3:7c). Sublime indeed, wise refers to the Quran or to the Mother of the Book (R). Sublime renders ‘alī, which indicates that it is transcendent and thus beyond the possibility of any corruption or falsification (R). Some say that when read as modifying Quran, ‘alī means that the Quran transcends all other revealed books, because it is a miracle that will remain for all time (R). Regarding the inviolability and permanence of the Quran, see commentary on 15:9; 56:77–80. The Quran is also described as wise in 10:1; 31:2; and 36:2. Wise (ḥakīm) can also be taken to mean “determined” or “made firm” (muḥkam, from the same root), as in 3:7, where the Quran is described as having signs determined (R; cf. 11:1). Ḥakīm could also mean something that makes wise (muḥkim), indicating that the Quran or the Mother of the Book teaches the truth.

⑤ Shall We withdraw the reminder from you altogether for your having been a prodigal people?

5 The first part of this verse may mean, “Shall We withhold the reminder of the punishment from you?” (Ṭ), or, “Shall we withhold the Quran from you?” (JJ), as “the Reminder” is often used as a name for the Quran itself. According to the second interpretation, the verse refers to God’s continuing to reveal the Quran out of His Mercy, even though it had initially been rejected by many (IK). For the meaning of a prodigal people, see 10:12c; 25:67c.

⑥ How many a prophet did We send among those of old?

⑦ Yet never did a prophet come unto them, but that they mocked him.

6–7 These verses are understood as consolation for the Prophet (IK, JJ), informing him that the derision he faces is no greater than that confronted by previous prophets (Ṭ). For v. 7, cf. 15:11; 36:30.

⑧ So We destroyed those of greater prowess than them, and the example of those of old has passed.

8 The disbelievers whom God destroyed before this generation of disbelievers were more numerous than them, greater than them in strength, and left firmer traces upon the earth (40:82; cf. 50:36). Nonetheless, their achievements could not avail them against God. This implies that the opponents of the Prophet, who are weaker than previous generations, are misguided in thinking that they can successfully oppose the message he brings; see 40:82c. The example of those of old refers to their way of life (IK) or to the fact that the punishment they received serves as an example for future disbelievers, as in v. 56: And We made them a bygone people and an example for those of later times (IK); see also 14:45; 40:84–85c.

9 Wert thou to ask them, “Who created the heavens and the earth?” they would surely say, “The Mighty, the Knowing created them.”

9 When questioned about the source of creation, they—that is, the idolaters among the Quraysh—would surely say, “The Mighty, the Knowing created them” (cf. 10:31; 23:84–85; 29:61, 63; 31:25; 39:38; 43:87), because they acknowledged that one God was responsible for creation, but they nonetheless worshipped other deities alongside Him (IK) and denied His ability to resurrect (R). Alternately, them and they can be understood as references to the prophets (R), meaning that all prophets affirm this statement. With this latter reading, vv. 10–13 could be read as a continuation of the quotation with which this verse ends.

10 He it is Who made the earth a cradle for you and made paths for you therein, that haply you may be guided;

10 Cf. 20:53. That God made the earth a cradle means He made the earth smooth, easy to travel upon (IK), tractable for agriculture (R), and a home for human life. Paths (cf. 21:31; 67:15; 71:19–20) refers to navigable routes He has made upon it (IK, JJ). In the context of this passage (vv. 10–14), that haply you may be guided (cf. 2:53, 150; 7:158; 16:15; 21:31; 23:49; 32:3) is thought to refer to the manner in which God both facilitates travel upon the earth in this life and provides signs and revelation to guide human beings to truth and to Paradise in the Hereafter.

⑪ Who sent down water from the sky in due measure, whereby We revived a dead land—thus shall you be brought forth;

11 That water is sent in due measure (cf. 23:18) indicates that God sends water sufficient to sustain people, livestock, and crops (IK) and does not usually send down a deluge (JJ) as He did in the case of Noah (R). Elsewhere it is said that God created everything, then measured it out with due measure (25:2). Regarding the theological significance of “measure,” see 54:49c. The last line of the present verse is one of several places where the Quran employs the revivification of dead land as a metaphor for the resurrection of human beings (R); see 7:57; 16:65; 29:63; 30:19, 24, 50; 35:9; 36:33; 41:39; 45:5; 50:9–11; 57:17. Such imagery is also understood as a spiritual allegory and symbol for the death and life of the soul, as discussed in 7:58c; 22:63c; 30:50c.

⑫ and Who created the pairs, all of them, and appointed for you ships and cattle that you ride, ⑬ that you may mount their backs and then remember the blessing of your Lord when you are mounted thereon and say, “Glory be to God, Who made this subservient unto us, though we were not equal to it.

12–13 The pairs, all of them (cf. 36:36) refers to all species of animals (IK, Q), to all opposites (R), or to the fact that all animals have both males and females (Q). According to al-Rāzī, that they are pairs indicates that they are all relative and multiple, whereas their Creator is an Absolute Being Who transcends all duality.

This is one of several passages that mention seafaring as a blessing bestowed by God (cf. 14:32; 17:66; 22:65; 30:46) and invoke the benefits of cattle—their usefulness for riding and transporting goods, for providing warmth and clothing, for providing food and drink, and even their beauty—as signs of God’s Beneficence toward human beings; see also 6:142c; 16:5, 66, 79; 23:21–22; 36:72; 40:79. The supplication given at the end of this verse is often employed by Muslims when traveling by land; see also 28:85c. When traveling by sea, one is advised to use the supplication in 11:41: In the Name of God be its coursing and its mooring. Truly my Lord is Forgiving, Merciful (Q, R). Recognizing that God has made certain aspects of creation subservient unto human beings, though they are not equal to it, is to acknowledge that human beings do not have the capacity to make use of these resources without Divine Aid (IK, Q, R, Z); see also 31:20c.

⑭ Truly unto our Lord do we turn.”

14 Unto our Lord do we turn (cf. 7:125), that is, in prayer. Alternately, the phrase could be rendered, “Unto our Lord do we return” in the Hereafter (Aj, IK, R, T). In the latter interpretation, mention of earthly journeys in the previous verse draws one’s attention to the journey toward the Hereafter, just as elsewhere mention of preparing provisions for an earthly journey is employed to remind human beings to prepare provisions for the Hereafter: And make provision, for indeed the best provision is reverence (2:197; IK). The mention of the return to God after the mention of the means by which human beings journey is understood as a recognition of the dangers inherent in setting out upon a journey, especially without the necessary preparation, and that the successful return from a journey lies entirely in God’s Hands (R). That the Arabic is phrased as an active participle (munqalibūn, lit. “are we returners”) speaks to the definitive nature of this verse, since from a Quranic perspective human beings cannot but turn to God and all are traveling toward Him at every moment whether they want to or not.

⑮ Yet they assign to Him a portion from some of His servants. Truly man is a manifest ingrate.

15 The idolaters maintain that some of God’s servants are His offspring (JJ, Q, R), who share in His Divinity and in His creative power. Some see this verse as a reference to the practice among the Makkan idolaters of devoting a portion of their cattle to their idols, as in 6:136: And they dedicate to God a share of the crops and cattle He created, saying, “This belongs to God”—or so they claim—“And this belongs to our partners” (IK). The present verse could also be understood to mean that the idolaters maintain that God has partners and that they only assign “a portion” of His servants to Him and then assign another portion of His servants to the partners they attribute to Him (R).

⑯ Or has He taken daughters from that which He creates and favored you with sons?

①⑦ And when one of them receives glad tidings of that which he has set forth as a description of the Compassionate, his face blackens and he chokes with anguish.

16–17 Cf. 16:57–58. These verses are similar to 37:149–53; 52:39; and 53:21–22. The Quran criticizes frequently the idea that God has offspring (2:116; 6:100; 9:30; 10:68; 17:40, 111; 18:4; 19:35, 88–93; 21:26; 25:2; 37:149, 153; 39:4; 43:81–82; 52:39; 72:3). In this instance, the Quranic argument is not meant to suggest that males are better than females. Rather, it shows that the idolaters' attributing female offspring to God, which they themselves despise (see commentary on 16:57–59), while favoring male offspring for themselves, is illogical and demonstrates the utter inconsistency and vacuity of their position as well as the degree to which they belittle God's rights and dues.

①⑧ “What! One who is reared amid ornaments and is incoherent in dispute?”

18 The idolaters regard women as lacking something for which they must compensate with jewelry and ornaments and do not allow women to be heard in a dispute; so how could they attribute being female to those beings they call divine? (IK). Alternately, this verse could be read as a description of the idols that they decorate with gold and silver and then worship, though the idols cannot speak (T).

①⑨ And they have made the angels, who are servants of the Compassionate, females. Did they witness their creation? Their witnessing shall be recorded, and they will be questioned.

19 Cf. 37:150. The disbelievers make claims regarding aspects of the Unseen of which they have no knowledge. On the one hand, they could not have witnessed the creation of the angels; nor do they have intellectual proofs for their position. On the other hand, they deny revelation, by means of which one could receive such information. Thus they have no means by which to substantiate what they claim (R); see 17:40c; 37:150c. Servants renders ‘ibād, a reading supported by 21:26. According to another canonical reading ‘ibād would be read ‘inda, meaning “with,” in which case who are servants of the Compassionate would be read “who are with the Compassionate” (Q, R). This reading is supported by 7:206, which speaks of the angels as those who are with thy Lord, and by 21:19: Those who are with Him are not too arrogant to worship Him; nor do they weary (Q, R). This alternate reading would mean that, as the angels are with God and not with the disbelievers, the disbelievers have no basis for their assertion that the angels are female (R).

20 They say, “Had the Compassionate willed, we would not have worshipped them.” They have no knowledge thereof. They do naught but guess.

20 This verse describes the idolaters’ response to the question posed in v. 19. They maintain that since their worshipping of idols happens only by God’s Will, He must approve of it (IK, JJ); see 6:148c; 16:35c. In other words, they consider the absence of Divine Punishment to indicate tacit approval. Just as the idolaters are here accused of conjecture when maintaining that God will be pleased with their worship, so too are they accused of conjecture when giving names to their idols (Truly those who believe not in the Hereafter name the angels with female names. Yet they have no knowledge thereof. They follow naught but conjecture; and surely conjecture avails naught against the Truth; 53:27–28) and when maintaining that God has a child (see 18:4–5).

21 Or did We give them a book beforehand to which they hold fast?

21 In context this question asks, “Did God give them a revealed scripture that they are able to study and use as a source for their claims to knowledge of the angels?” This challenge is similar to that posed in 37:156–57, where the disbelievers are challenged regarding their belief in deities as the offspring of God: Or have you a manifest authority? Bring your Book, then, if you are truthful (see also 34:44; 35:40c; 46:4; 68:37–38).

22 Nay! They say, “We found our fathers upon a creed, and surely we are rightly guided in their footsteps.”

22 This verse begins one of several passages in which disbelievers state their unwillingness to abandon the false gods and deities worshipped by their fathers (cf. 2:170; 5:104; 7:28, 70; 10:78; 11:62, 87; 14:10; 31:21; 34:43). In the context of the previous verses, this verse argues for the vacuity of following the beliefs of one’s forefathers in the absence of intellectual or revealed truths to support one’s position (R). Creed renders ummah, a word employed in many different ways in the Quran, but usually meaning “community,” as in 23:52: And truly this community of yours is one community. In the present context, the term indicates both a set of beliefs and a corresponding way of life, thus a religion (Q).

23 Likewise, We sent no warner unto a town before thee, but that those living in luxury therein said, “We found our fathers upon a creed, and we are surely following in their footsteps.”

23 Cf. 34:34; 51:52–53. This is one of several verses indicating that it is the leaders or notables of a community who are usually most adamant in opposing God’s messengers, implying that they benefit from a corrupt social order and therefore stand the most to lose from the advent of a just social order. In other verses, they are thus referred to as the guilty (6:123). It is the leaders and notables who are said to have opposed Moses (see 7:103–27; 10:75–88; 11:97–98; 23:46–47; 28:20; 43:46–47), Noah (see 7:60; 11:27, 38; 23:24–25) and other prophets (see 7:66, 75, 88–90; 23:33–36), among them Muhammad (see 38:6). The disbelievers’ statement we are surely following in their footsteps implies that they see following the ways of their forefathers as sufficient justification for their beliefs and actions.

24 He replied, “What! Though I bring you better guidance than that which you found your fathers following?” They said, “Truly we disbelieve in that wherewith you have been sent.”

25 So We took vengeance upon them. And behold how the deniers fared in the end.

24–25 He replied renders qāl, but several canonical readings allow this to be read qul, or “say,” in which case it is an injunction to the Prophet. This reading is preferred by several commentators (IK, Q, Ṭs). The depth of the idolaters’ devotion to their “forefathers’ creed” is such that they will not listen to arguments from reason or revelation. Al-Rāzī observes that the root of their devotion to this ancestral creed is love of the world and its delights, since the creed functions to secure their wealth and position. As they were presented with both rational arguments and revelation, they no longer had any excuse for rejecting the truth; yet they continued to do so; thus God took vengeance upon them (R). This is in keeping with the Quranic principle that God will not punish or destroy any people until they have been sent a warner (see 15:4; 26:208–9).

26 And [remember] when Abraham said to his father and his people, “Truly I am quit of that which you worship, 27 save Him who originated me, for surely He will guide me.”

26–27 In contrast to the notables, whose love of the world and its accoutrements led them to adhere to the creed of their forefathers and reject both rational arguments and revelation, Abraham’s love for God led him to risk his own life in rejecting the creed of his father and his people. Citing Abraham in this context provides a poignant argument for the Arabs, as their claims to honor and nobility were closely connected to their claim of descent from Abraham. On the one hand, these verses cite his example as one to be followed. But on the other hand, they present an argument against the claim made by the Makkans that they are following the creed of their forefathers (v. 22–23). Since Abraham was regarded as their greatest forefather, following his example would in fact be nobler than following the example of the generations immediately preceding them (R). These verses thus seek to undermine the argument of the Makkani idolaters by claiming that, even if they are following their forefathers, they are not doing so as perfectly as Muhammad and his followers, who are following the noblest of their forefathers.

Abraham makes a declaration similar to the one stated in v. 26 in 6:78, saying: O my people! Truly I am quit of the partners you ascribe. Likewise, the Arabian prophet Hūd says to his people, I call God as witness—and you be witness—that I am quit of that which you ascribe as partners apart from Him (11:54–55), and the Prophet Muhammad is instructed to say to his detractors, Truly I am quit of that which you ascribe as partners unto Him (6:19; cf. 10:41; 26:216).

28 And He made it a word enduring among his posterity, that haply they may return.

28 It refers to the statement of the affirmation of God’s Oneness (JJ, R), which is understood to be what Abraham stated in vv. 26–27 (R, Ṭ), or to the Islamic testimony of faith, “There is no god but God” (IK, Ṭ). Others say that it refers to Abraham’s statement in 37:99, Truly, I am going unto my Lord. He will guide me (JJ), or to 2:131, And when his Lord said unto him, “Submit!” he said, “I submit to the Lord of the worlds.” In this context, that haply they may return is understood to mean that later generations might return to this “word” or declaration (IK), return to obedience to God (Ṭ), repent or remember (Ṭ), or recant what they follow and return to the religion of Abraham (JJ).

29 Nay, I provided for these and their fathers until the Truth came unto them and a clear messenger.

29 Nay renders the particle bal, which when employed in this manner indicates a stark contrast. Here it can be understood to mean that, although God made it a word enduring among his posterity, they nonetheless became deluded and were distracted from the message by their preoccupation with their passions and enjoyments (R). Nonetheless, God provided for the people of Makkah and their ancestors and did not destroy them or punish them (JJ, Ṭ). But now that the Truth, meaning the Quran (JJ, R, Ṭ) has come to them, they will be held accountable for not adhering to the teachings found in it and in the word enduring that Abraham had bequeathed to them. As in v. 2, clear renders mubīn, which is in the form of an active participle and could thus be understood to mean that the Prophet clarifies by bringing clear proofs (Ṭ) or that he brings with clarity the stipulations of the revealed Law (JJ); see 43:2c.

30 And when the Truth came unto them, they said, “This is sorcery, and we do not believe in it.”

30 As in v. 20, the idolaters are said to have no argument against what the Prophet brings. In v. 22 they cite the beliefs of their forefathers to justify their position, while here they reject the Prophet and the Quran out of hand by deriding them as connected to sorcery. This is one of many verses in which the Prophet is accused of being a sorcerer (cf. 10:2; 11:7; 34:43; 37:15; 38:4; 46:7; 51:52; 54:2; 74:24), as were Moses (7:109; 10:76; 20:57, 63; 26:34; 27:13; 28:36; 40:24; 51:39) and Jesus (5:110; 61:6).

31 And they said, “Why was this Quran not sent down to a great man from one of the two towns?”

31 The two towns are Makkah and Ṭāʾif. Most maintain that the great man of Makkah is thought to be al-Walīd ibn al-Mughīrah and the great man of Ṭāʾif, ʿUrwah ibn Masʿūd al-Thaqafī (IK, JJ, Ṭ). Others say ʿUtbah ibn Rabīʿah of Makkah and Ibn ʿAbd al-Yālīl al-Thaqafī of Ṭāʾif (Ṭ). The idolaters were incredulous that God would choose as a prophet one who did not possess high social standing among them and used this fact as another excuse for not following the Prophet, as in 38:7–8, where the notables among them say, We did not hear of this in the creed of latter days. This is naught but an invention. Has the Reminder been sent down upon him among all of us? In general, the leaders of the Quraysh could not bear the thought that the new revelation would alter their position in society, as in 46:11: And those who disbelieve say of those who believe, “Had it been good, they would not have outstripped us in [attaining] it.” In response to this attitude, 6:124 states, God knows best where to place His message. In other passages, they express amazement at God’s choice of a human being as His Messenger, as in 25:7: What ails this Messenger, who eats food and walks in the markets? Why is there not an angel sent down unto him to be a warner with him? (see also 6:8–9; 11:12; 14:10; 17:94; 23:33; 36:15; 41:14; 54:24; 64:6c). For other verses that speak of their marveling at this phenomenon, see 7:69; 10:2; 38:4; 50:2.

32 Is it they who apportion the Mercy of thy Lord? We have apportioned for them their livelihood in the life of this world and have raised some of them above others in rank, that some of them may take others into service. And the Mercy of thy Lord is better than that which they amass.

32 Is it they who apportion the Mercy of thy Lord? That is, “Do they apportion prophethood?” (JJ), or “Do they apportion the sustenance that God provides such that they can give it to those they love and withhold it from others?” (Ṭ), or “Should God’s choice of a prophet be in accord with their caprice?” (Qu). For similar rhetorical questions, see 35:40; 46:4; 52:36–37, 41; 68:37–39, 47; see also 35:40c; 46:4c. When the question is seen as a reference to prophethood, the implication is that God knows best who is fit for this station (IK). That God apportions livelihood can then be understood as an allusion to God’s choice of whomever He wills as a messenger (Ṭ). Wealth and social station are incorrectly interconnected with prophethood in the minds of the “leaders,” so here it is as if God is asking how being favored with wealth could be connected to being favored with prophethood (R). Regarding the manner in which God raises some above others in rank, see 6:165c; 17:21. The last sentence is understood to mean that Paradise is better than all the material goods and pleasures the disbelievers may amass and experience in this world (JJ, Ṭ). More generally, it can be understood to mean that the Mercy granted by God in religion is greater than any wealth that could be amassed, because God’s Mercy lasts forever, while the things of this world fade away (R).

33 And were it not that mankind would be one community, We would have made for those who disbelieve in the Compassionate silver roofs for their houses, stairways whereon to ascend,

34 doors to their houses, couches whereon to recline,

33–34 These verses are understood to mean that, were it not for the fact that people would have all disbelieved due to their inclination toward the world and neglect of the Hereafter, God would have provided great wealth for them (Q), or that ignorant people would think that God’s giving wealth was a sign of His Love and would thus be joined together in disbelief for the sake of wealth (IK). For other verses that allude to God's not wanting to make human beings a single community in disbelief, see 16:93c; 42:8c.

35 and gold ornaments. Yet all of that would be but enjoyment of the life of this world. And the Hereafter, in the presence of thy Lord, is for the reverent.

35 Enjoyment of the life of this world indicates the ephemeral delights of this world, which are naught but the enjoyment of delusion (3:185; 57:20) and stand in stark contrast to the rewards of the next life; see 3:14; 4:77; 9:38; 13:26; 20:131; 28:60; 29:64c; 40:39; 42:36.

36 Whosoever turns blindly away from the remembrance of the Compassionate, We assign to him a satan who is then a companion unto him.

37 And they turn them from the way; yet they suppose that they are rightly guided,

36–37 Remembrance of the Compassionate refers to either remembering and following God (IK) or the Quran (JJ); in the latter case it could be translated “the Reminder of the Compassionate.” In either interpretation, this verse can be understood as a response to all of the excuses for not following the Prophet posed by the disbelievers in the preceding verses. When the disbelievers choose to ignore the proofs of God, both rational and revealed, by turning away from them, save with a weak glance, their glance is like that of one whose vision has dimmed (Ṭ). Yet they have willed this for themselves. Therefore, God punishes them by “assigning satans” to them who will lead them further into the blindness they have chosen. Ibn Kathīr likens this verse to 61:5, which says of those among the Israelites who mistreated Moses, When they swerved, God caused their hearts to swerve; and God guides not iniquitous people; and 4:115: But whosoever opposes the Messenger, after guidance has been made clear to him, and follows a way other than that of the believers, We shall leave him on [the path] he has taken, and We shall cause him to burn in Hell—what an evil journey's end!

That those who turn away from God and His Messenger fall victim to Satan and his minions is asserted in several verses of the Quran, such as 4:38: Whosoever has Satan for a companion has an evil companion indeed! And 4:119: Whosoever takes Satan as a protector apart from God has surely suffered a manifest loss. For such people Satan has overwhelmed them, and thus made them forget the remembrance of God. They are the party of Satan. Lo! The party of Satan are losers (58:19). Their companion satans keep them from the things that are permissible and make them incline toward what is forbidden, prevent them from being obedient, and encourage them to disobey (Q). They thus make going astray seem like going aright, as in 41:25: We assigned to them companions, and they made that which is before them and that which is behind them seem fair to them. Regarding the influence that satans have upon human beings, the Prophet said, “There is none among you but that he has been assigned a jinn as his companion.” The Prophet was then asked, “And you, O Messenger of God?” He replied, “And me, except that God helped me against him and he submitted; so he only commands me to good.”

38 till, when he comes unto Us, he will say, “Would that there were between me and thee the distance of the two easts! What an evil companion!”

38 He comes unto Us renders jāʿanā, which in other canonical readings is considered to be in the dual form jāʿānā, meaning “when the two of them come,” that is, the one who turned away and his companion satan (IK, Q). On the Day of Judgment, those who had turned away blindly from the remembrance of God will seek to distance themselves from the satan they had taken as a companion in this world. Some understand the distance of the two easts to mean the distance between the east and the west (JJ, Q). The two easts, translating mashriqayn, could also be rendered “the two places from which the sun rises,” as the rising of the sun, sharaqa, derives from the same root, sh-r-q, as the word for “east,” mashriq. The distance between the two easts could thus be understood as a reference to the distance between the point from which the sun rises at the winter solstice and the point from which it rises at the summer solstice (Q).

39 Yet on that Day it will not benefit you, since you did wrong, to share in the punishment.

39 This verse can be read as an address to one who has turned away blindly and to his companion satan; it means that their being together in the Fire will not be of any help to them and that they will both partake of the punishment (IK). It can also be read as an address to human beings who were spiritually blind, meaning that their expression of remorse in disowning their companion satans will be of no benefit (JJ, Q). That they express regrets and admit their sin (67:11; cf. 40:11) is of no avail to them, since they had been offered ample opportunity to repent and make amends during the life of this world; see 6:25c; 32:12c; 35:37c. It could also be understood as a reference to the remembrance of the Compassionate (v. 36), meaning that because they choose to turn away from it in this world, they will not have the opportunity to turn toward it in the Hereafter.

40 Dost thou, then, make the deaf to hear or guide the blind and those in manifest error?

40 This verse is an address to the Prophet. From a Quranic perspective, the Prophet cannot cause those who are spiritually deaf and blind to hear or be guided by the revelation, because his only duty is to convey the revelation (see 3:20; 13:40), and whomsoever God leads astray, no guide has he (7:186; 13:33; 39:23, 36; 40:33); see 10:42–44; 27:80–81; 30:52–53c.

41 Either We shall take thee away, and then take vengeance upon them, 42 or We shall show thee that which We have promised them. For surely We have power over them.

41–42 The second part of v. 41 is understood by some to mean, “for We were vengeful with them,” meaning that God took vengeance upon past communities who rejected the prophets sent to them (Ṭ). In either rendering, these verses indicate that God will either take vengeance upon the disbelievers after the Prophet has passed away or bring the promised punishment upon them while the Prophet is still among them. These verses can also be read to mean that God will punish those who oppose the Prophet in the Hereafter or that He will punish them in this life by bringing the promised punishment upon them (JJ) and making the Prophet victorious over them (Ṭ). The two possibilities express the inevitability of Divine Punishment for rejecting the Prophet and the Quran. God spared them before (see 43:29c), but now that a messenger has come to them, they will have no reprieve.

④⁴³ So hold fast to that which We have revealed unto thee. Truly thou art upon a straight path.

43 The injunction is to hold fast to the Quran (IK, JJ, Ṭ), which ensures that one remains upon a straight path (see 1:6c), in contrast to the idolaters, who were not given a book beforehand to which they hold fast (v. 21).

④⁴⁴ Truly it is a reminder unto thee and thy people, and you will be questioned.

44 The Reminder (al-dhikr) is one of the names of the Quran (see 15:9c; 36:10–11c) and is also employed as a reference to scripture in general or to the Torah, as when the People of the Book are referred to as the people of the Reminder (16:43; 21:8); also see 41:41–42c. That it is a reminder unto thee and thy people is understood to mean that the Quran is an honor bestowed upon the Prophet and his people (IK, JJ, Ṭ), especially since it was a revelation sent down in their own language (IK, JJ). It also implies that since they are foremost in their ability to understand its language, they should be the most steadfast in adhering to it (IK), and that they will be questioned in the Hereafter regarding the degree to which they have fulfilled their duty toward it (JJ). The Quran mentions that people will be questioned at the Final Judgment in several verses (see, e.g., 7:6; 16:56, 93; 17:36; 29:13).

④⁴⁵ Ask those of Our messengers whom We sent before thee, “Have We appointed gods to be worshipped apart from the Compassionate?”

45 This verse is understood to mean that when the Prophet met all of the other prophets on the Night Journey (see 17:1c; introduction to Sūrah 53), he was to ask them this question (JJ), or that he was to ask it of the People of the Book (JJ, Ṭ), in which case some say there is an implied “unto whom” (ilayhim) in the verse so that it could be rendered, “Ask those before you [unto whom] We sent from among Our messengers” (Ṭ). The verse can also be understood as a purely rhetorical question, reaffirming that all of the messengers called their people to the same truths to which the Prophet Muhammad calls his people, as in 16:36: We indeed sent a messenger unto every community, “Worship God, and shun false deities!” (IK).

46 We did indeed send Moses with Our signs unto Pharaoh and his notables. And he said, “I am a messenger of the Lord of the worlds.”

46–56 Here the account of Moses provides a spiritual example, reflecting aspects of the Prophet Muhammad’s own challenges. For more detailed accounts of Moses’ mission, see 7:103–55; 10:75–93; 20:9–97; 26:10–66; 28:3–46. Shorter accounts pertaining to particular aspects of Moses’ mission can be found in 2:49–61; 5:20–26; 17:101–4; 27:7–14; 40:23–30; 44:17–31; 51:38–40; 79:15–25.

47 But when he brought them Our signs, behold, they laughed at them.

46–47 When Moses brought God’s signs to Pharaoh and his notables, they laughed at them in the same way that the Makkan idolaters mocked the signs with which the Prophet was sent (Ṭ), as when Pharaoh, Hāmān, and Korah said that Moses was a lying sorcerer (40:24; cf. 51:39).

48 Not a sign did We show them, but that it was greater than its sister. And We seized them with the punishment, that haply they may return.

48 Each of the signs that Moses brought was greater than the sign immediately before it (JJ, Ṭ); see 7:133–35, where these signs are mentioned. For their rejection of the signs, God punished them in the hope that they would repent (Ṭ) and recant their disbelief (JJ).

49 They said, “O sorcerer, call upon your Lord for us in accord with that which He has covenanted with you; surely we shall then be guided.”

49 A similar verse is 7:134, in which Pharaoh and the notables continue the address to Moses, saying, If you lift this torment from us, we shall surely believe in you, and we shall surely send forth the Children of Israel with you; see 7:134–35c. Their addressing Moses as sorcerer is not a slight, since they did not regard sorcery as reprehensible (cf. 7:109; 26:34–35). According to their worldview, this might in fact have been a way of honoring him (IK). In this way they recognized the “evidentiary miracles” with which Moses was sent, but the miracles themselves had no ultimate effect on them, because they were hardened disbelievers (see 7:132c; 27:13–14c). The primary function of prophetic miracles seems to be to elicit and encourage belief among those who are already somehow disposed to it, like the sorcerers who professed belief in the religion of Moses once they witnessed the power of his miracles (see 7:119–20c; 20:70; 26:47–48). In this way, evidentiary miracles, like the prophetic messages themselves, serve to distinguish the inherently good, but merely misguided, members of a disbelieving community from those, like Pharaoh, whose hearts were so thoroughly hardened that they rejected every sign or message the prophet brought. Regarding the inability of signs to convince those unwilling to believe in a prophet’s message, see 2:145; 6:25c; 7:146; 10:96–97. See also 10:81–82, where Moses responds to the sorcerers’ feats by indicating that it is God’s Words (rather than apparent supernatural feats) that ultimately separate truth from falsehood and illusion.

50 Yet when We removed the punishment from them, behold, they reneged.

50 Cf. 7:135. Despite the miracles and God’s suspension of the punishment in response to Moses’ supplications, Pharaoh and his notables return to their inveterate disbelief as soon as they feel safe. Their doing so reflects the Quranic theme that human beings will often invoke God when they are in need and then neglect God when they are safe or at ease, as in 39:8: And when harm befalls man, he calls upon his Lord, turning unto Him. Then when He bestows a blessing from Himself upon him, he forgets the One upon whom he called before and sets up equals unto God to lead astray from His path (see, e.g., 6:40–41c; 10:12; 17:67; 30:33).

51 And Pharaoh called out among his people, saying, “O my people! Is not the sovereignty of Egypt mine, and do these streams not flow beneath me? Do you not, then, see?”

51 Pharaoh’s invocation of the streams running beneath his feet as a sign of his sovereignty demonstrates both his haughtiness, since from a Quranic perspective God alone makes water flow, and his ignorance, since the Quran warns that God grants respite for a while, but can remove such blessings at any moment, as in 6:6: We sent the sky upon them with abundant rains, and made streams flow beneath them. Then We destroyed them for their sins, and brought into being after them another generation (see also 2:266; 15:3–4; 16:54–55; 22:48; 23:54–56; 44:25–28; 68:17–20).

52 Am I not better than this one who is vile and can scarcely speak plain?

52 The charge that Moses can scarcely speak plain refers, according to some commentators, to a lisp said to have resulted from a hot coal that was accidentally placed in his mouth when he was a child (IK, JJ); see 20:25–28c; 26:12–13c. According to some accounts, Pharaoh is lying, since this impediment had been removed when Moses asked of God, And untie a knot from my tongue, that they may understand my speech (20:27–28). To which God responded, Thou hast been granted thy request, O Moses! (20:36; IK). Alternately, it could be understood as Pharaoh’s assessment of the message that Moses brought.

53 Why, then, have armlets of gold not been cast upon him, and why do angels not accompany him?”

53 Here Pharaoh exhibits the same misunderstandings expressed by the Makkan idolaters in the first half of the sūrah. Just as the Makkan idolaters asked why God did not send the Quran down to a great man from one of the two towns (v. 31) rather than Muhammad, Pharaoh asks why Moses is not endowed with wealth similar to his own. And just as the idolaters asked of Muhammad, What ails this Messenger, who eats food and walks in the markets? Why is there not an angel sent down unto him to be a warner with him? (25:7), so too Pharaoh wonders why do angels not accompany Moses. The answer to these queries is given in 6:8: Had We sent down an angel, then the matter would be decreed, and they would be granted no respite; and 17:95: Were there angels walking about upon the earth in peace, then We would have sent down upon them an angel from Heaven as a messenger. For the disbelievers' various expressions of this objection to the prophets, see 6:8–9, 50; 11:12; 14:10–11; 17:94–95; 23:24, 33–34, 38, 47; 26:154, 186; 36:15; 41:14; 54:24; 64:6c; 74:25.

⑤④ Then he incited his people to make light, and they obeyed him. Truly they were an iniquitous people.

54 Then he incited his people to make light could also mean that he moved them to submit or to be foolish.

⑤⑤ So when they roused Our Anger, We took vengeance upon them and drowned them all together.

55 This is one of several references in the Quran to the drowning of Pharaoh and his army; see also 2:50; 7:136c; 8:54; 10:90; 17:102–3; 28:40; 44:23–24; 51:40. The Prophet is reported to have recited this verse after saying, “When you see that God gives a person what he wants even though he persists in sin, that means that God is enticing him into destruction” (IK).

⑤⑥ We made them a bygone people and an example for those of later times.

56 A bygone people renders salaf, which in this context could also be understood as “a precedent,” meaning that the manner in which God dealt with them served as a precedent and an example for other people who chose to follow their corrupt leaders rather than messengers from God (IK, Q), as did the Makkan leaders in rejecting the prophethood of Muhammad.

57 And when the son of Mary is set forth as an example, behold, thy people turn away from it.

58 They say, “Are our gods better, or is he?” They do not cite him to thee, save to dispute. Nay, they are a contentious people.

57–58 Turn away from it renders minhu yašiddūn, which can also be understood to mean, “cry aloud at it.” Are our gods better, or is he? expresses the idolaters’ objection that the Christian worship of Jesus is no different from their own worship of idols (Ṭ) or even their claim that their deities are better than Jesus (R). These verses are understood as a response to the objection posed by the idolaters when the Prophet recited 21:98: Surely you and that which you worship apart from God shall be fuel for Hell. Unto it you shall come. The idolaters sought to liken the Christian worship of Jesus to their worship of their own idols and then conclude from 21:98 that Jesus would suffer the same fate as their idols (IK, R). But since they know that 21:98 is addressed to them specifically, they should know that Jesus would not be included among the objects of worship referred to in this verse; thus they do not cite him . . . save to dispute (IK). Rather, they only bring up Christian worship for the sake of argument, not because it pertains to their beliefs (IK) or because they are concerned that the Prophet would say that Jesus was destined for Hell. In this sense, they are like the people of Noah, who disputed by means of falsehood in order to refute the truth (40:5).

59 He was naught but a servant whom We blessed and whom We made an example for the Children of Israel.

59 That Jesus is naught but a servant (cf. 19:30; 61:6) is understood as a response to the Christian view of Jesus as fully Divine and fully human, but may also be understood as a response to Christian sects that understood Jesus to be entirely Divine. Regarding the question of the divinization of Jesus, see commentary on 4:171–73. The Quran speaks of Jesus as a servant of God who was blessed with prophethood (IK, JJ) and was an example for the Children of Israel in being born miraculously of a virgin (see 3:42–47; also see commentary on 19:16–17), speaking as a baby in the cradle (see 3:46; 19:29–33), and performing evidentiary miracles (see commentary on 5:110–15). Alternately, this verse could be rendered, “He was naught but a servant. We blessed him and made him an example for the Children of Israel.”

60 Had We willed, We would have appointed angels among you, succeeding one another upon the earth.

60 God could destroy human beings and cause there to be generations of angels succeeding one another on earth instead of human beings (IK, JJ, Ṭ). This verse serves as a response to the idolaters’ understanding that the angels share in God’s Power by asserting that they are completely subject to God’s Will (R).

61 And he is indeed a portent of the Hour; so doubt not concerning it and follow Me. This is a straight path.

61 According to traditional Islamic belief, Jesus did not die a natural death; rather, God raised him up unto Himself (4:158; cf. 3:55). In traditional Islamic eschatology, Jesus’ return to earth is among the signs of the end of time. The Prophet is reported to have said, “One of the signs of the Hour will be the appearance of Jesus the son of Mary before the Day of Resurrection” (IK, Q, Ṭ), at which point it is said that he will fight the Antichrist (al-Dajjāl), eventually die, and be resurrected like other mortals.

62 And let not Satan turn you away; truly he is a manifest enemy unto you.

62 This verse cautions believers not to let Satan turn them away or block them from following the way of God's religion (JJ) or the truth (IK). For references to Satan as a manifest enemy, see also 2:168, 208; 6:142; 7:22; 12:5; 17:53; 28:15; 36:60.

63 When Jesus brought clear proofs, he said, "I have come unto you with wisdom and to make clear to you some of that wherein you differ. So reverence God and obey me.

63 For the story of Jesus and the message he brings, see 3:45–59; 4:153–72; 5:110–18; 19:16–40. All messengers are said to bring clear proofs, which are understood by some to be evidentiary miracles and the prescriptions of the Divine Law (JJ, R). In the case of Jesus, some also understand clear proofs to mean the Gospel (Ṭ) and its injunctions (Z). For the evidentiary miracles with which Jesus came, such as speaking in the cradle, healing lepers, raising the dead, and breathing life into a bird, see commentary on 3:49; 5:110; 19:29–34; also see 2:87c; 2:253. Wisdom is understood as a reference to prophethood (IK, JJ, Ṭ) or to the Gospel and its revealed laws (Z). It can also be understood to mean the knowledge of God's Essence, Attributes, and actions (R). To make clear to you some of that wherein you differ refers to Jesus' clarification of the rulings of the Torah regarding which the Jews disputed with one another (JJ, Q, Ṭ). Some understand this verse to be a reference to the accusation that the Jews had altered parts of the Torah (cf. 2:75; Q, Ṭ). So reverence God and obey me is also said by Jesus in 3:50 and by the prophets Noah (26:108, 110), Hūd (26:126, 131), Šālīḥ (26:144, 150), Lot (26:163), and Shu'ayb (26:179).

64 Truly God is my Lord and your Lord; so worship Him. This is a straight path."

64 Cf. 3:51; 19:36.

65 But, then, the parties differed among themselves. Woe unto those who do wrong for the punishment of a painful day.

65 The followers of Jesus differed regarding whether he was God or the third of three (5:73; JJ), in which case this verse would refer to the views regarding the Trinity of various Christian sects, such as the Melkites, the Jacobites, the Nestorians (Q, R), and others not known to the classical commentary tradition. It could also be read as a reference to the Jews' and Christians' dispute regarding the understanding of Jesus (Q, R).

66 Do they await aught but that the Hour should come upon them suddenly, while they are unaware.

66 Cf. 47:18. That the Hour of Judgment or the punishment will come upon the disbelievers while they are unaware (cf. 12:107; 26:202; 29:53; 39:55) indicates that one must be prepared for it at all times and alludes to the Quranic position that knowledge of the Hour lies only with God; see 43:85c.

67 Friends on that Day will be enemies to one another, save for the reverent.

67 On the Day of Judgment, those who were friends in disobedience to God will become enemies to one another (JJ), since the folly of everything upon which they had relied will be exposed and all recourse will be cut off from them (2:166); so today they have no loyal friend here (69:35). Thus no loyal friend shall ask about a loyal friend (70:10), and on that Day a man will flee from his brother, and his mother and his father, and his spouse and his children (80:34–36), since for every man that Day his affair shall suffice him (80:37; see also 40:18; 44:41). The rancor they feel toward one another (see 2:166–67; 7:38–39c; 29:25; 34:31–33) is among the reasons the Day of Judgment is also known as the Day of Mutual Dispossession (yawm al-taghābūn; 64:9); also see commentary on 70:10–14 and Abraham's words to his people in 29:25: You have taken idols apart from God on account of affection between you in the life of this world. Then on the Day of Resurrection you will disown one another, and you will curse one another; your refuge will be the Fire, and you will have no helpers. The fate of the disbelievers stands in sharp contrast to the experience of the reverent, whose conversation in Paradise is marked by mutual greetings of "Peace" (see 10:10; 14:23; 19:62; 56:25–26), since God has removed all rancor from them (see 7:43c; 15:47).

68 O My servants! No fear shall be upon you this Day; nor shall it be you who grieve, 69 you who believed in Our signs and who were submitters;

68–69 The promise that they shall not fear or grieve indicates that they are spared any punishment in the Hereafter. This same promise is made with slight variation to those who follow God’s Guidance (2:38), whosoever believes in God and the Last Day and works righteousness (2:62; 5:69; cf. 6:48), whosoever submits his face to God, while being virtuous (2:112), those who spend their wealth in the way of God (2:262; cf. 2:274), those who believe and perform righteous deeds, maintain the prayer and give the alms (2:277), whosoever is reverent and makes amends (7:35), and the friends of God (10:62), all of which are attributes of those who can truly be called God’s servants.

Submitted renders muslimūn and is thus understood by many as a confessional designation (Q). But given the Quran’s more comprehensive use of the words muslim and islām as well as their verbal forms, it can also be understood as a reference to all human beings who submit themselves to God; see 31:22c.

70 enter the Garden, you and your spouses, made joyous.

70 Cf. 36:56–57. Believers are said to be rewarded with spouses made pure (2:25; 3:15; 4:57), which can be understood as an allusion to spiritual beings particular to Paradise or to the spouses of this world who have also attained Paradise; see also 56:16. Made joyous (cf. 30:15) translates yuḥbarūn, which also indicates being blessed and honored (IK, JJ, Q, Ṭ).

71 For them are brought round trays and goblets of gold. Therein is whatsoever souls desire and eyes find pleasing. And you shall abide therein.

71 Trays and goblets of gold allude to the food and drinks that such implements are used to serve (IK). For other delights brought round, see 37:45–47 and 76:15–17; see also 56:18–19. The inhabitants of Paradise will receive whatsoever souls desire (cf. 41:31; 52:22; 56:20–24; 77:41–44), whatsoever they will (16:31; 25:16; 39:34; 42:22; 50:35), and whatsoever they call for (36:57; cf. 41:31; 44:55), whereas for the disbelievers a barrier is set between them and that which they desire (34:54). Some commentators see trays and goblets of gold as a reference to the rewards received by those who are attached to reward, and whatsoever souls desire and eyes find pleasing as an allusion to those whose hearts burn with love for God and yearn for the vision of Him (My).

72 This is the Garden that you have inherited for that which you used to do.

72 Regarding inheriting the Garden, see 7:43c. In this context, some maintain that no one will enter Paradise by virtue of deeds alone, but that the degrees of Paradise to which its inhabitants may attain will be according to righteous deeds (IK).

73 Abundant fruit from which you will eat shall be yours therein.

73 This is one of several verses to promise fruit or fruits in Paradise; see 36:57c; 37:41–42; 38:51; 44:55; 47:15c; 55:22, 52–54, 68; 56:20, 32; 77:41–42.

74 Truly the guilty are abiding in the punishment of Hell.

75 It will not be lightened for them, and therein will they despair.

74–75 The punishment . . . will not be lightened (cf. 2:86, 162; 3:88; 16:85; cf. 35:36) for a single moment (IK), since it is inescapable (25:65), and there is no security from the punishment (70:28). Will despair renders mublisūn (cf. 6:44; 30:49), which also connotes regret and the experience of being dumbstruck, unable to speak in defense of oneself (I_s); see 6:42–44c.

76 We did not wrong them; rather, it is they who were the wrongdoers.

76 This is one of many verses indicating that God does not cause injustice, as in 4:40: Truly God commits not so much as a mote's weight of wrong. From a Quranic perspective, although evil befalls people, it results from their own actions, since themselves do they wrong (3:117, 135; see also, e.g., 10:44; 16:118; 35:32; 37:113).

77 And they will call, "O Mālik, let thy Lord put an end to us." He will reply, "You will surely remain.

77 The denizens of Hell will call to the angel Mālik, who is said to be the keeper of Hell, to destroy them, so that they will receive some respite from the torments of the Fire (IK). Similarly, on the Day of Judgment, the disbeliever says, "Oh, would that I were dust!" (78:40), and when they are cast bound together into a narrow place thereof, they will, there and then, call to be destroyed (25:13). Regarding their request to die or be destroyed, 35:36 states, They will not be done away with so as to die; nor will aught of its punishment be lightened for them. Thus do We requite every disbeliever (IK). Mālik's response, which is said to take a thousand years (JJ, Q), will be that they are to remain there everlastingly.

78 We did indeed bring you the truth, but most of you were averse to the truth."

78 Cf. 10:82. This verse can be read as a continuation of Mālik's address to the denizens of Hell or as a Quranic address to the disbelievers (Q). The latter reading makes more sense in the present context, but the former reading corresponds more closely to a similar passage in 40:49–50: And those who are in the Fire will say to the keepers of Hell, "Call upon your Lord to relieve us from a day of the punishment." They will reply, "Did not your messengers bring you clear proofs?" They will say, "Yea, indeed." They will say, "Then make supplications!" But the supplication of the disbelievers is naught but astray. When understood as an address to the disbelievers, the truth can also be read as a proper name for the Quran, in which case it would be the Truth.

79 Or have they devised anything? Truly it is We Who devise.

79 Whatever the disbelievers plot or devise is of no avail to them, since ultimately it is God Who devises all plots, as in 27:50–51: And they devised a plot, and We devised a plot, while they were not aware. So behold how their plot fared in the end; truly We destroyed them and their people all together (cf. 14:46; 52:42).

80 Or do they suppose that We hear not their secret and their secret converse? Yea, and Our envoys are present with them, recording.

80 Their secret refers to the sins that people attempt to hide or to their intentions, while secret converse refers to what the disbelievers say when plotting against the Prophet or when deriding him. God is present in and knows the details of every gathering, as in 58:7: There is no secret converse among three, but that He is their fourth, nor among five, but that He is their sixth, nor less than that, nor more, but that He is with them wheresoever they are. Then on the Day of Resurrection He will inform them of that which they did. The plots people devise during their secret converse are, like all deeds, recorded by attendant angels who are elsewhere described as guardians, noble, writing, knowing what you do (82:10–12); see 50:17–18c. On the Day of Judgment, each person is then presented with a record of his or her deeds, which is unfolded as a book he will meet wide open (17:13), and to each person it is said, Read your book! On this Day, your soul suffices as a reckoner against you (17:14; Ṭ), and they find present [therein] whatsoever they did (18:49); see 17:13–14c; 18:49c.

81 Say, “If the Compassionate had a child, then I would be the first of the worshippers.”

81 This verse returns to the discussion at the beginning of the sūrah regarding the idolaters' assertion that God has offspring, an idea frequently criticized in the Quran (see 2:116; 6:100; 9:30; 10:68; 17:40, 111; 18:4; 19:35, 88–93; 21:26; 25:2; 37:149–53c; 39:4; 43:16; 52:39; 72:3). Most understand this verse to mean that the Prophet would be the first to worship God's offspring if He did indeed have any (IK, JJ, R, Ṭ). Others understand the verse to mean, "If by your account God has a child, I am the first to worship God alone and to deny you" (R, Ṭ). In this sense it could be understood as a categorical rejection of the central tenet upon which the religion of the idolaters is founded. If renders the Arabic particle in, which can function as a conditional particle, as rendered here, or as a particle of negation, such that the verse could be read, "The Compassionate does not have a child; and I am the first of the worshippers" (R, Ṭ), meaning, "I am the first among you to worship Him with faith and sincerity" (Ṭ).

82 Glory be to the Lord of the heavens and the earth, the Lord of the Throne, above that which they ascribe.

82 Glory be also indicates God's complete transcendence and is thus a way of negating the assertion of the idolaters addressed in the previous verse by saying that God is too great to be associated with anything they ascribe to Him; see 37:180c. God is Lord of the Throne (see also 9:129; 21:22; 23:86, 116; 27:26), which is borne by angels (40:7; 69:17), and is also described as Possessor of the Throne (17:42; 81:20; 85:15).

83 And leave them to indulge in idle talk and play until they meet the Day that they are promised.

83 This verse is similar to 70:42, and both are reflected in the injunction of 6:91: Say, "Allāh," then leave them to play at their vain discourse. This is not to say that one cannot have any contact with the idolaters, but that when you hear the signs of God being rejected and mocked, do not sit with them till they engage in some other discourse, or else you will surely be like them (4:140; cf. 6:68, 112–13). Elsewhere, those who indulge in idle talk are said to be in the Fire (52:11–15; 74:45–46).

84 He it is Who is God in Heaven and God on earth. And He is the Wise, the Knowing.

85 Blessed is He unto Whom belongs sovereignty over the heavens and the earth and whatsoever is between them, and with Whom lies knowledge of the Hour, and unto Whom you will be returned.

84–85 God is not confined to the heavens, and His relationship with earth is the same as His relationship with Heaven (R). In this sense, God has no need for offspring or other deities to govern the affairs of any realm, since He is the God not only of all realms but also in all realms, with complete sovereignty over all realms. Knowledge of their end lies with Him alone (see 7:187; 31:34; 33:63; 41:47; 67:25–26; 79:42–46; cf. Matthew 24:36; Mark 13:32), and at that time all souls will return to Him.

86 Those upon whom they call apart from Him have no power of intercession, save such as have borne witness to the truth knowingly.

86 The idols upon whom the idolaters call can do nothing for them, but this does not mean a categorical rejection of intercession. Although Unto God belongs intercession altogether (39:44), others can be granted powers of intercession by His Leave, as in 20:109: On that Day intercession will be of no benefit, save [that of] those whom the Compassionate has granted leave and with whose word He is content (cf. 19:87; 34:23; 53:26). Regarding the question of intercession, see also 2:48c; 2:255c; 10:3; 39:44; 74:48. Save such as have borne witness to the truth knowingly means that only those who bear witness to the truth will receive intercession (Q, R, Ṭ), in which case, that they must do so knowingly indicates that testimony with the tongue is not efficacious unless it is combined with faith, knowledge, and certainty (Q, R). Alternately, this last phrase is understood as a reference to the angels, Jesus, and Ezra, all of whom are said to have been worshipped mistakenly (that is, people called upon them apart from God), though they themselves never ceased to bear witness to the Truth (Ṭ).

87 Wert thou to ask them, “Who created you?” they would surely say, “God.” How, then, are they perverted?

87 Cf. 29:61. Although some of the idolaters recognize a supreme Creator over all of the other deities they associate with Him (cf. 10:31; 23:84–85; 29:61, 63; 31:25; 39:38; 43:9; see 43:9c), they still maintain a polytheistic view in which other deities partake of His Power. The Quran thus asks rhetorically how it is that they can be perverted, or turned away from worshipping God alone (IK, JJ, Ṭ); see 29:61c.

88 And as for his saying, “O my Lord, truly these are a people who believe not,”

88 This verse records the words of the Prophet lamenting the state of his people, similar to 25:30: And the Messenger will say, “O my Lord! Truly my people have taken this Quran for foolishness” (IK). Here it is read as a new thought, but it can also be understood as following upon v. 85, meaning with Whom lies the knowledge of the Hour and of his saying, “O my Lord, truly these are a people who believe not” (Ṭ). Others read this verse in the nominative and understand it to follow upon v. 80, meaning “Or do they suppose that We hear not . . . his saying, “O my Lord, truly these are a people who believe not” (Ṭ).

89 bear with them and say, “Peace.” For soon they will know.

89 In response to his lament, the Prophet is enjoined to avoid responding to the disbelievers in the same manner in which they address him and to seek, rather, to soften their hearts and forgive them (IK). That soon they will know the truth of that which they rejected (cf. 15:3, 96; 29:66; 37:170; 40:70) may refer to their realizing the truth in the Hereafter, but it can also be understood as an allusion to the Prophet’s eventual defeat of the Makkan idolaters (IK, JJ). In accord with this latter interpretation, some say that this verse was abrogated after the command to fight was given (Q, Ṭ), implying that it no longer applies (IK, JJ). But such an interpretation is not in keeping with the general Quranic principle found in 25:63–64: The servants of the Compassionate are those who walk humbly upon the earth, and when the ignorant address them, they say, “Peace,” and who pass the night before their Lord, prostrating and standing [in prayer]; see 25:63c; 7:199c. Others maintain that the present verse is “definitive” (muḥkam) and therefore cannot be abrogated (Q).

Smoke

al-Dukhān

Al-Dukhān is from the Makkan period, although v. 15 is considered by some to be from the Madinan period (Āl, JJ). It takes its name from the mention of the manifest smoke, which is said to cover people (vv. 10–11). Some see this sūrah as following upon the final verse of the previous sūrah, so that what soon they will know (43:89) is the reality of the clear Book (v. 2; Aj). The lament attributed to the Prophet Muhammad at the end of the previous sūrah, O my Lord, truly these are a people who believe not (43:88), is echoed in Moses' condemnation of Pharaoh and his followers in v. 22: These are a guilty people.

Al-Dukhān opens with an oath upon the Quran and an allusion to the manner in which it was revealed and the nature of revelation (vv. 2–6). After a brief affirmation of God's Omnipotence (vv. 7–8), the sūrah rebukes those who doubt and tells of the punishment that they will receive for having denied God's messengers (vv. 9–16). This section is followed by an account of Moses, the manner in which Pharaoh and his followers rejected him, and a description of how the Israelites were delivered from oppression (vv. 17–33). After rebuking the disbelievers for denying the Resurrection and, like Pharaoh, exalting themselves (vv. 34–39), the sūrah tells of the Day of Resurrection (vv. 40–42) and contrasts the punishments of the denizens of Hell (vv. 43–50) with the rewards bestowed upon the reverent in Paradise (vv. 51–57). This is a well-known and oft-recited sūrah regarding which the Prophet is reported to have said, "Whosoever recites al-Dukhān during the night will greet the morning with seventy thousand angels asking forgiveness for him" (Aj, Āl, Ṭs, Z).

In the Name of God, the Compassionate, the Merciful

① Hā. Mīm. ② By the clear Book, ③ truly We sent it down on a blessed night—truly We are ever warning. ④ Therein every wise command is made distinct, ⑤ as a command from Us—truly We are ever sending, ⑥ as a mercy from thy Lord. Truly He is the Hearing, the Knowing, ⑦ Lord of the heavens and the earth and whatsoever is between them; would that you were certain. ⑧ There is no god but He; He gives life and causes death, your Lord and the Lord of your fathers of old. ⑨ Nay, but they are playing in doubt. ⑩ So keep watch for a day when the sky brings forth manifest smoke, ⑪ covering the people. This is a painful punishment. ⑫ “Our Lord! Remove from us the punishment; truly we are believers.” ⑬ How can there be a reminder for them, when a clear messenger had come to them? ⑭ Then they turned away from him and said, “He is taught, possessed.” ⑮ We shall indeed remove the punishment a little. Surely you will revert. ⑯ On the Day when We strike with a terrible striking, surely We are vengeful. ⑰ And indeed We tried the people of Pharaoh before them, and a noble messenger came unto them: ⑱ “Deliver God’s servants unto me! Truly I am a trustworthy messenger unto you. ⑲ And rise not against God; surely I have come to you with a manifest authority. ⑳ Truly I seek refuge in my Lord and your Lord, lest you stone me. ㉑ But if you believe me not, then keep away from me.” ㉒ Then he called unto his Lord, “These are a guilty people.” ㉓ “Set forth with My servants by night; you will indeed be pursued. ㉔ And leave the sea at rest; truly they will be a drowned host.” ㉕ How many gardens and springs did they leave behind, ㉖ sown fields and a noble dwelling, ㉗ and prosperity in which they rejoiced? ㉘ Thus it was. And We bequeathed it unto another people. ㉙ Neither Heaven nor earth wept for them, nor were they granted respite. ㉚ And We delivered the Children of Israel from a humiliating punishment— ㉛ from Pharaoh. Truly he was foremost among the prodigal. ㉜ We knowingly chose them over the worlds. ㉝ And We gave them signs wherein was a manifest trial. ㉞

Truly these say, 35 “There is naught but our first death, and we shall not be resurrected. 36 Bring us our fathers, if you are truthful.” 37 Are they better, or the people of Tubba^c and those before them? We destroyed them. Truly they were guilty. 38 And We did not create the heavens and the earth and whatsoever is between them in play. 39 We did not create them, save in truth. But most of them know not. 40 Truly the Day of Division is their tryst, all together. 41 The Day when no friend will avail a friend in any way, nor will they be helped, 42 save him unto whom God has been merciful. Truly He is the Mighty, the Merciful. 43 Truly the tree of Zaqqūm 44 is the food of the sinner, 45 like molten lead boiling in their bellies, 46 like the boiling of boiling liquid. 47 “Seize him and thrust him into the midst of Hellfire! 48 Then pour the punishment of boiling liquid upon his head.” 49 “Taste! Surely you are the mighty, the noble. 50 This is that which you used to doubt.” 51 Truly the reverent are in a station secure, 52 amid gardens and springs, 53 wearing fine silk and rich brocade, facing one another. 54 Thus it is. And We shall wed them to wide-eyed maidens. 55 Therein they call for every fruit, secure. 56 They taste not death therein, save the first death. And He will shield them from the punishment of Hellfire— 57 a bounty from thy Lord; that is the great triumph. 58 We have only made this easy upon thy tongue, that haply they may remember. 59 So be on the watch, for they, too, are on the watch.

1 This sūrah is the fifth in a series of seven sūrahs that open with the Arabic letters ḥā° and mīm and are referred to collectively as the Ḥawāmīm. The Arabic letters ḥā° and mīm are among the separated letters (al-muqaṭṭa'āt) that are found at the beginning of twenty-nine sūrahs (see 2:1c) and whose meaning is considered by most commentators to be known only to God. For some possible meanings of these particular letters, see 40:1c.

② By the clear Book,

2 See 43:2c.

③ truly We sent it down on a blessed night—truly We are ever warning.

④ Therein every wise command is made distinct,

3–5 A blessed night refers to the Night of Power (see commentary on 97:1–3), which is understood to occur during the latter part of the month of Ramadan, or it refers to the middlemost night of the month of Sha°bān, that is, the eve of the fifteenth of the month that precedes Ramadan (Aj, JJ). According to many commentators, the Quran was sent down from the Mother of the Book (see 3:7c; 13:39), thus from the seventh Heaven to the lowest Heaven, on the eve of the fifteenth of Sha°bān (JJ) and was then sent from the lowest Heaven into this world on the Night of Power. Therein would thus refer to either of the two nights (JJ). Every wise command renders kullu amrin ḥakīm, which can also mean, “every definitive command” or “every definitive matter.” That each is made distinct refers to God’s sending the provision of the year and organizing the affairs for each entire year on the eve of the fifteenth of Sha°bān, during which God effaces what He will and establishes (13:39; Aj). Regarding the connection between the eve of the fifteenth of Sha[°]bān and the Night of Power, Ibn [°]Abbās is reported to have said, “God makes all of the decrees on the eve of the middle of Sha[°]bān; then He delivers them to their masters [the angels who carry each Command or Decree down to this earth; see 97:4c] on the Night of Power” (Aj). Thus the process by which every wise command is made distinct begins on the eve of the fifteenth of Sha[°]bān and is completed on the Night of Power (Aj), when they are transferred from the Preserved Tablet (see 85:22c) by the angels (IK), and all that occurs does so as a command that originates directly from God’s Presence, as does all revelation (IK). That God is ever sending could be seen as a reference to the Quran being sent as a mercy to everyone who believes in it (IJ) or to God sending messengers to humanity throughout history (IJ, IK, JJ).

⑥ as a mercy from thy Lord. Truly He is the Hearing, the Knowing,

6 As translated, as a mercy explains the reason for which God sends revelation and messengers, that is, “for the purpose of mercy,” similar to 21:107, which says of God sending the Prophet Muhammad, And We sent thee not, save as a mercy unto the worlds. In the present verse, a mercy could also be read as a continuation of the previous verse, meaning, “We are sending a mercy from thy Lord,” in which case a mercy is also understood to be a reference to the Prophet Muhammad (Q).

⑦ Lord of the heavens and the earth and whatsoever is between them; would that you were certain.

7 The idolaters among the Makkans acknowledged that there was a Lord and Creator of the heavens and the earth, but then attributed partners to Him. If, however, their acknowledgment were based upon knowledge and certainty, they would know that He is also the One who sends revelation and messengers as a mercy from Him (Aj).

⑧ There is no god but He; He gives life and causes death, your Lord and the Lord of your fathers of old.

8 That He gives life and causes death (cf. 2:258; 3:156; 7:158; 9:116; 10:56; 22:6; 23:80; 40:68; 53:44; 57:2) indicates God's Power over all phases of existence and nonexistence at all times; see 7:158c.

9 Nay, but they are playing in doubt.

9 The disbelievers are in doubt even when they acknowledge that God is their Creator, as they are only doing so in blind imitation of their forefathers and not on the basis of their own discernment (Q). This verse could also be read as a reference to the manner in which they reject the truth when it comes to them (IK), or to what they attribute to the Prophet, mocking him and saying that he fabricated the revelation (Q); see 10:38; 11:13; 16:101; 21:5; 32:3; 46:8.

10 So keep watch for a day when the sky brings forth manifest smoke, 11 covering the people. This is a painful punishment.

10–11 Manifest smoke is understood as one of the signs that the Hour—that is, the end of the world—is at hand (Q). The smoke is said to afflict believers like a harsh cold wind (zukkām), but to penetrate into disbelievers and cause great affliction (Mw, Q). Others understand this verse as a reference to a time when the Prophet prayed for a famine to come upon the disbelievers, and the famine besieged them to such a degree that their eyes were clouded over from the severity of hunger and they saw what appeared to be smoke rising between heaven and earth (IK, JJ, Q, Ṭ), in which case covering the people would refer to the manner in which the smoke overwhelmed them (IK); see also 16:112–13c. A few commentators propose that the day when the sky brings forth manifest smoke refers to the conquest of Makkah (Q), in which case it would refer to the dust stirred up by the Muslim armies as they entered Makkah. This is a painful punishment describes the affliction to which the disbelievers will be subject or reports their own words upon receiving the punishment (Q) or what is said to them by way of rebuke (IK), similar to 52:14.

⑫ “Our Lord! Remove from us the punishment; truly we are believers.”

12 In this verse the disbelievers are saying, “Were you, Our Lord, to remove the punishment, we would be believers” (Q); cf. 6:27; 14:44; 23:99–100; 32:12; 35:37. When vv. 10–11 are understood as a reference to the famine that afflicted the disbelievers, this verse is understood as their plea to the Prophet (Q), similar to the passages in which Pharaoh and his followers ask Moses to remove the punishment of the plagues from them (see commentary on 7:134–35; 43:49–50). The punishment thus refers specifically to the manifest smoke or to the hunger that afflicts them (Mw, Q), which would be one and the same, since the manifest smoke arises as a result of the severe hunger resulting from famine (Q).

⑬ How can there be a reminder for them, when a clear messenger had come to them?

⑭ Then they turned away from him and said, “He is taught, possessed.”

13–14 These are among several verses indicating that once the punishment has come upon the disbelievers there will be no opportunity for them to repent or hear another reminder, since they had already denied the messenger or messengers that God had sent to them in this world (JJ); see also 34:52–53c; 35:37; 89:23. Some denied the Prophet by saying that he was taught, he was merely uttering words that he learned from someone else, as in 16:103: Indeed, We know that they say, “He has merely been taught by a human being.” Others said that he was possessed by a jinn; see 15:6; 26:27; 37:36; 51:39; 52:29; 54:9; 68:2, 51; 81:22. Similarly, when the disbelievers are called to prostrate in the Hereafter, they will not be able to do so, since they had not heeded the call to prostrate while they were yet sound (68:43).

⑮ We shall indeed remove the punishment a little. Surely you will revert.

15 When vv. 10–11 are understood as a reference to the drought and famine that afflicted the Makkan idolaters, this verse can be understood as a reference to the manner in which God dealt with disbelieving communities in the past, relieving them of the punishment for a brief period, after which they reverted to disbelief. Revert renders ‘ā’idūn, which could also be understood to mean “return,” in which case this verse would refer to the punishment of the Hereafter, meaning that the disbelievers will return to the Fire over and over again (Mw, Q), as in 22:22: Whensoever they desire, in their grief, to leave it, they shall be returned unto it, while [being told], “Taste the punishment of the burning!” (cf. 32:20). This verse could also be read as a more general reminder that they will return to God (Q) or to mean that if the disbelievers are granted respite, they will return to their immoral behavior.

①⑥ On the Day when We strike with a terrible striking, surely We are vengeful.

16 This verse is understood as referring to either an event in the future or an event that has passed. If the latter, the last sentence would be rendered, “surely We were vengeful.” Given the tense of the sentence and the overall Quranic context, this verse would appear to refer to the Day of Resurrection (IK, Mw, Q) or to the Hour (Mw, Q). Nonetheless, as with other Makkan verses that refer to an impending punishment, many commentators understand this verse as an allusion to the Battle of Badr, in which the Muslims defeated the Makkan army (IK, Mw, Q, T).

①⑦ And indeed We tried the people of Pharaoh before them, and a noble messenger came unto them:

17–31 As with other sūrahs that feature the story of Moses (see also 40:23–45; 43:46–56; 51:38–40; 79:15–25), the account given here provides a spiritual example reflecting aspects of the Prophet Muhammad’s challenge rather than an in-depth historical account. The more detailed accounts of Moses’ mission are found in 2:49–61; 7:103–55; 10:75–93; 17:101–4; 20:9–97; 26:10–66; 27:7–14; 28:3–46.

17 That the people were tried alludes to the manner in which all people are tested by the nature of their reaction to the prophets God sends them (R).

①⑧ “Deliver God’s servants unto me! Truly I am a trustworthy messenger unto you.

18 Here Moses' words echo those spoken by Moses in 7:105, So send forth with me the Children of Israel, and those spoken by Moses and Aaron in 20:47, So send forth with us the Children of Israel and punish them not. The declaration I am a trustworthy messenger unto you indicates that he does not conjecture and has been entrusted by God with revelation (Aj). Such a declaration is also made by the prophets Noah (26:107), Hūd (26:125), Ṣāliḥ (26:143), Lot (26:162), and Shu'ayb (26:178) to their respective communities. "The Trustworthy One" (al-Amīn) is also a name by which the Prophet Muhammad was known.

19 And rise not against God; surely I have come to you with a manifest authority.

19 Rise not against God could also be rendered, "Exalt not yourselves against God," meaning, "Do not be too arrogant to follow Him, accept His proofs, and believe in His signs" (IK). A manifest authority (cf. 4:153; 11:96; 23:45; 40:23) refers to the clear signs and definitive proof with which Moses was sent (IK).

20 Truly I seek refuge in my Lord and your Lord, lest you stone me.

20 Some understand lest you stone me as a reference to a verbal assault (IK, R, Ṭ); others understand it more literally (IK, Ṭ) to mean, "lest you kill me" (R); see 26:116c.

21 But if you believe me not, then keep away from me."

21 This verse says, "Refrain from harming me, even if you do not believe me," though the Egyptians did in fact seek to harm Moses (JJ). It can also be understood to mean, "I have nothing to do with you, and you have nothing to do with me (R, Z), so let us each live in peace until God judges between us" (IK), similar to many verses that allude to the Prophet Muhammad's relationship with the idolaters among the Quraysh; see the introduction to Sūrah 109.

②② Then he called unto his Lord, “These are a guilty people.”

22 After Pharaoh and his followers would not permit Moses and the Israelites to practice their religion, Moses implored God to take vengeance upon them, as also described in 10:88: Moses said, “Our Lord! Truly Thou hast given Pharaoh and his notables ornament and wealth in the life of this world, our Lord, so that they may lead astray from Thy way. Our Lord! Blot out their wealth and harden their hearts, so that they will not believe till they see the painful punishment.”

②③ “Set forth with My servants by night; you will indeed be pursued.

②④ And leave the sea at rest; truly they will be a drowned host.”

23–24 Cf. 20:77. Moses is commanded to leave the sea as it is (IK), with a dry path through it (20:77) and to not command it to go back, as he may have been inclined to do (Z), until the last of Pharaoh’s host had entered it (IK, Ṭ). This is one of several references to the drowning of Pharaoh and his army in the Red Sea; see also 2:50; 7:136c; 8:54; 10:90; 17:102–3; 28:40; 43:55; 51:40.

②⑤ How many gardens and springs did they leave behind,

②⑥ sown fields and a noble dwelling,

②⑦ and prosperity in which they rejoiced?

②⑧ Thus it was. And We bequeathed it unto another people.

25–28 Cf. 26:57–59. The abundance that Pharaoh and his people enjoyed in this world was taken from them in a single morning and left behind for others to enjoy. Prosperity translates na‘mah, which refers generally to pleasures and luxuries. But it could also be read ni‘mah, meaning “blessing,” and thus refer to all that God had provided for Pharaoh and his people (R, Z).

This passage serves as an admonition to the idolaters among the Quraysh that their wealth and property could be taken from them at any moment for their opposition to the Prophet. In this sense it is similar to those passages that speak of the wealth and power of past generations who were nonetheless destroyed for their iniquities; see 6:6c; 7:4; 17:17; 19:74, 98; 21:11; 22:45; 28:58; 38:3; 44:37; 47:13; 50:36. The property of the Egyptians, or something similar to what they had been granted, was then bequeathed to those whom they had oppressed, as in 26:59: So it was, and We made the Children of Israel to inherit them; see also 7:137c; 28:5c.

29 Neither Heaven nor earth wept for them, nor were they granted respite.

29 This verse can be understood as an allusion to the inhabitants of Heaven and earth (Mw, Q, R, Ṭ) or a direct reference to Heaven and earth. According to Islamic tradition, every individual has a gate to Heaven through which provision descends and good deeds ascend. When a believer dies, the gate closes and weeps because it misses the believer, as does the place on earth where the person would pray and remember God. But as the people of Pharaoh left no trace of righteousness on earth and had no good deeds that would ascend to Heaven, neither Heaven nor earth wept for them (IK, Mw, Q, Ṭ). That they were not granted respite means that the punishment came upon them suddenly and without warning.

30 And We delivered the Children of Israel from a humiliating punishment—

31 from Pharaoh. Truly he was foremost among the prodigal.

30–31 Regarding the delivery of the Children of Israel from Egypt, see 2:49–50; 7:141; 10:90; 20:80; 26:65.

32 We knowingly chose them over the worlds.

32 The Children of Israel were chosen above the other people of their own time (IK, Q, Ṭ) in receiving revelation and religion (Mw); see 45:16c. Maybudī maintains that this verse can also be understood as an allusion to God’s having chosen human beings above all other animals, as in 17:70: We have indeed honored the Children of Adam; and to human beings being the most beautiful of God’s creations, as in 95:4: Truly We created man in the most beautiful stature.

33 And We gave them signs wherein was a manifest trial.

33 The signs in this verse can be understood as a reference to the deliverance of the Children of Israel from their enemies, the splitting of the sea for them, and the manna and quails they received (see 2:57c; 7:160–62c; 20:80; Mw, Q, Ṭ) or as a reference to the miracles that Moses performed for Pharaoh, such as when his hand turned white and his staff became a snake (Mw, Q). The manifest trial refers to a clear test that would demonstrate who was rightly guided and who was not (IK, Mw); a clear blessing (Mw, Q, Ṭ), which would then become a trial to those who were not thankful; or a severe punishment (Mw, Q, Ṭ), which would then be a punishment for those afflicted with it. When viewed in light of 21:35—We try you with evil and with good, as a test, and unto Us shall you be returned—the manifest trial can be understood as a general reference to the manner in which human beings react to both good and evil with either faith or disbelief (Ṭ). Alternately, it can be understood as a reference to the oppression that the Israelites endured at the hands of Pharaoh, as in 7:141: And when We saved you from the House of Pharaoh, who inflicted terrible punishment upon you, slaying your sons and sparing your women. And in this was a great trial from your Lord.

34 Truly these say,

35 “There is naught but our first death, and we shall not be resurrected.

36 Bring us our fathers, if you are truthful.”

34–36 These verses present a way of denying the Resurrection also employed by the Makkan idolaters in 45:25 and 56:47–48.

37 Are they better, or the people of Tubba^c and those before them? We destroyed them. Truly they were guilty.

37 Tubba^c was the title given to a succession of Ḥimyārī kings who ruled for centuries over southern Arabia and were defeated by the Abyssinians in the fourth century AD. Some understand Tubba^c to be the title that the people of Sheba, who were in Yemen (see 34:15–19), gave their kings (IK). In 50:14 the people of Tubba^c are mentioned as among those who denied God’s messengers and the Resurrection. According to some, Tubba^c refers to a righteous king who had called his people to God, but they denied him (JJ on 50:14). Some debate whether this Tubba^c to whom reference is made in the Quran was a prophet, since the Prophet is reported to have said, “I know not whether Tubba^c was a prophet” (Aj, Bḍ, IK, Q). Although the people of Tubba^c were stronger than the Quraysh, they were destroyed for their disbelief (JJ). In this sense, the reference to them is similar to verses that speak of previous generations or “towns” that were destroyed for their wrongdoing, despite being stronger in their earthly provision and material situation than were the Quraysh of Makkah; see 6:6; 7:4; 17:17; 19:74, 98; 21:11; 22:45; 28:58; 38:3; 47:13; 50:36.

38 And We did not create the heavens and the earth and whatsoever is between them in play.

39 We did not create them, save in truth. But most of them know not.

38–39 Cf. 21:16; 38:27. Similar to v. 38, in 23:115, the denizens of Hell are asked, Did you suppose, then, that We created you frivolously, and that you would not be returned unto Us? Similar to v. 39, other verses say, And We did not create the heavens and the earth and whatsoever is between them, save in truth (15:85: 46:3). All such verses indicate that, contrary to the pre-Islamic understanding of creation in Arabia, creation has a definite purpose. With regard to human beings, this means that they are created for faith and obedience (Aj), as in 51:56, I did not create jinn and mankind, save to worship Me, and to be resurrected and requited in accord with the degree to which they fulfilled their purpose.

④① Truly the Day of Division is their tryst, all together.

④① That creation is not made frivolously or in play (v. 38) alludes to the consequences of its being created for a purpose and thus to Resurrection and the Day of Judgment (R), which is here called the Day of Division (37:21; 77:13–14, 38; 78:17; see also 10:28; 30:14, 43), indicating the manner in which people will be divided from relatives and loved ones (Aj) and the manner in which the Judgment will divide believers and disbelievers from one another for eternity.

④① The Day when no friend will avail a friend in any way, nor will they be helped, ④② save him unto whom God has been merciful. Truly He is the Mighty, the Merciful.

④①–④② Concerning the Day of Judgment, the Quran states, There shall be no kinship between them that Day, nor will they question one another (23:101) and that none can avail another against God's Punishment (2:48, 123; 3:10, 116; 26:88; 31:33; 86:10); see 40:18c; 43:67c. They will in fact be so consumed by terror regarding their own fate that no loyal friend shall ask about a loyal friend, [though] they will be made to see them. The guilty would wish to ransom himself from the punishment of that Day at the price of his children, his spouse, and his brother, his kin who had sheltered him, and all who are on the earth, that it might save him (70:10–14). Nothing will be of any avail on that Day except God's Mercy (IK).

④③ Truly the tree of Zaqqūm

④④ is the food of the sinner,

43–44 Just as the people of Paradise receive fruits that befit their station, so too the people of Hell receive fruits that befit theirs; Zaqqūm (cf. 37:62; 56:52) is foremost among these. Zaqqūm is one of the vilest and most bitter trees of the Tihāmah region of Arabia (JJ). Some understand its use in the Quran to be a metaphor for and an allusion to the ignorance, doubts, and demonic suggestions that people allow to fill their hearts (Aj on 56:52). The Prophet is reported to have said of the Zaqqūm referred to in the Quran, “If but one drop of Zaqqūm were to fall into the oceans of this world, it would pollute them for all its inhabitants. How shall it be, then, for the one whose nourishment it has become?” (IK, Z).

45 like molten lead boiling in their bellies,

46 like the boiling of boiling liquid.

45–46 Some read boiling as taghlī rather than yaghlī, in which case it applies to the tree of Zaqqūm rather than the food of the sinner or the molten lead (IJ, Z). According to this reading, v. 45 could also be rendered, “Like molten lead it boils in their bellies.” Regarding molten lead, which is also said to scald faces (18:29), see 18:29c; 70:8c. Boiling liquid (cf. 6:70; 10:4; 37:67; 38:57; 40:72; 47:15; 56:42, 54; 78:24–25) renders ḥamīm, which indicates something that has reached its maximum temperature, but can also indicate severe, painful cold.

47 “Seize him and thrust him into the midst of Hellfire!

47 Seize him—that is, the sinner—is God’s command to the angels who serve as the guardians of Hell (al-zabāniyah; see 96:17–18c; IJ, JJ). Elsewhere the Day of Judgment is referred to as a day when the disbelievers are thrust into the Fire of Hell with [violent] thrusting (52:13).

48 Then pour the punishment of boiling liquid upon his head.”

48 V. 46 and other verses say that those in Hell will drink a boiling liquid, but this is one of two verses (cf. 22:19) that say that it will be poured upon their heads. That this is the punishment of boiling liquid implies that it is only one of many other punishments (Aj).

49 “Taste! Surely you are the mighty, the noble.

50 This is that which you used to doubt.”

49–50 These verses represent either God’s direct address to the disbelievers or the words of the guardians of Hell to the inhabitants of Hell while the guardians are carrying out God’s Command (IK, Q). These words are spoken by way of ridicule and rebuke for the exalted image that the disbelievers had of themselves while in this world (IJ, Ṭ, Z). Some say that these verses refer specifically to Abū Jahl, one of the leaders of the Quraysh, who is reported to have held himself in high esteem, claiming to be mighty and noble among his people (Aj, IJ, Q, Ṭ). Taste implies, “Taste the punishment that you have brought upon yourselves through your disbelief and your actions” (JJ; see 3:106, 181; 4:56; 6:30; 7:39; 8:35, 50; 10:52; 22:22; 32:14, 20; 34:42; 46:34). Surely you renders innaka, which is read by some as annaka, meaning, “because you are” (IJ, Q, Ṭ, Z); that is, they used to doubt because of their attitude of haughtiness. This refers specifically to the punishment that they receive (Q, R, Z) or more generally to the whole affair of judgment, reckoning, and punishment (Z), regarding all of which they were playing in doubt (v. 9). While here the disbelievers are mocked for doubting, elsewhere they are chastised for denying the punishment of the Hereafter; see also 32:20; 34:42; 52:13–16; 83:17.

51 Truly the reverent are in a station secure,

52 amid gardens and springs,

51–52 In contrast to those described in vv. 41–50, the reverent (see 2:2c) are in a station where they are secure from death and from Satan (as well as from the fear of leaving that station) and from all worry, grief, terror, and exhaustion (IK). Station secure translates maqām amīn, which can also be read muqām amīn (Q, R, Ṭ, Z), in which case it would be rendered, “Abide in security.” Whereas in vv. 25–26

Pharaoh and his followers had to leave behind the fleeting gardens and springs of this world, the reverent are secure among gardens and springs that are everlasting.

53 wearing fine silk and rich brocade, facing one another.

53 For fine silk and rich brocade, see 18:31c; 76:21. That the inhabitants of Paradise are facing one another (cf. 15:47; 37:44; 56:16) implies that none shall need to sit behind another (JJ), since all will be equally exalted. In other instances, this description is joined with a reference to reclining upon couches (e.g., 15:47; 37:44).

54 Thus it is. And We shall wed them to wide-eyed maidens.

54 Thus it is renders kadhālika, which can mean, “This is how it is” (Q, Ṭ), and which is understood by some as an expression of wonder and incomparability, as if to say that the like of this is beyond description (Aj). Kadhālika can also be understood to mean “similarly” or “likewise” (Q, R, Ṭ, Z). In this context it would then mean, “Just as we made them enter the Garden and did to them what was mentioned previously, likewise We have honored them by wedding them to wide-eyed maidens” (Q).

Wide-eyed maidens translates ḥūr ʿīn (see also 52:20; 56:22), which literally means someone with eyes whose whites are extremely white and whose pupils are extremely black (Āl, Q, R). Others say that it indicates “the appearance of little white in the eye around the black,” which was considered the height of beauty for the eye (Iṣ). It also conveys the notion of purity; thus Ḥasan al-Baṣrī is reported to have said that ḥūr ʿīn means the righteous women among human beings (Ṭ). In the commentary on 52:20, al-Rāzī observes that inasmuch as the eye reflects the soul more clearly than any other part of the body, the use of “eye” (ʿīn) in this phrase may be understood to mean “rich of soul.” A minority say that wide-eyed maidens refers to the state of the women of this world in Paradise (Āl, R). But most commentators agree that the wide-eyed maidens are not the women of this world (Āl, R). According to various aḥādīth they are maidens made from musk, camphor, and saffron (Āl). Another ḥadīth says, “The creation of the wide-eyed maidens is from glorifications made by angels” (Āl). Nonetheless, the pious women of this world are thought to be of a higher station (Aj). For additional references to the maidens who await the righteous in Paradise, see 38:52; 55:56; 78:33.

55 Therein they call for every fruit, secure.

55 The inhabitants of Paradise will receive whatsoever souls desire (43:71; cf. 41:31; 52:22; 56:20–24; 77:41–44), whatsoever they will (16:31; 25:16; 39:34; 42:22; 50:35), and whatsoever they call for (36:57; cf. 41:31), and they are secure from it ever being cut off (IJ, Q). In contrast, for the disbelievers a barrier is set between them and that which they desire (34:54).

56 They taste not death therein, save the first death. And He will shield them from the punishment of Hellfire—

56 The reverent experience only the physical death of this world and experience no death in Paradise (Q, R, Z). They will be spared the punishment of the Hereafter, but the disbelievers will experience it continually, as if they were forced to die again and again (see 14:18c). In this sense, that the reverent taste not death stands in contrast to the claim posed by the disbelievers in v. 35 that they will taste but one death. That God will shield them from the punishment of Hellfire (cf. 52:18) is integral to the Mercy of the Divine Nature, which precedes God’s Wrath. Upon seeing a woman clutch her child to her breast, the Prophet asked his Companions, “Do you think this woman would allow her child to be thrown into the fire?” They replied, “By God, insofar as she is able, she would never allow the child to be thrown into a fire.” The Prophet then said, “And God is more tender toward His servants than is this woman toward her child.”

57 a bounty from thy Lord; that is the great triumph.

57 Everything the reverent attain in the preceding verses comes from God’s Bounty (R). Many understand this verse to mean that none of the rewards mentioned here are deserved by the reverent as such; rather, they are bestowed out of God’s Bounty, because the good deeds that people do and the faith they have attained have themselves arisen from God’s Bounty (R).

58 We have only made this easy upon thy tongue, that haply they may remember.

58 This verse harkens back to the reference to the Quran in vv. 2–3. That it is easy upon thy tongue explains in part how it is a clear Book (R). It is similar to the refrain of Sūrah 54: And indeed We have made the Quran easy to remember (54:17, 22, 32, 40). The ease with which the Quran can be recited and remembered is said to be not only for oneself, but also for the purpose of conveying it to others, that they might be admonished and then become believers (JJ), as in 19:97: We have only made this easy upon thy tongue that thou mayest give glad tidings unto the reverent thereby, and that thereby thou mayest warn a contentious people.

59 So be on the watch, for they, too, are on the watch.

59 This verse instructs the Prophet, “Be on the watch for the disbelievers’ destruction, just as they are on the watch for yours” (JJ), “Await the aid against them that I have promised you. They await your death” (Q), or “Await the victory from your Lord. They await the destruction they claim will befall you” (Q); see also 6:158; 7:71; 9:52; 10:20, 102; 11:122; 32:30; 52:31.

Upon Their Knees

al-Jāthiyah

A late Makkan sūrah, al-Jāthiyah is believed to have been revealed immediately after Sūrah 44, al-Dukhān (JJ). Although some maintain that the entire sūrah is from the Makkan period, others maintain that v. 14 is from the Madinan period (Āl, IJ, JJ, Q). The sūrah takes its name from v. 28, which states that on the Day of Judgment every community will be upon its knees (cf. 19:68). It is also known to some as al-Sharīʿah, because it is the only sūrah to employ the term sharīʿah, which later came to denote Islamic Law. Another name is al-Dahr (“Time”), a reference to al-dahr in v. 24, which can mean “time,” “fate,” or “the passage of time.” The initial reference to the revelation of the Book can be seen as being connected to the second to last verse of the previous sūrah: We have only made this easy upon thy tongue, that haply they may remember (44:58; Aj).

Al-Jāthiyah contains one of the most explicit and extended Quranic discussions of “the signs of God,” enjoining people to reflect upon them and describing the fate that will befall those who deny them. It begins with a discussion of the signs of God in revelation and in the created order and the fate of those who fail to believe in them and understand them (vv. 2–15). A brief mention of the Children of Israel (vv. 16–17) segues into an address to the Prophet Muhammad (vv. 18–19), which is followed by a reiteration of the fate that befalls those who deny God’s insights, or signs (vv. 20–21). The remainder of the sūrah continues the focus upon those who deny God’s signs and the Final Judgment (vv. 22–26) and upon the great peril that awaits them on the Day of Judgment (vv. 27–37).

① Hā. Mīm. ② The revelation of the Book from God, the Mighty, the Wise. ③ Truly in the heavens and the earth are signs for believers. ④ And in your creation and in what He has scattered of animals are signs for a people who are certain. ⑤ And in the variation of the night and the day, and in that which God sends down from the sky as provision whereby He revives the earth after its death, and in the shifting of the winds are signs for a people who understand. ⑥ These are the signs of God that We recite unto thee in truth. So in what discourse after God and His signs do they believe? ⑦ Woe unto every sinful liar! ⑧ He hears the signs of God recited unto him, then persists arrogantly as if he did not hear it. So give him glad tidings of a painful punishment. ⑨ And when he comes to know aught of Our signs, he takes them in mockery. For them there shall be a humiliating punishment. ⑩ Beyond them lies Hell. That which they have earned will avail them naught, nor that which they have taken apart from God as protectors; and theirs shall be a great punishment. ⑪ This is guidance; and those who disbelieve in the signs of their Lord, theirs shall be a painful punishment of torment. ⑫ God it is Who made the sea subservient unto you, that the ships may sail upon it by His Command, that you may seek His Bounty, and that haply you may give thanks. ⑬ He made subservient unto you whatsoever is in the heavens and whatsoever is on the earth—all together. Truly in that are signs for a people who reflect. ⑭ Tell those who believe to forgive those who hope not for the days of God, that He may requite a people for that which they used to earn. ⑮ Whosoever works righteousness, it is for his own soul. And whosoever commits evil, it is to the detriment thereof. Then unto your Lord shall you be returned. ⑯ And indeed We gave the Children of Israel the Book, judgment, and prophethood, and We provided them with good things, and We favored them above the worlds. ⑰ And We gave them clear proofs from the Command. And they differed not till after knowledge had come unto them, out of envy among themselves. Thy Lord will surely judge between them on the Day of Resurrection regarding that wherein they used to differ. ⑱ Then We placed thee upon a clear path from the Command; so follow it, and follow not the caprices of those who know not. ⑲ Truly they will avail you naught against God. And surely the wrongdoers are the protectors of one another, while God is the Protector of the reverent. ⑳ These are insights for mankind, and guidance and mercy for a people who are certain. ㉑ Or do those who commit evil deeds suppose that We shall treat them like those who believe and perform righteous deeds equally in their life and in their death? Evil indeed is the judgment they make! ㉒ God created the heavens and the earth in truth, and so that every soul may be recompensed for that which it has earned; and they shall not be wronged. ㉓ Hast thou considered one who takes his caprice as his god, God having led him astray knowingly, and sealed his hearing and his heart and placed a cover upon his sight? Who, then, will guide him after God? Will you not, then, remember? ㉔ They say, “There is naught but our life in this world. We die and we live, and none destroys us save time.” But they have no knowledge thereof. They do naught but conjecture. ㉕ And when Our signs are recited unto them as clear proofs, their argument is naught but to say, “Bring us our fathers, if you are truthful.” ㉖ Say, “God gives you life; then causes you to die; then He gathers you together on the Day of Resurrection in which there is no doubt. But most of mankind know not.” ㉗ Unto God belongs sovereignty over the heavens and the earth. And the Day when the Hour is come—on that Day those who make false claims will have lost, ㉘ and thou wilt see every community upon its knees. Every community is called to its book: “Today you will be recompensed for that which you used to do. ㉙ This Our Book speaks against you with truth. Truly We were recording all that you used to do.” ㉚ As for those who believed and performed righteous deeds, their Lord causes them to enter into His Mercy. That is the manifest triumph. ㉛ And as for those who disbelieve, were not My signs recited unto you? But you waxed arrogant and were a guilty people. ㉜ When it was said, “Surely God’s Promise is true, and there is no doubt in the Hour,” you said, “We do not know what the Hour is. We do naught but conjecture, and we are not certain.” 33 The evils of that which they had done will become manifest unto them, and that which they used to mock will beset them. 34 And it will be said, “Today We forget you just as you forgot the meeting with this your Day; your refuge is the Fire and you have no helpers. 35 That is because you took the signs of God in mockery and the life of this world has deluded you.” So today they will not be removed from it; nor can they make amends. 36 Unto God be praise, Lord of the heavens and Lord of the earth, Lord of the worlds. 37 His is the Grandeur in the heavens and the earth, and He is the Mighty, the Wise.

1 This sūrah is the sixth in a series of seven sūrahs that open with the Arabic letters ḥā° and mīm and are referred to collectively as the Ḥawāmīm. The Arabic letters ḥā° and mīm are among the separated letters (al-muqaṭṭaʿāt) that are found at the beginning of twenty-nine sūrahs (see 2:1c) and whose meaning is considered by most commentators to be known only to God. For some possible meanings of the letters ḥā° and mīm, see 40:1c.

② The revelation of the Book from God, the Mighty, the Wise.

2 Cf. 39:1; 40:2; 46:2. For the meaning of this verse, see 39:1c; for other possible readings, see 40:2c. That the Quran has come from the Mighty alludes to its being inimitable (muʿjaz), overcoming all and not able to be overcome, while its coming from the Wise alludes to its comprising conclusive wisdom (ḥikmah bālighāh; 54:5) as well as to its being definitive (muḥkam; Aj).

③ Truly in the heavens and the earth are signs for believers.

3 This is one of many verses that call human beings to reflect upon God's signs in the created order, since they are seen as indications of His Oneness (Aj). Signs translates āyāt, which refers to the verses of the Quran, the natural phenomena in the heavens and on the earth, and the signs within the human soul. The heavens and the earth are filled with signs for believers (cf. 6:99; 15:77; 16:79; 27:86; 29:24, 44; 30:37; 39:52), for a people who reflect (13:3; 30:21; 39:42; 45:13; cf. 10:24), for a people who hear (10:67; 16:65; 30:23), for those who know (30:22), for a people who understand (2:164; 13:4; 16:12, 67; 30:24; 45:5), for a people who are reverent (10:6), for those possessed of intelligence (20:54, 128), for the possessors of intellect (3:190), for those who possess insight (3:13) and for a people who are certain (45:4; cf. 51:20).

Signs (āyāt) occurs twelve times in this short sūrah, especially in the first section (vv. 3–8), where it is used interchangeably as a reference to the wonders of the created order (vv. 3–5) and the verses of the Quran (vv. 6–8), suggesting a subtle connection between revelation and the created order. This connection has led many Islamic philosophers and mystics to view the created order as “the cosmic Quran” (al-Qurʿān al-takwīnī) as distinguished from “the written Quran” (al-Qurʿān al-tadwīnī). When understood by those with certainty in their hearts, the signs of the created order are said to guide, by their very being (kawn), to the One who brought them into being (al-Mukawwin; ST). In this vein, al-Ghazzali writes that for those who are masters of their hearts, God makes “every atom in the heavens and the earth speak to them . . . until they hear their celebration and glorification of God . . . speaking without letters and without voices” (Iḥyāʿ ʿulūm al-dīn, K. al-Tawḥīd wa ʿl-tawakkul).

④ And in your creation and in what He has scattered of animals are signs for a people who are certain.

④ Signs in your creation refers to all phases of human life, from gestation to growth to the waning of life (IK); for the Quranic discussion of the phases of life, see 16:70c; 22:5–6c; 23:13–14; 30:54; 40:67. In your creation can also be understood as an allusion to the manner in which God has honored human beings by endowing them with knowledge and understanding, subordinating the rest of creation to them (Aj) and making them vicegerents upon the earth (see 6:165; 35:39; cf. 2:30). For other references to the signs within human beings, see 41:53c; 51:20–21c.

⑤ The variation of the night and the day (cf. 2:164; 3:190; 10:6; 23:80; 24:44) points to the regularity and rhythm in human life and the impermanent nature of life in this world, which is characterized by finitude. In other verses, the alternation of night and day is presented as a direct reflection of God’s Omnipotence, since God makes the night pass into the day and makes the day pass into the night (22:61; 31:29; 35:13; 57:6; cf. 3:27; 39:5); see 31:29c. Night and day are also invoked as Divine blessings and mercies for human beings, as in 27:86: Have they not considered that We made the night that they might rest therein, and the day by which to see? Truly in that are signs for a people who believe (cf. 6:96–97c; 10:67; 25:47; 40:61).

The shifting of the winds alludes to the role of the winds in carrying ships across the sea and in pollinating vegetation (Aj). In the Quran, winds (pl.) is employed to convey Divine Mercy, as in 7:57 and 25:48: He it is Who sends the winds as glad tidings ahead of His Mercy (see also 25:48; 27:63; 30:46; 35:9). In contrast, wind (sing.) is used in the Quran to express God’s Wrath and Punishment (see 3:117; 10:22; 17:69; 22:31; 30:51; 33:9; 41:16; 46:24).

⑥ These are the signs of God that We recite unto thee in truth. So in what discourse after God and His signs do they believe?

6 In the context of this sūrah, the signs that God “recites” refers to the verses of the revealed Book and to the signs of God in the created order (Aj), both of which are said to come in truth, or “through truth”; see 45:22c. In this sense, this verse can be understood to mean, “In what discourse other than the most beautiful discourse [see 39:23c] and the most evident signs will they believe?” (Aj). Or it can be understood to mean, “How could they believe in any other discourse after hearing this discourse?” According to another canonical reading, do they believe (yu’minūn) could be read “do you believe” (tu’minūn; Q, Z). Both readings imply that if people cannot believe in these signs, they will not believe in anything of a religious nature.

⑦ Woe unto every sinful liar!

7 Regarding woe unto, see 2:79c. Liar translates affāk, which indicates those who turn away from the truth and lie to themselves because they are perverted in intellect and judgment; see 29:61c. Sinner translates athīm, which is an intensive form indicating an inveterate sinner.

⑧ He hears the signs of God recited unto him, then persists arrogantly as if he did not hear it. So give him glad tidings of a painful punishment.

8 This verse is reported to have been revealed regarding Naḍr ibn al-Ḥārith, who would transmit foreign stories, or “discourses,” and use them to distract the people from listening to the Quran (Aj, Q, R). Nonetheless, it is understood as a general reference to all who turn away from God’s signs when they hear them (Aj). Although such people hear the Quran, it is as if they do not hear, because they are spiritually deaf and thus do not understand, as in 6:25: Among them are those who listen to thee, but We have placed coverings over their hearts, such that they do not understand, and a deafness in their ears (cf. 2:171; 5:71; 6:25, 39; 8:22; 10:42; 17:46; 18:57; 21:46; 31:7; 41:5, 44; 47:23); see 6:25c. Although glad tidings usually indicates the good news of the means to salvation that prophets bring, here as elsewhere (see 3:21; 4:138; 9:3, 34; 31:7; 84:24), it is used with a sense of irony indicating that the hypocrites and disbelievers will receive the painful punishment that they seem to “desire.”

⑨ And when he comes to know aught of Our signs, he takes them in mockery. For them there shall be a humiliating punishment.

9 Given the use of signs in connection with both the created order and the verses of revelation, this verse can be understood as a reference to those who mock the signs in creation by failing to acknowledge their Divine Origin and their disclosure of God’s Reality, failing to be grateful for them, and those who mock the revealed signs by denying revelation. That they come to know some of the signs of God refers to memorizing something of the Quran (IK) or to obtaining a surface knowledge of the Quran or the created world without being able to connect the signs in either of them to their Source. Arrogance toward God’s signs implies a personal refusal to believe in them, but mocking them can be seen as a more severe manifestation of disbelief, since it implies actively repudiating God’s signs in the presence of other people.

⑩ Beyond them lies Hell. That which they have earned will avail them naught, nor that which they have taken apart from God as protectors; and theirs shall be a great punishment.

10 Beyond them translates min warā'ihim, which can refer to something that lies in front of or behind them (Aj, Q, R, Z). In this sense it can mean that Hell lies before the disbelievers because they are headed toward it, or that it lies behind them because they have turned away from it and ignore its reality (Aj). In either interpretation, that which they have earned, meaning wealth and children (Aj, IK, Q, Ṭ), cannot help them avoid God's Punishment, as in 3:10: As for those who disbelieve, neither their wealth nor their children will avail them aught against God. And it is they who shall be fuel for the Fire (cf. 3:116; 58:17). Protectors is understood by most to be a reference to the idols and gods that the idolaters worshipped, but who cannot protect them from the great punishment, since, as they are warned in 21:98: You and that which you worship apart from God shall be fuel for Hell. Unto it you shall come. The term protectors can also be understood as a broader reference to everything upon which they rely that is other than God; see 18:102c.

11 This is guidance; and those who disbelieve in the signs of their Lord, theirs shall be a painful punishment of torment.

11 This Quran (IK, Q, Ṭ, Z), or everything with which the Prophet came (Q), represents complete and perfect guidance (Aj, Z). Although most understand signs of their Lord as a direct reference to the verses of the Quran (Ṭ, Z), in the context of this sūrah it can also be understood as a reference to God's signs in the created order. Regarding a painful punishment of torment, see 34:5c.

12 God it is Who made the sea subservient unto you, that the ships may sail upon it by His Command, that you may seek His Bounty, and that haply you may give thanks.

12 This is one of several verses to refer to seafaring as a blessing from God; see also 2:164; 14:32; 17:66; 22:65; 30:46; 31:31; 35:12; 40:80; 42:32–34c. Seek His Bounty refers to the advantages of travel by sea and to the food and precious jewels that can be obtained from the sea (Z).

13 God has made all things subservient to humanity (cf. 14:33; 22:65; 31:20) insofar as He has made human beings His vicegerents upon the earth (6:165; 35:39; cf. 2:30); see also 43:12–13c. From a spiritual perspective, when one’s heart finds tranquility in God, its Master, one becomes a true servant and everything is made subservient to Him (ST). Seen in this light, this verse serves as an admonition to human beings not to become preoccupied or engrossed with the things of this world to the extent that they forget God, since they would then serve what was created to serve them rather than serving their true Master. In this vein, a well-known saying sometimes said to be a ḥadīth qudsī states, “God says, ‘O Son of Adam! I created the things [of this world] for you. And I created you for Me. So let not that which I created for you distract you from that for which I created you,” meaning do not let serving creation distract you from serving the Creator (Aj). Regarding the reference to aspects of creation as signs for a people who reflect, see 13:3; 30:21; 39:42; elsewhere God is said to expound the signs for a people who reflect (10:24).

⑭ Tell those who believe to forgive those who hope not for the days of God, that He may requite a people for that which they used to earn.

14 Those who hope not for the days of God refers to the disbelievers and hypocrites who neither hope for the reward of the Hereafter nor fear God’s Punishment (Q, R). According to some commentators, those who hope not for the days of God was revealed on an expedition to the Arab tribe of Banu’l-Muṣṭaliq. The Muslims stopped by a well and ‘Abd Allāh ibn Ubayy, the leader of the hypocrites, sent his slave to get some water. When he came back, he asked him, “What has delayed you?” His slave replied, “The slave of ‘Umar stood at the opening of the well and did not let anyone draw water until he filled up the water skins of the Prophet, Abū Bakr, and his own master.” ‘Abd Allāh ibn Ubayy exclaimed, “Our example and the example of these people is as the saying goes: fatten your dog, and he will eat you.” By this statement, he was implying that the Prophet, who had come to Madinah as a powerless guest, was cared for by the Madinan population, and had now turned against them to bring them harm; see 9:74c. When ʿUmar Ibn al-Khaṭṭāb heard this, he seized his sword, intending to kill ʿAbd Allāh ibn Ubayy, but then God revealed this verse (IJ, Q, R, W). This verse may, however, have already been revealed when this incident occurred, and the Prophet simply recited it to ʿUmar at this time to calm him and maintain the peace.

According to another account, when the verse Who is it that will lend unto God a goodly loan? (57:11; cf. 2:245) was revealed, a Jewish man in Madinah by the name of Finhas said, “Muhammad’s Lord is in need!” When ʿUmar ibn al-Khaṭṭāb heard this utterance, he grabbed his sword and went looking for him. So Gabriel went to the Messenger of God and said to him, “Your Lord says to you, ‘Tell those who believe to forgive those who hope not for the days of God.’” The Prophet replied, “No doubt. By Him Who has sent thee with the truth, anger will not show upon my face!” (Q, W). Some maintain that this verse was abrogated, but al-Qurṭubī notes that, if the verse is from the Madinan period, such abrogation is unlikely.

The command to forgive and be gentle with disbelievers and hypocrites can be understood as following from the allusion to the signs in your creation (v. 4), since if one reflects upon the signs of God, one will recognize the honor due to all human beings. As al-Rāzī observes, discussions of the nature of the created order in the Quran are often followed by discussions of virtuous conduct. In this sense, the admonition to forgive those who hope not for the days of God can be understood to mean that when one acts in accord with the nature of things, one will forgive others, remembering that one’s own faith and understanding are blessings from God, as in 7:43, where the believers are reported to say, Praise be to God, Who guided us unto this. We would not have been rightly guided, had God not guided us. In the context of the previous verses, to forgive others is also part of recognizing that the subservience of creation to human beings and the position of being God’s vicegerent is a blessing from God, as when the believers are enjoined to say, Glory be to God, Who made this subservient unto us, though we were not equal to it. Truly unto our Lord do we turn (43:13–14).

⑮ Whosoever works righteousness, it is for his own soul. And whosoever commits evil, it is to the detriment thereof. Then unto your Lord shall you be returned.

15 For the first two sentences, see 41:46c. In relation to v. 14, the reminder that ultimately everyone will bear the consequences of his or her own actions serves to explain why it is best for the believers to forgive the disbelievers.

①⑥ And indeed We gave the Children of Israel the Book, judgment, and prophethood, and We provided them with good things, and We favored them above the worlds.

16 Here the Book refers to the Torah, while judgment refers to the Israelites' understanding of the Torah (Q), thus to knowledge and wisdom (R). Good things refers to the blessings given to the Israelites in this world, such as the wealth of the Egyptians, which they inherited (see 7:137c; 26:59c; 28:5; 44:28), and the manna and quails through which they were sustained in the desert (see 2:57; 7:160; 20:80; R). They are mentioned after the Book, judgment, and prophethood to illustrate the superiority of spiritual benefits over those that pertain only to this world (R). That God favored the Israelites above the worlds (cf. 2:47, 122; 7:140) refers to the blessings mentioned above and is understood as a reference to their being chosen above the other people of their own time (IK, Q, Ṭ); see also 5:20c.

①⑦ And We gave them clear proofs from the Command. And they differed not till after knowledge had come unto them, out of envy among themselves. Thy Lord will surely judge between them on the Day of Resurrection regarding that wherein they used to differ.

17 Clear proofs from the Command refers generally to unequivocal proofs (IK) and more specifically to clear delineations between what is forbidden and what is permissible (Q) or to the miracles that God gave to Moses as proof of his prophethood (R). Viewed in light of the preceding verse, this phrase most likely refers to Moses and the Children of Israel. But when viewed in light of the subsequent verse, some understand clear proofs to mean the indications that God gave the Prophet Muhammad that he would migrate to Madinah and that he would receive help from its people (Q, R). According to this interpretation, that they differed not till after knowledge had come unto them (cf. 10:93) refers to the Jews of Madinah who rejected Muhammad's prophethood, and out of envy among themselves refers to their being jealous of the Prophet (Q). Their differing after being given knowledge is also interpreted as a more general reference to the manner in which religious communities fracture out of envy among themselves (Q); see 2:213; 3:19, 105; 10:93; 23:53; 42:14; 43:63–65; 98:4c. In such instances, it is not knowledge itself that leads them to differ, but the manner in which some seek leadership and advancement through such knowledge and thus to the envy that arises from it (R). Regarding the nature of envy, see 113:5c. Regarding the manner in which religious difference leads to envy, see commentary on 23:53, which speaks of different religious factions, each party exulting in what it had. For God judging between them regarding that wherein they used to differ, see 2:113; 10:93; 16:124c; 32:25; 39:3.

①⑧ Then We placed thee upon a clear path from the Command; so follow it, and follow not the caprices of those who know not.

18 After giving the Israelites gifts (v. 16), God placed the Prophet Muhammad upon a clear path like those upon which He had placed the messengers before him (Ṭ). In this context, clear path translates sharīʿah, which later became the technical term for Islamic Law, though it occurs only this one time in the Quran. Linguistically, sharīʿah means a straight, smooth path that leads to water, which in the deserts of Arabia would also have meant a path to salvation from death. In this context it thus appears to indicate a clear path by which God leads people to the truth (Q). The manner in which sharīʿah is juxtaposed to caprices (ahwāʿ; sing. hawāʾ) indicates the moral and spiritual implications associated with the term. This is one of several verses to enjoin the Prophet not to acquiesce to the caprices of the People of the Book (see 2:120, 145; 5:48–49; 13:37; 42:15), while elsewhere he is told not to follow the caprices of the disbelievers (cf. 6:56, 150). Regarding the nature of caprice, see 45:23c. According to some commentators, this verse was revealed after some of the leaders of the Quraysh called upon the Prophet to return to the religion of his forefathers, maintaining that the forefathers were preferable to him (R).

①⑨ Truly they will avail you naught against God. And surely the wrongdoers are the protectors of one another, while God is the Protector of the reverent.

19 Following upon v. 18, this verse enjoins the Muslims to make no pacts that would compromise the integrity of the Quranic message, as in 68:8–9: Obey not the deniers. They wish that thou wouldst compromise, so that they would compromise. Abandoning the potential benefits of protection from other tribes constituted a great risk for the small Muslim community. Nonetheless, 5:51 maintains that whosoever takes them as protectors, surely he is of them. The Muslims are thus enjoined to take one another as protectors, as in 9:71: But the believing men and believing women are protectors of one another, enjoining right and forbidding wrong, performing the prayer, giving the alms, and obeying God and His Messenger. They are those upon whom God will have mercy. See commentary on 8:72–73.

②① These are insights for mankind, and guidance and mercy for a people who are certain.

20 The beginning of this verse is literally, “This is insights,” meaning that the Quran is a means by which people gain insight into the truth, are able to distinguish truth from falsehood, and know the path to right guidance (Ṭ), because the Quran provides evidence that suffices for the insight of the heart (R); see commentary on 7:203, where the Prophet is told to say, I only follow that which is revealed unto me from my Lord. These are insights from your Lord, and a guidance and a mercy for a people who believe. According to some, these are insights means “these are signs” (Q, Z). A people who are certain refers to those who are certain that the message of the Quran is true (Ṭ) or more broadly to those who have belief and certitude in the Unseen (Aj).

②① Or do those who commit evil deeds suppose that We shall treat them like those who believe and perform righteous deeds equally in their life and in their death? Evil indeed is the judgment they make!

21 This verse presents a rebuke posed as a question to the disbelievers. As with most such rhetorical questions in the Quran, it is answered elsewhere, since the Quran maintains throughout that the good and the wicked are not equal (5:100); see 32:18–19c. Here equally renders sawā’an, understood as an adverb modifying the verb “treat.” In other canonical readings, the term is read sawā’un (Q, R, Ṭ), in which case the last phrase would be rendered, “equal their life and their death” or

“their life and their death being equal” (Q, Z), meaning, “Are the life and death of those who commit evil deeds equal with, or on the same footing as, the life and death of those who believe and perform righteous deeds?” (Q). In this sense, the verse alludes to the difference between their states in the Hereafter (Z). It could also be understood to mean that the believer and the disbeliever will not be on equal footing in the Hereafter as they appeared to be in this world, since the true difference between them will become manifest in the Hereafter (R).

22 God created the heavens and the earth in truth, and so that every soul may be recompensed for that which it has earned; and they shall not be wronged.

22 That God created the heavens and the earth in truth (cf. 6:73; 16:3; 29:44; 39:5; 64:3) is reiterated in various ways in the Quran (see 10:5; 14:19; 15:85; 30:8; 46:3); see 29:44c; 44:38–39c. In relation to the previous verse, it indicates why the life and death of the believers and those of the disbelievers are not equal. Since all things are balanced in truth, every soul will be recompensed in accord with the good or evil it has done (Q, Ṭs; cf. 3:161; 40:17; 74:38) and shall not be wronged (cf. 2:181; 3:25, 161; 16:111; 39:69; 46:19); see 36:54c.

23 Hast thou considered one who takes his caprice as his god, God having led him astray knowingly, and sealed his hearing and his heart and placed a cover upon his sight? Who, then, will guide him after God? Will you not, then, remember?

23 The caprice that people are said to take as their god is defined as the inclination of the soul to passion and lust (shahwah). The verb from which caprice derives, hawā/yahwī, means both “to blow” and “to fall or tumble,” and when combined with the preposition bi means “to overthrow.” Caprice can thus be said to be something that blows the soul one way and another and overthrows the soul through the calamities of this world, making it tumble into an abyss (al-hāwiyah, from the same root, h-w-y; 101:9) in the Hereafter (Iṣ). The word hawā’, meaning vacant, from the same root, is also used to describe the vacuity of the hearts of disbelievers on the Day of Judgment (see 14:43). In this vein, the Prophet is reported to have said, “The intelligent person is one who takes his soul to account and works for that which follows death. The inept person is one who allows his soul to follow his caprice, yet hopes for God” (Aj). References to God’s misleading or causing to go astray (cf. 13:27; 14:4, 27; 16:93; 22:4; 35:8; 40:34, 74:31) can be understood in light of 2:26, And He misleads none but the iniquitous, to mean that going astray is a result of one’s own iniquities and not the outcome of arbitrary predestination. Those who are led astray are thus those whose hearts, according to several verses, are “veiled,” “covered,” or “sealed” so as to prevent spiritual comprehension (see 2:7c; 6:25, 46; 7:100–101; 9:87, 93; 10:74; 16:108; 17:46; 18:57, 101; 30:59; 47:16c; 63:3; 83:14–15).

Regarding the question, Who, then, will guide him after God? see commentary on 7:186: Whomsoever God leads astray, no guide has he. And He leaves them to wander confused in their rebellion. The rhetorical question Will you not, then, remember? is one of the Quran’s many invitations to reflect upon its parables and proofs or God’s signs in order to facilitate spiritual understanding (see, e.g., 11:24, 30; 16:17; 30:8; 37:155; 56:62; 3:191c).

②²⁴ They say, “There is naught but our life in this world. We die and we live, and none destroys us save time.” But they have no knowledge thereof. They do naught but conjecture.

24 Cf. 23:37. There is naught but our life in this world refers to the disbelievers’ rejection of Resurrection. We die and we live refers to the idea that there is only one life and one death with no afterlife; or it means, “Some of us die and some of us live,” or “We die and our children live” (Q, R). In pre-Islamic Arabia when hardship befell someone, it was common to say, “Curse the passage of time (al-dahr)” (IK). The Prophet enjoined his followers not to do so, saying, “God says, ‘The son of Adam vexes Me when he curses time, for I am Time (Dahr). In My Hands lies the affair, and it is I Who alternate the day and the night” (IK, Q). This is understood to mean that the alternation of life followed by eventual death, which were attributed to the mere passage of time, are in fact caused by God (Q, R), so when one curses time for one’s sufferings, one is in fact cursing God, since He is the Agent behind all that transpires (Q).

The disbelievers’ failure to understand the manner in which the passage of time attests to the Omnipotence of God and the meeting with Him is yet another consequence of failing to reflect upon the signs of God. Thus they have no knowledge thereof (cf. 43:20). That they do naught but conjecture then means that what they do say regarding what follows the life of this world has no foundation, as in 53:28: Yet they have no knowledge thereof. They follow naught but conjecture; and surely conjecture avails naught against the Truth; see also 49:12c.

25 And when Our signs are recited unto them as clear proofs, their argument is naught but to say, “Bring us our fathers, if you are truthful.”

25 Our signs here are signs regarding the Resurrection and the recompense that awaits the disbelievers (Q, Ṭ). Since many verses of the Quran attest to the Resurrection and the signs of the created order are often cited as signs of God’s ability to resurrect, this verse can be read as a reference to both revelation and creation. That they can only respond by saying, Bring us our fathers, if you are truthful (cf. 44:36) illustrates their misunderstanding of Resurrection, since they seek to define it in terms of this world, and supports the contention that they do naught but conjecture (v. 24).

26 Say, “God gives you life; then causes you to die; then He gathers you together on the Day of Resurrection in which there is no doubt. But most of mankind know not.”

26 That God gives life and causes death (cf. 2:258; 3:156; 7:158; 9:116; 10:56; 22:6; 23:80; 40:68; 44:8; 53:44; 57:2; 67:2) serves as an answer to the contention that it is only time that destroys (v. 24; Aj), since such claims serve to deny both God and the Resurrection (R). It also answers the disbelievers’ challenge to bring forth their fathers (v. 25) by stating that only God has power over their coming and going (Q). Most of mankind, meaning humanity in general or the disbelievers in particular, know not (cf. 7:187; 16:75, 101; 21:24; 27:61; 30:30; 31:25; 34:36; 39:29; 40:57) about God’s ability to resurrect and the wisdom in delaying resurrection, due to their opposition to reflection (Aj).

27 Unto God belongs sovereignty over the heavens and the earth. And the Day when the Hour is come—on that Day those who make false claims will have lost, 27 Unto God belongs sovereignty over the heavens and the earth (3:189; 5:17, 18; 24:42; 48:14) indicates that He created and rules over all things (Q). Those who make false claims (al-mubṭilūn) comes from the verb abṭala/yubṭilu, “to make a false [or vain] claim,” “to try to disprove the truth of something,” “to try to reduce something to nothing,” or “to prove something to be null and void, unfounded, false, or spurious” (Tāj al-‘arūs; Lisān al-‘arab). In this sense it describes the disbelievers, who on the Day of Judgment will have lost their souls (see 6:12, 20; 7:53; 11:21; 23:103) as well as their families (39:15; 42:45).

28 and thou wilt see every community upon its knees. Every community is called to its book: “Today you will be recompensed for that which you used to do.

29 This Our Book speaks against you with truth. Truly We were recording all that you used to do.”

28–29 On the Day of Judgment, each religious community will be gathered in ranks (see 18:48c) with its members upon their knees for the Reckoning before God (Ṭ) due to the shame of that day (Q, Ṭ). Some say that this fate is particular to the disbelievers (Q); others say it applies to believers and disbelievers alike when they are awaiting the Reckoning before God (Q). According to another canonical reading, this verse could be rendered, “Thou wilt see every community upon its knees, every community called to its book” (Q). In either reading, book is used in the singular to indicate the individual books in which each person’s deeds are recorded by the angels upon God’s Command (see 86:4; commentary on 43:80; 82:10–12; Aj, Q, R, Z) or the Preserved Tablet (85:22; Q), upon which all of God’s Commands and Decrees are said to have been written.

The address is spoken by the angels who were tasked with recording the deeds of human beings (R, Z) or by God (Q). That the book speaks against human beings means that it testifies to their deeds (Q, R). When the book speaks or testifies, thou wilt see the guilty fearful of what is in it. And they will say, “Oh, woe unto us! What a book this is! It leaves out nothing, small or great, save that it has taken account thereof.” And they find present [therein] whatsoever they did (18:49). In relation to a famous saying of the Prophet, “The Quran is a proof, either for you or against you,” this verse could also be understood as a reference to the Quran.

③⑩ As for those who believed and performed righteous deeds, their Lord causes them to enter into His Mercy. That is the manifest triumph.

30 Here God’s Mercy is understood as a reference to the Garden (Q, Z), the attainment of which is also referred to as the manifest triumph in over a dozen verses; for the blessings of Paradise, see commentary on 5:119; 44:51–57.

③⑪ And as for those who disbelieve, were not My signs recited unto you? But you waxed arrogant and were a guilty people.

31 Were not My signs recited unto you is a rebuke that pertains to witnessing the signs both in the created order (see commentary on 45:3–6) and in revelation. With regard to the latter, it recalls 39:71, where the keepers of Hell say to the disbelievers, Did not messengers from among you come to you, reciting unto you the signs of your Lord and warning you of the meeting with this your Day? (cf. 40:50).

③⑫ When it was said, “Surely God’s Promise is true, and there is no doubt in the Hour,” you said, “We do not know what the Hour is. We do naught but conjecture, and we are not certain.”

32 That God’s Promise is true (cf. 4:122; 10:4, 55; 18:21; 28:13; 31:33; 35:5; 40:55, 77; 46:17) pertains to the end of time, here referred to as the Hour, to the return to God, and to the Promise of both Heaven and Hell, all of which the disbelievers deny. The reply of the disbelievers, We do not know what the Hour is, is understood to mean, “We do not know if it is true or not” (Q), or simply, “We do not know if it is coming” (Ṭ), implying that they see no need to prepare for it. Regarding the nature of conjecture, see 49:12c; 53:28c.

33 The evils of that which they had done will become manifest unto them, and that which they used to mock will beset them.

33 And that which they used to mock will beset them, or “close in upon them” (cf. 6:10; 11:8; 16:34; 21:41; 39:48; 40:83; 46:26) indicates that the punishment the disbelievers receive is a direct result of their own iniquity, since God does not wrong human beings in the least, but rather human beings wrong themselves (10:44).

34 And it will be said, “Today We forget you just as you forgot the meeting with this your Day; your refuge is the Fire and you have no helpers.

34 This is one of several verses that speak of the disbelievers being forgotten (see 7:51; 9:67; 20:126; 32:14; 59:19), which is understood to mean that they have been abandoned by God (Q). That they forgot the meeting with God means both that they did not think of it and that they did not prepare for it (Q). For the consequence of forgetting God and the meeting with Him, see commentary on 7:51 and 59:19: And be not like those who forget God, such that He makes them forget their souls.

35 That is because you took the signs of God in mockery and the life of this world has deluded you.” So today they will not be removed from it; nor can they make amends.

35 When the signs of revelation and the signs in creation are not understood, the life of this world is naught but the enjoyment of delusion (3:185; 57:20; cf. 6:70, 130; 31:33; 35:5), yet the enjoyment of the life of this world, compared with the Hereafter, is but a little (9:38; cf. 4:77; 13:26; 40:39). As the disbelievers had ample opportunity to remember God in this world, once they have been shown the truth of the signs that they used to mock and the reality of their evil deeds in the Hereafter, they will no longer have any opportunity to make amends, since their conduct has demonstrated that even if they were sent back, they would return to the very thing they had been forbidden (6:28); see 6:27–28c; 23:100; 32:12c; 35:37.

36 Unto God be praise, Lord of the heavens and Lord of the earth, Lord of the worlds.

37 His is the Grandeur in the heavens and the earth, and He is the Mighty, the Wise.

36–37 According to another canonical reading, v. 36 could be rendered, “Unto God be praise. He is the Lord of the heavens . . .” (Q). In either reading, unto God be praise is understood as an injunction to praise God (Aj), while His is the Grandeur or “unto Him is the Grandeur” is an injunction to magnify God, since the effects of His Grandeur and Greatness are manifest in all things (Aj). In this sense, the mention of God’s Grandeur harkens back to the call to reflect upon God’s signs in the heavens and the earth in vv. 3–6.

While the reference to God as the Mighty, the Wise in v. 2 refers to God’s Reality in relation to revelation, here it refers to God’s Reality in relation to creation, thus alluding to the manner in which both kinds of signs are said to come from Him in truth, or “for the truth” (for verses regarding revelation in truth, see 2:176, 213, 252; 3:3, 108; 4:105; 5:48; 6:114; 17:105; for those regarding creation in truth, see 6:73; 10:5; 14:19; 15:85; 16:3; 29:44c; 30:8; 39:5; 44:38–39c, 45:22; 46:3; 64:3). The bracketing of this sūrah with these two references thus highlights the discussion of God’s signs in revelation and creation that runs throughout this sūrah.

The Sand Dunes

al-Aḥqāf

A*l-Aḥqāf* is a late Makkan sūrah. Some commentators maintain that the entire sūrah is Makkan, although most believe that v. 10 is from the Madinan period, to which some add v. 15 and others v. 35 (Aj, Āl). The majority of the sūrah was most likely revealed around the same time as Sūrah 72, al-Jinn, two years before the Prophet's migration to Madinah. The last of the seven sūrahs that begin with the Arabic letters ḥā' and mīm, it takes its name from the mention of the sand dunes in v. 21 as a place near which the pre-Islamic Arabian prophet Hūd warned his people, the tribe of ʿĀd.

Al-Aḥqāf begins with a response to the disbelievers, calling them to account for their rejection of the revelation and confirming the nature of revelation as something that is not a human innovation (vv. 2–9). A brief reference to the Torah and those who believed in it (vv. 10–12), followed by an affirmation of belief in one God (vv. 13–14), then transitions into a discussion of the rights of parents (vv. 15–17), which are often considered second only to the rights of God and His messengers. A discussion of the disbelievers (vv. 18–20) then segues into a story of the Prophet Hūd, the manner in which the people rejected him, and the punishment that was sent upon them (vv. 21–25). The story of their destruction is used as a warning to the Quraysh that they can be destroyed, just as those who were more powerful than they were destroyed before (vv. 26–28). A recounting of the story of the jinn who heard the Quran and then called their community to follow the Prophet (vv. 29–32) concludes with a reminder of God's Omnipotence (vv. 33–34). A final verse counsels the Prophet to follow the example of prophets before him who patiently endured the insults of the disbelievers (v. 35).

In the Name of God, the Compassionate, the Merciful

① Hā. Mīm. ② The revelation of the Book from God, the Mighty, the Wise. ③ We did not create the heavens and the earth and whatsoever is between them, save in truth and for a term appointed. Yet those who disbelieve turn away from that of which they were warned. ④ Say, “Have you considered that which you call upon apart from God? Show me that which they have created of the earth. Or do they have a share in the heavens? Bring me a book before this or some vestige of knowledge, if you are truthful.” ⑤ Who is more astray than one who calls, apart from God, upon such as do not answer him, [even] unto the Day of Resurrection, and who are heedless of their calling? ⑥ When mankind is gathered, such will be enemies unto them and deniers of their worship. ⑦ Yet when Our signs are recited unto them as clear proofs, those who disbelieve say to the truth when it comes to them, “This is manifest sorcery.” ⑧ Or do they say, “He has fabricated it”? Say, “Had I fabricated it, you would not be able to avail me aught against God. He knows best that about which you carry on. He suffices as a Witness between me and you, and He is the Forgiving, the Merciful.” ⑨ Say, “I am no innovation among the messengers, and I know not what will be done with me or with you. I only follow that which has been revealed unto me, and I am naught but a clear warner.” ⑩ Say, “Have you considered if it is from God and you disbelieve in it, though a witness from the Children of Israel bore witness to the like thereof, then believed in it, while you waxed arrogant? Surely God guides not wrongdoing people.” ⑪ And those who disbelieve say of those who believe, “Had it been good, they would not have outstripped us in [attaining] it.” Since they will not be guided by it, they will say, “This is an ancient perversion.” ⑫ Yet before it there was the Book of Moses, a guide and a mercy. This is a Book that confirms in an Arabic tongue to warn wrongdoers, and a glad tiding for the virtuous. ⑬ Truly those who say, “Our Lord is God,” then stand firm, no fear shall come upon them; nor shall they grieve. ⑭ They are the inhabitants of the Garden, abiding therein, as a recompense for that which they used to do. ⑮ And We have enjoined man to be virtuous unto his parents. His mother carried him in travail and bore him in travail, and his gestation and weaning is thirty months, such that when he reaches maturity and reaches forty years he says, “My Lord inspire me to give thanks for Thy blessing with which Thou hast blessed me and hast blessed my parents, and that I may work righteousness such that it pleases Thee; and make righteous for me my progeny. Truly I turn in repentance unto Thee, and truly I am among those who submit.” ⑯ They are those from whom We accept the best of that which they have done and over whose evil deeds We pass. [They] will be among the inhabitants of the Garden—the true promise that they were promised. ⑰ As for one who says to his parents, “Fie upon you both! Do you promise me that I shall be brought forth when generations have passed away before me?” while they call upon God for succor, “Woe unto you! Believe! Surely God’s Promise is true.” Whereat he says, “This is naught but fables of those of old.” ⑱ They are those for whom the Word among the communities of jinn and men that had passed before them came due. Truly they are lost. ⑲ For each there are degrees according to that which they have done. He will pay them for their deeds in full, and they will not be wronged. ⑳ And the day when those who disbelieve are exposed to the Fire: “You squandered your good things in your life in the world and sought enjoyment therein; so today you are recompensed with the punishment of disgrace for having waxed arrogant upon the earth without right and for having been iniquitous.” ㉑ And mention the brother of ʿĀd, when he warned his people by the sand dunes; warners had passed away before him and after him, [saying], “Worship none but God. Truly I fear for you the punishment of a tremendous day.” ㉒ They said, “Have you come to us to pervert us from our gods? Then bring upon us that wherewith you have threatened us, if you are among the truthful.” ㉓ He said, “Knowledge lies with God alone, and I only convey to you that wherewith I have been sent. But I see that you are an ignorant people.” ㉔ And when they beheld it as a cloud bound for their valleys, they said, “This is a cloud bringing us rain.” Nay! It is what you sought to hasten—a wind carrying a painful punishment, ²⁵ destroying everything by the Command of its Lord. They became such that naught was seen but their dwellings. Thus do We recompense the guilty people. ²⁶ Indeed We established them in a manner in which We did not establish you, and We endowed them with hearing, sight, and hearts. But their hearing, sight, and hearts availed them naught, since they rejected God’s signs, and that which they used to mock beset them. ²⁷ And indeed We destroyed the towns around you, and We vary the signs that haply they might return. ²⁸ Why, then, did they—whom they had taken as gods apart from God and as a means of drawing nigh [unto God]—not help them? Nay, they forsook them. That was their perversion and that which they used to fabricate. ²⁹ And [remember] when We made a group of jinn incline unto thee, listening to the Quran, when in its presence they said, “Hearken!” Then when it came to an end, they went back to their people as warners. ³⁰ They said, “O our people! Truly we have heard a Book sent down after Moses, confirming that which came before it, guiding to the truth and to a straight road. ³¹ O our people! Answer God’s caller and believe in him, then He will forgive you some of your sins and protect you from a painful punishment. ³² And whosoever does not answer God’s caller thwarts not on earth and has no protectors apart from Him—they are in manifest error.” ³³ Have they not considered that God, Who created the heavens and the earth and did not weary in their creation, is able to give life to the dead? Yea! He is Powerful over all things. ³⁴ On the day when those who disbelieve are exposed to the Fire: “Is this not true?” They will say, “Yea, by our Lord!” He will reply, “Taste the punishment for having disbelieved.” ³⁵ So be patient, as the resolute among the messengers were patient. And seek not to hasten for them. It shall be for them, on the day when they see that which they are promised, as though they had tarried naught but an hour of a day. A proclamation! Will any but the iniquitous people be destroyed?

1 This sūrah is the last in a series of seven sūrahs that open with the Arabic letters hā[◌] and mīm and are referred to collectively as the Hawāmīm. The letters hā[◌] and mīm are among the separated letters (al-muqaṭṭaʿāt) that are found at the beginning of twenty-nine sūrahs and whose meanings are considered by most commentators to be known only to God; see 2:1c. For some possible meanings of the letters hā[◌] and mīm, see 40:1c.

② The revelation of the Book from God, the Mighty, the Wise.

2 Cf. 39:1; 40:2; 45:2. For the meaning of this verse, see 39:1c. For other possible readings, see 40:2c. Here al-Maybudī notes that the Mighty can also be read as an active participle meaning “the One Who makes mighty” or “the One Who exalts” and writes, “The name means that He exalted the believers by making them the object of His address and worthy of His book and message.”

③ We did not create the heavens and the earth and whatsoever is between them, save in truth and for a term appointed. Yet those who disbelieve turn away from that of which they were warned.

3 We did not create . . . save in truth is repeated in 15:85, while in 30:8 the same concept is conveyed in the third-person singular (see also 44:39). In truth indicates both that the world is created with precision and perfection and that the nature of the created world is just (R). Regarding the Quranic idea that all of creation came in truth, or “through truth,” see 6:73c; 15:85; 44:38–39c. For a term appointed (2:282; 11:3; 13:2; 14:10; 16:61; 22:5, 33; 30:8; 31:29; 35:13, 45; 39:42; 42:14; 71:4) refers to the duration of the world and thus alludes to both the final end of the heavens and the earth (IJ) and the Final Judgment (see 35:45; 71:14). Save . . . for a term appointed (Q, R, Ṭ) thus indicates that creation, as it is other than God, cannot but have a beginning and an end, as in 28:88: All things perish, save His Face; see 10:24c. As translated, the last sentence of the present verse reiterates that many people turn away from the messengers God sends. It could also be read, “Those who deny that of which they were warned turn away,” meaning that they turned away from understanding the true nature of creation, thus implying that they do not reflect upon the signs of God and the ephemeral nature of the world (R).

④ Say, “Have you considered that which you call upon apart from God? Show me that which they have created of the earth. Or do they have a share in the heavens? Bring me a book before this or some vestige of knowledge, if you are truthful.”

4 This is one of several verses that challenge the disbelievers to bring something to verify their claims (see also 2:23c; 10:38c; 21:24; 37:156–57; 54:43c; 68:37). That which you call upon apart from God means idols or beings such as jinn whom the idolaters treat as partners with God. Bring me a book is a request that they bring a revealed scripture (Q, R, Ṭ), and some vestige of knowledge means some remnant from the teachings of those of old (Q, R, Ṭ). Others interpret vestige of knowledge to mean something that was written by those before (Q, Ṭ), though it is also understood to mean any authentic report that has been transmitted (R). In all interpretations, it means something that indicates the veracity of the idolaters’ claim that these idols and jinn whom they worship are indeed partners with God (Ṭ). Elsewhere the Quran asks rhetorically, or did We give them a book, such that they stand upon a clear proof from it? (35:40; cf. 34:44; 43:21; 68:37–38).

⑤ Who is more astray than one who calls, apart from God, upon such as do not answer him, [even] unto the Day of Resurrection, and who are heedless of their calling.

5 Who are heedless of their calling can refer to those upon whom they call or to those who call, the latter meaning that the idolaters are oblivious to the fact that their supplications are in vain.

⑥ When mankind is gathered, such will be enemies unto them and deniers of their worship.

6 When mankind is gathered refers to the Day of Judgment (see 42:7c). Such will be enemies unto them alludes to the fact that the false objects of worship upon whom the idolaters called in this life will testify against them on the Day of Judgment (Q, T), saying, Our Lord! These are those whom we perverted. We perverted them as we ourselves were perverse. We disavow [them] before Thee; it was not us whom they worshipped (28:63). It can also be understood to mean that those upon whom they called are their enemies, because calling upon them, and thus attributing partners to God, was the cause of their destruction (Q).

7 Yet when Our signs are recited unto them as clear proofs, those who disbelieve say to the truth when it comes to them, “This is manifest sorcery.”

7 This verse speaks of one of the various ways in which the disbelievers react to the recitation of God’s signs, that is, verses of the Quran; cf. 8:31; 19:73; 22:72; 31:7; 34:43; 42:25; 68:15; 83:13. The charge of manifest sorcery is said to have been brought by the disbelievers against the Quran and several messengers of God, most notably the prophets Moses and Muhammad (see 5:110c; 6:7; 10:2; 11:7; 34:43; 37:15; 43:30; 61:6; 74:24).

8 Or do they say, “He has fabricated it”? Say, “Had I fabricated it, you would not be able to avail me aught against God. He knows best that about which you carry on. He suffices as a Witness between me and you, and He is the Forgiving, the Merciful.”

8 Such charges of fabrication are repeated throughout the Quran; see 10:38c. To attribute anything falsely to God is considered to be among the greatest of sins, thus the Quran frequently asks, Who does greater wrong than one who fabricates a lie against God? (6:21, 144; 7:37; 10:17; 11:18; 29:68; 61:7), meaning, “Who does greater wrong than one who holds to false beliefs or engages in erroneous religious practices?” Here the Prophet is commanded to explain that, were he to make such claims, as others have, God would punish him and that no one could avert His Punishment, as in 5:41: For whomsoever God desires that he be tried, thou hast no power to avail him aught against God (R). For He suffices as a Witness between me and you, see 29:52c.

9 Say, “I am no innovation among the messengers, and I know not what will be done with me or with you. I only follow that which has been revealed unto me, and I am naught but a clear warner.”

9 I am no innovation among the messengers reaffirms the Quranic position that all revelations contain the same essential message. As the Prophet has said, “The prophets are half brothers; their mothers differ and their religion (dīn) is one.” In this vein al-Tustarī writes of this verse, “That is, ‘There were messengers before me who commanded what I command and forbade what I forbid. I am not a marvel (‘ajab) among the messengers. I do not call you to anything except testifying to God’s Oneness (tawḥīd), and I do not guide you to anything other than the most noble character traits. It was with this [message] that the prophets before me were sent’” (ST; cf. 2:62; 5:69; 26:192–96; 41:43; 78:18–19). For more on the Quranic understanding of the unity of prophethood, see the essay “The Quranic View of Sacred History and Other Religions.”

I know not what will be done with me or with you most likely indicates that the Prophet was not a fortune-teller, an ability that many of the Arabs expected of a prophet. Some maintain that this phrase was abrogated by 48:2, in which the Prophet is told that God has forgiven him his sins that went before and that which is to come (Q). But the two verses can be seen as references to very different issues: the present verse refers to the events of this world, and 48:2 to forgiveness and reward in the Hereafter, in which case there is no need for abrogation (Q). Regarding I am naught but a clear warner (cf. 11:12; 13:7; 27:92; 34:46; 35:23; 79:45), see 38:65–66c.

10 Say, “Have you considered if it is from God and you disbelieve in it, though a witness from the Children of Israel bore witness to the like thereof, then believed in it, while you waxed arrogant? Surely God guides not wrongdoing people.”

10 If it is from God and you disbelieve in it likely refers to the Quran itself, although the second clause may be rendered “and you disbelieve in him,” meaning that the people disbelieve in the Prophet. Most exegetes interpret a witness from the Children of Israel as a reference to ʿAbd Allāh ibn Salām, one of the leading Jews of Madinah who followed the Prophet and was rejected by his community for doing so. Bore witness to the like thereof would then imply his bearing witness to the truth of both the Torah and the Quran. In this vein, Saʿd ibn Abī Waqqās is reported to have said, “I have never heard the Prophet say of anybody walking on the earth that he is from the people of the Garden except ʿAbd Allāh ibn Salām. The following verse was revealed concerning him: Though a witness from the Children of Israel bore witness to the like thereof (Ṭ). But if, as many commentators maintain, the whole of this sūrah is from the Makkan period, this verse most likely refers to Moses (Q). In this case, bore witness to the like thereof would again refer to the Torah, in which case the verse is most likely a challenge to the disbelievers, comparing their arrogance in the face of revelation to the Israelites’ acceptance of the Torah.

Bore witness to the like thereof could also be read “bore witness to one like him,” implying that Moses foretold the coming of the Prophet Muhammad. In light of the latter interpretation, this verse would be read as an affirmation of 7:157, which refers to the Prophet being inscribed in the Torah and the Gospel. In this vein, many Muslims read Deuteronomy 17:15 and 18:18, among other Biblical verses, as allusions to the Prophet Muhammad.

⑪ And those who disbelieve say of those who believe, “Had it been good, they would not have outstripped us in [attaining] it.” Since they will not be guided by it, they will say, “This is an ancient perversion.”

11 The objection of the disbelievers among the Quraysh was that those who were of low social standing in Makkah could not have discerned the value of the new religion to which the Prophet called them when the leaders of Quraysh did not, as in 6:53, where they are also reported to say of those who followed the Prophet, Are these the ones whom God has graced among us? Such objections are similar to those voiced by the leaders among Noah’s people, who said, We see none who follow you, save the lowliest among us (11:27), and asked, Shall we believe you, when the lowliest follow you? (26:111). This verse thus relates back to v. 3, because the disbelievers’ arrogance caused them to continue going further astray after they first turned away. They say, This is an ancient perversion, because they deny that whose knowledge they cannot comprehend and whose interpretation has not yet come to them (10:39; Q).

⑫ Yet before it there was the Book of Moses, a guide and a mercy. This is a Book that confirms in an Arabic tongue to warn wrongdoers, and a glad tiding for the virtuous.

12 From a Quranic perspective, every revelation fulfills the function of guiding and is a mercy for human beings, as is said of the Torah here. This is a Book that confirms refers to the Quran confirming the Torah and the Gospel, among other revelations, as in 5:48: And We have sent down unto thee the Book in truth, confirming the Book that came before it, and as a protector over it. Just as the Quran is God’s Word in Arabic, so too the Torah is considered to have been God’s Word in Hebrew. As al-Dārimī writes, “God knows all languages and speaks in whichever language He wishes: if He wishes, He speaks in Arabic; and if He wishes, He speaks in Hebrew; and if He wishes, in Syriac. So He has made the Quran His Word in Arabic” (al-Dārimī, al-Radd, 123); see commentary on 14:4: And We have sent no messenger, save in the language of his people.

⑬ Truly those who say, “Our Lord is God,” then stand firm, no fear shall come upon them; nor shall they grieve.

⑭ They are the inhabitants of the Garden, abiding therein, as a recompense for that which they used to do.

13–14 Then stand firm means that these believers do not confound the truth with falsehood (3:71; cf. 2:42) and do not oppose God’s Commands and Prohibitions (Ṭ). According to some, no fear shall come upon them means that they will have no fear of retribution and will be spared many of the trials that occur on the Day of Resurrection (R). The first part of v. 13 is repeated in 41:30, but there it is the angels who promise that in the Hereafter there shall be no fear or sorrow for the believers; see commentary on 41:30–33. That such rewards will be afforded those who say, “Our Lord is God,” then stand firm could be understood as an allusion to the salvific nature of all revealed religions, as in 2:62: Truly those who believe, and those who are Jews, and the Christians, and the Sabeans—whosoever believes in God and the Last Day and works righteousness shall have their reward with their Lord. No fear shall come upon them; nor shall they grieve (cf. 5:59).

⑮ And We have enjoined man to be virtuous unto his parents. His mother carried him in travail and bore him in travail, and his gestation and weaning is thirty months, such that when he reaches maturity and reaches forty years he says, “My Lord inspire me to give thanks for Thy blessing with which Thou hast blessed me and hast blessed my parents, and that I may work righteousness such that it pleases Thee; and make righteous for me my progeny. Truly I turn in repentance unto Thee, and truly I am among those who submit.”

15 Goodness, gratitude, and virtue toward one’s parents are enjoined in several verses (4:36; 17:23; 29:8; 31:14–15) and are presented as second in importance only to the duty to worship God in other verses (see 2:83; 4:36; 6:151); see 29:8c. To be virtuous translates iḥsān, which means “to make beautiful” or “to do what is beautiful” and comes from a root (ḥ-s-n) meaning “beautiful,” other derivations of which mean “virtue” or “virtuous” in the sense of having a beautiful character and intrinsic morality; see 29:69c. The mention of the mother alone after the mention of both parents indicates that her right to be honored is greater than that of the father (R). In this regard, a well-known ḥadīth reports that a man asked the Prophet, “O Messenger of God, who among the people is most deserving of my good companionship?” He said, “Your mother.” The man asked, “Then who?” The Prophet replied, “Your mother.” He asked again, “Then who?” The Prophet again replied, “Your mother.” After he asked a fourth time, the Prophet replied, “Your father.”

The first instance of travail refers to the difficulties of pregnancy, and the second refers to those of childbirth. For the discussion of the combined period of gestation and breast-feeding, which is here said to be thirty lunar months, see 2:233c; 31:13–14c. When he reaches maturity is understood by the majority of commentators to mean thirty-three lunar years, the age at which the body is traditionally thought to reach its peak. Forty years is then the age at which one reaches intellectual (IK) and spiritual maturity, whereupon one can focus more upon worship and obedience to God (R). Forty is also said to be the age of prophethood

(R), and according to Islamic teachings all prophets received the call to prophethood at the age of forty, except Jesus, who was aware of his prophetic mission from the moment of his birth (see commentary on 19:30–33). Inspire me to give thanks literally means, “Inspire me to be [in a state of] thankfulness” (R, Ṭū). The prayer for both parents and children may indicate greater awareness of responsibility toward both the older and younger generations that comes with being in the prime of life. Regarding the importance of respecting both the young and the old, a ḥadīth states, “Whosoever is unkind to our young and disrespectful to our old is not one of us.” Make righteous for me my progeny is a request to guide them in faith and in doing what pleases God (Ṭ), which are considered among the greatest blessings for a parent (R). While many Sunni commentators say that this verse was revealed regarding Abū Bakr’s prayer for his parents when they embraced Islam (IJ, JJ, Q, Ṭ), Ḥasan al-Baṣrī says that the verse is general, applying to all Muslims.

①⑥ They are those from whom We accept the best of that which they have done and over whose evil deeds We pass. [They] will be among the inhabitants of the Garden—the true promise that they were promised.

16 They refers to the people who have the attributes described in v. 15 (IK, Ṭ). That God accepts the best of that which they have done (cf. 9:121; 16:96–97; 24:38; 29:7; 39:35) indicates that they are only recompensed for their good deeds, while over whose evil deeds We pass means that they have been absolved of such deeds; see 29:7c. Here the true promise can also be read “the promise of truth.” In either reading it refers to the first part of the verse (Q).

①⑦ As for one who says to his parents, “Fie upon you both! Do you promise me that I shall be brought forth when generations have passed away before me?” while they call upon God for succor, “Woe unto you! Believe! Surely God’s Promise is true.” Whereat he says, “This is naught but fables of those of old.”

17 Saying Fie upon you both is seen by most as referring to every form of disobedience toward parents. Others understood it as specifying those who reject their parents' call to religion (R). Brought forth refers to the Resurrection. Here the example given would be considered the most egregious, as it also entails disobedience toward God. God's Promise refers to the promise of the Resurrection, the Gathering, the Reward, and the Punishment (Ṭs, Ṭū). Referring to the revelations as fables of those of old was a common way for the disbelievers to dismiss the Prophet and the revelation (see 6:25; 8:31; 16:2; 23:83; 25:5; 27:68; 68:15; 83:13).

⑱ They are those for whom the Word among the communities of jinn and men that had passed before them came due. Truly they are lost.

18 That the Word . . . came due (cf. 10:96; 28:63; 36:7, 70; 40:6) indicates God's Punishment, as in 39:71: But the Word of punishment has come due for the disbelievers.

⑲ For each there are degrees according to that which they have done. He will pay them for their deeds in full, and they will not be wronged.

19 For each there are degrees pertains to all believers and disbelievers (JJ) and to the hierarchy among them. That God will reward or punish in degrees in accord with people's actions is also stated in 6:132, while 3:163 speaks of people being ranked in degrees and 6:165 states that God has raised some . . . by degrees above others (see also 6:83; 58:11); see 3:163c; 4:96c. They will not be wronged (cf. 2:281; 6:160; 10:47, 54; 16:111; 36:54; 39:69; 45:22), because every soul will be paid in full for that which it has done (16:111; 39:70; cf. 2:281; 3:25).

⑳ And the day when those who disbelieve are exposed to the Fire: "You squandered your good things in your life in the world and sought enjoyment therein; so today you are recompensed with the punishment of disgrace for having waxed arrogant upon the earth without right and for having been iniquitous."

20 Exposed to the Fire (yu^ʿriḍu ʿalaʾl-nār) indicates that the disbelievers are thrown into it or shown its terrors before being thrown into it (R). It can also mean “killed or destroyed by the Fire,” as in the Arabic phrase ʿuriḍa ʿālaʾl-sayf, meaning, “He was killed by the sword” (Aj). Squandered your good things in your life in the world means they enjoyed the things of this world and followed their lusts (Q), so that during this life they already spent the share of good that was destined for them and will have no share of good in the Hereafter. Regarding the contrast between enjoying goods in this life and in the next, ʿUmar ibn al-Khaṭṭāb is reported to have implored the Prophet to pray to God for prosperity like that of the people of Persia and Byzantium, whereupon the Prophet said, “Ibn al-Khaṭṭāb, do you doubt that they are a nation for whom good things have been advanced to them in the life of this world?” (Q), implying that they would not have these goods in the Hereafter. This verse does not reprimand the disbelievers simply for enjoying the things of this world, as such enjoyment is expressly permitted in the Quran (see, e.g., 7:32); rather, it reprimands them for failing to be thankful for the goods God has permitted them and for indulging in those that were not permitted (Q, R). People could thus avail themselves of good things in this world and continue to receive good things in the Hereafter, so long as it is done with a sense of gratitude and proportion. If, however, they waxed arrogant, failing to acknowledge the rights of God and other human beings and thus being iniquitous, they would be subject to the punishment of disgrace.

21 And mention the brother of ʿĀd, when he warned his people by the sand dunes; warners had passed away before him and after him, [saying], “Worship none but God. Truly I fear for you the punishment of a tremendous day.”

21 The brother of ʿĀd is the prophet Hūd, who was sent to the tribe of ʿĀd in the Ḥaḍramawt region of southern Yemen. For the account of the tribe of ʿĀd, see 7:65–72; 11:50–60; 41:15–16; 54:18–21. Sand dunes translates aḥqāf, which is taken by some as a proper name for a valley in Yemen (JJ). Worship none but God is the same message with which all prophets are said to have been sent. I fear for you implies, “If you disobey me” (Aj).

22 They said, “Have you come to us to pervert us from our gods? Then bring upon us that wherewith you have threatened us, if you are among the truthful.”

22 To pervert us from our gods means to turn the tribe of ʿĀd away from worshipping their gods (Aj). Their challenge, Bring upon us that wherewith you have threatened us, which refers to the punishment, is similar to the one posed to Noah by his people (7:70; 11:32) and to the prophet Ṣāliḥ by the Arab tribe of Thamūd (7:77). In each case it refers to a manner of mocking the prophets that is similar to the way in which the disbelievers are said to have mocked the Prophet Muhammad, saying, When will this promise come to pass, if you are truthful? (10:48; 21:38; 27:71; 34:29; 36:48; 67:25).

23 He said, “Knowledge lies with God alone, and I only convey to you that wherewith I have been sent. But I see that you are an ignorant people.”

23 Hūd’s response, Knowledge lies with God alone, is what the Prophet Muhammad is also enjoined to say in the face of mocking (see 67:25–26). In both cases it refers to knowledge of when the Day of Judgment will come (Aj).

24 And when they beheld it as a cloud bound for their valleys, they said, “This is a cloud bringing us rain.” Nay! It is what you sought to hasten—a wind carrying a painful punishment, 25 destroying everything by the Command of its Lord. They became such that naught was seen but their dwellings. Thus do We recompense the guilty people.

24–25 The people of ʿĀd reportedly suffered from a drought for three years. They then prayed for rain, and when they saw the cloud, they thought it was an answer to their supplications, because they believed they were in fact good and thus deserving of God’s Mercy; see 7:72c. According to the Prophet’s wife ʿĀ’ishah, “Whenever the wind was stormy, the Messenger of God would say, ‘O God! I ask Thee for what is good in it, and the good that it contains, and the good of that for which it was sent. I seek refuge with Thee from what is evil in it, what evil it contains, and the evil of that for which it was sent.’ And when there was thunder and lightning in the sky, his color would change; he would go out and in, backward and forward; then when the rain came, he would be relieved, and I noticed that on his face. I asked him about it, and he said, ‘It may be as the people of °Ād said, when they saw a cloud formation coming to their valley, This is a cloud bringing us rain’” (IK). That the people of °Ād sought to hasten the wind that brought their punishment refers to the manner in which disbelievers, by way of mocking the warnings of the prophets in v. 22, hasten the Punishment of God. This attitude of derision is attributed to all disbelievers in one way or another and is elsewhere contrasted with that of the believers: Those who believe not in it seek to hasten it, and those who believe are wary of it and know that it is the truth (42:18; for other passages where the disbelievers seek to hasten their punishment, see 10:50–51; 13:6; 22:47; 26:204; 27:46, 72; 29:53; 37:176–77; 38:16; 51:14). The people of °Ād were destroyed by a howling, raging wind that was inflicted upon them for seven nights and eight days consecutively (69:6–7; cf. 41:16; 54:19). Then they were felled as if they were hollowed palm trunks (69:7; cf. 54:20).

26 Indeed We established them in a manner in which We did not establish you, and We endowed them with hearing, sight, and hearts. But their hearing, sight, and hearts availed them naught, since they rejected God’s signs, and that which they used to mock beset them.

26 The Quraysh are called upon to contemplate the greater power of those who had passed before them, as the tribe of °Ād was among the most powerful in the memory of the people of Arabia, the like of which was never created in all the land (89:8). This principle is expressed more broadly in 6:6: Have they not considered how many a generation We destroyed before them? We had established them on the earth more firmly than We have established you. Despite their strength, their hearing, sight, and hearts availed them naught because they did not listen to the revelation, see the signs in creation pointing to the Oneness of God, or reflect upon either (Aj). And that which they used to mock beset them (cf. 6:10; 11:8; 16:34; 21:41; 39:48; 40:83; 45:33) indicates that the punishment they received is a direct result of their own iniquity, since God does not wrong human beings in the least, but rather human beings wrong themselves (10:44). Thus 11:58 clarifies that, although God destroyed the tribe of °Ād, He saved Hūd and those who believed with him.

27 And indeed We destroyed the towns around you, and We vary the signs that haply they might return.

27 The towns around you refers to the °Ād and other Arabian tribes, such as the Thamūd, who dwelt between Makkah and Syria; Sabā°, who were in Yemen; the Midianites, who were on the route to Palestine; and the people of Lot, who are believed to have lived by the Dead Sea (IK), all of whose stories are given as examples in other *sūrah*s. Regarding We vary the signs (cf. 6:46, 65, 105; 7:58; 17:41), see 6:46c.

28 Why, then, did they—whom they had taken as gods apart from God and as a means of drawing nigh [unto God]—not help them? Nay, they forsook them. That was their perversion and that which they used to fabricate.

28 Just as the Quraysh worshipped idols, so too did the °Ād, the Thamūd, and other tribes. The disbelievers are thus asked how the gods they worship will help them, if the gods worshipped by the °Ād and the Thamūd did not help them, though those tribes were wealthier and more powerful than the Quraysh (cf. 11:100–101; 21:43; 36:74–75). That they took other gods as a means of drawing nigh [unto God] implies that some disbelievers tried to reconcile their polytheism by envisioning a hierarchy with a single God reigning supreme; see commentary on 39:3, where the disbelievers say of their deities, We do not worship them, save to bring us nigh in nearness unto God.

29 And [remember] when We made a group of jinn incline unto thee, listening to the Quran, when in its presence they said, “Hearken!” Then when it came to an end, they went back to their people as warners.

29 This verse is a reference to a group of jinn (seven or nine, according to most) who came upon the Prophet while he was performing the morning prayer in the valley of Nakhlah during his return to Makkah from the city of Ṭāʿif. After hearing the Quran, the jinn accepted it and then returned to their fellow jinn, enjoining them to accept the Quran and the Prophet. For a full account of this event, see the introduction to Sūrah 72. Here its presence could also be read “his presence,” meaning that of the Prophet (Aj, R, Ṭ).

30 They said, “O our people! Truly we have heard a Book sent down after Moses, confirming that which came before it, guiding to the truth and to a straight road.

30 Some interpret the reference the jinn make to Moses to mean that the jinn had been Jews (IK, R, Ṭ), but given the full context of the story (see the introduction to Sūrah 72), it may simply mean that they are comparing the Quran to another revelation. The Quran is also described as confirming earlier scriptures in 2:41, 89, 91, 97, 101; 3:3, 81; 5:48; 6:92; 35:31. Guiding to the truth can also be understood to mean “guiding to God” (Aj), as “the Truth” (al-Ḥaqq) is one of the Names of God. The way of Islam is referred to throughout the Quran as a straight path, and the straight path (al-sirāṭ al mustaqīm) is often taken as a synonym for Islam, but this is the only verse that refers to a straight road (ṭarīq mustaqīm). Combining the two terms, al-Tustarī writes of this verse, “It indicates that the road of truth is to leave worldly transactions (muʿāmalāt) and formalities (rusūmāt), and to realize the truth, which is the straight path” (ST).

31 O our people! Answer God’s caller and believe in him, then He will forgive you some of your sins and protect you from a painful punishment.

31 God’s caller means the Prophet, while in him can refer to the Prophet or to God (Ṭs) or to all that the Prophet commands (R). Al-Tustarī sees the phrase answer God’s caller and believe in him as an allusion to the mystery of faith in the depths of one’s heart: “In the heart of every believer there is a caller calling him to his sound judgment (rushd). Happy is the one who listens to the call of the caller, and follows it” (ST). Some commentators understand some of your sins to mean that only some sins will be removed by belief (Aj, R), implying that for complete forgiveness one must also act in accord with the revelation. Together, these verses are understood to demonstrate that the jinn are subject to command and prohibition, reward and punishment the same way human beings are, while others maintain that the believers among the jinn are only rewarded with being saved from the Fire (Q).

32 And whosoever does not answer God’s caller thwarts not on earth and has no protectors apart from Him—they are in manifest error.”

32 The reference to “thwarting” God alludes to vv. 4–5, as the jinn were among those upon whom the disbelievers would call to save them. That no one can thwart God or His signs is repeated in over a dozen verses (6:134; 8:59; 9:2–3; 10:53; 11:19–20, 33; 16:46; 22:51; 24:57; 29:22; 34:5, 38; 35:44; 39:51; 42:31;), since from a Quranic perspective naught in the heavens or upon the earth can thwart God (35:44; see also 52:8).

33 Have they not considered that God, Who created the heavens and the earth and did not weary in their creation, is able to give life to the dead? Yea! He is Powerful over all things.

33 This verse presents one of the Quranic arguments for God’s ability to resurrect human beings (IK, Q), as if to say, “If God can create the heavens and the earth, then surely He can give life to the dead” (cf. 40:57c). Regarding the absence of fatigue or weariness from the Divine Nature, see the discussion of Neither slumber overtakes Him nor sleep in 2:255c (also see 50:15).

34 On the day when those who disbelieve are exposed to the Fire: “Is this not true?” They will say, “Yea, by our Lord!” He will reply, “Taste the punishment for having disbelieved.”

34 For exposed to the Fire, see 46:20c. Is this not true? is a rhetorical question posed elsewhere to the disbelievers (see 7:44); this refers to the Fire and the punishment whose reality they had denied. It could also be understood as a reference to God, in which case Is this not true? would be rendered, “Is He not the Truth?” Even though they now realize the truth and admit to it, the gates of repentance have been closed, and they are cast into the Fire and thus made to taste the punishment (cf. 3:106, 181; 4:56; 6:30; 8:35, 50; 22:22; 32:14, 20; 34:12; 34:42).

35 So be patient, as the resolute among the messengers were patient. And seek not to hasten for them. It shall be for them, on the day when they see that which they are promised, as though they had tarried naught but an hour of a day. A proclamation! Will any but the iniquitous people be destroyed?

35 The injunction Be patient is addressed to the Prophet or to all Muslims. The resolute among the messengers is most often understood to mean the messengers who brought a new Book and a new revealed law from God: Noah, Abraham, Moses, and Jesus, who are listed together in 33:7 and 42:13, and Muhammad (IK, Kā). There are, however, other proposals for the referent, ranging from three prophets—Noah, Hūd, and Abraham—to all the prophets (Q). Relating this term directly to the specific trials many prophets endured, al-Tustarī writes, “The resolute among the messengers are Abraham, God’s friend; he was tried with fire, and with the sacrifice of a son, but was content and submitted. Job was tried by trials, and Ishmael [was tried] with the sacrifice, and was content. Noah [was tried] with denial but was patient, while Jonah was in the belly of the fish, but called [upon God] and sought refuge [in Him]. Joseph [was tried] with prison and the well, but he did not change, and Jacob was tested by the loss of his sight and the loss of a son, but he complained of his grief only to God and did not complain to anyone other than Him. There are twelve prophets who were patient with what befell them, and they are the resolute among the messengers” (ST).

The Prophet is enjoined not to pray for punishment to be hastened against the disbelievers, as some prophets had done in the past, since their punishment would come in due course (JJ, Q). This postponement can be understood as a mercy from God or to mean that God has a greater punishment for them in the Hereafter (see 41:16). Either way, the reality and duration of the Hereafter will make the life of this world seem for them as though they had tarried naught but an hour of a day (cf.

10:45; 17:52; 23:112–14; 30:55; 79:46). The iniquitous are destroyed by being punished in the Hereafter, but moreover by being led astray (see 2:26) and made to forget God, resulting in distance from Him and from their true selves, as in 59:19: And be not like those who forget God, such that He makes them forget their souls. It is they who are the iniquitous.

Muhammad

Muḥammad

All scholars agree that Muḥammad is a Madinan sūrah. Some maintain that it is early Madinan, with the exception of v. 13 (Āl, IJ, JJ), which is reported to have been revealed during the Prophet’s migration from Makkah to Madinah and thus before the beginning of the Madinan period (Āl). It takes its name from the mention of Muhammad in v. 2, one of only four verses to mention him by name; the others are 3:144; 33:40; and 48:29. It is also known to some as al-Qitāl (“Fighting”; Suyūṭī, Itqān), due to the criticism of those who shrink from the call to fight in the way of God in v. 20. The disease of hearts (vv. 20, 29) and the reasons for which God seals (v. 16) and locks (v. 24) them is an important theme of this sūrah, as is the true nature of human action. It therefore provides a subtle reflection upon the intrinsic connection between actions and belief or between deeds and the state of one’s heart.

The sūrah begins by distinguishing between the believers and the disbelievers with regard to the true nature of their deeds (vv. 1–3). An exhortation to fight the disbelievers (vv. 4–7) then segues into an examination of the state of disbelievers (vv. 8–10), followed by a comparison of the final ends of the believers and the disbelievers (vv. 11–15) that culminates in a stark contrast between what each group is given to drink in their final abode (v. 15). This contrast is followed by a more specific discussion of the manner in which the disbelievers react to the Prophet and the Quran (vv. 16–30). The discussion then focuses again upon the contrast between the believers and disbelievers, exhorting the believers to continue striving against the disbelievers (vv. 31–35). A final passage cautions against miserliness and enjoins the believers to spend in the way of God (vv. 36–38).

In the Name of God, the Compassionate, the Merciful

① Those who disbelieve and turn from the way of God—He has made their deeds go astray. ② And those who believe and perform righteous deeds, and believe in what has been sent down unto Muhammad—and it is the truth from their Lord—He has absolved them of their evil deeds and set their state aright. ③ That is because those who disbelieve follow falsehood and because those who believe follow the truth from their Lord. You are those who are called upon to spend in the way of God; yet among you some are miserly. And whosoever is miserly is only miserly toward himself. God is the Rich, and you are the poor. And if you turn away, He will cause a people other than you to take your place, and they will not be the likes of you.

Commentary

① Those who disbelieve and turn from the way of God—He has made their deeds go astray.

1 Turn from translates ṣadda ʿan, which can mean both “to turn away from” and “to prevent from” (Iṣ, Z). Taking the two meanings together, the verse indicates that the disbelievers turn away from the way of God and also seek to prevent others from following it. As this behavior reflects their disposition toward religion, God has made their deeds go astray, meaning that their evil deeds will not have the intended effect, that any good deeds they have performed will bring no benefit for them in the Hereafter (JJ), and that they mistake evil deeds for good deeds because the evil of their deeds is made to seem fair unto them (9:37). In this way, God brings their scheming and plotting to naught (Q). This verse stands in stark contrast to the last sentence of v. 4: And as for those who are slain in the way of God, He will not make their deeds go astray. But the use of the past tense here in v. 1 leaves open the possibility that those who disbelieve may repent in the future and thus be forgiven for their evil deeds.

② And those who believe and perform righteous deeds, and believe in what has been sent down unto Muhammad—and it is the truth from their Lord—He has absolved them of their evil deeds and set their state aright.

2 Whereas even the good deeds of disbelievers go astray, the evil deeds of believers are absolved and forgiven. Has absolved them of their evil deeds is understood by some to mean all of the evil deeds that they performed before they believed (Q), as it is a fundamental tenet of Islamic theology that embracing Islam “wipes out all previous sins.”

Absolution (takfīr) is said to cover over evil deeds, rendering them as if they had never been committed (Iṣ). It is thus a greater reward than forgiveness wherein although one will not be punished for one’s evil deeds one will still witness them on the Day of Judgment.

Set their state aright then means that God helps them in following the teachings of Islam after embracing religion (Z), as in 25:70, which says of those who repent, God will replace their evil deeds with good deeds (R). State translates bāl, which can also mean the heart or the mind (Ṭū).

3 That is because refers to God's rendering the deeds of the disbelievers void and absolving the believers of their evil deeds (JJ, Q), as the disbelievers follow falsehood and the believers follow truth (Q). In this context, Thus does God set forth for mankind their likenesses indicates that God has made clear the difference between good and evil deeds (Q), or it refers directly to the distinction made in the beginning of the verse between the disbelievers following falsehood and the believers following truth (R).

④ When you meet those who disbelieve, strike at their necks; then, when you have overwhelmed them, tighten the bonds. Then free them graciously or hold them for ransom, till war lays down its burdens. Thus [shall it be]. And if God willed, He would take vengeance upon them, but that He may test some of you by means of others, [. . .]. And as for those who are slain in the way of God, He will not make their deeds go astray.

4 Strike at their necks conveys the gravity and severity of the fighting (Q). Rendered literally, it would be “striking the necks” in the accusative, which is understood to mean “strike the necks with a strike” (IK, Q, Ṭ), indicating the brevity of the act, as it is confined to battle and is not a continuous command. When you have overwhelmed them can mean, “When you have overcome those whose necks you did not strike and made them captives” (Ṭ), or “When you have slaughtered them” (IK). Tighten the bonds means that prisoners should only be taken after the victory has definitely been achieved, as in 8:67: It is not for a prophet to take captives until he overwhelms [his enemy] in the land (Q). The bonds are to be tightened so that the enemy can neither cause further harm nor escape (Ṭ). According to the present verse, prisoners of war can be set free as a gracious act, ransomed for money, or freed to the other side in an exchange of prisoners (JJ, Q). It does not, however, command that prisoners be released. They may thus continue to be held captive as well or in certain cases even executed, alternatives practiced by the Prophet at various times during different battles according to different circumstances (Q). Although there are debates as to whether verses such as 8:57; 9:5; and 9:36 may abrogate this verse, al-Qurṭubī notes that abrogation only need arise in cases where two verses are considered irreconcilable in their legal intent, but that when it is possible to implement both verses under different circumstances, as in this case, there is no abrogation. Whether to slay prisoners of war because they are implacable adversaries, continue to hold them captive, or set them free must thus be decided on a case-by-case basis. For a more complete discussion of the treatment of captives, see commentary on 8:67–71; 9:5; and the essay “Conquest and Conversion, War and Peace in the Quran.”

Till war lays down its burdens means either until war ceases or so that war will cease. Some interpret its burdens literally to mean weapons, while others allow that it means all the hardships that war entails (Q). Many understand till war lays down its burdens as a reference to the time when only God is worshipped (Q, ٢, ٢٥). If God willed, He would take vengeance upon them without any fighting (JJ), but instead He tests some human beings by means of others (cf. 6:53), as in 5:48: And had God willed, He would have made you one community, but [He willed otherwise], that He might try you in that which He has given you. So vie with one another in good deeds.

⑤ He will guide them and set their state aright,

5 See 47:2c. In this context, the future tense indicates a promise that God will set their state aright.

⑥ and cause them to enter the Garden, having made it known to them.

6 After being guided and having their state set aright, God will bring the believers into the Garden (R). Then each person will know his or her place in Paradise, as in a ḥadīth: “When the believers have been saved from Hell, they will be stopped at a bridge between the Fire and the Garden, where they will retaliate against each other for the injustices done among them in the world. Then when they are purified and cleansed, they will be permitted to enter the Garden. And by Him in Whose Hands lies the soul of Muhammad, everybody will recognize his dwelling in the Garden better than he recognizes his dwelling in this world” (Q).

⑦ O you who believe! If you help God, He will help you and make firm your steps.

7 If you help God is understood to mean if believers help God’s religion and the Prophet (JJ, Q) or if they help the party of God (58:22). The manner in which believers help God is made more explicit in 22:40: Were it not for God’s repelling people, some by means of others, monasteries, churches, synagogues, and mosques, wherein God’s Name is mentioned much, would have been destroyed. And God will surely help those who help Him. The phrase make firm your steps (cf. 2:250; 3:147) refers to walking on the straight path (Q), or it means making one stand firm while fighting (JJ). It is also understood as an allegory for making hearts firm in faith (Q), as in 8:12, where God says to the angels before the Battle of Badr, Truly I am with you; so make firm those who believe.

⑧ As for those who disbelieve, wretched are they, and He has made their deeds go astray.

8 Wretched are they translates ta^csan lahum, an emphatic phrase that conveys ruin, sorrow, misery, revilement, destruction, defeat, failure, ignominy, evil, and misfortune (Q). With regard to God’s making their deeds go astray, see 47:1c.

⑨ That is because they were averse to that which God sent down, so He made their deeds come to naught.

9 That is because refers to their being wretched and to their deeds going astray (Q). That they were averse to what God sent down implies aversion to all revealed books and religions (Q). God makes their deeds come to naught in this world and the Hereafter (2:217; see also 3:22), since in the absence of proper belief, good deeds provide no reward in the next life (cf. 2:217; 3:21–22; 5:5; 6:88; 7:147; 9:17; 11:16; 18:105; 39:65; 5:53c).

⑩ Have they not journeyed upon the earth and observed how those before them fared in the end? God destroyed them; and the disbelievers shall have the like thereof.

10 Have they not journeyed upon the earth and observed how those before them fared in the end? is repeated several times in the Quran (see 12:109; 30:9c; 30:42; 35:44; 40:21, 82). The Quran frequently mentions the fate of the guilty, the corrupt, the wrongdoers, and those who denied God’s messengers as an admonition for the disbelievers (see 3:137; 6:11; 7:84, 86, 103; 10:39, 73; 16:36; 27:14, 69; 37:73; 43:25). Those before them is thus understood as a reference to the ruins left by previous tribes who were destroyed despite being of greater might than those who opposed the Prophet (see 35:44; 40:21, 82). For more on the Quranic discussion of journeying upon the earth and the spiritual and moral edification that derives from it, see 30:9c. That the disbelievers shall have the like thereof is understood to mean that they will suffer a fate like that of those before them (Q, Ṭ).

⑪ That is because God is Master of those who believe, and because the disbelievers have no master.

11 Here that refers to the destruction and degradation suffered by disbelievers of past generations (R). Master translates mawlā, which also means “protector” and “helper.” The implication is that anyone who does not recognize God as master, protector, and helper will have no master or protector, since they will find no protector or helper for themselves apart from God (33:17; cf., e.g., 29:22; 33:65; 42:31, 46; 46:32). Some maintain that this verse was revealed on the Day of the Battle of Uḥud, when, after gaining the upper hand over the Muslims, the idolaters shouted from afar, “A day for a day. We have [the goddess] ‘Uzzā and you have no ‘Uzzā.” The Prophet then told his Companions to shout back, “God is our Master, and you have no master” (Q).

⑫ Truly God causes those who believe and perform righteous deeds to enter Gardens with rivers running below, while those who disbelieve enjoy themselves and eat as cattle eat; and the Fire shall be an abode for them.

12 Regarding Gardens with rivers running below, see 2:25c. That the disbelievers eat as cattle eat means that they have no concern other than filling their bellies—and by implication satisfying their carnal desires (JJ, Q)—and are heedless of the Hereafter (JJ). In this vein, it is said, “In the world the believer makes provision [for the Hereafter], the hypocrite preens, and the disbeliever revels” (Q).

⑬ And how many a town greater in strength than thy town which cast thee out have We destroyed, having none then to help them?

13 According to some accounts, this verse was revealed at the beginning of the Prophet’s migration from Makkah to Madinah. After the Prophet left Makkah, he turned to the city and said, “By God, thou art the most beloved land to God and the most beloved land to me. Were it not that thy people had expelled me from thee, I would not have left thee” (Āl, IK, Q). This is one of several verses to mention previous peoples destroyed for their iniquity and for their refusal to accept the teachings of the messengers God had sent them, referring to towns (7:4; 21:11; 22:45, 48) and to whole generations (17:17; 19:74; 20:128; 32:26; 36:31; 38:3; 50:36), all of which serve as a reminder that God can undo the power of any people.

⑭ Is one who stands upon a clear proof from his Lord like one whose evil deeds are made to seem fair unto him and like those who follow their caprices?

14 A clear proof refers to the revelation, or to affirmation and certainty (Q), or simply to a definitive argument from his Lord (JJ). Elsewhere it is said of those who reject God’s messengers that Satan made their deeds seem fair unto them (16:63; 27:24; 29:38). That they follow their caprices is then a greater degree of disbelief, since one whose evil deeds are made to seem fair unto him may still have doubt and thus reflect upon and question his evil deeds and in doing so be closer to one who stands upon a clear proof (R). In this vein, 28:50 asks, And who is more astray than one who follows his caprice without guidance from God? Regarding the Quranic understanding of caprice, see 45:23c. Similarly, 32:18 asks rhetorically, Is one who believes like one who is iniquitous? They are not equal. And in 39:9 the Prophet is told, Say, "Are those who know and those who do not know equal?"

⑮ The parable of the Garden that has been promised to the reverent: therein lie rivers of water incorruptible, rivers of milk whose flavor does not change, rivers of wine delicious for those who imbibe, and rivers of purified honey. Therein they partake of every fruit and of forgiveness from their Lord. [Are they] like one who abides in the Fire and those who are made to drink a boiling liquid which then tears apart their bowels?

15 Water incorruptible means either water whose nature, in contrast to the water of this world, does not change (JJ) or water whose smell and taste do not change (Q). Milk whose flavor does not change means milk that does not sour, as does the milk of this world (Q). The rivers of wine provide a drink wherefrom they suffer neither headache nor stupefaction (56:19), unlike the wine of this world. And purified honey means that it is not earthly honey, which is made by bees and must then be harvested and filtered because of impurities, but is created directly by God (Q). Some equate these four rivers with the rivers seen by the Prophet during his Night Journey and Ascension through the seven heavens (see 17:1c; introduction to Sūrah 53). Regarding this part of the journey, the Prophet is reported to have said, “I was raised to the lote tree of the boundary (53:14) and saw four rivers, two of which were flowing out and two of which were flowing in. Those that were flowing out were the Nile and the Euphrates, and those that were flowing in were two rivers in Paradise. Then I was given three bowls: one containing milk, another containing honey, and a third containing wine. I took the bowl containing milk and drank it. It was said to me, ‘You and your followers will be on the right path.’”

Many Sufis see these rivers as four different kinds of Divinely granted knowledge by which the human heart is enlivened. According to al-Kāshānī’s detailed interpretation, water incorruptible is the knowledge that “does not change with the defects of delusions (wahmiyyāt), doubts (tashkīkāt), and differences in corrupt tenets (i^ctiqādāt) and customary beliefs. And it is for the reverent . . . who have reached the station of the heart” (K). Milk whose flavor does not change then represents a lower degree of knowledge that does not change by being mixed with caprice or innovation, the differences between schools of law, and the tribalism of those attached to creeds. This is the knowledge pertaining to proper actions that prevents one from acts of disobedience and depravity. The rivers of wine are then different kinds of love for the Divine Attributes and the Divine Essence. They are delicious “for those who are complete (kāmil), who have reached the station of witnessing the beauty of the manifestations of the [Divine] Attributes, and directly witnessing the beauty of the [Divine] Essence, the ardent lovers who desire Absolute Beauty, in the station of the spirit.” And the rivers of purified honey are “holy delights that descend [upon the heart], luminous gleams, and the raptures of realization in states and stations for [spiritual] wayfarers . . . and seekers.” Those who drink from the rivers of purified honey are thus less numerous than those who drink from the rivers of wine, and “not everyone who tastes the delight of honey tastes the sweetness of wine.” From this perspective, they partake of every fruit means that they partake of every delight from the manifestations of the Divine Acts, Attributes, and Essence (K).

Although other verses speak of those who are made to drink a boiling liquid (see 6:70; 10:4; 18:29; 37:67; 38:57; 44:46; 78:24–25; 88:5), none provides as stark a contrast. In the context of this sūrah and according to the Sufi interpretation, it could be said that they are made to drink the boiling liquid of their own caprice (K), as in 4:10: Truly those who consume the property of orphans unjustly only consume fire in their bellies, a reality that the Prophet is said to have directly witnessed in his glimpse of Hell during the Night Journey and Ascension. In this way, it is the disbelief and evil deeds of those in Hell that tear apart their bowels, since God does not wrong human beings in the least, but rather human beings wrong themselves (10:44).

①⑥ Among them are those who listen unto thee. Then when they depart from thee they say to those who have been given knowledge, “What did he say?” It is they whose hearts God has sealed and who follow their caprices.

16 Among them refers to the hypocrites of Madinah, while those who have been given knowledge refers to the Prophet’s Companions (Q, Ṭ, Z). In this context, that God seals their hearts (see 2:7c) means that, although they hear the words and profess belief outwardly, they are blinded by their desire to follow their caprices. Thus they cannot understand and do not act in accord with what they hear. This verse can also be understood as a message to believers that they must be attentive when reciting the Quran, lest they hear the words but do not understand them or heed their meaning. In his Revival of the Religious Sciences, al-Ghazzālī lists four obstacles that prevent those who listen to the Quran from understanding it: confining their focus to the correct pronunciation of the letters of the Quran; dogmatic adherence to a particular school of thought (madhhab); persistence in sin or being characterized by pride and worldly passions; and reading the outward commentary on the Quran and thinking that the Quran contains only those meanings that have been transmitted from early commentators such as Ibn ʿAbbās, Ibn Masʿūd, and the like (Iḥyāʾ: Qirāʾāt al-qurʾān).

17 But those who are guided, He increases them in guidance and grants them their reverence.

17 Increases them in guidance indicates that God increases those who are guided in faith (Q, Ṭ), knowledge, and insight (Q), which does not occur for those whose hearts are sealed. That God grants them their reverence indicates either that God helps them attain reverence or that He gives them rewards for their reverence (Z).

18 Do they await aught but that the Hour should come upon them suddenly? Yet its portents have already come. Then when it has come upon them, what will their remembrance do for them?

18 This verse asks whether those disbelievers and hypocrites (mentioned in the previous verses) are waiting for the Final Hour, and whether they know that it will come upon them suddenly and that they will not have time to repent and remember God (Ṭ). Although there are many discussions regarding the signs or portents of the Hour, the sign to which this verse refers is most likely the coming of the Prophet, who is reported to have said, “I was sent like this in relation to the Hour,” while pointing to his index finger and his middle finger (Mw, Q).

19 Know, then, that there is no god but God, and ask forgiveness for thy sin and for the believing men and the believing women. God knows your coming and going, and your abode.

19 Some understand this verse to mean that what one has learned by way of reason and deduction, one must know for certain (Mw). Others see it as a command to say, “There is no god but God,” as the form of remembrance mentioned in the previous verse. God knows your coming and going, and your abode is interpreted as a reference to waking activity and sleep (Mw, Q, Ṭ) or to activity in this life and the state in the grave and the Hereafter (Aj, Q). In each interpretation, it refers to God knowing all of one’s states because nothing is hidden from Him (Aj).

20 Those who believe say, “Would that a sūrah were sent down.” Then when a definitive sūrah wherein fighting is mentioned is sent down, thou seest those in whose hearts is a disease looking at thee as if death had overcome them. More fitting for them

21 would be obedience to God and honorable speech. Then, when the matter is resolved, were they true to God, it would be better for them.

20–21 For the meaning of definitive or “determined” sūrahs or verses, see 3:7c. It is said that the context for this verse is a time when some believers were hoping for a sūrah that would allow them to fight their enemies. While in Makkah, a group of the Muslims had reportedly asked the Prophet why they could not fight the disbelievers even though they were oppressed by them. The Prophet responded that he had not been commanded to fight. When verses came enjoining fighting, many feared fighting even as they should have feared God (4:77; see 61:2–3c). Though they went into battle, some of the believers were at first reluctant to fight, and some even retreated at the Battle of Uḥud (see 3:121c; 3:155c). This verse, however, most likely refers only to the hypocrites (Q, R, Ṭ), since those in whose hearts is a disease (cf. 2:10; 5:52; 8:49; 9:125; 22:53; 33:12, 60; 47:29; 74:31) describes those of impure intentions (see 33:32) or those who secretly harbor in their souls a deep religious hypocrisy or doubt (see 2:8–11; 5:52; 24:47–50; 33:12, 60). As translated, a single thought continues through these two verses, though some prefer to place a full stop at the end of v. 20, so that the last clause means “[death] would be more fitting for them” (R). In this context, honorable speech means words that are kind to the Prophet (JJ), rather than scoffing, and when the matter is resolved means when fighting has been decreed.

22 Were you to turn away, would you perchance work corruption upon the earth and break your family relations?

22 What the hypocrites turn away from is the religion and the Prophet. Although here working corruption is linked specifically to breaking family relations, it is more generally linked to all manner of iniquity, such as arrogance (7:74) and oppression (26:183; 28:4). For the Quranic understanding of working corruption, see 30:41c. Regarding the prohibition against working corruption upon the earth, see 7:56c. Maintaining family relations, literally, “womb relations,” is considered to be among the most important virtues; see 4:1c, where reverence is linked to maintaining family relations in the same way that obedience is linked to it in these verses. According to a ḥadīth qudsī, “God created creatures, and when He finished His creations, the womb said, ‘[O God,] at this place I seek refuge in Thee from all those who sever me [i.e., sever the ties of kinship].’ God said, ‘Yes. Will you not be pleased that I will keep good relations with the one who will keep good relations with you, and I will sever relations with the one who will sever relations with you.’ It said, ‘Yes, O my Lord.’ God said, ‘Then that is for you.’” To this the Prophet added, “Read if you wish, the statement of God: Were you to turn away, would you perchance work corruption upon the earth and break your family relations?” In this context, breaking family relations is understood to mean returning to the ways of paganism and idolatry before Islam (JJ, Ṭ). But as maintaining family relations was also an esteemed virtue among the Arabs before the advent of Islam, for such an interpretation to hold true, family relations would need to be used as a metaphor for the bonds of brotherhood between Muslims, as mentioned in 49:10: The believers are but brothers; so make peace between your brethren, and reverence God, that haply you may receive mercy.

23 They are those whom God has cursed, making them deaf and blinding their sight.

23 They are those who turn away, work corruption, and do not honor family ties. Making them deaf and blinding their sight indicates that their hearts are unreceptive to truth, as in 22:46: Truly it is not the eyes that go blind, but it is hearts within breasts that go blind (cf. 18:57; 41:44). They continue to hear and to see, but because the heart, the seat of the intellect, is hardened and therefore, spiritually speaking, dead, they are like the cattle mentioned in v. 12 in that they have no intellect (Q).

24 Do they not contemplate the Quran? Or do hearts have their locks upon them?

24 The question Do they not contemplate the Quran? is repeated in 4:82; see also 23:68: Have they not contemplated the Word, or has there come unto them that which came not unto their forefathers? Although recitation of the Quran is enjoined in several passages, it is also noted that one must contemplate, understand, and implement the Quran's teachings to the best of one's ability. In this vein, Ibn Mas'ūd is reported to have said of the Companions, "The Prophet used to recite for them ten verses, and they would not move on to the next ten until they had learned everything about [the first ten]. Thus he taught them the Quran and the deeds based upon it together." Regarding the knowledge to be obtained by meditating upon the Quran, the fourth Shiite Imam, 'Alī Zayn al-'Ābidīn, is reported to have said, "The verses of the Quran are stores of treasure. So whenever you open one of them, you must see what lies inside." Another famous ḥadīth says, "The best of you is one who learns the Quran and teaches it." In this same vein, Ibn Mas'ūd is reported to have said, "When you intend to acquire knowledge, study the Quran in depth, for in it lies the knowledge of those of old and those of later times." Or do hearts have their locks upon them is understood to mean, "But hearts have their locks upon them" (IJ). Some understand the locked heart to refer to the heart of the most severely afflicted, whom no guidance reaches, while hearts with rust upon them (see 83:14) and hearts that are sealed (see v. 16) are less diseased (IJ).

25 Truly those who turn their backs after guidance has been made clear to them—Satan has seduced them, yet He grants them respite.

25 Here those who turn their backs refers to those who turn their backs on the Prophet, which could mean the hypocrites who turned away when fighting was enjoined upon them (IJ, Q) or the Jews of Madinah who rejected the Prophet and turned away from part of what was revealed to them (IJ), as in 2:85, when they are asked, Do you, then, believe in part of the Book and disbelieve in part? Some say that it refers to the disbelievers who knew the Prophet’s trustworthy character well before the coming of Islam, but nonetheless rejected him after the coming of Islam (Q). As translated, the last phrase means that God grants them respite in this world, so that they may turn in repentance before they die, or to allow them to further prove their sinful nature (see 3:178). He grants them respite could also be rendered “he gives them false hope,” deriving from the verb amala, meaning “to hope” (Ṭ), in which case the subject of the verb would be Satan.

26 That is because they say to those who are averse to what God has sent down, “We shall obey you in some matters.” And God knows their keeping of secrets.

26 That refers to the seduction by Satan and the granting of respite (or false hope). Here commentators mention that it is either the hypocrites or the Jews who turn to the disbelievers who are averse to what God has sent down and offer to follow them. An alternate reading of And God knows their keeping of secrets (isrārahum) is, “And God knows their secrets (asrārahum)” (IJ, Q). Both readings refer to their secret consultations with the disbelievers.

27 Then how will it be when the angels seize them, striking their faces and their backs?

27 This verse asks what the state of the disbelievers will be when the angels take their souls, given that God granted them respite but they still died in a state of disobedience (Q). Regarding the angels’ striking their faces and their backs, see 8:50, which adds that the angels say to them, Taste the punishment of the burning, and 8:50c.

28 That is because they followed that which angers God and were averse to His good pleasure; so He made their deeds come to naught.

28 That refers to the punishment mentioned in the previous verse. For made their deeds come to naught, see 47:9c.

29 Or do those in whose hearts is a disease suppose that God will not expose their rancor?

29 This verse asks if the hypocrites fear that God will expose their hypocrisy by exposing their enmity for the Prophet (IJ)

30 And if We willed, We would show them to you so that you would know them by their mark. And you will certainly know them by their tone of speech. And God knows your deeds.

30 Regarding the marks upon the disbelievers and the hypocrites, 55:41 states, The guilty shall be known by their marks; and they shall be seized by the forelocks and by the feet. For other verses that mention marks that reveal belief or disbelief, see 2:273; 7:46–48. For a discussion of the ability to know them by their mark, see 2:273c. Their tone of speech can refer to the tenor with which they said things or to their actual words, as when ʿAbd Allāh ibn Ubayy, the leader of the hypocrites in Madinah, is reported to have said with regard to the Prophet and his Companions, If we return to Madinah, the mightier will surely expel the weaker therefrom (63:8).

31 And We shall test you until We know those among you who strive and those who are patient, and We shall test your proclamations.

31 God will test people to see if their testimony of faith and willingness to fight are indeed true, as was reportedly done in the Battle of Uḥud (see 3:121c;

3:155c). In the context of this sūrah, this verse means both that one must act in accord with revelation in order for one's proclamations of belief to be accepted and that many of the hypocrites declared their willingness to fight until they were commanded to do so (v. 20). Those among you who strive (cf. 3:142; 9:16) refers not only to those who fight, but also to those who strive in the way of God with their property and themselves (49:15; cf. 2:218; 4:95; 5:54; 8:74; 9:20, 41, 44, 81). Until We know could also mean "in order to know" (cf. 2:143c). In either translation, it is understood to mean, "in order to make manifest" in existence, as God already knows their true nature (IJ); see 10:14c; 29:3c. In a more general sense, the present verse indicates that all hypocrisy will be exposed.

32 Truly those who disbelieve and turn from the way of God, and oppose the Messenger of God after guidance has been made clear to them will not harm God in the least. And He will make their deeds come to naught.

32 Regarding turn from, see 47:1c. After guidance has been made clear means after the revelation has been made clear. Whereas vv. 9 and 28 state that God made their deeds come to naught, which can be understood as a reference to deeds for which one would receive reward if they were combined with faith and thus right intention, here the deeds that come to naught is understood as a reference to acts done in defiance of the Prophet (R), and the use of the future tense thus conveys a promise that they will not prevail against him.

33 O you who believe! Obey God and obey the Messenger and let not your deeds be in vain.

33 The Command to obey God and obey the Messenger (3:32; 4:59; 5:92; 24:54; 64:12; see also 3:132; 4:80; 7:156–57; 8:1, 20, 46; 33:33; 49:14; 58:13) is an underlying theme of the Quran; see 3:32c; 4:59c. Although most commentators relate the Command let not your deeds be in vain to undoing good deeds through disobedience, it can also be understood as an injunction to purify one's intentions. In this vein, al-Tustarī writes, "Let not your deeds be in vain, that is, by seeing them as coming from yourselves and by seeking recompense from your Lord, for sincere action is that which seeks no recompense” (ST).

③ Truly those who disbelieve and turn from the way of God, then die while they are disbelievers, God will not forgive them.

34 Those who die in a state of disbelief will not be forgiven, because God forgives not that any partner be ascribed unto Him, but He forgives what is less than that for whomsoever He will (4:48, 116). In contrast those disbelievers, such as Khālid ibn al-Walīd (d. 642), who initially sought to turn others away from Islam before repenting and embracing Islam are believed to have been absolved of their evil deeds (see 47:2c). Khālid ibn al-Walīd, for example, later became a legendary Muslim military leader and is held in high regard by Sunni Muslims.

③ So do not falter and call for peace while you have the upper hand. God is with you and will not deprive you of your deeds.

35 Do not falter, that is, show weakness (IJ). Many understand this verse as a command not to make treaties with the disbelievers (IJ, Q). If this is the case, it would be a command to the nascent Muslim community during its first years in Madinah, when this sūrah is believed to have been revealed, as the Prophet later made significant treaties with many of the tribes who remained disbelievers, the most important of which was the Treaty of Ḥudaybiyah, made with the Quraysh in 6/628 (see the introduction to Sūrah 48). The command to not make treaties with the disbelievers would also stand in stark contrast to the command to make peace given in 8:61: And if they incline toward peace, incline thou toward it, and trust in God. Some thus say that 8:61 abrogates this verse (Q), but, as discussed in 47:4c, in questions such as these many commentators prefer to see such differences as a description of different options or conditions or different rulings under different circumstances rather than abrogation.

③ The life of this world is but play and diversion. If you believe and are reverent, He will give you your rewards and not ask you for your wealth.

36 This world is described as mere play and diversion (see also 6:32; 29:64) or as naught but the enjoyment of delusion (3:185) and more fully as play, diversion, ornament, mutual boasting among you, and vying for increase in property and children—the likeness of a rain whose vegetation impresses the farmers; then it withers such that you see it turn yellow; then it becomes chaff (57:20). That He will . . . not ask for your wealth means that God will allow people to keep most of their wealth, requiring only that they pay the mandatory alms (zakāh); it can also be understood to imply that God is not asking for people’s wealth but for His wealth, since all things ultimately belong to Him (cf. 25:57; Q).

37 Were He to ask you for it, then implore you, you would be miserly, and He would expose your rancor.

37 Were He to ask you for it is understood to mean, “Were He to ask you for all that you own,” while expose your rancor means, “make manifest your enmity toward God and His Messenger” (IJ). In other words, God is Merciful in that He only asks that a small amount of the wealth He has given be spent in the way of God.

38 Behold! You are those who are called upon to spend in the way of God; yet among you some are miserly. And whosoever is miserly is only miserly toward himself. God is the Rich, and you are the poor. And if you turn away, He will cause a people other than you to take your place, and they will not be the likes of you.

38 Whosoever is miserly is only miserly toward himself indicates a moral and spiritual reflexivity of actions in which one’s actions ultimately affect oneself more than anyone else (see also 4:131; 5:54; 6:133; 14:19). In this context, it is understood to mean that refusal to pay the mandatory alms is in fact to deprive oneself of the benefits that accrue from it (IJ), since God has no need of one’s money (Q). Conversely, whatever good you spend, it is for yourselves, when you spend only seeking the Face of God (2:272). This “reflexive” nature of good and evil deeds is emphasized throughout the Quran (see 2:9, 272; 3:69; 4:111; 6:123; 8:60; 9:34–35;

10:23; 29:6; 35:18; 36:19).

God is the Rich, and you are the poor (cf. 35:15c) means that God is completely sufficient unto Himself, and human beings are utterly dependent upon Him. In the present context, it also refers to the fact that all of one's wealth is from God; so to refuse to pay the mandatory alms in the way of God is to refuse to give back to God what is rightfully His. It can, moreover, be understood as a reference to the fact that one's very existence is from God and that one must thus submit fully and completely to Him. In this vein, al-Tustarī writes of this phrase, "Knowledge of poverty before God is the knowledge that wealth is in God" (ST).

He will cause a people other than you to take your place (cf. 4:133; 5:54; 6:133; 9:39; 11:57; 14:19; 35:16) means that God will replace some with others more worthy of His religion, meaning either another people who already exist or a whole new people whom He will create (IJ). They will not be the likes of you then means that they will be better people (IJ), not miserly and refusing to spend in the way of God (Ṭ).

Victory

al-Fatḥ

A Madinan sūrah, al-Fatḥ was revealed while the Prophet was returning to Madinah from the area of Ḥudaybiyah, just outside of Makkah, during the month of Dhu'l-Qa^cdah in the year 6/628. The Prophet had set out on a pilgrimage to Makkah with many pilgrims, fourteen hundred according to most accounts. They donned the pilgrim garb and were unarmed, save for sheathed swords used mostly for hunting. They stopped at Ḥudaybiyah, and the Quraysh refused them entry into the sacred precinct. There, the Muslims and the Quraysh agreed upon a treaty, known as the Treaty of Ḥudaybiyah, which stipulated the following: both parties would cease hostilities for ten years; neither would interfere with the free movement of the other; the Prophet and his followers would abandon the pilgrimage that year, but then be allowed to perform the pilgrimage every year for the following ten years; any man who left the Quraysh to join the Muslims would be returned to the Quraysh, but any man who left the Muslims for the Quraysh would not be returned to the Muslims; and any tribes that wished to enter into an alliance with the Muslims were free to do so, as were any that wished to enter into an alliance with the Quraysh.

Some of the Prophet's Companions, however, considered the terms unfavorable for the Muslims and even tantamount to defeat. Nonetheless, the Prophet accepted the terms, and the treaty worked quickly and decisively to the advantage of the Muslim side. The freedom of any tribe to ally with either the Muslims or the Quraysh absolved the tribes of their former alliances, and some that had been allied with the Quraysh quickly switched to the Muslims. The concluding of a treaty with the Quraysh clearly demonstrated that the Muslims had acquired at least equal footing with the Quraysh, which was a feat in and of itself.

After the Prophet slaughtered his sacrificial animals in the area of Ḥudaybiyah, where the Muslim pilgrims had stopped, and they had begun the return trip to Madinah, this sūrah was revealed, declaring the Treaty of Ḥudaybiyah a manifest victory. Regarding this event, ‘Umar ibn al-Khaṭṭāb is reported to have said, “We were with the Messenger of God on a trip, and I asked him about a matter three times, but he did not answer me. So I said to myself, ‘May your mother be bereft of you, O Ibn al-Khaṭṭāb! You were stubborn in repeating your question three times to the Messenger of God; each time he did not respond to you.’ So I mounted my camel and went ahead for fear that a part of the Quran might be revealed regarding my case. Suddenly I heard someone calling, ‘O ‘Umar!’ So I went to the Messenger while fearing that part of the Quran had been revealed about me. The Prophet said, ‘Last night, a sūrah was revealed to me that is dearer to me than all over which the sun rises.’ Then he recited [the sūrah beginning with] Truly We have granted thee a manifest victory” (IK, Q). The Prophet is also reported to have recited this sūrah while riding his camel on the day of the conquest of Makkah (IK).

Al-Faṭḥ begins with a description of the manifest victory that God granted to the Prophet and his followers, which is described in spiritual terms (vv. 1–7). It then transitions into a discussion of the function of the Prophet and a reference to the pledge of allegiance made by those who traveled with him to Ḥudaybiyah (vv. 8–10), followed by a criticism of those who stayed behind making excuses for having rejected the Prophet’s invitation to join him on pilgrimage (vv. 11–17). Those who traveled with the Prophet and pledged allegiance are praised and promised extensive spoils in this life and reward in the next (vv. 18–21). The sūrah then discusses God’s reasons for having prevented fighting in this instance (vv. 22–25) and concludes with a contrast between the disbelievers, who remain consumed by the zealotry of the Age of Ignorance (v. 26), and the believers, who have been granted God’s Tranquility (v. 26) and who are likened to a plant that continues to grow firm (v. 29).

In the Name of God, the Compassionate, the Merciful

① Truly We have granted thee a manifest victory, ② that God may forgive thee thy sins that went before and that which is to come, and complete His Blessing upon thee, and guide thee upon a straight path; ③ and that God may help thee with a mighty help. ④ He it is Who sends down Tranquility into the hearts of the believers, that they might increase in faith along with their faith—to God belong the hosts of the heavens and the earth, and God is Knowing, Wise— ⑤ that He may cause the believing men and the believing women to enter Gardens with rivers running below, therein to abide, and that He may absolve them of their evil deeds—that is a great triumph in the sight of God— ⑥ and that He may punish the hypocritical men and the hypocritical women, and the idolatrous men and the idolatrous women, who think an evil thought concerning God. Upon them is an evil turn. God is wroth with them, curses them, and prepares Hell for them—what an evil journey’s end! ⑦ And to God belong the hosts of the heavens and the earth, and God is Mighty, Wise. ⑧ Truly We have sent thee as a witness, as a bearer of glad tidings, and as a warner, ⑨ that you may believe in God and His Messenger, and support Him, and honor Him, and that you may glorify Him morning and evening. ⑩ Truly those who pledge allegiance unto thee pledge allegiance only unto God. The Hand of God is over their hands. And whosoever reneges, reneges only to his detriment. And whosoever fulfills what He has pledged unto God, He will grant him a great reward. ⑪ The Bedouin who stayed behind will say to thee, “We were occupied by our property and our families; so ask forgiveness for us.” They say with their tongues that which is not in their hearts. Say, “Who can avail you aught from God should He desire harm for you or should He desire benefit for you? Nay, but God is Aware of whatsoever you do. ⑫ Nay, but you thought the Messenger and the believers would never return to their families, and that was made to seem fair in your hearts. You thought an evil thought and were a people ruined.” ⑬ And whosoever does not believe in God and His Messenger—truly We have prepared a Blaze for the disbelievers. ⑭ Unto God belongs sovereignty over the heavens and the earth. He forgives whomsoever He will and punishes whomsoever He will; and God is Forgiving, Merciful. ⑮ Those who stayed behind will say when you set out to capture spoils, “Let us follow you.” They desire to change the Word of God. Say, “You will not follow us; thus has God said before.” Then they will say, “Nay, but you are jealous of us.” Nay, but they have not understood, save a little. ⑯ Say to the Bedouin who stayed behind, “You will be called against a people possessed of great might; you will fight them or they will submit. So if you obey, God will grant you a beautiful reward; but if you turn away as you turned away before, He will punish you with a painful punishment.” ⑰ There is no blame upon the blind; nor is there blame upon the lame; nor is there blame upon the sick. Whosoever obeys God and His Messenger, He will cause him to enter Gardens with rivers running below. And whosoever turns away, He will punish him with a painful punishment. ⑱ God was content with the believers when they pledged allegiance unto thee beneath the tree. He knew what was in their hearts and sent down Tranquility upon them and rewarded them with a victory nigh ⑲ and abundant spoils that they will capture; and God is Mighty, Wise. ⑳ God has promised you abundant spoils that you will capture—then He hastened this for you and restrained the people’s hands from you, that it may be a sign for the believers, and that He may guide you upon a straight path— ㉑ and others of which you were not capable, God has encompassed them; and God is Powerful over all things. ㉒ If those who disbelieve had fought you, they would have turned [their] backs, and then would have found neither protector nor helper. ㉓ [That is] the wont of God that came to pass aforetime; and you will find no alteration in the wont of God. ㉔ He it is Who restrained their hands from you and your hands from them in the valley of Makkah, after having made you victorious over them. And God sees whatsoever you do. ㉕ It is they who disbelieved and turned you from the Sacred Mosque and the offerings detained from reaching their place of sacrifice. And were it not for believing men and believing women whom you know not, lest you trample them, and thus incur guilt unknowingly—that God may cause whomsoever He will to enter into His Mercy—had they been clearly separated, We would surely have punished the disbelievers among them with a painful punishment. ②⑥

When those who disbelieve had set zealotry in their hearts, the zealotry of the Age of Ignorance, God sent down His Tranquility upon His Messenger and upon the believers, and enjoined the word of reverence upon them, they being more worthy of it and deserving of it. And God is Knower of all things. ②⑦ Surely God has fulfilled for His Messenger the vision in truth: you shall enter the Sacred Mosque in security, if God wills, with the hair of your heads shaven or cut, not fearing. For He knows what you know not, and He has given you therewithal a victory nigh. ②⑧ He it is Who sent His Messenger with guidance and the Religion of Truth to make it prevail over all religion. And God suffices as a Witness. ②⑨ Muhammad is the Messenger of God. Those who are with him are harsh against the disbelievers, merciful to one another. You see them bowing, prostrating, seeking bounty from God and contentment; their mark upon their faces is from the effect of prostration. That is their likeness in the Torah. And their likeness in the Gospel is a sapling that puts forth its shoot and strengthens it, such that it grows stout and rises firmly upon its stalk, impressing the sowers, that through them He may enrage the disbelievers. God has promised forgiveness and a great reward to those among them who believe and perform righteous deeds.

Commentary

① Truly We have granted thee a manifest victory,

1 In historical context, this verse is understood by many as a reference to the conquest of Makkah (JJ, Q, R) and, by extension, other future Muslim victories (JJ). But many of the Prophet's Companions, such as Ibn Mas'ūd and Anas ibn Mālik, saw it as a specific reference to the Treaty of Ḥudaybiyah (IK, Q), as this treaty allowed Muslims and non-Muslims to mix more freely and thus resulted in an increase in the number of adherents to Islam (IK, Q). In this regard, Ibn Mas'ūd is reported to have said, "You consider the conquering of Makkah to be the victory, while to us the victory is the treaty conducted at Ḥudaybiyah" (IK). The verse can also be understood as a reference to the victory of Islam by means of proofs and revelation (R). Victory translates fath, which also means "opening." Read in this way, some understand fath as a reference to the opening of the heart and thus to the unveiling of the secrets of the Divine Essence, the lights of the Divine Attributes, and the beauty of Divine Acts (Aj).

② that God may forgive thee thy sins that went before and that which is to come, and complete His Blessing upon thee, and guide thee upon a straight path;

③ and that God may help thee with a mighty help.

2-3 Many commentators understand v. 2 to mean that God has forgiven the Prophet all of his sins, past and future; thus some take it as a proof-text for the spiritual inerrancy (ʿiṣmah) of the Prophet (JJ, R). According to some commentators, thy sins that went before refers to sins committed before the manifest victory, while that which is to come refers to sins committed after it (JJ, Q, R, Ṭ). Others say this verse refers to the period before and the period after the revelation began (Q, R, Ṭ), while still others say it means what preceded the revelation of this verse and what followed it (Q). Even after this promise of forgiveness, the Prophet continued to stand in prayer at night until his feet swelled, asking forgiveness of God. When asked why he did so, the Prophet replied, "Should I not be a thankful servant?" (IK, Ṭ). Complete His Blessing refers to attaining Paradise, the blessing of prophethood and wisdom, or the conquests of Khaybar, Makkah, and Ṭāʿif (Q).

④ He it is Who sends down Tranquility into the hearts of the believers, that they might increase in faith along with their faith—to God belong the hosts of the heavens and the earth, and God is Knowing, Wise—

4 Tranquility (sakīnah; cf. 2:248; 9:26, 40; 48:18, 26) is understood by some as a reference to God’s Mercy (Ṭ) or to patience in carrying out what God has ordered (Aj). Others say, “It is an angel that dwells in the hearts of believers, providing them support” (Iṣ). It is also said that the sakīnah is the intellect (ʿaql), or that one has sakīnah when one alleviates (sakkana ʿan) the inclination toward desires (shahawāt; Iṣ). Some see the repetition of the term faith in increase in faith along with their faith as a reference to an increase in certainty along with faith (Aj, Q). Others say the increase in faith reflects the gradual increase in religious obligations that are added to the initial faith, the testimony of faith, There is no god but God, that is, prayer, almsgiving, fasting, and the ḥajj (in that order). Each time the Muslims confirmed one of these obligations, God added another until the religion was complete (Q, Ṭ, Z). Here the hosts of the heavens and the earth may refer to those helpers whom God sends upon his enemies as He wills (Ṭ), thus indicating both that God will defeat those who oppose Him and His Messenger and that, if He so willed, He could vanquish them at any moment, but instead grants them respite.

⑤ that He may cause the believing men and the believing women to enter Gardens with rivers running below, therein to abide, and that He may absolve them of their evil deeds—that is a great triumph in the sight of God—

5 After the Prophet informed the believers of the revelation of vv. 1–3, saying of them, “A passage more beloved to me than the world entire has been revealed to me,” the Companions said, “Congratulations, O Messenger of God. God has made clear to us what He will do with thee. What will He do with us?” This verse was then revealed (IK, Q, Ṭ, W). The verse can thus be viewed as following upon v. 1, meaning, Truly We have granted thee a manifest victory . . . that He may cause the believing men and the believing women to enter Gardens (Ṭ). Or it can be seen as following upon v. 4, meaning that the Tranquility was the cause of their entering the Gardens (Q). Attaining “the Garden” is referred to as the great triumph in over a dozen verses, though some see the great triumph as a stage of nearness to God that is even beyond the paradisaical Garden; for the blessings of Paradise, see commentary on 5:119; 44:51–57.

⑥ and that He may punish the hypocritical men and the hypocritical women, and the idolatrous men and the idolatrous women, who think an evil thought concerning God. Upon them is an evil turn. God is wroth with them, curses them, and prepares Hell for them—what an evil journey’s end!

⑦ And to God belong the hosts of the heavens and the earth, and God is Mighty, Wise.

6–7 Who think an evil thought concerning God refers to those who thought that God would not help the Prophet and his followers (Ṭ, Z) or those who thought that the Prophet and those who left with him on pilgrimage would not return to Madinah (Q; see v. 12). An evil turn refers to the punishment that will be leveled upon the idolaters and the hypocrites in this life and the next (Ṭ), to their corruption (Q), or to the manner in which what they are waiting to befall the Prophet and his followers will in fact befall them (Z). Although the previous mention of the hosts in v. 4 confirms the manner in which such hosts assist the Prophet and the believers, their mention here affirms God’s Power over the hypocrites and the disbelievers. Commenting upon the meaning of God’s hosts, al-Tustarī is reported to have said, “His hosts are of different kinds. His hosts in Heaven are the prophets, and on earth, the saints. His hosts in Heaven are hearts, and on the earth, souls. Whatever God empowers over you is among His hosts. If He empowers your soul over you, your soul will destroy your soul. If He empowers your bodily members over you, they will destroy you. If your soul overpowers your heart, it will drive you to follow caprice. But if your heart overpowers your soul and your bodily members, it will tether them with propriety (adab), compel them to worship, and then adorn them with sincerity in servanthood. All of these are God’s hosts” (ST).

8 Truly We have sent thee as a witness, as a bearer of glad tidings, and as a warner,

8 The Prophet was sent as a witness to Divine Oneness (ST) or as one who will bear witness for or against people in the Hereafter; see 33:45c. The Prophet is also referred to as both a bearer of glad tidings and a warner in 2:119; 5:19; 7:188; 11:2; 17:105; 25:56; 33:45; 34:28; 35:24, while in other verses these functions are attributed to all prophets (see 2:213; 4:165; 6:48; 18:56).

9 that you may believe in God and His Messenger, and support Him, and honor Him, and that you may glorify Him morning and evening.

9 Some early authorities are said to have read this verse, “That they may believe in God and His Messenger, that they may support Him” (Ṭ). In either reading, it can be understood as an address to the believers of the Prophet’s time or to all of humanity. Believers support God either by magnifying Him or by fighting in God’s way (Q, Ṭ). The words here translated support and honor can indicate both honoring and magnifying. The first is thus taken by some as a command to honor God and the second as a command to honor the Prophet (Q). Others see it as a command to both support and honor the Prophet (Q in commentary on 47:25), since the pronoun can refer to either God or the Prophet. Regarding the injunction to glorify Him morning and evening (cf. 6:52; 18:28; 19:11; 24:36; 76:25), see 33:42c; 76:25–26c.

10 Truly those who pledge allegiance unto thee pledge allegiance only unto God. The Hand of God is over their hands. And whosoever reneges, reneges only to his detriment. And whosoever fulfills what He has pledged unto God, He will grant him a great reward.

10 In the same way that whosoever obeys the Messenger obeys God (4:80), to pledge allegiance to the Prophet is to pledge allegiance to God (Q). The pledge of allegiance is widely known as the Pledge of Good Pleasure (bay’at al-riḍwān); see 48:18c. There is extensive debate over how to understand phrases such as the Hand of God, which seem to describe God as having human and bodily characteristics.

Some say that the complete meaning of such verses cannot be understood by human beings and should be relegated to God alone. Others claim that the literal meaning has significance, but that it should be interpreted as a reference to one of God's Attributes, such as Power, which is associated with God's Hand, or that a symbolic and metaphorical meaning is what is intended rather than a literal one. Others, however, say that the literal meaning is the true meaning, but that its actuality is unknown, since the manifestation of Divine Attributes such as Living, Knowing, Hearing, and Seeing on the human plane is not commensurate with the Divine Reality of these Attributes. There is thus no correlation between what is meant by God's Hand and the physical, human hand, since naught is like unto Him (42:11). This verse is thus understood by some as containing the highest praise for the Prophet in the Quran, since it equates grasping his hand with grasping the Hand of God and pledging allegiance to him with the pledging of allegiance to God (Aj).

This verse is often invoked by Sufi masters in the rite of initiation of a disciple into the spiritual path, or ṭarīqah. For Sufis it has a spiritual significance related to the transmission of the spiritual power, or wilāyah/walāyah, from the Prophet to certain of his Companions and through them to one generation after another of those seeking to follow the spiritual path.

Whosoever reneges his pledge of allegiance reneges only to his detriment insofar as he has prevented himself from earning reward and made himself liable to punishment (Q). What He has pledged unto God refers to the pledge of allegiance, but can also be seen as an allusion to the pretemporal covenant made between God and humanity in 7:172, of which the pledge of allegiance stated in the present verse is a reaffirmation.

⑪ The Bedouin who stayed behind will say to thee, “We were occupied by our property and our families; so ask forgiveness for us.” They say with their tongues that which is not in their hearts. Say, “Who can avail you aught from God should He desire harm for you or should He desire benefit for you? Nay, but God is Aware of whatsoever you do.

11 The Bedouin who stayed behind refers to those tribes in the area of Madinah that, due to their fear of the Quraysh, made excuses for refusing the invitation to go on pilgrimage with the Prophet (Q). In this context, Who can avail you aught from God should He desire harm for you or should He desire benefit for you? (cf. 3:160; 10:107; 36:23; 39:38) means that no one can avert what God desires or has ordained (IK). It can also be understood to imply that the Prophet's prayer for forgiveness of them can do them no good if God has already made a determination regarding their hypocrisy, as in 63:6: It is the same for them whether thou askest forgiveness for them or thou askest forgiveness for them not; God will never forgive them. Truly God guides not iniquitous people (see also 4:107; 9:80). Elsewhere the Quran asks, And if He forsakes you, who then can help you thereafter? (3:160).

⑫ Nay, but you thought the Messenger and the believers would never return to their families, and that was made to seem fair in your hearts. You thought an evil thought and were a people ruined.”

⑬ And whosoever does not believe in God and His Messenger—truly We have prepared a Blaze for the disbelievers.

12–13 To think that the Prophet and his followers would not return to Madinah was an evil thought, because it means those tribes thought God would not help them (Ṭ). Here ruined translates būr, which means something that is thoroughly corrupt and has no good in it whatsoever; it can also indicate something that is vanishing to the point of becoming nothing (Ṭ). That God has prepared a Blaze or a humiliating punishment (4:37, 102, 151; 33:57) or a painful punishment (4:161; 33:8) along with chains, shackles, and a blazing flame (76:4) is asserted in various ways throughout the Quran.

⑭ Unto God belongs sovereignty over the heavens and the earth. He forgives whomsoever He will and punishes whomsoever He will; and God is Forgiving, Merciful.

14 Regarding Unto God belongs sovereignty over the heavens and the earth (3:189; 5:17, 18; 24:42; 45:27), see 45:27c. That God forgives whomsoever He will and punishes whomsoever He will (2:284; 3:129; 5:18) indicates both that God has the ability to forgive all sins and that no one may determine whom God forgives, as in 5:18, where the Prophet is enjoined to utter this same phrase as a response to Jews and Christians who say in a haughty manner, We are the children of God, and His beloved ones. The opportunity for the Bedouin who stayed behind (v. 11) to make amends and thus be forgiven is presented in v. 16.

⑮ Those who stayed behind will say when you set out to capture spoils, “Let us follow you.” They desire to change the Word of God. Say, “You will not follow us; thus has God said before.” Then they will say, “Nay, but you are jealous of us.” Nay, but they have not understood, save a little.

15 The Bedouin in question had refused to make the pilgrimage to Makkah with the Prophet, but wished to go on the immediately subsequent conquest of Khaybar to the north of Madinah, as they knew that it would likely be an easy victory with ample spoils. But a victory at Khaybar was understood to have been promised to those who had been present at Ḥudaybiyah in exchange for being unable to complete the pilgrimage. Their desire to change the Word of God thus means that they wished to change God’s Promise regarding the spoils of Khaybar (Q, Ṭ). Save a little indicates that they only understand the affairs of the world or that they understand little concerning religion (Q). It could also be rendered “save a few,” meaning that only a few of them understand.

⑯ Say to the Bedouin who stayed behind, “You will be called against a people possessed of great might; you will fight them or they will submit. So if you obey, God will grant you a beautiful reward; but if you turn away as you turned away before, He will punish you with a painful punishment.”

16 A people possessed of great might is understood by some as a reference to the tribe of Banū Ḥanīfah, who were defeated after the death of the Prophet by armies under the direction of the first Caliph, Abū Bakr (Q). Others maintain that this verse foreshadows future battles against the Byzantine and/or Persian armies (Q, Ṭ), while others say it refers to the tribes of Banū Hawāzin and Banū Thaḳīf, who were defeated immediately after the conquest of Makkah (Q, Ṭ). You will fight them or they will submit refers to the two options given to the idolatrous tribes in Arabia when confronted by the Muslim army (Q). God will grant you a beautiful reward in this life through the spoils of war and assistance and by granting Paradise in the Hereafter. As you turned away before refers to refusing to go on pilgrimage with the Prophet.

①⑦ There is no blame upon the blind; nor is there blame upon the lame; nor is there blame upon the sick. Whosoever obeys God and His Messenger, He will cause him to enter Gardens with rivers running below. And whosoever turns away, He will punish him with a painful punishment.

17 Cf. 4:95c; 9:91. There is no blame upon the blind, the lame, and the sick for staying behind from the pilgrimage; see 9:91c. The stark contrast between obeying God and His Messenger or turning away from them is made throughout the Quran, as in 24:54: Say, "Obey God and obey the Messenger." But if they turn away, he is only accountable for that wherewith he has been burdened, and you are accountable for that wherewith you have been burdened. But if you obey him, you will be rightly guided.

①⑧ God was content with the believers when they pledged allegiance unto thee beneath the tree. He knew what was in their hearts and sent down Tranquility upon them and rewarded them with a victory nigh ①⑨ and abundant spoils that they will capture; and God is Mighty, Wise.

18–19 This verse refers to the pledge discussed in v. 10. While the Prophet and the pilgrims waited at Ḥudaybiyah for permission to enter Makkah and perform the pilgrimage, the Prophet sent ʿUthmān ibn ʿAffān (d. 36/656) to inform the Quraysh that their intentions were peaceful and that they sought only to make pilgrimage to the Kaʿbah. While ʿUthmān was negotiating with the Quraysh, false rumors reached the Prophet that ʿUthmān had been killed, greatly increasing the anxiety of the Muslims. Thereupon he gave instructions that everyone be summoned to take a pledge with him. Everyone present, save one hypocrite, came to him as he sat beneath an acacia tree and took their pledge. Most accounts say that they pledged that they would not flee, though some say the pledge was that they would fight with the Prophet until death (IK, Q, Ṭ). Regarding this event, al-Barā' ibn 'Āzib is reported to have said, “You consider the victory to be the conquest of Makkah, which was indeed a victory. However, we consider the victory to be the Pledge of Good Pleasure (bay'at al-riḍwān) on the Day of Ḥudaybiyah” (Ṭ). According to one account, the Prophet said of this pledge, “None of the companions of the tree who made the pledge under it will enter the Fire” (IK, Q). That God knew what was in their hearts indicates that God knew the sincerity (ṣidq) and loyalty with which they took the pledge (Q, Ṭ) or that God knew the dejection they felt at not being able to complete the pilgrimage and thus sent Tranquility upon them in order to console them (Q). In its immediate context, a victory nigh most likely refers to the conquest of Khaybar, which followed soon after Ḥudaybiyah, though some believe it refers to the conquest of Makkah (Q, Ṭ). Abundant spoils refers to the spoils obtained at the Battle of Khaybar, which immediately followed the Treaty of Ḥudaybiyah, or to those of the conquests of Persia and Byzantium after the death of the Prophet (Q, Ṭ). From a spiritual perspective, Tranquility refers to certainty (Aj) and a victory nigh refers to the spiritual victory over one's carnal soul that comes as a result of adhering to the pledge with a true spiritual guide.

20 God has promised you abundant spoils that you will capture—then He hastened this for you and restrained the people's hands from you, that it may be a sign for the believers, and that He may guide you upon a straight path—

20 This second mention of abundant spoils is either a reiteration of the first for the purpose of emphasis or a reference to greater spoils beyond those mentioned in the previous verse (Ṭ). Some interpret it to mean all spoils obtained by Muslims until the Day of Resurrection (Q, Ṭ). God hastened this for you—that is, by way of the advantages the Muslims gained through the Treaty of Ḥudaybiyah—through which God also restrained the people's hands (IK, Q, Ṭ). It may also refer to the conquest of Khaybar (Ṭ), although some read this verse to mean that God hastened the attainment of spoils in general (Q). From a spiritual perspective, it refers to the inner riches received by those who follow the spiritual path.

21 and others of which you were not capable, God has encompassed them; and God is Powerful over all things.

21 And others alludes to still more spoils of war (Q), to Khaybar (Ṭ), to the conquest of Makkah (IK, Q, Ṭ), to the future conquests of Islam against the Persians and Byzantines (IK, JJ, Q, Ṭ), to all the conquests that God would open to the Muslims (IK, Q, Ṭ), or to other spiritual rewards. And others of which you were not capable refers to spoils or conquests that could not be achieved prior to the Treaty of Ḥudaybiyah. Before the treaty, the Muslim armies could not campaign to the north, lest they risk an attack from their enemies to the south. But now that they had reached a truce with the Quraysh and their allies, they could fight other enemies to the north more freely. That the Muslims were then able to conquer their enemies to the north left them free to focus all of their energies upon the south when the Quraysh broke the treaty by supporting one of their allied tribes in a raid against a tribe allied with the Muslims. The treaty thus proved to be a crucial turning point in the political fortunes of the Muslim polity.

22 If those who disbelieve had fought you, they would have turned [their] backs, and then would have found neither protector nor helper.

22 Had the disbelievers of Makkah chosen to attack rather than to make a treaty, they would have been destroyed and would have fled from battle (Q, Ṭ). That they would have found no one to protect or to assist them could refer to their situation in both this life and the next (cf. 4:123, 173; 33:17, 65). With regard to this world, the Quraysh derived their power, wealth, and prestige from being keepers of the Ka'bah. To attack a large group of pilgrims would thus have irreparably compromised their standing with all of the tribes of Arabia.

23 [That is] the wont of God that came to pass aforetime; and you will find no alteration in the wont of God.

23 Here the wont of God (cf. 3:137; 33:38, 62; 40:85) is usually taken to mean the way God deals with those who fight His prophets (Ṭ) as in 58:21: I shall surely prevail, I and my messengers (Z). Here it is rendered as nominative, an accepted interpretation (İt), but it is always recited in the accusative, in which case it could be the object of an implied verb (Sh). Regarding the more general implications of there being no alteration in the wont of God, see commentary on 35:43: Thou shalt find no alteration in the wont of God, and thou shalt find no change in the wont of God (cf. 33:62).

②④ He it is Who restrained their hands from you and your hands from them in the valley of Makkah, after having made you victorious over them. And God sees whatsoever you do.

24 There is some debate about the referent of this verse (Q, Ṭ). If in the valley of Makkah is understood as a reference to Ḥudaybiyah, the verse most likely pertains to a group of thirty young men who attempted a surprise attack on the Muslims at Ḥudaybiyah before the treaty had been ratified. After they were caught by the Muslims, the Prophet asked them, “Have you come under someone’s protection?” When they said no, he let them go (Q, Ṭ, W). According to another account, it was an attack by eighty men who came upon them during the morning prayer (Q, Ṭ, W).

②⑤ It is they who disbelieved and turned you from the Sacred Mosque and the offerings detained from reaching their place of sacrifice. And were it not for believing men and believing women whom you know not, lest you trample them, and thus incur guilt unknowingly—that God may cause whomsoever He will to enter into His Mercy—had they been clearly separated, We would surely have punished the disbelievers among them with a painful punishment.

25 To turn or bar others from the Sacred Mosque is criticized in several verses (see 2:114; 5:2; 8:34; 22:55). In this context, it also affirms that the Prophet and pilgrims were not at fault for failing to reach Makkah and perform the pilgrimage. As they had intended to make pilgrimage and their failure to do so was beyond their own control, the pilgrimage was believed to have been accepted by God. Thus this event also came to be known as the Minor Pilgrimage of Ḥudaybiyah. When the treaty was concluded, the Prophet instructed his Companions to slaughter their animals and shave their heads, as was the custom upon completion of the ordinary pilgrimage (see 2:196c). Likely confused because they had not completed the pilgrimage and what the Prophet commanded was uncustomary, none of them got up, and the Prophet repeated his order thrice. As they remained sitting, the Prophet went to his wife Umm Salamah, who counseled him, “O Prophet of God! Dost thou want thine order to be carried out? Go forth and say no word to any man till thou hast performed thy sacrifice.” The Prophet followed her advice, and upon seeing him sacrifice his animal and shave his head, the Companions sacrificed their animals in turn and started shaving the heads of one another with such urgency that they almost cut one another (Q).

And were it not for believing men and believing women refers to the believers in Makkah whom the Muslims might have killed along with the disbelievers, had God granted the Muslims permission to fight their way into Makkah. Had they been clearly separated is interpreted to mean that if the believers in Makkah had been clearly discernible from the disbelievers, the Muslims would have been permitted to fight the disbelievers. The last part of this verse can also be seen as an allusion to the subtle way in which the presence of pious believers can serve as a spiritual protection for others, even when they are not aware of it.

26 When those who disbelieve had set zealotry in their hearts, the zealotry of the Age of Ignorance, God sent down His Tranquility upon His Messenger and upon the believers, and enjoined the word of reverence upon them, they being more worthy of it and deserving of it. And God is Knower of all things.

26 Zealotry in their hearts refers to the excessive manner in which the disbelievers of Makkah barred the Muslims from performing the pilgrimage. Some see this zealotry as a reference to specific acts connected with this event and the resulting treaty, such as the Makkans’ refusal to accept the presence of the words “In the Name of God, the Compassionate, the Merciful” and “Muhammad, the Messenger of God” at the beginning of the Treaty of Ḥudaybiyah (Q, Ṭs). But it most likely refers to a general contrast between the condition of the disbelievers and that of the believers. In this regard, zealotry of the Age of Ignorance (jāhiliyyah), which refers to the zealotry of the period of idolatry before the coming of the revelation, could be understood more literally to mean “the zealotry of impassioned haughtiness,” as jahl denotes not only “ignorance,” as it later came to be understood, but also stubborn pride and being so subject to the dictates of one’s passions that one cannot discern right from wrong and truth from falsehood. For the believers to have received Tranquility from God then indicates the peace, patience, and dignity that stand in direct opposition to “impassioned haughtiness.” This is to say that, although they appeared weak for turning away from the pilgrimage, the believers conducted themselves with dignity and nobility, while their adversaries fell victim to their own passions and thus harmed themselves. The word of reverence is understood by most as a reference to one of the common formulas of faith, most likely “There is no god but God” (Q, R, Ṭ, Ṭs). Ibn ‘Ajībah says the testimony of faith is referred to as the word of reverence because it purifies one’s character traits, excising illness and hypocrisy from the heart.

27 Surely God has fulfilled for His Messenger the vision in truth: you shall enter the Sacred Mosque in security, if God wills, with the hair of your heads shaven or cut, not fearing. For He knows what you know not, and therewithal He has given you a victory nigh.

27 This verse refers to the dream that had prompted the Prophet to perform the Minor Pilgrimage that resulted in the Treaty of Ḥudaybiyah. The Prophet saw himself entering Makkah and circumambulating the Ka‘bah. He told his Companions about this dream while they were still in Madinah. When they traveled to Makkah in the year of Ḥudaybiyah, none of them doubted that the Prophet’s vision would come true that year. When the Treaty of Ḥudaybiyah was concluded and they had to return to Madinah without performing the pilgrimage as expected, some of the Companions were saddened and dejected. ‘Umar ibn al-Khaṭṭāb asked the Prophet, “Did you not tell us that we would go to the House and perform the circumambulation around it?” The Prophet responded, “Yes, but did I tell you that you would do so this year?” (IK, Q). You shall enter the Sacred Mosque thus indicates that the vision of the Prophet would be fulfilled, but not in the same way that his Companions had expected. The vision was fulfilled the following year, 7/629, when, in accordance with the terms of the Treaty of Ḥudaybiyah, the Prophet returned with a large group of Muslim pilgrims, and they completed the pilgrimage and stayed in Makkah for three days before returning to Madinah. A victory nigh is understood as a reference to either the Battle of Khaybar or the conquest of Makkah (Q, Ṭ), but can also be seen as a reference to the general victory of Islam that was partly facilitated by the Treaty of Ḥudaybiyah. That Muslims were now able to mingle freely with the Quraysh and their allies resulted in the members of the Islamic community doubling in the two years following the treaty (Q).

28 He it is Who sent His Messenger with guidance and the Religion of Truth to make it prevail over all religion. And God suffices as a Witness.

28 The majority of commentators interpret Religion of Truth, or “the True Religion” (dīn al-ḥaqq), here and in 9:33 and 61:9 as a reference to Islam itself and thus see all three verses as a reference to the triumph of Islam over all other religions. But as the Quran attests to the veracity and salvific efficacy of other religions (see, e.g., 2:62; 5:69), the Religion of Truth can be more broadly understood to mean all religions revealed by God. See 61:9c and the essay “The Quranic View of Sacred History and Other Religions.”

29 Muhammad is the Messenger of God. Those who are with him are harsh against the disbelievers, merciful to one another. You see them bowing, prostrating, seeking bounty from God and contentment; their mark upon their faces is from the effect of prostration. That is their likeness in the Torah. And their likeness in the Gospel is a sapling that puts forth its shoot and strengthens it, such that it grows stout and rises firmly upon its stalk, impressing the sowers, that through them He may enrage the disbelievers. God has promised forgiveness and a great reward to those among them who believe and perform righteous deeds.

29 Those who are with him refers to all who follow the Prophet or those who were with him at Ḥudaybiyah (Q). That they are harsh against the disbelievers implies that they never relent in their opposition to them and fight them when necessary (IK). In this context it also reflects an aspect of mercy, for just as the sunlight is most intense on black surfaces and less so on white surfaces, so are the believers harsher or “more intense” with the disbelievers. In this sense, the believers must display the truth to them with a greater intensity of light and insight. Among each other, however, there is less need for such intensity, because the truth is manifest as gentle warmth. The importance of displaying the virtue of mercy among all human beings is emphasized by a ḥadīth: “God is not merciful to one who is not merciful.” Mercy is understood to be an essential component for binding together any community; thus another ḥadīth states, “The merciful are shown mercy by the Merciful. Be merciful to those on earth, and He who is in Heaven will be merciful unto you.” The believers are also described as humble toward the believers, stern toward the disbelievers (5:54). That one knows the believers by their mark upon their faces that is from the effect of prostration is similar to the manner in which one is said to be able to distinguish the guilty in 55:41: The guilty shall be known by their marks; and they shall be seized by the forelocks and by the feet. For other verses that mention marks that reveal belief or disbelief, see 2:273c; 7:46–48; 47:30. Some understand the marks upon their faces as an allusion to the effects of night vigil, as in a well-known ḥadīth, “Whose prayer is much at night, his face is beautiful by day” (IK, Q). When asked about the mark upon their faces in this verse, Mujāhid is reported to have said, “It is a light upon their faces [resulting] from humility” (Q). While such interpretations allude to the mark upon their faces being discernible in this life through the light in their faces and the expression of their countenance, others see it as a reference to the light upon their faces on the Day of Resurrection (Ṭs), though it can be understood as a reference to both. Others say that the mark upon their faces refers to the dust upon their foreheads after prostrations (Q, Ṭs).

The parable of the sapling serves as a symbolic and allegorical description of the Companions of the Prophet. At the outset they were weak and few in number; but then their numbers grew and they acquired strength (Q). It provides a fitting end to this sūrah, as the events to which it alludes, the Treaty of Ḥudaybiyah, the conquest of Khaybar, and the conquest of Makkah, marked a decisive turn in the early history of Islam; through these events it was spread over the entire Arabian Peninsula in a few years. Such a spread would no doubt enrage the disbelievers. Seen in this light, the great reward refers to the victories that were to follow upon the Treaty of Ḥudaybiyah and to the promise of Paradise.

The Private Apartments

al-Ḥujurāt

A*l-Ḥujurāt* is from the late Madinan period, although a minority maintain that v. 13 is from the Makkan period (Āl). It derives its name from the reference to the private apartments of the Prophet's wives in v. 4. The sūrah was most likely revealed in the year 9/630 after the Muslims had captured Makkah and most of Arabia had come under the Prophet's rule. As such, it addresses the complexities of ruling over this larger and more diverse community and instructs more recent members in proper conduct toward the Prophet. This is most evident in the first part of the sūrah (vv. 1–5), which instructs the Muslim community in the proper etiquette for their encounters with the Prophet.

The second section (vv. 6–12) focuses upon the ties of brotherhood within the Muslim community and the forms of behavior that should be avoided in order to facilitate it. This unifying theme can be seen as following directly upon the description of those who are with the Prophet at the end of the previous sūrah (see 48:29). As Ibn ʿAjībāh states, “After giving them the good news of forgiveness [in 48:29], God instructed the companions in proper conduct (adab) because it is among the greatest means for obtaining forgiveness and proximity [to God].” The last part of this sūrah (vv. 13–18) clarifies the true nature of faith and belief, providing one of the most famous lines of the Quran: Surely the most noble of you before God are the most reverent of you (v. 13).

In the Name of God, the Compassionate, the Merciful

① O you who believe! Advance not before God and His Messenger, and reverence God. Truly God is Hearing, Knowing. ② O you who believe! Do not raise your voices above the voice of the Prophet, nor address him in the manner that you address one another, lest your deeds come to naught, while you are unaware. ③ Truly those who lower their voices before the Messenger of God, they are the ones whose hearts God has tested for reverence. Theirs shall be forgiveness and a great reward. ④ Truly those who call thee from behind the apartments, most of them understand not. ⑤ Had they been patient until thou camest out unto them, it would have been better for them. And God is Forgiving, Merciful. ⑥ O you who believe! If an iniquitous person comes to you with tidings, then be discerning, lest you harm a people out of ignorance and become remorseful over that which you have done. ⑦ And know that the Messenger of God is among you. Were he to obey you in many matters, you would suffer. But God has caused you to love faith and has made it seem fair in your hearts, and He has caused you to despise disbelief, iniquity, and disobedience—such are the rightly guided— ⑧ as a bounty from God and a blessing; and God is Knowing, Wise. ⑨ If two parties among the believers fall to fighting, make peace between them. If one of them aggresses against the other, fight those who aggress until they return to God's Command. And if they return, make peace between them with justice and act equitably. Truly God loves the just. ⑩ The believers are but brothers; so make peace between your brethren, and reverence God, that haply you may receive mercy. ⑪ O you who believe! Let not one people deride another; it may be that they are better than them. Nor let women deride other women; it may be that they are better than them. And do not defame yourselves or insult one another with nicknames; how evil is the iniquitous name after having believed! And whosoever does not repent, they are the wrongdoers. ⑫ O you who believe! Shun much conjecture. Indeed, some conjecture is a sin. And do not spy upon one another, nor backbite one another. Would any of you desire to eat the dead flesh of his brother? You would abhor it. And reverence God. Truly God is Relenting, Merciful. ⑬ O mankind! Truly We created you from a male and a female, and We made you peoples and tribes that you may come to know one another. Surely the most noble of you before God are the most reverent of you. Truly God is Knowing, Aware. ⑭ The Bedouin say, “We believe.” Say, “You believe not. Rather, say, ‘We have submitted,’ for belief has not yet entered your hearts. Yet if you obey God and His Messenger, He will not diminish for you aught of your deeds. Truly God is Forgiving, Merciful.” ⑮ Only they are believers who believe in God and His Messenger, then do not doubt, and who strive with their wealth and themselves in the way of God; it is they who are the truthful. ⑯ Say, “Would you teach God about your religion, when God knows whatsoever is in the heavens and whatsoever is on the earth?” And God is Knower of all things. ⑰ They count it as a favor to thee that they have submitted. Say, “Do not count your submission as a favor to me. Nay, rather God confers a favor upon you, in that He has guided you to belief, if you are truthful. ⑱ Truly God knows the unseen of the heavens and the earth, and God sees whatsoever you do.”

Commentary

① O you who believe! Advance not before God and His Messenger, and reverence God. Truly God is Hearing, Knowing.

1 Advance not before God and His Messenger sets the tone for this sūrah. In the immediate context, it enjoins Muslims to avoid coarse manners in the presence of the Prophet, reminding many of those who had recently joined the Muslim polity that he was more than a tribal leader. Some also interpret it to mean that one should not contradict the Quran or the Sunnah of the Prophet (IK). More broadly, it indicates that people should not follow their own opinions rather than the teachings of the Prophet (Q) or allow personal desires to take precedence over the commands of God and the Prophet, as in a famous ḥadīth of the Prophet, “None of you truly believes until he loves me more than his father, his children, and mankind all together.”

② O you who believe! Do not raise your voices above the voice of the Prophet, nor address him in the manner that you address one another, lest your deeds come to naught, while you are unaware.

2 This verse was reportedly revealed in response to an argument between Abū Bakr and ʿUmar. Each favored a different individual for the honor of receiving a delegation from an outlying tribe. Their quarreling in the presence of the Prophet was so loud that his voice was drowned out, at which God revealed this verse (IK, Q). Nor address him in the manner that you address one another speaks primarily to new members of the Muslim polity who had taken an attitude of excessive familiarity with the Prophet; they should not call him by name, “Muhammad,” but by his title, “Messenger of God” or “Prophet of God” (Q). See also 24:63: Do not deem the Messenger’s calling among you to be like your calling to one another. That deeds may come to naught if one raises one’s voice above that of the Prophet or fails to respect his position indicates the gravity of these offenses. Elsewhere the Quran maintains that in the absence of proper belief, good deeds come to naught or provide no reward in the next life (see 2:217; 3:21–22; 5:5; 6:88; 7:147; 9:17; 11:16; 18:105; 33:19; 39:65; 47:9, 28, 32; 5:53c).

③ Truly those who lower their voices before the Messenger of God, they are the ones whose hearts God has tested for reverence. Theirs shall be forgiveness and a great reward.

3 Tested translates imtahana, which indicates testing something for purity (Aj, R). That God has tested their hearts for reverence thus indicates that God has tested the purity of their hearts, expanded their hearts for reverence (Aj), and purified their intentions (ST). The trials that believers confront in this life are thus considered an important part of their inner purification. This is perhaps most evident in 3:154, which says of the losses the Muslims suffered in their defeat at the Battle of Uḥud: And [this is] so that God may test what is in your breasts and so that He may assay what is in your hearts. Regarding the role of trials and tribulations in the spiritual life, see commentary on 29:2–3.

④ Truly those who call thee from behind the apartments, most of them understand not.

4 A group of Bedouin reportedly came to the Prophet while he was sleeping and shouted for him to come out from his apartment. They did not know in which of his wives' apartments he was sleeping; so they went behind each apartment and called to the Prophet in a crude manner. One Aqra^c ibn Ḥābis reported that he had called out, "O Muhammad, verily my praise is sweet and my curse is bitter!" To which the Prophet responded, "Only God is like that." Then this verse was revealed (IK, Q, Ṭ).

⑤ Had they been patient until thou camest out unto them, it would have been better for them. And God is Forgiving, Merciful.

5 This verse reprimands the Bedouin for their behavior; it and the following verses indicate the proper protocol to be used with the Prophet and by extension with other Muslims, as in a ḥadīth, "If any one of you seeks permission [to enter a house] and no permission is given, he should go away." In this instance the group of Bedouin had reportedly called upon the Prophet to request that he intercede on behalf of some prisoners who had been taken in the recent wars that they had lost to the Muslims. The Prophet agreed to free half of them and allow the rest to be ransomed. According to some, had they been patient, the Prophet would have freed them all (Q, Sh).

⑥ O you who believe! If an iniquitous person comes to you with tidings, then be discerning, lest you harm a people out of ignorance and become remorseful over that which you have done.

⑦ And know that the Messenger of God is among you. Were he to obey you in many matters, you would suffer. But God has caused you to love faith and has made it seem fair in your hearts, and He has caused you to despise disbelief, iniquity, and disobedience—such are the rightly guided—

⑧ as a bounty from God and a blessing; and God is Knowing, Wise.

6–8 Although these verses convey principles that should be followed in any Muslim polity, they were reportedly revealed regarding a false accusation that could have led to internecine fighting between the Muslims of Madinah and the tribe of the Banū Muṣṭaliq, whom the Muslims had defeated in 5/627 and who had accepted Islam and agreed to pay the alms (zakāh). The Prophet sent Walīd ibn ʿUqbah to collect it. There had, however, been enmity between him and the Banū Muṣṭaliq in the pre-Islamic period. When the people heard of his coming, they came out to receive him out of reverence for God and the Prophet. But Walīd was scared of them and took it into his mind that they wanted to kill him. He returned and went to the Prophet saying, “The Banū Muṣṭaliq have refused to pay the alms and wanted to kill me.” The Prophet became angry and began arranging for an armed delegation. Meanwhile, when the Banū Muṣṭaliq realized that the emissary had gone back, they went to the Prophet and said, “We heard of your emissary, and we went out to receive him, honor him, and give him the right of God that was due upon us. But your emissary went back, and we feared that what sent him back might be a message he received from you because you are angry with us. We seek refuge in God from His Wrath and from the wrath of His Messenger.” Then these verses were revealed clearing the Banū Muṣṭaliq (Q, T, W). On the basis of v. 6, many Muslim scholars reject the testimony in legal matters of anyone known to be iniquitous (fāsiq) unless a corroborating witness or corroborating evidence can be found. There is some debate as to whether the testimony of the iniquitous can be accepted for other matters, such as marriage, and whether an iniquitous believer can be allowed to lead the prayer (Q). Regarding the penalties for false accusation, see 24:4c.

The Messenger of God is among you (v. 7) means that he was among the Muslims at the time of the revelation and that he continues to be with Muslims, for the Prophet is closer to the believers than are they to themselves (33:6). As the Prophet does not speak out of caprice (53:3), his determination in all religious and legal matters is understood to be guided by God. Therefore, he is to be obeyed; if he were to obey others, it would be an inversion of the proper order and thus lead to adversity. The believers are thus counseled to follow his rulings, as in 59:7: Whatsoever the Messenger gives you, take it; and whatsoever he forbids to you, forgo. The Prophet is also warned, Were the truth to follow their caprices, the heavens and the earth and those therein would have been corrupted (23:71). The presence of the Prophet is also understood to remain with the community after his death. In this vein, the Prophet is reported to have said, “My life is a great good for you; you will relate accounts from me, and accounts will be related from you. And my death is a great good for you; your deeds will be presented to me, and if I see goodness I will praise God, and if I see evil I will ask forgiveness from Him for you.” Additionally the presence of the Prophet continues in the Hereafter, as in 9:94: God and His Messenger will see your deeds.

God has caused you to love faith and disposed your hearts to it means that faith and guidance are a bounty from God and thus points to the humility that must always accompany faith for it to be sincere, lest one attribute what comes from God to oneself. Made it seem fair in your hearts means both that God makes the believers incline to faith and that God beautifies them with their faith.

⑨ If two parties among the believers fall to fighting, make peace between them. If one of them aggresses against the other, fight those who aggress until they return to God’s Command. And if they return, make peace between them with justice and act equitably. Truly God loves the just.

9 Here the basic principles for dealing with disputes between Muslims are explained. The Prophet enjoined his followers, “Help your brother whether he oppresses or is oppressed.” When asked what it means to help the oppressor, he replied, “You help him by preventing him from oppressing” (IK, Q). This verse was reportedly revealed regarding an incident in which the Prophet went to call upon ʿAbd Allāh ibn Ubayy, the leader of the hypocrites in Madinah. When the Prophet reached him, ʿAbd Allāh ibn Ubayy said, “Keep away from me. The stench of your donkey is offending me.” A man from the Helpers said to him, “By God, the donkey of the Messenger of God smells better than you.” One of ʿAbd Allāh ibn Ubayy’s tribesmen became angry. The parties exchanged blows; then this verse was revealed (W). Regarding antagonisms between Muslims, a ḥadīth states, “Cursing a Muslim is a sin, and fighting him is disbelief.” That God loves the just (cf. 5:42; 60:8) reinforces the general principle stated in 4:135 that, in order to maintain justice, Muslims must be impartial, swayed by neither self-interest nor ties of kinship. Although Sufis affirm the literal understanding of the present verse, they also see it as an allusion to the process of inner purification. As al-Tustarī writes, “If nature, caprice, and lust tyrannize the heart, intellect, and spirit, the servant must fight them with the swords of vigilance, the arrows of self inspection, and the lights of conformity [to the truth], such that the spirit and the intellect prevail, and desire and lust are vanquished” (ST).

10 The believers are but brothers; so make peace between your brethren, and reverence God, that haply you may receive mercy.

10 This is among the most important verses in the Quran for understanding the structure of the Muslim community (ummah), regarding the unity of which the Prophet said, “The believers are like a single structure, each part supporting the other.” The centrality of brotherly love in Islam may be best expressed in this famous ḥadīth: “None of you truly believes until he loves for his brother what he loves for himself.” This ḥadīth goes to the heart of this sūrah, which emphasizes a bond of faith that transcends those of kinship and suggests that one should no longer make alliances based merely upon tribal bonds (see 9:23; 58:22). As another ḥadīth states, “God helps His servant as long as the servant helps his brother.” Bonds of faith are esteemed so highly in Islam that among the seven types of people whom the Prophet said will be granted Paradise, he lists “two men who love each other for the sake of God, meeting for that reason, and parting with this love.” In another ḥadīth, the love of another for God’s sake is combined with the love of the Prophet and the fear of disbelief to make up the three qualities needed for entrance into Paradise: “Whosoever possesses these three qualities will have the sweetness of faith: the one to whom God and His Messenger become dearer than anything else; one who loves a person and loves him only for God's sake; and one who hates to revert to disbelief as he would hate to be thrown into the Fire." And a famous ḥadīth qudsī states, "God will ask on the Day of Judgment, 'Where are those who loved each other for the sake of My Glory? Today, on a day wherein there is no shade but Mine, I shall shade them with My shade.'"

⑪ O you who believe! Let not one people deride another; it may be that they are better than them. Nor let women deride other women; it may be that they are better than them. And do not defame yourselves or insult one another with nicknames; how evil is the iniquitous name after having believed! And whosoever does not repent, they are the wrongdoers.

11 In the context of this sūrah, which emphasizes the transition from tribal bonds to those of faith, this verse indicates that boasting on the basis of tribal lineage should cease, as explained in a ḥadīth, "Unless people cease boasting about their dead ancestors, who are merely coals for the fire, they will be more despicable to God than the beetle that rolls dung with its nose. God has removed from you the pride of the Age of Ignorance [see 3:154; 5:50; 33:33c; 48:28] and boasting about ancestors. One is either a pious believer or a miserable sinner. All men are descendants of Adam, and Adam came from dust." Do not defame yourselves or insult one another with nicknames is said to have been revealed in order to abolish the pre-Islamic practice of calling people by derogatory nicknames (IK). How evil is the iniquitous name after having believed warns those who have become believers not to call other believers by derogatory names; or it points to the manner in which abusing others in word and deed can undo the benefits of good deeds. On occasion the Prophet would even change names whose meanings might be negative, as when a man named Ḥazn, or "rough," was renamed Sahl, meaning "soft" or "easy."

⑫ O you who believe! Shun much conjecture. Indeed, some conjecture is a sin. And do not spy upon one another, nor backbite one another. Would any of you desire to eat the dead flesh of his brother? You would abhor it. And reverence God. Truly God is Relenting, Merciful.

12 This verse continues to address the manner in which community ties can be undone by bad blood. Regarding conjecture, a ḥadīth warns, “Beware of conjecture, for it is indeed the most misleading form of speech.” On another occasion the Prophet warned, “A leader will corrupt his people if he pursues conjecture regarding them.”

Spying (tajassus) is considered a sin, as it usually indicates suspicion of another’s sin and thinking ill of another; inquiring (taḥassus), on the other hand, is done for the benefit of the one being inquired about (IK). In this regard, ‘Alī ibn Abī Ṭālib is reported to have said, “Do not be quick to expose another’s sin, for he may be forgiven for it, and do not feel yourself safe even from a small sin, since you may be punished for it. Every one of you who comes to know the faults of others should not expose them in view of what he knows about his own faults, and should remain busy in gratitude that he has been saved from that in which others have been indulging” (Nahj al-balāghah, Sermon 139). A ḥadīth states that those who eavesdrop “will have molten copper poured in their ears on the Day of Judgment.” As spying usually implies seeking faults, it is closely tied to backbiting, which is understood to mean saying anything about another that he or she would not like to have said (IK). In this regard, the Prophet is reported to have said, “O gathering of those who submit with their tongues, but in whose hearts faith has not yet taken hold! Do not harm Muslims, do not shame them, and do not pursue their faults. For whosoever pursues the faults of his Muslim brother, God will pursue his faults. And he whose faults are pursued by God, God disgraces him, even in his own home.” In contrast, another ḥadīth states, “Whosoever covers [the faults] of a Muslim in this world, God will cover [his faults] in this world and the next. Truly God continues to help the servant, so long as the servant continues to help his brother.”

God’s “relenting” correlates with human beings’ repenting, as both translate the same verb, tāb/yatūb. The majority of scholars have stated that repentance for backbiting entails refraining from backbiting and intending not to repeat it. There is a difference of opinion as to whether one must apologize to the harmed party. Some maintain that it is not necessary to ask forgiveness from the victim, because if the person knew what was said, it would cause more hurt than not being told about it. It is better to praise the wronged person among those who had previously heard the negative comments. It is also better to defend the injured party against any further backbiting as recompense for the previous ill-advised words (IK). When backbiting becomes open and extends to slander and false accusations, the punishment can be severe, as in 24:4: And as for those who accuse chaste women, but then do not bring four witnesses, flog them eighty lashes, and never accept any testimony from them.

⑬ O mankind! Truly We created you from a male and a female, and We made you peoples and tribes that you may come to know one another. Surely the most noble of you before God are the most reverent of you. Truly God is Knowing, Aware.

13 This is among the most famous verses of the Quran. From a male and a female can be understood as a reference to Adam and Eve (Q), but also to the creation of each human being from the fluid of a man and a woman (Ṭ). That people have been divided into diverse peoples and tribes that they may come to know one another indicates the manner in which differences in tribe, race, ethnicity, language, nationality, and religion can be sources through which human beings gain a deeper appreciation for the reality of the human condition. In this regard, the Prophet has said, “God does not look at your bodies, nor at your forms. He looks at your hearts.” In another ḥadīth, the heart is presented as the reality that determines all other dimensions of one’s being: “There is in man a clump of flesh. If it is pure, the whole body is pure. If it is polluted, the whole body is polluted. It is the heart.” The outward diversity that divides human beings is thus one of the greatest tests that human beings confront in the life of this world, as in 5:48: And had God willed, He would have made you one community, but [He willed otherwise], that He might try you in that which He has given you. So vie with one another in good deeds. Unto God shall be your return all together, and He will inform you of that wherein you differ.

The combination of nobility and reverence marks a remarkable transition from the attitudes of pre-Islamic Arabia, in which reverence (taqwā, which also has the sense of “God-fearing,” or just “fearing” in pre-Islamic Arabia) and nobility were considered polar opposites. This late Madinan verse thus signals a revamping of the moral order of Arabia to one in which true worth is no longer determined by lineage and grandiose displays of valor and generosity, but by the depth of faith and piety. In this vein, the Prophet is reported to have said, “Truly God has ennobled those who were lowly during the Age of Ignorance. Through Islam, God removed the zealotry of the Age of Ignorance and its custom of vainglorious boasting regarding kinsfolk and noble descent. Today, all the people, be they white, black, Qurayshī, Arab or non-Arab, are seen to be descendants of Adam. And, assuredly, God created Adam from clay, and the people most beloved by God on the Day of Resurrection will be the most obedient and the most reverent among them.”

⑭ The Bedouin say, “We believe.” Say, “You believe not. Rather, say, ‘We have submitted,’ for belief has not yet entered your hearts. Yet if you obey God and His Messenger, He will not diminish for you aught of your deeds. Truly God is Forgiving, Merciful.”

14 This verse indicates that belief is of a higher rank than submission (IK), that faith has degrees, and that tribal affiliations are superseded by those of faith. It was reportedly revealed with regard to members of the tribe of Banū Asad who had moved to Madinah after a drought and sought charity, claiming that they were true believers and had a right to the same considerations as those who had followed the Prophet for many years. Some say that they were hypocrites (W), while others say they simply had not yet attained faith (IK), though they had made a formal submission. In this sense, this verse admonishes all forms of religious pretension, as in 53:32: Do not deem yourselves purified. He knows best the reverent. Modesty and humility are thus exalted as among the highest of virtues, as in a ḥadīth, “Modesty produces naught but good.” The injunction to obey God and His Messenger (e.g., 3:32, 132; 4:59; 5:92; 8:1, 20, 46; see 3:32c; 4:59c) here indicates that, as long as Muslims remain obedient, they will be rewarded for the best of their deeds. It also implies that their bad deeds may be forgiven, as stated in a ḥadīth, “If a servant submits and perfects his submission (islām), God will record for him every good deed that he performed before [submitting], and every evil deed that he performed before [submitting] will be erased. After that the requiting for the good deed will be tenfold up to seven hundred fold, and for the evil deed one like it, unless God absolves him of it.”

⑮ Only they are believers who believe in God and His Messenger, then do not doubt, and who strive with their wealth and themselves in the way of God; it is they who are the truthful.

15 After v. 14 rebuked those who claim belief without attaining it, this verse emphasizes the steadfast nature of true faith and the depth of commitment it entails. While the previous verse emphasizes obedience, this verse emphasizes belief. Those who strive with their wealth and themselves in the way of God (cf. 8:72; 9:20, 44, 81; see also 2:218; 4:95; 5:35, 54; 8:74; 9:41) are those who are willing to give everything for the sake of seeking God’s good pleasure (IK); see 4:95c; 8:72c. They are truthful in their claim to believe, unlike the members of the Banū Asad, who claim belief only outwardly (IK).

①⑥ Say, “Would you teach God about your religion, when God knows whatsoever is in the heavens and whatsoever is on the earth?” And God is Knower of all things.

16 This verse asks, “Would you propose to tell God what lies within you, when nothing is hidden from Him?” (IK, Ṭ); or more specifically, “Are you going to declare that you have faith when God knows that you do not know?” (Ṭ). More generally, this verse can be understood to mean that one should maintain a sense of humility when speaking of religious matters.

①⑦ They count it as a favor to thee that they have submitted. Say, “Do not count your submission as a favor to me. Nay, rather God confers a favor upon you, in that He has guided you to belief, if you are truthful.

17 The Banū Asad (see 49:14c) count their submission as a favor, because, unlike other tribes, they submitted without fighting (JJ), or because, when they entered Islam, they came with goods and families (Q). That they would think this way demonstrates that they had still not grasped the principles of belief and continued to think of their pledge to the Prophet as if it were another tribal allegiance. They should not count their submission as a favor on a practical level, because they came to Madinah with needs resulting from the drought. They should also not do so from a religious perspective, because God and the Prophet have no need of them; rather, it is they who are in need of God and the guidance He provides through His Prophet. More generally, this verse can be understood as a continuation of the discussion in vv. 7–8 and thus as a reminder that all belief and all guidance is a favor from God.

①⑧ Truly God knows the unseen of the heavens and the earth, and God sees whatsoever you do.”

Qāf

Qāf

Although all scholars agree that Qāf is a Makkan sūrah, some maintain that v. 38 is from the Madinan period (Āl, Q). The sūrah takes its name from the mention of the Arabic letter qāf at the beginning and is known to some as al-Bāsiqāt, “The Towering,” after the reference to date palms towering with layered spathes in v. 10 (Sy, Itqān). It could also be understood to be the “Sūrah of the Threat,” since of the six times that threat or “warning” (waʿīd) is employed in the Quran, four occur in this sūrah. Just as the previous sūrah criticized those who claim to believe, but have not yet realized the fullness of faith, this sūrah criticizes those who do not believe in the prophethood of Muhammad and the Hereafter (Āl).

Many scholars consider Qāf to mark the beginning of the “separated” (mafaṣṣal) sūrahs, the shorter sūrahs whose length leads to the more frequent appearance of the basmalah—In the Name of God, the Compassionate, the Merciful—which marks the beginning of each new sūrah. It is reported that in later years, the Prophet would recite Qāf from the pulpit during the sermon of the Friday congregational prayer (Q). He is also reported to have read Qāf and Sūrah 54, al-Qamar, during the two ʿīds (the Feast of Sacrifice and the Feast of Breaking Fast; Āl, Q) and to have often recited Qāf during the morning prayer (Āl, Q). The Prophet’s frequent recitation of this sūrah has led some to consider it as among the greatest of sūrahs (Āl).

After beginning with a reference to the Quran and addressing those who reject the Prophet and deny Resurrection (vv. 1–5), the sūrah calls one to reflect upon the wonders of creation as evidence of God’s Omnipotence (vv. 6–11). A brief reference to previous communities that rejected the prophets sent to them (vv. 12–15) leads into the main subject of the sūrah, death and the disparate ends of the believers and the disbelievers in the Hereafter (vv. 16–35). Another brief allusion to past generations (vv. 36–37) paves the way for an injunction to be mindful of death (vv. 38–44) and a final injunction to the Prophet to remind those who fear God’s Threat (v. 45).

In the Name of God, the Compassionate, the Merciful

① Qāf. By the glorious Quran; ② nay, but they marvel that a warner has come unto them from among their own; so the disbelievers say, “This is an astounding thing! ③ What! When we are dead and have become dust? That is a far-fetched return!” ④ Well do We know what the earth diminishes from them, and with Us there is a preserving Book. ⑤ Nay, they denied the truth when it came unto them; so they are now in a confounded situation. ⑥ Have they not looked upon the sky above them, how We built it and adorned it, and [how it] has no rifts? ⑦ The earth We spread out, and cast therein firm mountains, and caused every delightful kind to grow therein, ⑧ as a source of insight and a reminder for every penitent servant. ⑨ And We sent down blessed water from the sky whereby We grew gardens and the harvested grain, ⑩ and the date palms towering with layered spathes, ⑪ as provision for His servants. And We revive a dead land therewith—likewise shall be the coming forth. ⑫ Before them the people of Noah, the inhabitants of al-Rass, and Thamūd denied, ⑬ as did °Ād, Pharaoh, and the brethren of Lot, ⑭ the inhabitants of the thicket, and the people of Tubba^c—each denied the messengers; so My Threat came due. ⑮ Did We then weary in the first creation? Nay, but they are in doubt regarding a new creation. ⑯ We did indeed create man, and We know what his soul whispers to him; and We are nearer to him than his jugular vein. ⑰ When the two receivers receive, seated on the right and on the left, ⑱ no word does he utter without a ready watcher beside him. ⑲ And the agony of death comes with the truth. That is what you were avoiding. ⑳ And the trumpet is blown. That is the Day of the Threat. ㉑ Then every soul comes, with it a driver and a witness: 22 “You were indeed heedless of this. Now We have removed from you your cover; so today your sight is piercing.” 23 And his companion says, “This is what I have ready.” 24 “Cast you both into Hell every stubborn disbeliever, 25 every hinderer of good, every transgressor, every doubter 26 who has set up another god along with God. Cast him into the severe punishment.” 27 His companion will say, “Our Lord, I did not make him rebel; rather, he was far astray.” 28 He will say, “Dispute not before Me, since I have already presented unto you the Threat. 29 With Me the Word is not changed, and I do not wrong My servants.” 30 That Day We shall say to Hell, “Have you been filled?” And it will say, “Is there more?” 31 And the Garden will be brought nigh unto the reverent, not distant: 32 “This is what is promised for every oft turning keeper, 33 who fears the Compassionate unseen and comes with a penitent heart. 34 Enter it in peace. This is the day of abiding.” 35 Therein they shall have whatsoever they will; and with Us there is more. 36 How many a generation before them have We destroyed who were of greater prowess than them? Then they searched about in the lands: “Is there any refuge?” 37 Truly in that is a reminder for whosoever has a heart, or gives ear as witness. 38 And indeed We created the heavens and the earth and whatsoever is between them in six days, and no fatigue touched Us. 39 So bear patiently that which they say, and hymn the praise of thy Lord before the rising of the sun and before the setting. 40 And at night glorify Him, and after prostrations. 41 And listen on the Day when the caller calls from near at hand, 42 on the Day when they hear the Cry of Truth; that is the Day of coming forth. 43 Truly We give life and We cause death, and unto Us is the journey’s end. 44 That Day the earth is split asunder from about them—as they hasten forth. That is a gathering easy for Us. 45 We know best that which they say. Thine is not to compel them. So remind, by means of the Quran, those who fear My Threat.

Commentary

① Qāf. By the glorious Quran;

1 The letter qāf is among the separated letters (al-muqattaʿāt) that are found at the beginning of twenty-nine *sūrah*s and whose meaning is considered by most commentators to be known only to God; see 2:1c. Qāf is understood by many as a proper name for an emerald mountain whose reality encompasses the earth (IJ, IK, Q, Ṭ). This is not a literal physical mountain, but a cosmic mountain that represents the created order as such. Others say that Qāf is one of the Names of God (IJ, Q, Ṭ) or that it represents the Divine Names that begin with the letter qāf (IJ, Q), such as “the Powerful” (al-Qadīr), “the Paramount” (al-Qahhār), and “the Holy” (al-Quddūs). Still others say that Qāf is one of the names of the Quran (IJ, Q, Ṭ). A few commentators say that Qāf is the name of a mountain in Hell (IJ). This is one of two verses in which the revelation is referred to as a glorious Quran (cf. 85:21), which means the utmost in nobility, magnanimity, grace, and glory.

② nay, but they marvel that a warner has come unto them from among their own; so the disbelievers say, “This is an astounding thing!

2 Here and in the almost identical 38:4, the disbelievers’ incredulity may result from the idea of God’s choosing as a prophet one who previously did not have a position of influence among them, as when they ask, Why was this Quran not sent down to a great man from one of the two towns? (43:31). It may also result from God’s choice of a human being as His Messenger, as in 25:7: What ails this Messenger, who eats food and walks in the markets? Why is there not an angel sent down unto him to be a warner with him? (see also 6:8–9; 6:50; 11:12; 14:10; 17:94; 23:33; 36:15; 41:14; 54:24; 64:6c). For other verses that speak of the disbelievers marveling at this phenomenon, see 7:63c; 10:2; 25:20; 38:4c. Alternately, this verse could indicate that they are amazed that they could be deemed to be in need of a message and especially of a warning or admonition (JJ).

③ What! When we are dead and have become dust? That is a far-fetched return!”

3 These are the words of the disbelievers when they disparage the Quranic teaching regarding bodily resurrection; see also 17:49; 36:78; 37:16–17, 53; 56:47; 79:11.

④ Well do We know what the earth diminishes from them, and with Us there is a preserving Book.

4 This verse implies that God is able to take into account all parts of their bodies that have decomposed. A preserving Book may be a reference to the Preserved Tablet (85:22), which contains all that has been decreed by God (JJ), or to the book in which all of one's deeds are recorded; see 18:49c.

⑤ Nay, they denied the truth when it came unto them; so they are now in a confounded situation.

5 In this context many understand the truth as a reference to the Quran (JJ, Q, Ṭ), but it may also refer to Islam or to the Prophet (Q). Confounded translates marīj, which derives from the verb marija, indicating something that has been completely mixed up so that its true nature cannot be discerned. Here it is understood to mean that they are unable to distinguish truth from falsehood (Ṭ), that they are misguided or even iniquitous (Q, Ṭ), or that they are of many different opinions (Q, Ṭ) and thus in an ambiguous and precarious situation (Ṭ) because they believe one thing and then another.

⑥ Have they not looked upon the sky above them, how We built it and adorned it, and [how it] has no rifts?

6–11 This is one of several passages to call human beings to reflect upon the beauty, proportionality, and bounty of the natural world as evidence of God's Mercy and wisdom and of the Resurrection; see 16:79–81; 24:43–50; 26:7–8; 33:27; 35:27–28; 36:71–73; 45:1–5.

6 Here the sky can also mean the heavens or be read as an allusion to all of creation; see 67:3–4c. That creation has no rifts means that there is no disproportionality and that each thing is in its proper place, since He it is Who created the heavens and the earth in truth (6:73; 16:3; 29:44; 39:5; 45:22; 64:3).

⑦ The earth We spread out, and cast therein firm mountains, and caused every delightful kind to grow therein,

7 See 15:19c. Every delightful kind can be taken as a reference to all that is created. In the present verse, every . . . kind translates kulli zawj, which can also mean “every pair,” in which case it is similar to 51:49: And of all things We created pairs.

⑧ as a source of insight and a reminder for every penitent servant.

8 Everything that exists serves as a reminder of God’s Might and Power and an indication of His Oneness (Ṭ), because “in each thing there is a sign, indicating that He is the One.” Every penitent servant means all those whose hearts turn to God (Ṭ). For the Quranic understanding of repentance and turning to God, see 4:17–18c; 42:25c.

⑨ And We sent down blessed water from the sky whereby We grew gardens and the harvested grain, 9 God’s sending down water relates to the giving of all life. Although many verses refer to God’s sending down water (e.g., 23:18; 27:60; 31:10; 35:27; 39:21; 41:39; 43:11), the present verse provides the only reference to blessed water. Water is understood in the Quran as the source of all life, as in 21:30: And We made every living thing from water. Other verses allude to God’s ability to remove water, thus life and blessings, at any time (e.g., 18:41; 67:30).

⑩ and the date palms towering with layered spathes,

10 The date palm was for the Arabs the best of plants. It can thus be understood as a reference to the highest of God's Blessings in the physical realm and as an allusion to all forms of fruit and nourishment.

⑪ as provision for His servants. And We revive a dead land therewith—likewise shall be the coming forth.

11 As provision for His servants refers to the waters, gardens, grain, and date palms in the previous verses. God revives a dead land with the water that is sent down, as in 16:65: And God sends down water from the sky, and thereby revives the earth after its death. Surely in this is a sign for a people who hear (see also 2:164; 41:39; 45:5; 57:17). The coming forth refers to the Resurrection, meaning that just as God has created all that is mentioned in vv. 9–10, so too will He bring forth all human beings and jinn. This argument is made more explicit in 30:19: He brings forth the living from the dead, and brings forth the dead from the living, and He revives the earth after its death. Even so shall you be brought forth (cf. 16:65; 25:48–49; 30:50; 35:9; 36:33; 43:11; 45:5). In all such verses, the revival of the earth can also be taken as a reference to the manner in which God revives the hearts of those who are spiritually dead.

⑫ Before them the people of Noah, the inhabitants of al-Rass, and Thamūd denied,

⑬ as did ^cĀd, Pharaoh, and the brethren of Lot,

⑭ the inhabitants of the thicket, and the people of Tubba^c—each denied the messengers; so My Threat came due.

12–14 Before them means before the idolaters who oppose the Prophet (ﷺ). For the Quranic account of Noah and the flood, see 11:25–48; 23:23–30; 26:105–21; Sūrah 71. The inhabitants of al-Rass (cf. 25:38) is an enigmatic reference that some understand to mean one of the towns of the tribe of Thamūd (Ṭ). Others understand al-Rass to mean “the well” and interpret it as a reference to the well in which the people spoken of in 36:13–27 threw the prophet whom God had sent to them (Ṭ). The ʿĀd and the Thamūd were pre-Islamic Arabian tribes who rejected the prophets sent to them. For the account of the ʿĀd see 7:65–72; 11:50–60; 41:15–16; 54:18–21. For that of the Thamūd, see 7:73–79; 11:61–68; 26:141–58; 54:24–31. The story of Lot and his people is discussed most extensively in 11:77–83; see also 7:80–84; 15:57–77; 21:74–75; 26:160–73; 27:54–58; 29:28–35; 37:133–38. The thicket translates al-aykah, which according to some is a proper name. The inhabitants of the thicket are either the people of Midian, who are said to have rejected the prophet Shuʿayb (see 7:85–93; 11:84–95; 26:176–89; 29:36–37), or a second community to which Shuʿayb was sent (Mw). For Tubbaʿ, most likely a reference to a line of kings in southern Arabia, see 44:37c.

15 Did We then weary in the first creation? Nay, but they are in doubt regarding a new creation.

15 This verse is a rebuke to what the idolaters say in v. 3. They are questioned as to how it is that they could doubt God’s ability to resurrect when they have the evidence of God’s ability to create everything that is around them (Ṭ). The rhetorical question is answered in 46:33: Have they not considered that God, Who created the heavens and the earth and did not weary in their creation, is able to give life to the dead? Yea! He is Powerful over all things. In the present verse, the first creation means the creation of this world. When confronted with the Quranic teaching regarding bodily resurrection, the reaction of the disbelievers is that they say, What! When we are bones and dust, shall we indeed be resurrected as a new creation? (17:49, 98). In this interpretation new creation refers to the Resurrection; see also 13:5; 14:19; 34:7; 35:16–17c. New creation can also be understood as a reference to the perpetual creation of the world, in which God’s creative act is renewed at every instant (K). That most human beings are in doubt regarding a new creation indicates that they are unable to see because their sight is not yet piercing (see v. 22).

16 We did indeed create man, and We know what his soul whispers to him; and We are nearer to him than his jugular vein.

16 Man translates al-insān, which also means the human being as such. In this context, some understand it as a reference to Adam and God’s knowledge of his inclination to eat of what had been forbidden to him (Q). Most, however, see it as a reference to God’s Knowledge of all that lies within breasts (3:119; 5:7; 8:43; 11:5; 31:23; 35:38; 39:7; 42:24; 57:6; 64:4; 67:13), in which case it means that God knows the true intentions behind all words and actions, even when the speaker or agent is unaware of them. The second phrase could also be read, “and We know that of which his soul whispers” (Aj).

We are nearer to him than his jugular vein is problematic for many commentators. Some seek to avoid the literal meaning, saying that “we” refers to two angels (IK). Others understand this verse as connected to the following verse so that they read, “We are nearer to him than his jugular vein when the two receivers receive,” indicating that God continues to have power over the two receivers and that, although He has appointed two angels to each person, He is not in need of them in order to know what the person is doing (Z). Although this second reading is part of what is implied, this is one of several verses that indicate the Immanence of God in all of creation (see, e.g., 2:115), that the Divine Reality is the substrate of every reality, and that God is the nearest and closest Reality to the human being. God is with human beings wherever they may be (see 57:4) and is always close to them, but human beings, nonetheless, often fail to be with or close to God and thus remain far from Him.

18 no word does he utter without a ready watcher beside him.

17–18 The two receivers refers to the two attendant angels charged with recording all of an individual’s deeds (JJ, Ṭ); see also 43:80; 82:10–12. Each angel could be said to be a ready watcher, but the angel who sits on the right recording good deeds is believed to be superior to the angel who sits on the left recording evil deeds, often telling him to wait to see if an evil deed is erased through repentance or asking forgiveness (Ṭ, Z). Seated is understood to mean “observing” or “keeping watch” (Ṭ). When one stands for judgment on the Day of Resurrection, the scroll in which one’s deeds are recorded is unfolded as a book one will meet wide open (17:13), and it is said, Read your book! On this Day, your soul suffices as a reckoner against you (17:14, Ṭ); see 17:13–14c.

①¹⁹ And the agony of death comes with the truth. That is what you were avoiding.

19 Agony translates sakrah, which is related to the most common word for “intoxicants” (sakar) and “intoxication” (sukrān). Sakrat al-mawt, or agony of death, is thus understood to mean the state of confusion brought on by the severity of death (Ṭ), which for some may be a state of fear and for others a state of ease (Aj). But given that sakrah is said to come with the truth, or “through the truth,” others see it as a reference to the wisdom that comes with death (Z), meaning the vision of the Unseen Realm. In this sense it could be understood as an allusion to the transition from one state of being to another that accompanies death. Just as intoxication separates one from the true self, the agony of death describes the manner in which death comes between a person and the self, indicating the transition from one state of being to another.

Here the truth most likely indicates the reality of death, since every soul shall taste death (3:185; 21:35; 29:57; Z), or the reality of “the affair,” meaning that one will now know the joy of death or its sorrow (Aj). The truth can also be understood to mean God (Ṭ), as “the Truth” is one of the Names of God. That in the second sentence refers to death (Aj, Z) or the truth (Ṭ). From a Quranic perspective, the disbelievers seek to avoid both, whereas the believers embrace them. That is what you were avoiding can be understood as addressed directly to readers or as recounting the address of God or the angels to the disbelievers at the moment of death.

①²⁰ And the trumpet is blown. That is the Day of the Threat.

20 The blowing of the trumpet on the Day of Judgment is mentioned in several verses (see 6:73; 18:99; 20:102; 23:101; 27:87; 36:51; 39:68c; 69:13; 74:8; 78:18c).

21 Then every soul comes, with it a driver and a witness:

21 A driver and a witness refers to two angels, one who drives a person to the place where all souls are gathered and another who bears witness to the deeds one has performed (Ṭ, Z), or to a single angel who performs both functions (Z). Others understand the driver to be an angel and the witness to be one's own soul (Ṭ), as in 17:14: On this Day, your soul suffices as a reckoner against you. This verse could also be understood as a reference to every soul or as a reference only to the souls of the disbelievers (Ṭ).

22 “You were indeed heedless of this. Now We have removed from you your cover; so today your sight is piercing.”

22 Today your sight is piercing, so that now souls are able to see what they could not see before (JJ). At the moment of death, the veils that cover one's vision in this life are lifted and one sees the reality of creation and of one's own condition (see 67:10–11c). Some Muslims maintain that such piercing sight can be attained before the moment of physical death by those who have purified their souls, since the cover is attachment to the sensory experiences of this world. In commenting upon this verse, Ibn ʿArabī thus writes, “The believer who is granted the unveiling of things ‘as they are’ is granted [the return from the many to the One]. . . . And this is before he leaves this world” (Futūḥāt, III 388.33–34). In his philosophical commentary on Sūrah 36, Mullā Ṣadrā writes, “The soul's inner faculties will become powerful and piercing because of its perception of matters related to the next world, as in [God's] saying, Now We have removed from you your cover; so today your sight is piercing. The unseen forms, which store the results of the soul's actions, its ambitions, the intentions of its disposition, and the aims and shortcomings of its aspirations, will be witnessed.”

23 And his companion says, “This is what I have ready.”

23 His companion means the angel charged with overseeing the person (JJ), which could also be understood as the driver from v. 21 (Ṭ). Companion might also refer to the jinn or satan who is assigned to an individual, as in 43:36: And whosoever turns blindly away from the remembrance of the Compassionate, We assign to him a satan who is then a companion unto him (Z). In this latter interpretation, the verse would refer only to disbelievers, though many take it as a reference to all human beings (Ṭ). This is what I have ready are the words of his companion upon presenting the record of deeds for the reckoning (Ṭ).

24 “Cast you both into Hell every stubborn disbeliever,

25 every hinderer of good, every transgressor, every doubter

26 who has set up another god along with God. Cast him into the severe punishment.”

24–26 Hinderer of good means one who does not render unto God and to others that to which they have a right (Ṭ). With regard to God’s Commands, this means one who does not pay the obligatory alms (zakāh). With regard to other human beings, it means honoring contracts and dealing justly. Transgressor indicates one who violates others by reviling or oppressing them (Ṭ).

27 His companion will say, “Our Lord, I did not make him rebel; rather, he was far astray.”

27 For the meaning of his companion, see 50:23c. I did not make him rebel declares the companion’s innocence of what the person does (Ṭ), as when Satan says to human beings after they have followed his injunction to disbelieve, Surely I am quit of you. Truly I fear God, Lord of the worlds (59:16), and when Satan declares, I had no authority over you, save that I called you, and you responded to me. So do not blame me, but blame yourselves (14:22). Such verses indicate that all human beings bear responsibility for the state of their soul and would not incline to suggestions from Satan, were they not already far astray.

28 He will say, “Dispute not before Me, since I have already presented unto you the Threat.

28 Human beings received ample warning during the life of this world, since there has been no community but that a warner has passed among them (35:24; cf. 16:36). Thus some read Threat here as a reference to the Quran (Ṭ), since to warn people of the impending punishment is considered a function of all revelations and is a central theme of the Quran. To dispute before God on the Day of Judgment is therefore futile, since such people did not avail themselves of the warning when it came, and all of their iniquities are now on display.

29 With Me the Word is not changed, and I do not wrong My servants.”

30 That Day We shall say to Hell, “Have you been filled?” And it will say, “Is there more?”

29–30 The Word is not changed refers to God’s Decree (Ṭ) or to the Quran itself, as in 6:115 and 18:27: None alters His Words. It can also be understood as a reference to both, for in 32:13 God says, I shall surely fill Hell with jinn and men all together. The question posed by Hell, Is there more? is interpreted by some to mean, “I am full” (Ṭ), while others say it means, “Give me more” (Ṭ). Both interpretations are possible depending upon how one understands ahādīth such as the following: “As for the Fire, it will not be filled until God puts His Foot upon it, saying to it, ‘Enough, Enough.’ Then it will be full, and it folds in upon itself. And God will not wrong anyone among His creation” (Q, Ṭ). Were Hell to say, Is there more? before the Foot of God, which is often understood as a symbol of Divine Mercy, is placed upon it, it could be read as a request for more. Were it to be said afterwards, it could be read as an acceptance of God’s Decree or as a query as to whether it had fulfilled its task by accepting all whom God had decreed for it.

31 And the Garden will be brought nigh unto the reverent, not distant:

31 See 26:90–91c.

32 “This is what is promised for every oft turning keeper,

32 Oft turning translates awwāb, which indicates someone who is penitent and could also mean one who is constantly turned to God and thus remembers Him in all things; see 38:17c. Keeper indicates a person who keeps the Commands of God and avoids falling into sin (Ṭ). Translated according to the interpretation of these terms, this verse would mean, “everyone who is penitent and steadfast.”

33 who fears the Compassionate unseen and comes with a penitent heart.

33 Fears the Compassionate unseen (cf. 36:11) can be interpreted as a reference to worshipping God while God remains unseen or worshipping God in seclusion (see also 67:12c). To come with a penitent heart means to come with a heart that has turned away from what displeases God to what makes God content (Ṭ).

34 Enter it in peace. This is the day of abiding.”

34 Peace translates salām, which also denotes “greeting” and “safety.” Enter it in peace is thus interpreted to mean, “Enter secure from every fear,” or “Enter with the greeting of peace” (JJ), as in 56:25–26: They hear no idle talk therein, nor incitement to sin, save that “Peace! Peace!” is uttered (cf. 7:46; 10:10; 13:23–24; 14:23; 16:32; 19:62; 25:75; 33:44; 36:58). Thus the Garden is also known as the Abode of Peace (6:127; 10:25). That this is the day of abiding indicates that it is the day on which everlasting life in the Garden will begin (JJ, Ṭ).

35 Therein they shall have whatsoever they will; and with Us there is more.

35 That they shall have whatsoever they will (cf. 39:34; 42:22) is reaffirmed in 56:20–21, which speaks of their having fruits as they choose, and the meat of birds

as they desire (cf. 52:22). And with Us there is more indicates the vision of God (Ṭ), which is considered the greatest blessing, beyond all else, that one can desire in Paradise. When viewed in contrast to the query of Hell at the end of v. 30, Is there more?, it could also be understood to mean that, whereas the punishment of Hell is set and delimited, the rewards of the Garden are infinite.

③⑥ How many a generation before them have We destroyed who were of greater prowess than them? Then they searched about in the lands: “Is there any refuge?”

36 This verse refers to those tribes and peoples mentioned in vv. 12–14. The same rhetorical question is asked of previous generations in several Quranic verses with slight variations (see 6:6; 17:17; 19:74, 98; 20:128; 32:26; 36:31; 38:3). Other verses refer to similar destruction of towns (see 7:4; 21:11; 22:45, 48; 47:13). In all such verses, it is stated or implied that such people were destroyed for their iniquity and their refusal to accept the teachings of the messengers whom God had sent to them; see 6:6c; 47:13c. That they wandered in the land asking, Is there any refuge? implies that the disbelievers and the iniquitous had no place in which to find security in this life or the Hereafter.

③⑦ Truly in that is a reminder for whosoever has a heart, or gives ear as witness.

37 In Arabic, to say that one “has a heart” is to say that one’s heart is alive and awake, which also implies the ability to understand (Ṭ). Whosoever has a heart can thus mean, “Whoever has a heart that is aware, because if one’s heart is not aware, it is as if he has no heart” (Z); see 2:7c. Gives ear as witness can mean “present with his intelligence, because whosoever is not present in mind, it is as if he is absent” (Z). As witness could also be rendered “and is a witness,” in which case this verse would, from a Quranic perspective, refer to the three main faculties through which understanding is achieved: the heart, the ears, and the eyes. When interpreted to mean “and is a witness,” this verse is also understood as a reference to the People of the Book, whose books Muslims believe bear witness to the prophethood of Muhammad (Ṭ, Z; see 7:157c), or to the believer who hears the Quran and bears witness to it (Ṭ, Z). It can also be seen as a reference to the hypocrite who hears the Quran, but does not benefit from it (Ṭ).

38 And indeed We created the heavens and the earth and whatsoever is between them in six days, and no fatigue touched Us.

38 Regarding the creation of the earth in six days (cf. 10:3; 11:7; 25:29; 32:4; 57:4), see 7:54c. No fatigue touched Us is understood as a response to the assertion that God rested on the seventh day after creating the earth and all that is in it (JJ, Z). Regarding the preclusion of fatigue or weariness from the Divine Nature, see 2:255c.

39 So bear patiently that which they say, and hymn the praise of thy Lord before the rising of the sun and before the setting.

39 Cf. 20:130. Bear patiently that which they say (cf. 20:130; 38:17; 73:10) enjoins the Prophet and, by extension, all Muslims to bear patiently the chiding of disbelievers and naysayers. The command to hymn the praise of thy Lord (cf. 15:98; 20:130; 40:56; 52:48; 110:3) indicates that one should not dwell upon the words of disbelievers, but instead turn to God. According to some commentators, before the rising of the sun refers to the morning prayer and before the setting refers to the late afternoon prayer (Ṭ), though others say that before the setting refers to both afternoon prayers (JJ, Z). On a night of the full moon, the Prophet is reported to have said to a group of his Companions, “You will see your Lord as you see this moon, and you will have no trouble looking at Him. So whosoever can should not miss the offering of prayers before sunrise [fajr prayer] and before sunset [‘aṣr prayer].” Then the Prophet recited, And hymn the praise of thy Lord before the rising of the sun and before the setting.

40 And at night glorify Him, and after prostrations.

40 And at night glorify Him (cf. 52:49) refers to the obligatory night prayer

(Q), or both the sunset prayer and the night prayer (JJ, T̄, Z), or the two supererogatory prayer cycles before the morning prayer (Q). It can also be taken as a general command to glorify God throughout the night (JJ, Q) and thus to practice the night vigil (Z); regarding the night vigil, see 11:114; 17:79; 21:20; 20:130; 25:63–64; 73:6, 20; 76:26; 73:1–2c. After prostrations is taken by some as a command to glorify God after each prayer. According to Ibn ʿAbbās, “The receding of the stars [52:49] is the two prayer cycles before the morning prayer, and after prostrations is the two prostrations after the sunset prayer” (Q). According to some, v. 39 refers to performing all of the obligatory prayers, though only two are mentioned specifically, while v. 40 refers to supererogatory prayers at night and after the prescribed prayers.

④⁴¹ And listen on the Day when the caller calls from near at hand, ④⁴² on the Day when they hear the Cry of Truth; that is the Day of coming forth.

41–42 And listen to My Words (JJ) either on the Day when the caller calls, referring to the Archangel Seraphiel’s blowing his trumpet and heralding the end of the world (see 39:68c; 78:18c), or “regarding the Day when the caller calls,” meaning the description of that day provided in the Quran (Z). Some say that Seraphiel blows the trumpet, while Gabriel calls (Z). From near at hand refers to a place close to Heaven or a place close to those who are called (Z). In the case of a place close to Heaven, it is interpreted to mean Jerusalem (T̄, Z). In the case of a place close to those who are called, it is interpreted to mean “from beneath their feet” (Z). The Cry of Truth most likely refers to the second blast of Seraphiel’s trumpet, when all souls are brought forth from their graves and gathered before God.

④⁴³ Truly We give life and We cause death, and unto Us is the journey’s end.

43 Although the plain sense of We give life and We cause death (cf. 15:23) indicates that God alone controls every phase of existence, it is also understood as an allusion to spiritual life and death. As Ismāʿīl Haqqī writes, “We give life to hearts that are dead and cause carnal souls that are alive to die. And unto Us is the journey’s end for one whose carnal soul has died and whose heart is alive.” Echoing the famous verse Truly we are God’s, and unto Him we return (2:156), that the journey’s end is unto God is reaffirmed in several verses (see 2:285; 3:28; 5:18; 22:48; 24:42; 31:14; 35:18; 40:3; 42:15; 60:4; 64:3), though this is the only verse where it is phrased in the first-person plural, unto Us.

④ That Day the earth is split asunder from about them—as they hasten forth. That is a gathering easy for Us.

44 The earth being split asunder is among the many signs of the Last Day (see also 19:90), along with the heavens being rent, the mountains falling, and the seas swelling over. In this case only the earth is mentioned, since it pertains to the bodies being brought forth from their graves for the Resurrection. That is a gathering easy for Us reasserts one of the central themes of this sūrah, that just as God brought forth the first creation, so too can He bring about the Resurrection, as in 29:19: Have they not considered how God originates creation, then brings it back? Truly that is easy for God (see also 64:7c).

④ We know best that which they say. Thine is not to compel them. So remind, by means of the Quran, those who fear My Threat.

45 That God knows best that which they say (cf. 20:104) provides the rationale for enduring insults with patience (see v. 39). As true speech is that of the heart, and just as some hypocrites profess faith though they disbelieve (see 63:1c), some who have faith in their hearts may appear outwardly to reject the truth. This verse is thus related to the understanding that God knows best what they conceal (3:167; 84:23) and what is in their souls (11:31; see also 17:25), implying that God knows both the inveterate disbelievers and those who simply decry the Prophet due to social norms, but may eventually be among those who are reminded by the Quran of the truth and of their true nature, as happened with several of the Prophet’s early detractors, most notably ʿUmar ibn al-Khaṭṭāb, who later became one of his closest Companions and the second Caliph after his death. Given the general principle in Islam that there is no coercion in religion (2:256), the Prophet is not to compel disbelievers. His function is only to remind human beings through revelation (see 88:21–22), as prophets are only responsible for proclaiming the message (see, e.g., 3:20; 5:92, 99; 13:40; 16:35, 82; 24:54; 29:18; 36:17; 42:48). Those who fear My Threat (see also 87:9–10) is understood by some to mean the believers (JJ), but can be taken more generally to mean all but the most obstinate disbelievers, since every human being is believed to bear the primordial covenant, and thus the remembrance of God, within the depths of his or her soul (see 7:172c; 30:30c).

The Scatterers

al-Dhāriyāt

Al-Dhāriyāt is a Makkan sūrah, most likely from the later Makkan period. The sūrah takes its name from the mention of the winds that scatter in the first verse. It can be seen as following upon the previous sūrah in that vv. 5–6 guarantee the advent of the Day of Judgment, which will follow upon the Resurrection and Gathering, mentioned at the conclusion of the previous sūrah (Āl).

After attesting to the Judgment in the opening lines (vv. 1–6), the sūrah discusses the intellectual fallacies that lie at the heart of disbelief (vv. 7–14) and contrasts the final end of those who conjecture with the final end of the reverent (vv. 15–19). It then calls upon the signs within creation and the human soul as evidence of the Day of Judgment (vv. 20–23). This is followed by references to the stories of Abraham, Lot, and Moses (vv. 24–40), transitioning into a discussion of the pre-Islamic Arabian tribes of ʿĀd and Thamūd (vv. 41–45), and concluding with a reference to Noah (v. 46), who preceded all of the aforementioned tribes and peoples. The next passage (vv. 47–55) begins with another allusion to the evidence of Divine Omnipotence provided by the natural order (vv. 47–49) and provides counsel to the Prophet Muhammad. The sūrah concludes with a discussion of the relationship between the Divine and the human (vv. 56–58) and a final warning to the disbelievers (vv. 59–60).

Commentary

① By the scatterers as they scatter,

1 A reference to the winds that scatter dust (Bđ, JJ, Ț) or an allusion to the cycles by which women bring forth subsequent generations (Bđ).

② and by those that bear a burden,

2 A reference to the clouds that carry moisture (Bđ, JJ, Q, Ț) or to women who are pregnant (Bđ, Q).

③ by those that course with ease,

3 Ships that course upon the surface of the ocean (Bđ, JJ, Q, Ț) or the planets that run through their stations (Bđ).

④ and by those that apportion the Command,

4 The angels who apportion all that God has ordained for creation (Bđ, JJ, Ț) or the winds that apportion the rains by dispersing the clouds (Bđ).

⑤ verily what you are promised is true,

5 The promise of the Resurrection and what follows it will come to pass (JJ), indicating that the final accounting, reward, and punishment are inevitable (Ț). Vv. 5–6 constitute the response to the oaths taken in vv. 1–4, which can be understood to mean that the subtle ways in which life is supported in this world, through winds and rain and other means, bear witness to the existence of a Creator behind them to Whom they all return, as in 2:164: And the water God sends down from the sky whereby He revives the earth after its death, scattering all manner of beast therein; and the shifting of the winds; and the clouds subdued between the sky and the earth are surely signs for a people who understand (see also 7:57; 30:48).

⑥ and truly the judgment shall come to pass.

6 Cf. 52:7. Shall come to pass can also be translated shall befall (wāqi^c), for which see 56:1–2c.

⑦ By Heaven possessed of paths,

7 Paths translates hubuk, which indicates ripples made upon sand or water by the wind (Ṭ) or the streaks upon mountains. In this context, hubuk refers to the subtle paths through which the heavenly bodies move. Heaven could also be interpreted to mean “sky,” in which case hubuk would refer to streaks of clouds. As all of these various meanings of hubuk indicate subtle wonders of the natural world, this verse is understood in relation to the verb habaka, meaning, “to make well and firm,” as an allusion to the beauty and sound structure of the created order (Ṭ).

⑧ truly you are of differing claims.

8 Differing claims refers to the different opinions among people regarding the Quran, as some believe in it and some deny it (Bḍ, JJ, Ṭ); or to the different opinions the disbelievers have regarding the Prophet, some maintaining that he is a poet, others that he is a sorcerer, and others that he is possessed (Bḍ, JJ); or to the disbelievers’ opinions regarding the Resurrection and Judgment (Bḍ).

⑨ Whosoever has been turned away shall from it be turned away.

9 Away here means away from the Quran (Ṭ), or the Prophet and the Quran

(JJ), or from the truth. Turned away translates yu'fiku/ufika, which also means “to lie” or “to pervert.” The verse is therefore understood to mean that those whose intellects and souls have already strayed or been perverted will continue to stray (IK). Mujāhid thus interprets it to mean that whoever is weak in intellect and judgment will thereby be turned away from religion (IK). Some also read has been turned away (ufika) as an active verb rather than a passive one and interpret it to mean “to lie,” thus indicating, “Whosoever lies shall be turned away from it” (Bḍ, R).

⑩ Perish those who conjecture!

10 Perish (qutila) could also mean “cursed be.” Most interpret this verse as a reference to those who say that human beings will not be resurrected and that they cannot have certainty (IK, Ṭ). Those who conjecture translates kharrāṣūn, which indicates those who guess and opine, but do not seek to ascertain and confirm. It also indicates those who speak as if they have ascertained and thus lie, or those who make false accusations (yatakharrāṣu) against the Prophet (Ṭ).

⑪ Those who blunder along in a stupor,

11 The conjecturers roam about in stupefying ignorance (JJ), heedless of what is to befall them and of what God has commanded them to do (Ṭ).

⑫ asking, “When is the Day of Judgment?”

12 This question and variations upon it are repeated throughout the Quran (see, e.g., 10:48; 34:29–30; 67:25; 75:6). In general, the disbelievers do not pose it in a spirit of inquiry, but one of derision, mockery, and denial (IK).

⑬ A day when they are tried upon the Fire.

13 Tried upon the Fire means punished and burned in the Fire (IK, Ṭ). Tried translates yuftanūn, which relates to the means by which gold is tested and purified with fire (IK, Ṭ).

14 Taste your trial! This is what you sought to hasten!

14 Taste your trial; that is, taste the punishment for having disbelieved (3:106; 6:30; 8:35; 46:34) or taste the punishment of the burning (3:181; 8:50; 22:22). The disbelievers seem to wish to hasten the Punishment of God when they ask mockingly, When will this promise come to pass, if you are truthful? (10:48; 21:38; 27:71; 34:29; 36:48; 67:25), and point to the Prophet's inability to bring about the Judgment of which he warns them as evidence of his assumed folly. Thus the Prophet is told to say, That which you seek to hasten is not within my power. Judgment belongs to God alone, He relates the Truth, and He is the best of deciders (6:57; see also 8:32; 22:47). This attitude of the disbelievers is elsewhere contrasted with that of the believers, as in 42:18: Those who believe not in it seek to hasten it, and those who believe are wary of it and know that it is the truth.

15 Truly the reverent shall be amidst gardens and springs,

15 See 15:45–46c; see also 44:51–52.

16 partaking of that which their Lord has given them. Truly they were virtuous aforetime.

16 The reverent will be partaking of all the delights of the Garden in the Hereafter, because they had been virtuous in the life of this world.

17 Little of the night did they slumber,

17 Little of the night did they slumber implies, “Much of the night did they pray” (Ṭ). Many interpret this verse to mean that they would sleep little and pray during the period between the sunset prayer (maghrib) and the night prayer (‘ishā’) or during another period of the night (Ṭ).

18 and ere dawn would seek forgiveness.

18 Ere dawn translates ashār (see also 3:17), which refers to the last part of the night before the morning twilight. Regarding seeking forgiveness at this hour, a famous ḥadīth states, “Every night during the last third of the night, our Lord descends to the Heaven of this earth and says, ‘Who calls upon Me that I might answer him? Who asks of Me that I might give to him? Who seeks My Forgiveness that I might forgive him?’” (IK). The Prophet was known to sleep little. He would usually rise for supererogatory prayers before dawn and strongly encouraged others to do so. Regarding the practice of night vigil (tahajjud), see 17:79c; 73:1–2c.

19 And in their wealth was a due for the beggar and the deprived.

19 Cf. 70:24–25. Due is interpreted as a reference to the required alms (zakāh) rather than supererogatory charity (ṣadaqah; Q, Ṭ), but may refer to both. For a list of those who have a due or right to a share of one’s wealth, see 2:177. The beggar indicates those who ask to be given charity, while the deprived indicates those who have need but do not beg (JJ, Ṭ). The deprived can be understood as a reference to human beings or to all living creatures who are unable to voice their needs (R). In either case, there is an implied obligation upon those with wealth to be aware of the needs of others, even when others may be reticent or unable to bring those needs to their attention.

20 Upon the earth are signs for those possessing certainty,

21 and within your souls. Do you not then behold?

20–21 These verses relate to the opening lines of the sūrah, which call upon some of the subtleties of nature as evidence of God’s Wisdom and Omnipotence. The theme that the created order presents signs for those who have eyes to see recurs throughout the Quran; see commentary on 41:53 and 45:3–4. For the relationship between the signs in the external world and those within the human soul, see 41:53c. In relation to v. 21, the famous commentator and Ḥadīth scholar Qatādah is reported to have said, “Whoever meditates upon his own creation recognizes that he was only created for worship and that his joints were only made flexible for worship” (IK). Souls could also be rendered “selves,” in which case it is taken to indicate the variations in human languages, forms, colors, and natures (Āl) or the lowliness of the physical body, given the manner in which food and drink leave the body (Āl). “In your selves” could thus refer to the waste matter the body contains (Ghazzālī, Iḥyā’: K. dhamm al-kibr wa’l-‘ujb).

22 And in Heaven is your provision and that which you were promised.

22 As translated, your provision refers to all the things that God has destined for every person (R) and that are brought down by the angels (Qu). It could also be rendered “in the sky is your provision,” implying primarily precipitation (R, Ṭ), but also light and wind. That which you were promised is understood as a reference to all that God has apportioned for every person (Ṭ), thus indicating the manner in which God determines all things (JJ).

23 So by the Lord of Heaven and earth, it is indeed true—as it is that you are endowed with speech.

23 It is indeed true refers to that which you were promised in v. 22 (JJ, R), to the Quran as a whole (R), or to the Judgment, as in v. 6 (R). The ending phrase means that just as you have no doubt that you speak, you should have no doubt in its reality (Bd).

24 Hast thou heard tell of Abraham’s honored guests,

24–36 The account of Abraham provided here is very close to that in 11:69–76 and 15:51–60; for more details, see commentary on these passages. For other aspects of the Abraham story in the Quran, see 14:35–41; 37:83–109. For the Biblical account, see Genesis 18.

25 when they entered upon him and said, “Peace!” he said, “Peace—an unfamiliar folk.”

24–25 V. 24 could also be rendered as a definitive statement, “Thou hast heard tell of Abraham’s honored guests” (Q). Honored guests refers to a group of three, ten, or twelve angels, one of whom was Gabriel (JJ); see also 11:69. The angels’ salutation to Abraham is in the accusative, indicating, “We wish you peace,” whereas Abraham’s response is in the nominative, indicating, “Peace be upon you,” the greeting of the people of Paradise (56:26) and the one enjoined among the believers (6:54). “Peace be upon you” is a firmer and more complete salutation, indicating that Abraham greeted the angels in conformity with the injunction in 4:86: And when you are offered a greeting, respond with a greeting that is better, or return it (R, Z).

26 Then he went quietly to his family and came with a fattened calf.

26 Elsewhere it is said and he hastened to bring them a roasted calf (11:69). The Quranic account of this encounter is similar to that found in Genesis 18 in that Abraham is at first unsure as to the identity of his guests. It differs, however, in that in the Genesis account the angels eat the meal that Abraham offers them.

27 He placed it close to them, saying, “Will you not eat?”

28 Then he conceived a fear of them. They said, “Fear not!” and gave him glad tidings of a knowing son.

27–28 See 11:70c. Abraham conceived a fear of them (cf. 11:70) because in the ancient world, including the Arab world, refusing to partake of offered food was considered a sign of hostility or ill will. It is also proposed that Abraham thought they were angels sent to punish him (Āl). While here it is the angels who gave him glad tidings, 37:112 states, We gave him glad tidings. Together the two verses indicate that God gave glad tidings through the angels as intermediaries. The majority of commentators maintain that a knowing son (cf. 15:53) refers to Isaac, but others see it as a reference to Ishmael (Āl, Ṭ); see also 11:71.

29 Then his wife came forward with a loud cry; she struck her face and said, “A barren old woman!”

29 In 11:72 Sarah exclaims, Oh, woe unto me! Shall I bear a child when I am an old woman, and this husband of mine is an old man? That would surely be an astounding thing. Abraham was said to be 120 years old at this time, while Sarah was 99 (JJ).

30 They said, “Thus has thy Lord decreed. Truly He is the Wise, the Knowing.”

30 This declaration is similar to the declaration that Gabriel makes to Mary when announcing the conception of Jesus: Thus shall it be. Thy Lord says, “It is easy for Me.” And [it is thus] that We might make him a sign unto mankind, and a mercy from Us. And it is a matter decreed (19:21).

31 He said, “What is your errand, O messengers?”

32 They said, “We have been sent unto a guilty people,

31–32 See 15:57–58c. A guilty people refers to the people of Lot.

33 to send upon them stones of clay

33 In other passages, before the stones are sent, the town has already been afflicted: So when Our Command came, We made its uppermost to be its lowermost, and We rained down upon them stones of baked clay (11:82; see also 15:74).

34 marked by thy Lord for the prodigal.”

34 Marked . . . for the prodigal is understood to mean that each stone bore the name of the person at whom it was to be hurled (Āl, JJ). Marked by the Lord can be understood to mean that each stone fell with a Divine purpose; see also 11:83.

35 So We brought forth those among them who were believers;

36 yet We did not find therein but one house of submitters.

35–36 God removed the believers in order to spare them from the punishment intended for the disbelievers. One house refers to Lot and his two daughters; they were saved from this punishment, but his wife was not (see 7:83; 11:81; 15:59–60; 26:170–71; 27:57; 29:32; 54:34; cf. Genesis 19:26). The mention first of believers and then of submitters can be seen as a reference to those who combine faith and action (Āl).

37 And We left therein a sign for those who fear the painful punishment.

37 We left therein a sign indicates that the ruins of the town were left as a sign or that the story of the punishment was preserved as a warning for later generations, or both.

38 And in Moses [We left a sign], when We sent him to Pharaoh with a manifest authority.

38–40 The account of Moses, whose name appears 136 times in the Quran, is featured more prominently than that of any other prophet. As with most Makkan *sūrah*s that feature the story of Moses (40:23–45; 43:46–56; 44:17–31; 79:15–25), here the account is given more as a spiritual example reflecting aspects of the Prophet Muhammad’s challenge than as history. The more detailed accounts of Moses’ mission are found in 2:49–61; 7:103–55; 10:75–93; 17:101–4; 20:9–97; 26:10–66; 27:7–14; 28:3–46.

38 A manifest authority is understood as a reference to the miracles associated with Moses (Āl, Bq), because they provided a clear indication of the truth of the message (Bq). It can also be seen as a reference to the belief that God grants His messengers authority over whomsoever He will (59:6).

39 But he turned away with his court and said, “A sorcerer or one possessed.”

39 His court translates ruknihi, which literally means “his support” and in this context is understood by some to imply might and strength (Sh) or something in which Pharaoh trusts or on which he relies. Some interpret it to mean “his people” (Āl, Ṭ), “his companions” (Ṭ), or the hosts around him (Sh), because he “relies upon them” (yurkinu ‘alayhim) and derives strength from them (Āl). That Pharaoh must turn to them implies that he has no response to Moses but to deride him, since he cannot argue against the proofs that Moses has brought. A sorcerer (see also 7:109; 26:34; 40:24) or one possessed is the same accusation often leveled against the Prophet Muhammad by the Quraysh; see 51:52c.

40 So We seized him and his hosts and cast them into the sea, for he was blameworthy.

40 The casting of Pharaoh and his hosts into the sea refers to the parting of the Red Sea for the Israelites and its closing over Pharaoh and his hosts, who were in pursuit, as in 2:50: And when We parted the sea for you and so delivered you, and drowned the House of Pharaoh as you looked on. The drowning of Pharaoh and his army is mentioned in several Quranic passages; see 7:136; 8:54; 17:102–3; 43:55–56; 44:22–24.

④⁴¹ And in °Ād [We left a sign], when We sent upon them the barren wind.

41–45 The °Ād and the Thamūd were pre-Islamic Arabian tribes who rejected the prophets sent to them. For the account of the tribe of °Ād, see 7:65–72; 11:50–60; 41:15–16; 54:18–21. For that of the tribe of Thamūd, see 7:73–79; 11:61–68; 26:141–58; 54:23–31.

④⁴² Naught did it leave that it came upon, but that it made it as bones decayed.

41–42 Barren wind indicates a wind with no benefit, because it does not carry rain or pollinate any trees (Āl, JJ), unlike those winds mentioned in the opening of the sūrah. Elsewhere the wind that comes upon the tribe of °Ād is described as a howling wind (41:16; 54:19) or, more emphatically, a howling, raging wind (69:6). The wind laid waste to all of the people and all of the land upon which it came (JJ). For the broader use of wind and winds in the Quran, see 30:48–49c.

④⁴³ And in Thamūd [We left a sign], when it was said unto them, “Enjoy yourselves for a time.”

43 The people of Thamūd were allowed to enjoy themselves in this world for three days after hamstringing the camel that God had sent them as a sign; see 11:65. While in other verses enjoy indicates partaking of the blessings God has provided (e.g., 16:80; 36:44; 37:148), this use of enjoy has a sense of irony, since the life of this world is naught but the enjoyment of delusion (3:185; 57:20). It thus indicates that God will grant them a brief respite in this life, but that they will then suffer greater punishment in the Hereafter. For more on the ironic use of enjoy in the Quran, see commentary on 77:46: Eat and enjoy yourselves a little; truly you are guilty.

44 Then they insolently defied the Command of their Lord, and the thunderbolt seized them as they looked on.

44 The tribe of Thamūd is also said to have been destroyed by a thunderbolt in 41:13, by the Cry (or a cry) in 11:67 and 54:31, and by an earthquake in 7:78. These are not necessarily contradictory, but instead are different aspects of the overwhelming (al-ṭāghiyah) that is said to befall them in 69:5.

45 So they were not able to rise; nor could they help one another.

45 The people of Thamūd were unable to flee due to the force with which it seized them, as in 7:78, which says: So the earthquake seized them, and morning found them lying lifeless in their abode (cf. 11:67; Āl, Sh).

46 As for the people of Noah before, truly they were an iniquitous people.

46 For the Quranic account of Noah and the destruction of his people, see 11:25–48; 23:23–30; 26:105–21; Sūrah 71.

47 And the sky We established with might; truly We make vast!

48 And the earth We laid out—what excellent spreaders!

47–48 These verses return to the motif of the first verses of the sūrah, which point to the composition of the natural order as bearing signs of God. We make vast indicates God's ability to create as He wills and His Generosity in providing for all things (Āl, Sh). What excellent spreaders refers to God Himself with a plural noun because the sentence is in the first-person plural and indicates both the wisdom behind the manner in which God created the earth and God's Generosity in doing so. Spreaders translates māhidūn, which derives from the same root, m-h-d, as cradle (mahd), to which the earth is likened elsewhere: He it is Who made the earth a cradle for you and made paths for you therein, that haply you may be guided (43:10; see also 20:53).

④⁴⁹ And of all things We created pairs, that haply you may remember.

49 Pairs can be seen as a reference to the fact that all animals are created both male and female (Āl) or to the manner in which creation is made up of opposites, such as night and day, Heaven and earth, distress and happiness, and so forth (Āl). Here that haply you may remember is understood to mean that creation is for people to reflect upon and to realize that God is the Creator (Āl, R, Sh).

④⁵⁰ So flee unto God. Truly I am a clear warner unto you from Him.

50 So flee unto God may mean, “Flee from the Punishment of God to His Mercy through faith in Him, follow His Command, and work in obedience to Him” (Ṭ); or “Flee from obeying Satan to obeying God”; or “Flee from ignorance to knowledge” (Sh). According to Ibn ʿAbbās, this verse means, “Flee from sins and take shelter with God through repentance.” Others understand it to mean, “Be cautious of everything other than God, because whoever flees to what is other than Him does not benefit from it” (Sh). Similarly, the Prophet is reported to have often prayed, “O God! I seek refuge in Thy Contentment from Thine Anger, and in Thy Pardon from Thy Punishment. I seek refuge in Thee from Thee.” Regarding the reasons one must flee unto God, al-Qushayrī writes, “The human being is in one of two states: either the state of coveting something or the state of dreading something, either the state of hope or the state of fear, either the state of attracting benefit or the state of repelling harm. So his fleeing must be to God, for the one who benefits and the one who harms is God.” Al-Qushayrī goes on to say, “It is incumbent upon the servant to flee from ignorance to knowledge, from caprice to reverence, from doubt to certainty, and from Satan to God. It is incumbent upon the servant to flee from his actions that are a trial to his actions that are sufficient; and from characterizing Him in terms of God’s Wrath to characterizing Him in terms of His Mercy; and from His Self, as when He says, God warns you of Himself [3:28] to His Self, as when He says, So flee unto God” (Aj, Qu). From this perspective, the command to flee unto God is placed after the creation of all things in pairs to emphasize that one cannot flee to anything other than God, since all things perish, save His Face (28:88).

51 And do not set up another god along with God. Truly I am a clear warner unto you from Him.

51 That one should not set up equals unto God (2:22) or ascribe partners unto God (4:36; 7:33) is among the most predominant themes of the Quran; see 4:48c; 6:151–52c. Regarding the present verse, al-Ghazzālī writes, “One who does not see God in everything sees something other than Him. And if there is something other than God to which one gives attention, this attention involves an element of hidden idolatry (al-shirk al-khafī). Rather, pure monotheism (al-tawḥīd al-khālīṣ) consists in seeing only God in everything” (Iḥyāʾ, K. Qirāʾat al-Qurʾān).

52 Likewise, there came no messenger unto those before them, but that they said, “A sorcerer or one possessed.”

52 This verse parallels the manner in which Pharaoh and his people sought to discredit Moses in v. 39. It can be read as providing solace to the Prophet by showing him that his plight is the same as that of previous messengers or as a warning to the Quraysh that the fate of Pharaoh and his followers will be their fate as well if they do not follow the Prophet. The accusation that the Prophet was a sorcerer (10:2) or one possessed (52:29) is among the many accusations the Makkans brought against him (cf. 15:6–7; 23:70; 34:8; 68:51). For other verses that liken the plight of the Prophet Muhammad to that of previous prophets, see 15:11; 34:34; 36:30; 43:7, 23.

53 Do they exhort one another to it? Nay, they are a rebellious people.

53 Exhort one another to it; that is, exhort one another to saying that the Prophet is a sorcerer or one possessed (R), hence to denying the Prophet (Āl, Bg). Most commentators interpret this verse as an expression of wonder that they would in fact exhort one another to denial of God and of revelation (Āl, R). But it could also be understood as a negation meaning, “They do not exhort one another to it” (Āl), in which case “it” would refer to belief.

54 So turn away from them, for thou shalt not be blamed.

54 This verse says to the Prophet, “Once you have delivered the message, you are not responsible for whether the disbelievers follow it or for the punishment that will afflict them if they do not; you are only responsible to continue reminding the believers who do benefit from the message”; see 2:272c.

55 And remind, for truly the Reminder benefits the believers.

55 Remind is aimed at either the believers to the exclusion of the disbelievers or both the believers and the disbelievers. Here the Reminder is understood as a reference to the Quran. The verse is thus taken as an injunction to preach the Quran, because it benefits believers by increasing their spiritual insight (baṣīrah) and giving them strength in certainty and knowledge (Aj, Āl).

56 I did not create jinn and mankind, save to worship Me.

56 Together, this and the preceding verse indicate that God did not create human beings merely to seek their own sustenance, but rather to worship and submit to Him (Aj, IK), or in other words to remember God. Al-Zamakhsharī argues that this points to the purpose for which human beings were created, even if most of them do not fulfill this function. From this perspective, God only created human beings to worship Him by choosing to worship freely and not being constrained to do it, because He created them as contingent beings. Had God wanted their worship by way of coercion (qasr) and compulsion (iljāʿ), it would be found among all human beings (Z). Regarding God’s desire that human beings worship, a ḥadīth qudsī states, “O Son of Adam! Dedicate yourself to worshipping Me (tafarrugh), and I will fill your chest with riches and make your poverty dissipate. Otherwise, I will fill your chest with distractions and will not make your poverty dissipate” (IK). In this vein, the verse expands upon the command to flee unto God (v. 50), as everything else in which one seeks refuge distracts human beings from their true purpose. This passage could thus be interpreted as another expression of the central Quranic theme that human beings are not created for this world alone, but for the next. Ibn Kathīr links this to his understanding of what is reported to have been written in a previous scripture: “It has been transmitted in one of the Divine books [that] God says, ‘Son of Adam, I created you to worship Me, so play not! I have taken on the burden of your provision, so tire yourself not! If you seek Me, you will find Me. If you find Me, you have found everything. If I pass you by, everything has passed you by. And I am more beloved to you than everything.’”

According to a saying attributed to Ibn ʿAbbās, save to worship Me means “save to know Me” (Bg). Viewed in this light, v. 56 follows upon the declaration in v. 49 that all things were created so that people could remember or recollect, “since God created the cosmos only for knowledge of Him” (Futūḥāt, IV 221.20). In this vein, al-Ālūsī cites the famous ḥadīth qudsī whose authenticity through transmission cannot be substantiated, but which is widely repeated among Muslims: “I was a hidden treasure, and I loved to be known; so I created creation in order to be known.”

57 I desire no provision from them; nor do I desire that they should feed Me.

58 Truly God is the Provider, the Possessor of Strength, the Firm.

57–58 God has no need of human beings, for they are needful of God; and He is the Self-Sufficient, the Praised (35:15).

59 And surely for those who do wrong are sins like unto the sins of their companions; so let them not seek to hasten.

59 Sins like unto the sins of their companions indicates fellow wrongdoers from generations past, thus implying that current wrongdoers will be forced to endure a punishment similar to those endured by the people who rejected the prophets mentioned in previous verses (e.g., vv. 41–46). It can also be seen as a reference to those who follow the people or customs of their own time blindly, as this will not suffice as an excuse on the Day of Judgment. Let them not seek to hasten relates to the trial that they sought to hasten in v. 14.

60 Woe unto those who disbelieve on account of the Day that they are promised.

60 The Day is the Day of Judgment, as promised in vv. 5–6.

The Mount

al-Ṭūr

All commentators agree that al-Ṭūr is from the Makkan period, most likely from the latter half. According to some it was revealed immediately after Sūrah 32, al-Sajdah. It takes its name from the mention of the Mount (al-Ṭūr) in the first verse. Al-Ṭūr is understood by most as a reference to Mt. Sinai here and wherever else it is found in the Quran (2:63, 93; 19:52; 20:80; 28:29, 46), although the full name “Mount Sinai” is given twice (Ṭūr Saynā’ in 23:20 and Ṭūr Sīnīn in 95:2). It follows upon the previous sūrah in that the first half (vv. 1–28) focuses upon the subject of the concluding verse of that sūrah, the Day that they are promised (51:60; Aj, Āl), and in that it promises punishment for the wrongdoers and disbelievers mentioned in 51:59–60 (R). This sūrah can thus be understood as an affirmation of the promise made in Sūrah 51 (see 51:5, 22) and as a further warning thereof (Bq).

Al-Ṭūr begins with a series of oaths and a promise of God’s impending punishment and the Day of Judgment (vv. 1–10), followed by a description of what will befall the deniers (vv. 11–16), whose fate is then contrasted to the rewards bestowed upon the reverent (vv. 17–28). This is followed by a reply to accusations made regarding the Prophet (vv. 29–31) and a series of challenges to those who deny him and the revelation (vv. 32–43). The sūrah then concludes with counsel to turn away from disputing with the disbelievers, to be patient, and to praise God (vv. 44–49).

Commentary

① By the Mount,

1 The Mount is a reference to Mt. Sinai and by extension to what was revealed to Moses on Mt. Sinai (Bq). It can also be seen as a general reference to all mountains (Bq, R).

② and by a Book inscribed

③ on parchment outspread;

2–3 These verses may refer to the Torah, the Quran (Bđ, JJ, R), or the Preserved Tablet (85:22; Bđ, IK, R), the last of which most interpret to mean the source of all revelations. It could also be seen as a reference to the books in which the deeds of all human beings are recorded (R) or to the knowledge and wisdom written within the hearts of God’s friends (Bđ).

④ by the house inhabited,

4 The Prophet is reported to have said regarding his Night Journey and Ascension (for which see 17:1; 53:1–14), “I was taken to the house inhabited. It is visited every day by seventy thousand angels who will not come back to visit it again” (IK). According to many classical scholars, every heaven has its own house of worship, which is the direction of prayer for its residents. The house inhabited is said to be in the third, sixth, or seventh Heaven (JJ); Ibn Kathīr reports that the house located in the lowest heaven is called “the Glorious House” (al-bayt al-‘izzah). Others say the house inhabited can also be understood as a reference to the Ka‘bah or to the heart of the believer and its being “inhabited” by knowledge (Bđ).

⑤ by the canopy raised,

5 The canopy raised is the sky (Bḏ, JJ), as in 21:32: And We made the sky a canopy preserved (IK).

6 and by the sea swelling over,

6 This verse can be understood as a reference to the sea being full (Bḏ, JJ) or to the seas “boiling over” on the Day of Judgment, as in 81:6: And when the seas are made to swell over (cf. 82:3; Bḏ, IK).

7 truly thy Lord’s Punishment shall come to pass.

8 None can avert it.

7–8 Cf. 51:6. Shall come to pass can also be translated shall befall (wāqi^c), for which see 56:1–2c. Here the phrase indicates that the punishment shall come upon all who deserve it (JJ). These verses constitute the response to the oaths taken in vv. 1–7, all of which point to the completeness of God’s Power and Wisdom, which, like His Punishment, none can avert (Bḏ).

9 On a day when the sky churns with [great] churning,

9 Elsewhere it is said that the sky shall be rent asunder (42:5; 55:37; 73:18; 84:1; also see 25:25; 82:1), and that the sky shall be opened as if it were gates (78:19).

10 and the mountains move with [great] motion;

10 The mountains move, becoming heaps of shifting sand (73:14), as in 27:88: And thou seest the mountains that thou dost suppose are solid pass away like clouds—the work of God, Who perfects all things. See also 18:47; 69:14; 70:8–9; 78:20;

81:3; 89:21; 101:5.

11 woe that Day to the deniers

11 This phrase is repeated ten times in Sūrah 77. Here, as there, it refers to those who deny the Day of Judgment (as the same phrase does in 83:10) or those who deny the prophethood of Muhammad.

12 who play in idle talk,

12 To play in idle talk is often associated with vain discussion (6:68; see 6:68–69c), but it means more generally to become engrossed with the vanities of this world (R). Regarding the meaning of this verse, which has become an idiomatic Arabic expression, see 70:42c; 74:45c. Several Quranic passages indicate a direct connection between denying God and idle talk. This is made more explicit in a ḥadīth: “Whosoever can guarantee me that he will control what is between his two lips and his two thighs, I will guarantee him the Garden.” The Prophet is also reported to have said, “The fornication of the tongue is the enticing word.” And it is reported that when the Prophet instructed the prominent Companion Mu‘ādh ibn Jabal in the principles of Islam, he took hold of his own tongue and said, “Restrain this.” Mu‘ādh said, “O Prophet of God, are we to be held accountable for what we say?” He said, “May your mother be bereaved of you Mu‘ādh! Is there anything that drags people on their faces”—or he said “on their noses”—“into the Fire other than the jests of their tongues?”

13 a day when they are thrust violently into the Fire of Hell:

13 The violent way the deniers are cast into the Fire is described graphically in many verses: they are dragged upon their faces (54:48), they are bound in shackles and chains (40:71; see 36:8c; 40:70–72c), and they drink a boiling liquid and a cold, murky fluid (38:57), among other forms of punishment. This verse could also be read, “a day when they are called unto the Fire of Hell with a [great] calling” (Bḍ).

⑭ “This is the Fire that you used to deny.

14 Cf. 83:17. This verse is similar to 77:29: Away to that which you used to deny! Vv. 14–16 are understood to be uttered by the angels to the inhabitants of the Fire.

⑮ Is this sorcery, or do you not see?

15 This verse asks, “Is this sorcery, as you used to claim?” as in 54:2: And if they see a sign, they turn away and say, “Incessant sorcery!” And as in 15:15, where it is said that among the responses to the miracles and revelations brought by prophets, people say, Our eyes are merely spellbound. Nay, we are a people bewitched! The disbelievers are said to have made this charge against several messengers of God, most notably the prophets Moses and Muhammad (see 5:110; 6:7; 10:2; 11:7; 34:43; 37:15; 43:30; 46:7; 61:6; 74:24).

⑯ Burn therein! Be patient, or be not patient; it will be the same for you. You are only required for that which you used to do.”

16 Whereas patience with the trials or punishments in this life can ease the trial, lessen the punishment, and even provide spiritual benefit, in the Hereafter one no longer benefits from exercising this virtue, which should have been exercised before, and the punishment will not be lessened, regardless of one’s disposition toward it (R). You are only required for that which you used to do (cf. 27:90; 37:39; 66:7) indicates that everyone receives the punishment that they have brought upon themselves, as in 10:44: Truly God does not wrong human beings in the least, but rather human beings wrong themselves.

⑰ Truly the reverent shall be in Gardens and bliss,

17 This is the only verse that presents Gardens and bliss as parallels. Other verses speak of Gardens of bliss (see 5:65; 10:9; 22:56; 31:8; 37:43; 56:12; 68:34).

18 rejoicing in what their Lord has given them. And their Lord has shielded them from the punishment of Hellfire:

18 Regarding God's shielding the believers from Hellfire, see 44:56c.

19 "Eat and drink in enjoyment for that which you used to do,"

19 Cf. 69:24; 77:43. In enjoyment conveys the idea of a gracious host who provides hospitality with no reservations. Here it is understood to mean "while you are enjoying [them]," referring to the eating and drinking, or to mean "as congratulations" for that which you used to do (Bḍ).

20 reclining upon couches arrayed, and We shall wed them to wide-eyed maidens.

20 Elsewhere couches are described as embroidered couches (56:15) upon which the reverent recline facing one another (37:44; 44:53; 56:16), in the shade with their spouses (36:56). The word for "couches," surur (sing. sarīr), is semantically related to both "joy" (surūr) and "secret" (sirr, pl. asrār). Joy (surūr) is thus described as "rejoicing that remains concealed," and the couches upon which believers sit can be seen as couches of joy (Iṣ). Thus al-Qushayrī glosses reclining upon couches as "they remain in joy and felicity." For wide-eyed maidens (cf. 44:54; 55:72; 56:22), see 44:54c.

21 And those who believe and whose progeny followed them in faith, We shall cause their progeny to join them and will not stint aught of their deeds. Each man shall be held in pledge for that which he has earned.

21 According to a saying attributed by some to the Prophet (Bḍ, Q) and by others to Ibn ʿAbbās (IK, Ṭ), “God elevates the ranks of the believers’ progeny to the rank of their parents, even when the former have not performed as well as the latter, to comfort the parents thereby.” Then he recited this verse. Join them can mean both that they will be together and that the children will receive a reward equal to that of their parents (Ṭ). Ibn ʿAbbās is also reported to have said, “No part of the reward their parents receive for their good deeds will be reduced for them” (IK), though all such interpretations assume the children are believers as well. Each man shall be held in pledge for that which he has earned (cf. 74:38) indicates that the good and evil deeds that a soul has committed bind it to a particular end, since God attends to every soul in accordance with what it has earned (13:33). The first part of this verse can also be read with progeny as a direct object and with “follow” in the first-person plural (atbaʿnāhum), meaning, “Those who believed and whose progeny We caused to follow in belief,” a reading preferred by several commentators (JJ, Ṭ).

22 And We shall bestow upon them fruits and meat as they desire.

22 Cf. 56:20–21; 77:42. Several other verses also refer to the fruits of the Garden that will be at the disposal of the believers (e.g., 36:57; 37:42; 38:51; 43:73); see 36:57c.

23 Therein they shall pass to one another a cup wherein is no idle talk, nor incitement to sin,

23 Nor incitement to sin (see also 56:25) translates lā taʿthīm, which can also indicate that there is no lying or any form of sinful speech. Both readings indicate that this wine does not bring about the negative effects that might result from the wine of this world (JJ); see also 37:47; 56:19.

24 and there wait upon them youths, for them, as if they were hidden pearls.

24 For the youths who wait upon the believers, see 56:17c; 76:19c. For them translates lahum, which could be taken to mean that these are their own children (R).

25 And they will turn to one another, questioning each other,

25 Cf. 37:27, 50. This verse refers to the believers speaking with one another about their lives in this world while they are in the Hereafter, in contrast to the disbelievers, of whom the Quran says, There shall be no kinship between them that Day, nor will they question one another (23:101; see also 28:66). Their questioning one another can also refer to the questions they pose about their former companions who did not enter the Garden (see 37:50–55).

26 saying, “Truly aforetime, when among our families, we were anxious,

27 but God was gracious unto us and shielded us from the punishment of the scorching wind.

26–27 That they were anxious can be understood to indicate that their questioning one another arises from their humility, as they do not think that they have merited entry into Paradise and are aware that it is only through the Grace of God that they could have achieved such a station. Scorching wind translates samūm, which indicates a wind that penetrates the pores (masām) of one’s body (Aj, Q, Z). It is among the punishments said to afflict the companions of the left in 56:42.

28 Truly we did call upon Him aforetime. Truly He is the Righteous, the Merciful.”

28 Truly He is translates innahu, which could also be read annahu (Bḍ), meaning “for He is” (“for He is the Righteous, the Merciful”). This is the only appearance of the Divine Name al-Birr or the Righteous in the Quran. Birr usually appears in the Quran in relation to certain virtuous human beings who are referred to in several passages as al-abrār, or the pious (3:198; 76:5; 82:13; 83:18, 22). In relation to both God and humans, birr connotes beneficence and all the attributes associated with it. It is thus similar to nobility or magnanimity (karāmah; see 49:13c; 96:3c) and to “doing what is beautiful” (iḥsān; see 29:69c), qualities that encompass many other virtues and can be used to describe both God, Who is seen as the source of all virtues, and human beings.

29 So remind, for thou art not, by the Blessing of thy Lord, a soothsayer or one possessed.

29 The placement of the command to remind between the mention of those who feared God in this world (vv. 25–28) and a series of verses (vv. 30–33) in which the disbelievers cast aspersions upon the Prophet is in keeping with the broader Quranic theme that the Prophet’s function is to deliver the message to those who fear God and to leave the disbelievers for God to deal with, as in 50:45: We know best that which they say. Thine is not to compel them. So remind, by means of the Quran, those who fear My Threat (see also 87:9–10; 88:21–26). That the Prophet was a soothsayer (cf. 69:42) or possessed (cf. 68:2) are among the many accusations the Makkans made against him, as in 15:6–7; 23:70; 34:8; 68:51.

30 Or do they say, “A poet—let us await the vagaries of fate for him.”

30 A poet refers to the Makkans’ accusation that Muhammad had authored the Quran himself; regarding this accusation, see 26:224–27; 29:48; 36:69. The vagaries of fate can also indicate the vagaries of death or the calamities of time (Z). Here the phrase indicates that the disbelievers expected the passage of time to prove the Prophet wrong.

31 Say, “Wait! For truly I am waiting along with you.”

31 This verse is understood to mean, “I shall await your destruction just as you await my destruction” (Bd, Z); for other instances of this ironic statement with slight variations, see 6:158c; 7:71; 9:52; 10:20, 102; 11:122; 20:135; 32:30. Some view this statement as fulfilled by the defeat of the Makkans at the Battle of Badr in 2/624 (JJ).

32 Do their minds command them to this, or are they a rebellious people?

32 The question is rhetorical, meaning that the disbelievers’ mental faculties could not possibly lead them to say that the Prophet is a soothsayer, a possessed man, or a poet (JJ, Z). Therefore, they must be a rebellious people.

33 Or do they say, “He has invented it”? Nay, but they believe not.

33 An accusation similar to the charge the disbelievers make in 38:7: We did not hear of this in the creed of latter days. This is naught but an invention. According to many commentators, the beginning verses of the next sūrah (53:1–11) follow upon this verse by asserting that the Prophet neither invents or speaks out of his own desire; see the introduction to Sūrah 53.

34 Then let them bring an account like unto it, if they are truthful.

34 This is one of the famous “challenge verses” of the Quran that implore those who claim the Quran to be a human creation to create its like if they can. See also 2:23–24; 10:38; 11:13. Regarding this challenge, 17:88 enjoins, Say, “Surely if mankind and jinn banded together to bring the like of this Quran, they would not bring the like thereof, even if they supported one another.”

35 Were they created from naught? Or are they the creators?

35 Both this verse and a similar verse, 56:59, question why the disbelievers do not acknowledge their Creator by worshipping Him. This verse could also mean, “Is it they who have created themselves?” Or it could be read as a reminder that human beings have been created from a draught of base fluid (32:8). It can also be understood as a reminder that human beings will be resurrected, as in 23:115: Did you suppose, then, that We created you frivolously, and that you would not be returned unto Us? (see also 74:36–40).

36 Or did they create the heavens and the earth? Nay, but they have no certainty.

36 The disbelievers do not think they have created the universe, but in failing to worship God they fail to acknowledge that He is the Creator and fail to worship Him accordingly. Several verses indicate that the pagan Arabs acknowledged that God was the Creator, but did not conclude from this affirmation that they must worship God, as in 31:25: And wert thou to ask them, “Who created the heavens and the earth?” they would surely say, “God.” Say, “Praise be to God.” Nay, but most of them know not (see also 29:61; 39:38; 43:9, 87). From a Quranic perspective, that God is the Creator also indicates His Omnipotence and Omniscience, as in 67:14: Does He Who created not know? He is the Subtle, the Aware; and that He is able to resurrect, as in 36:81: Is not He Who created the heavens and the earth able to create the like thereof? Yea, indeed, He is the knowing Creator.

37 Do they possess the treasures of your Lord? Or are they in control?

37 Cf. 38:9. The treasures can refer to the stores of God’s Mercy (38:9), the stores from which God sends prophecy to whom He wills (Z), God’s Knowledge (Z), or the Divine secrets hidden from human perception (R). See comment on 15:21: Naught is there, but that its treasures lie with Us, and We do not send it down, save in a known measure. No human being could have such access to the Divine treasures; hence the Prophet is instructed, Say, “I do not say to you that with me are the treasures of God; nor do I know the unseen; nor do I say unto you that I am an angel. I follow only that which is revealed unto me” (6:50; see also 11:31). In this context, control most likely indicates the ability to measure out from God’s treasuries, thus to determine and to decree as does God.

38 Or do they have a ladder whereby they listen? Then let their listener bring a clear warrant.

38 By ladder is meant a ladder to Heaven. This is one of several passages that speak of the audacity of those who deny revelation, asking whether they have better access to the truth, which from a Quranic perspective, can only be from God. In this vein, 37:156–57 states: Or have you a manifest authority? Bring your Book, then, if you are truthful. Elsewhere the Quran asks rhetorically, Or did We give them a book, such that they stand upon a clear proof from it? (35:40; see also 6:148; 34:44; 43:21; 68:37–38, 47). The notion of ascending to Heaven to listen to heavenly discourse is a concept related to the jinn, as in 72:8–10, where it is implied that the jinn once had the privilege of overhearing the Heavenly discourse, but are now barred from it (see also 15:16–18; 67:5). In 38:65–70, the Prophet is instructed to declare that he himself has no knowledge beyond what is revealed to him and is not privy to what is said among the angels.

39 Does He have daughters while you have sons?

39 This verse is similar to 37:149 and 43:16. The Quran frequently criticizes the idea that God has sons or daughters (see 2:116; 6:100; 9:30; 10:68; 17:40, 111; 18:4; 19:35, 88–93; 21:26; 25:2; 37:149, 153; 39:4; 43:16, 81–82; 52:39; 72:3). Here the disbelievers blaspheme by ascribing offspring to God and further blaspheme by ascribing to themselves offspring that according to their particular worldview would be superior to those they ascribe to God, namely, sons instead of daughters.

40 Or dost thou ask a reward of them, such that they are burdened with debt?

41 Or do they possess the Unseen, such that they write it down?

40–41 These verses are repeated in 68:46–47. See also 23:72: Dost thou ask any recompense of them? For thy Lord’s recompense is better, and He is the best of providers. This rhetorical question is answered by the Quran itself in 12:104: And thou askest of them no reward for it; it is naught but a reminder for the worlds.

42 Or do they desire to devise [a scheme]? Then those who disbelieve shall be the ones against whom a scheme is devised!

42 This is one of several verses to illustrate the folly of those who would attempt to outwit God, for only His scheme is firm (68:45; cf. 7:184); see also 8:18; 22:15; 40:26; 77:39; 86:16–17.

43 Or do they have a god other than God? Glory be to God above the partners they ascribe.

44 Were they to see a fragment falling from the sky, they would say, “A heap of clouds.”

44 This verse can be seen as a response to the disbelievers’ words to the Prophet in 26:187: Then make fragments from the sky fall upon us, if you are among the truthful (Bḍ). The implication is that even when the disbelievers receive a proof that they have requested, they will still disbelieve, as in 15:14–15: Were We to open for them a gate unto Heaven, that they might continue to ascend through it, they would say, “Our eyes are merely spellbound. Nay, we are a people bewitched!”

45 So leave them until they meet the Day when they will be thunderstruck,

45 The command to leave them or elsewhere to turn away from them (4:63; 32:30; 51:54) recurs throughout the Quran, especially in the Makkan verses, implying that the Prophet should leave the disbelievers to their own devices, since they will eventually sow the seeds of their own demise in this world and will, in the Hereafter, be punished by God for their disbelief; see 52:29c. Their being thunderstruck describes the state that will come upon them the day they die (JJ), or on the Day of Resurrection (IK).

④⁴⁶ a day when their scheming will avail them naught and they will not be helped.

46 Elsewhere it is said that God makes feeble the scheming of the disbelievers (8:18), because those who are guilty only plot against themselves, though they are unaware (6:123). The scheme of Satan is also described as ever feeble (4:76; see also 3:120; 8:18), since in the end only God's scheme is firm (7:183; 68:45), and God is swifter in plotting (10:21). Thus 16:127 counsels the Prophet, And grieve not on their account, nor be distressed by what they plot.

④⁴⁷ And truly for those who do wrong there is punishment besides that. But most of them know not.

47 Punishment besides that may refer to the punishment in the grave before the Day of Resurrection (Sh; see the essay "Death, Dying, and the Afterlife in the Quran") or to the punishment received in this life in addition to the punishment that will be meted out in the Hereafter (Sh), as in 32:21: And We make them taste the lesser punishment before the greater punishment, that they might turn back (IK, R). The last sentence is thus interpreted to mean that most people do not understand that the afflictions and calamities they suffer in this life are so that they might reflect and turn to God (IK).

④⁴⁸ Be patient with the judgment of thy Lord, for thou art before Our eyes; hymn the praise of thy Lord when thou dost rise;

48 This verse begins an address to the Prophet instructing him to bear patiently either the burden of revelation (Q), or the insults of the disbelievers, as in 50:39: So bear patiently that which they say. It can also be taken as general advice to all believers. In contrast to those who do not understand the nature of afflictions and for whom they thus bring angst, believers are said to be patient with all that God sends, the good and the bad. In this vein, a ḥadīth says, “No fatigue, disease, sorrow, sadness, hurt or distress befalls a Muslim—even if he be pricked by a thorn—but that God absolves some of his sins thereby.” Regarding the spiritual benefit of trials and afflictions, see commentary on 29:2–3; 67:2. Thou art before Our eyes indicates that God preserves and protects the Prophet and the believers against their enemies and their scheming (Bḍ, JJ). Hymn the praise of thy Lord when thou dost rise means to say, as was the custom of the Prophet, “Glory be to Thee, O God, and with Thy praise,” when getting up in the morning or standing to leave an assembly (IK, Q, Sh). Some commentators also interpret this phrase to be an injunction to recite the formulas of praise that are said during the course of the ritual prayer (Q).

④ and at night glorify Him, and at the receding of the stars.

49 At night glorify Him (cf. 50:40) refers to the obligatory night prayer (‘ishā’; Q), both the sunset prayer (maghrib) and the night prayer (Sh, Ṭ), or the two supererogatory prayer cycles before the obligatory morning prayer (ṣalāt al-fajr; Q, Sh). It can also be taken as a general command to glorify God throughout the night (Q). Some thus link it to the command to perform night vigil (tahajjud) in 17:79: And keep vigil in prayer for part of the night, as a supererogatory act for thee (IK). According to a saying attributed to Ibn ‘Abbās, “The receding of the stars indicates the two prostrations before the morning prayer, and after prostrations (50:40) indicates the two prostrations after the sunset prayer” (Q). It is reported that the Prophet did not perform any of the supererogatory prayers as frequently as he did the two cycles before the obligatory morning prayer; of them he said, “The two cycles of the supererogatory morning prayer are better than this world and all that is in it” (IK, Q).

The Star

al-Najm

Al-Najm is usually considered an early Makkan sūrah, revealed soon after Sūrah 112, al-Ikhlāṣ. Vv. 13–18, which refer to the Ascension of the Prophet, may, however, be from a later period, since many commentators maintain that the Ascension of the Prophet Muhammad (mi^crāj) did not occur until the late Makkan period, most likely in the year 619, although a minority maintain that it occurred seven years before the hijrah in 614. V. 32 is also considered by some to be from the Madinan period (Āl, JJ, Q), to which some add v. 33 (Āl). Al-Najm takes its name from the oath with which it opens, By the star. This sūrah is reported to be the first that the Prophet recited in public in Makkah (Āl, IJ, Q). It can be seen as following from the previous sūrah in two ways: the reference to the star (v. 1) connects back to the injunction in 52:49 to glorify God at the receding of the stars (Āl), and the opening verses respond to the contention of the disbelievers in 52:33, He has invented it (Aj).

Al-Najm is among the most famous sūrahs of the Quran, because of its poetic rhetorical power and the debate that arises over the meaning of the first section (vv. 1–18), which is taken as a reference to two different seminal events. Many commentators say the passage refers to the Prophet's two visions of the Archangel Gabriel in his true form rather than the human form in which he would usually appear to the Prophet. Many others interpret it as a reference to the Prophet's vision of God, either with the heart alone or with the eye and the heart together, during his famous Night Journey and Ascension (al-isrā^o wa'l-mi^crāj), when he is said to have traveled through the seven heavens to within two bows' length of God.

The second section (vv. 19–30) reproaches the Quraysh for worshipping idols (vv. 19–23), followed by a brief discussion of the ignorance and conjecture from which such worship originates (vv. 24–26) and concluding with a similar condemnation of those who seek intercession from angels (vv. 27–30). After contrasting the punishment of those who do evil with the rewards of those who are virtuous (v. 31), the third section (vv. 31–54) calls upon people to reflect upon their creation and then transitions into a discussion of the perennial truths attested in the scriptures of Moses and Abraham (vv. 36–49). This is followed by a brief reference to the destruction of former peoples (vv. 50–54) and a final admonition to heed the Quran (vv. 55–62).

In the Name of God, the Compassionate, the Merciful

① By the star when it sets, ② your companion has neither strayed nor erred; ③ nor does he speak out of caprice. ④ It is naught but a revelation revealed, ⑤ taught him by one of awesome power. ⑥ Possessed of vigor, he stood upright ⑦ when he was upon the highest horizon. ⑧ Then he drew nigh and came close, ⑨ till he was within two bows' length or nearer. ⑩ Then He revealed to His servant what He revealed. ⑪ The heart lied not in what it saw. ⑫ Do you then dispute with him as to what he saw? ⑬ And indeed he saw him another time, ⑭ at the lote tree of the boundary, ⑮ by which lies the Garden of the refuge, ⑯ when there covered the lote tree that which covered. ⑰ The gaze swerved not; nor did it transgress. ⑱ Indeed, he saw the greatest of the signs of his Lord. ⑲ Have you considered al-Lāt and al-^cUzzā ⑳ and Manāt, the third, the other? ㉑ Unto you males and unto Him females? ㉒ This, then, is an unfair division. ㉓ They are naught but names that you have named—you and your fathers—for which God has sent down no authority. They follow naught but conjecture; and surely conjecture avails naught against the Truth. 29 So shun whosoever turns away from Our Reminder and desires naught but the life of the world. 30 That is the extent of their knowledge. Surely thy Lord knows best those who stray from His way, and He knows best those who are rightly guided. 31 Unto God belongs whatsoever is in the heavens and whatsoever is on the earth, that He may requite those who commit evil for that which they have done, and that He may requite those who are virtuous with that which is most beautiful, 32 those who shun grave sins and indecencies, save what is slight; truly your Lord is of vast forgiveness. He knows you best, from when He brought you forth from the earth and when you were hidden in your mothers' bellies. So deem not yourselves purified. He knows best the reverent. 33 Have you seen the one who turned away, 34 gave little, and then withheld? 35 Does he have knowledge of the Unseen, such that he sees? 36 Or has he not been informed of that which is in the scriptures of Moses 37 and Abraham, who fulfilled: 38 that none shall bear the burden of another; 39 that man shall have naught but that for which he endeavored, 40 and that his endeavoring shall be seen, 41 whereupon he will be rewarded for it with the fullest reward; 42 that the ultimate end is unto thy Lord; 43 that it is He Who causes laughter and weeping, 44 that it is He Who causes death and gives life, 45 and that He creates the two—male and female— 46 from a drop when emitted; 47 and that with Him lies the second genesis; 48 that it is He Who enriches and grants possessions; 49 that it is He Who is the Lord of Sirius; 50 and that He destroyed °Ād the Former 51 and Thamūd, sparing none, 52 and the people of Noah aforetime—truly they were most wrongdoing and most rebellious, 53 and He razed the subverted cities, 54 such that there covered them that which covered? 55 So which of thy Lord's boons do you dispute? 56 This is a warning from the warners of old. 57 The imminent is nigh. 58 It has no unveiler apart from God. 59 Do you then marvel at this discourse? 60 And do you laugh and not weep, 61 while you stand with head held high? 62 So prostrate unto God and worship!

Commentary

① By the star when it sets,

1 This verse refers to the setting of Pleiades, or to the destruction of all stars on the Day of Judgment, as in 81:2: And when the stars fade away (Aj, Ṭ, Ṭū). According to another interpretation, the word usually translated “star,” najm, could refer to the gradual revelation of the Quran in continual installments (nujūm; Bq, Ṭ, Ṭū); see 56:75c.

② your companion has neither strayed nor erred;

③ nor does he speak out of caprice.

2–3 Your companion refers to the Prophet Muhammad. Some maintain that “to be astray” or “to stray” (dalla) is the opposite of having guidance (hudā), while “to err” (ghawā) is the opposite of having sound judgment (rushd; R). “To err” is also understood to indicate ignorance that results from adhering to a corrupt creed (Iṣ, R, Ṭb). In this sense, “to be astray” indicates the absence of guidance, while “to err” indicates that one is mistaken in how one follows religion. Caprice (hawā) is an important Quranic concept, often placed in direct opposition to guidance and truth, indicating that one follows either God and God’s messengers or the inclinations of one’s own soul; see 45:23c. That the Prophet does not speak out of caprice indicates both that he did not author the revelation himself and that his own speech is guided. Together these three claims amount to saying that the Prophet has a true religion, is following it correctly, and is not subject to his own whims.

④ It is naught but a revelation revealed,

4 The alliteration of revelation revealed is a form of emphasis interpreted to mean that revelation is not to be understood as inspiration, but as a Divine Reality (Aj). It can also indicate that the revelation is continuously renewed at each moment (Aj), meaning, “It is a revelation being revealed.”

⑤ taught him by one of awesome power.

5 The one of awesome power is understood by most commentators to be a reference to the Archangel Gabriel, who imparted the revelation to the Prophet (JJ, Ṭ), and by others as a reference to God Himself.

⑥ Possessed of vigor, he stood upright

6 Possessed of vigor is also understood to mean “possessed of a beautiful stature” (Ṭ). This verse is said to indicate one of two times the Archangel Gabriel displayed his full form to the Prophet (Ṭ, Z): the first was when Gabriel appeared to the Prophet on the horizon with six hundred wings and delivered the initial revelation; the second was during the Prophet’s Ascension. Stood upright translates istawā, which indicates the manner in which Gabriel taught the Prophet the revelation (Aj) or the manner in which he appeared upon the horizon when the Prophet asked to see him in his true nature (Aj). When these verses are viewed as a reference to the vision of God, stood upright is taken to indicate the manner in which God disclosed His Light to the Prophet (Aj).

⑦ when he was upon the highest horizon.

7 When he was upon the highest horizon refers to when Gabriel appeared to the Prophet on the eastern horizon after the Prophet requested to see him in his true form (JJ), to when Gabriel appeared in the highest Heaven (Ṭ), or to when the Prophet reached the horizon during the Night Journey and Ascension.

⑧ Then he drew nigh and came close,

8 This verse indicates that Gabriel drew close to the Prophet (Q, Ṭ) or that God drew close to the Prophet (Ṭ). When understood in relation to the process of spiritual perfection, this verse is also interpreted to mean, “Then he [the Prophet] drew nigh and He [God] came close.” In this vein, some relate this verse to a famous ḥadīth qudsī: “God says . . . ‘My servant draws nigh unto Me through nothing that I love more than what I have made obligatory upon him. And My servant never ceases to draw nigh unto Me through supererogatory devotions until I love him. And when I love him, I am the hearing through which he hears, the sight through which he sees, the hand with which he strikes, and the foot upon which he walks’” (Q).

9 till he was within two bows’ length or nearer.

9 The Prophet Muhammad drew to within two bows’ length of God or of the Archangel Gabriel (Q, Ṭ). A bow’s length was a standard measure among the Arabs. A minority say that vv. 8–9 indicate that it was Gabriel who drew close to God and was two bows’ length or nearer to God (Q). Or renders the particle wa, which in this context could also mean “and” or “nay”; using “nay,” it could be rendered “within two bows’ length, nay, nearer” (Q). The two bows (qawsayn) can also mean “two arcs.” When viewed as forming the two halves of a single circle, some see them as representing the circle of existence, in which one bow represents the arc of descent whereby God brings forth creation and the other bow represents the arc of ascent whereby creation returns to God.

10 Then He revealed to His servant what He revealed.

10 This verse can be understood to indicate one of three relationships in the process of revelation: (1) that Gabriel revealed to the Prophet (His servant) what God had revealed to Gabriel (JJ, Q, Ṭb), in which case it would be rendered, “Then he revealed to His servant what He revealed”; (2) that God revealed the revelation directly to the Prophet (Q, Ṭb); or (3) that God revealed to Gabriel (His servant) what Gabriel then transmitted to the Prophet. What is revealed is not mentioned by name out of reverence for its exalted status (JJ, Ṭb).

11 The heart lied not in what it saw.

11 The heart is the Prophet’s heart. Some say this verse refers to the time when the Prophet saw Gabriel (JJ), and others say it refers to the vision of God (Q). When interpreted as a reference to an actual vision with the eyes, what it saw can be read “what he saw,” meaning that the heart did not deny what the eyes saw (Q). Most of those who maintain that this verse refers to the vision of God understand it to mean the vision with the heart, because other verses are taken to indicate that no one can see God by means of the physical eye, especially 6:103: Sight comprehends Him not, but He comprehends all sight; and 42:51: It is not for any human being that God should speak unto him, save by revelation, or from behind a veil (Q, Ṭ). In this vein, some also cite a well-known response by the Prophet when asked if he had seen God: “[He is] a light. How could I see Him?” (Aj, IK, Q). However, others argue that the Prophet also said, “The light of my vision was placed in my heart; then my heart gazed upon Him” (Aj, IK, Sy), which is interpreted to mean that the vision of the physical eye saw what the inner vision (baṣīrah) saw. Thus many understand this verse to mean that, although the Prophet did see God, he did not see the Divine Essence in and of Itself, but saw the highest Self-Disclosure (tajallī) of God with both his heart and his physical eye. In this vein, some also cite the ḥadīth: “His veil is light. Were He to remove it, the disclosures of His Face would burn whatsoever His Sight reaches” (Aj), meaning that this highest Self-Disclosure that the Prophet saw is itself a veil of light over the Divine Essence.

12 Do you then dispute with him as to what he saw?

12 This verse is addressed to those who denied the Prophet’s vision of Gabriel (JJ) or to those who denied the Night Journey and Ascension (Aj). Dispute translates tumārūn, which also indicates resistance and opposition.

13 And indeed he saw him another time,

13 This verse refers to either the two times in which the Prophet is said to have seen Gabriel in his true form or two separate visions of God (Aj). The Prophet is said to have seen Gabriel’s true form only twice, once at Mount Ḥirā’, where he received the first revelation, and a second time during the Ascension. Those who maintain that it refers to the vision of God say that the Prophet saw his Lord twice in a special Self-Disclosure: once at the rending of the highest veil above the Divine Throne and once at the lote tree of the boundary (v. 14; Aj).

⑭ at the lote tree of the boundary,

⑮ by which lies the Garden of the refuge,

14–15 The lote tree of the boundary is an enigmatic term that has led to many interpretations. Most say it is a tree in the seventh Heaven to the right of the Divine Throne; it is of the boundary either because it is the end of Paradise or because all that is created ends there, so that none can pass beyond it and none knows what lies beyond it (Aj, JJ). Others say the lote tree is at the boundary between the sixth and seventh heavens (Ṭū). In this interpretation, the Garden of the refuge is taken as a reference to the seventh Heaven (Ṭū). It is said to be the Garden in which the spirits of the prophets, the righteous, and those who bear witness (see 4:69) take refuge (Aj).

⑯ when there covered the lote tree that which covered.

16 The enigmatic structure of this sentence indicates something ineffable (Aj, Z). Some say the lote tree was covered with “light and brilliance, beauty and purity that please the eyes to an extent that is indescribable” (Ṭū). Others say it was covered with angels and butterflies of gold, which were circumambulating it (Aj, IK, Q, Ṭū).

⑰ The gaze swerved not; nor did it transgress.

17 The Prophet’s gaze did not swerve from the wonders being revealed to him (Aj). More generally, it implies that he did not swerve away from the truth that he sought (Ṭū). Nor did it transgress then means that he did not seek anything beyond what was disclosed to him (Ṭū), whether it was the vision of Gabriel or the vision of God.

18 Indeed, he saw the greatest of the signs of his Lord.

18 When the preceding verses are seen as an allusion to the Prophet's vision of Gabriel, this verse may be read "some of the signs," meaning that the Prophet saw some of the greatest signs of God when he witnessed Gabriel on the horizon in his true form with six hundred wings (JJ, Ṭ). Others say that this verse refers to the green curtain he saw covering the horizon at this same time (Ṭ). When the preceding verses are viewed as a reference to the Night Journey and Ascension, the greatest of the signs indicates the wonders of the Dominion (malakūt, the level of being above this world) and the secrets of the archangelic realm (jabarūt, what lies beyond the Dominion), which God showed the Prophet (Aj).

19 Have you considered al-Lāt and al-^cUzzā

20 and Manāt, the third, the other?

19–20 Al-Lāt, al-^cUzzā, and Manāt are the names of some of the idols worshipped by the pre-Islamic Arabs. Al-Lāt (which some say is a shortened form al-Ilāhah, meaning "the Goddess") is said to have been a white stone with inscriptions in the city of Ṭā'if, the sister city of Makkah, that was worshipped by the tribe of Thaḳīf. Al-^cUzzā (meaning "the Most Mighty" and referring to Venus or the morning star), worshipped by the tribe of Ghaṭfān, had a shrine consisting of three trees on which the idolaters placed a monument and curtains in the area of Nakhlah, between Makkah and Ṭā'if; she is said to have been the most venerated idol among the Quraysh. Manāt, worshipped by the tribes of Khuza^cah, Aws, and Khazraj, was said to be the goddess of destiny; her shrine was in the area of Mushallal near Qudayd, between Makkah and Madinah. The three idols together formed a triad. Sometimes all three were said to be daughters of "Allāh," an idea alluded to in vv. 21–22, and sometimes al-Lāt and Manāt were considered daughters of al-^cUzzā. Many other idols in the Arabian Peninsula were reportedly worshipped by the pagans, but these three are mentioned because they were more famous (IK) or because of their proximity to Makkah.

In several early histories of Islam, it is reported that when the Prophet came to the end of vv. 19–20 Satan whispered to him another two verses falsely according these pagan deities an exalted status: “Verily, they are high flying cranes! And their intercession is indeed anticipated/hoped for.” These verses appeared to accept the idols of the pagan Arabs as legitimate deities and greatly pleased the Quraysh, who according to some accounts then prostrated with the Prophet and his followers when the Prophet reached v. 62: So prostrate unto God and worship (Ṭ). As a result, the persecution of Muslims abated for a brief period. The Prophet later realized that he had been deceived when he received the revelation of 22:52: And no messenger or prophet did We send before thee, but that when he had a longing, Satan would cast into his longing, whereupon God effaces what Satan cast. The Prophet then recanted the satanic interpolation, whereupon the persecution of the Muslims at the hands of the Quraysh resumed. This is known as the “Story of the Cranes” in the Islamic tradition and as the “Satanic Verses” in modern Western literature; see 22:52c.

21 Unto you males and unto Him females?

22 This, then, is an unfair division.

21–22 This verse asks, “Do you claim that you have male offspring as it pleases you, but that God has female offspring, whom you do not want for yourselves?” (Ṭ). Unfair translates ḍīzā, which indicates decreasing something in an unjust manner that deprives others of their rightful due (Ṭ). The attribution of “daughters” to God is presented as unjust in light of the contempt that the pagan Arabs are said to have had for female offspring (see 16:57–59, 62). This is one of several passages that criticize the pagan Arabs for ascribing offspring, especially daughters, to God; see also 2:116; 6:100; 9:30; 10:68; 17:40, 111; 18:4; 19:35, 88–93; 21:26; 25:2; 37:149, 153; 39:4; 43:16, 81–82; 52:39; 72:3.

23 They are naught but names that you have named—you and your fathers—for which God has sent down no authority. They follow naught but conjecture and that which their souls desire, though guidance has surely come to them from their Lord.

23 That the idols are naught but names that you have named indicates that they have no reality other than what has been imagined, as in the Prophet Joseph’s words to his fellow prisoners in 12:40: You worship apart from Him naught but names that you have named (R). Conjecture is what one follows in the absence of knowledge (see 53:28c), while that which their souls desire refers to their caprice, which is the tendency to wander one way and then another in the absence of truth (for caprice, see 45:23c). The phrase could also be translated more literally, “that which their souls fancy.” To follow that which their souls desire or “fancy” is to succumb to the soul that commands to evil (see 12:53c).

24 Or shall man have whatsoever he longs for?

24 This verse can be understood as a reference to everything that human beings desire. In this context it speaks more specifically to the desire of the Quraysh to have their idols as intercessors with God and, by extension, to the desire of human beings to fashion religion according to their own desires, rather than conforming themselves to revealed religion.

25 Yet unto God belong the Hereafter and this world.

25 Although the followers of the pagan religions that are criticized in this sūrah would appear to believe in “a god” and in a hereafter, by attempting to make this understanding conform to their conjectures and caprices, they in effect deny that God is the Master of this world and the next.

26 And how many an angel is there in the heavens whose intercession avails naught, save after God grants leave unto whomsoever He will and unto the one with whom He is content?

26 This verse asks, “If the angels who are with God can do nothing except through God’s permission, then how can the idols that you yourselves have set up avail you in any way?” From one perspective, this rhetorical question is answered by 34:23: And intercession will benefit none with Him, save whomsoever He gives leave. Ultimately, there is no intercessor, save by His Leave (10:3; see also 19:87; 20:109; 21:28; 39:44; 43:86; 53:26) and God is the only intercessor (6:51, 70; 32:4, 39:44). Regarding the complex question of intercession, see 2:48c; 2:255c.

27 Truly those who believe not in the Hereafter name the angels with female names.

27 The idolaters' efforts to fashion reality according to their liking—they name the angels with any names they choose—demonstrate that they have no understanding of God and thus no appreciation for God's Power over all that is created. They thus misunderstand the final ends of things, which indicates disbelief in the Hereafter even if they believe in a hereafter, and disbelief in the origins of things, as indicated in 43:19: And they have made the angels, who are servants of the Compassionate, females. Did they witness their creation?

28 Yet they have no knowledge thereof. They follow naught but conjecture; and surely conjecture avails naught against the Truth.

28 They have no knowledge thereof means they have no knowledge of the matters pertaining to the angels that are discussed in the preceding verses. Alternately, thereof, translating bihi, could be understood as a reference to God, thus meaning "of Him." From a Quranic perspective, people follow either God and His messengers or conjecture and their own desires (see v. 23). To follow conjecture is thus equated with following something other than revelation, as in 10:35–36: Say, "Is there any among your partners who guides unto Truth?" Say, "God guides unto Truth. Is one who guides unto Truth worthier to be followed, or one who cannot guide unless he be guided? What ails you? How do you judge?" And most of them follow naught but conjecture. Truly conjecture does not avail against the Truth in the least (see also 6:116–17c; 10:66). In this vein, a ḥadīth states, "Beware of conjecture, for verily conjecture is the most mendacious form of speech" (IK).

29 So shun whosoever turns away from Our Reminder and desires naught but the life of the world.

29 The command to shun or “turn away” indicates that the Prophet should not concern himself with the affairs of those who deny him and the revelation, as his function is only to warn and remind, and after that he is to leave their fate to God (Āl, R), as in 4:80: Whosoever obeys the Messenger obeys God, and as for those who turn away, We have not sent thee as their keeper (see also 5:92; 64:12; 79:45; 88:21–22). Here Our Reminder is understood by most as a reference to the Quran, one of whose names is “the Reminder” (al-Dhikr). It could also be read, “Our remembrance,” in which case it is understood as a reference to belief in general (Bg, Q). In juxtaposition to the next phrase, it also can be seen as a reference to the remembrance of death (Aj). One could, moreover, understand “remembrance” as indicating the practice of remembering God with both tongue and heart (see 13:28c; 29:45c). The disbelievers desire only this life, because they believe that there is naught but our life in this world: we die and we live, and we will not be resurrected (23:37).

30 That is the extent of their knowledge. Surely thy Lord knows best those who stray from His way, and He knows best those who are rightly guided.

30 The extent of their knowledge can be seen as a reference to the fact that the disbelievers look only to the world and are ignorant of religion (Q) or as an indication that their “knowledge,” especially as pertains to the angels and idols mentioned in the preceding verses, derives solely from conjecture, caprice, and their own desires. The second sentence of this verse is repeated in 6:117, and with minor variation in 68:7 (see also 28:85). In general it indicates that God knows the final ends of all things, but in this context it also refers to God knowing the difference between the beliefs of the Muslims and that of the pagans.

31 Unto God belongs whatsoever is in the heavens and whatsoever is on the earth, that He may requite those who commit evil for that which they have done, and that He may requite those who are virtuous with that which is most beautiful,

31 This verse alludes to the fact that everything in the heavens and on the earth has been created with design and purpose, in truth (16:3; 29:44; 30:8; 39:5; 45:22; 46:3), not in play (21:16; 44:38), or in vain (3:191; 38:27); thus people’s actions will be dealt with accordingly. That which is most beautiful is interpreted by most commentators as a reference to the Garden (Bḍ, Q). It could also be rendered “for that which is most beautiful,” meaning for their good deeds (Bḍ). Those who are virtuous (alladhīna aḥsanū) and that which is most beautiful (al-ḥusnā) derive from the same root ḥ-s-n; literally it means that God rewards those who do what is beautiful with what is most beautiful or with what is more beautiful, thus indicating the manner in which beautiful character begets greater beauty in this life and the Hereafter; see 29:69c; 55:60c.

32 those who shun grave sins and indecencies, save what is slight; truly your Lord is of vast forgiveness. He knows you best, from when He brought you forth from the earth and when you were hidden in your mothers’ bellies. So deem not yourselves purified. He knows best the reverent.

32 Regarding shunning grave sins and indecencies, see 42:37c. Although grave sins are often discussed in the Islamic tradition, there is no agreement on a single definition and there are many different lists of “grave sins”; see 4:31c. Some define grave sins as “sins for which the retribution is not removed except through repentance” (Z). Indecencies translates fawāḥish, which is often equated with fornication or, more generally, with grave sins that are considered particularly atrocious (Z); see 4:15c; 4:22c.

Save what is slight is understood by most to mean minor sins from which one repents (JJ). To explain this term, many commentators cite the same ḥadīth: “Verily, God has decreed for the son of Adam his share of fornication (zinā), and he will certainly earn his share. The fornication of the eye is by looking, the fornication of the tongue is by talking; the heart wishes and lusts, and the sexual organ either manifests all of this or not” (IK, Q). In interpreting this ḥadīth, Ibn Mas‘ūd is reported to have said, “The eyes fornicate by looking, the lips by kissing, the hands by transgressing, the feet by walking, and the sexual organ either manifests all of this or not. When one has [illicit] sexual intercourse, he will be someone who fornicated. Otherwise, it is what is slight (al-lamam)” (IK). So although small sins may be more easily forgiven, one must still avoid them and be wary of what they may lead to.

Your Lord is of vast forgiveness in that He forgives small sins by keeping one away from grave sins, and grave sins through repentance (tawbah; Z). The commentator al-Baghawī says that this phrase may be placed after the mention of those who are virtuous in the previous verse, so that those who have not been as virtuous or who have even committed grave sins will not despair of receiving God’s Mercy, as in 39:53: Say, “O My servants who have been prodigal to the detriment of their own souls! Despair not of God’s Mercy. Truly God forgives all sins. Truly He is the Forgiving, the Merciful.

Brought you forth from the earth is understood as a reference to God’s creation of Adam from dust (JJ, Q). That God knows you best is thus understood as a reference to the fact that God knows the state of every human being even before they are born, from the time all human beings were in the loins of Adam (Bḍ, IK, Q; see 7:172). As God knows you best, you should deem not yourselves purified, for only God knows who is truly pure. Thus people should not think well of themselves for performing pious deeds, but should be mindful that the deeds themselves only come through God’s support (Z), as in 4:49: Hast thou not seen those who deem themselves pure? Rather, it is God Who purifies whomsoever He will. The Prophet even enjoined his followers not to ascribe good deeds to their companions, but only to God, saying several times, “Woe to you! You have cut off the neck of your companion!” Then continuing, “If one of you must praise a friend of his, let him say, ‘I think that so-and-so is this and that; God knows best about him, and I would never declare anyone pure before God,’ if he knows his friend to be as he is describing him” (IK).

33 Have you seen the one who turned away,

34 gave little, and then withheld?

33–34 Cf. 75:31–32. Withheld translates akdā, which derives from al-kudyah, designating earth that is rock hard. If someone is digging a well and comes upon such earth, the Arabs say, “He dug and came upon hard rock (akdā).” The verb akdā is then used as a metaphor for any endeavor that fails (Bḍ, Iṣ, Z). This verse thus implies that when people are satisfied that past deeds will suffice or consider themselves pure and consequently cease to perform good deeds, even past deeds may come to naught. Similarly, the effort to dig a well is useless if one does not reach water. Though they apply to all who ignore the needs of others, these verses were reportedly revealed in relation to al-Walīd ibn al-Mughīrah when he offered some of his wealth to one of the Prophet’s followers on the condition that he return to the religion of the Quraysh. After the man accepted, he gave the man some of the money, but did not fulfill the pledge in full (Bḍ, Ṭ).

35 Does he have knowledge of the Unseen, such that he sees?

35 In this context, this verse implies, “Does the one who stopped giving charity know that his past deeds will suffice or that his wealth will actually be preserved if he does not give it out in charity?” In the broader Quranic context, it indicates the arrogance of those who act as if they know better than God; see 52:41; 68:47.

36 Or has he not been informed of that which is in the scriptures of Moses 36 Though Abraham precedes Moses chronologically, the scrolls of Moses are here mentioned before those of Abraham (v. 37), because they are more widely known (Bḍ).

37 and Abraham, who fulfilled:

37 Abraham is referred to as he who fulfilled for patiently enduring what no one else was made to endure, such as being cast into the fire for smashing the idols of his people (21:67–69) and agreeing to sacrifice his son as commanded by God before the Archangel Gabriel stopped him (37:102; Bḍ). Others say this verse refers to Abraham’s fulfillment of the command to deliver God’s message (IK, Ṭ) or to Abraham fulfilling the covenant with God (R).

38 that none shall bear the burden of another;

38 This is the first instance of this Quranic axiom in the chronological order of revelation (cf. 6:164; 17:15; 35:18; 39:7; see 35:18c). No one will be forced to endure the punishments accrued through deeds committed by another. Nonetheless, one will be punished for influencing others to perform bad deeds, as in a famous ḥadīth: “Whosoever establishes a sinful custom shall bear its burden and the burden of whosoever acts in accord with it until the Day of Resurrection” (Bḍ). In this vein, those who lead others astray are said to have “a double punishment” (see 7:38–39c; 33:68).

39 that man shall have naught but that for which he endeavored,

39 Just as none will bear the sins of another, so too will none be rewarded for the good deeds performed by another. Nonetheless, the effects of good deeds can continue to provide benefit. As a famous ḥadīth states: “When a person dies, his deeds are cut off, save for three things: a righteous child who makes supplication for him; a charitable deed that continues [to bear fruit] after his death; or knowledge [he has imparted] from which people benefit” (IK).

40 and that his endeavoring shall be seen,

40 This verse means that everything one does in this life will be witnessed on the Day of Judgment. God will judge all deeds and human beings will be shown their deeds and bear witness to how they had lived. Thus the Prophet is told to say, Perform your deeds. God will see your deeds, as will the Messenger and the believers, and you will be brought back to the Knower of the Unseen and the seen, and He will inform you of that which you used to do (9:105).

41 whereupon he will be rewarded for it with the fullest reward;

41 The fullest reward that God has promised to people (Ṭ), according to some, is the vision of God (R).

④⁴² that the ultimate end is unto thy Lord;

42–50 Each verse in this passage, except v. 46, begins with wa anna, translated “that” or “and that,” indicating a continuation of the preceding verses (vv. 36–41), which discuss all that is in the scriptures of Moses and Abraham. But wa anna could also be read wa inna, which would make each occurrence mark a new, independent thought and be translated “truly,” “surely,” or “verily.”

④⁴³ that it is He Who causes laughter and weeping,

42–43 Unto thy Lord conveys a sense of the Day of Judgment, when everyone will stand before God. Although the ultimate end of all created things is from one perspective “unto thy Lord,” there are nonetheless disparate ends for various groups, as in 13:35: The parable of the Garden that has been promised to the reverent: with rivers running below, its food everlasting, as is its shade. That is the ultimate end of those who were reverent, while the ultimate end of the disbelievers is the Fire! The reverent will thus be those who laugh, as in 80:38–39: Faces that Day shall be shining, radiant, laughing, joyous. And the disbelievers will be those who weep. The ultimate end can also be seen as a reference to God as the One Necessary Being, Who is the Source of all beings (R).

43 This verse indicates that God decrees the causes that bring about laughter and weeping and that He is the One who brings joy and sadness in this world (Q), that God causes the believers to laugh in the Garden and the disbelievers to weep in the Fire (Q), or that God causes the believers to laugh in the Hereafter and weep in this world, while He causes the disbelievers to laugh in this world and weep in the Hereafter (Qu). Dhu’l-Nūn al-Miṣrī is reported to have said, “He causes the hearts of the believers and the gnostics to laugh through the sun of knowledge of Him. And He causes the hearts of the disbelievers and the disobedient to weep through the darkness of His Wrath and Punishment” (Q).

④⁴⁴ that it is He Who causes death and gives life,

44 That it is He Who causes death and gives life (cf. 2:258; 3:156; 7:158; 9:116; 10:56; 22:6; 23:80; 40:68; 44:8; 57:2; 67:2) indicates God’s Power over all phases of existence and nonexistence. It is also understood to mean that “He causes the hearts of His enemies to die through disbelief and darkness and gives life to the hearts of His friends through faith and the lights of gnosis” (ST).

45 and that He creates the two—male and female—

46 from a drop when emitted;

47 and that with Him lies the second genesis;

48 that it is He Who enriches and grants possessions;

45–48 The two (zawjayn)—male and female—are said to be mates (azwāj) created from a single soul (4:1; 6:98; 7:189; 39:6). For the meaning of these verses, see 75:37–40c. In both passages, God’s ability to create human beings from a drop (cf. 16:4; 18:37; 22:5; 35:11; 36:77; 40:67; 75:37; 76:2; 80:19) is cited as evidence of His ability to resurrect—resurrection is what is referred to here as the second genesis, according to most commentators. Al-Rāzī, however, understands the second genesis as a reference to the breathing of the Spirit into the human being (see 15:29c; 38:72c), because it is the Spirit, not the body, that ennobles human beings and sets them apart from other animals.

49 that it is He Who is the Lord of Sirius;

49 Pre-Islamic Arabs worshipped Sirius (JJ), a star of the first magnitude belonging to Canis Major. This verse thus returns to the theme of vv. 19–30, emphasizing that God is the Lord of everything to which the pagans ascribe some independent power.

50 and that He destroyed °Ād the Former

51 and Thamūd, sparing none,

50–51 And that relates back to v. 36, thus meaning, “Or has he not been informed that.” The ʿĀd and the Thamūd are pre-Islamic Arabian tribes who rejected the prophets sent to them. ʿĀd the Former (v. 50) is understood as a reference to Iram, the tribe of Noah’s grandson by the same name (see 89:7–8), while ʿĀd the latter was simply referred to as ʿĀd. For the account of the tribe of ʿĀd, see 7:65–72; 11:50–60; 41:15–16; 54:18–21. For the account of the tribe of Thamūd, see 7:73–79; 11:61–68; 26:141–58; 54:23–31.

52 and the people of Noah aforetime—truly they were most wrongdoing and most rebellious, 52 For the Quranic account of Noah and his people, see 11:25–48; 23:23–30; 26:105–21; Sūrah 71. According to some commentators, Noah’s people were most wrongdoing in that they established customs, particularly idol worship, that were then imitated by others and most rebellious in that most of them rejected the message to which Noah called them for over nine hundred years (R).

53 and He razed the subverted cities,

54 such that there covered them that which covered?

53–54 These verses are understood by most as a reference to the calamities that befell the cities of Sodom and Gomorrah (see 11:82–83c). But it may also indicate all those who have been destroyed by calamities that overturned their cities (R). Whereas the enigmatic phrase that which covered conveys the indescribable wonder of the lote tree of the boundary in vv. 14–16, here it conveys the indescribable terror that overcame the people of Lot, of which 11:82 says, We made its uppermost to be its lowermost, and We rained down upon them stones of baked clay.

55 So which of thy Lord's boons do you dispute?

55 This verse reflects the refrain So which of your Lord's boons do you two deny? which occurs thirty-one times in Sūrah 55. In the context of the preceding discussion in this sūrah it suggests that those who disputed with the Prophet regarding the nature of the angels and the idols will suffer fates similar to those of the communities mentioned in vv. 50–54.

56 This is a warning from the warners of old.

56 As translated, this verse refers to the Quran itself as part of the continuous stream of revelation (Bḍ). It could also be rendered, “This is a warner from the warners of old,” referring to the similarity between the Prophet Muhammad and the messengers who had been sent to previous communities (Bg, IK, JJ), such as those mentioned in vv. 50–54.

57 The imminent is nigh.

57 The Resurrection is near, and the Hour has drawn nigh (54:1; Bg).

58 It has no unveiler apart from God.

58 That God is the only unveiler of the Hour means both that no one other than God can know when it will come and that only God will bring it to pass, as in 7:187: None save He shall manifest it at its proper time.

59 Do you then marvel at this discourse?

59 This discourse refers to the Quran. That the disbelievers marvel at it indicates that they do not accept that a revelation could be sent from God, as in 10:2:

Is it a marvel for mankind that We have sent revelation unto a man from among themselves? (see also 7:63, 69; 38:4; 50:2).

60 And do you laugh and not weep,

60 In this context, laugh means mocking the Quran and the believers, as in 23:110: But you took them in mockery, till it made you forget My remembrance, and you used to laugh at them. Here weep indicates the manner in which all human beings, but especially those who disbelieve, would react, were they to understand the reality of the Day of Judgment and what is to follow. In this vein, the Prophet's wife ʿĀ'ishah reported, "One day, the Messenger of God passed by a group of people who were laughing, and said, 'If you knew what I know, you would cry much and laugh little'" (Q). According to a ḥadīth, "The Fire will not reach a man who weeps for fear of God" (Q). In a famous ḥadīth, one of seven categories of people said to be "shaded by God on the Day wherein there will be no shade other than His Shade" is "a person who remembers God while alone and his eyes flow with tears."

61 while you stand with head held high?

61 Stand with head held high translates sāmidūn, which can also mean "diverted and heedless" (Ṭ). In the Yemeni dialect, it can also be understood to mean that they sing when they hear the Quran (Ṭ), meaning that this is their way of mocking it.

62 So prostrate unto God and worship!

62 This is one of fifteen verses after which one must prostrate when reciting the Quran; see 19:58c. Most maintain that there is an obligatory prostration after this verse, but according to Imam Mālik, in this instance it is optional (Āl, Q). It appears that the Prophet would usually prostrate upon completing the recitation of this sūrah, but that this may have been a supererogatory custom rather than an obligation (Āl).

The Moon

al-Qamar

Most commentators maintain that al-Qamar is a Makkan sūrah, although some say that v. 45 and others that vv. 44–46 are from the Madinan period (Āl, IJ). It takes its name from the mention of the moon in the first verse and is also known by its first words, Iqtarabat al-sāʿah, “The Hour Has Drawn Nigh” (Āl, IK). This sūrah follows thematically upon the previous sūrah in that the first verse reiterates 53:57, The imminent is nigh, and the stories of the destruction that befell former communities expand upon the references to the tribes of ʿĀd and Thamūd, and the people of Noah in 53:50–52 (Āl, Sy). It is reported that the Prophet would recite Qāf (Sūrah 50) and al-Qamar during the prayers of ʿĪd al-adḥā (the Feast of Sacrifice) and ʿĪd al-fiṭr (the Feast of Breaking Fast) and during other major prayer gatherings (IK).

The first two verses of al-Qamar are understood by the vast majority of commentators as a reference to a miracle performed by the Prophet. One evening he was addressing a group of disbelievers and Muslims on the plain of Minā, just outside of Makkah. The disbelievers had been disputing with the Prophet for several days, demanding a miracle as proof of his prophethood, and they began to do so again. The Prophet then raised his hand and pointed to the moon, whereupon it appeared to separate into two halves, one on either side of nearby Mt. Ḥirāʾ. He then said, “Bear witness!” (IK, Ṭ), and the line of separation disappeared. All were left speechless, but his opponents soon discounted it as an illusion produced by sorcery. According to one account, one of the disbelievers said, “Muhammad has merely bewitched us, but he cannot bewitch the entire world. Let us wait for travelers to come from faraway places and hear what reports they bring.” Then, when some travelers arrived in Makkah a few days later, they confirmed that they too had witnessed the splitting of the moon (IK).

After warning the opponents of the Prophet of the judgment that will overtake them (vv. 1–8), the sūrah cites the people of Noah (vv. 9–15), the tribes of °Ād (vv. 18–21) and Thamūd (vv. 23–31), the people of Lot (vv. 33–38), and the people of Pharaoh (vv. 41–45) as examples of previous peoples who were overthrown for similar offenses. Mention of the punishments that await the guilty (vv. 46–48) segues into a discussion of the nature of God’s Decree and accounting (vv. 49–53), and the sūrah concludes with a discussion of rewards that await the reverent (vv. 54–55).

In the Name of God, the Compassionate, the Merciful

① The Hour has drawn nigh, and the moon has been cleaved; ② and if they see a sign, they turn away and say, “Incessant sorcery!” ③ They denied and followed their caprices—and every matter shall be made to endure. ④ Indeed reports have come to them wherein is a reproof, ⑤ conclusive wisdom, but the warnings availed not. ⑥ So turn away from them on the Day wherein the caller will call unto a terrible thing. ⑦ With their eyes humbled they emerge from the graves as if they were scattered locusts, ⑧ scrambling toward the caller. The disbelievers say, “This is a calamitous day.” ⑨ The people of Noah denied before them, for they denied Our servant and said, “Possessed!” And he was reproved. ⑩ Then he called upon his Lord, “Truly I am overcome. Help!” ⑪ So We opened the gates of the sky with pouring water, ⑫ and We caused the earth to burst forth with springs, such that the waters met for a matter determined. ⑬ Then We carried him upon a thing of planks and nails, ⑭ coursing under Our Eyes as a recompense for one who was rejected. ⑮ And indeed We left it as a sign; so is there any who remembers? ⑯ How, then, were My Punishment and My warnings? ⑰ And indeed We have made the Quran easy to remember; so is there any who remembers? ⑱ °Ād denied. How, then, were My Punishment and

My warnings? 19 Truly We sent upon them a howling wind on a day of incessant misfortune, 20 tearing out people as if they were uprooted palm trunks. 21 How, then, were My Punishment and My warnings? 22 And indeed We have made the Quran easy to remember; so is there any who remembers? 23 Thamūd denied the warnings. 24 They said, “Shall we follow a single human being from among us? Then we would surely be astray and mad! 25 Has the reminder been cast upon him from among us? Nay, he is an insolent liar.” 26 On the morrow they will know who is the insolent liar. 27 Behold! We are sending the she-camel as a trial for them; so watch them and be patient. 28 And inform them that the water is to be divided among them—each share of drink equitably proportioned. 29 Then they called their companion, and he took in hand and hamstrung [her]. 30 How, then, were My Punishment and My warnings? 31 Truly We sent upon them a single cry, and they were like a fence maker’s dry sticks. 32 And indeed We have made the Quran easy to remember; so is there any who remembers? 33 The people of Lot denied the warnings. 34 Truly We sent upon them a torrent of stones, save the family of Lot, whom We delivered at dawn 35 as a blessing from Us. Thus do We requite whosoever gives thanks. 36 And indeed he had warned them of Our assault, but they disputed the warnings. 37 They had sought to lure him from his guests; so We blotted out their eyes. So taste My Punishment and My warnings! 38 And indeed an enduring punishment greeted them early in the morning. 39 So taste My Punishment and My warnings! 40 And indeed We have made the Quran easy to remember; so is there any who remembers? 41 And indeed the warnings came unto the House of Pharaoh. 42 They denied Our signs—all of them; so We seized them with the seizing of One Mighty, Omnipotent. 43 Are your disbelievers better than those? Or have you some exemption in the scriptures? 44 Or do they say, “We are a host victorious!”? 45 The whole shall be routed and they will turn [their] backs. 46 Nay! The Hour is their tryst, and the Hour is more calamitous and more bitter. 47 Truly the guilty are astray and mad. 48 On the Day they are dragged upon their faces into the Fire, “Taste the touch of Saqar.” ④⑨ Truly We have created everything according to a measure. ⑤⑩ And Our Command is naught but one, like the blinking of an eye. ⑤① We have indeed destroyed the likes of you; so is there any who remembers? ⑤② Everything that they have done is in the scriptures; ⑤③ everything small and great is inscribed. ⑤④ Truly the reverent are amidst Gardens and a stream, ⑤⑤ upon a seat of truth before an Omnipotent King.

Commentary

① The Hour has drawn nigh, and the moon has been cleaved;

1 The Hour refers to the Final Hour as well as the imminent demise of the world (IK), and to the Resurrection (JJ), as in 21:1: For mankind, their reckoning draws nigh, while they turn away heedless (see also 16:1). Many aḥādīth state that relative to the earth's life span there is little time left between the Prophet's coming and its final end, as in the Prophet's statement, "I was sent like this in relation to the Hour," while pointing to his index finger and his middle finger (IK). A few commentators note that the second half of this verse could be read, "and the moon will be cleaved," referring to one of the signs of the end of time (Iṣ, Mw, Z). But all who relate this opinion also mention the miracle of the Prophet splitting the moon (see the introduction to this sūrah).

② and if they see a sign, they turn away and say, "Incessant sorcery!"

2 Incessant translates mustamirr, which could also be understood to mean "powerful" or "intense" (Ṭ). Regarding their turning away from God's signs, which can also mean the verses of revelation, see commentary on 32:22: And who does greater wrong than one who has been reminded of the signs of his Lord, then turns away from them? (cf. 6:157; 18:57).

③ They denied and followed their caprices—and every matter shall be made to endure.

3 They denied the signs of God after they had come to them (Ṭ), and they denied the Prophet (JJ). In the Quran, following caprice is often contrasted with following God and His Messenger, and people tend to follow either one or the other. Thus 4:135 says, Follow not your caprice, that you may act justly (see also 2:120, 145; 5:48–49). That every matter shall be made to endure is understood to indicate that good will be established in the Garden for those who do good and evil will be established in the Fire for those who do evil (Ṭ) or, more broadly, that "everything has a reality of its own and is bound to display that reality in the Hereafter” (Bg).

④ Indeed reports have come to them wherein is a reproof,

4 The reports are of the destruction of previous communities that denied the messengers sent to them (JJ), such as those mentioned later in this sūrah. Reproof translates muzdajar, which could also mean “deterrent,” as it is something that rebukes the disbelievers for their own denial and idolatry and should deter them from persisting in it.

⑤ conclusive wisdom, but the warnings availed not.

5 In the context of the previous verse, this verse means that the reports are conclusive wisdom or that the reproof contains wisdom (Ṭ). Conclusive can be understood to mean complete or perfect (JJ). But the warnings availed not could also be read as a rhetorical question: “What did the warnings avail them?” (Ṭ). In both translations, warnings could also be read to mean “warners,” referring to the prophets. This is similar to 10:101: Say, “Observe that which is in the heavens and on the earth.” But neither signs nor warnings avail a people who believe not.

⑥ So turn away from them on the Day wherein the caller will call unto a terrible thing.

6 The Prophet is enjoined to turn away from the disbelievers to prevent them from persisting in their blasphemy, as in 6:68: And when thou seest those who engage in vain discussion about Our signs, turn away from them till they engage in other discourse; and in order to turn toward God, as in 4:81: So turn away from them and trust in God. God suffices as a Guardian. This verse also implies that the Prophet should focus upon guiding those who have accepted the message, as in 51:54–55: So turn away from them, for thou shalt not be blamed. And remind, for truly the Reminder benefits the believers (see also 4:63; 6:106; 7:199; 9:95; 15:94; 32:20; 37:174, 178). The caller refers to the Archangel Seraphiel (Isrāfīl; JJ), who is said to blow the trumpet that heralds the Hour (see 39:68c). Terrible translates nukur, which could also mean “not known,” indicating that the Day of Judgment is something that human beings cannot comprehend, because they have never seen anything like it (Z).

⑦ With their eyes humbled they emerge from the graves as if they were scattered locusts,

7 All of humanity will emerge from the grave in a state of fear and confusion (JJ), like scattered locusts or scattered moths (101:4). According to al-Qurṭubī, their emerging like scattered moths refers to the first phase, when they rise from the graves in a state of confusion, going one way and another, while their being like scattered locusts refers to the second phase, when they respond to the trumpet blast (see 39:68c) and head together in one direction (Q). The image of scattered locusts could also be seen as a reference to the number of people (Z), since every person who has ever lived will be brought forth on this day.

⑧ scrambling toward the caller. The disbelievers say, “This is a calamitous day.”

8 Scrambling toward is also understood to mean “looking at” (Ṭ). This event shall be a difficult day (74:9), for the disbelievers in particular; it shall be a day that is not of ease (74:10).

⑨ The people of Noah denied before them, for they denied Our servant and said, “Possessed!” And he was reproved.

⑩ Then he called upon his Lord, “Truly I am overcome. Help!”

⑪ So We opened the gates of the sky with pouring water,

⑫ and We caused the earth to burst forth with springs, such that the waters met for a matter determined.

⑬ Then We carried him upon a thing of planks and nails,

⑭ coursing under Our Eyes as a recompense for one who was rejected.

9-14 This is most likely the first account of the story of Noah in the chronological order of revelation. As these verses only allude to aspects of the story, the Makkans may have already known the story of Noah, which is fleshed out in 11:25-48; 23:23-30; and Sūrah 71 (see also 7:59-64; 10:71-73; 21:76-77; 26:105-21; 29:14-15; 37:75-82), though 11:49 says of the account of Noah, These are among the accounts of the Unseen that We reveal unto thee. Thou knewest not of them, neither thou nor thy people, beforehand. V. 9 reflects the narrative in vv. 2-5, in which the Makkans reject the Prophet and turn away from God's signs. In this respect the story of Noah appears to be mentioned in order to give solace to the Prophet, for just as people had turned away from the prophet Noah for hundreds of years, so too did they turn away from the Prophet Muhammad. And just as God helped Noah and those who were with him prevail, so too would He ensure that Muhammad and his people would prevail. Such that the waters met is the punishment of those who rejected Noah. A thing of planks and nails refers to the Ark, whose construction is discussed in greater detail in 11:37-44. Coursing under Our Eyes indicates God's protection (JJ). One who was rejected refers to Noah and could also be read "for one who was disbelieved." For more on the story of Noah, see the introduction to Sūrah 71 as well as commentary on 7:59-64; 11:25-48.

⑮ And indeed We left it as a sign; so is there any who remembers?

15 We left it is taken by some to mean that the ark had been preserved for many generations to witness, even up to the time of the Prophet (IK). But it most likely means, "We preserved" the story of Noah within human memory as a sign or warning for future generations. Who remembers could also be rendered "who takes heed" or "who will be admonished."

⑯ How, then, were My Punishment and My warnings?

16 This poetic and evocative verse serves as a refrain in this sūrah, coming at the end of each of the reports of former communities that were destroyed. It can be taken to mean, “How severe were My Punishment and My warnings?” or to indicate that the punishment they received was justified, because God had already sent them a warning (JJ, comment on v. 18).

17 And indeed We have made the Quran easy to remember; so is there any who remembers?

17 Juxtaposed to the ominous refrain that first appears in the previous verse, this verse introduces a second, more positive refrain in this sūrah. The first refrain emphasizes the wrath that comes upon those who reject God and His signs, while the second emphasizes the mercy by which God makes access to revelation, and hence truth, easy. The Quran is made easy to remember as a mercy to human beings in that its recitation is made easy for the tongue and the understanding and memorization of it are made easy for the mind and heart (Aj). Many ahādīth speak of the virtues of memorizing the Quran, among them: “The best among you are those who learn the Quran and teach it to others”; and “If the Quran is enclosed by skin [i.e., memorized by a human being], God will never burn it in Hellfire.” Similar to who remembers in v. 15, to remember could also be understood to mean, “to be admonished” (Aj) and who remembers can indicate those “who will be admonished” or “who will take heed.” In both readings, it can also be understood as a reference to the covenant made between God and human beings before time (see 7:172c), thus meaning, “Is there anyone who remembers (or takes heed of) the pact or covenant with God?” (Aj).

18 °Ād denied. How, then, were My Punishment and My warnings?

18 For the story of the people of °Ād, a pre-Islamic Arabian tribe whose prosperity led to its decadence and whose members rejected the Prophet Hūd, see 7:65–72; 11:50–60; 41:15–16. Regarding the second part of this verse, see 54:16c.

19 Truly We sent upon them a howling wind on a day of incessant misfortune, 20 tearing out people as if they were uprooted palm trunks.

19–20 While the wind that destroys the people of ʿĀd is called a howling wind in 41:16 and the barren wind in 51:41, 69:6 is more emphatic: And as for ʿĀd, they were destroyed by a howling, raging wind. Here, as in v. 2, incessant translates mustamirr; here too it can also indicate “powerful” or “severe” (Ṭ). Tearing out people refers to their being wrenched from holes in the ground in which they sought shelter and being flung headfirst so that their necks were crushed and their heads severed from their bodies (JJ). They are likened to palm trees, because they were known for their large physical stature (JJ; see 89:7–8). They are also compared to hollowed palm trunks in 69:7.

21 How, then, were My Punishment and My warnings?

21 See 54:16c.

22 And indeed We have made the Quran easy to remember; so is there any who remembers?

22 See 54:17c. Similar to this refrain, 19:97 states, We have only made this easy upon thy tongue that thou mayest give glad tidings unto the reverent thereby, and that thereby thou mayest warn a contentious people.

23 Thamūd denied the warnings.

23 Warnings could also be rendered “warners”; see 54:5c. For more on the story of the Thamūd people, a pre-Islamic Arabian tribe who the Quran says were destroyed for rejecting the Prophet Ṣāliḥ, see 7:73–79; 11:61–68; 26:141–58.

24 They said, “Shall we follow a single human being from among us? Then we would surely be astray and mad!

24 The words with which the people of Thamūd rejected Ṣāliḥ reflect those with which the Quraysh rejected the prophethood of Muhammad: What ails this Messenger, who eats food and walks in the markets? Why is there not an angel sent down unto him to be a warner with him? (25:7). The manner in which people are said to reject their prophets, saying, Shall we follow a single human being from among us? or, Shall a human being guide us? (64:6) recurs throughout the Quran and is thus presented as a constant barrier to belief, as in 17:94: And nothing hindered men from believing when guidance came unto them, save that they said, “Has God sent a human being as a messenger?” (see also 6:6–9, 50, 91; 11:12, 27; 14:10–11; 21:3; 23: 24, 33, 47; 26:154, 186; 36:15; 41:14; 50:2; 74:25).

25 Has the reminder been cast upon him from among us? Nay, he is an insolent liar.”

25 Here the reminder refers to the revelation sent to Ṣāliḥ. The verse can be understood to mean either that they doubt anything had been sent at all (JJ) or that they question how a reminder could have been sent to Ṣāliḥ rather than to another whom they would have considered more worthy. In this latter sense, it is similar to the words of the Quraysh in 43:31: And they said, “Why was this Quran not sent down to a great man from one of the two towns?” (see also 50:2).

26 On the morrow they will know who is the insolent liar.

26 The people of Thamūd will know that they were wrong to deny Ṣāliḥ and will be punished for their denial. Arabic morphology allows that, without diacritical markers, they will know could instead be read, “you will know.” When read in this manner, it is taken as Ṣāliḥ’s address to the disbelievers among his people (Bg).

27 Behold! We are sending the she-camel as a trial for them; so watch them and be patient.

27 This verse represents God's address to Ṣāliḥ. The she-camel is said to have been a sign from God brought forth from a mountain or a rock (JJ), regarding which Ṣāliḥ said, This she-camel of God is a sign unto you. Leave her to graze freely on God's earth, and cause her no harm, lest a painful punishment seize you (7:73; see also 11:64).

28 And inform them that the water is to be divided among them—each share of drink equitably proportioned.

29 Then they called their companion, and he took in hand and hamstrung [her].

28–29 In 26:155 Ṣāliḥ says, This is a she-camel; she shall have drink and you shall drink on an appointed day. Both instances are understood to mean that God had ordered that the people could drink of the water one day and the she-camel the next. At first they followed this allotment, but then grew impatient and called their companion, whom some say was named Qudār ibn Sālaf, who drew his sword and smote her (Bg, JJ); see 11:64–65c. Took in hand is understood to mean that he undertook the task of hamstringing the she-camel (Bḍ, Q, R, Sh, Z), or that he took a sword in hand (Bḍ, JJ, Z), or that he took the she-camel in hand (R, Ṭ, Z).

30 How, then, were My Punishment and My warnings?

30 See 54:16c.

31 Truly We sent upon them a single cry, and they were like a fence maker's dry sticks.

31 Here a single cry indicates the instantaneous and overwhelming nature of the punishment that came upon the Thamūd people, though elsewhere it refers to the herald of the end of time and the Final Judgment for all humanity (see 36:29; 36:49; 37:19; 38:15; 79:13). The Thamūd people are also said to have been destroyed by the Cry in 11:67, a thunderbolt in 41:13 and 51:44, and an earthquake in 7:78. These are not contradictory accounts, but different aspects of the overwhelming (ṭāghiyah) that is said to befall them in 69:5.

32 And indeed We have made the Quran easy to remember; so is there any who remembers?

32 See 54:17c; 54:22c.

33 The people of Lot denied the warnings.

33–38 In the Quran Lot has greater status than in the Bible; the story of Lot and his people is discussed most extensively in 11:77–83; see also 7:80–84; 15:57–77; 21:74–75; 26:160–73; 27:54–58; 29:28–35; 37:133–38.

34 Truly We sent upon them a torrent of stones, save the family of Lot, whom We delivered at dawn

34 Elsewhere the torrent is described as a rain of stones of baked clay (11:82; 15:74). All members of Lot's family were saved from this punishment except his wife (cf. 7:83; 11:81; 15:59–60; 26:170–71; 27:57; 29:32; Genesis 19:26). At dawn can be taken to describe when the stones were sent or when Lot and his family were saved.

35 as a blessing from Us. Thus do We requite whosoever gives thanks.

36 And indeed he had warned them of Our assault, but they disputed the warnings.

36 When warned by Lot in various ways, his people would say, Bring us God's Punishment if you are among the truthful (29:29).

37 They had sought to lure him from his guests; so We blotted out their eyes. So taste My Punishment and My warnings!

37 The people of Lot's town had sought to have sexual relations with his guests, who, unbeknownst to Lot and the people, were angels sent by God; some say they were the Archangels Gabriel, Michael, and Seraphiel (IK). Lot sought to dissuade and warn his people, saying, Among all creatures do you come unto males, leaving your spouses your Lord created for you? Nay, but you are a transgressing people (26:165; see also 7:80–81; 27:54–55; 29:29). But as they would not heed his warning, they were destroyed the next day (see 11:82–83c). According to some, blotted out their eyes refers to the blinding of the crowd (some say by the tips of Gabriel's wings striking their eyes [IK]), so that they could not violate Lot's guests, as in Genesis 19:11: "And they struck with blindness the men who were at the door of the house, both small and great, so that they were unable to find the door." It can also be understood to mean that, due to their sinful natures, God deprived them of understanding and insight, as in 2:7: Upon their eyes is a covering, and theirs is a great punishment (see also 47:23c).

38 And indeed an enduring punishment greeted them early in the morning.

38 Their punishment is described most emphatically in 26:173 (cf. 27:58), And We rained a rain upon them. Evil was the rain of those who were warned! (see also 7:84c; 29:34), and is said to have been manifest as stones of baked clay (11:82; 15:74) or a torrent of stones (54:34) that rained down upon them.

39 So taste My Punishment and My warnings!

39 This verse and v. 37 are two of over a dozen verses where God tells the disbelievers, Taste My Punishment or taste the punishment (see 3:106, 181; 4:56; 6:30; 7:39; 8:35, 50; 10:52; 22:22; 32:14, 20; 34:42; 46:34). In this context, the first instance of this phrase, in v. 37, can be understood as a reference to their punishment in this world, and the second, in v. 39, as a reference to their punishment in the next world. Alternately, the first can be seen as God’s address to the people of Lot at the time of their destruction and the second can be seen as God’s warning to the disbelievers among the Quraysh and by extension to disbelievers in general.

40 And indeed We have made the Quran easy to remember; so is there any who remembers?

40 See 54:17c; 54:22c.

41 And indeed the warnings came unto the House of Pharaoh.

42 They denied Our signs—all of them; so We seized them with the seizing of One Mighty, Omnipotent.

41–42 Although the story of Pharaoh is given only two lines here, the account of Moses and Pharaoh is the most extensive account provided in the entire Quran; for more detailed accounts of Moses’ mission to Pharaoh, see 7:103–55; 10:75–93; 20:9–97; 26:10–66; 28:3–46. Shorter accounts pertaining to particular aspects of Moses’ mission can be found in 2:49–61; 5:20–26; 17:101–4; 27:7–14; 40:23–45; 44:17–31; 51:38–40; 79:15–25.

43 Are your disbelievers better than those? Or have you some exemption in the scriptures?

43 This verse asks whether the disbelievers among the Quraysh are somehow exempt from the punishments that afflicted the ʿĀd, the Thamūd, and the peoples of Lot and Pharaoh, mentioned in this sūrah (Ṭ, Z). Better can be taken to mean better generally or “better in strength” (Z). The second sentence of this verse asks whether there is something in previous revelations that would excuse their rejection of Muhammad (Sh, T, Z). It is somewhat similar to 68:37–39: Or do you have a book wherein you learn that you shall have therein whatsoever you choose? Or do you have oaths binding upon Us until the Day of Resurrection that you shall have whatever you ordain? (see also, e.g., 6:148; 37:156–57; 52:37–38; 68:47).

④④ Or do they say, “We are a host victorious!”?

④④ We are a host victorious! was the response of the Quraysh to the Prophet’s call. It implies that they had great faith in their strength and numbers, thinking nothing could overcome them, a folly attributed to many peoples of the past, such as the tribe of ʿĀd in 41:15: As for ʿĀd, they waxed arrogant upon the earth without right and said, “Who is greater than us in strength?” Have they not considered that God, Who created them, is greater than them in strength? Yet they rejected Our signs (see also 9:69; 28:78; 30:9; 35:44; 40:21, 82; 47:13).

④⑤ The whole shall be routed and they will turn [their] backs.

④⑥ Nay! The Hour is their tryst, and the Hour is more calamitous and more bitter.

④⑤–④⑥ Interpreted in historical context, the whole indicates all the disbelievers among the Quraysh (Sh). It is reported that at the Battle of Badr the Prophet came forth from his tent reciting these verses. Some thus interpret them as prophesying the future victory of the Muslims over the Quraysh (Bg, T). But they can also be seen more generally to indicate the triumph of truth over falsehood, as in 17:81: Say, “Truth has come, and falsehood has vanished. Truly falsehood is ever vanishing.” While v. 45 refers to defeat in this world, v. 46 is understood as a reference to punishment in the next, which shall be more calamitous and more bitter than the destruction and humiliation experienced in this life (Bg, Sh).

47 Truly the guilty are astray and mad.

47–49 These verses are reported to have been revealed in connection with a dispute between the Prophet and the idolaters among the Quraysh concerning God’s “measuring out” (qadar; IK, Q, R, T), which refers to the manner in which God gives or withholds provision for all of creation.

47 Mad translates su^cur, which is related to sa^cir, or blaze, a word used throughout the Quran to refer to the punishment of Hell. Some thus interpret this verse to mean that the disbelievers are “burning (yas^cur) in the Fire” (Bg, Z). They are thus astray in this world and “in the blaze” in the next (Z).

48 On the Day they are dragged upon their faces into the Fire, “Taste the touch of Saqar.”

48 Dragged upon their faces likely indicates punishment for various iniquities. In this vein, the Prophet is reported to have said, “Are people thrown into Hell and dragged up on their faces [or by their nostrils] for anything other than the harvest of their tongues?” Other verses indicate that the disbelievers will be gathered upon their faces (17:97; 25:34) and that their faces will be struck by the angels (8:50; 47:27) and by the Fire (23:104) and covered with dark patches of night (10:27) or with fire (14:50); see also 21:39; 27:90; 33:66. Saqar is said to be either a proper name of Hell or an attribute of it (see 74:26–28c). To taste its touch is thus to taste the punishment of the Fire; see 54:39c.

49 Truly We have created everything according to a measure.

49 This verse can be understood as a straightforward affirmation of God’s creation of all things (M). In relation to the preceding verses, it can also be understood as a simple statement that God decreed or “measured” a punishment for the disbelievers and cast them into Saqar. But due to the Prophet’s own debate with those who denied God’s qadar, or Decree, this verse became a focal point for discussing the relation between Divine determinism and human choice. Qadar, or “measuring out,” is also said to be one of the tenets of faith, regarding which the Prophet said, “No servant of God truly believes until he believes in qadar, its good and evil, and until he realizes that what has befallen him was not going to miss him and what missed him was not going to befall him.”

The earliest determinists, known as the Jabariyyah (lit. “Compulsionists”), held that all human acts were determined by God, including acts of belief, disbelief, good, and evil. From their perspective, 54:49 supports the position that God has predetermined all events, especially when read in light of 76:30: And you do not will but that God wills. Truly God is Knowing, Wise (cf. 81:29). When considering this verse, those who favored a greater degree of human choice or self-determination preferred to focus upon the manner in which God has created everything with precision or “in a perfect measure.” This theological debate correlates with the debate over how this verse should be read. As translated, everything (kull shayʿ) is read in the accusative (kulla shayʿin), the reading preferred by most commentators and found in all schools of recitation, but one that is more problematic from a grammatical perspective. If, however, kull shayʿ is read in the nominative (kullu shayʿin), the verse could be understood to mean, “Everything that We have created is according to a measure.” This interpretation would still allow one to see the verse as a declaration of God’s Omnipotence and of Divine determinism, especially when read in light of the phrase found in 13:16 and 39:62: God is the Creator of all things (see also 40:62). But it could also lead one to think that there might be things that God has not created that are not “according to [His] measure.” This reading would then allow for the possibility that human beings create actions of their own free will, an understanding that would support both the early Qadarite theological trend and the Muʿtazilite school of theology. It is thus reported that adherents of both of these theologies held fast to the reading of kull shayʿ in the nominative (It).

The Qadarites held that human beings are free and are the authors of their own acts, but this does not contravene God’s Omnipotence. The Muʿtazilites held that human beings are fully responsible for the creation of their evil deeds and that God simply punishes them accordingly, a position that seeks to absolve a just and merciful God from the apparent injustice of creating the very acts for which He then punishes their perpetrators. The Ashʿarite school of theology finds both of these positions abhorrent, because each would posit a creative agent outside of God. At the same time, they find the Jabarite position to be monstrously fatalistic, reducing human beings to passive agents with no will of their own. Ashʿarite theologians thus sought to explain that God is Just and Merciful and does not punish people for things for which they are not responsible, and that human beings bear responsibility for their actions but are not the creators of these actions, since from their perspective God must be the Creator of all human acts, as He is the Creator of all things (40:62).

In their efforts to maintain God's Omnipotence and explain how human beings could have effective agency in performing their acts, Ash'arite theologians make a distinction between the creation of acts and their acquisition (kasb). From this perspective, although human beings cannot create anything because God creates everything that exists or that comes to pass, human beings nonetheless choose among the options that God has created and thus freely choose to engage in or play out the acts that God has created, thereby acquiring the acts.

Commentators who incline more toward the Mu'tazilite position and favor a greater degree of free will than that allowed for by the Ash'arite position do not argue that v. 49 supports their view, but focus instead upon the Divine Wisdom behind the precise measure with which the universe is created (Ṭs, Z). The Mu'tazilite theologian al-Zamakhsharī writes, "We have created everything in a determined measure, ordered according to that which wisdom has decreed, or in a measure written on the Tablet [see 85:22c], known [to God] before its existence (kawn); We knew its state and its duration (zamān).” Likewise, the Shiite theologian al-Ṭabrisī emphasizes that this verse indicates that nothing has been created haphazardly, but only as decreed by Divine Wisdom. Everything is thus created according to “a known measure” and for a known purpose: “the tongue for speech, the hand for striking, the eye for seeing, the ear for hearing, the stomach for food; and if anything increased or decreased from what We measured, then the objective [of creation] would not be attained.”

Many who are more closely aligned with the Ash'arite position also see this verse as an expression of the Divine Wisdom according to which everything is “measured” (Aj, Āl) and as an affirmation that everything is inscribed on the Preserved Tablet (85:22; IJ). But many also argue that although human beings have some effective agency in bringing about their acts through acquisition, or kasb, they are not able to create and determine, or “measure,” their own actions, and they see vv. 47–48 as a criticism of those who adhered to such positions. Along these lines they cite several ahādīth, among them: “Every community has its Magians, and the Magians of my community are those who say that there is no measuring out (qadar)” (Āl, IK, Q, R). In elaborating upon their understanding of Divine determinism, Ash'arites identify two stages or aspects of the Divine Decree: the first they call qaḍā', which indicates the pretemporal Decree of God; the second they call qadar, which indicates the Divine Decree that brings things into existence in the temporal order, rendering to each its measure and limit. Qaḍā' pertains to the Divine Essence and is neither created nor finite, while qadar is an attribute of Divine Action that is contingent by virtue of its association with the contingencies it brings forth. Drawing upon this distinction, al-Rāzī argues against the philosophical notion that it is necessary for things to be created in the manner that they are created, saying, “Qadā” is what pertains to [God’s] Knowledge, while qadar is what pertains to [God’s] Will. Therefore, His saying, Truly We have created everything according to a measure, means by His Measure with His Will, and not, as they claim, that it is ‘necessitated.’”

Following upon the Ash‘arite position, some see this verse as an indication that one must put all of one’s trust in God. Thus Ibn ‘Ajībah writes: “It washes the heart of sorrows and of all that is other [than God], and relieves the servant from the toil of [trying to] arrange and choose, because when a person of intellect knows with the knowledge of certainty [see 102:5c] that his affairs and his states and all that comes upon him has been embraced by the measure, with nothing preceding or coming after its [measured] moment, he entrusts his affair to God [an allusion to 40:44], surrenders to the decrees (aḥkām) of his Master, and meets all that comes upon him with contentment (riḍā) and acceptance, be it good or evil.” In this same vein, the commentator al-Maybudī writes of this verse, “One who is deprived [of God], though he may have found everything, has found nothing, whereas one who has found Him, though he may have found nothing, has found everything.”

For many Sufi thinkers, such as those of the school of Ibn ‘Arabī and Mullā Ṣadrā, human choice and Divine determinism are understood in light of the teaching that human beings bear within them the potential to know the names, all of them (2:31) and “God created humankind in His image” (Genesis 1:27), and among God’s Names are al-Murīd (He Who Wills or Wishes) and al-Qadīr (the Powerful, the Possessor of Power). Human freedom is itself a Divine creation, and because of this could not be in ultimate conflict with God’s creative act. Thus, unlike some schools of Islamic theology (kalām) that see between God and human beings two competing wills, Sufis see the human will as a manifestation of God’s own Power and Will. Rather than seeing the question of human free will as a question merely of choices between options on a particular plane of reality, Sufis have seen free will ultimately as a characteristic pertaining to a particular state of being. Only insofar as human beings rise above their egotistical desires and submit the will that pertains to their own individuality to God do they realize true freedom in God. But those who attain this true freedom only will what God wills, because they exist in a state of perfect submission to the good and thus also display the attributes of something that is, as it were, totally determined. This is exemplified in a paradox discussed by Ibn ‘Arabī, who says that those saints (awliyā’) most capable of performing miracles are the least likely to do so, since they are most content with God’s Will for the world and themselves. Moreover, qadar, or one’s “lot,” is seen, in the ultimate sense, as a manifestation of one’s own nature or essence as known by God before one’s creation. Since God transcends the dualities of the world, He transcends the duality between free will and determinism, but insofar as human beings are free, they were already free in God by virtue of God's breathing into the first human being of His Spirit (see 32:9c).

50 And Our Command is naught but one, like the blinking of an eye.

50 There is no difference between God's willing a thing to be and its coming into being, nor is there a time lag between the two, for when He decrees a thing, He only says to it, "Be!" and it is (2:117; 3:47; 16:40; 19:35; 40:68; see also 36:82; Z). It is thus instantaneous, like the blinking of an eye. In the context of this sūrah, this verse also indicates the manner in which God's Punishment can come about instantaneously.

51 We have indeed destroyed the likes of you; so is there any who remembers?

51 The destruction of former peoples is called upon throughout the Quran as a warning to disbelievers (see, e.g., 6:6c; 7:4; 18:59; 19:74, 98; 20:128; 22:45; 28:58; 32:26; 50:36). For the manner in which such destruction serves as a reminder or admonition for any who remembers, see especially 32:26c.

52 Everything that they have done is in the scriptures;

52 This verse is understood by most commentators to refer to the recording of people's deeds in scrolls (JJ, Ṭ), thus meaning that God knows all that they have done (18:49c; 84:7–10c). When scriptures is understood as a reference to Divine revelations, this verse refers to God's warnings in all of the previous revelations that people failed to heed and for which they are punished. As God's Mercy encompasses all things (7:156) and His Mercy precedes His Wrath, God provides every human collectivity with both guidance and warnings of what will befall them if they do not follow His Guidance before He brings His Wrath upon them, as in

28:59: And thy Lord never destroys towns until He sends a messenger to their mother city to recite unto them Our signs. And We never destroy towns, save when their people are wrongdoers (see also 6:131–32; 10:13; 15:4; 26:208–9).

53 everything small and great is inscribed.

53 For a more extended discussion of the nature of the deeds inscribed, see commentary on 18:49: And the Book will be set down. Then thou wilt see the guilty fearful of what is in it. And they will say, “Oh, woe unto us! What a book this is! It leaves out nothing, small or great, save that it has taken account thereof.” And they find present [therein] whatsoever they did.
