Truly your Lord is God, Who created the heavens and the earth in six days, then mounted the Throne. He causes the night to cover the day, which pursues it swiftly; and the sun, the moon, and the stars are made subservient by His Command. Do not creation and command belong to Him? Blessed is God, Lord of the worlds! ﴿55﴾ Call upon your Lord humbly and in secret. Truly He loves not the transgressors. ﴿56﴾ And work not corruption upon the earth after it has been set aright, but call upon Him in fear and in hope. Surely the Mercy of God is ever nigh unto the virtuous. ﴿57﴾ He it is Who sends the winds as glad tidings ahead of His Mercy, so that when they bear heavy-laden clouds, We may drive them toward a land that is dead, and send down water upon it, and thereby bring forth every kind of fruit. Thus shall We bring forth the dead, that haply you may remember. ﴿58﴾ As for the good land, its vegetation comes forth by the leave of its Lord. And as for the bad, it comes forth but sparsely. Thus do We vary the signs for a people who give thanks. ﴿59﴾ Indeed, We sent Noah unto his people, and he said, “O my people! Worship God! You have no god other than Him. Truly I fear for you the punishment of a tremendous day!” ﴿60﴾ The notables among his people said, “Truly we think that you are in manifest error.” ﴿61﴾ He said, “O my people! There is no error in me, but rather I am a messenger from the Lord of the worlds. ﴿62﴾ I deliver unto you the messages of my Lord, and advise you sincerely, and I know from God what you know not. ﴿63﴾ Or do you marvel that a reminder from your Lord should come unto you by means of a man from among yourselves, so as to warn you, that you might be reverent, and that haply you may receive mercy?” ﴿64﴾ Yet they denied him. So We saved him and those who were with him in the Ark, and We drowned those who denied Our signs. Truly they were a blind people. ﴿65﴾ And unto ʿĀd, their brother, Hūd. He said, “O my people! Worship God! You have no god other than Him. Will you not be reverent?” ﴿66﴾ The notables among his people who disbelieved said, “Truly we think that you are foolish, and we consider you to be among the liars.” ﴿67﴾ He said, “O my people! There is no foolishness in me, but rather I am a messenger from the Lord of the worlds. ﴿68﴾ I deliver unto you the messages of my Lord, and truly I am a trustworthy adviser unto you. ⁶⁹ Or do you marvel that a reminder from your Lord should come to you by means of a man from among yourselves, so as to warn you? Remember when He made you vicegerents after the people of Noah, and increased you amply in stature. So remember the boons of God, that haply you may prosper.”

⁷⁰ They said, “Have you come unto us so that we may worship God alone, and leave aside what our fathers worshipped? Then bring upon us that wherewith you have threatened us, if you are truthful.” ⁷¹ He said, “Defilement and wrath have already come upon you from your Lord. Do you dispute with me over names that you have named—you and your fathers—for which God has sent down no authority? Then wait! Truly I am waiting along with you.” ⁷² So We saved him and those who were with him through a mercy from Us, and We cut off the last remnant of those who denied Our signs and were not believers. ⁷³ And unto Thamūd, their brother, Šāliḥ. He said, “O my people! Worship God! You have no god other than Him. There has come unto you a clear proof from your Lord. This she-camel of God is a sign unto you. Leave her to graze freely on God’s earth, and cause her no harm, lest a painful punishment seize you. ⁷⁴ Remember when He made you vicegerents after ʿĀd and settled you on the earth: you build castles for yourselves on the open plain and hew dwellings in the mountains. So remember the boons of God, and behave not wickedly upon the earth, working corruption.” ⁷⁵ The notables among his people who were arrogant said to those among them who believed and whom they deemed weak, “Do you know that Šāliḥ has been sent by his Lord?” They said, “Truly we believe in that wherewith he has been sent.” ⁷⁶ Those who were arrogant said, “Truly we believe not in that which you believe.” ⁷⁷ So they hamstrung the she-camel and insolently defied the Command of their Lord. And they said, “O Šāliḥ! Bring upon us that wherewith you have threatened us, if you are among those sent [by God].” ⁷⁸ So the earthquake seized them, and morning found them lying lifeless in their abode. ⁷⁹ So he turned away from them and said, “O my people! I indeed delivered unto you the message of my Lord, and advised you sincerely, but you love not sincere advisers.” ⁸⁰ And Lot, when he said to his people, “What! Do you commit an indecency such as none in the world committed before you? ﴿81﴾ Verily you come with desire unto men instead of women. Indeed, you are a prodigal people!” ﴿82﴾ And the reply of his people was but to say, “Expel them from your town! Truly they are a people who keep themselves pure.” ﴿83﴾ So We saved him and his family, except for his wife; she was among those who lagged behind. ﴿84﴾ And We sent down a rain upon them; so behold how the guilty fared in the end. ﴿85﴾ And unto Midian, their brother, Shu‘ayb. He said, “O my people! Worship God! You have no god other than Him. There has come unto you a clear proof from your Lord. So observe fully the measure and the balance and diminish not people’s goods, nor work corruption upon the earth after it has been set aright. That is better for you, if you are believers. ﴿86﴾ And do not lie in wait on every path, threatening and turning away those who believe in Him from the way of God, and seeking to make it crooked. And remember when you were few, and He made you many. And behold how the workers of corruption fared in the end! ﴿87﴾ If a group of you believe in that wherewith I have been sent, and a group of you believe not, then be patient till God shall judge between us, and He is the best of judges.” ﴿88﴾ The notables among his people who were arrogant said, “We shall surely expel you, O Shu‘ayb, and those who believe along with you from our town, unless you revert to our creed.” He said, “What! Even though we are unwilling? ﴿89﴾ We would be fabricating a lie against God were we to revert to your creed after God had delivered us from it. It is not for us to revert thereto unless God, our Lord, should will. Our Lord encompasses all things in knowledge. In God do we trust. Our Lord! Decide between us and our people in truth, and Thou art the best of deciders.” ﴿90﴾ The notables among his people who disbelieved said, “Verily if you follow Shu‘ayb, you shall surely be the losers.” ﴿91﴾ So the earthquake seized them, and morning found them lying lifeless in their abode. ﴿92﴾ Those who denied Shu‘ayb, it was as though they had never dwelt there. Those who denied Shu‘ayb, they themselves were the losers. ﴿93﴾ So he turned away from them and said, “O my people! I indeed delivered unto you the messages of my Lord, and advised you sincerely. So how can I grieve for a disbelieving people?” 94 We sent no prophet to a town but that We seized its people with misfortune and hardship, that haply they would humble themselves. 95 Then We replaced evil [circumstances] with good, till they multiplied and said, “Hardship and ease visited our fathers [as well].” Then We seized them suddenly, while they were unaware. 96 Had the people of the towns believed and been reverent, We would surely have opened unto them blessings from Heaven and earth. But they denied, so We seized them for that which they used to earn. 97 Did the people of the towns feel secure from Our Might coming upon them by night, while they were sleeping? 98 Or did the people of the towns feel secure from Our Might coming upon them in broad daylight, while they were playing? 99 Did they feel secure from God’s plotting? None feels secure from God’s plotting, save the people who are losers. 100 Does it not serve as guidance unto those who inherited the earth after its [earlier] inhabitants that, if We willed, We could smite them for their sins and set a seal upon their hearts such that they would not hear? 101 These are the towns whose stories We have recounted unto thee. Their messengers certainly brought them clear proofs, but they would not believe in what they had denied earlier. Thus does God set a seal upon the hearts of the disbelievers. 102 We did not find most of them [faithful to their] pact. Indeed, We found most of them to be iniquitous. 103 Then after them We sent Moses with Our signs unto Pharaoh and his notables, but they treated them wrongfully; so behold how the workers of corruption fared in the end. 104 And Moses said, “O Pharaoh! I am truly a messenger from the Lord of the worlds, 105 obligated to speak naught about God save the truth. I have brought you a clear proof from your Lord; so send forth with me the Children of Israel.” 106 He said, “If you have brought a sign, then bring it forth, if you are among the truthful.” 107 So he cast his staff and, behold, it was a serpent manifest. 108 And he drew forth his hand and, behold, it was white to the onlookers. 109 The notables among Pharaoh’s people said, “Truly this is a knowledgeable sorcerer. 110 He desires to expel you from your land; so what do you command?” 111 They said, “Put him and his brother off for a while, and send marshalers to the cities 112 to bring you every knowledgeable sorcerer.” 113 And the sorcerers came unto Pharaoh. They said, “We shall surely have a reward if it is we who are victorious.” 114 He said, “Yes, and indeed you shall be among those brought nigh.” 115 They said, “O Moses! either you cast, or we will be the ones who cast.” 116 He said, “Cast!” And when they cast, they bewitched the eyes of the people and struck them with awe, and they brought forth a mighty sorcery. 117 And We revealed unto Moses, “Cast thy staff!” And, behold, it devoured all their deceptions. 118 Thus the truth came to pass, and whatsoever they did was shown to be false. 119 Then and there they were vanquished and turned back, humbled. 120 And the sorcerers were cast down prostrate. 121 They said, “We believe in the Lord of the worlds, 122 the Lord of Moses and Aaron.” 123 Pharaoh said, “You believe in him before I grant you leave! This is surely a plot you have devised in the city, that you might expel its people therefrom. Soon you shall know. 124 I shall surely cut off your hands and your feet on alternate sides; then I shall surely crucify you all!” 125 They said, “Truly we turn unto our Lord. 126 You take vengeance upon us only because we believed in the signs of our Lord when they came unto us. Our Lord, shower us with patience, and let us die as submitters.” 127 The notables among Pharaoh’s people said, “Will you leave Moses and his people to work corruption in the land and to leave you and your gods?” He said, “We shall slay their sons and spare their women. Truly we are above them, dominant.” 128 Moses said unto his people, “Seek help from God and be patient. Truly the land belongs to God; He bequeaths it to whomsoever He will among His servants. And the end belongs to the reverent.” 129 They said, “We were persecuted before you came to us, and after you came to us.” He said, “It may be that your Lord will destroy your enemies and make you vicegerents upon the earth, that He may observe how you behave.” 130 And We indeed afflicted the House of Pharaoh with drought and a shortage of crops, that haply they would be reminded. 131 But whenever good came to them, they would say, “This is ours.” And if an evil befell them, they would consider it an ill omen on account of Moses and those who were with him. Nay, their ill omen lies with God, though most of them know not. 49 4 And they said, “Whatever sign you may bring to bewitch us thereby, we will not believe in you.” ⁶⁹ ⁶ So We sent against them the flood and the locusts, and the lice and the frogs and the blood—signs expounded. But they waxed arrogant, and they were a guilty people. ¹³⁴ And when the torment came down upon them, they said, “O Moses! Call upon your Lord for us by the covenant He has made with you. If you lift this torment from us, we shall surely believe in you, and we shall surely send forth the Children of Israel with you.” ¹³⁵ But when We lifted the torment from them, for a term they were to fulfill, behold, they reneged. ¹³⁶ So We took vengeance upon them and drowned them in the sea for their having denied Our signs and for having been heedless of them. ¹³⁷ And We bequeathed unto the people who were oppressed the eastern and western parts of the land that We blessed. And the most beautiful Word of thy Lord was fulfilled for the Children of Israel because they were patient. And We demolished all that Pharaoh and his people had wrought and that which they used to build. ¹³⁸ And We brought the Children of Israel across the sea, and they came upon a people clinging to their idols. They said, “O Moses! Make for us a god as they have gods.” He said, “Truly you are an ignorant people! ¹³⁹ As for these, what they practice shall perish, and vain is that which they used to do.” ¹⁴⁰ He said, “Shall I seek for you a god other than God, when He has favored you above the worlds?” ¹⁴¹ And when We saved you from the House of Pharaoh, who inflicted terrible punishment upon you, slaying your sons and sparing your women. And in this was a great trial from your Lord. ¹⁴² And We appointed for Moses thirty nights, and We completed them with ten [more]; thus was completed the appointed term of his Lord: forty nights. And Moses said unto his brother, Aaron, “Take my place among my people, set matters aright, and follow not the way of those who work corruption.” ¹⁴³ And when Moses came to Our appointed meeting and his Lord spoke unto him, he said, “My Lord, show me, that I might look upon Thee.” He said, “Thou shalt not see Me; but look upon the mountain: if it remains firm in its place, then thou wilt see Me.” And when his Lord manifested Himself to the mountain, He made it crumble to dust, and Moses fell down in a swoon. And when he recovered, he said, “Glory be to Thee! I turn unto Thee in repentance, and I am the first of the believers.” ¹⁴⁴ He said, “O Moses! Verily I have chosen thee above mankind through My messages and My speaking [unto thee]. So take that which I have given thee, and be among the thankful.” ¹⁴⁵ And We wrote for him upon the Tablets an exhortation concerning all things, and an elaboration of all things. “Take hold of them with strength, and command thy people to hold to the best of them. Soon I shall show thee the abode of the iniquitous.” ¹⁴⁶ I shall turn away from My signs those who wax arrogant upon the earth without right. Even if they were to see every sign, they would not believe in them. And if they were to see the way of sound judgment, they would not take it as a way, but if they were to see the way of error, they would take it as a way. That is because they denied Our signs and were heedless of them. ¹⁴⁷ As for those who deny Our signs and the meeting of the Hereafter, their deeds have come to naught. Are they recompensed for aught save that which they used to do? ¹⁴⁸ And while he was away, the people of Moses took a calf [made] from their ornaments—a body that lowed. Did they not consider that it spoke not unto them, nor guided them to any way? They took it up, and they were wrongdoers. ¹⁴⁹ And when they wrung their hands and saw that they had gone astray, they said, “If our Lord does not have mercy upon us and forgive us, we shall surely be among the losers!” ¹⁵⁰ And when Moses returned unto his people angry and aggrieved, he said, “How evil is the course you have followed after me! Would you hasten the Command of your Lord?” And he cast down the Tablets and seized his brother by the head, dragging him toward himself. He said, “Son of my mother! Truly the people deemed me weak, and they were about to kill me. So let not the enemies rejoice in my misfortune, and place me not with the wrongdoing people.” ¹⁵¹ He said, “My Lord, forgive me and my brother and bring us into Thy Mercy, for Thou art the most Merciful of the merciful.” ¹⁵² As for those who took up the calf, anger from their Lord shall seize them, and abasement in the life of this world. Thus do We recompense those who fabricate. ¹⁵³ But as for those who commit evil deeds and then repent thereafter and believe, surely, thereafter, thy

Lord is Forgiving, Merciful. ¹⁵⁴ And when the anger abated from Moses, he took up the Tablets; and in their inscription lay a guidance and a mercy for those who are in awe of their Lord. ¹⁵⁵ And Moses chose seventy men from his people for Our meeting. And when the earthquake seized them, he said, “My Lord! Hadst Thou willed, Thou wouldst have destroyed them and me beforehand. Wilt Thou destroy us for that which the fools among us have done? It is naught but Thy trial, whereby Thou leadest astray whomsoever Thou wilt, and guidest whomsoever Thou wilt. Thou art our Protector, so forgive us and have mercy upon us, and Thou art the best of forgivers! ¹⁵⁶ And prescribe good for us in the life of this world, and in the Hereafter; truly we have turned unto Thee.” He said, “I cause My Punishment to smite whomsoever I will, though My Mercy encompasses all things. I shall prescribe it for those who are reverent, and give alms, and those who believe in Our signs, ¹⁵⁷ those who follow the Messenger, the unlettered Prophet, whom they find inscribed in the Torah and the Gospel that is with them, who enjoins upon them what is right, and forbids them what is wrong, and makes good things lawful for them, and forbids them bad things, and relieves them of their burden and the shackles that were upon them. Thus those who believe in him, honor him, help him, and follow the light that has been sent down with him; it is they who shall prosper.” ¹⁵⁸ Say, “O mankind! Truly I am the Messenger of God unto you all—Him to Whom belongs Sovereignty over the heavens and the earth. There is no god but He. He gives life and causes death. So believe in God and His Messenger, the unlettered Prophet, who believes in God and His Words; and follow him, that haply you may be guided.” ¹⁵⁹ And among the people of Moses is a community that guides by the truth and does justice thereby. ¹⁶⁰ And We divided them into twelve tribes, communities. And We revealed to Moses, when his people asked him for water, “Strike the rock with thy staff.” Then twelve springs gushed forth from it: all the people knew their drinking place. And We shaded them with clouds, and sent down manna and quails upon them, “Eat of the good things We have provided you.” And they wronged Us not, but themselves did they wrong. ¹⁶¹ And when it was said unto them, “Settle in this town, and eat of that which is therein wheresoever you will, and say, ‘Remove the burden!’ And enter the gate prostrating, that We may forgive you your iniquities. We shall increase the virtuous.” ¹⁶² Then those among them who did wrong substituted a word other than that which had been said unto them. So We sent down upon them a torment from heaven for the wrong they used to do. ¹⁶³ And ask them about the town that was by the sea, when they transgressed the Sabbath. Their fish would come to them, surfacing on the day of their Sabbath, but on the day when they did not observe the Sabbath, they would not come to them. Thus did We try them for their having been iniquitous. ¹⁶⁴ And when a community among them said, “Why do you admonish a people whom God is about to destroy or punish with a severe punishment?” They said, “As an excuse before your Lord, and that haply they may be reverent.” ¹⁶⁵ And when they forgot that whereof they had been reminded, We saved those who forbade evil, and We seized those who did wrong with a dreadful punishment for their having committed iniquity. ¹⁶⁶ When they were insolent concerning that which they had been forbidden, We said unto them, “Be you apes, outcast.” ¹⁶⁷ And when thy Lord proclaimed that He would surely send against them, till the Day of Resurrection, those who would inflict upon them a terrible punishment. Truly thy Lord is swift in retribution, and truly He is Forgiving, Merciful. ¹⁶⁸ And We divided them into communities on the earth: some of them are righteous and some are otherwise. And We tried them with good things and with evil things, that haply they would return. ¹⁶⁹ Then a generation succeeded them who inherited the Book. They grasp the ephemerality of this lower world and say, “It will be forgiven us.” And if other ephemerality like them were to come their way, they would grasp them [also]. Did not the covenant of the Book commit them to say naught of God save the truth? They have studied what is in it. And the Abode of the Hereafter is better for those who are reverent. Will you not understand? ¹⁷⁰ As for those who cling to the Book and perform the prayer—surely We neglect not the reward of the workers of righteousness. ¹⁷¹ And when We lifted the mountain above them, as if it were a canopy, and they thought it would fall upon them, “Take hold of that which We have given you with strength, and remember what is therein, that haply you may be reverent.” 172 And when thy Lord took from the Children of Adam, from their loins, their progeny and made them bear witness concerning themselves, “Am I not your Lord?” they said, “Yea, we bear witness”—lest you should say on the Day of Resurrection, “Truly of this we were heedless,” 173 or lest you should say, “[It is] only that our fathers ascribed partners unto God beforehand, and we were their progeny after them. Wilt Thou destroy us for that which the falsifiers have done?” 174 Thus do We expound the signs, that haply they may return. 175 And recite unto them the account of the one to whom We gave Our signs, but he cast them off. So Satan made him his follower, and he became one of the deviant. 176 Had We willed, We would surely have elevated him thereby, but he inclined toward the earth and followed his caprice. Thus his parable is that of a dog: if you attack him, he lolls out his tongue, and if you leave him alone, he lolls out his tongue. That is the likeness of the people who deny Our signs. So recount the stories, that haply they may reflect. 177 Evil is the parable of the people who denied Our signs and wronged themselves. 178 Whomsoever God guides, he is rightly guided; and whomsoever He leads astray, it is they who are the losers. 179 We have indeed created for Hell many among jinn and men: they have hearts with which they understand not; they have eyes with which they see not; and they have ears with which they hear not. Such as these are like cattle. Nay, they are even further astray. It is they who are heedless. 180 Unto God belong the Most Beautiful Names; so call Him by them, and leave those who deviate with regard to His Names. Soon they shall be recompensed for that which they used to do. 181 And among those We have created, there is a community that guides by the truth and does justice thereby. 182 And as for those who deny Our signs, We shall lead them on little by little, whence they know not. 183 And I will grant them respite; truly My scheme is firm. 184 Have they not reflected? There is no madness in their companion. He is naught but a clear warner. 185 Or have they not contemplated the dominion of the heavens and the earth, and what things God has created, and that their term may already have drawn nigh? So in what discourse after this will they believe? ¹⁸⁶ Whomsoever God leads astray, no guide has he. And He leaves them to wander confused in their rebellion. ¹⁸⁷ They question thee about the Hour, when it will set in. Say, “Knowledge thereof lies only with my Lord. None save He shall manifest it at its proper time. Heavy shall it weigh upon the heavens and the earth. It shall not come upon you but suddenly.” They question thee as if thou knew it well. Say, “Knowledge thereof lies only with God, but most of mankind know not.” ¹⁸⁸ Say, “I have no power over what benefit or harm may come to me, save as God wills. Had I knowledge of the unseen, I would have acquired much good, and no evil would have touched me. I am naught save a warner and a bearer of glad tidings unto a people who believe. ¹⁸⁹ He it is Who created you from a single soul, and made from it its mate, that he might find rest in her. Then, when he covered her, she bore a light burden, and carried it about. But when she had grown heavy, they called upon God, their Lord, “If Thou givest us a healthy child, we shall surely be among the thankful.” ¹⁹⁰ Then, when He gave them a healthy child, they ascribed partners unto Him with regard to that which He had given them. Exalted is God above the partners they ascribe. ¹⁹¹ Do they ascribe as partners those who created naught and are themselves created? ¹⁹² Those who can neither help them, nor help themselves? ¹⁹³ And if you call them to guidance, they follow you not. It is the same for you whether you call them or whether you remain silent. ¹⁹⁴ Truly those whom they call upon apart from God are servants like you. So call upon them! Let them answer you, if you are truthful. ¹⁹⁵ Have they feet with which they walk? Have they hands with which they grasp? Have they eyes with which they perceive? Have they ears with which they hear? Say, “Call upon your partners, then scheme against me, and grant me no respite. ¹⁹⁶ Truly my Protector is God, Who sent down the Book, and He protects the righteous. ¹⁹⁷ And those whom you call upon apart from Him can neither help you, nor help themselves.” ¹⁹⁸ If thou callest them unto guidance, they hear not. Thou seest them looking upon thee, but they see not. ¹⁹⁹ Take to pardoning, and enjoin right, and turn away from the ignorant. ²⁰⁰ And should a temptation from Satan provoke thee, seek refuge in God. Truly He is Hearing, Knowing. (201) Truly those who are reverent, when they are touched by a visitation from Satan, they remember; then behold, they see. (202) But as for their brethren, they draw them ever further into error, and then they cease not. (203) And when thou bringest them not a sign, they say, “Why do you not choose it?” Say, “I only follow that which is revealed unto me from my Lord. These are insights from your Lord, and a guidance and a mercy for a people who believe.” (204) And when the Quran is recited, hearken unto it, and listen, that haply you may receive mercy. (205) And remember thy Lord within thy soul, humbly and in awe, being not loud of voice, in the morning and the evening, and be not among those who are heedless. (206) Surely those who are with thy Lord are not too arrogant to worship Him. And they glorify Him, and prostrate unto Him.

Commentary

① Alif. Lām. Mīm. Şād.

1 The four Arabic letters at the beginning of this sūrah are among the “separated letters” (al-muqattaʿāt) found at the beginning of twenty-nine sūrahs. Among them, this is the only sūrah that begins with these particular letters. Although the meaning of these letters is considered ambiguous by many commentators, some have speculated that the letters at the beginning of this sūrah may be a Name of God, that they stand for the “greatest Name of God,” or that they are a name for the Quran itself (Ṭ). For a fuller discussion of the separated letters, see 2:1c.

2 As with most instances of the “separated letters,” those in v. 1 are immediately followed by a mention of the Book, meaning the Quran, or perhaps this sūrah in particular (R, Z). Let there be no constriction in thy breast because of it is addressed to the Prophet, indicating that he should feel no doubt (Ṭ) or anxiety over proclaiming the Quran, for the Book was sent down so that the Prophet might warn thereby (R, Ṭ). The doubt or anxiety the Prophet might experience would not be about the truth of the revelation, but rather about the response he might receive from his people when he “warns them thereby.” Reminder (dhikrā) is used here to refer to the Quran specifically (see also 20:3; 36:69), although it is used elsewhere to refer to various kinds of Divine reminders, and in 40:54 it is used to describe the scripture given to Moses.

or obey (JJ) any other protectors apart from God is similar to those in several other verses, including those that state that one has no protector other than God (e.g., 6:51; 11:20; 13:11; 18:26; 29:22; 32:4) and those that mention the disbelievers taking idols (2:257) or satans (7:30; 18:50) as their protectors (R, Z). The protectors here might also be a reference to the early Companions' other associates and friends who would incite them to polytheism and idolatry (Ṭ, Z). See also 29:41: The parable of those who take protectors apart from God is that of the spider that makes a house. Truly the frailest of houses is the spider's house, if they but knew. The phrase follow not any protectors apart from Him might also be rendered "follow not any protectors apart from it" meaning, apart from that which has been sent down unto you (R, Z). Little do you reflect is a rebuke also found in 27:62; 40:58; 69:42; see 69:41–42c.

4–5 Towns destroyed for their wrongdoing are mentioned by way of warning throughout the Quran, and vv. 59–136 of this sūrah contain the first of several lengthy passages in the Quran that recount the fate of successive disbelieving towns or cities (here beginning with the people of Noah and ending with the people of Pharaoh) who rejected their messengers; other accounts of the destroyed towns can be found in 11:25–100; 26:105–89; 27:45–58; 54:9–42. That God's punishment came upon them by night, or while they took their ease at midday means that once God has warned people through His messengers, Divine chastisement for those who reject the message may come not only after death, but also in this world at any time, and it may come without further warning (cf. v. 97). The Quran sometimes presents disbelievers as denying or excusing their error once they have been called to account (4:97; 6:23–24; 16:28) or admitting their wrongdoing after it is too late for repentance (21:46; 23:106; 26:97; 40:85; 68:29–31; 74:43–47).

⑥ Then We shall surely question those unto whom Our message was sent, and We shall surely question the messengers.

6–7 After the punishment has come, those who were the recipients of God’s message—that is, revelation and particularly the prophetic warning—will be questioned about their response (JJ, Ṭ). Although several verses mention that people will be questioned at the Final Judgment (16:56, 93; 17:36; 29:13; 43:44), elsewhere the Quran states that the guilty will not be questioned about their sins (28:78) and that on that Day no man shall be questioned as to his sins, nor shall any jinn (55:39). Al-Rāzī resolves this apparent contradiction by asserting that although people will not be questioned regarding their actions as such—for God already has knowledge of their actions, which are also already recorded in the book of their deeds that they will each receive in the Hereafter (see, e.g., 17:71; 69:19)—they will be questioned about why they have done these evil deeds and about what turned them away from good ones (R). Commentators also note that the questioning in v. 6 is done as a means of rebuke (R, Ṭ, Z). The messengers will also be questioned, but only about their delivery of the message (JJ, Ṭ), for the Quran indicates that the duty of the Prophet (as with all prophets) is simply to deliver the message (3:20; 5:92, 99; 13:40; 16:35, 82; 29:18); the reaction of the people to the message is a matter beyond the Prophet’s control and thus something for which he is not accountable.

After questioning the people about their response to His messages and warnings and the prophets’ delivery thereof, God shall recount to them their deeds with knowledge, since He has knowledge of both their inward and outward, public and private acts (Z). In a ḥadīth the Prophet says, “There is not one of you to whom his Lord will not speak without an interpreter between them on the Day of Resurrection. And He will say to him, ‘Do you remember the day on which you did this and did that?’ so that He may remind him of what he did in the world” (Ṭ). In many verses throughout the Quran, it is said that on the Day of Judgment God will “inform” people about their actions in this life; see 5:14, 105; 6:60, 108, 159; 9:94, 105; 10:23; 24:64; 29:8; 31:15, 23; 39:7; 41:50; 58:6–7; 62:8; 64:7; 75:13. If God’s recounting of people’s earthly deeds indicates His Omniscience, the subsequent statement that God was never absent indicates His Omnipresence and Immanence. See also 57:4: And He is with you wheresoever you are, and God sees whatsoever you do.

8 And the weighing on that Day is true. So those whose balance is heavy, it is they who shall prosper.

9 And as for those whose balance is light, it is they who have ruined their souls by having treated Our signs wrongfully.

8–9 The weighing on that Day refers to the “weighing” of every individual’s deeds and the judgment rendered upon them on the Last Day. The “weighing” is true in that it is just (Ṭ). The balance is heavy for those who have accumulated many good deeds or for those whose good deeds outweigh bad ones (Ṭ), while the balance is light (v. 9) for those whose evil deeds have outweighed good ones. A ḥadīth says, “Nothing is heavier in the balance than good character (ḥusn al-khuluq)” (Ṭ); and another indicates that belief in the One God and in the prophethood of Muhammad outweighs even a vast record of error and sin (R).

The image of a balance weighing good and evil deeds is used in other Quranic passages as a metaphor for Divine Judgment (21:47; 23:102–3; 101:6–9). This image is consistent with repeated Quranic injunctions to weigh with justice and integrity in commercial transactions (cf. 6:152; 7:85; 11:84–85; 17:35; 26:182–83; 55:8–9) as well as with the larger Quranic theme that God creates all things “in due balance” and thus “sets [or sends down] the balance” (al-mīzān) for everything in the created order (15:18; 42:17; 55:7; 57:25). When considered together with these other Quranic themes, the representation of judgment as the weighing of deeds in a balance suggests the existence of a universal “balance” that is in the nature of all things in the cosmos, forming the basis of just and equitable human transactions in this world and according to which all human actions will be measured and recompensed in the next.

Like the questioning of individuals mentioned in v. 6, the weighing of deeds in scales should not be understood to mean that God needs a source of information or judgment outside Himself in order to know how individual human beings should be judged. Rather, it is intended to serve as a form of rebuke that forces wrongdoers to acknowledge their wrongdoing and surrender all attempts to excuse their actions (Z); the “balance” also serves to assure human beings that they have not been wronged, since all deeds are weighed according to the same scale.

10 And We have indeed established you upon the earth and placed means of livelihood for you therein. Little do you give thanks!

10 This verse is addressed to people generally. God has established (makkannā) them upon the earth may mean that He has given them a dwelling place on the earth (Ṭ; cf. 2:36; 6:98; 7:24), but also that He has given or delegated to them a certain power in the world (JJ). This verse serves as an introduction to the story of Adam’s creation and fall that immediately follows, and at the end of two separate Quranic accounts of this same incident God mentions that He is establishing a dwelling for human beings on the earth (2:36; 7:24).

11 Indeed, We created you, then We formed you, then We said unto the angels, “Prostrate yourselves before Adam.” And they all prostrated, save Iblīs; he was not among those who prostrated.

11–25 The narrative in these verses represents the second account (in the textual order of the Quran) of Adam’s creation, temptation, and banishment; the first account is found in 2:30–39, and later accounts in 17:61–65 and 20:115–24. See also 15:28–43 and 38:71–85, where a similar account is told of the creation and fall of the first human being, but without specific reference to Adam.

11 We created you, then We formed you is addressed to all human beings, who are considered to have been originally created along with Adam as the seed in his loins. As such, all human beings can be understood as having participated in the events of the narrative that follows and in the nobility God bestows upon Adam, and are thus subject to the commands and the warnings issued to him. See v. 172, where all human beings bear witness to God’s Lordship in a pretemporal covenant: And when thy Lord took from the Children of Adam, from their loins, their progeny and made them bear witness concerning themselves, “Am I not your Lord?” they said, “Yea, we bear witness.” In the present verse, We created you is understood as referring to mankind’s creation as a whole through the creation of Adam, and then We formed you refers to God’s shaping each individual, in either the womb of the mother or the loins of Adam (Ṭ, Th). Others considered these statements to refer directly to God’s creation and formation of Adam and only indirectly or representatively to the creation of the rest of mankind (R, Ṭ). For God’s having created the first human being from clay with His two Hands, see 38:71–75.

God’s command to the angels to bow to Adam is a key element in all accounts of Adam’s creation (2:34; 15:29; 17:61; 18:50; 20:116; 38:73–74) and can be understood to indicate that primordial human beings, or human beings before the fall, hold a station higher than that of the angels. Because in the Islamic tradition one should not bow to any being but God, commentators sometimes explain the command to prostrate before Adam as being merely symbolic in nature, or they say that the angels were ultimately bowing to God and taking Adam as their qiblah, or direction of prayer (R). It is also possible to prostrate in recognition of the spiritual greatness of another rather than as a form of worship; see 12:100, where Joseph’s entire family bows to him after being reunited with him. And they—that is, the angels—all prostrated save Iblīs. The phrasing of this statement, which suggests that Iblīs is among the angels, represents an important Quranic basis for the idea that Iblīs was himself an angel, although in 18:50, in an identical context, Iblīs is said to be of the jinn. This has given rise to a debate among Islamic scholars about whether Iblīs should be classified as an angel or a jinn; see 2:30c.

⑫ He said, “What prevented thee from prostrating when I commanded thee?” He said, “I am better than him. Thou hast created me from fire, while Thou hast created him from clay.”

12 Iblīs explains his refusal to prostrate before Adam by asserting his superiority over Adam on the basis of the argument that he was created from fire, which he perceives as a more powerful and nobler substance than clay, from which Adam was created. This argument also appears explicitly in 38:76 and is implicit in Iblīs’s dismissive remarks about Adam being made of clay in 15:33. Iblīs’s claim to have been created from fire lends some support to the view that Iblīs was a jinn, since God created jinn from smokeless fire (55:15). Iblīs’s argument, however, is self-serving and partial, in both senses of the term. Although fire may be luminous, subtle, and characterized by levity and lightness (Q, R, Ṭ), it is also associated with fickleness, recklessness, restlessness, and destructiveness—with grandeur, but also haughtiness, qualities consistent with the arrogance (see v. 13) that ultimately leads to Iblīs’s perdition (Q, Ṭ). By contrast, clay or earth is base, heavy, dark, and low lying (R), but also has the properties of gravity, forbearance, humility, and stability. It is these latter qualities in Adam that lead him to seek and receive God’s forgiveness after his disobedience (Q, Ṭ; see v. 23). Clay or earth can also serve as a place of prayer. Moreover, in the Islamic context it is the constituent elements of clay—namely, water and earth—that serve as a means of ritual purification (see 4:43; 5:6), not fire (unlike in Zoroastrianism, for example); and it is fire rather than clay that is a means of Divine punishment in the Hereafter (Q).

Iblīs’s argument, based purely on the original substance from which Adam was created, makes Iblīs blind to other ways in which God had ennobled Adam, such as creating him with His two Hands (38:75), breathing into him His Spirit (15:29; 32:9; 38:72), and endowing him with exceptional knowledge (2:31). Iblīs’s argument is based on analogy, an all too human form of reasoning, but he presents it in the face of the direct Divine command to prostrate before Adam. Analogical reasoning (qiyās) is one of the four major sources of law in Sunni schools of Islamic jurisprudence (although generally opposed or used only rarely in the Ḥanbalī school) and is used in the science of logic. Iblīs’s contention here, however, was likened by some to a form of qiyās, and it is sometimes cited as a reason to discount or reject qiyās as a source of law, notably in the Jaʿfarī Shiite school, with the argument that “the first to use analogical reasoning was Iblīs!” (Q, Ṭ). It may be argued, however, that the problem in the case of Iblīs stemmed not from his use of analogical reasoning as such, but rather from his having employed such reasoning in order to oppose or subvert a direct Divine command; those who accept analogical reasoning as a source of law always subordinate its authority to that of the Quran and Prophetic practice (sunnah; Q).

13 The command to Iblīs, Get down from it—that is, leave the Garden—is also found in 2:36 and 20:123, and in v. 24 a similar command is addressed to Adam and his wife as well. Iblīs is then chastised for “waxing arrogant” (see also 38:75). It is not for thee to wax arrogant here also suggests that the Garden itself is a place in which no arrogance can be tolerated, as it is a place for humility and obedience; some have suggested that Iblīs’s arrogance, even more than or in addition to his disobedience, was the cause of his exile from the Garden. This verse thus serves as a warning to human beings, who in several verses are accused of “waxing arrogant,” since this may bar one from the paradisaal Garden (Bḍ).

⑮ He said, “Truly thou art among those granted respite.”

14–15 Despite Iblīs’s banishment in v. 13, here he asks for, and is granted, respite from God, so that he will neither die nor be punished (Bḍ) till the Day they are resurrected, referring to the Day of universal Resurrection and Judgment (cf. 15:36–38; 17:62; 38:79–81).

⑩ He said, “Because Thou hast caused me to err, I shall surely lie in wait for them on Thy straight path.

16 Iblīs claims that God has caused him to err, and some commentators have considered Iblīs’s claim to represent a true statement, albeit one that does not excuse his actions (R, Z), and it may be seen as consistent with Quranic verses that seem to indicate that God “misleads” certain people or allows them to go astray (see, e.g., 2:26; 40:74; 74:31). Others held that God caused Iblīs to err only insofar as His command to Iblīs to prostrate before Adam uncovered Iblīs’s hidden pride and stubbornness (R). Nonetheless, this account of Iblīs raised profound questions for certain Islamic theologians and mystics. Some even suggested that in commanding Iblīs to prostrate before Adam, God put Iblīs in a deliberately impossible position—commanding Iblīs to do something He already knew he would not do. Since Iblīs, like all creatures, was charged with worshipping and obeying only God, prostrating before Adam would simultaneously represent an act of obedience to God’s command and—according to the thinking some commentators and mystics imaginatively attributed to Iblīs—a compromise of his obligation to worship only God, since prostrating before Adam would mean bowing to someone other than God (see Aj and R for brief references to this idea). The Baghdādī mystic al-Ḥallāj (d. 309/922) famously imagined Iblīs as a sincere lover of God who could not bring himself to bow to anyone other than Him, even on pain of his own ultimate destruction and eternal banishment from his Beloved.

After blaming God for his fall into error, Iblīs then vowed, I shall surely lie in wait for them, that is, for Adam and his progeny. Having despaired of God’s Mercy and Forgiveness and thus of ever regaining his position of proximity to God, Iblīs (whose name may be related to ablasa, meaning “to despair”) became intent on destroying the relationship between God and His newly privileged creature. It may be that Iblīs also blamed Adam or human beings as a whole for his fall into error and wished that he might be, in turn, the cause of their corruption, just as they, in his view, had been the cause of his (Z).

On Thy straight path means on the path of Islam, or true religion (R), indicating that Iblīs will seek to target those believing human beings seeking to live in obedience to God. The Quran mentions in several passages the various ways in which Iblīs, or Satan (Shayṭān, as he is called after his banishment), fulfills his vow to try to mislead human beings: “whispering” to them, as he does to Adam (7:20; 20:120); “commanding indecency” (2:268; 24:21); “deranging” them with his touch (2:275) or voice (17:64); “making them slip” (3:155); “sowing fear” (3:174); making them (false) promises (4:120; 14:22; 17:64); inciting evil between them (12:100; 17:53), sometimes through wine and gambling (5:90); making their evil deeds “seem fair unto them” (6:43; 8:48; 16:63; 27:24; 29:38); causing them to forget God and His commandments (6:68; 12:42; 18:63; 58:19); and even by attempting to alter revelation (22:52).

17 According to al-Rāzī, that Satan will come upon them from in front of them and from behind them may refer to his causing them to doubt the reality of Resurrection and Judgment and deluding them into thinking that this world is eternal; to his cutting off their desire for the Hereafter while increasing their desire for worldly things; or to his inciting them to disbelieve in the prophets of their time as well as those of the past. He will also come upon them . . . from their right and their left, meaning that he will corrupt them through inciting both disbelief and religious innovation (bid^cah).

In explaining why Satan comes at people from these four directions, but not from above or below them, al-Rāzī says that when Satan made this vow to mislead human beings, the angels’ hearts softened toward them, and they asked God how human beings could possibly escape Satan’s surrounding influence. God replied that two paths remained free and open to mankind, that above them and that below them, so that if they raised their hands in supplication to God or bowed their heads to the ground in humility, they would be forgiven for their sins (R). The Quran elsewhere indicates that Iblīs’s prediction Thou wilt not find most of them thankful is indeed accurate, for 34:20 states, And Iblīs did indeed prove his opinion of them to be true; and they followed him, save for a group among the believers. See also 10:60; 27:73; 34:13.

18 He said, “Go forth from it, disgraced and banished! Whosoever among them follows you, I shall surely fill Hell with you all.”

18 For similar presentations of the Divine reaction to Iblīs’s refusal to prostrate and his argument defending his refusal, see 15:34–35, 43; 17:63; 38:77–78, 85. Here, as in these verses, Iblīs is told Go forth from it—that is, from the Garden of Eden—indicating that he has been banished from the Garden, but not necessarily from the celestial realm altogether—hence Iblīs’s continued presence in Paradise, so that he is later able to tempt Adam and Eve while they are in the Garden (vv. 20–22). The command here, Go forth (ukhruj), is different from the command Get down (ahbitū), issued to Iblīs, Adam, and his wife collectively in v. 24, which marks more clearly their collective descent from the celestial realm. The Divine threat regarding those who follow Iblīs (Satan) that He shall surely fill Hell with you all suggests that Satan, along with the disbelieving and iniquitous human beings he misleads, will be punished in Hell together. From another perspective, however, Satan can be said to be already in Hell, which exists, in a sense, even now and not just in the future. Other verses, including 11:119; 32:13; 38:85 (this last similarly occurs in the context of a parallel account about Adam), also suggest that Satan, along with evil human beings and jinn, will be in Hell together.

19 “O Adam! Dwell thou and thy wife in the Garden, and eat from wheresoever you two will, but approach not this tree, lest you two be among the wrongdoers.”

19 Cf. 2:35 and commentary. Adam is here commanded to dwell . . . in the Garden along with his wife; that is, Eve, or Ḥawwā⁹ in Arabic, whose name does not appear in the Quran, although it is commonly used in the Islamic tradition. Until this point, the narrative has focused solely on Adam and Iblīs, but at this point Eve enters the account without any explicit mention of her own origin. Although it is clear in the Quran that Adam also represents all of humanity—male and female—in the account of his original creation, his vicegerency, his Divinely granted knowledge, and the prostration of the angels before him (cf. 2:30–34), the Quran does not explicitly discuss the process by which this primordial Adam is differentiated into the first male and female who “dwell in the Garden” after Iblīs’s expulsion from it. The Biblical story of Eve’s creation from Adam’s rib (Genesis 2:21–22), however, is referenced in the Ḥadīth, and many commentators have considered 4:1: O mankind! Reverence your Lord, Who created you from a single soul and from it created its mate, and from the two has spread abroad a multitude of men and women, an oblique reference to the creation of Eve from Adam (see 4:1c). In this case, however, Eve can be said to have been created not from Adam as male, but rather from the original androgynic Adam who is the prototype of all humanity, both male and female. Adam and his wife may eat any of the fruits of the Garden that they wish, but they are warned together not to approach this tree, which commentators variously describe as a wheat or grain plant, a fig tree, or a grapevine (see 2:35c). This tree is described as the Tree of Everlastingness in 20:120. The description of the tree distinguishes the Quranic account from the Biblical one, where the tree is identified as the “tree of the knowledge of good and evil” (Genesis 2:17).

20 Then Satan whispered to them, that he might expose to them that which was hidden from them of their nakedness. And he said, “Your Lord has only forbidden you this tree, lest you should become angels, or among those who abide [forever].”

20 Iblīs whispered to them, meaning either that he spoke to them openly in a low voice or that he spoke subtly to their hearts (R) in order to tempt them toward disobeying God (for Satan’s “whispering,” see 7:16c; 114:4c) and thereby to expose . . . their nakedness, which had been hidden from them. See also 20:118–19, where Adam and his wife are told that they will experience no nakedness, hunger, thirst, or heat in the Garden. Adam and Eve’s realization of their nakedness is also a key element of the corresponding Biblical narrative (see Genesis 3:7–11). Adam and Eve’s act of disobedience is also said to expose their nakedness in 20:121, but in the present context a more extensive discussion of human nakedness and the Divine gift of raiment and adornment to cover it follows in vv. 22, 26–27, 31–32. The nakedness of Adam and Eve is widely glossed as a reference to their private parts (JJ, Ṭ, Z); according to the early narrator and traditionist Wahb ibn Munabbih (d. early second/eighth century), Adam and Eve were initially cloaked in light, so that their private parts were concealed from them (Ṭ, Z). Nakedness translates saw²ah, which derives from a root meaning something that is bad or evil, indicating that exposing one’s nakedness, or private parts specifically, is corrupting for human beings (R), and many commentators see this verse as evidence that exposing one’s private parts (except in legally permitted contexts, such as marriage) is inherently sinful (R, Z).

Iblīs tempts Adam and his wife by suggesting falsely that God had forbidden them the fruit of the tree only because eating it would allow them to become angels and to abide [forever], that is, to be immortal; cf. 20:120: Then Satan whispered to him. He said, “O Adam! Shall I show thee the Tree of Everlastingness, and a kingdom that never decays?” Perhaps it is in reference to this kingdom that Iblīs promises them that a minority read lest you should become angels (malakayn) as “lest you should become sovereigns of the kingdom (malikayn)” (Ṭ). By suggesting the possibility of their becoming angels, or immortal, Satan raises in them false hopes and desires, a satanic tactic mentioned elsewhere; see 4:119–20.

22 Thus he lured them on through deception. And when they tasted of the tree, their nakedness was exposed to them, and they began to sew together the leaves of the Garden to cover themselves. And their Lord called out to them, “Did I not forbid you from that tree, and tell you that Satan is a manifest enemy unto you?”

21–22 Iblīs (Satan) misleads Adam and Eve, swearing to them—according to commentators, swearing by God (Ṭ, Th, Z)—that he is their sincere adviser, although in vv. 16–17 Iblīs expresses his evil intentions toward human beings, and in v. 22 indicates that God had already warned Adam and his wife that Satan was their manifest enemy (see also 2:168, 208; 6:142; 12:5; 17:53; 36:60; 43:62). Satan “lures” Adam and his wife through deception—that is, through delusion and false promises—and Satan promises . . . naught but delusion (17:64; see also 4:120). Delusion and “false promises” are Satan’s primary tactics—he is the Deluder in 31:33; 35:5; and 57:14—for he has been given no power to compel human beings, and no authority over those who are believing servants of God (see 15:42; 16:99; 17:65; 34:21).

And when they—that is, Adam and Eve—tasted of the tree, they suddenly became aware of their nakedness, because their act of disobedience had effectively removed the Divinely ordered cover or light (see 7:20c) that had been concealing it from them. Contrary to the Biblical account in Genesis 3, where Eve is both the immediate object of Satan’s temptation and the agent of temptation for Adam, in the Quranic account Adam and Eve are both directly tempted by Satan and succumb to his temptation together. Some commentators do mention reports that Eve had been tempted first (Ṭ, Th), likely on the basis of the Biblical account, but the Quranic account itself is clear that Eve is not the cause of Adam's fall; rather, the two participate equally in the transgression, the fall, and its consequences. That Adam and Eve are capable of disobeying God in Paradise indicates that they had free will even before the fall.

Adam and Eve's sudden awareness of their nakedness suggests their loss of innocence and evokes a profound sense of alienation, even from themselves; that is, from the honored station in which God had created them, worthy as they had been of the angels' prostration. This awareness prompts them to sew together leaves of the Garden to cover themselves, which serves as a scriptural basis for the Divine gift of raiment for human beings, as discussed in vv. 26–27, 31–32. The leaves they use are said by most traditional sources to be fig leaves (Ṭ, Z), as in the Biblical account, and several commentators mention that Adam attempted to hide from God out of shame, just as he does in Genesis 3:10. When God confronts Adam and Eve with their disobedience and their failure to heed His warning about Satan's enmity, it is said that He called out to them, an expression that indicates distance and alienation, in contrast to God's more intimate and direct address to Adam in v. 19 (Qu).

23 They said, “Our Lord! We have wronged ourselves. If Thou dost not forgive us and have Mercy upon us, we shall surely be among the losers.”

23 Adam and Eve immediately accept blame and seek forgiveness, saying, We have wronged ourselves (see also 2:37 and commentary). Their admission indicates an awareness that their disobedience has brought harm only to themselves, for human action does not harm God in the least (cf. 3:144, 176; 47:32). They have “wronged themselves” in that their disobedience has alienated them from their original nature and from God (see 7:21–22c), even before God Himself declares their banishment in v. 24, for God does not wrong human beings in the least, but rather human beings wrong themselves (10:44; see also, e.g., 3:117, 135; 4:97; 9:70; 37:113). The penitent attitude and words of Adam and his wife model the appropriate attitude one should have after one has sinned; see, for example, 4:64, If, when they had wronged themselves, they had but come to thee and sought forgiveness of God, and the Messenger had sought forgiveness for them, they would surely have found

God Relenting, Merciful. Despite their free admission of their own guilt, some commentators report that Adam added in his own defense that Satan had “sworn unto them by God” that he was their sincere adviser (v. 21), and that he (Adam) could not imagine that anyone would swear by God to perpetrate a lie (IK, Ṭ, Th, Z). Adam and his wife’s response to Divine chastisement contrasts sharply with that of Iblīs, who, when questioned about his act of disobedience, offers an argument in favor of his behavior (v. 12) and, when it is rejected, asks only for temporary respite from Divine punishment—not forgiveness—that he might take revenge upon human beings. Satan’s attitude is thus one of pride but also, it would seem, despair of Divine Forgiveness, whereas Adam’s is one of humility and hope in Divine Mercy.

24 He said, “Get down, each of you an enemy to the other! There will be for you on earth a dwelling place, and enjoyment for a while.”

25 He said, “Therein you shall live, and therein you shall die, and from there shall you be brought forth.”

24–25 God’s command Get down, each of you an enemy to the other! (cf. 2:36; 20:123) is widely considered to be addressed to Adam and Eve and their future progeny as well as to Iblīs, or Satan (Ṭ). The command is taken to indicate their banishment from the celestial realm altogether and is thus different from God’s earlier command banishing Iblīs from the Garden specifically (Get down from it, v. 13). Some Sufi commentators emphasize the providential and even merciful aspect of the fall of Adam and Eve, noting that their act of disobedience led to their assumption of vicegerency on the earth and offered them the opportunity to draw near to God once again—a drawing near that is only possible after the experience of distance and exile (Aj). Ibn ‘Aṭā’ Allāh, an eighth-/fourteenth-century Shādhilī Sufi master, said in his book al-Ḥikam (“Aphorisms”), “An act of disobedience that bequeaths humility and need is better than an act of obedience that bequeaths might and pride” (Aj; al-Ḥikam, no. 96). Similarly, the fall affords God the opportunity to manifest His Attribute of Forgiveness and offers Adam, and by extension all human beings, the possibility of manifesting humility and repentance and returning to God, through which they attain a degree of perfection that was not possible without the experience of the fall.

Dwelling place translates mustaqarr, meaning a settled or established place; for a fuller discussion of this term, see 6:98c. The idea that earthly life entails enjoyment for a while is repeated in various ways elsewhere in the Quran (see, e.g., 16:80; and 2:36, also in relation to Adam). The fleeting and limited enjoyment of this world, however, is frequently compared with the permanence and totality of one's enjoyment or punishment in the Hereafter (3:14; 4:77; 9:38; 10:70; 13:26; 20:131; 28:60; 40:39; 42:36), a reminder of which is provided by the reference to earthly life, earthly death, and resurrection (being brought forth) in v. 25.

26 O Children of Adam! We have indeed sent down upon you raiment to cover your nakedness, and rich adornment. But the raiment of reverence, that is better. This is among the signs of God, that haply they may remember.

26 That God sent down upon you raiment may mean that He provided human beings the means with which to make clothing to cover their nakedness (Ṭ), revealed to them after Adam's act of disobedience, or that He decreed or prescribed the wearing of clothing for mankind (Z). Some commentators invoke the blessing of raiment mentioned here to castigate the pre-Islamic practice of circumambulating the Ka'bah in the nude (Ṭ). Rich adornment translates rīsh, which literally denotes the plumage of birds and metaphorically connotes wealth, finery, beautiful furnishings, and luxurious goods (Iṣ). When used to refer to clothing, it can mean ornamental clothing, especially outer garments that indicate wealth and status, as well as other ornamental items. The verse thus enjoins both clothing that covers one's nakedness and clothing used purely for adornment, indicating that beauty and adornment are a worthy aim (R, Z).

The raiment of reverence (libās al-taqwā) is sometimes interpreted as referring to armor worn in battle, since the word for reverence (taqwā) is derived from a root related to "protection," but it can also refer to the clothing one dons for prayer (R). Others suggest that the raiment of reverence refers back to the raiment used to cover . . . nakedness, indicating that the clothing that covers one's nakedness is better than that worn purely for adornment (R, Ṭ). The raiment of reverence is most widely interpreted, however, as referring to a combination of pious qualities—including faith, modesty, righteous deeds, beautiful comportment, and fear of God (R, Ṭ, Z)—that together can be said to constitute reverence (taqwā) as the term is used in the Quran (see also 2:2c). For this reason, al-Rāzī maintains that the private parts (or "shame") of believers are always covered, even when they are naked, while those of the profligate are always “uncovered,” even when they are clothed (R).

27 O Children of Adam! Let not Satan tempt you, as he caused your parents to go forth from the Garden, stripping them of their raiment to show them their nakedness. Surely he sees you—he and his tribe—whence you see them not. We have indeed made the satans the friends of those who do not believe.

27 Let not Satan tempt you, addressed to the Children of Adam and thus to human beings as a whole, extends the warning that God issued to Adam about Satan, as implied in His question to Adam in v. 22, Did I not . . . tell you that Satan is a manifest enemy unto you? (see also 20:117). Your parents refers to Adam and his wife, whose nakedness was exposed to them after succumbing to Satan’s temptation. The warning continues, reminding human beings that he—that is, Satan—and his tribe of jinn and other “satans” see human beings, although human beings do not see them, for both Satan and the jinn are considered to have subtle rather than material bodies (R)—a distinction symbolized by the idea that Satan and the jinn are made of fire, while Adam and his progeny are made of clay (see v. 12).

That human beings do not see Satan and his tribe also indicates the latter’s subtle and deceptive tactics (Z), as they tempt human beings in ways that they neither anticipate nor immediately recognize, as when Satan swears by God to Adam and his wife that he is their sincere adviser (see v. 21; 7:23c). The idea that the disbelievers and wrongdoers have satans as their friends and protectors is found elsewhere in the Quran; see 2:14; 7:30. In 2:102, the satans “teach people sorcery,” and in 6:121 they inspire their friends to dispute with the believers. Although in the present verse satans seems to refer to the progeny and minions of Satan among the jinn, “satans” can also come from among human beings; see 6:112: Thus have We made for every prophet an enemy—satans from among mankind and jinn, who inspire each other with flowery discourse in order to deceive. See also 4:76, which refers to certain human beings—namely, the opponents of the believers—as the allies (or “friends”) of Satan (awliyāʾ al-Shayṭān), as opposed to the friends of God (awliyāʾ Allāh) in 10:62. For Ashʿarite theologians, such as al-Rāzī, and those with a more determinist understanding of Divine-human relations, that God is said to have made the satans the friends of the disbelievers indicates God’s active role in leading some human beings into error (R).

28 When they commit an indecency, they say, “We found our fathers practicing it, and God has commanded us thus.” Say, “Truly God commands not indecency. Do you say of God that which you know not?”

28 Indecency (fāḥishah) sometimes refers specifically to sexual transgression (see 4:15c; 4:22c), but elsewhere (e.g., 6:151) it refers to all sin and transgression that is particularly abominable (Ṭ). In the context of the discussion about nakedness in relation to the story of Adam’s temptation, some have suggested that the particular indecency mentioned here is the pre-Islamic Arab custom of circumambulating the Kaʿbah in the nude (Ṭ, Z). When they—that is, the disbelievers who take satans for their friends (v. 27)—commit such indecencies, they seek to excuse themselves by arguing that they are merely following the custom of their fathers (an excuse disbelievers offer in several Quranic verses: 2:170; 5:104; 21:52–53; 31:21), although the excuse of blindly following others in religious belief and practice (taqlīd) is never accepted, even if it is ancestors who are being followed. In vv. 172–73, the primordial covenant in which all human beings recognize the Lordship of God prior to their earthly existence is said to nullify all such excuses, for all human beings can be said to know, deep in their soul, the truth about God, although some may have forgotten it. The disbelievers also sometimes argue that the “indecencies” they practice were “commanded” by or otherwise attributable to God (see 6:148 and commentary). But the response is that God commands not indecency; rather, it is Satan who enjoins indecency and wrong (24:21; see also 2:168–69, 268).

29 Say, “My Lord has commanded justice. So set your faces [toward Him] at every place of prayer, and call upon Him, devoting religion entirely to Him. Just as He originated you, so shall you return.”

29 God has commanded justice (qisṭ), not indecency, as the disbelievers allege in v. 28. Qisṭ (justice) can also mean, more generally, what is right or proper, and it is connected by some with the testimony of faith, “There is no god but God,” following 3:18: God bears witness that there is no god but He, as do the angels and the possessors of knowledge, upholding justice (qist; R). So set your faces [toward Him]—that is, toward the qiblah, or direction of prayer, which is toward the Sacred Mosque in Makkah (2:144, 150)—at every place of prayer. This may mean to turn toward the qiblah in prayer “wheresoever you may be” (see 2:144); however, the verse could also mean to turn toward the qiblah at every time of prayer (R, Z). “Turning,” “setting,” or “submitting” one’s face toward God is a frequent Quranic image of monotheistic devotion, signifying the orientation of one’s whole being toward worship of and obedience to God (see 2:112; 3:20; 6:79; 10:105; 30:30, 43; 31:22).

To call upon Him most commonly means to supplicate God for one’s spiritual and material needs, although some commentators here consider it a reference to canonical prayer or worship generally (R, Z). As in several other verses, “calling upon God” is followed by the mention of devoting religion entirely to Him (see also 10:22; 29:65; 31:32; 39:2, 11, 14; 40:14, 65; 73:8), a phrase connoting sincere worship for the sake of God alone. Just as He originated you, so shall you return is one of several ways in which the Quran indicates the analogous nature of original creation and resurrection, suggesting that God’s ability to create, which was widely recognized even by some pre-Islamic Arabs, should allay any doubts about His ability to resurrect human beings (Ṭ). According to a ḥadīth, people will be resurrected in the same state as that in which they were born, “barefoot, naked, and uncircumcised” (Ṭ); that is, alone and in utter dependency upon God. See 6:94: And [God will say], “Now you have come unto Us alone, just as We created you the first time”; as well as 18:48; 21:104.

30 Some He has rightly guided, and some are deserving of error. Truly they took satans as their protectors apart from God and deem them rightly guided.

30 The influence of God upon the moral destiny of human beings seems to be confirmed by the first line of this verse, some He has rightly guided, which, like several other verses, indicates that not all are guided, for had God willed, He would have gathered them all to guidance (6:35). Others are deserving of error, meaning, according to some, that their actions have made them deserving of the description that they are in error (Z). Muʿtazilite theologians, who believed that human moral destiny was determined by human choice and action, have understood references to God guiding or misleading some but not others as modes of reward and punishment —that is, God guides some as a reward for virtuous acts and misleads others as a form of punishment for evil deeds. In the present context, those who took satans as their protectors apart from God are deserving of error for having done so (R). Many Ash[°]arite theologians, by contrast, have taken the present verse, and others like it, as scriptural evidence for Divine control over human moral destiny (R). Regarding taking satans as friends or protectors, see 7:27c.

31 O Children of Adam! Put on your adornment at every place of worship, and eat and drink, but be not prodigal. Truly He loves not the prodigal.

31 Adornment translates zīnah—a term that has both positive and negative connotations in the Quran, insofar as it refers to worldly sources of beauty or status (cf. 11:15; 16:8; 18:28, 46) that are part of God’s provision for human beings, but are also potential sources of pride, temptation, or worldliness that lead to forgetfulness of God and the Hereafter. It may also refer to clothing or any other item used to beautify oneself (Z), but in the present context, following shortly after the account of Satan stripping Adam and Eve of their raiment to show them their nakedness (v. 27), it most likely refers to clothing used to cover one’s nakedness rather than ornamentation (R). The Children of Adam are instructed to put on their adornment at every place of worship, but elsewhere women are instructed to conceal their adornment (usually understood to mean parts of their bodies); see 24:31c; 33:33c.

Some commentators see all three injunctions in the present verse, including the encouragement to eat and drink, as relating to the practices of the Arabs prior to the coming of Islam, who, as noted earlier, circumambulated the Ka[°]bah naked, placed arbitrary restrictions on the consumption of certain foods (see 5:103c; 6:136–39, 143–44), and limited their overall consumption of food during their pilgrimage to the Ka[°]bah (R). Some reports indicate that the Quraysh had established a rule that the only clothing that could be worn and the only food that could be eaten in the sacred precincts of Makkah were the clothing and food of the Quraysh, since they were the “people of the Sacred Mosque.” Any who wished to enter the sacred precincts of Makkah and perform the pilgrimage thus had to borrow or buy clothing from the Quraysh and eat their food or go naked and abstain from eating (Q). The present verse is thus understood as putting an end to such practices by instructing people to put on their adornment at every place of worship, and so to perform the rites at the Ka'bah clothed, and to eat and drink, that is, of all the good and lawful things that God has provided for them (Ṭ, Z). It should be noted, however, that nowhere in Islamic holy places are men clad as thinly as during the ḥajj, as the male iḥrām, or pilgrim dress, consists of only two unsewn pieces of cloth. This brings them as close as possible to their original nakedness without actually being naked.

The command to put on . . . adornment for prayer is also related to the injunction, established by Prophetic practice (sunnah), that people should groom themselves when attending prayer, including putting on perfume and their best apparel, but avoid excess or pride in doing so (Z). Indeed, the verse indicates that one should not be prodigal, which can mean to exceed the bounds of what is lawful to consume (R, Ṭ) or to be excessive and wasteful in one's consumption (R; see also 10:12c). With regard to the latter meaning, some mention the spiritual and physical benefits that come from eating little or only enough to fulfill one's basic needs (Q). Still others interpret the adornment encouraged here to be spiritual rather than material in nature; al-Qushayrī, for example, identifies the adornment of the souls of the worshippers with the marks of prostration (on their foreheads), and the adornment of the hearts of the gnostics with the "lights of being [wujūd]." That God loves not the prodigal is also found in 6:141.

32 Say, "Who has forbidden the adornment of God, which He has brought forth for His servants, and the good things among [His] provision?" Say, "These are for those who believe, in the life of this world, and on the Day of Resurrection they are for them alone." Thus do We expound the signs for a people who know.

32 This verse reaffirms the lawfulness of adornment, which God has provided for human beings (v. 26), and chastises all those, like the idolatrous Makkans, who would forbid such adornment arbitrarily. Adornment, here as elsewhere, may be related to clothing, but may also be related to any type of ornamentation. Some connect this verse with a ḥadīth in which the Prophet instructs one of his followers to avoid excesses in asceticism and to reject the ascetic impulse to abstain from, among other things, owning property, eating meat, having children, or wearing perfume (R). All of these might fall under the category of "worldly adornment," but this verse and various aḥādīth indicate that such things are lawful so long as temperance and propriety are maintained. Such adornment is for the believers in the life of this world—that is, to be enjoyed here—and on the Day of Resurrection it is for them alone. This indicates that though both believers and disbelievers may enjoy various kinds of adornment in their earthly lives, in the Hereafter such adornment is for the believers exclusively (R, Z).

33 Say, “My Lord has only forbidden indecencies—both outward and inward—and sin, and tyranny without right, and that you should ascribe partners unto God, for which He has sent down no authority, and that you should say of God that which you know not.”

33 Contrary to the arbitrary prohibitions of the idolaters alluded to in vv. 31–32, God forbids only indecencies . . . and sin (indecencies here refers to particularly abominable sins). He forbids outward and inward sins, meaning either public and private sins, respectively, or an outward sinful action and its inward intention; see 6:120c; 6:151–52c. In the phrase tyranny without right, tyranny translates baghy, which connotes oppression and overweening arrogance (Z) as well as rebelliousness (see also 10:23; 42:27, 42). God also forbids the ascribing of partners unto Him, or shirk, which is identified in 4:48 and 4:116 as the only sin that will not be forgiven if one dies without repenting. For such “partners” God has sent down no authority, that is, no revealed warrant or instruction to worship them. Finally, it is forbidden to say of God that which you know not, that is, to falsely ascribe ideas, practices, or words to Him, something similarly criticized in 2:80, 169, and 7:28 as well as in the many verses that chastise those who would “fabricate (lies) against God” (see, e.g., 3:94; 4:50; 6:21; 7:37; 10:17).

34 And for every community there is a term appointed. When their term comes, they shall not delay it by a single hour, nor shall they advance it.

34 The idea that every community or people has a term appointed—that is, a fixed term that can be neither “advanced” nor “delayed” and after which they will cease to exist on earth—is referenced in several verses; see 10:49; 15:5; 23:43; 34:30; 71:4. Individual human beings and humanity as a whole are also said to have a “fixed” or “appointed” term as far as life in this world is concerned (16:61; 34:30; 71:4).

35 O Children of Adam! Should there come unto you messengers from among yourselves, recounting My signs unto you, then whosoever is reverent and makes amends, no fear shall come upon them, nor shall they grieve.

35 This verse is similar to 2:38, which also concludes an account of Adam's fall: We said, "Get down from it, all of you. If guidance should come to you from Me, then whosoever follows My Guidance, no fear shall come upon them, nor shall they grieve." In both cases, the punishment of exile from the Garden is followed by the consolation that God will send human beings guidance, here in the form of messengers from among yourselves. And by virtue of responding to the messengers with reverence and "making amends"—that is, repenting of one's former actions and obeying the commands and prohibitions brought by the messengers (T)—hope is offered that Adam and his progeny may find their way back to a place—that is, the celestial Garden—in which no fear shall come upon them, nor shall they grieve. This last clause is repeated in several verses as a reference to success and bliss in the Hereafter; see 2:62, 112, 262, 274, 277; 3:170; 5:69; 6:48; 7:49; 10:62; 46:13.

36 But those who deny Our signs and treat them with disdain, it is they who are the inhabitants of the Fire. They shall abide therein.

36 That those who deny the signs of God in this life will face punishment in Hellfire in the next is found in several verses; cf. 2:39; 4:56; 5:10, 86; 22:51, 57; 57:19; 64:10. Denying the signs of God may refer here particularly to rejecting the message of God's Oneness brought by the messengers, to disavowing the other truths and Divine commands they brought, and to being too proud to affirm the truth of the proofs and guidance offered by revelation (T).

37 And who does greater wrong than one who fabricates a lie against God or denies His signs? For such as these, their portion of the book will reach them, till, when Our messengers come to take them away, they will say, “Where is that which you used to call upon apart from God?” They will respond, “They have forsaken us.” And they bear witness against themselves that they were disbelievers.

37 Who does greater wrong than one who fabricates a lie against God is a rhetorical question found in several verses (6:21, 93, 144; 10:17; 11:18; 18:15; 29:68; 61:7), and, as here, the same is said of those who reject or deny God’s signs (cf. 6:157; 18:57; 32:22). That their portion of the book will reach them means that they will receive their portion of worldly provision and longevity (Q, Sy, T, Z), of good or ill (T), of punishment (R, T, Ts), or of salvation or damnation in the Hereafter (T), which has been ordained for them in the book, which here refers to the Book of all things that will come to pass or to the Preserved Tablet (see 85:22c), rather than to revealed scripture (T). The messengers who will take them away are the angels who collect the souls of human beings at death (see 6:61–62c; 32:11). The idea that false idols and authorities as well as Satan, and indeed anything that one calls upon apart from God, will forsake one in the Hereafter is found in several verses (6:24, 94; 7:53; 10:30; 11:21; 16:87; 25:29; 28:75; 40:73–74), as is the idea that disbelievers and wrongdoers will ultimately bear witness against themselves on the Day of Judgment; see 6:130; 24:24; 36:65; and 41:20–22, where it is parts of one’s body that will testify independent of oneself to the sins one has committed.

38 He will say, “Enter the Fire among communities of jinn and men that have passed away before you!” Every time a community enters, it curses its sister, till, when they have all successively arrived there, the last of them will say of the first of them, “Our Lord, it was they who led us astray; so give them a double punishment in the Fire.” He will say, “For each of you it shall be doubled, but you know not.”

39 And the first of them will say to the last of them, “You are no better than us; so taste the punishment for that which you have earned.”

38–39 He—that is, God, or according to some, the guardian of Hell (R)—will command those who “fabricated lies against God” and denied His signs to enter the Fire of Hell. The communities . . . that have passed away before you refers to sects or communities following false religious ideas (T). That each community curses its sister means either that each community will curse previous communities or that the later generations of a false religious community or sect will curse the earlier generations of the same community or sect (R, Ṭ). This curse and mutual disowning of the leaders and followers among those who disbelieved reflects the rancor among the denizens of Hell, which contributes to their torment (see, e.g., 2:166–67; 29:25; 34:31–33). Thus not only will the false idols and authorities forsake those who worshipped them (v. 37), but the disbelievers and wrongdoers will forsake one another, and thus the Last Day is also referred to as the Day of Mutual Dispossession in 64:9. The rancor among those in Hell contrasts sharply with the relations between the people of Paradise, whose conversation is marked by mutual greetings and exhortations of “Peace” (see 10:10; 14:23; 19:62; 56:25–26), as God has removed all “rancor” from them (see v. 43 as well as 15:47). See also 43:67: Friends on that Day will be enemies to one another, save for the reverent.

That the last of them will blame the first of them for their having gone astray may mean that later generations of a condemned religious community will blame earlier generations (R, Ṭ), that the rank-and-file members of a condemned community will blame their leaders (R, Z), or both (Ṭs), as in 33:67: They will say, “Our Lord! Truly we obeyed our leaders and elders, and they caused us to stray from the way.” It may, however, mean that later communities as a whole will blame earlier communities (Ṭs). The sixth Shiite Imam, Jaʿfar al-Ṣādiq, glosses the first of them, who are blamed for leading others astray, as unjust leaders (Ṭs). The blaming of one’s elders and earlier generations of one’s community for religious error reflects a similar impulse among disbelievers in this world to reject prophetic warnings with the excuse that they are following their fathers’ religious practices (see 7:28c; 2:170; 5:104; 21:52–54). The Quran indicates that excuses are always rejected both in this world and in the Hereafter, and vv. 172–73 make it clear that one cannot excuse one’s actions by reference to following one’s ancestors.

Those who were led astray by others will ask that those whom they followed be given a double punishment, that is, one for their leaders’ own disbelief and one for their deceiving others by inciting them to error and preventing them from following the path of God (Ṭ, Ṭs). See also 33:66–68, where those who followed others in religious error make the same request. The followers may be trying to make good on a claim that the leaders of disbelief make in 29:12: Those who disbelieve say to those who believe, “Follow our path and we shall bear your sins.” However, in the following lines, this promise is shown to be, in a way, both true and false: But they bear not aught of their sins. Truly they are liars. Surely they will bear their own burdens, and others’ burdens along with their own (29:12–13); see also 14:21; 40:47. This suggests that though the leaders of error do bear an additional burden for their having led others astray (see also 16:25), this does not actually alleviate the burden of those who followed them, for none shall bear the burden of another (6:164; 17:15; 35:18; 39:7; 53:38). Thus the response to the followers' request in the present verse that their leaders' punishment be doubled is, For each of you it shall be doubled, indicating that their request is granted, in a sense, but that the doubling of their leaders' punishment in no way diminishes their own punishment by comparison.

According to al-Rāzī, the leaders do bear additional guilt for having led others astray, but the punishment is nonetheless doubled for both because this is the nature of Hell itself—namely, that its punishments continually follow one upon the other indefinitely (R); see 4:56: We shall surely cause them to burn in a Fire. As often as their skins are consumed, We shall replace them with other skins, that they may taste the punishment.

cable, although most indicate that the image of a camel (or in some cases, an elephant) passing through the eye of the needle was a well-known metaphor at that time.

④① Hell shall be their resting place, with coverings above them. And thus do We recompense the wrongdoers!

41 Resting place translates mihād, which is derived from a root meaning to “spread out” and thus connotes level ground, carpet, or other furnishing spread out beneath a person. Just as Hell shall be a resting place spread out beneath them, so too will there be coverings above them, and, according to 39:16, both will be of fire: Above them they shall have canopies of fire and below them canopies; with that does God strike fear into His servants. See also 29:55: On the Day when the punishment will cover them from above and from beneath their feet, and We shall say, “Taste that which you used to do!”

④② As for those who believe and perform righteous deeds—We task no soul beyond its capacity—it is they who are the inhabitants of the Garden; they shall abide therein.

42 The idea that God tasks no soul beyond its given capacity is an important Quranic assertion found in several verses (2:233, 286; 6:152; 23:62; 65:7). It indicates that nothing is asked of a soul that cannot be accomplished, and without overwhelming hardship (Ṭ). Consequently, even the fundamental religious duties of Islam are made easier and less onerous for those in difficult situations; for example, those traveling may shorten their prayers and may postpone a mandatory fast for a later date; while those seriously and chronically ill may leave off fasting altogether, substituting charitable donations for their fast. This is because God desires ease for you, and He does not desire hardship for you (2:185). For al-Zamakhsharī the present verse indicates that the human capacity for faith, good works, and righteousness is vast, not narrow or constrained.

43 And We shall remove whatever rancor lies within their breasts. Rivers shall run below them. And they will say, “Praise be to God, Who guided us unto this. We would not have been rightly guided, had God not guided us. The messengers of our Lord certainly brought the truth.” And a call will be made unto them, “This is the Garden. You have inherited it for that which you used to do.”

43 The idea that the inhabitants of Paradise are free of rancor and have had it “removed” by God (cf. 15:47) poses a sharp contrast to the mutual recriminations between the inhabitants of Hell (see v. 38–39 and commentary). Some read the beginning of the verse to mean “We shall remove whatever rancor is in their breasts, while rivers run below them” (Ṭs). According to an early report, as the people of Paradise make their way toward the Garden, they will come upon a tree, at the base of which they will find two springs. They will cleanse themselves with one, which will refresh them and restore them to health, and drink from the other and thus be purified of all rancor (Ṭ). That rivers shall run below them reflects one of the primary Quranic descriptions of the paradisaal Garden as having rivers running below, an image invoked in dozens of verses (see 2:25c).

Although this verse, like many others, indicates that paradisaal states are earned as a recompense for that which you used to do—that is, as a reward for one’s deeds in this life (Z)—the attitude of the people of Paradise here is marked not by self-satisfaction, but by pure gratitude toward God for their having been guided toward correct belief and righteous actions in this life and having been guided over the bridge that is said to stretch across Hell and into Paradise in the Hereafter (Ṭs). The Quran frequently presents guidance as the prerogative solely of God: Truly the Guidance of God is guidance (2:120; 3:73; 6:71), and God leads astray whomsoever He will and guides whomsoever He will (14:4; 16:93). Moreover, whomsoever God guides, he is rightly guided (v. 178) and whomsoever God leads astray, no guide has he (v. 186); see also 17:97; 18:17; 32:24; 39:36–37; 74:31. Guidance is thus understood as a Divine blessing for which one must be grateful, in both this life (see, e.g., 2:185; 22:37) and the next.

The people of Paradise also recognize that the messengers . . . brought the truth (see also v. 53) and that the sending of messengers represents a Divine gift, by which God makes the means of guidance available to all human beings (Z), even if not all are guided. The call that is made to the people of Paradise announcing that they have inherited the Garden may be made by God or by one of the angels, although commentators usually favor the former (R, Ṭs). Those who are righteous are also said to inherit Paradise in 23:10–11 and 39:74. Some commentators indicate that the “inheritance” shown to the believers in this instance are the houses in Paradise, which they “inherit” from the disbelievers—that is, these were houses that would have belonged to the disbelievers in Paradise had they not “forfeited” them through their disbelief and evil deeds (R, Ṭ, Ṭs).

④ The inhabitants of the Garden will call out to the inhabitants of the Fire, “We have found that which our Lord promised us to be true. Have you found that which your Lord promised to be true?” They will respond, “Yes.” Thereupon a herald shall proclaim in their midst, “The curse of God be upon the wrongdoers!”

44 There are several places in the Quran where, as here, the disbelievers acknowledge the truth of the promises and warnings brought by the prophets, but only belatedly, when it can bring no benefit to them or avert their punishment. In some cases, their acknowledgment of error comes when faced with judgment immediately upon or after death (6:30, 130), while in others their acknowledgment comes only when they are in or about to enter Hell (39:71; 40:49–50; 46:34; 67:8–10). In the present verse, it is the inhabitants of Paradise who question those in Hell, saying that they, the people of Paradise, have found what the Lord promised them by way of reward to be true, and asking the people of Hell if they have not found the same regarding their punishment in Hell (cf. 37:55–60; 57:13–14, for other conversations between those in Paradise and those in Hell). After the victory at Badr, the Prophet is reported to have addressed the dead among their Makkan enemies in similar terms, saying, “Have you found the promise of your Lord to be true? Surely I have found what my Lord promised me to be true” (IK). The Quran repeatedly states that God’s Promise is true (4:122; 10:4, 55; 18:21, 98; 30:60; 31:33; 35:5; 40:55, 77; 45:32; 46:17), and in 46:16 the Garden is also identified as the true promise that they—that is, the righteous believers—were promised.

The herald . . . in their midst refers to an angel—perhaps the angel who is the keeper of Hell—who communicates the curse of God upon the disbelievers in a manner audible both to them and to those in Paradise (R, Ṭs). Some Shiite traditions, however, identify the herald as °Alī ibn Abī Ṭālib, the close Companion, cousin, and son-in-law of the Prophet as well as the fourth “rightly guided caliph” and the first Shiite Imam (Ṭs). God’s curse upon them may be a reference to His Wrath and the punishment meted out to them (Ṭs) as well as to their exile and banishment from His Presence.

④5 Those who turn from the way of God and seek to make it crooked, disbelieving in the Hereafter.

45 See 11:19 for a nearly identical verse. The disbelievers are described here as those who turn from the way of God, which can mean both that they themselves turn away from the path of God as established by the laws and teachings brought by the prophets and that they seek to turn others away from it. This is done sometimes by force (R) and sometimes by other means, such as seeking to make it crooked (see also 3:99; 7:86; 11:19; 14:3), that is, by distorting or altering it (Ṭ) or obscuring it or mixing it with their own whims and desires (Ṭs), so that it is no longer the “straight path”—a phrase the Quran uses in many verses to denote the true religious path that leads to salvation (see, e.g., 1:6 and commentary)—as established by God.

④6 And there will be a veil between them. And upon the Heights are men who know all by their marks. They will call out to the inhabitants of the Garden, “Peace be upon you!” They will not have entered it, though they hope.

46–47 The veil set between them—that is, between the people of Paradise and the people of Hell—is likened by many commentators to the wall set down between them in 57:13: On the Day when men who are hypocrites and women who are hypocrites will say to those who believe, “Wait for us that we may borrow from your light,” it will be said, “Turn back and seek a light!” Thereupon a wall with a gate will be set down between them, the inner side of which contains mercy, and on the outer side of which lies punishment (IK, R, Th, Ṭs, Z). Elsewhere the Heights are described symbolically as a high sand dune (Qm). The Heights, after which this sūrah is named, would thus refer to a place atop this barrier or dune between Paradise and Hell, so that those perched atop it can see both Paradise and Hell (Z), or according to some to the bridge (ṣirāṭ) that stretches over Hell and leads to Paradise (R, Ṭs). The Heights translates a^crāf, and some say that this place is so named because, as the verse attests, those who occupy it know (ya^crifūn, from the same root) all by their marks (IK, Th).

According to one set of interpretations, those upon the Heights occupy a middle position between Paradise and Hell and represent Muslims who had been negligent or slacking in their good works (Z) or whose good and bad works are nearly equal (IK, R, Ṭs). A ḥadīth indicates that they are those who were killed fighting in the way of God, but who had joined the fight without the permission of their fathers (IK, Th). Such people would enter Paradise only belatedly and may thus be identified with those who await the Command of God (9:106; Z)—that is, they remain in a state in which their fate is still unknown to them for a while. They have not yet entered it—that is, the Garden—but they hope to do so, for they have trust in God’s Forgiveness and Mercy and are perhaps awaiting the intercession of the Prophet or, for Shiites, also the Imams (Ṭs). They call out to the inhabitants of the Garden with the greeting Peace be upon you, the greeting associated in several verses with the paradisaical state (see 10:10; 14:23; 19:62; 56:25–26) and the proper greeting between all believers (see 6:54 and commentary). When they see those in Hell, they appeal to God’s Mercy (Z), asking Him to spare them—that is, themselves—the fate of being placed among the wrongdoing people. Some have likened the a^crāf to a kind of purgatory—a temporary middle ground or barzakh for those who are not placed immediately in either Paradise or Hell—and from which its occupants move only upward toward Paradise.

Indeed, most commentators indicate that those on the Heights will eventually enter Paradise, but many note that they will be the last to do so (R, Th) or that they are referred to as the “poor” in Paradise (IK, Th). Some have also identified them with those who did not attain to moral responsibility, either because of their youth at the time of their death or as a result of mental deficiency or illness (Ṭb). Al-Ghazzālī identified the people on the Heights as those whom the call to true religion had not reached. They thus occupy this place between Paradise and Hell, where they experience peace, but have neither the joy of being brought near to God nor the torment of being distant from Him (Aj). Insofar as the Heights were considered to represent an intermediate state in the Hereafter, there was much additional speculation about those who would occupy this state; suggestions included but were not limited to the offspring of idolaters, the believers among the jinn, and those who did good deeds only for the sake of earthly reward (IK).

Although a literal reading of the verse seems to support the idea that the people upon the Heights are believers whose moral record is deficient in some way and who are thus suspended for a time between Paradise and Hell, another quite different, but equally important, set of interpretations considers the Heights to be a reference to an exalted spiritual station. Those who hold this view have identified the people upon the Heights with various groups possessing exceptional spiritual qualities or status, such as those who are righteous and possess religious knowledge and understanding (Th). According to the Twelver Shiite interpretation of this verse, those upon the Heights are the Imams from among the family of the Prophet (Qm, Ṭs). According to this reading, those whom the Imams acknowledge are admitted to Paradise, while those whom they deny enter Hellfire (Ṭs). Another tradition attributed to Ibn ʿAbbās states that those upon the Heights are the prominent Companions among the Prophet’s clan, the Banū Hāshim, including the Prophet’s uncles Ḥamzah and ʿAbbās and his nephews and prominent young Companions ʿAlī and Jaʿfar ibn Abī Ṭālib (Th, Ṭs).

Some Sufi commentators identify those upon the Heights as the people of gnosis, or spiritual knowledge (Kā, ST), who have transcended both Paradise and Hell, because they have left the trappings of the soul and its pleasures behind and are occupied only with the contemplation of God Himself (K). According to the latter interpretation, those have not yet entered Paradise, but hope to do so is a reference to the people of Paradise, not to the people of the Heights. Considering the Heights to be both an intermediate state and an exalted state, the Sufi commentator Ibn ʿAjībah identifies the Heights as a reference to the intermediate region (barzakh) between the exoteric Divine Law (sharīʿah) and ultimate spiritual Truth (ḥaqīqah); the people of the Heights are thus those whose status is between that of the spiritual elite and ordinary believers. They are those who are journeying in hope of reaching the Garden of Gnosis (i.e., the Garden of true knowledge of God; see 6:127c), while asking God not to put them in the “Fire of the veil” (i.e., the Fire of ignorance and separation from God). Still other reports have suggested that those upon the Heights are angels in the form of human beings (R, Th, Ṭs).

The marks, by which those on the Heights know all—that is, the people of Paradise and of Hell—are sometimes understood as referring to the “whiteness” or “blackness/darkness” of their faces (Aj, Th; see 3:106–7; 10:26–27; 39:60; 75:22; 80:38–41).

48 And the inhabitants of the Heights will call out to men whom they know by their marks, “Your accumulating has not availed you, nor has your waxing arrogant.

48 Here, the men whom they know by their marks refers specifically to those in Hell, to whom the words of the inhabitants of the Heights are addressed. Your accumulating may refer both to their acquisition of wealth and to their increasing number (R, Ṭ, Ṭs). Although they may have amassed great wealth in their earthly life and outnumbered the believers, their greater wealth and numbers offer them no protection in the Hereafter; rather, for those who disobey God, their wealth and children increase them in naught but loss (71:21). See also 17:6, where though the Israelites were aided by God with wealth and children and made greater in number, it could not protect them from future punishment, and 34:35–37, where wealth and children can neither thwart punishment nor bring one closer to God. The idea that disbelievers and wrongdoers are great in number or perhaps even represent the majority of human beings is suggested in various verses (cf., e.g., 2:243; 5:100; 6:116; 7:102, 187; 10:60; 11:17; 12:21; 13:1; 17:89). Waxing arrogant is an attitude commonly attributed to disbelievers (e.g., 6:93; 7:133, 146; 10:75).

49 Are these the ones concerning whom you swore that God would not extend any mercy?” “Enter the Garden! No fear shall come upon you, nor shall you grieve.”

49 Those in Hellfire are asked rhetorically and ironically, Are these—that is, those who had seemed lowly in earthly life, but who now enjoy great status and bliss in Paradise (R)—the ones concerning whom you swore that God would not extend any mercy? The question may be posed by the people of the Heights, as a continuation of the statement in v. 48, but may also be spoken by God (IK, Ṭ) or by the angels (Ṭ); it refers to the disbelievers’ tendency to dismiss the idea that God could show favor to those who were of low social status in the life of this world (see, e.g., 6:53 and commentary). For the description of the paradisaical state as one in which no fear shall come upon you, nor shall you grieve, see 7:35c.

50 The inhabitants of the Fire will call out to the inhabitants of the Garden, “Pour some water down upon us, or some of that which God has provided you.” They will respond, “Truly God has forbidden them both to the disbelievers,”

50 The request of the inhabitants of Hell that those in Paradise pour some water down upon them suggests that Paradise is situated symbolically above Hell (R, Z) and indicates the terrible heat and thirst generated by the Fire (R, Ṭs). The inhabitants of Hell also request from those in Paradise some of that which God has provided you, meaning the other drinks of Paradise (Z), such as honey, milk, or wine, or else the food and fruits that God has provided for them in the Garden (Ṭ, Ṭs, Z). This indicates that hunger is also one of the torments of Hell (R). According to al-Zamakhsharī, they ask for relief in this way, even if they despair of it ever being granted to them, because of the confusion and desperation generated by their circumstances. The water that they ask for can be interpreted as a symbol for mercy, while that which God has provided may be a reference to the nearness and intimacy with God that those in Paradise have been granted (Su). Both are denied to those in Hell.

51 who took their religion to be diversion and play, and were deluded by the life of this world. So this Day We forget them, as they forgot the meeting with this Day of theirs, and as they used to reject Our signs.

51 The disbelievers in Hell are described as those who took their religion to be diversion and play, an attitude attributed to them elsewhere (see 5:57c; 6:70; 21:2–3; 43:83; 52:11–12; 70:42), and as having been deluded by the life of this world (cf. 6:70, 130; 31:33; 35:5), for it is this world that is merely play and diversion (6:32; 29:64; 47:36; 57:20; see also 29:64c). The human proclivity toward forgetfulness of God and of moral obligations is an underlying theme in the Quran (see, e.g., 5:13–14; 6:44; 20:115), as is the corresponding and repeated encouragement to remember God and His commandments or to be reminded.

Having forgotten the meeting with this Day of theirs—that is, the Day of Judgment—the disbelievers are themselves forgotten by God; see also 9:67; 20:126; as well as 32:14, where they are forgotten as a punishment for having forgotten God; and 45:34, where their being forgotten is a requital for having forgotten His signs. The reciprocity of “forgetting” and “being forgotten” contributes to the larger theme of moral reflexivity in the Quran—for example, the deceivers are themselves deceived (2:9), and those who spend charitably spend ultimately for themselves (2:272)—and also reflects the Quranic dictum The recompense of an evil is an evil like unto it (42:40). To have forgotten the meeting with this Day of theirs means to have neglected to prepare for it by acting righteously in this world (R). That God forgets them is said to mean here that He does not respond to their plea for relief or does not show them mercy in this way (R), and that He neglects them and abandons them in their punishment (IK, R). Some commentators argue that God’s “forgetting” them does not mean that such people become absent from God’s Knowledge, for God does not “forget” in this sense; as it says in 20:52, He errs not, nor does He forget (IK). Indeed, from a metaphysical point of view, if God were to forget anything, that thing would cease to exist. Rather, the verse is understood to mean that God acts toward such people as if He had forgotten them; see 9:67c.

52 We have indeed brought them a Book, which We have expounded with knowledge, as a guidance and a mercy for a people who believe.

52 The Book here refers to the Divine Revelation that has been sent to all people (see, e.g., 16:36) or, according to al-Rāzī, to the Quran specifically. That it is expounded, in this case with knowledge, indicates that the religious truths it contains are laid out clearly and that, in it, truth is clearly distinguished from falsehood (Ṭ); cf. 6:55c, 97–98, 114, 126. It is a source of guidance and a mercy, but specifically for those who believe; see 2:2, where the Book is a guidance for the reverent, and 2:26, where it is said regarding the parables God sets forth in it, He misleads many by it, and He guides many by it, and He misleads none but the iniquitous.

53 Do they wait for aught save the full disclosure thereof? The Day when its full disclosure comes, those who forgot it beforehand will say, “The messengers of our Lord indeed brought the truth! Have we any intercessors who might intercede for us? Or might we be returned, that we might do other than what we used to do?” They have surely lost their souls, and that which they used to fabricate has forsaken them.

53 The full disclosure thereof—that is, of the Book mentioned in v. 52—refers to the fulfillment of its commands, and especially its promises and threats regarding resurrection, judgment, reward, and punishment in the Hereafter (Ṭs, Z). Here full disclosure translates ta'wīl, which is used elsewhere to refer to the interpretation of Divine Revelation (see 3:7 and commentary) as well as to the prophet Joseph's ability to interpret dreams (ta'wīl al-aḥādīth; 12:36). In the Islamic tradition, there are extensive discussions regarding the meaning of ta'wīl. While ta'wīl is sometimes used to mean simply "interpretation," it can also refer to more intellectual or speculative interpretations of Quranic verses, rather than interpretations transmitted from the Prophet or early authorities. For Shiites and Sufis, it came primarily to signify the inner, esoteric, or hidden meanings of the Quran as opposed to its more literal, outward, and exoteric interpretation (tafsīr).

In the present verse, the "hidden meaning" (ta'wīl) of the Book can be understood to refer to those events, such as Resurrection and Judgment, of which the Quran speaks, but whose reality has not been fully revealed, as they have not yet come to pass. When the full disclosure of the Book comes—that is, when its inner meanings are revealed and the unseen things it describes become manifest—the disbelievers' "veil of doubt" will be lifted (Qu), and they will openly recognize the truth brought by the messengers (cf. v. 43). But at that point, it will be too late for them—no weeping or supplicating can avert their punishment (Qu).

They will seek intercessors on their behalf, although in 2:48 the Quran describes this Day as a Day when no intercession shall be accepted for a soul. The Quran does, however, indicate elsewhere that there is a limited possibility of intercession (see 2:255c). The Islamic tradition generally holds that the Prophet (and for Shiites also the Imams) may intercede on behalf of the members of the Islamic community, but there is no such intercession for those who have rejected the messengers, denied the revelations they brought, and thus neglected the meeting with this Day of theirs (v. 51).

The disbelievers ask if they can return to earthly life, so that they might live righteously and do other than what they used to do (see also 6:27–28; 26:102; 35:37). But then it is too late, for they have surely lost their souls, and even if they were returned, the Quran suggests elsewhere that they would simply return to their faithless and evil ways (6:28). On this day, that which they used to fabricate, including false idols and false religious beliefs, will abandon them and be of no use to them—an idea repeated in 6:24; 10:30; 11:21; 16:87; 28:75.

54 Truly your Lord is God, Who created the heavens and the earth in six days, then mounted the Throne. He causes the night to cover the day, which pursues it swiftly; and the sun, the moon, and the stars are made subservient by His Command. Do not creation and command belong to Him? Blessed is God, Lord of the worlds!

54 As here, Quranic references to the creation of the heavens and the earth in six days (cf. 10:3; 11:7; 25:59; 32:4; 50:38; 57:4) are usually followed by the statement that God then mounted the Throne (10:3; 25:59; 32:4). Since mounting the Throne suggests the physical movement and location of a body, while God has no body according to Islamic thought, many commentators note that this phrase is a symbol for God's demonstration of His Sovereignty over His creation (Ṭs). For a fuller discussion of the Throne, see 2:255c.

That God created the heavens and the earth in six days is similar in certain ways to the Biblical creation narrative in which God creates the world in six days, but then rests on the seventh. The Quran, however, attributes no such resting to God, for neither slumber overtakes Him nor sleep and protecting the heavens and the earth tires Him not (2:255); and in 50:38, mention of the creation in six days is followed by the statement that no fatigue touched Him. For this reason, there is no Sabbath (in the Jewish and Christian sense) in the Islamic tradition. The Quranic account also differs from the Biblical in that it provides no specific sequence for the creation of various phenomena on different days, although some Muslim commentators mention the association of certain days with the creation of various orders of creatures (IK). In the Islamic tradition, the six days are said to have begun on Sunday and continued through Friday (al-jumu'ah). On this Friday, Islamic tradition maintains that God created Adam and gathered together (jama'a, from the same root as al-jum'ah) all creation (IK, Ṭ, Ṭs), although the name jumu'ah (from a root meaning "to gather") seems more directly related to the fact that Friday was the day of congregational prayer. The tradition that Adam was created on this day nonetheless gave Friday a particular religious preeminence in Islam.

Although creation in six days has been understood literally by some (Ṭs), as it has in certain Jewish and Christian interpretations, the six days mentioned here are not necessarily meant to be understood as six twenty-four-hour periods, since the Quran also states, Truly a day with your Lord is as a thousand years of that which you reckon (22:47; see also 32:5); some thus consider each "day" to be as a thousand years (IK, Q, Sy)—the latter duration is also considered symbolic by some commentators (see 32:5c). The symbolic and not literal meaning of six days has been discussed in other Islamic sources, including the work of Islamic scientists. The description of God causing the night to cover the day is one of many instances where the Quran invokes the alternation of night and day as a sign of God's Power and Beneficence (see, e.g., 2:164; 3:190; 10:6; 13:3; 17:12; 22:61; 24:44; 31:29; 35:13; 39:5; 45:5). That the sun, moon, and stars are made subservient to God is also found in 13:2; 29:61; 31:29; 35:13; 39:5.

55 Call upon your Lord humbly and in secret. Truly He loves not the transgressors.

55 Calling upon God humbly and in secret is also an act attributed to those in dire need in 6:63. All sincere “calling upon God” entails humility, for it is based upon the realization of one’s dependence upon Him. The Prophet said, “There is nothing nobler before God than supplicatory prayer (du‘ā’), for supplication is worship” (R). Calling on God in secret suggests sincerity and lack of hypocrisy in the supplication (R), for it is not done “to be seen of men” (cf. 2:264; 4:38, 142; 8:47; 107:6); see also 19:3, where Zachariah implores God with a secret cry, as well as verses that approve of those who “fear God in secret” (5:94; 21:49). God loves not the transgressors; that is, those who exceed the proper bounds in anything (Z). Both crying out in an unnecessarily loud manner and being excessively long and elaborate in one’s supplication are discouraged, according to some. The Prophet once criticized those who were excessive in supplication, and said, “It is sufficient for a man to say, ‘O God, I ask Thee [to grant me] the Garden and whatever words or works draw me near to it; and I seek refuge in Thee from the Fire and from whatever words or works draw me near to it’” (Z).

56 And work not corruption upon the earth after it has been set aright, but call upon Him in fear and in hope. Surely the Mercy of God is ever nigh unto the virtuous.

56 The warning to work not corruption upon the earth can be understood in a general way to mean avoiding idolatry or polytheism and acting in obedience to God (Ṭ), but “working corruption upon the earth” is elsewhere associated with morally egregious acts and serious sins, particularly violence against others (see 5:32–33c) as well as inciting others to do the same and thus spreading corruption upon the earth. Al-Rāzī considers the warning against “working corruption upon the earth” to be a prohibition against any act that corrupts bodies (through violence), wealth (through fraud or theft), religion (through disbelief and innovation), lineage

(through adultery and slander), and intellect (through intoxication). “Working corruption upon the earth” may also be understood as referring to human actions that pollute or destroy the natural environment. The human ability to “work corruption upon the earth” is juxtaposed here with the earth’s having been set aright, that is, by God. God’s “setting aright” can thus mean His establishment, through the revelations and laws brought by His messengers, of a just and moral social order (Ṭ) as well as His creating the harmony and balance that pervades the natural order. In light of mankind’s contemporary capability to corrupt the earth physically through environmentally destructive behavior, this verse might therefore also be taken to mean that human beings should not physically corrupt the earth itself after God had “set it aright” with regard to its beauty, its inherent balance and harmony, and its beneficence for mankind—all of which are alluded to in many places throughout the Quran (see, e.g., 16:3–18; 55:5–24). For further commentary on the Quranic warning against “working corruption upon the earth,” see 30:41c.

Just as one is instructed to call upon God humbly and in secret in v. 55, here one is enjoined to supplicate Him in fear and in hope. From the Islamic perspective, fear and hope can be considered the twin poles of human religious consciousness, as believers should always be suspended between fear of God’s Wrath and hope in His Mercy. According to a ḥadīth qudsī (sacred ḥadīth), “When God decreed the created realm, He prescribed for Himself in a Book that is with Him, ‘My Mercy prevails over My Wrath’” (see also 6:12–13c), an idea supported by the statement here that the Mercy of God is ever nigh unto the virtuous. A constant balance between fear and hope, moreover, is considered spiritually beneficial in that it prevents a person from falling into either moral lassitude or spiritual despair. See 32:16, which praises those whose sides shun [their] beds, who call upon their Lord out of fear and hope and who spend from that which We have provided them. If God’s Mercy is nigh unto the virtuous in particular, it is because God singles out for His Mercy whomsoever He will (2:105; 3:74); and God may cause whomsoever He will to enter into His Mercy (48:25; see also 42:8; 76:31), though His Mercy encompasses all things (v. 156).

57 He it is Who sends the winds as glad tidings ahead of His Mercy, so that when they bear heavy-laden clouds, We may drive them toward a land that is dead, and send down water upon it, and thereby bring forth every kind of fruit. Thus shall We bring forth the dead, that haply you may remember.

57 The idea that God sends forth the winds as glad tidings ahead of His Mercy is also found in 25:48; 27:63; 30:46. In these verses, God’s Mercy is closely associated with rain, which al-Zamakhsharī describes as among the most majestic and beautiful of God’s blessings. The mention of winds in the plural form is generally a sign or harbinger of Divine Mercy and Bounty, although wind in the singular is also invoked in certain verses as a destructive force under God’s command (see, e.g., 3:117; 30:48–49c; 35:9c). Similarly, the heavy-laden clouds portend life-giving rain, reviving a land that is dead. Here, as in many other places, the revival of drought-stricken lands through rain is offered as a metaphor and a symbolic proof for the resurrection of human beings after their death (see, e.g., 30:19; 35:9; 43:11; 50:11). But a rainstorm can also prove destructive—thus it is something to be both feared and hoped for—and the image of a gathering storm invoked in this verse may also serve as a potent reminder that one must always call upon God in fear and in hope (v. 56). See 13:12 and 30:24, where lightning, which also signals a coming storm, and therefore rain, is said to engender both fear and hope. That haply you may remember refers to remembrance of the resurrection, remembrance that may be encouraged by reflecting on the revival of dead land.

58 As for the good land, its vegetation comes forth by the leave of its Lord. And as for the bad, it comes forth but sparsely. Thus do We vary the signs for a people who give thanks.

58 This verse continues the metaphor of rain and its revival of dead land, but adds a word of warning to this image. Although the rain, as a symbol of God’s Mercy, falls upon the land and causes it to bring forth every kind of fruit (v. 57), the quality and abundance of the vegetation produced also depends on the quality or receptivity of the land, which symbolizes the human heart and its receptivity to Divine Mercy and Revelation. When rain falls upon good land, like His Mercy upon a believing heart, it produces fruits by the leave of its Lord; but when it falls upon bad land, or a disbelieving and “hardened” heart, its fruits come forth but sparsely. Commentators also connect the coming of Divine Mercy, the descent of the rain, and the descent of the Quran and indicate that the Quran’s words are meant to take root in the soul of believers and bear fruit through their thoughts and actions, but will bring no benefit to those who are predisposed to disbelief (R, Ṭ). See 2:26: As for those who believe, they know it is the truth from their Lord, and as for those who disbelieve, they say, “What did God mean by this parable?” He misleads many by it, and He guides many by it, and He misleads none but the iniquitous. The parable in the present verse is similar to the well-known Gospel parable of the sower in Matthew 13, Mark 4, and Luke 8.

That God “varies the signs” means that He demonstrates the truth in multiple ways, including through the use of symbols and parables, for a people who give thanks—that is, for those inclined to reflect upon the spiritual meaning of natural phenomena (Z). This parable concerning the varying receptivity of hearts to Divine Mercy can be read as an opening commentary on the following series of accounts (in vv. 59–169) of communities who rejected the messages of warning that God had sent to them through various prophets. For these communities, like the bad land in this verse, the prophetic warnings from God yielded sparse results among them.

59 Indeed, We sent Noah unto his people, and he said, “O my people! Worship God! You have no god other than Him. Truly I fear for you the punishment of a tremendous day!”

59 This verse begins a long section (vv. 59–136) that details the missions of several prophets who were rejected by those to whom they were sent and whose rejection brought terrible punishments upon their people. The accounts of these prophets and their missions as presented here share many thematic and textual similarities that serve to underline the fundamental unity of purpose shared by all prophets as well as the common human tendencies that often have led various communities to reject the prophets and dismiss their warnings. Similar serial presentations of these “punishment accounts” are found in 11:25–100; 26:105–90; 54:9–42.

As in all serial presentations of these punishment accounts, this section begins with the story of Noah, his call to his people to worship the One God, and his warning of a punishment to come if they did not heed his call. The story of Noah in vv. 59–64 represents the first narrative account of Noah in the textual order of the Quran; other accounts of Noah’s story can be found in 10:71–73; 11:25–48; 23:23–30; 26:105–21; 54:9–15; and in Sūrah 71. Noah is identified in the Islamic tradition as Nūḥ ibn Lamak (Lamech) ibn Mitūshalah (Methushael) ibn Ukhnūkh (Enoch), the last being identified in the Islamic tradition with Idrīs, a Quranic prophet (19:56; 21:85; IK, R, Z). Others trace Noah’s lineage back to Adam through the latter’s son Shīth (Seth; IK, Th). Noah is also said to have been a carpenter and to have been fifty years old at the time of his prophetic call (Th, Z). In the chronological line of prophets, Noah is said to have been the prophet sent by God after Idrīs (Iḏrīs).

In this narrative, Noah's initial call to his people is an injunction to worship the One God, including a modified version of the Islamic testament of faith: You have no god other than Him (see also 11:26; 23:23). This call, which is also made by Hūd in v. 65, Ṣāliḥ in v. 73, and Shu'ayb in v. 85, functions as a unifying element of the prophetic narratives in this section. That the missions of these prophets, like that of Muhammad, are founded upon a call to worship the One God indicates the fundamental unity of the messages brought by the prophets and furthers the Islamic understanding of Muhammad as a restorer of the one original and true religion brought by all the prophets, rather than as the founder of an entirely "new" one; see 46:9, where Muhammad is instructed to say I am no innovation among the messengers, and the essay "The Quranic View of Sacred History and Other Religions." Although the Biblical account of Noah makes no mention of his people's worship of other gods, the Quran indicates that they worshipped false deities whom Noah's opponents mention by name in 71:23 as Wadd, Suwā', Yagūth, Ya'ūq, and Naṣr. According to some, these were the names of their ancestors whom Noah's people had, over time, come to worship (IK). The punishment of a tremendous day may refer to the earthly punishment of the flood, the punishment decreed on the Day of Judgment (R, Z), or both.

60 The notables among his people said, "Truly we think that you are in manifest error."

61 He said, "O my people! There is no error in me, but rather I am a messenger from the Lord of the worlds.

62 I deliver unto you the messages of my Lord, and advise you sincerely, and I know from God what you know not.

60–62 The notables among his people are the ones who voice their opposition to Noah's call, perhaps as representatives of his community at large. It is the notables or "leaders" who articulate their people's rejection of the prophets in most of the punishment accounts in this sūrah (see vv. 66, 75, 88, 103) and elsewhere in the Quran (see 10:75, 88; 11:27, 38, 97; 23:24, 33, 46; 26:34; 28:20, 32; 38:6; 43:23, 46). See also 6:123, in which the great ones are said to be among the guilty in every town. The prophetic narratives in the Quran were meant, in part, to console and reassure the Prophet as he faced the rejection of his own people (R, Ṭs), and the repeated mention of the notables as being among the previous prophets' most outspoken critics may have been of particular comfort to Muhammad as he struggled with the leaders or notables of the Quraysh and their persistent opposition to the message he brought. As in all such cases, however, the recounting of God's assistance to the righteous against those who reject His religion could serve as comfort for all believers.

The people of Noah consider him to be in manifest error for having rejected worship of their idols (Ṭs), but Noah responds that his function as a messenger from the Lord of the worlds is simply to deliver . . . the messages of my Lord—as is the case with all prophets (IK; cf. 3:20; 13:40; 29:18)—and to serve as a “sincere adviser” to them. Similar claims of being a “sincere” or “trustworthy” adviser to their people are made by Noah in 11:34, Hūd in vv. 67–68, and Ṣāliḥ in vv. 79, 93. The prophets' description as “sincere advisers” to their people may be contrasted with Satan's false claim to be a sincere adviser to Adam and Eve in v. 21. Noah's warning, I know from God what you know not refers, most directly, to the great punishment that is about to come upon his people (Th).

63 Or do you marvel that a reminder from your Lord should come unto you by means of a man from among yourselves, so as to warn you, that you might be reverent, and that haply you may receive mercy?”

63 Here Noah challenges his people by articulating one basis of their rejection of his message, namely, that they cannot believe that God would send a message by means of a man like themselves (see 11:27 and 23:24, where they state this objection themselves). See also v. 69, where Hūd makes an identical challenge to his people. The Quraysh who rejected the Prophet Muhammad also did so, in part, because they were incredulous that God would send His message through a human being like themselves, rather than by means of or accompanied by an angel (see 6:8; 11:12; 17:94–95; 25:7), or by someone who enjoyed greater prestige among them than did Muhammad (see 43:31). That Noah and Hūd (in v. 69) faced similar attitudes from their people was also meant, like other elements of these prophetic narratives, to strengthen the resolve of the Prophet in the face of his own struggles with the Quraysh.

64 Yet they denied him. So We saved him and those who were with him in the Ark, and We drowned those who denied Our signs. Truly they were a blind people.

64 Noah's people continued their denial and so were drowned in the ensuing flood; see 54:11–12 for descriptions of the flood and the Islamic understanding of this event. God spares Noah, however, and those who were with him in the Ark, as we also find in the Biblical account (Genesis 7–9). In the punishment accounts in the Quran, the prophets are always saved from the destruction brought upon their people, as are their believing family members or other followers, for as the Quran asks rhetorically, Were the Punishment of God to come upon you suddenly or openly, would any be destroyed save the wrongdoing people? (6:47). In Noah's case, those spared along with him included members of his family (11:40), except for one of his sons (see 11:42–43) and perhaps his wife, whom the Quran describes as a disbeliever in 66:10. Those aboard the ark are said to have included his three sons, Sām (Shem), Hām (Ham), and Yāfath (Japheth), perhaps their wives, and six other believers (Ṭ, Z). Other accounts indicate that there were eighty people (forty men and forty women) saved in the ark (IK, Z). As in the Biblical account, the Ark in which Noah, his family, and a handful of believers were saved is described as a wooden vessel (54:13) built by Noah himself, upon God's command (11:37–38; 23:27).

65 And unto °Ād, their brother, Hūd. He said, “O my people! Worship God! You have no god other than Him. Will you not be reverent?”

65 Hūd is an Arab prophet whose story is also told in some detail in 11:50–60; 26:123–39; 46:21–25; 54:18–21. Although Hūd has no counterpart in the Biblical text, the Islamic tradition maintains that he and his people are descendants of Noah through the latter's son Sām (Shem; IK, Ṭ's). In one account, the lineage of Hūd is given as Hūd ibn Shalikh (Shaleh) ibn Arfakhshath (Arpachshad) ibn Sām (Shem) ibn Nūḥ (Noah; Ṭ's, Z), with all of his ancestors having Biblical counterparts (see Genesis 10:21–24). Another account identifies Hūd as Hūd ibn °Ād ibn Iram ibn °Awṣ ibn Sām ibn Nūḥ (IK, Ṭ's), based on 89:6–7: Hast thou not seen how thy Lord dealt with ʿĀd, Iram the pillared. Hūd’s call to his people to worship the One God is identical to that of Noah in v. 59 (see commentary on this verse). The ʿĀd people are said to have originated in southern Arabia, between Ḥaḍramawt in southern Yemen and Oman (IK, Z). This was a region with many sand dunes (aḥqāf; Th)—the latter being the name of Sūrah 46, which includes an account of the ʿĀd (IK, Z).

66 The notables among his people who disbelieved said, “Truly we think that you are foolish, and we consider you to be among the liars.”

67 He said, “O my people! There is no foolishness in me, but rather I am a messenger from the Lord of the worlds.

68 I deliver unto you the messages of my Lord, and truly I am a trustworthy adviser unto you.

66–68 Hūd’s people reject his call by claiming that he is foolish and among the liars, whereas Noah’s people had accused him of being in error (v. 60). The response of both prophets is similar, however, denying their people’s accusations and asserting that their purpose is simply to deliver the messages from God and to serve as a sincere or trustworthy adviser to their people—qualities Ibn Kathīr notes are common to all prophets (see 7:60–62c). Noah, however, is said to have been rejected by the notables among his people in general, while Hūd is opposed only by the notables among his people who disbelieved (also in 23:33), since some of the leading members of Hūd’s people were reportedly believers in his message (Z).

69 Or do you marvel that a reminder from your Lord should come to you by means of a man from among yourselves, so as to warn you? Remember when He made you vicegerents after the people of Noah, and increased you amply in stature. So remember the boons of God, that haply you may prosper.”

69 Like Noah, Hūd challenges his people’s inability to accept that God would send a message through a mere human being like themselves (see 7:63c). The people of ʿĀd were made vicegerents after the people of Noah, meaning that they were their successors on the earth and inherited a position of sovereignty (Z)—both successorship and inheritance being implied in the Arabic word for vicegerents (khulafāʾ). That God increased them amplly in stature refers to their reportedly gigantic size. Legendary accounts say that the smallest of them was 60 and the largest 100 cubits in height, or between 120 and 200 feet tall (Ṭs, Z). The boons of God thus refer to their succession and sovereignty on the earth and their great size (Z). In addition to calling his people to monotheistic worship, Hūd is also said to have warned them against behaving oppressively toward others. Some accounts report that because of their large size, they were able to conquer much territory beyond their native region (IK).

70 They said, “Have you come unto us so that we may worship God alone, and leave aside what our fathers worshipped? Then bring upon us that wherewith you have threatened us, if you are truthful.”

70 The people of ʿĀd respond to Hūd’s call in ways that are common to many communities of disbelievers who reject their prophets. Their first response is a stated unwillingness to abandon the false gods and deities worshipped by their fathers (see also, e.g., 2:170; 5:104; 7:28; 10:78; 11:62, 87; 14:10; 31:21; 34:43; 43:22). The claims of those who observe false religious practices that they should be excused on the basis that they were simply “following their fathers” is never accepted in any context in the Quran. Vv. 172–73 recount God’s taking a pretemporal covenant with all of humanity in which they acknowledged His Lordship, because of which the excuse that people’s forefathers had misled them in their religious beliefs could never be accepted. The second response of Hūd’s people is to challenge the prophet to bring about the punishment and destruction with which he has threatened them (cf. 46:22); the same challenge is issued to Noah in 11:32, and a nearly identical statement is made to Ṣāliḥ in v. 77. Such audacious challenges to the warnings brought by the prophets indicate a complete lack of faith, and in response to similar challenges elsewhere the Quran intimates that there is danger in seeking to hasten God’s punishment; see 10:48–50; 21:37–38; 27:71–72, and especially 46:24, where the cloud that brings the destructive wind upon the ʿĀd is described to them as what you sought to hasten.

71 He said, “Defilement and wrath have already come upon you from your Lord. Do you dispute with me over names that you have named—you and your fathers—for which God has sent down no authority? Then wait! Truly I am waiting along with you.”

71 Defilement translates rijs, which can mean a state of filth that results from a physical soiling or the shame that stems from moral disgrace. Commentators note, however, that rijs overlaps in meaning with the similar Quranic term rijz (Ṭ), which means both filth or defilement and punishment (see 29:33–34c). In the present context, then, rijs is said, like rijz, to refer to the imminent punishment or Divine Wrath that has already been engendered by the ʿĀd’s rejection of Hūd and that will soon be visited upon them (IK, Ṭ, Th, Z). The idolatry of the ʿĀd, which they defend as the worship what our fathers worshipped (v. 70), is dismissed by Hūd as the worship of mere names that you have named (cf. 12:40; 53:23), for God is the only legitimate recipient of worship and He alone gives and teaches human beings the “names” of all things (2:31). The names that you have named and for which God has sent down no authority thus have no ontological reality, and worshipping them is futile, for they can bring neither harm nor benefit (IK, Ṭ). Hūd tells his people, by way of a threat (IK), Wait! Truly I am waiting along with you; that is, “Wait for God to judge between us” (Ṭ). The Prophet Muhammad is instructed to respond to his people in a similar manner on several occasions; see 6:158; 9:52; 10:20, 102; 11:122; 52:31.

72 So We saved him and those who were with him through a mercy from Us, and We cut off the last remnant of those who denied Our signs and were not believers.

72 That God cut off the last remnant of those who denied the signs brought by Hūd refers to their collective punishment by means of a fierce wind that destroyed all but Hūd and those who were with him (cf. 41:16; 54:19; 69:6–7). According to some accounts, when the ʿĀd rejected Hūd’s call, God punished them with drought for three years. A group of them went to Makkah to pray and beseech God to relieve them, although they continued to disbelieve in Hūd and his warning. In response to their prayers three clouds appeared, one white, one red, and one black, and a heavenly herald asked them to choose among them. They chose the black cloud, which God then drove until it reached their town. Its inhabitants initially took the cloud to be a good sign and a harbinger of life-giving rain (cf. 46:24), but the cloud soon brought down upon them a violent, destructive wind that is described in another verse as tearing out people as if they were uprooted palm trunks (54:20; Bg, IK, Th, Ṭs, Z). Thereafter, Hūd and the believers among his people were said to have traveled to Makkah and to have worshipped there until they died (Z).

73 And unto Thamūd, their brother, Ṣāliḥ. He said, “O my people! Worship God! You have no god other than Him. There has come unto you a clear proof from your Lord. This she-camel of God is a sign unto you. Leave her to graze freely on God’s earth, and cause her no harm, lest a painful punishment seize you.

73 This verse begins the account of the Arabian prophet Ṣāliḥ, sent to his people, the Thamūd, who, like the tribe of °Ād, were reportedly descendants of Noah’s son Shem (Ṭ, Z). Ṣāliḥ’s full name is given as Ṣāliḥ ibn °Ubayd ibn Asif ibn Māsikh ibn °Ubayd ibn Khādir ibn Thamūd (Th). He is described as having been among the noblest and most well respected members of the Thamūd prior to his prophetic mission (Ṭ, Th), which began when he was still a youth (Th). The Thamūd were said to inhabit a high rocky plain known as al-Ḥijr located in western Arabia, between the Ḥijāz and Syria. Al-Ḥijr is also the title of Sūrah 15; and 15:80–83 briefly recounts the story of the Thamūd, who are identified in this passage as the inhabitants of al-Ḥijr. Other narrative accounts of Ṣāliḥ are found in 11:61–68; 26:141–58; 54:23–31. Ṣāliḥ’s account, like that of Noah and Hūd before him, begins with a call to monotheistic belief and worship (see also vv. 59, 65; 11:61).

Clear proof is used throughout the Quran to refer to scriptural revelations, prophetic warnings, and miracles given to the prophets to convince their people (see, e.g., 2:87; 3:105; 4:153; 5:32; 6:157; 7:101; 9:70; 10:13; 14:9; 16:44; 19:73). In the case of Ṣāliḥ, the clear proof was the pregnant she-camel that he miraculously brought forth from a large rock after his people had requested a sign confirming his prophethood (Ṭ, Z; see also 26:154). Insofar as the Thamūd are eventually destroyed for slaughtering the she-camel that they had requested as a sign, the story serves as one of many Quranic warnings about those who treat the signs of God with disdain as well as a more particular warning about the danger of asking for signs and the necessity of believing in them once they have been granted (see also

The Thamūd are instructed to allow the camel to graze freely on God's earth without harm (see also 11:64). The command to treat the sacred she-camel in this way bears similarities to the pagan Arab practices of allowing certain camels to roam and graze without interference, while forbidding their use or slaughter, although the Quran criticizes these latter practices for the arbitrary manner in which the sacrosanct nature of such animals was assigned to them by the pagan Arabs themselves (see 5:103c; 6:138c). In the case of Ṣāliḥ and his people, however, the she-camel is a miraculously produced sign for the Thamūd, whom Ṣāliḥ warns of a painful punishment if they were to harm her in any way (see also 26:156). They were also instructed to allow the she-camel sole access to the drinking well every other day and to alternate access to the well between themselves and the camel (54:28; 26:155). Although the she-camel, after having drunk from the well, would produce abundant milk to supply all the Thamūd, they grew resentful of sharing the well and complained that the camel's enormous size tended to frighten off their other livestock (Ṭ, Z).

74 Remember when He made you vicegerents after °Ād and settled you on the earth: you build castles for yourselves on the open plain and hew dwellings in the mountains. So remember the boons of God, and behave not wickedly upon the earth, working corruption.”

74 Ṣāliḥ, like Hūd, reminds his people of the boons of God (cf. v. 69), among which is that He made them vicegerents after °Ād, meaning that they were given sovereignty after them, just as the °Ād had been vicegerents after Noah (see v. 69 and commentary). Among the boons of God was also their famed building ability, including their construction of dwellings in the mountains (cf. 15:82; 26:149; 89:9), vestiges of which were known to the Arabs of the Prophet's time and indeed remain to the present day. The Prophet and his army are said to have stopped near the remains of their mountain abodes on their way to an anticipated military campaign in Tabūk in 9/631. The Prophet, however, forbade his followers from drinking or using water from their wells and would not allow them to approach the well used by the sacred she-camel, lest they suffer the same fate as the Thamūd (IK). For a discussion of the Quranic concept of working corruption, see 7:56c.

75 The notables among his people who were arrogant said to those among them who believed and whom they deemed weak, “Do you know that Ṣāliḥ has been sent by his Lord?” They said, “Truly we believe in that wherewith he has been sent.”

76 Those who were arrogant said, “Truly we believe not in that which you believe.”

75–76 As with Noah and Hūd, it is especially the notables among Ṣāliḥ’s people who are too proud to accept his message (see v. 60; 7:60–62c; as well as vv. 66, 88, 90); and v. 75 suggests that those among the Thamūd who did believe in his prophethood were those deemed weak, that is, considered to be of lower social and economic standing (Ṭ). There are reports that some leading figures among the Thamūd believed, but they were overwhelmed by others, including the keeper of their idols, who strongly rejected Ṣāliḥ (IK, Th).

77 So they hamstrung the she-camel and insolently defied the Command of their Lord. And they said, “O Ṣāliḥ! Bring upon us that wherewith you have threatened us, if you are among those sent [by God].”

78 So the earthquake seized them, and morning found them lying lifeless in their abode.

77–78 Despite the divisions among the Thamūd regarding Ṣāliḥ and the message he brought, the commentators report that all the Thamūd eventually consented to a plot to hamstring and kill the she-camel (IK, Th, Z), thus indicating their collective guilt and liability to Divine punishment. According to some accounts, the killing of the she-camel was instigated by two women, one of whom was the wife of Dhiʿāb ibn ʿAmr, one of the leading disbelievers among the Thamūd (see 7:75–76c). She is said to have recruited a young man, who in turn recruited eight others, to carry out the slaughter; see 27:48, which refers to a group of nine persons working corruption among the Thamūd. After killing the she-camel, the camel’s young offspring ran off in distress and eventually disappeared. Ṣāliḥ then realized that the punishment of which he had been warning was imminent; he told his people that it would be visited upon them in three days, and that on each successive morning until that time, they would wake with their faces having turned yellow, then red, and finally black before their final destruction (IK, Ṭ, Th, Z). Like other peoples who rejected their prophets, the Thamūd revealed their disbelief by calling upon Ṣāliḥ to prove the truth of his prophethood by bringing upon them the punishment about which he had warned them (see 7:70c). After Ṣāliḥ issued his final warning, the same nine men who slaughtered the she-camel are said to have attempted to kill Ṣāliḥ himself, calculating spitefully that even if Ṣāliḥ’s warnings of imminent destruction were true, they would at least succeed in hastening Ṣāliḥ’s own death. Their attempt was thwarted, in one account, when the would-be assassins, on their way to kill Ṣāliḥ, were stoned to death by angels (Th).

As Ṣāliḥ had warned, the people woke on the third day with blackened faces and prepared themselves for death. Knowing that their punishment was certain and imminent, they laid themselves out on the floor in expectation of their demise. Earthquake here translates rajfah, and the destructive event was said to have entailed not only a violent shaking, but also a loud sound, like the crack of lightning accompanied by the cry of all living things on earth, which stopped the hearts of the people instantly in their breasts (Th), leaving them lying lifeless in their abode (see also 11:67). The same fate is said to have befallen the people of Midian in 7:91; 11:94; 29:37.

79 So he turned away from them and said, “O my people! I indeed delivered unto you the message of my Lord, and advised you sincerely, but you love not sincere advisers.”

79 Ṣāliḥ’s “turning away from them” may refer to his abandonment of the Thamūd in advance of their punishment, leaving their settlement along with a small number of believers (Ṭ, Z); or it may refer to his reaction to the destruction of his people, either when he turned back, saw smoke rising from their residences, and knew that they had been destroyed or after returning to find them lying lifeless in their abode (v. 78; Z). Like Noah and Hūd before him, Ṣāliḥ affirmed that he has fulfilled his responsibility to God and his people, having delivered . . . the message of my Lord and advised his people sincerely—the two essential vocations of the Quranic prophets (see v. 68; 7:60–62c). But although Noah and Hūd make their statements in a mood of warning, Ṣāliḥ says this with sadness and regret that, for all his efforts, he could not persuade his people to mend their ways (Z), or he says it by way of posthumous chastisement for his people's stubborn disbelief (IK).

That the dead can hear such rebukes from the living is supported by the report that the Prophet addressed the dead at the Battle of Badr, asking them if they had found God's Promise to be true. When 'Umar expressed surprise at the Prophet's addressing the dead, the Prophet replied that the dead could hear as well as the living, even if they could not respond (IK).

Some reports indicate that Ṣāliḥ and those who believed in him returned to the settlement of the Thamūd and took up residence in the homes of those who had been killed (Z), while others suggest that Ṣāliḥ, like other Arabian prophets whose people were destroyed, migrated to Makkah and settled there (IK).

80 And Lot, when he said to his people, "What! Do you commit an indecency such as none in the world committed before you?

81 Verily you come with desire unto men instead of women. Indeed, you are a prodigal people!"

80–81 Lot (Lūṭ in Arabic) is the nephew of Abraham, and his people refers to the people of Sodom. Lot reportedly settled in Sodom, but was unrelated to its native inhabitants. Lot's full name is given as Lūṭ ibn Hārān ibn Āzar or Tirākh (Terah, the Biblical name of Abraham's father; IK, Ṭs); another report identifies him as Abraham's maternal cousin and as the brother of Abraham's wife Sarah (Sārā; Ṭs). For other narrative accounts of Lot and his people, see 11:77–83; 15:57–77; 26:160–73; 27:54–58; 29:28–35; 37:133–38; 54:33–38; and the similar Biblical narrative in Genesis 19. Lot is said to have become a believer along with Abraham and to have traveled with him to Syria (Ṭs); but while Abraham went on to Palestine, Lot turned toward Jordan (Th). He is said to have been sent by God as a messenger to Sodom and the surrounding towns to call them to worship the One God, and abandon their sinful and prodigal behavior (IK, Ṭs).

The indecency for which Lot chastises his people is that of men coming with desire unto men instead of women, understood by the traditional commentators to refer to the practice of homosexuality (Ṭ; cf. 26:165–66; 27:55; 29:29) and sodomy specifically (Th, Ṭs), a practice that the verse indicates originated with the Sodomites of Lot's time. One report indicates that the people of Sodom engaged in this practice only with those who were outsiders in their town (Ṭs), which is consistent with their having demanded access to the angels who had visited Lot, whom they clearly perceived as foreigners (see commentary on 11:77–78; 15:61–70); other commentators, however, suggest that the men of Sodom preferred sexual relations with men to relations with women on a regular basis (IK, Th). The aggressive behavior of the men of Sodom in the Biblical account as well as in 11:77–79 and 15:67–71 has led some to speculate that the real crime of the people of Lot was forcible sodomy, rather than consensual homosexual relations. Although the emphasis in v. 81 as well as in parallel accounts in 26:165–66; 27:55; 29:29 is explicitly on the act of men desiring men instead of women, the insolent and violent manner in which the men of Sodom sought to fulfill their desires is clearly implied in the account of Lot found in 11:77–80. Lot describes them as a prodigal people, understood to mean that they transgressed the limits of what is lawful to consume or enjoy by having sexual relations with men, rather than with women, the latter being those made lawful for them (Ṭ's). Prodigal translates musrifūn, which can also mean to be excessive and wasteful (see 7:31c; 10:12c). Al-Zamakhsharī describes “prodigality” (isrāf) as the root of all evil, and in 6:141 and 7:31 it is said that God loves not the prodigal.

82 And the reply of his people was but to say, “Expel them from your town! Truly they are a people who keep themselves pure.”

82 The threat or plan to expel them—that is, the family of Lot (cf. 26:167; 27:56)—extended, according to some commentators, to a group of believing followers of Lot as well (Ṭ, Z). The disbelievers among the people of Sodom also deride Lot and his followers’ moral probity, describing them as those who keep themselves pure (cf. 27:56). Their “purity,” according to some commentators, was a reference to their refusal to participate in the sexual practices of the Sodomites (Ṭ, Z).

83 So We saved him and his family, except for his wife; she was among those who lagged behind.

83 As with the other prophets discussed in this section, God saved Lot and his family, which is widely understood as including the believers who followed Lot as well as his immediate family (Ṭ). Lot's wife, however, was one of those who lagged behind and thus perished with the rest of Sodom (see also 15:60; 26:171; 27:57; 29:32). She is said to have followed the religion of Lot, at least outwardly, but to have been inwardly a disbeliever (Ṭ, Ṭs); also see 29:31–32c. In the Biblical account, Lot's wife left with him, but turned to look back and so became a pillar of salt (Genesis 19:26). A similar version of events is also mentioned by some commentators (Z) and is suggested in 15:65, where Lot is commanded: So set out with thy family during the night, and follow behind them, and let not any of you turn around, but go forth wheresoever you are commanded.

84 And We sent down a rain upon them; so behold how the guilty fared in the end.

84 That Lot's people were destroyed by a catastrophic rain, described by commentators as a rain of stones (Ṭ, Ṭs, Z), is also found in 11:82 and 15:74 (in both these verses it is a rain of stones of baked clay) as well as in 26:173 and 27:58. In 29:34, they are destroyed by a torment from Heaven, and in 54:34, by a torrent of stones. The command to behold how the guilty fared in the end is repeated verbatim or in similar form in several verses and is often preceded by the mention of "journeying upon the earth," indicating that the Arabs were able not only to reflect on the stories of these earlier peoples, but in some cases could see for themselves the ruins of their civilizations that remained in parts of Arabia (cf., e.g., 3:137; 6:11; 10:40; 16:36; 27:14). This command to consider the fate of the guilty is addressed to the Prophet, enjoining him to reflect on the fate of those who had rejected their messengers, even as he faced rejection by many of his own people. This and similar passages were meant as a warning that the people of Makkah could expect the same fate, should they persist in their denial of Muhammad's prophethood (Ṭ).

85 And unto Midian, their brother, Shu^ʿayb. He said, "O my people! Worship God! You have no god other than Him. There has come unto you a clear proof from your Lord. So observe fully the measure and the balance and diminish not people's goods, nor work corruption upon the earth after it has been set aright. That is better for you, if you are believers.

85 Shu^ʿayb’s full name is given by the early historian Ibn Ishāq (d. 150/767) as Shu^ʿayb ibn Mīkīl ibn Yashjar (or Yashḥab; Ṭ, Ṭs); others have identified him as Shu^ʿayb ibn Tawbah (or Buwayb or Nuwayb) ibn Midian (Th, Ṭs). Shu^ʿayb is referred to in Islamic tradition as the “Orator of the Prophets” (Khaṭīb al-anbiyāʾ) because of the eloquence and rhetorical power of his preaching (IK, Ṭ, Th). He is considered an Arab prophet, although the people of Midian are known in the Bible, and Shu^ʿayb is usually identified with the Biblical figure Jethro, the father-in-law of Moses, since the Quran mentions that Moses met his future wife and father-in-law in the area of Midian (see 26:22–23). The people of Midian are said to have resided in northwestern Arabia, near Ma^ʿān in Jordan (IK), and to have descended from Midian, a son of Abraham (Ṭ, Ṭs, Z). In Genesis 25:2, Midian is mentioned as a son born to Abraham through a wife named Keturah, whom Abraham takes after the death of Sarah; some rabbinic commentators have identified Keturah with Hagar, although most reject this opinion. Midian is said to have married the daughter of Lot (Ṭs, Z), thus making the Midianites descendants of both Lot and Abraham. According to some commentators Shu^ʿayb was sent to both the people of Midian and the people of al-Aykah, “the Thicket” (Ṭ, Ṭs, Z; cf. 15:78; 26:176; 38:13; 50:14), while others consider the two to be references to the same people (IK, Th). For other narrative accounts of Shu^ʿayb, see 11:84–95; 26:176–89.

Shu^ʿayb’s mission to the people of Midian begins, like that of Noah, Hūd, and Ṣāliḥ, with a call to worship the One God (cf. 29:36). Like Ṣāliḥ, he defends the truth of his message by asserting that a clear proof had come to them from God. As mentioned in 7:73c, clear proof is used throughout the Quran to refer to scriptural revelations, prophetic warnings, and miracles given to prophets to convince their people. Some commentators suggested that the clear proofs, in Shu^ʿayb’s case, may refer to evidentiary miracles (mu^ʿjizāt) that he and, according to Islamic tradition, all prophets were given to perform as a confirmation of their prophethood, although no specific miracles are attributed to Shu^ʿayb in the Quran (Ṭs, Z).

The injunction to observe fully the measure and the balance is a call to integrity and honesty in commercial transactions, and by extension other dealings, an injunction also found in several other passages (see 6:151–52c; 17:35; 18:1–3; 83:1–4). That they should not diminish . . . people’s goods means that they should render to them in full the goods for which they had paid. Among the Quranic prophets, it is Shu^ʿayb whose mission is particularly associated with the call to avoid fraudulent commercial practices; see 11:84–85 and 26:181–83, where he makes an identical call to the people of Midian and al-Aykah (“the Thicket”), respectively. In the Bible and in Biblical commentaries, the Midianites were considered to be merchants who worked along the incense routes, an idea that is consistent with Shu^ʿayb’s particular call to them. The idea of measurement and balance is a prominent theme in the Quran, having not only commercial but also cosmological significance; several passages indicate that God measures out all created existence and sets the created order in balance (cf., e.g., 13:8; 15:19–21; 23:18; 25:2; 42:27; 54:49; 65:3; 73:20).

In some passages, a relationship is suggested between God’s measuring and balancing, and the moral requirement that human beings observe proper measure and balance; see 55:7–9. Shu^ʿayb’s warning against working corruption upon the earth is also part of his essential message, both to the people of Midian and those of al-Aykah; cf. 11:85; 26:183; 29:36. Ṣāliḥ similarly warns his people against “working corruption” in v. 74. For further discussion of “working corruption upon the earth,” see 7:56c. That the earth has been set aright—that is, by God—indicates not only that He has established balance and harmony in its natural order, but also that He has provided the means of “setting matters aright” in human society, through His prophets and the commands and prohibitions they establish (Ṭ, Z).

86 And do not lie in wait on every path, threatening and turning away those who believe in Him from the way of God, and seeking to make it crooked. And remember when you were few, and He made you many. And behold how the workers of corruption fared in the end!

86 Shu^ʿayb further urges the people of Midian not to lie in wait on every path, threatening and diverting people from the way of God, which is the course of action to which Satan dedicates himself after he is expelled from the Divine Presence (see v. 16). In the specific case of the people of Midian, this may mean that they turned people away from the right path by denouncing Shu^ʿayb as a liar (Ṭs, Z) or by threatening or otherwise hindering those who came along the road seeking to become followers of Shu^ʿayb (IK, Ṭs). It may also mean that they inhibited people journeying along the physical road by blocking it or collecting tithes (IK, Z), perhaps in an exploitative or threatening manner (IK), given their apparent penchant for unethical commercial practices and their reported location along important trade routes (see 7:85c).

Although the verse may refer to specific practices of the people of Midian, its more general spiritual significance is clear from the terms and phrases used to describe them. Path here translates ṣirāṭ, which in the Quran refers to the path to truth and serves as a symbol for a life lived according to Divine guidance; see commentary on 1:6–7. It is essentially synonymous with the way of God (sabīl Allāh), mentioned in this same verse. Although commentators assert that the path to God is a single “straight path,” ṣirāṭ mustaqīm (Z; see, e.g., 1:6; 2:142; 3:51; 4:68; 5:16), on every path here seems to suggest that there is more than one straight path. Al-Zamakhsharī explains that although the path is one, it has many branches, and it is this path with its branches to which reference is made here. The idea of seeking to make . . . crooked the way of God—understood to mean seeking to convince others that the way of God is crooked (Z)—is also found in 3:99; 7:45; 11:19; 14:3; see 7:45c.

87 If a group of you believe in that wherewith I have been sent, and a group of you believe not, then be patient till God shall judge between us, and He is the best of judges.”

87 Shu‘ayb instructs his people to be patient till God shall judge between us, that is, by aiding the believers and affirmers of truth over the disbelievers and champions of falsehood (Z). He says this as a means of warning the disbelievers (Z), but also of encouraging the believers (Ṭs). In the case of the Midianites, as with the people of Noah, Hūd, Ṣāliḥ, and Lot, Divine punishment takes various forms of earthly destruction from which the prophets and their followers are spared. The ominous instruction to “wait” or “be patient” is also made by Noah (v. 71) and by Muhammad, who is told to respond to the Quraysh’s continued denial in a similar manner in 6:158; 9:52; 10:20, 102; 11:122; 20:135; 52:31. That God is the best of judges is also stated in 10:109; 11:45; 12:80; 95:8. In 6:57 and 7:89, He is similarly said to be the best of deciders.

88 The notables among his people who were arrogant said, “We shall surely expel you, O Shu‘ayb, and those who believe along with you from our town, unless you revert to our creed.” He said, “What! Even though we are unwilling?”

89 We would be fabricating a lie against God were we to revert to your creed after God had delivered us from it. It is not for us to revert thereto unless God, our Lord, should will. Our Lord encompasses all things in knowledge. In God do we trust. Our Lord! Decide between us and our people in truth, and Thou art the best of deciders.”

88–89 For a discussion of the notables and their particularly outspoken opposition to the prophets in several Quranic narratives, see 7:60–62c. Shu^ʿayb, like Lot (v. 82), is threatened with having himself and his followers “expelled” from the town, unless he should revert to the creed and religious practices of the Midianites. Reverting to such a creed, Shu^ʿayb asserts, would amount to fabricating a lie against God, something the Quran identifies as among the greatest sins, for who does greater wrong than one who fabricates a lie against God? (6:21, 93, 144; 7:37; 10:17; 11:18; 18:15; 19:68; 61:7). Reverting in this way would also make Shu^ʿayb and his followers effectively “apostates,” who are, according to some commentators, worse than disbelievers, because such people presumably are capable of discerning true religion from false religion since they were followers of the former, but nonetheless have now renounced it and follow what they know to be false (Z). That God encompasses all things in knowledge is also found in 6:80; 20:98; 65:12. Shu^ʿayb’s exclamation in God do we trust demonstrates his confidence that God would protect and deliver him and his followers from the threats of the disbelievers (Th), but also points to the central spiritual virtue of trust in God (tawakkul); see 14:11–12c; 39:38c. His request to God that He decide between us and our people in truth is similar to his statement in v. 87 bidding his people to wait for God’s decision between the believers and the disbelievers.

90 The notables among his people who disbelieved said, “Verily if you follow Shu^ʿayb, you shall surely be the losers.”

90 The notables, or leaders among the disbelievers, warned that those who followed Shu^ʿayb would be the losers, meaning those who are deceived with regard to their religion, and that abandoning their native religious practice to follow Shu^ʿayb would lead to destruction (Ṭ). In v. 92, however, it is those who denied Shu^ʿayb who were the losers.

91 So the earthquake seized them, and morning found them lying lifeless in their abode.

92 Those who denied Shu^cayb, it was as though they had never dwelt there. Those who denied Shu^cayb, they themselves were the losers.

91–92 The description of the destruction of the Midianites is identical to that of the Thamūd, the people of Ṣāliḥ. See v. 78 and commentary. It is reported that when the people of Midian denied Shu^cayb, God first sent upon them such a terrible heat that even shade and water could provide no relief. God then sent upon them a cloud, bearing cool, refreshing breezes. When all the people of Midian had gathered beneath this cloud, it unleashed upon them flame and fire (IK, Ṭ, Th), followed by a terrible cry and an earthquake that instantly extinguished their spirits and left them suddenly lifeless (IK). The people of Midian were so thoroughly effaced by the earthquake that it was as though they had never dwelt there. In response to the Midianite disbelievers' description of Shu^cayb's followers as the losers in v. 90, the present verse affirms that it is the disbelievers who were the losers, that is, deceived or deluded about true religion and destroyed as a result.

93 So he turned away from them and said, “O my people! I indeed delivered unto you the messages of my Lord, and advised you sincerely. So how can I grieve for a disbelieving people?”

93 Shu^cayb's address to his people (except for the last sentence) is identical to that of Ṣāliḥ, and the same question arises as to whether this address was delivered after his people had been thoroughly destroyed or only after the prophet became certain that their destruction was imminent and unavoidable; see v. 79 and commentary.

94 We sent no prophet to a town but that We seized its people with misfortune and hardship, that haply they would humble themselves.

95 Then We replaced evil [circumstances] with good, till they multiplied and said, “Hardship and ease visited our fathers [as well].” Then We seized them suddenly, while they were unaware.

94–95 These verses begin a section, vv. 94–102, that serves as a commentary on and conclusion to the prophetic narratives of Noah, Hūd, Ṣāliḥ, Lot, and Shu‘ayb. In both general and specific ways, the Quran indicates that the sending of a prophetic messenger is often accompanied by some form of adversity for his people as a moral test. In v. 94, misfortune and hardship refer to poverty, hunger, illness, and various forms of loss (see 6:42–44c). In some cases, as mentioned in v. 95, the test consists of an alternation between hardship and ease, since God tries people with good and bad fortune (cf. v. 168) to engender both humility and gratitude. The good fortune that replaced their earlier adversity continued till they multiplied—that is, until they increased in both wealth and children (Ṭ), the two worldly goods that give people a false sense of “security” (cf. vv. 97–99) with regard to both the vicissitudes of this life and punishment in the next; see, for example, 34:34–35: And We sent no warner unto a town, but that those living in luxury therein said, “We disbelieve in that wherewith you have been sent.” And they say, “We are greater in wealth and children, and we shall not be punished.” In v. 95, some fail the test by attributing both adversity and ease to the normal course of earthly life (R, Z), rather than understanding them as a test or a gift from God. As a result, they become heedless and complacent, and thus are seized . . . suddenly by Divine punishment while in this state of ease and thus unaware. See commentary on the very similar passage in 6:42–44.

⑨6 Had the people of the towns believed and been reverent, We would surely have opened unto them blessings from Heaven and earth. But they denied, so We seized them for that which they used to earn.

96 If, by contrast, the people of the towns had believed, God would have opened unto them blessings from Heaven and earth, which may refer to the opening of the heavens to send down rain, so that crops would grow abundantly on the earth (IK, R, Z), but could also refer metaphorically and by extension to God’s providing them with all manner of good things (Z), including security and peace (R), which can also be understood spiritually to mean security and peace for the soul.

97 Did the people of the towns feel secure from Our Might coming upon them by night, while they were sleeping?

98 Or did the people of the towns feel secure from Our Might coming upon them in broad daylight, while they were playing?

99 Did they feel secure from God's plotting? None feels secure from God's plotting, save the people who are losers.

97-99 The series of rhetorical questions in these verses emphasizes the foolishness of feeling "secure" in the life in the world or "secure" from God's punishment, which may come in either this world or the next. This idea is found in other verses, such as 10:7-8: Truly those who anticipate not the meeting with Us, and who are content with the life of this world and feel secure therein, and who are heedless of Our signs, it is they whose refuge shall be the Fire for that which they used to earn; and 16:45: Do those who have plotted evil deeds feel secure that God will not cause the earth to engulf them, or that the punishment will not come upon them whence they are not aware? (cf. 12:107; 17:68-69; 67:16-17).

The questions posed in vv. 97-98 indicate that God's punishment may descend by night, while people are asleep, and so unconscious and unaware, or in broad daylight, while they were playing, that is, distracted by their engagement with affairs of this world, which is itself described as mere play and diversion in several verses (6:32; 29:64; 47:36; 57:20). According to al-Rāzī, God will send down punishment upon such disbelievers when they are in the greatest state of heedlessness. God's plotting is mentioned in several verses and refers to God's ultimate control over the outcome of all events; it is frequently juxtaposed with the futility of human "plotting" by comparison (cf. 3:54; 10:21; 13:42; 14:46; 16:26; 27:50). Here, God's plotting may refer specifically to His seizing them with punishment while they were unaware (v. 95; R, Z), that is, while they were sleeping or playing.

100 Does it not serve as guidance unto those who inherited the earth after its [earlier] inhabitants that, if We willed, We could smite them for their sins and set a seal upon their hearts such that they would not hear?

100 This verse indicates that the stories of past peoples and their destruction on account of their sins and their rejection of their messengers is meant as a warning for those who inherited the earth after them, that is, all later peoples who might be similarly destroyed for their sins. In the context of the Prophet's life, however, this was perhaps directed specifically at the Quraysh (R), since, like the peoples of Noah, Hūd, Šāliḥ, Lot, and Shu'ayb before them, they rejected their prophet, Muhammad, and drove him from Makkah, his native city. The idea that God may set a seal upon people's hearts so that they cannot hear or understand religious truth—a punishment particularly for wrongdoing or disbelief—is found in several verses throughout the Quran (see 2:7c; 4:155; 6:46; 9:87, 93; 10:74; 16:108; 30:59; 40:35; 42:24; 45:23; 47:16; 63:3).

101 These are the towns whose stories We have recounted unto thee. Their messengers certainly brought them clear proofs, but they would not believe in what they had denied earlier. Thus does God set a seal upon the hearts of the disbelievers.

101 Cf. 11:100, where a nearly identical verse concludes a similar series of prophetic narratives of earthly destruction. The stories are recounted unto thee—that is, to the Prophet most specifically—so that he would be assured that God aids His prophets and the believers against their enemies in this world (Ṭ) as well as rewarding them in the next, and so that he might warn his own people, the Quraysh, of the fate that awaited them if they persisted in disbelief (R, Ṭs). Though all the messengers brought clear proofs of their prophethood and the Divine origin of their message, most of their people would not believe in what they had denied earlier. For some commentators, this last statement refers to the making of the pretemporal covenant with all Children of Adam, in which all human beings testified to the Lordship of God (v. 172). According to these commentators, their “earlier denial” was manifested even at the moment of the pretemporal covenant, in which they bore witness to God's Lordship only reluctantly and insincerely (R, Ṭ); or their denial was manifest at this pretemporal event insofar as their ultimate moral status as believers or disbelievers was already known to God at that time (Ṭ). This statement may also be connected with other verses that indicate that if the disbelievers, after being brought to judgment in the Hereafter, were to be returned to earthly life to mend their ways, they would return to the very thing they had been forbidden (6:28); that is, they would return to the same pattern of disbelief and wrongdoing (R, Ṭ, Ṭs).

Others interpret they would not believe in what they had denied earlier as a reference to the stubborn and unrelenting disbelief of most of the people of those towns—and by extension, other peoples—for whom no amount of warning, preaching, or even evidentiary miracles could bring them to accept the messengers sent to them and to their persisting in their state of denial and disbelief until death (R, Z). Some have proposed that it was only because He was aware of the futility of future preaching for bringing these people to belief that God destroyed them (Ṭs). The statement might also be read transhistorically to mean that disbelievers of any generation will not believe in what those like them among previous peoples had denied earlier (Ṭs). That God has set a seal upon the hearts of the disbelievers indicates that some will never believe (R; see 2:7c; 4:155c).

102 We did not find most of them [faithful to their] pact. Indeed, We found most of them to be iniquitous.

102 We did not find most of them [faithful to their] pact is an idiomatic rendering of the Arabic, which literally reads, “We found no pact for most of them.” Although all major commentators understand this statement as rendered, al-Rāzī also notes that in being unfaithful to their pact with God, it is as if they had made no pact at all with God. Most of them may refer to most of those among the peoples of Noah, Hūd, Ṣāliḥ, Lot, and Shu‘ayb—namely, the majority of them who rejected their messengers and the warnings they brought—but may also refer to most human beings in general (Z). Consistent with the latter reading, pact here may be understood as a reference to the pretemporal covenant that God makes with all of humanity, requiring them to bear witness to His Lordship, as recounted in v. 172 (R, Ṭ). That they were not “faithful to their pact” would thus mean that they did not continue to recognize God’s Lordship and His claim to their obedience and worship during the course of their earthly lives. Even without specific or explicit reference to the pretemporal covenant, most commentators understand the statement that most of them were not faithful to their pact to mean that most people fail to act upon the intrinsic knowledge and moral responsibility that God has given them regarding the necessity of worshipping only the One God and abandoning idolatry, being obedient to His messengers, being reverent, obeying His laws, being thankful for one’s blessings, and performing virtuous deeds while avoiding abominable ones (Ṭ, Ṭs, Z).

That God found most of them to be iniquitous may again refer to the destroyed peoples of the past, to all past generations, or to all humanity. If it is understood to refer to all humanity, it would be consistent with many other Quranic verses stating that most people are ungrateful (2:243; 10:60; 12:38; 27:63; 40:61), are unaware of spiritual truths (7:187; 12:21, 40, 68; 16:38, 75; 27:61; 30:6, 30; 34:28, 36; 39:29, 49; 40:57; 44:39; 45:26), and are not believers (11:17; 12:103–6; 13:1; 17:89; 26:8, 67, 103, 121, 139, 158, 174, 190; 40:59). In Sūrah 26, which contains a discussion of past prophets and their struggles with their peoples similar to that found in the present sūrah, the statement that most of humanity does not believe functions as something of a refrain throughout that sūrah.

103 Then after them We sent Moses with Our signs unto Pharaoh and his notables, but they treated them wrongfully; so behold how the workers of corruption fared in the end.

103 This verse begins a lengthy segment (vv. 103–56) concerning the prophet Moses, who was sent after them, that is, after the previous prophets mentioned in vv. 59–93. Other narrative accounts of Moses' life are found in 5:20–26; 10:75–93; 18:60–82; 20:9–97; 26:10–66; 27:7–14; 28:3–46; 40:23–45; 43:46–56; 79:15–25. As with the previous prophets mentioned in this sūrah, the opposition to Moses is led, in part, by the notables among the people to whom he was sent (cf. vv. 60, 75, 88–90). The notables, in particular, are guilty of having treated God's signs wrongfully (cf. v. 10) by disbelieving in them (Ṭ, Z) or by turning others away from them (Z) as well as of being workers of corruption (see 7:56c). The command so behold is addressed to the Prophet, indicating that these prophetic narratives were meant to give him confidence that God aids His messengers against their enemies. Like the peoples of Noah, Hūd, Ṣāliḥ, Lot, and Shu'ayb, those who rejected Moses and his warnings met with utter destruction in the end.

104 And Moses said, “O Pharaoh! I am truly a messenger from the Lord of the worlds, 104 See 43:46 for an identical verse as well as vv. 61, 68, where Noah and Hūd similarly identify themselves as messengers from the Lord of the worlds—a title for God found throughout the Quran, beginning with the opening sūrah; see 1:2c. God also identifies Himself to Moses as the Lord of the worlds when the latter first encounters Him and receives his prophetic vocation (28:30).

105 obligated to speak naught about God save the truth. I have brought you a clear proof from your Lord; so send forth with me the Children of Israel.”

105 According to one account, after Moses articulated his claim to be a messenger from the Lord of the worlds (v. 104), Pharaoh replied that he was lying. In the present verse, Moses can be understood as responding to that charge by indicating that he would speak naught about God save the truth (Th, Z). See also 7:169, where speaking truthfully about God is a condition of the Israelites’ covenant with God. Throughout the Quran, the prophets often claim that they are bringing a clear proof (or clear proofs) from God or that they stand upon a clear proof; in this sūrah similar claims are made by the prophet Ṣāliḥ in v. 73 and the prophet Shu‘ayb in v. 85. Clear proof (bayyinah) may refer to scriptural revelations, prophetic warnings, or evidentiary miracles performed by the prophets (see, e.g., 2:87; 3:105; 4:153; 5:32; 6:157; 7:101; 9:70; 10:13; 14:9; 16:44; 19:73). In this case, the clear proof to which Moses refers is the miracles that he would subsequently perform (Ṭs) as well as the force of his call to Pharaoh to accept the message he brings and to send forth . . . the Children of Israel (see also 20:47; 26:17; 44:18), that is, to free them from servitude and allow them to return to the Holy Land (Ṭs, Z).

106 He said, “If you have brought a sign, then bring it forth, if you are among the truthful.”

107 So he cast his staff and, behold, it was a serpent manifest.

108 And he drew forth his hand and, behold, it was white to the onlookers.

106–8 Pharaoh asks Moses for a sign, that is, a proof of the truth of the message he brings (Ṭ) or a proof of God Himself (Ṭs). The two evidentiary miracles Moses produces in response—his thrown staff transforms into a serpent and his hand turns white (see also 26:32–33)—were acts in which he had been previously instructed by God (20:18–22; 27:10–12; 28:30–32). The serpent produced from his staff was said to be of supernaturally large size and to have frightened Pharaoh from his throne (Th, Ṭs).

According to a legendary account, the staff had been Adam's staff and was bequeathed to successive prophets, including Shu'ayb, the father-in-law of Moses, until it reached Moses himself (Ṭs). When Moses speaks with God for the first time, God questions Moses about his staff (20:17–18), and Moses later uses the staff to miraculously produce twelve streams of water from a rock (2:60; 7:160) and to part the sea (26:63). Some commentators note that it was Pharaoh's request for a second sign that prompted Moses to put his hand into the hollow or sleeve of his cloak and then to "draw it forth" as white as snow (Th, Ṭs).

109 The notables among Pharaoh's people said, "Truly this is a knowledgeable sorcerer.

110 He desires to expel you from your land; so what do you command?"

109–10 The notables consider Moses a knowledgeable sorcerer (cf. 26:34, where it is Pharaoh who describes Moses as a knowledgeable sorcerer to his notables) and accuse him of seeking to expel Pharaoh from his land.

111 They said, "Put him and his brother off for a while, and send marshalers to the cities 111–26 The reaction of the notables in vv. 109–10 sets up the competition between Moses and the sorcerers of Egypt, which is also recounted in 20:58–70 and 26:36–48 (cf. 10:79–82, where the sorcerers challenge Moses with their feats, but he does not respond in kind). The Bible provides a very short account of the competition with the Egyptian sorcerers, in which it is Aaron who casts the staff (Exodus 7:8–13). In the Quran, the story of Moses and the sorcerers provides a meditation on the relationship between prophethood, miracles, and sorcery and the differences between miracles and sorcery with regard to their causality, power, and reality. Moses is accused by Pharaoh and his people of sorcery elsewhere (10:76; 20:57, 63; 26:34; 27:13; 28:36; 40:24; 51:39), as are other prophets, including Muhammad and Jesus, by their own people (cf. 5:110; 10:2; 11:7; 34:43; 37:15; 38:4; 43:30; 46:7; 51:52; 54:2; 61:6; 74:24). Given that the miracles of the prophets are often dismissed as mere sorcery by their detractors and have no effect upon certain disbelievers, it seems that the primary function of these miracles is to encourage belief among those who are already inwardly disposed to it—like the sorcerers in this pericope—as well as those wavering between belief and disbelief. These miracles, like the prophetic messages themselves, serve to distinguish the inherently good, but merely misguided, members of a disbelieving community from those, like Pharaoh, whose hearts were so hardened as to be impervious to any prophetic sign or message. See also 43:49c.

111–12 The call for sorcerers to challenge Moses is also mentioned in 10:79 and 26:36–67. The notables’ suggestion that Pharaoh put him (Moses) and his brother off for a while is understood to be a suggestion that he detain them by either delaying their departure or imprisoning them (IK, Ṭ). According to one report, the marshaled sorcerers boast of their superior skill in the manipulation of staffs, ropes, and snakes (Ṭ), and other reports indicate that the marshalers sought out sorcerers capable of feats similar to those produced by Moses (IK).

113 And the sorcerers came unto Pharaoh. They said, “We shall surely have a reward if it is we who are victorious.”

114 He said, “Yes, and indeed you shall be among those brought nigh.”

113–14 Cf. 26:41–42. The sorcerers seek a reward if they are victorious over Moses. Pharaoh replies that their reward will be that they shall be among those brought nigh, meaning that they will become honored members of his court or his inner circle (IK, Ṭ). Although these verses, on a literal level, articulate the worldly desire for reward on the part of the sorcerers and Pharaoh’s worldly manner of fulfilling it, the ambiguity of the language suggests that the sorcerers, and Pharaoh unwittingly, but presciently, utter truths that will come to be realized in a manner other than the one they envision. The sorcerers are defeated by Moses, but their subsequent submission to God and to Moses can be understood as a spiritual “victory,” for which they will surely have a reward with God. Although not mentioned in the well-known commentaries, it is noteworthy that Pharaoh’s promise that they shall be among those brought nigh (muqarrabūn) is identical to a description used elsewhere in the Quran for prophets, angels, and the most righteous who are rewarded with the highest Paradise (cf. 3:45c; 4:172; 56:10–11, 88; 83:21, 28). Vv. 124–26 suggest that the sorcerers were martyred for their belief and may therefore be among those brought nigh in the Hereafter.

115 They said, “O Moses! either you cast, or we will be the ones who cast.”

116 He said, “Cast!” And when they cast, they bewitched the eyes of the people and struck them with awe, and they brought forth a mighty sorcery.

115–16 Cf. 20:65. Some commentators indicate that the sorcerers demonstrated proper etiquette by allowing Moses to choose who should cast the staff first (R, Z), even as they clearly preferred to cast first (Z). Some commentators propose that it is as a reward for their graciousness and proper demeanor toward Moses that God causes faith to enter their hearts, so that they ultimately come to be believers in God and in Moses’ prophethood (R). Moreover, this demonstration of outward etiquette, or adab, toward Moses may have been recounted here, because it suggests that the sorcerers possessed an inner sincerity that allowed them to perceive Moses as a person of noble character, deserving of respect. Moses responds graciously by letting them cast first, both because he understands their desire to do so and because he is certain that God will aid him and that no sorcery can defeat a miracle (mu‘jizah; R, Z), which has a Divine cause and is inimitable through mere human agency. Moreover, the sorcerers’ casting first allows Moses to demonstrate more easily the powerlessness of their deceptions in the face of the truth (IK, R), since the power of his own staff is then able to “devour all their deceptions” (v. 117).

The sorcerers produced tricks that bewitched the eyes of the people through slight of hand and illusion (Z); see also 20:69, where their feat is described as merely a sorcerer’s trick. The people were struck with awe by the sorcerers’ feats; cf. 20:67, where because of their display Moses conceived a fear in his soul. The sorcerers cast ropes and wooden staffs (see 26:44) that were painted so as to create the illusion of writhing snakes filling the ground, one upon another (IK, R, Z). Others report that the sorcerers had placed mercury inside the staffs and ropes so that they began to move in the hot sun (R, Ṭs, Z), as the competition was held in the open desert at the hottest time of the day (see 20:58–59).

117 And We revealed unto Moses, “Cast thy staff!” And, behold, it devoured all their deceptions.

117 Cf. 20:69; 26:45. Although Moses is expected to cast his staff to produce a great feat, he waits until God revealed unto him the direct instruction to cast it—a command heard only by Moses (R, Ṭs)—indicating that the power and will behind this feat belong to God alone; cf. 3:49 and 5:110, where Jesus’ miracles are explicitly performed by God’s Leave. Moses’ staff becomes a serpent, as it did before Pharaoh alone in v. 107, and this serpent is reported to have literally devoured the sorcerers’ deception, that is, to have swallowed up the staffs and ropes that had been made to look like writhing serpents (Ṭ). When Moses grasped the staff again, it returned to its previous form, as it did when God first instructed him in this miraculous sign in the holy valley of Ṭuwā (20:12).

118 Thus the truth came to pass, and whatsoever they did was shown to be false.

118 That the truth came to pass means that it became plainly manifest and victorious over the sorcerers’ deceptions (Ṭ) and that Moses’ prophethood was validated (Ṭs). Came to pass translates waqa‘a, which can also mean to “fall” or “alight,” and some have suggested that here it means that the truth alighted upon the hearts of the sorcerers (Z), for in the following verses they submit themselves to God and Moses. Whatsoever they did refers to the deceptions of the sorcerers, which were shown to be false. The statement in this verse is similar to others that juxtapose truth and falsehood in order to demonstrate the invincibility of the truth. See, for example, 17:81: Say, “Truth has come, and falsehood has vanished. Truly falsehood is ever vanishing”; 21:18: Nay, but We cast truth against falsehood, and it crushes it, and, behold, it vanishes; and 42:24: God wipes out falsehood and verifies the truth through His Words. See also 10:81–82, where Moses states, after the sorcerers have cast their staffs, That which you have produced is sorcery; God will soon bring it to naught. . . . God verifies the truth through His Words, though the guilty be averse.

119 Then and there they were vanquished and turned back, humbled.

120 And the sorcerers were cast down prostrate.

119–20 Cf. 20:70; 26:46–48. They—that is, both Pharaoh and the sorcerers—were vanquished by Moses’ feat, and Pharaoh reportedly released Moses from detainment or imprisonment (Ṭs; see 7:111–12c). Because the sorcerers knew that their own feats were mere deception, they recognized that the feat produced by Moses could only have been of Divine provenance (IK, Ṭs, Z). They turned back, meaning that they had an immediate change of heart, and were humbled and amazed before the awesome power displayed by Moses. Were cast down prostrate translates the same verb used in the preceding verses to denote the action of casting down the staffs, thus indicating the speed and force with which they prostrated themselves—as if they were literally “cast down,” involuntarily, by what they had observed (Ṭs, Z). The use of this same verb also sharpens the contrast between their earlier “casting” of the staffs for the purposes of deception and their now “being cast” into sincere submission to God. They made themselves prostrate, in a display of utter humility and submission to God (Ṭ).

According to al-Rāzī, the master sorcerers’ immediate realization of the Divine provenance of Moses’ feat and their subsequent submission to God and Moses is an indication of the spiritual value of knowledge, for it was the sorcerers’ advanced knowledge of their own art that allowed them to recognize that Moses’ actions were not sorcery at all. In other words, full knowledge even of worldly sciences should also engender an understanding of the limits and inadequacies of those sciences in relation to sciences based upon spiritual realities and higher principles, particularly when one is directly confronted with the latter. For this reason, the Islamic tradition argues that each messenger was sent with miracles that demonstrated an inimitable mastery of the leading arts and sciences of the people to whom they had been sent. Moses is thus sent with miracles that are similar to, but that utterly transcend, those of the sorcerers of his day, in a society where sorcery and the occult sciences seem to have been held in great esteem; Jesus was sent with healing miracles in an age when medical science enjoyed great prestige; and Muhammad was sent to the Arabs, whose major art form was poetry and eloquent speech, with a scripture whose literary and linguistic style was considered to be of unsurpassed beauty and power.

121 They said, “We believe in the Lord of the worlds, 122 the Lord of Moses and Aaron.”

121–22 The sorcerers profess belief in the Lord of the worlds, a common title for God found throughout the Quran (see 1:2c); it is invoked several times in this sūrah (see vv. 54, 61, 67, 104) and is common in the accounts of the pre-Islamic prophets. The sorcerers’ identification of the God they now recognize as the Lord of Moses and Aaron was, according to some, a means of making it clear that they were prostrating to the One God, and not to Pharaoh, who also considered himself a god (see 28:38). Al-Rāzī also suggests that the sorcerers invoked both Moses and Aaron here, because if they had only mentioned “the Lord of Moses,” Pharaoh might still think that they were prostrating to him, since Pharaoh had “raised” (rabba, from the same root as rabb, meaning “Lord”) Moses as a child (see 26:18; 28:7–9). Aaron, Moses’ brother, is also identified as a prophet in the Quran (19:53). As in the Biblical account, he is sent by God to accompany Moses to Egypt—at Moses’ request—to confront Pharaoh (10:75; 28:34–35; Exodus 4:10–16), and he also served as Moses’ close aide as he wandered through the desert with the Israelites (7:142; 20:25–36).

123 Pharaoh said, “You believe in him before I grant you leave! This is surely a plot you have devised in the city, that you might expel its people therefrom. Soon you shall know.

123 Cf. 20:71. Pharaoh is outraged that the sorcerers would believe in him—that is, in Moses—before Pharaoh “grants them leave.” In contrast to the sorcerers, who immediately recognized that Moses’ power came from the One God, Pharaoh considered Moses’ feat no more than a sorcerer’s trick, albeit a superior one. He describes the entire competition, including Moses’ victory and the sorcerers’ submission, as a plot devised by Moses and the sorcerers together (IK, Ṭ, Th, Ṭs) to expel the people of Egypt from Egypt, so that the Israelites could settle there (Z). According to one report, before the competition began, Moses approached the head of the sorcerers to ask if they would believe in him and witness to the truth of his message if Moses were victorious, and the sorcerers agreed that they would. Pharaoh reportedly overheard the exchange, and when it came to pass, he declared the whole affair to have been a prearranged plot (IK, T̄). See also 20:71, where Pharaoh accuses Moses of being the sorcerers' secret master. Pharaoh then warns them, soon you shall know; that is, they will know the terrible punishment Pharaoh intends to impose on them (Th), as described in the following verse.

124 I shall surely cut off your hands and your feet on alternate sides; then I shall surely crucify you all!”

124 The punishment here is similar to the punishment ordained for those who wage war against God and His Messenger and endeavor to work corruption upon the earth in 5:33. The commentators report that the first person to execute the punishment of “cutting off hands and feet on alternate sides” and crucifixion was Pharaoh (Q, T̄s, Z), who crucified his victims on palm trees on the banks of the Nile (T̄s); this latter detail is mentioned in Pharaoh's threat as uttered in 20:71.

125 They said, “Truly we turn unto our Lord.

126 You take vengeance upon us only because we believed in the signs of our Lord when they came unto us. Our Lord, shower us with patience, and let us die as submitters.”

125–26 The sorcerers respond to Pharaoh's threat by affirming that they “turn unto” their Lord, indicating that they were not troubled by the threat of death, since they now looked only toward the meeting with God (Z) with love and longing (Bq) and with the hope that they would be rewarded for the pain they suffered under Pharaoh's torments (Z). The sorcerers' humble complaint to Pharaoh, You take vengeance upon us only because we believed in the signs of our Lord, is similar to the words of a secret believer in Pharaoh's court who asks Pharaoh if he would kill a man for saying, “My Lord is God” (40:28); see also 5:59 and 85:9, which chastise those who would be vengeful toward others simply on account of their belief in God and His signs.

The signs of our Lord refers to the feats performed by Moses (R). The sorcerers' subsequent supplication, shower us with patience (see 2:250, where the same supplication is made by the Israelites facing the army of Goliath), is a request that God aid them in remaining steadfast in the face of torture and death at the hands of Pharaoh, lest they revert to disbelief under this extreme duress (Ṭ, Ṭs). According to some, the painful death suffered by the sorcerers purified them of their past sins (Z).

Submitters translates muslimīn (muslims), used here in the universal sense of those who submit themselves fully to the One God. Pharaoh reportedly had the sorcerers killed and crucified that very day, and several early commentators observed that the sorcerers “began the day as sorcerers and ended it as martyrs” (IK, Ṭ, Ṭs). Their request, let us die as submitters, can also be translated “take us to Thyself as submitters” and might therefore be understood as a plea for God to take them to Himself immediately so that they might be spared the punishment of Pharaoh (R). Cf. 20:72–73 and 26:50–51 for similar accounts of the sorcerers’ response to Pharaoh’s threats.

127 The notables among Pharaoh’s people said, “Will you leave Moses and his people to work corruption in the land and to leave you and your gods?” He said, “We shall slay their sons and spare their women. Truly we are above them, dominant.”

127 Although Pharaoh killed the sorcerers, he allowed Moses to go free. Pharaoh’s notables thus express concern that he would leave Moses and his people, the Israelites, to live and to worship as they prefer, and to leave you (Pharaoh) and your gods, that is, to abandon the worship of Pharaoh and his gods for obedience to Moses and the worship of the One God (Ṭ). The commentators are unclear on the identity of Pharaoh’s gods mentioned in this verse; some say he worshipped the sun or certain sacred cattle, hence the Israelites’ inclination to make an idol in the form of a calf in v. 148 (Ṭ, Ṭs). Still others assert that Pharaoh was himself worshipped, but did not worship anything himself (Ṭ), or that the gods referred to here were idols that Pharaoh had made and that he had commanded people to worship as a way of worshipping him (Ṭs, Z). The question posed by the notables might also be rendered, “Will you leave Moses and his people to work corruption upon the earth, when they have left you and your gods?” (Ṭ). See also 40:26, where Pharaoh indicates that he will kill Moses himself, fearing that Moses will alter their religion or cause corruption to appear in the land by leading people away from the worship of Pharaoh.

Pharaoh’s threat to all those who followed Moses that he would slay their sons— that is, their young sons—and and spare their women is consistent with his means of collective punishment mentioned elsewhere (see v. 141; 2:49; 14:6; 28:4; 40:25). Although Pharaoh did not harm Moses, out of fear of his great power, he reportedly carried out his threat upon his Israelite followers, hoping to weaken Moses indirectly by terrifying his supporters (R). Dominant translates qāhirūn, a plural form of qāhir, which is a Name or Attribute of God in the Quran; see 6:18, He is Dominant over His servants. That Pharaoh speaks of himself in terms used elsewhere in the Quran for God alone suggests Pharaoh's claim of divinity and lordship for himself (see 26:29; 28:38; 79:24; 7:123c).

128 Moses said unto his people, “Seek help from God and be patient. Truly the land belongs to God; He bequeaths it to whomsoever He will among His servants. And the end belongs to the reverent.”

128 When his people are facing the terrible punishment of Pharaoh, described in v. 127, Moses advises them to seek help from God (see 1:5c) and to have patience in the same manner that the Quran enjoins believers to seek help in patience and prayer as a general spiritual attitude (see 2:45, 153), for God is with the patient (8:46). Moses encourages his people by reminding them that the land, meaning Pharaoh's domain (R), belongs to God and that He may cause others to inherit it after him; and indeed in v. 137 God bequeaths the eastern and western parts of the land that We blessed to the Israelites (cf. 28:5–6) as a reward for their patience. Moses further promises that the end belongs to the reverent (a general promise also made in 11:49 and 28:83). The end may refer to the reward of the reverent in the Hereafter, to the later worldly success of the Israelites in vanquishing their enemies (v. 129) and settling in the land, or both (R).

129 They said, “We were persecuted before you came to us, and after you came to us.” He said, “It may be that your Lord will destroy your enemies and make you vicegerents upon the earth, that He may observe how you behave.”

129 The Israelites respond that they were persecuted before Moses came to them—since the Quran elsewhere indicates that the punishment of slaying sons was inflicted by Pharaoh upon the Israelites at the time of Moses' infancy (28:4–9)—and that they are now being persecuted in the same way again. Moses' display of power had raised the Israelites' hopes of being delivered from Pharaoh's oppression; but when they heard Pharaoh announce the same brutal collective punishment he had inflicted on them earlier, they became despondent (R). Moses, seeking to strengthen their resolve (IK), reminded them that God may yet destroy their enemies and make them vicegerents upon the earth after Pharaoh and his people. The successive vicegerency of different peoples is a recurring idea in this sūrah; see 6:165c; 7:69c. If God grants them victory, it will be so that He may observe how they behave, that is, whether or not the people continue to worship the One God and obey His commands (R).

130 And We indeed afflicted the House of Pharaoh with drought and a shortage of crops, that haply they would be reminded.

130 Cf. v. 133, where other plagues sent against Pharaoh and his people are mentioned. That drought and a shortage of crops were visited upon the people of Pharaoh during the time of Moses' mission to them is consistent with other verses indicating that the adversity suffered by a people in connection with the coming of a prophet is meant to make them humble and to cause them to hearken to God's message. See, for example, 6:42: We have indeed sent messengers unto communities before thee, and We seized them with misfortune and hardship, that they might humble themselves (see also v. 94). That haply they would be reminded indicates that the famine and drought were meant to be an admonition to Pharaoh and his people and to frighten them, so that they would repent and believe in God (Ṭ). Adversity in general may also have the effect of "softening the heart" (R, Ṭs), although not in the case of Pharaoh, whose heart, according to the Biblical account, was increasingly hardened by the successive plagues (see Exodus 9–11), and here too he remains unrepentant (see 7:133c). Some commentators see this verse as proof that God does not compel people toward belief or disbelief, but rather arranges matters so as to encourage belief, but then allows people to choose how they will react (Ṭs); others cast doubt on this interpretation, noting that these apparent trials only further entrenched Pharaoh in disbelief (R).

131 But whenever good came to them, they would say, “This is ours.” And if an evil befell them, they would consider it an ill omen on account of Moses and those who were with him. Nay, their ill omen lies with God, though most of them know not.

131 Pharaoh and his supporters would consider any good fortune they enjoyed to be something they deserved, rather than a blessing for which they should be grateful (Ṭ, Z). Yet, they considered any evil that befell them, such as drought and famine (v. 130), to be an ill omen on account of Moses and his followers, meaning that their presence had brought these difficulties upon them. In 27:47, the Thamūd similarly considered Ṣāliḥ to be an “ill omen” for them; see also 4:78–79 and commentary, where certain Jews or hypocrites in Madinah considered any good that befell the city to be from God, but any evil to be on account of the presence of the Prophet. In the latter case, the Quranic response is that all good is from God, and all evil is from oneself. In the present verse, the response is that their ill omen lies with God, meaning that all good or bad fortune happens according to God’s Will and Wisdom (Ṭ, Z).

49 4 And they said, “Whatever sign you may bring to bewitch us thereby, we will not believe in you.”

132 This verse encapsulates one of the key ideas presented in this account as a whole, namely, that no miraculous sign, no matter how powerful or convincing, can change the hearts of those who stubbornly refuse to believe. In v. 146, this stubbornness is engendered by pride, since God “turns away from His signs” those who, like Pharaoh and his notables, wax arrogant upon the earth. For the idea that some are impervious to all signs of God, see 6:25; 10:96–97.

69 6 So We sent against them the flood and the locusts, and the lice and the frogs and the blood—signs expounded. But they waxed arrogant, and they were a guilty people.

133 This verse lists five punishments sent against Pharaoh and his people in response to their failure to believe in the One God and in Moses' prophethood and to their continued oppression of the Israelites. Four of these five—the locusts, lice, frogs, and blood—are identical to four of the ten plagues visited upon Pharaoh's people in the Biblical account (see Exodus 9–11). In 17:101, the Quran states that Moses was given nine clear signs, although these nine are understood as including the miracles of his staff and his hand, not just the punishments visited upon Pharaoh; see 17:101c. Flood here translates ṭūfān (related to the word “typhoon”), the word also used to describe the flood of Noah (29:14), which usually connotes a complete deluge that brings sudden and rapid death. Some commentators, however, interpret it to mean death that comes from all sides or by all means, since it derives from a root meaning “to surround,” a view supported by a ḥadīth in which the Prophet glossed ṭūfān simply as “death” (IK, Ṭ). According to one report, the rain persisted for eight days and flooded the houses of the Egyptians, but did not enter those of the Israelites (Z).

Lice translates qummal, which may denote a variety of tiny insects, including fleas or ticks (Ṭ). According to some, the locusts consumed most of the crops in the fields, and when this did not cause Pharaoh to repent, the qummal consumed the rest of the crops (Ṭ, Z). Pharaoh's continued stubbornness led to subsequent punishments in the form of the frogs, which filled the houses of the Egyptians and ruined them (Ṭ), and the blood, which was what any water drawn by the Egyptians turned into, while water drawn from the same sources by Israelites was clean (Ṭ, Z). This is similar to the description of the plague of blood as described in the Biblical account (see Exodus 9). According to one report, each punishment lasted a week, and when it was lifted on account of Pharaoh's plea and Moses' supplication to God, Pharaoh's state of repentance lasted only a month, after which he resumed his disbelieving and oppressive ways (Ṭ, Z). The verse describes these punishments as signs expounded (āyāt mufaṣṣalāt), which some interpret to mean signs that any reasonable person would know came from God (Z), and others interpret to mean successive signs, that is, distinct from one another in time (Ṭ, Z). That Pharaoh and his people continued to “wax arrogant” in the face of these signs proved that they were truly a guilty people, stubborn and incorrigible in their sinful behavior.

134 And when the torment came down upon them, they said, “O Moses! Call upon your Lord for us by the covenant He has made with you. If you lift this torment from us, we shall surely believe in you, and we shall surely send forth the Children of Israel with you.”

135 But when We lifted the torment from them, for a term they were to fulfill, behold, they reneged.

134–35 Cf. 43:49–50. Torment here translates rijz, which can mean filth and defilement as well as Divine punishment (see 7:71c; 29:34). According to some commentators, the torment here refers to a sudden illness that took the lives of seventy thousand Egyptians in a single night, while sparing the Israelites who had marked their doors with sheep’s blood (Ṭ, Ṭs). These details suggest that this refers to the same event as the plague that, according to the Bible, struck the firstborn among the Egyptians, as recounted in Exodus 11–12. Commentators also note, however, that the torment here may be a collective reference to the various punishments inflicted upon Pharaoh’s people in v. 133 (IK, R, Ṭ), and that the present verses describe the reaction of Pharaoh and his associates to each one—namely, their imploring Moses to ask God to lift the punishment in return for becoming believers and freeing the Israelites, and then reneging shortly thereafter. For other examples of the human tendency to call upon God in moments of peril and to make promises of worship and belief that are soon broken when the peril has passed, see 6:63–64; 10:22–23; 29:65; 30:33; 31:32.

Pharaoh and his notables beseech Moses, call upon your Lord by the covenant He has made with you, referring to the special relationship they understand Moses to have had with God, given his ability to perform miraculous signs (Ṭs, Z). V. 135 confirms that God responded by lifting the punishment, but only for a term they were to fulfill. This term is said by some to refer to a period of respite before they would be destroyed completely (R). That they reneged refers to their obstinate refusal to recognize Moses’ prophethood or release the Israelites, as they had promised in v. 134.

136 So We took vengeance upon them and drowned them in the sea for their having denied Our signs and for having been heedless of them.

136 That God took vengeance upon them means that He punished them for their evil deeds and because they were heedless of the signs and clear proofs of Moses’ prophethood (Ṭs). The Quran, like the Bible, recounts that Pharaoh and his hosts were drowned in the sea, which Moses had miraculously parted to allow the Israelites to pass through unharmed. When Pharaoh and his men attempted to pursue them through the parted waters, the sea returned to its normal state and drowned them; see 2:50; 8:54; 10:90; 17:103; 26:65–66; 28:40; 43:55; 44:24; 51:40. Sea here translates yamm, which is similar to the Hebrew word used in the Biblical reference to the sea that Moses parted (Exodus 14–15). This word, rather than the more common Arabic word for sea, baḥr, is used in the Quran only in connection with the Mosaic narratives (in 20:39, 78, 97; 28:7, 40; 51:40). Yamm may also refer to a sea of unfathomable depths (Z) or, alternately, to the loud roar of the sea or to its vastness (Z).

137 And We bequeathed unto the people who were oppressed the eastern and western parts of the land that We blessed. And the most beautiful Word of thy Lord was fulfilled for the Children of Israel because they were patient. And We demolished all that Pharaoh and his people had wrought and that which they used to build.

137 This verse seems to be a fulfillment of Moses' words in v. 128. God bequeaths the land to those who were oppressed (mustaḍ'afūn)—that is, the Israelites—as a reward because they were patient under Pharaoh's oppression (v. 127). The verse can also be taken in a more general sense to indicate that those who face adversity with patience and the anticipation of Divine Succor will be granted deliverance. The land that We blessed is thought by many to refer to the area encompassing Syria and Palestine (Shām in Arabic; Ṭ, Ṭs), since this is the land understood elsewhere in the Quran as being ordained for the Israelites (5:21), but not necessarily only the Israelites, since it is holy and blessed for all peoples (21:71); others claim that the land here refers to the domain of Pharaoh in Egypt (R, Ṭ, Ṭs) or to both Egypt and Syria/Palestine (R, Ṭs, Z). The land is called blessed because it has been endowed with fertility and abundance (Ṭs, Z). The most beautiful Word that was fulfilled for the Children of Israel refers to the triumph of the Israelites over Pharaoh (Ṭ) and is also considered to be the fulfillment of God's Promise in 28:5–6: Yet We desired to be gracious to those who were oppressed in the land, and to make them imāms, and to make them the heirs, and to establish them in the land, and to show Pharaoh and Hāmān and their hosts that which they dreaded from them. The destruction of all that Pharaoh and his people had wrought or built is a reference to the destruction of their palaces, gardens, fields, and orchards (Ṭ, Ṭs, Z).

138 And We brought the Children of Israel across the sea, and they came upon a people clinging to their idols. They said, “O Moses! Make for us a god as they have gods.” He said, “Truly you are an ignorant people!

139 As for these, what they practice shall perish, and vain is that which they used to do.”

138–39 The Children of Israel were brought across the sea when Moses miraculously parted it with his staff, by Divine command (see 2:50; 20:77; 26:63; and the Biblical account in Exodus 14). Shortly thereafter—according to some, even before their feet were dry from their walk across the divided sea (Z)—they came upon a people clinging to idols. Commentators speculate that these may have been the Canaanites (Ṭ) or Lakhmites who had settled in the area (Ṭ, Ṭs) or descendants of Abraham’s idolatrous people (JJ). Their idols were said to be in the form of a calf (Ṭ, Z), which is also the form of the idol later made by the Israelites (see v. 148). In response, Moses derides them as an ignorant people (qawm tajhalūn); the word for ignorant being derived from the same root as jāhiliyyah, the pre-Islamic pagan era in Arabia. In both cases, ignorance refers to ignorance of the Greatness of God, of the duty to worship Him, and of the prohibition against worshipping anything else (Ṭ). As for these refers to the idolaters whom the Israelites have come upon, whose practices shall perish. That which they used to do is described as vain, since it neither brings them any benefit nor deflects from them any harm (R). This desire for an idol foreshadows the Israelites making and worshipping the calf in v. 148.

140 He said, “Shall I seek for you a god other than God, when He has favored you above the worlds?”

141 And when We saved you from the House of Pharaoh, who inflicted terrible punishment upon you, slaying your sons and sparing your women. And in this was a great trial from your Lord.

140–41 Cf. 14:6; 20:80. That God has favored the Israelites above the worlds may mean that He favored them above all other people of their time or that the miraculous signs and deliverance (invoked in v. 141) that He granted them through Moses were not granted to any other people (R); see 2:47c. For the punishment of slaying your sons and sparing your women, see 7:127c.

142 And We appointed for Moses thirty nights, and We completed them with ten [more]; thus was completed the appointed term of his Lord: forty nights. And Moses said unto his brother, Aaron, “Take my place among my people, set matters aright, and follow not the way of those who work corruption.”

142 Moses spent forty nights on Mt. Sinai, the sacred mountain referred to in 95:2 and elsewhere simply called “the Mount” (see 2:63, 93; 4:154); see also 2:51; Exodus 24:18. This event is widely reported to have taken place during a period that corresponds in the Islamic calendar to the month of Dhu’l-Qa^odah and the first ten days of Dhu’l-Hijjah (Mw, Ṭ, Z)—the last two months of the Arab calendar, which were considered sacred since the pre-Islamic era—and concluded on the day of the Islamic Feast of Sacrifice (‘Īd al-aḍḥā; Ṭ). During this time Moses reportedly fasted and engaged in intimate discourse with God (Mw, R, Ṭs, Z). Some report that he fasted for the first thirty days and that the Torah was revealed to him during the final ten days (R, Ṭū). According to some, Moses originally indicated that he would be on the mountain for thirty days, but God had him stay an additional ten, so as to test the faith of the Israelites when Moses did not return after the thirty days (Qm). Moses asks his brother Aaron to “take his place” temporarily as leader of his people, while he is gone. Take my place translates ukhlufnī, which is related to khalīfah, meaning “representative” or “successor,” a term that is used for the leaders of the Muslim community after the death of the Prophet. Aaron is instructed to set matters aright, that is, to encourage the Israelites to worship God and obey Him (Ṭ) or to correct the corrupt among them while Moses was away (Ṭs).

143 And when Moses came to Our appointed meeting and his Lord spoke unto him, he said, “My Lord, show me, that I might look upon Thee.”

He said, “Thou shalt not see Me; but look upon the mountain: if it remains firm in its place, then thou wilt see Me.” And when his Lord manifested Himself to the mountain, He made it crumble to dust, and Moses fell down in a swoon. And when he recovered, he said, “Glory be to Thee! I turn unto Thee in repentance, and I am the first of the believers.”

143 This verse speaks directly to the issue of the human ability or inability to “see” God and seems to support the view that God cannot be seen by human beings, at least in the ordinary sense of seeing, in this world. It is consistent with the statement in 6:103: Sight comprehends Him not, but He comprehends all sight. Moses’ desire to see God is engendered by the state of intimacy he experienced with Him upon the mountain. There his Lord spoke unto him without intermediary (Ṭs, Z); and, according to a legendary report, God was so close that Moses could hear the scratching of the pen across the tablets as they were being written upon by God (Ṭ). With this closeness and the sweetness of God’s speaking to him (Su), Moses was overcome with spiritual ecstasy (Qu), yearned to be yet nearer to God, and was emboldened to ask, My Lord, show me, that I might look upon Thee (Ṭ). Some argued that Moses, who surely knew that God transcended all form and corporeality and thus could not be seen physically, asks this only to satisfy the Israelites, who in 2:55 declare, O Moses, we will not believe thee till we see God openly (Ṭs, Z). Still others suggest that Moses was not asking for a physical vision, but rather for such complete spiritual knowledge (ma^crifah) of God that it would be as if he were able to see Him directly (Ṭs, Z).

The verb show me might also be translated “cause me to see”—that is, “grant me the ability to see”—so that Moses might look upon God and attain the vision he desires. Some commentators understand God’s response, Thou shalt not see Me, to mean that God is not seen in this world, but may be in the next (IK, Ṭ), sometimes invoking 75:23, which speaks of the righteous gazing upon their Lord in the Hereafter; and Sufi writers speak of the ability to see God inwardly, with the eye of the heart. Others, however, argue that the response Thou shalt not see Me is stated in an emphatic form, indicating that God will not be seen, even in the next world (Ṭs, Z). In the Biblical account, Moses is told that none can see the Face of God “and live” (Exodus 33:20), and some commentators mention this as well (IK, Ṭ) or note that, had Moses not looked at the mountain when God manifested Himself, he would have died (Su). According to one report, Moses responded that he would rather see God and die than live without seeing Him (Ṭ). For Sufis, this may be connected with the idea that the vision of God in this life is only possible after the “death of the ego,” when one has completely “died” to the passions and desires of the soul. The annihilating power of God’s Self-Manifestation is similarly suggested in the saying attributed to the Prophet, “His veil is light. Were He to remove it, the Glory of His Face would burn up everything His Sight reached” (Su).

That the mountain crumbles after God says of it, if it remains firm in its place, then thou wilt see Me, indicates that seeing God with the physical eye is as impossible as the mountain being able to withstand God’s Self-Manifestation (Z); it demonstrates the annihilating power of that vision, since even the mountain, so much larger and stronger than Moses himself, was incapable of bearing it (IK). He made it crumble to dust might also be translated “He leveled it to the ground.” Elsewhere, mountains are awed or moved by the Power of God; see, for example, 33:72, where the mountains fear accepting the Trust of God, and 19:90–91, where it is said that the earth would be rent asunder and the mountains destroyed by the claim that God has a son.

Moses fell down in a swoon out of sheer awe (Z) or as the result of being passed over by one of the angels (Ṭ, Z). In a swoon translates ṣa‘iqa, which might also be translated “thunderstruck,” from the same root as the thunderbolt (ṣā‘iqah) that is said to have struck the Israelites for asking a similar question in 2:55. Some indicate that Moses actually died in this moment and was brought back to life (Qm, Ṭ, Z), although others argue that recovered (afāqa) connotes arousal from a state of unconsciousness, rather than from physical death. Upon recovering, Moses “turns in repentance,” repenting of having asked to see God (Ṭ, Ṭs, Z). Moses’ assertion that he is the first of believers may mean that he was the first among the Israelites of his time to believe (Ṭ), that he was the first to believe that God could not be seen physically (IK, Qm, Ṭs, Z), or that he was the foremost believer of his time.

The Sufi tradition speaks of those who seek, and sometimes receive, the blessing of “seeing,” or “witnessing” God, or receiving an inward vision of God. Al-Sulamī, commenting on this verse, indicates that “nothing can withstand the witnessing of God save the hearts of the gnostics,” which God has adorned with spiritual knowledge of Himself and illuminated with His Light. Even so, al-Sulamī indicates that this “witnessing” really describes God’s witnessing or seeing Himself, “for the Real is witnessed by none but Himself.”

144 He said, “O Moses! Verily I have chosen thee above mankind through My messages and My speaking [unto thee]. So take that which I have given thee, and be among the thankful.”

144 According to some commentators, this verse recounts the consolation that was given to Moses after he was denied the vision of God (v. 143) and indicates the great blessing he had been given, for which he should be among the thankful (Qu, R). That Moses was chosen . . . above mankind indicates his status among the people of his time (Z); see also 20:13, where Moses is again called chosen, and 3:42, where Mary, the mother of Jesus, is described as chosen . . . above the women of the worlds. The Prophet Muhammad also has the name al-Muṣṭafā (the “Chosen One”), from the same root as the verb in I have chosen thee (iṣṭafaytuka). Moses is distinguished by the messages he received from God, meaning the Torah (Z), and by God’s having spoken directly to him; see also 4:164. In Exodus 33:11; Deuteronomy 5:4; 34:10, Moses is similarly distinguished by having spoken to God “face-to-face.” Because of this distinction, Moses is given the honorific title in the Islamic tradition of Kalīm Allāh, “he with whom God spoke.” The Prophet Muhammad is also said to have spoken to God without intermediary at the lote tree of the boundary (53:14; Ṭs) during his Night Journey and Ascension (mi^crāj); see 53:14–15c.

145 And We wrote for him upon the Tablets an exhortation concerning all things, and an elaboration of all things. “Take hold of them with strength, and command thy people to hold to the best of them. Soon I shall show thee the abode of the iniquitous.”

145 God wrote the Torah upon the Tablets, indicating that it was originally a written revelation; see also Exodus 31:18, where the Tablets were “written with the Finger of God.” Commentators generally consider there to have been two Tablets, as in the Biblical narrative, although the fact that Tablets is grammatically plural rather than dual has led to speculation that there could have been more than two, some saying seven or ten (Z). Various reports indicate that the Tablets were made of emerald, ruby, or wood and that they were brought to Moses by the Archangel Gabriel (Th, Ṭs, Z); others say they were made of “stone” cut by Moses himself (Ṭs, Z), which is similar to the Biblical account in Exodus 34.

The Tablets contained an elaboration of all things, meaning that they contained all that the people needed to know for the purposes of their religion (Ṭ, Z) or that, like the Quran, they were revealed as a clarification of all things (16:89). Moses is commanded to take hold of them with strength; that is, to obey in earnest the commands and prohibitions given in them (Ṭ). Although Moses himself is instructed to take hold of them with strength, without qualification, the Israelites are told to hold to the best of them, which might also be translated “hold to the most beautiful of them.” This may mean simply that they should perform the good and virtuous actions commanded them in the Torah (Ṭ, Ṭs) or that they should try to inculcate the virtues—such as temperance, modesty, and patience—enjoined in it (Z). In 39:55, the Prophet is similarly instructed to enjoin his people to follow the most beautiful of that which has been sent down unto you from your Lord. The abode of the iniquitous may refer to the place of the sinful in the Hereafter (Ṭ, Z), to the land of Canaan (Ṭ), or to the land of Pharaoh (Z).

146 I shall turn away from My signs those who wax arrogant upon the earth without right. Even if they were to see every sign, they would not believe in them. And if they were to see the way of sound judgment, they would not take it as a way, but if they were to see the way of error, they would take it as a way. That is because they denied Our signs and were heedless of them.

146 That God will turn away from His signs those who wax arrogant may mean that He will prevent them from understanding the revelation given to them (Ṭ, Z), perhaps by “sealing their hearts” so that they do not understand (Z; see, e.g., 9:87; 40:35) or by allowing them to be distracted by their worldly desires (Z). “Signs” here may indicate all of God’s signs and proofs, including both those present in nature and those found in the human soul (see 41:53c), in addition to scriptural revelation; that God “turns them away” from His signs thus means that He prevents them from contemplating them or benefitting from them (Ṭ, Z), since some signs benefit only those whose hearts are already in a state of belief (R).

Those Muslims who subscribed to the Ash‘arite school of theology appealed to this verse to support their view that God might prevent certain people from believing, but Mu‘tazilites and others interpreted God’s turning people from His signs as a punishment for their having freely chosen to wax arrogant and “deny” the signs of God beforehand (R, Ṭ). Wax arrogant translates yatakabbarūn, which means, literally, to make oneself out to be grand and, by implication, to belittle others. God is the Proud (Mutakabbir, from the same root, in 59:23), but all others wax arrogant . . . without right, since God alone has the right to assert His Greatness and Superiority over all beings (Z); thus Proud is positive when applied to God, but often negative when applied to human beings or other creatures. Alternately, waxing arrogant without right might refer to asserting one's superiority over others when it is not merited (Z); see, for example, 7:12–13, where Iblīs's assertion of his superiority over Adam is dismissed as "waxing arrogant." The way of sound judgment means the path of guidance, truth, and correct knowledge and action, leading to felicity in this world and in the Hereafter (R, Z).

①¹⁴⁷ As for those who deny Our signs and the meeting of the Hereafter, their deeds have come to naught. Are they recompensed for aught save that which they used to do?

147 The meeting of the Hereafter refers to the Day of Resurrection and Judgment. Those who deny this key element of belief and the signs of God will have their deeds come to naught; that is, they will not benefit from them or receive reward for them, nor will their deeds, however seemingly good, be able to shield them from punishment for their denial and disbelief. Elsewhere it is said that disbelievers, idolaters, hypocrites, and those who persecute the prophets and the righteous will have their deeds come to naught (see, e.g., 2:217; 3:22; 5:5, 53; 9:17; 18:105). Rhetorical questions similar to Are they recompensed for aught save that which they used to do? are also posed in 10:52 and 27:90.

①¹⁴⁸ And while he was away, the people of Moses took a calf [made] from their ornaments—a body that lowed. Did they not consider that it spoke not unto them, nor guided them to any way? They took it up, and they were wrongdoers.

148 Cf. 2:51–54, 92–93; and especially 20:86–97, for the most extensive account in the Quran of the Israelites making and worshipping the calf. The Biblical account of this event is found in Exodus 32. While he was away—that is, while Moses was still speaking with God on the mountain—the Israelites took a calf [made] from their ornaments, meaning that they fashioned from precious metals, usually understood to be gold, an idol in the form of a calf and made it an object of worship, saying, This is our god and the god of Moses (20:88). Although Aaron was left in charge, commentators indicate that Aaron did not participate in making or worshipping the calf, which was directed by another Israelite referred to as al-Sāmirī (the “Samaritan”), as indicated in 20:87, 95–97. Rather, Aaron tried to stop this action (see 20:90).

The calf is described as a body that lowed—that is, emitted the sound of a live calf—leading some to think that it possessed a supernatural power, although 20:95–96 indicates that the lowing sound was the result of a kind of sorcery on the part of “the Samaritan” (al-Sāmirī). Others suggest that the calf was fashioned with carefully placed holes and hollows, and when the wind blew through them, it generated a lowing sound (R). Despite the lowing sound, the calf spoke not unto them, nor guided them to any way.

The Quranic narrative of this event offers a further reflection on the nature of prophetic guidance and miracles as contrasted with sorcery, indicating that unusual feats are not themselves indications of spiritual power or worthy of worship and are no substitute for Divine revelation. True prophethood and its signs can be distinguished from the mere conjuring of a sorcerer, because the former bring guidance and clarity, while the latter, like the feats of the sorcerers in v. 116, are ultimately powerless and illusory. They were wrongdoers, in that they “wronged themselves” by taking a powerless idol as an object of worship (R, Ṭ). Sufi commentators understand the calf and the Israelites’ willingness to worship it, despite God’s tremendous favor toward them, to be indicative of a tendency in human beings to allow worldly phenomena to distract them from the worship of God. It is a reminder that none are free of this temptation toward idolatry save those who have “slain their souls” (ST) by conquering its worldly passions.

149 And when they wrung their hands and saw that they had gone astray, they said, “If our Lord does not have mercy upon us and forgive us, we shall surely be among the losers!”

149 Wrung their hands, in remorse, might be literally translated “[remorse] fell into their hands,” that is, settled into their hearts (R). Some suggest the image is an allusion to the tendency of the remorseful to bite their hands, as if they were attacking the site of their remorse (R, Z). Alternately, that remorse “fell into their hands” may mean that they now realized it was their responsibility to make amends and set matters right with their own “hands” (R). The Israelites’ statement is one of immediate and utter contrition, casting themselves upon the Mercy of God, rather than offering excuses. It is identical to what is uttered by Adam and Eve in v. 23, and by Noah in 11:47.

150 And when Moses returned unto his people angry and aggrieved, he said, “How evil is the course you have followed after me! Would you hasten the Command of your Lord?” And he cast down the Tablets and seized his brother by the head, dragging him toward himself. He said, “Son of my mother! Truly the people deemed me weak, and they were about to kill me. So let not the enemies rejoice in my misfortune, and place me not with the wrongdoing people.”

150 Cf. 20:86. Moses returned to his people already angry and aggrieved, even before seeing them, because God made him aware of their having gone astray while he was still on the mountain (see 20:83–85; 20:83–84c). Aggrieved translates asif^{an}, which may connote sadness, but also intense anger (Mw, Ṭ, Z). His anger was at his people, but also perhaps at himself for having left them (Mw, Su), while his grief was both for his people’s grave error and for his having to leave the intimate discourse with God (Mw, Su), since the narrative of this event in 20:83–85 suggests that Moses had to cut short his time on the mountain to address the matter. How evil is the course you have followed after me may have been directed at the Israelites generally or at the leaders among them, including Aaron (Z); after me may mean while Moses was away (IK, Ṭ, Ṭs) or after Moses had set the example of true monotheism (R, Z). Would you hasten the Command of your Lord may pertain to the command that they wait for Moses’ return. It thus addresses their impatience concerning—and their ultimate hastening of—Moses’ return from his appointed meeting with God (IK, Ṭ, Ṭs, Z). See 7:142c, which mentions that Moses’ forty-day stay upon the mountain was reportedly ten days longer than his people had expected. It may also refer to their hastening God’s judgment upon them through their actions (R), a repeated Quranic warning to disbelievers (see, e.g., 6:57–58; 10:50–51). More broadly, the question might also be meant to chastise them for their impatience regarding God’s fulfillment of His Promise to them; see 20:86, where Moses asks in the same context: Did your Lord not make you a goodly promise? Did the pact seem too long for you?

Moses throws down the Tablets in anger (Ṭ) and shock (Z) upon seeing his people’s idolatrous worship, breaking them (R, Ṭ, Z), as in the Biblical account (Exodus 32:19). He then seizes his brother, Aaron, in anger for his having failed in his charge of preserving the Israelites in righteousness (see 7:142c). For another narrative of Moses' confrontation with Aaron, see 20:92–94. Aaron pleads with Moses, calling him son of my mother, rather than just “my brother,” in a bid to evoke Moses' tenderness and mercy toward him (IK, Ṭ, Z). He excuses his own actions by arguing that the people deemed him weak, meaning that they no longer recognized his authority (R, Ṭ)—as suggested by their having followed instead the directives of al-Sāmirī, while ignoring Aaron's pleas for them to desist (20:90)—and were moreover prepared to slay him; see also 20:94, where Aaron argues that he feared he would be blamed for causing discord among the Israelites, had he been more forceful with them. Aaron further asks Moses not to let their enemies rejoice in his misfortune—that is, to gloat over his further humiliation at the hands of Moses—and not to place him with the wrongdoing people, that is, not to consider him guilty of idolatry and so punish him along with the others (Ṭ, Z).

151 He said, “My Lord, forgive me and my brother and bring us into Thy Mercy, for Thou art the most Merciful of the merciful.”

151 Moses' request for forgiveness for himself and his brother is considered by the commentators to be an indication of their complete dedication to God and their desire to draw near to Him, rather than an acknowledgment of sin or wrongdoing on their part (Ṭs), since the prophets are believed to be immune from sin according to the Islamic doctrine of the ‘iṣmah, or “inerrancy,” of the prophets. Others suggest that Moses asked God to forgive him for his anger and to forgive Aaron for not being forceful enough with the Israelites (R)—neither of which may be understood as rising to the level of “serious sin.” Moses' anger is also said by some to have been not a personal anger, but a “holy anger” for God's sake, motivated by his intense desire to preserve worship for God alone. It was not an anger that reflected lack of control of the passions, but was rather an anger manifested outwardly, in the form of holy wrath for the sake of religion, while Moses' inner state remained characterized by calm and mercy (Aj).

152 As for those who took up the calf, anger from their Lord shall seize them, and abasement in the life of this world. Thus do We recompense those who fabricate.

152 That Anger from their Lord shall seize the Israelites who worshipped the calf is thought by some to be a reference to the command that they atone for their sins by “slaying their own” in 2:54 (Ṭ, Z), which some commentators understand to mean that the Israelites were to slay those among their own people who were most guilty for the calf incident, and others understand as a form of collective punishment; see 2:54c. Some commentators understand both God’s anger and the Israelites’ abasement in the life of this world (see also 2:61) as references to later hardships that were to be suffered by the Israelites and their descendants (R, Z) or suggest that God’s anger refers to His punishment of them in the Hereafter, while the abasement refers to their future adversity in this world (Z). Others argue that the Israelites’ repentance and atonement (in 2:61) meant that their punishment would be only in this world and not in the next (R). Those who fabricate refers to those who initiate false religious beliefs or practices (see, e.g., 4:48–50; 5:103; 6:93; 10:59–60; 16:56).

153 But as for those who commit evil deeds and then repent thereafter and believe, surely, thereafter, thy Lord is Forgiving, Merciful.

153 The reminder that God forgives those who are truly repentant and mend their ways is found throughout the Quran (e.g., 2:160; 3:89; 5:39; 16:119). In 4:17 the Quran states, God only accepts the repentance of those who do evil in ignorance and then turn quickly in repentance, and in v. 149 it is clear that the Israelites’ repentance is quick and unconditional.

154 And when the anger abated from Moses, he took up the Tablets; and in their inscription lay a guidance and a mercy for those who are in awe of their Lord.

154 Moses took up the Tablets after previously casting them down in anger (v. 150). In their inscription lay a guidance and a mercy may simply indicate that the contents of the Tablets—namely, the Torah—contained guidance and mercy (Ṭ, Z)—a description associated with both the Torah and the Quran (see, e.g., 6:154; 7:52;

16:64; 28:43; 31:2–3). Inscription here translates nuskhah, a word that generally denotes a written copy of something, but whose root meaning relates to substituting one thing for another, particularly as regards a text. Some commentators therefore understand nuskhah as referring to new Tablets that Moses was given, which contained a “copy” of what had been inscribed on the originals (Q, R). Nuskhah may also refer more generally to the notion that guidance and mercy were inscribed upon, or copied onto, the Torah Tablets from the heavenly Preserved Tablet (see 85:22c), from which all Divine Revelation derives (Q).

155 And Moses chose seventy men from his people for Our meeting. And when the earthquake seized them, he said, “My Lord! Hadst Thou willed, Thou wouldst have destroyed them and me beforehand. Wilt Thou destroy us for that which the fools among us have done? It is naught but Thy trial, whereby Thou leadest astray whomsoever Thou wilt, and guidest whomsoever Thou wilt. Thou art our Protector, so forgive us and have mercy upon us, and Thou art the best of forgivers!

155 Most commentators indicate that this meeting with the elders followed upon the calf incident and was connected with the Israelites’ attempt to atone for their sin. The seventy chosen by Moses, at God’s command, were said to be among those elders who had not directly participated in making or worshipping the calf (R). Some reports say that Moses chose six men from each of the twelve tribes for a total of seventy-two men; two of those, Joshua and Caleb, were chosen to remain behind and supervise the Israelites in the camp (R, Ṭ, Th, Z). The other seventy were instructed to fast and purify themselves and their clothing in preparation for the meeting (R, Ṭ, Th, Z). When they approached the mountain, the earthquake seized them; earthquake translates rajfah, the same word used to denote the physical event that destroyed the Thamūd (v. 78) and the people of Midian (v. 91). This earthquake was meant as a punishment for the seventy, who had not worshipped the calf, but nonetheless had not done enough to stop those who did (Mw, R). Some commentators indicate that the elders were, in fact, killed by the quake, but then revived at Moses’ plea (R, Ṭ); others say that the quake shook them violently, but relented before they died (R).

A common narrative associated with this verse connects it with the incident in which the Israelites ask to see God openly (2:55). According to this account, as Moses and the seventy elders approached Mt. Sinai, a cloud descended and enveloped the mountain. Moses entered the cloud alone, but the elders followed. As they entered they were cast down prostrate, but could hear Moses speaking with God. Eventually the cloud lifted, and they approached Moses and asked to see God directly, at which the earthquake seized them for their insolence (Mw, ʾ, Th, Z).

Hadst Thou willed, Thou wouldst have destroyed them and me beforehand is said to indicate that Moses would have preferred that, if God intended to kill them, He would have done so while they were still in the camp, for he feared that if God killed the elders on the mountain, the Israelites would blame Moses for their deaths (R). Wilt Thou destroy us for that which the fools among us have done, the fools being those Israelites who directly participated in the calf worship. According to al-Rāzī, Moses knew that God would not punish some for the sins of others, and his question was a way of indicating that he was, in fact, certain that God would not do this, as if to say, “I know Thou wouldst not destroy us for the wrongdoing of others” (R)—an interpretation apparently supported by Moses’ subsequent statement, It is naught but Thy trial. That some are guided by the trial while others are led astray by it is similar to what is said in other verses regarding Divine Revelation and its dichotomous effect on different souls (cf. 2:26; 9:124–25). That God may both guide and lead astray is also found throughout the Quran (see, e.g., 6:39; 7:178; 13:27; 14:4; 16:93; 17:97; 18:17; 35:8); some Muslim theologians argue that such statements indicate that all faith or disbelief is determined by God, and others argue that God leads people astray only as a punishment for previous wrongdoing or iniquity.

156 And prescribe good for us in the life of this world, and in the Hereafter; truly we have turned unto Thee.” He said, “I cause My Punishment to smite whomsoever I will, though My Mercy encompasses all things. I shall prescribe it for those who are reverent, and give alms, and those who believe in Our signs, 156 Moses’ supplication beseeching God for good . . . in the life of this world, and in the Hereafter is an example of the proper mode of supplication for believers; see also 2:201. Good . . . in the life of this world may mean physical goods, such as health and physical well-being (Sh, Z), but may also mean moral integrity and success in obeying God’s commandments (Q, Sh, ʾ, Z); good in the Hereafter means forgiveness for one’s sins and reward in Paradise for one’s good deeds (Q, Sh, ʾ, Z). Praying for good only in this life would be a sign of worldliness, whereas praying for good only in the Hereafter might indicate a failure to recognize one's dependence on God in this life and His ability or willingness to intervene in worldly matters.

We have turned unto Thee means that they turn in repentance to God (Ṭ, Z). According to al-Rāzī, because God is a Protector for His servants and because Moses and his people have expressed sincere repentance and humility (v. 155), it is appropriate for them to seek from God both protection against harm and the acquisition of benefit (R). He said refers to God's response, which begins with the warning, I cause My Punishment to smite whomsoever I will (man ashāʿ). Some see this phrase as a specific reference to the earthquake that seized the Israelites in v. 155 (Sh) or to the atonement ordained by God in 2:54 that they should "slay their own," thus indicating that Moses has no power to deflect the punishment that God has decreed. Although this line asserts God's freedom and power to punish as He wishes, commentators often qualify this to mean that He punishes only those deserving of it, in accordance with His Wisdom (Q, Z). Ḥasan al-Baṣrī (d. 110/728) reads this line slightly differently to mean "I cause My Punishment to smite whosoever does evil (man asāʿa)" (Bg, R, Z). God's Mercy, unlike His punishment, is an essential Attribute of God and thus infinite and eternal (Qu).

My Mercy encompasses all things is a statement that has great metaphysical importance in Islamic thought. It is similar to 40:7, where those who bear the Divine Throne say, Our Lord, Thou dost encompass all things in Mercy and Knowledge; so forgive those who repent and follow Thy way, and shield them from the punishment of Hellfire. God's Knowledge is the only other Divine Attribute described in such an all-embracing manner in the Quran (cf. 6:80; 7:89; 20:98; 65:12). The preeminence of God's Mercy is expressed in the well-known ḥadīth qudsī (sacred ḥadīth) in which God states, "My Mercy precedes My Wrath," and in other verses God is said to have prescribed Mercy for Himself (see 6:12–13c; 6:54). Some commentators understand these verses, including the present one, to indicate that God's Mercy is infinite (Q) and that it is tantamount to His Will for the good in and for all created beings (R). Commentators assert that God's all-embracing Mercy is the source of every mercy between human beings, and even between animals, who manifest God's Mercy in their tenderness and attachment to their young (IK, Q, R).

God's Mercy, as manifested in His Forgiveness, is said to be so vast that even Iblīs will stretch forth his neck on the Day of Resurrection, hoping to be touched by it (IK). Indeed, some commentators observe that Iblīs too is embraced by God's Mercy insofar as he exists (Q). This alludes to the more profound point made by some commentators and Islamic metaphysicians that there is a fundamental connection between Divine Mercy and existence itself (R; Ibn ʿArabī, Futūḥāt, III, 429). Mercy translates rahmah, from the same root as the word for “womb” (rahim). God’s Mercy thus embraces creation as the womb embraces the unborn child and brings it into the world. For Ibn ‘Arabī and many other Sufis, existence itself is none other than Divine Mercy, and the “Breath of the Compassionate” (nafas al-Rahmān) is the very substance of the universe through which all things are brought into being and sustained and to which all things return (Ibn ‘Arabī, Futūḥāt, II, 313.24–25; III, 429.4–16).

Some commentators maintain that Divine Mercy, while described here as “embracing all things,” is nonetheless meant specifically for the believers (IJ, R). Other Islamic thinkers, however, have delineated two kinds of Divine Mercy: one is universal, infinite, bestowed upon all creatures in this world, and metaphysically identical to existence itself; and the other is particular and specific, bestowed upon those who have earned it through belief and righteousness (Ibn ‘Arabī; R; Sy). It is this specific mercy that is alluded to in the subsequent statement, I shall prescribe it for those who are reverent, and give alms, and those who believe in Our signs. The reverent here indicates those who are marked by piety and who avoid idolatry and major sins (IK); those who give alms (zakāh) may here refer to those who give the zakāh in the sense of alms to the poor, but may also refer to those who engage in the purification of souls (zakāt al-nufūs; IJ, IK, Mw, Ṭs). The Israelites who followed Moses as well as the pious among the People of the Book in general may be described by these qualities and hence are recipients of this specific Divine Mercy.

157 those who follow the Messenger, the unlettered Prophet, whom they find inscribed in the Torah and the Gospel that is with them, who enjoins upon them what is right, and forbids them what is wrong, and makes good things lawful for them, and forbids them bad things, and relieves them of their burden and the shackles that were upon them. Thus those who believe in him, honor him, help him, and follow the light that has been sent down with him; it is they who shall prosper.”

157 This verse continues the list of qualities that describe those for whom God will prescribe His Mercy (v. 156). They include following the Messenger, that is, the Prophet Muhammad, who is uniquely identified in the Quran and Islamic tradition as the unlettered Prophet (al-nabī al-ummī). The description of the Prophet as unlettered (ummī) is traditionally understood to mean that he was unable to read and write (Ṭ), a fact that is affirmed in various ways in the sīrah, or biographical literature concerning him. That the Prophet was unable to read and write serves, in Islamic tradition, as a fundamental proof of the miraculous nature of the Quran and the purity of the soul of the Prophet who was the recipient of it (R) and of its Divine provenance, since it would be otherwise impossible for a man who had not “studied” earlier works to produce eloquent verses containing knowledge of past peoples and prophets (cf. 6:105, which implies that the pagan Arabs accused the Prophet of having studied). That the Prophet was unlettered is understood to mean that his soul was not defiled by profane knowledge and that it was a tabula rasa upon which the Divine Word could be “inscribed” in its purest form, untainted by humanly acquired knowledge and learning. This doctrine is analogous in an essential way to the virginal purity of Mary, the mother of Jesus, who represented a pure conduit through which Jesus, described as a Word from God (3:45)—like the Quran, which is the Divine Word—could be brought into the world. Ummī is also related directly to umm, “mother.” The Sufi master Ibn ʿArabī thus understands ummī as a kind of spiritual “infancy” (Futūḥāt, II, 644–45), connoting a state devoid of external, discursive knowledge, for God brought you forth from the bellies of your mothers, knowing naught (16:78), but also in a state of innocence, purity, and utter receptivity.

Although in one instance the plural of this term (ummiyūn) is used to refer to uneducated or illiterate Jews (see 2:78c), unlettered (ummī) when used in relation to the Prophet Muhammad also seems to be related to his place in sacred history in that he was not of Jewish origin, but rather hailed from the Arab people, who were largely (though not entirely) “illiterate” at this time (Iṣ, R, Ṭs) and who had not read or studied the Torah, in particular. In 6:156, for example, the pagan Arabs are described as those who have not studied previous scriptures, and in 34:44 as those without any book that they study. In 7:169, by contrast, those who were given the covenant of the Book, meaning the People of the Book, are described as those who have studied what is in it. Thus when ummī is used, as it is in the present verse, in the context of a discussion of the People of the Book (cf. 3:20; 62:2), it may be intended to indicate not only that the Prophet had not studied previous scriptures, but also that he was of non-Jewish heritage, since the Jews, in particular, were skeptical about Muhammad’s prophethood at least partly because he was not a prophet in the Israelite line. Some have added that ummī can also be related to Makkah—that is, that Muhammad was the “Makkan Prophet”—insofar as Makkah is described as the Mother of Cities (Umm al-qurā) in 42:7 (Ṭs).

The Prophet is also said here to be inscribed in the Torah and the Gospel, meaning for most commentators that the qualities that identify and describe him as a prophet are mentioned in the Torah and the Gospel (Ṭ). See 61:6, where Jesus says that he brings glad tidings of a Messenger to come after him whose name is Aḥmad—Aḥmad is one of the most often used names of the Prophet in the Islamic tradition (see 61:6c). According to a ḥadīth, the Prophet was described in the Torah with some of the same qualities attributed to him in the Quran, including that he is a giver of glad tidings and a warner, that he does not do evil to those who do evil to him, that he is kind and forgiving, that he is not rude or loud in the marketplace, and that he is a guardian for the unlettered (ummiyūn), here probably referring to the Arabs. The ḥadīth goes on to say that he will cause even those who are astray to utter, “There is no god but God,” and hence open eyes, ears, and hearts (Q, Ṭ). Some commentators mention particular statements in the Torah and Gospel that were interpreted by Muslims as references to the coming of the Prophet Muhammad, including prophecies about the descendants of Ishmael in Genesis 16–17 and Jesus’ reference to a spiritual “comforter,” the “Paraclete” (Fāraqīṭ, which was understood to mean Aḥmad), who would come after him and “will speak whatever he hears” (John 16:7–14; Ṭs).

The Prophet enjoins upon them what is right, and forbids them what is wrong, which is a moral requirement and characteristic of every believer and of the believing community mentioned in several verses; see 3:110, 114; 9:67, 71; 22:41; 31:17; and the essay “Quranic Ethics, Human Rights, and Society.” The Prophet makes good things lawful for them, meaning that through his prophethood the ritualistic restrictions that the pagan Arabs had placed on themselves, without Divine sanction, were abolished (Ṭ; see 5:103c). He also forbids them bad things, such as the consumption of swine flesh and the practice of usury (Ṭ). He relieves them, in this case the Jews, of their burden and the shackles that were upon them, referring to some of the difficult and onerous commands and prohibitions in the Torah (Z), which the Jews were specifically obligated to follow as part of the covenant they made with God (Ṭ, Ṭs), but which were abrogated by the Quran. In this regard, the commentators mention a prohibition against taking spoils in warfare in earlier scriptures (Ṭ, Z) as well as certain dietary restrictions. See also 3:50, where Jesus confirms the Torah, but also makes lawful . . . part of that which was forbidden unto you. The light that has been sent down with him refers to the Quran (Z), which along with other scriptures is described as being or containing light (see 5:15c; 3:184; 6:91).

158 Say, “O mankind! Truly I am the Messenger of God unto you all—

Him to Whom belongs Sovereignty over the heavens and the earth. There is no god but He. He gives life and causes death. So believe in God and His Messenger, the unlettered Prophet, who believes in God and His Words; and follow him, that haply you may be guided.”

158 In this verse, the Quran interrupts the account of Moses and his people to issue a command to the Prophet to identify himself as the Messenger of God unto you all. This statement, situated at the end of a series of accounts about previous prophets, is understood by some commentators to mean that the Prophet Muhammad is distinguished from earlier prophets in that each of those prophets was a prophet to his people or the people of his region, but Muhammad is a prophet for all of humanity (R, Ṭ). In a ḥadīth, the Prophet states that his having been sent to all humanity is one of five distinctions given specifically to him by God (IK, Ṭ). The claim of such a distinction for Muhammad may be based upon the fact that the Prophet’s mission was to both the People of the Book and the “unlettered”—that is, the Arabs or those without a scripture (see 3:20). Although the universality of the Prophet’s mission is supported by several verses describing the Quran or the Prophet as a reminder for the worlds (6:90; 12:104; 38:87; 68:52; 81:27), the assertion that he was completely unique in this regard does not seem to be entirely consistent with other Quranic verses that, for example, describe the Book brought by Moses as a guidance for mankind (6:91) or describe Jesus, Mary, and Noah as a sign for the worlds (see 21:91; 29:15). Moreover, the quality of universality cannot be entirely unique to Muhammad, insofar as Adam could also be described as a prophet for all human beings (R).

That God gives life and causes death is found throughout the Quran (2:258; 3:156; 9:116; 10:56; 23:80; 40:68; 44:8; 53:44; 57:2) and is reflected in the Divine Names al-Muḥyī (the One who gives life) and al-Mumīt (the One who causes death). His Words, which the unlettered Prophet believes in, are all of God’s signs (Ṭ), or the three Abrahamic scriptures—the Torah, the Gospel, and the Quran (Q), and by implication all sacred scriptures. According to some reports, His Words refers specifically to Jesus, the prophet who most closely precedes Muhammad and who is referred to as a Word from God (3:45; Ṭ), although such an interpretation seems less plausible in this context.

159 And among the people of Moses is a community that guides by the truth and does justice thereby.

159 Commentators differed regarding the identity of a community (ummah) among the followers of Moses that guides by the truth and does justice, that is, renders judgment according to the principles of truth (R). See also v. 181, where the same description is given to a community among those We have created.

Despite the clear statement in this verse that among the people of Moses—that is, the Jews—are those who are just and rightly guided, commentators have often sought to limit the application of this statement. According to some legendary accounts, for example, the ummah in the present verse refers to a group (or a tribe) of Israelites who separated themselves from the rest, when the latter began to go astray, and then traveled eastward beyond China (Q, R, T). Some say that they continue to live according to the law brought by Moses, although others say they became Muslims (Q, R, Th). Still others assert that this is a reference to those Jews in Madinah in the Prophet’s time who became Muslims, although this seems inconsistent with the verse’s description of this group as a community (ummah), which often connotes an independent religious community or at least a sizable group of people (R). Moreover, Jews who became Muslim were thereafter considered part of the Muslim ummah, rather than a separate ummah unto themselves.

These various attempts to qualify the reference to this righteous ummah among the people of Moses contradict the plain sense of the verse, which indicates that a group among the people of Moses, in the sense of being followers of Jewish Law and ritual, continue to live and worship righteously according to the teachings of the Torah. Other verses support the literal reading as well, including v. 168, which indicates that there were communities of righteous Jews still existing at the time of the revelation of the Quran (see also 3:113–15, 199 and commentary). The commentators do not usually support the most literal and obvious meaning of this verse, however, perhaps because it seems inconsistent with the common interpretation of v. 157 as meaning that all human beings should recognize and follow Muhammad as their prophet.

160 And We divided them into twelve tribes, communities. And We revealed to Moses, when his people asked him for water, “Strike the rock with thy staff.” Then twelve springs gushed forth from it: all the people knew their drinking place. And We shaded them with clouds, and sent down manna and quails upon them, “Eat of the good things We have provided you.” And they wronged Us not, but themselves did they wrong.

161 And when it was said unto them, “Settle in this town, and eat of that which is therein wheresoever you will, and say, ‘Remove the burden!’ And enter the gate prostrating, that We may forgive you your iniquities. We shall increase the virtuous.”

162 Then those among them who did wrong substituted a word other than that which had been said unto them. So We sent down upon them a torment from heaven for the wrong they used to do.

160–62 Cf. 2:57–60 for a similar account of these events. Regarding the division of the Israelites into twelve tribes, see also 5:12: God had made a covenant with the Children of Israel, and We raised among them twelve chieftains. For Moses’ striking of the rock and the gushing forth of twelve streams, see 2:60c. The Bible, in Exodus 15:27, mentions the Israelites coming upon a place in the desert called Elim, where there were twelve wells, and Exodus 17:1–6 recounts Moses being instructed by God to strike a rock with his staff to produce water for his people, although no mention is made of twelve springs specifically. Regarding God’s shading the Israelites and providing them with manna and quails and the command to eat of the good things We have provided you, see commentary on a nearly identical passage in 2:57; see also 20:80–81. The Quran repeatedly exhorts people to eat the wholesome and lawful food provided by God; for other examples not exclusively addressed to the Israelites, see 2:168, 172; 6:141–42; 16:69, 114; 23:51; 67:15.

Regarding the command that begins Settle in this town, see 2:58c and the brief allusion to it in 4:154. The town here is said by some to be Jerusalem (Ṭ, Z) or the land of Syria (or Palestine) generally (Mw). Remove the burden is an exclamation the Israelites are told to utter, indicating their desire to be forgiven for their sins (Ṭ).

Regarding the Israelites substituting another word for the word of repentance they had been commanded to say, see commentary on 2:58–59. The word of repentance was ḥittāh, here translated remove the burden. The Israelites are reported to have said, instead, ḥinṭah, meaning “wheat,” as an act of defiance and ridicule. Torment from heaven translates rijz, which can also mean punishment and defilement and can, moreover, be a general reference to God’s Wrath.

163 And ask them about the town that was by the sea, when they transgressed the Sabbath. Their fish would come to them, surfacing on the day of their Sabbath, but on the day when they did not observe the Sabbath, they would not come to them. Thus did We try them for their having been iniquitous.

163 The commentators speculate about the town that was by the sea; some reports identify it as a town called Aylah (Eilat), between Midian and Sinai, while others say that it refers to Tiberias or Midian itself (Ṭ, Ṭs, Z). They—that is, the Israelites—transgressed the Sabbath by performing acts, such as working, that God had forbidden on the day that was reserved for worship alone. Although in Islam there is no “Sabbath” in the same sense that one practices it in Judaism, with its extensive set of ritual practices and proscriptions, the Quran nonetheless understands the observation of the Sabbath to be a requirement established in the Torah for the Children of Israel and the Jews (the Quran uses both terms) in particular (see also 2:65; 4:47, 154; 16:124).

According to the present verse, on the day of their Sabbath, the Israelite people of this town would fish, although this was against the rules pertaining to the Sabbath, and the fish would appear all around them on the surface of the water (Ṭ). But on other days of the week, when they did not observe the Sabbath, and so hunting and fishing were permitted, the fish would remain hidden below the surface. This situation thus made it tempting for the Israelites to fish on the Sabbath (R), since fishing was especially easy and fruitful on that day. In this sense, it was a way for God to try them for their having been iniquitous. According to one report, the question of fishing on the Sabbath divided the Israelites in the town; a third of them wanted to fish, a third admonished against it, and a third neither fished themselves, nor admonished others (Aj, JJ, Sy).

164 And when a community among them said, “Why do you admonish a people whom God is about to destroy or punish with a severe punishment?” They said, “As an excuse before your Lord, and that haply they may be reverent.”

164 A community among them refers to those Israelites in the town who did not participate in fishing on the Sabbath, but also did not admonish those who did (R, Ṭ). Here this group addresses those who tried actively to forbid or discourage those fishing on the Sabbath, asking why they make the effort to admonish a people whom God is about to destroy or punish. Their response is that it serves as an excuse before God, meaning that they consider themselves to be obligated to “forbid wrong,” and having done so, they have fulfilled their moral duty (IK, Ṭ). And that haply they may be reverent indicates that the admonishers also hoped that their warnings might succeed in bringing the Sabbath violators back to reverence for God and for Mosaic Law.

165 And when they forgot that whereof they had been reminded, We saved those who forbade evil, and We seized those who did wrong with a dreadful punishment for their having committed iniquity.

165 When those who were violating the Sabbath forgot that whereof they had been reminded by those who admonished them, God punished the violators and saved those who forbade evil—that is, by exhorting their fellow Israelites to observe the Sabbath. The commentators are divided on the fate of those who abstained both from fishing on the Sabbath and from forbidding others to do so (Mw, R); some consider them to be among the saved (Z).

166 When they were insolent concerning that which they had been forbidden, We said unto them, “Be you apes, outcast.”

166 When the Sabbath violators continued to be insolent concerning the Sabbath, despite the warnings and reminders they had been given, they were punished severely. Be you apes, outcast is understood by many commentators to mean that they were physically transformed into apes, since the Divine imperative here may be taken to be a command that brings the named thing into being (Ṭ, Z). But some reject this literal reading and suggest, rather, that the hearts of the Sabbath violators were transformed to be like those of apes, but not their physical form; on this statement, see 2:65c. The Divine imperative Be you apes, outcast may also indicate that God is leaving them to indulge their baser instincts, which can lead only to their humiliation and their being outcast in their community. The latter seems consistent with the Biblical statement that one who works on the Sabbath shall be “cut off from among the people” (Exodus 31:14).

167 And when thy Lord proclaimed that He would surely send against them, till the Day of Resurrection, those who would inflict upon them a terrible punishment. Truly thy Lord is swift in retribution, and truly He is Forgiving, Merciful.

167 Thy Lord proclaimed indicates that He decreed, commanded, or swore (Ṭ, Ṭs). That He will send against them . . . those who would inflict . . . punishment may mean that He will grant other people authority over them (Ṭs, Z). Some mention that prior to the coming of Islam the Zoroastrian Persians (Z) as well as the Greeks, Romans, and Christians (IK) had gained authority over the Jewish community. Those whom God “sends against them” could also refer to the Arabs or Muslims (IK, Ṭ, Ṭs), who assumed political authority over much of the Jewish population after the early Islamic conquests. See 2:61 and 3:112, which speak of the Israelites as having been struck with abasement for their transgressions, understood by some commentators as indicating a state of weakness for them relative to other peoples (Ṭ, Ṭs). See also 17:5–8, where the Quran mentions the destruction of Jewish homes and land as well as their Temple by others possessed of great might. All of this suggests that the punishment Jews received for their transgressions occurred in this world and was inherited by later generations of their descendants, which is similar to the perspective found in the Hebrew scriptures, although from the Islamic perspective this does not exclude punishment in the Hereafter. Unlike the people of Noah, Hūd, Šāliḥ, Lot, and Shu‘ayb, the Israelites were not destroyed as a people, but their transgenerational punishment in this world extends the point made by those earlier accounts that Divine punishment can be meted out in this life as well as in the Hereafter; on this subject, see also 2:84c. God is swift in retribution against those who invite His Punishment through their disobedience and lack of faith, but Forgiving and Merciful toward the repentant (Ṭ, Z). See also 6:165c on that same description of God.

168 And We divided them into communities on the earth: some of them are righteous and some are otherwise. And We tried them with good things and with evil things, that haply they would return.

168 That the Israelites are divided . . . into communities on the earth is taken as a reference to the Diaspora, the existence of smaller communities of Jews in various locations throughout the world (Ṭ). Some of them are righteous: a life of righteousness continues to be possible for those who follow Jewish Law and ritual as prescribed in the Torah, as indicated, for example, by the importance the Quran places on the observance of the Sabbath, a ritual that has no direct parallel in Islam (see 7:163c). Those who are otherwise refers to those who do not follow the law, although they continue to be members of this community. Many commentators tend to see the Quranic affirmation of righteousness among some Jews (e.g., in v. 159; 3:113, 199) to pertain to the Jewish community of the past, before the coming of the Prophet Muhammad or even before the coming of Jesus (Ṭ, Ṭs), or else to the Jews in Madinah who became Muslim (R). Such interpretations are open to question, however, because the verse is clearly in the present tense, indicating that it pertains to the present and the indefinite future, and the reference is seemingly to those who have remained Jews, not those who have joined the Islamic community. The good things with which God tries them include worldly provision and ease; the evil things are various forms of worldly adversity. The trial by both good and bad fortune is not particular to the Jewish population, but is meant in a more general sense; see 21:35: We try you with evil and with good, as a test, and unto Us shall you be returned.

169 Then a generation succeeded them who inherited the Book. They grasp the ephemerality of this lower world and say, “It will be forgiven us.” And if other ephemerality like them were to come their way, they would grasp them [also]. Did not the covenant of the Book commit them to say naught of God save the truth? They have studied what is in it. And the Abode of the Hereafter is better for those who are reverent. Will you not understand?

169 The generation who succeeded the followers of Moses is understood by commentators to refer to some later Jews, and Jewish religious leaders in particular, who brought about a certain corruption in the teachings and Law of Moses by allowing some commands and prohibitions to be neglected (R, Ṭ, Z). Some commentators suggest that certain Jewish leaders took bribery in exchange for easing the requirements of the law for certain people (R, Ṭ, Z). See also 19:59, regarding the descendants of Abraham and Israel: Then they were succeeded by a generation who neglected prayer and followed base desires. The corrupt among this later generation grasp the ephemerality of this lower world, meaning that they take whatever they desire of fleeting, worldly things, whether they are lawful or unlawful, or even sinful, and assume they will be forgiven for it. Other Quranic passages suggest that certain Jews were overly confident about God's leniency in judgment toward them; see 2:80 and 3:24, where they claim, the Fire will not touch us save for days numbered. Yet if other ephemerality come to them, they grasp those as well, indicating that they are not truly repentant, and that their intention is to persist in their acts of disobedience.

The covenant of the Book refers to the covenantal obligations imposed on the Jews by the Torah, one of which was to speak only truthfully about God in accordance with what is taught in the scripture, including that God's forgiveness is only for those who are truly repentant and mend their ways, not for those who persist in their errors (Z). For Quranic statements about this see, for example, 16:119: Then truly thy Lord—for those who commit evil in ignorance, then later repent and make amends—truly thy Lord thereafter is Forgiving, Merciful. That for the reverent the Hereafter is better than this world is also mentioned in 4:77 and 6:32.

170 As for those who cling to the Book and perform the prayer—surely We neglect not the reward of the workers of righteousness.

170 Those who cling to the Book means those who continue to adhere to the teachings, commands, and prohibitions established in the Torah (Q, Ṭ). That God does not neglect . . . the reward of those who are righteous means that He will not fail to reward them for their deeds (cf. 3:171; 9:120; 11:115; 12:56, 90; 18:30). This verse indicates that those who are Jews and continue to follow the Torah and Mosaic Law will be rewarded for their good deeds; see also 2:62, which states that Jews, Sabians, and Christians who believe and “work righteousness” shall have their reward with their Lord (cf. 5:69).

171 And when We lifted the mountain above them, as if it were a canopy, and they thought it would fall upon them, “Take hold of that which We have given you with strength, and remember what is therein, that haply you may be reverent.”

171 That God lifted the mountain above them is similar to the description We raised the Mount over them in 2:63, 93 and 4:154, and in all cases refers to the making of the covenant at Sinai, as mentioned explicitly in these three verses. We lifted translates nataqnā, a verb that means literally to pluck something out from its roots and suggests God’s removing the mountain physically from its earthly base and causing it to hover above them as if it were a canopy. Some indicate that this was done as a means of threatening the Israelites to accept the covenant of the Torah, as some of them had hesitated because of the difficult nature of the obligations the covenant imposed upon them (IK, R). The command Take hold of that which We have given you refers to their covenantal obligation to obey the commands and prohibitions in the Torah.

172 And when thy Lord took from the Children of Adam, from their loins, their progeny and made them bear witness concerning themselves, “Am I not your Lord?” they said, “Yea, we bear witness”—lest you should say on the Day of Resurrection, “Truly of this we were heedless,” 172 This verse is in many ways the cornerstone of Islamic sacred history and anthropology and establishes that the fundamental relationship between God and all human beings is premised upon the simple, unmediated recognition of His Lordship at the moment of their pretemporal creation (see the essay “The Quranic View of Sacred History and Other Religions”). The event recounted in this verse is widely referred to as a pretemporal covenant (mīthāq) or pact (‘ahd)—although these terms do not appear in the verse itself—made by God with all of humanity prior to their earthly existence (Aj, R, Ṭ). It is connected by commentators with a pretemporal covenant between God and the prophets (3:81; 33:7) and considered by some to be subsequent to it (ST).

The Quran mentions covenants or pacts between God and the believers generally (5:1, 7; 6:152; 13:20, 25; 16:91, 95; 57:8) as well as covenants with Abraham (2:124–25), the Israelites (2:40, 63, 83–84, 93; 4:154; 5:70), the Christians (5:14), and the People of the Book collectively (3:187). But the making of the covenant described in the present verse is unmediated and universal—contracted directly between God and all humanity—and can thus be interpreted as the basis of all later and specific covenants mediated by the prophets. This verse is also connected with the Quranic notion of the fiṭrah (IK, Ṭ), the primordial nature (30:30) with which all human beings were originally endowed, indicating that the innate recognition of God’s Oneness constitutes the essence of being human (see 30:30c). Even though human beings do not remember the pretemporal covenant, their testimony to God’s Lordship is understood to have left an indelible imprint upon their souls and to have established moral responsibility for them (Q). When these souls are engendered in earthly bodies and reach the age of moral understanding and accountability, the innate knowledge is reawakened in those who believe by their encounter with prophetic teachings, scriptures, and Divine laws, which serve as a reminder and renewal of their initial covenant with God (Aj). Therefore, if a child dies before reaching the age of moral and religious responsibility, he or she is considered to have died according to the first covenant (mīthāq) and the original fiṭrah, and so in a state of moral purity. However, for those who fail to affirm the original covenant by rejecting the later covenant—that is, by denying the messages brought to them by their prophets and scriptures—their initial covenant will not benefit them (IK, Q, Ṭ, Ṭs).

Some describe this pretemporal event as one in which God brought forth all the progeny of Adam from his loins, specifically; some argue that this was done immediately after God had blown His Spirit into Adam (15:29; 32:9; 38:72; Ṭ), and others debate whether it occurred before or after his fall to earth (Mw, Q). Many observe, however, that God takes the progeny not from Adam, but from the Children of Adam and from their loins (plural; IK, R, Ṭ), indicating simply that He brought forth all future generations that have appeared and will appear until the end of time (Mw). Progeny translates dhurriyah (or in some readings, the plural dhurriyāt), which derives from a root that in its most literal sense denotes small particles, atoms, or seeds that are scattered, but also connotes “progeny” or “offspring” in over a dozen Quranic verses (e.g., 2:124; 3:34; 4:9).

Some commentators indicate that the progeny were drawn forth in the form of “particles” or “seeds” (dharr; IK, R, Ṭ), suggesting the physically unformed state of the children of Adam during this encounter. But some questioned how it was possible for the progeny as “particles” to hear and respond to God’s question; and because the intellect was not considered to manifest itself in human beings until years after birth, they also questioned how these “particles” knew what they were saying or could be held accountable for it (R). Given these issues, some commentators consider this verse a symbolic description of an innate covenant (Z) or a symbolic description of the temporal process by which human beings realize Divine Oneness—arguing that as individuals grow in intellect and contemplate the world around them, the existence of a single God becomes innately clear to them, and they witness to this truth inwardly (Q, R, Ṭs, Ṭū), since they bear this knowledge already in their primordial nature. Others, however, reject this interpretation as against the plain meaning of the text and argue that God temporarily bestowed faculties of intellect, hearing, and speech on the “particles,” or human “seed,” just as He did when He caused the heavens and the earth to respond to Him (41:11; R, Ṭ); see also 41:21, where God endows bodily organs and faculties with the ability to testify.

God causes the Children of Adam to bear witness concerning themselves, or “against themselves.” The Quran mentions human beings bearing witness against themselves, in both this world and the Hereafter, through their deeds and their very bodies (cf. 6:130; 7:37; 24:24; 36:65; 41:20–22). In the present verse, their witnessing takes the form of a response to God’s question Am I not your Lord? (Alastu bi-rabbikum?), understood to be a declarative statement in the form of a question, requiring the hearers to bear witness to its truth. Poetically, some Muslim authors, such as Rūmī, have described the event in this verse as the “Day of Alast,” referring to the first part of the question Am I not your Lord?; “Day of Alast” therefore refers in Islamic thought to a day beyond all days reckoned in time. Their response is Yea (balā, a classical affirmative connoting certainty), we bear witness. Some reports consider we bear witness to have been spoken by other witnesses to their testimony—identified variously as the angels, Adam, the heavens and the earth, or God Himself (IJ, IK, Q, R, Ṭ)—although most consider this a less likely reading.

The verse ends by explaining that the purpose of this questioning and witnessing was so that human beings could not come on the Day of Resurrection claiming to have been unaware of God’s Lordship or their duty to worship Him. One may question how one can be responsible, during earthly life, for a testimony one cannot remember having made prior to coming into this world (R). Some commentators have argued that it is precisely this human inability to remember the event described in this verse that points to its symbolic nature and thus reject the idea that a pretemporal covenant, of which most human beings are not conscious and that they cannot recall, could be the basis of a responsibility that is binding upon them (R). When this verse is read in the wider Quranic context and juxtaposed with Quranic prophetic history, however, this pretemporal recognition of God’s Lordship can be understood as creating an innate disposition in human beings toward recognizing and worshipping God during earthly life and toward accepting the prophets and the messages they bring as “reminders” of what human beings already know inwardly, but have merely forgotten. Those who reject the prophets, therefore, are considered willfully ignorant, denying truths that should, in any sincere and morally uncorrupted soul, resonate with a deep but forgotten knowledge of God that nevertheless still exists within them. In this sense, those who deny and reject the prophetic messages sent to them are described as kuffār, a word most commonly translated “disbelievers,” but whose etymological meaning signifies the “covering over” of something, which in the religious sense refers to covering over the innate awareness of the truth of God’s Lordship and Oneness that they bear within themselves. The pretemporal covenant, then, in conjunction with God’s sending of messengers to all people serves as a “proof” against the disbelievers who capriciously or cynically deny prophetic messages that they know deep within themselves to be true.

This verse is also the basis for more elaborate narrations, some of which are attributed to the Prophet, that connect the pretemporal covenant with predestinarian notions. Although the literal reading of this verse suggests that all human beings have made the same covenant recognizing God’s Lordship and therefore have the same possibility for realizing it in earthly life, several reports suggest that human moral destiny is linked to distinctions made among the covenanters on the occasion of this pretemporal covenant. Some reports assert that God removed some progeny from the right side of Adam or with His Right Hand, and these human beings were destined for the Garden, while others were removed from Adam’s left side or with God’s other Hand and were thus destined for Hell (Q, Ṭ). Still other reports indicate that some covenanters bore witness only reluctantly or deceptively (IJ, Qm, ST, Ṭ), although this interpretation is rejected by other authorities. Some early Twelver Shiite traditions indicate that the covenanters on this day were also asked to bear witness to the prophethood of Muhammad and the spiritual authority of the Shiite Imams, but that only some accepted the latter (°Ay, Qm). Similarly, some early Sufi authors, including al-Ḥakīm al-Tirmidhī (third/ninth century), referred to the pretemporal covenant as a moment in which the spiritual elect (khawāṣṣ) were distinguished from the common people (‘awāmm).

Given the great importance in Islamic thought of this verse and the event it describes, it was natural for some thinkers to link it with various notions of a spiritual hierarchy among human beings and with the concept of predestination. Yet, although this pretemporal covenant may indeed be linked to human moral destiny in a foundational way, because it created in human beings an innate ability to recognize religious truth, the plain meaning of the verse more plausibly indicates the universal potential in all human beings for moral and spiritual attainment and the acceptance of revelation.

173 or lest you should say, “[It is] only that our fathers ascribed partners unto God beforehand, and we were their progeny after them. Wilt Thou destroy us for that which the falsifiers have done?”

173 This verse indicates that the pretemporal covenant was also made with all, and not some, human beings, so that they could not offer the excuse, on the Day of Judgment, that they were merely following their fathers’ practices of idolatry or “ascribing partners unto God.” In several Quranic accounts, people reject their prophets’ warnings against idolatry and sin by arguing that they are following the practices of their fathers (2:170; 5:104; 7:28; 11:62, 87; 14:10; 21:53–54; 26:74; 31:21; 34:43; 43:22–24). This excuse is dismissed and mocked in the Quran (see 2:170; 5:104; 31:21; 43:24), and the present verse makes it clear that it can never be accepted, since God has endowed all human beings, by virtue of the pretemporal covenant made with Adam and all his progeny (v. 172), with an innate understanding of religious truth and of His sole Lordship. This basic Quranic teaching is connected to the widespread disparaging in Islamic tradition of “blind imitation,” or taqlīd, of the religious views of others (R). Taqlīd is considered permissible regarding matters of religious Law that are not based necessarily upon an innate moral or spiritual understanding (e.g., the time of day for the canonical prayers or the specific physical movements required in the prayer), and with regard to following the Sunnah, or practice, of the Prophet; but mere taqlīd is not allowed in matters of fundamental religious beliefs and principles, which one must accept with one’s own intelligence to the extent possible. Wilt Thou destroy us for that which the falsifiers have done? is similar in form to Moses’ plea to God, Wilt Thou destroy us for that which fools among us have done? in v. 155.

174 Thus do We expound the signs, that haply they may return.

174 That God “expounds the signs” (see also 6:55, 97–98, 126; 7:32, 52; 9:11; 10:5, 24; 11:1; 13:2; 30:28; and 41:3, where it serves also as the basis for the title of Sūrah 41, “Expounded”) means that He provides a variety of arguments and indications for His Oneness and Lordship; see 6:55c; 41:3c.

175 And recite unto them the account of the one to whom We gave Our signs, but he cast them off. So Satan made him his follower, and he became one of the deviant.

①76 Had We willed, We would surely have elevated him thereby, but he inclined toward the earth and followed his caprice. Thus his parable is that of a dog: if you attack him, he lolls out his tongue, and if you leave him alone, he lolls out his tongue. That is the likeness of the people who deny Our signs. So recount the stories, that haply they may reflect.

175–76 The opening command recite unto them is addressed to the Prophet. These verses, coming at the end of several narratives about people who rejected their prophets and the messages and signs they brought may be read as a general warning about the moral fate of those who “cast off” and deny the signs that God has sent them. Al-Rāzī prefers this general reading, but many early commentators considered the one to whom We gave Our signs to refer to Bal[°]ām Bā[°]ūrā[°] (Balaam of Beor)—a spiritually gifted man, capable of receiving certain Divine messages and having his supplications answered by God (Ṭ, Z)—who was compelled or bribed to utter imprecations against Moses (IK, JJ, Ṭ, W, Z).

The various narratives of Balaam provided in the Quranic commentaries have many details in common with the Biblical narrative of this same figure (cf. Numbers 22–24), but they also differ, significantly, from it in that the Biblical Balaam—though rebuked by God—refused to curse Moses and his people and instead conveyed God’s blessing upon them. In most Quranic commentary accounts, Balaam is similarly reluctant to curse the Israelites, but in the end is persuaded to do so. Also, reports included in some commentaries identify Balaam as an Israelite, while in the Biblical account he is a prophetic figure from a different people. Thus despite the widespread association of these verses with Balaam, the connection seems tenuous.

Alternately, some reports identify the one to whom We gave Our signs as an Arab named Umayyah ibn Abī Ṣalt, who had studied the Jewish and Christian scriptures and hoped he would be the prophet that he believed these sources had been predicting. Unlike many Arabs of his time, he is said to have believed in the Oneness of God and in the Hereafter (R). But when Muhammad arose as a prophet, Umayyah was resentful and refused to accept him or the Quranic message (IK, R, Ṭ, W).

For those who consider the verses as a reference to Balaam, commentators gloss Our signs here as referring to either Balaam’s “prophethood” generally (Ṭ) or his reported knowledge of the “greatest Name of God” (Ṭ), although it more likely indicates knowledge of the scriptures, which would apply in all interpretations of the verse (JJ, Ṭ, Z). This knowledge was then cast . . . off, “like a snake shedding its skin” (JJ), when he abandoned and denied the signs. Satan made him his follower may also be interpreted to mean “Satan overtook him,” as one overtakes another on a path (R, Z). In either case this verse suggests that rejecting God’s signs leaves one vulnerable to the influence of Satan (cf. 15:42, which says that Satan does not have authority over God’s faithful servants).

Had We willed, We would surely have elevated him thereby, that is, by virtue of the signs he had been given (v. 175). Some understand this statement to mean that God did not will him to be spiritually ennobled in this way and thus caused or allowed him to turn his back on these signs (R). It could also be interpreted, by contrast, to mean that had God willed, He could have compelled him to remain faithful to the signs that he had been given, but allowed him instead to make freely his own moral choice (Z). That the person inclined toward the earth and followed his caprice means that he became enamored of worldly goods and pursued them (IK, R, Ṭ, Z).

The comparison of those who deny God’s signs to a dog (a ritually unclean animal in many interpretations of Islamic Law), which “lolls out its tongue” (or “pants”) whether “attacked” or “left alone,” suggests that such people are devoid of the spiritual discernment to know what is good or harmful for them and are thus impervious to guidance (IK, R, Ṭ, Z). It is similar to the idea expressed in 2:6: Truly it is the same for the disbelievers whether thou warnest them or warnest them not; they do not believe. Other verses compare human beings to cattle (see 7:179) and frightened asses (see 74:49–51) to indicate their lack of spiritual discernment; see also 2:65c.

For al-Rāzī, these verses serve as a warning to all people of learning that the spiritual knowledge they have been given by God can be removed if they incline toward base desires and worldly concerns, citing the ḥadīth, “Whoever increases in knowledge, but does not increase in guidance, increases in naught but distance from God” (R). The command recount the stories is addressed to the Prophet, and the stories refers to the accounts of past communities mentioned in this sūrah.

177 Evil is the parable of the people who denied Our signs and wronged themselves.

177 This verse suggests that the foregoing discussion of the one to whom We gave Our signs, but he cast them off (v. 175) is meant to refer in a general way to all those who reject the signs given to them. In doing so, they “wrong themselves,” an idea that recurs throughout the Quran (see, e.g., 9:70; 16:33; 29:40; 30:9).

178 Whomsoever God guides, he is rightly guided; and whomsoever He leads astray, it is they who are the losers.

178 That God guides, but may also “lead astray,” is indicated in several verses, causing some to hold that all guidance and leading astray is a matter of God’s Will (R). Whomsoever God guides is said to be rightly guided, so that none shall lead him astray (39:37), while whomsoever He leads astray are losers, in both this world and the Hereafter (R), and are elsewhere said to have no protector (17:97; 18:17). Although this is presented as a matter of God’s Will (6:125; 74:31), God is said, more specifically, to “lead astray” the iniquitous (2:26), the disbelievers (40:74), and the prodigal doubter (40:34), suggesting to many theologians that God leads people astray only as a consequence or punishment for their actions (Ṭs).

179 We have indeed created for Hell many among jinn and men: they have hearts with which they understand not; they have eyes with which they see not; and they have ears with which they hear not. Such as these are like cattle. Nay, they are even further astray. It is they who are heedless.

179 The meaning of God’s having created for Hell many among jinn and men goes to the heart of the issue of the relationship between human and Divine control of human moral choice and destiny. For many Ash‘arites, the verse should be read literally to mean that God created certain human beings and jinn in such a way that they are innately inclined toward acts that lead inevitably to their perdition (R). For those who preferred this literal reading, the verse is consistent with other verses indicating that God guides some and misleads others (see 7:178c). It is also consistent with several ahādīth, including one that indicates that while the child is still unborn, God commands an angel to write down his or her worldly provision, life span, works, and fate as either blissful or wretched in the Hereafter (IK).

Mu^ctazilites and many others, however, read the verse to mean that God has foreknowledge of individuals' moral choices and destinies, but does not determine them (Ṭ). The statement that He created them for Hell may simply be meant to indicate their final end, as if to say, “We have created many jinn and men only to have them end up in Hellfire”; or it may express the idea that some jinn and men are so deeply entrenched in disbelief that it is as if they were created for Hell (Z). For Mu^ctazilites, interpreting this verse to mean that God literally creates some individuals to disobey His commands would be to assert that God has given certain individuals moral commands that they are innately incapable of fulfilling, something that would be futile, unjust, and unmerciful and thus cannot be attributed to God (R). Moreover, they note that a literal reading of this verse would conflict with a literal reading of other verses, such as 51:56: I did not create jinn and mankind, save to worship Me.

The eyes, the ears, and the heart—the last of which is considered the seat of understanding, intelligence, and knowledge (R)—comprise the faculties and organs by which individuals can be guided to the truth (IK). But for some people, these faculties do not fulfill their Divinely intended function (see e.g., 2:18; 18:101; 47:23), either because God has “sealed” or “covered” them (see, e.g., 2:7; 47:16) or because human beings have refused to employ them properly. Their hearts do not contemplate the various signs of God and His Oneness or the messages sent through His prophets (Ṭ, Z); their eyes do not see the obvious signs of God’s creative Power in the world around them (Aj, Qu, Ṭ); and their ears do not hear the teachings of the scriptures (Ṭ, Z), but only the call of temptation (Qu). See 41:5, where the disbelievers say to the Prophet, Our hearts are under coverings from that to which you call us, and in our ears is a deafness, and between us and you there is a veil.

Finally, the verse compares such persons to cattle (see also 25:44), for cattle do not possess an intellect with which to understand religious truth (Ṭ, Z). Those who do not employ their intellect are thus no better than beasts (R)—in fact, they are even worse for squandering the gift of intellect, which they have been given precisely for the purpose of discerning truth. Like cattle, such persons are concerned only with fulfilling base desires for food and comfort (Aj). The verse then asserts that they are even further astray than cattle, since even cattle know enough to flee from what is harmful for them and to seek out what nourishes them (Aj, R, Ṭ, Z), while the disbelievers work toward their own spiritual destruction. Moreover, Islamic tradition holds that animals and all natural phenomena recognize their Creator, but the disbelievers do not (R); and although cattle can be guided by the call of their herdsman, even if they hear it only as a call and a shout (2:171), the disbelievers refuse to be guided at all (IK).

180 Unto God belong the Most Beautiful Names; so call Him by them, and leave those who deviate with regard to His Names. Soon they shall be recompensed for that which they used to do.

180 Following the mention of those who are heedless in v. 179, this verse instructs people to call upon God with His Most Beautiful Names. The verb that translates call upon also means “to supplicate” and is here connected by commentators with the practice of remembering and invoking God (dhikr; R). This verse is thus one of the scriptural bases for the practice of dhikr in Islamic spirituality and especially Sufism. Mention of God’s Most Beautiful Names is also found in 20:8; 59:24; and a similar command to call upon them is made in 17:110: Say, “Call upon God, or call upon the Compassionate. Whichever you call upon, to Him belong the Most Beautiful Names.”

God’s Names are described as the Most Beautiful (al-ḥusnā), a word also related to goodness and virtue, and are said to be beautiful to the ear as well as the heart (Q). On the basis of a widely reported ḥadīth (see 59:24c), God is traditionally said to have ninety-nine Beautiful Names. While the list of those Names varies slightly in different reports, and several lists contain more than ninety-nine, the Names attributed to God in Islamic tradition are sanctified by the Islamic scripture in that they are based upon or derived from the many terms used to describe Him in the Quran, including those repeated frequently throughout the text such as Compassionate, Merciful, Sovereign, Holy, One, Hearer, Seer, Knower, and Powerful. In some cases, a particular Name of God does not appear in the Quran, but is recognized as a Divine Name on the basis of related Divine actions described in the text.

That God has many Names is not considered to compromise His Oneness or to indicate that He has parts or qualities that would compromise His Oneness; rather, the Names are considered to represent Attributes or Qualities of His undifferentiated Essence, which are differentiated through the Self-manifestation of the Essence and then perceived in the mind of the one who is calling Him by them. They also reveal different Attributes of God, some pertaining to His Essence, and others to the different ways in which He relates to His creation. Nonetheless, each Name is understood to possess a real Divine Presence or Quality, for as al-Ṭabrisī notes there are no empty titles for God. In fact, in Islamic metaphysics, the whole of the cosmos is considered to be in reality nothing but reflections or theophanies (tajalliyāt) of the Divine Names and Qualities.

The discussion of God's Names and Qualities is a very important issue in Islamic theology, philosophy, and Sufism; and the science of Divine Names (‘ilm al-asmā’), which includes the science of al-jafr—that is, the science of the symbolic numerical significance of the Names and their constituent letters—is among the most important of the esoteric Islamic sciences. Most Islamic thinkers agree that God's Names are His Attributes (ṣifāt), which can be divided into Attributes of Essence (e.g., Knowing, Powerful, Living, Hearing, Seeing, Holy) and Attributes of action (e.g., Creator, Provider, Originator, Forgiver, Judge), although there are some differences in traditional sources regarding which Names belong to which category and the extent to which the Divine Attributes are distinct from or identical with the God's Essence. In Islamic esoterism, God and His Names are considered one. God is understood to be present in His sanctified Names, each of which is a ladder leading to Him.

God's Names have also been commonly divided into those of Beauty (jamāl), such as Compassionate, Merciful, Gentle, Kind, and Pardoner, and those of Majesty (jalāl), such as Judge, Compeller, Reckoner, and Possessor of Vengeance. Along these same lines, the Names have been also divided into those that could be manifested in human beings (Kind, Generous) and those that belong to God alone (Sovereign, Sublime, Holy; R). In the Islamic world, human beings are allowed to have as their names those Divine Names that represent qualities that can be manifested in human beings, such as the name Karīm (Generous), but not those that belong to God alone, such as Quddūs (Holy). There are also names belonging to both categories, such as ‘Alī, which can also be used as human names.

Although all of God's Names can be described as the Most Beautiful (Ṭs), some suggest that here the Most Beautiful Names refers specifically to the Names of Beauty, which believers are encouraged to call upon in seeking God's Forgiveness and Mercy, to the exclusion of the Names of Majesty or Wrath (Ṭs), which they are generally discouraged from invoking. Others assert that one can call upon God by any Name or description of God found in the Quran; for example, one may address Him as “completer of His Light” (61:8); “the best of plotters” (3:54); or “the fourth of three” (cf. 58:7; Q). God's supreme Name is Allāh, which is said to encompass all of His other Names (Q). Sufi practitioners of dhikr regularly invoke the Divine Name Allāh, but it is also common for them to repeatedly invoke other Divine Names under the instruction of a shaykh, or spiritual guide, in order to cultivate certain spiritual attitudes or virtues or as antidotes to certain ailments or difficulties existing in the soul (symbolically speaking, to transform the substance of the soul from lead into gold). According to Sufi commentators, behind God's Names and Attributes mentioned in the Quran are other Attributes that surpass human understanding; the Names thus represent in a sense the limits of our knowledge of God (Aj, ST, Su, Qu), but also gates to His infinite Reality and the forms made available to human beings to acquire knowledge of God without being limited to what is humanly accessible.

Those who deviate with regard to His Names are said to be those who refer to Him using specifically human attributes, such as “father” or “son” (R), those who attribute evil actions or intentions to God, or those who have an anthropomorphic understanding of the Divinity and thus describe Him in terms that are ignorant or unworthy of Him (Ṭs, Z). Several commentators assert that one should not refer to God using any name or description not found in the Quran or the Sunnah, even if it is a synonym for a known Name of God found in these sources (R, Ṭs). Whenever the invocation of God’s Names is done ritually, the Names have to be invoked in Arabic, although in the context of personal supplication, rather than canonical prayer or Sufi dhikr, it is permissible to use non-Arabic references to God, such as Khudā in Persian or “God” in English. To deviate with regard to His Names can also refer to those who use His Names or derivations from them to designate false gods or idols, such as the pagan Makkans who worshipped Allāt, whose name appears to be a feminine form of Allāh (IK, Q, R, Ṭs, Z).

181 And among those We have created, there is a community that guides by the truth and does justice thereby.

181 See v. 159, where the same description is applied to a community among the people of Moses. In the present verse the community is widely considered to be a reference specifically to the Islamic community (Ṭ, Ṭs). Some narrow the reference further on the basis of a ḥadīth in which the Prophet says, “Verily among my community is a group who will [live] according to the truth until the return of Jesus, peace be upon him” (R, Ṭs, Z); this group is sometimes identified as the religious scholars or those who call others to Islam (Z), while some Shiite traditions consider it a reference to the Shiite community specifically (Ṭs). More generally, the verse can indicate that God will never leave the world without someone who calls to the truth (Q, R). In Shiite tradition, there is a well-known ḥadīth that says, “The earth will never be left without a Proof of God (ḥujjat Allāh).”

182 And as for those who deny Our signs, We shall lead them on little by little, whence they know not.

183 And I will grant them respite; truly My scheme is firm.

182–83 See also 68:44–45. That God shall lead them on little by little, or “by degrees,” may refer to the various ways in which God “leads astray” those who disbelieve or do wrong as punishment for their disbelief and wrongdoing, including “granting them respite” (v. 183; see also 13:32; 22:44, 48; 35:8; 68:44–45) or making their wrongdoing “seem fair” to them (3:14; 6:108; 10:12), so that they falsely assume that they enjoy Divine favor and thus continue along this path toward their own punishment (Ṭ). That God “schemes” against the disbelievers and that His scheming is superior to theirs are alluded to in other verses (see 7:99; 10:21; 52:42; 86:15–17); the latter is similar to the idea that God is the best of plotters (see 3:54; 8:30 and commentary) and that unto God belongs plotting altogether (13:42; cf. 14:46); see also 27:50.

184 Have they not reflected? There is no madness in their companion. He is naught but a clear warner.

184 Their companion is a reference to the Prophet Muhammad, and the statement that there is no madness in him is a rebuttal to the Makkans’ claims that he was “mad” or, literally, “possessed by jinn” (majnūn); see 15:6; 23:70; 34:8; 37:36; 44:14; 68:51; 81:22. The Quran also assures Muhammad personally that he is not possessed in 52:29 and 68:2. According to one report, the Prophet had been atop the hill of Ṣafā calling to each clan among the Quraysh and warning them of God’s punishment. Someone in the crowd remarked that he seemed possessed, raising his voice in warning all night long. This verse was then revealed in response (IK, R, Ṭ, Z). Al-Rāzī suggests more generally that some Makkans dismissed the Prophet as “possessed,” because his religious practice was so different from their own or because, when revelation came upon him, his physical appearance and demeanor changed dramatically (R). The rhetorical question Have they not reflected? is intended to spur the pagan Makkans to consider the known character and virtue of the Prophet in assessing the truth and soundness of the message he brings; as the Prophet is told to say to his Makkan detractors in 10:16, I tarried among you for a lifetime before it, meaning that they should know well his character. The Prophet is instructed to describe himself as a clear warner in several verses, including 15:89; 22:49; 29:50; 38:70; 46:9; 67:26; Noah also describes himself as a clear warner in 11:25; 26:115; 71:2.

185 Or have they not contemplated the dominion of the heavens and the earth, and what things God has created, and that their term may already have drawn nigh? So in what discourse after this will they believe?

185 This is one of several passages where people, and here the Makkans in particular, are asked to consider and reflect upon the wonders of God's creation as proof of His Reality and Power; see also 14:19; 17:99; 21:30; 22:65; 26:7; 27:86; 29:19; 31:20; 88:17–20. Their term refers to their individual deaths, or to the end of the world and their impending judgment before God (Z), or to both. They should consider that this term may already have drawn nigh, for death and judgment are always imminent. The rhetorical question In what discourse after this—that is, the Quran—will they believe? (cf. 45:6; 77:50) is meant to indicate that it should not be difficult for them to believe in the clear message of the Quran, conveyed in their own language by a man already known to them as a man of good, sound, and truthful character. According to commentators, the Divine provenance of the Quran should have been obvious to the Makkans, since its language has a literary quality and clarity that none could imitate or challenge (Ṭ; see 2:23; 10:38; 11:13).

186 Whomsoever God leads astray, no guide has he. And He leaves them to wander confused in their rebellion.

186 Whomsoever God leads astray has no guide, for as the Quran states in 3:73, the only guidance is God's Guidance; see also 13:33; 39:23, 36; 40:33. That God leaves them to wander confused in their rebellion refers to the respite that God gives disbelievers and wrongdoers in this life, a respite that may allow for their repentance, but may also give them the opportunity to persist in the wrongdoing that assures their punishment (Ṭ); see also 2:15; 6:110; 10:11; 23:76; 27:4.

187 They question thee about the Hour, when it will set in. Say, “Knowledge thereof lies only with my Lord. None save He shall manifest it at its proper time. Heavy shall it weigh upon the heavens and the earth. It shall not come upon you but suddenly.” They question thee as if thou knew it well. Say, “Knowledge thereof lies only with God, but most of mankind know not.”

187 The Hour refers here and throughout the Quran to the onset of the apocalypse and the final end of the world or eschaton. That knowledge of the Hour lies only with my Lord indicates that the coming of the Hour is among the “unseen” matters known to God alone (Ṭ); regarding His exclusive knowledge of the Hour, see 31:34; 33:63; 41:47; 43:85; 79:42–44. In a well-known ḥadīth, when the Archangel Gabriel questions the Prophet about when the Hour will arrive, he responds, “The one who is questioned knows no more than the questioner” (R). According to some commentators, not knowing when the Hour will arrive, like not knowing the moment of one’s own death, serves to encourage good deeds and discourage evil ones, since one never knows when one may be called to account (R, Z). That the Hour will come upon people suddenly (cf. 6:31; 12:107; 21:40; 22:55; 43:66; 47:18) indicates that the time of its coming will always remain beyond the knowledge of human beings, even the prophets. This verse has great importance, therefore, for the understanding of Islamic eschatology. Although a number of people have made predictions about the coming of the Hour or even claimed to be the Mahdī, the rightly-guided leader who will set matters right on earth before the final apocalypse, as widely described in the Ḥadīth, the Quran and the Prophet himself explicitly reject the idea that the Prophet, or indeed anyone but God, had knowledge of when the Hour and the events leading up to it would arrive.

Heavy shall it weigh upon the heavens and the earth may refer to the destructive events associated with the apocalypse as described in the Quran, including the splitting of the heavens (82:1, 84:1), the convulsing of the earth (99:1), the destruction of the mountains (101:5), and the boiling of the seas (81:6; 82:3; R). It may also mean that the coming of the Hour will weigh heavily upon those in the heavens and the earth—that is, upon angels, jinn, and human beings—because the uncertainty about the time of its arrival is difficult for them to bear or because they dread its coming (R, Ṭ, Z).

The Makkans questioned the Prophet about the Hour as if he knew it well, meaning they assumed that the Prophet had acquired knowledge of the coming of the Hour (JJ, Z) and that he welcomed questions about it and was willing to discuss it (Ṭ); moreover, the Prophet's open and welcoming demeanor gave them confidence that he would disclose this secret matter to them because of their close relationship to him (R, Ṭ, Z). The verse concludes by again asserting God's exclusive knowledge of the Hour. But regarding this truth as well as other important religious truths, most of mankind know not (cf. 34:28, 36; 45:26).

188 Say, "I have no power over what benefit or harm may come to me, save as God wills. Had I knowledge of the unseen, I would have acquired much good, and no evil would have touched me. I am naught save a warner and a bearer of glad tidings unto a people who believe.

188 That the Prophet has no power over benefit or harm to himself or others and that he is as utterly subject to Divine Will as are all other human beings is also found in 10:49 and 72:21–22. Knowledge of the unseen includes knowledge of all realms of reality that transcend the ordinary ken of human beings, including knowledge of the celestial realm, of the inner intentions, thoughts, and spiritual destiny of others, and of the Hour (v. 187) as well all future events. In this verse, the Prophet argues that if he had access to such knowledge, particularly regarding the future (Ṭ), he could have used it to prevent harm or evil to himself and acquired much good, meaning the accumulation of good works (R, Ṭ), although some indicate that, in theory, this could also mean the acquisition of worldly benefits (R, Ṭ, Z). According to one report, some of the Quraysh asked the Prophet if God had informed him about the time of rising and falling prices, that they might benefit from this information in their mercantile activity (R).

The description of Muhammad and other prophets as simply "warners" and "bearers of glad tidings" is repeated throughout the Quran (see, e.g., 2:119, 213; 4:165; 5:19; 6:48; 11:2; 17:105; 18:56; 25:56; 33:45; 34:28; 48:8).

189 He it is Who created you from a single soul, and made from it its mate, that he might find rest in her. Then, when he covered her, she bore a light burden, and carried it about. But when she had grown heavy, they called upon God, their Lord, "If Thou giveth us a healthy child, we shall surely be among the thankful."

Then, when He gave them a healthy child, they ascribed partners unto Him with regard to that which He had given them. Exalted is God above the partners they ascribe.

189–90 Regarding God’s creation of human beings from a single soul, see 4:1c; 39:6c. In v. 189, as in 4:1, the single soul is commonly identified as Adam and its mate as Eve (JJ, R, Ṭ, Z), although these terms may be used to refer to the generation of human beings from male and female spouses generally. God made its mate that he might find rest in her is similar to the statement in 30:21: And among His signs is that He created mates for you from among yourselves, that you might find rest in them, and He established affection and mercy between you. Thus, among the most important benefits of marriage are the emotional and physical comforts that each spouse provides for the other (see also 2:187), not merely the opportunity for procreation (mentioned in 16:72). To find rest in one’s spouse means to enjoy love, peace, and intimacy together, which is natural, in a sense, because spouses have been created from a single soul (Z). Al-Zamakhsharī maintains that the love for one’s spouse is therefore similar to the love for one’s child, insofar as the love of both derive, to some extent, from the sense that they are part of one’s very being.

Given the commentators’ tendency to gloss the original human soul and its mate (which is also a soul like it), in various Quranic contexts, as references to Adam and Eve, some commentators also interpret the subsequent narrative in vv. 189–90 as pertaining specifically to Adam and Eve. In this interpretation, when Adam covered Eve—that is, had sexual relations with her—Eve bore a light burden, meaning the seed of Adam that she now carried . . . about inside her. But when she had grown heavy with child, the couple together prayed that the child would be healthy and sound (R, Ṭ, Z). Yet when they were given a sound child, they ascribed partners unto God. Given this spiritually reprehensible response to the blessing they had received, it is difficult to see how this narrative can be said to concern Adam, who is a prophet according to the Islamic tradition. Therefore, some indicate that when the verse turns to the discussion of ascribing partners to God, it is referring not to Adam and Eve, but to their offspring, that is—human beings in general (R, Z)—yet the verb tenses continue to be in the dual. Given all these considerations, it seems most reasonable to understand this narrative as a parable relating to married couples in general and demonstrating the human tendency to beseech God when one feels helpless and afraid, but to attribute good fortune to other natural or supernatural causes after God has answered one’s prayers (R). For similar parables, see, e.g., 6:63–64; 10:22–23; 17:67; 29:65; 30:33; 31:32. The statement that God is exalted . . . above the partners human beings ascribe to Him is also found in 9:31;

191 Do they ascribe as partners those who created naught and are themselves created?

192 Those who can neither help them, nor help themselves?

191–92 These verses contain a common Quranic argument demonstrating the foolishness of worshipping anything other than God. Since God is the only Creator, anything other than Him is itself created (cf. 6:100; 13:16; 16:20; 25:3; 31:11; 35:40; 46:4; 52:35–36). All objects of worship other than God are therefore created beings themselves, ultimately incapable of helping others or even themselves outside of God’s Will and thus unable to bring benefit or harm to themselves or others; see v. 188 and 10:49, where the Prophet indicates that he too is incapable in this regard, as well as 5:76; 6:71; 10:18; 13:16; 21:43; 36:74–75; 20:88–89; 21:66; 22:12; 25:3, 55; 26:71–73, which relate to all idols and false deities.

193 And if you call them to guidance, they follow you not. It is the same for you whether you call them or whether you remain silent.

193 If you call them to guidance, meaning if one calls the idols themselves to guidance, they follow you not; that is, they do not respond (JJ, Ṭ, Ṭs). Others suggest this may mean that when one calls upon the idols for guidance, they do not respond to the request (Z). They cannot respond in any way because, as suggested in v. 195, they do not have ears with which they hear; nor do they have faculties of intellect and speech. Alternately, if you call them to guidance may refer to the attempt to call the idolaters, or those who ascribe partners to God (vv. 190–92), to guidance (Ṭs). In either case, because of their inability or unwillingness to respond to this call, it does not matter whether you call them or whether you remain silent (Ṭ) The seeming imperviousness of certain people to guidance and truth is alluded to metaphorically in v. 179, where such people are likened to cattle, and is also mentioned in 2:6 and 36:10.

194 Truly those whom they call upon apart from God are servants like you. So call upon them! Let them answer you, if you are truthful.

195 Have they feet with which they walk? Have they hands with which they grasp? Have they eyes with which they perceive? Have they ears with which they hear? Say, “Call upon your partners, then scheme against me, and grant me no respite.

196 Truly my Protector is God, Who sent down the Book, and He protects the righteous.

194–96 These three verses challenge the idolaters to call upon the idols and false deities they ascribe as partners to God, while mocking these false objects of worship as merely servants like themselves (v. 194), belonging to God and subject to His Sovereignty. Moreover, the capabilities of such idols fall short of those enjoyed even by the human beings who worship them, for as the rhetorical questions in v. 195 remind them, the idols have no feet to walk upon, no hands to grasp, no eyes to perceive, no ears to hear. How, then, the questions imply, can one worship what is less capable than oneself? (IK, Mw). The challenge the Prophet is told to issue at the end of v. 195, scheme against me, and grant me no respite, is that they try their best to thwart God and the mission of His Prophet. This is identical or similar to statements made by Noah and Hūd to their disbelieving peoples; see 10:71; 11:55. See also 77:39, where God challenges the deniers on the Day of Judgment, saying, So if you have a scheme, then scheme against Me! The disbelievers are invited to scheme and grant no respite, but it is understood that their schemes will ultimately fail, for naught in the heavens or upon the earth can thwart God (35:44), while by contrast God’s scheme is firm despite His “granting them respite” (see 7:182–83c).

The Prophet’s invitation to his detractors to scheme against him demonstrates his utter confidence in God’s Succor and Protection (Z), as indicated in the Prophet’s statement in v. 196: Truly my Protector is God. Protector translates Walī, a Divine Name invoked several times in the Quran (e.g., 4:45; 6:127; 42:9, 28; 59:23; 66:4), which in addition to “Protector” also means “Friend.” God protects the righteous, specifically, as He protects the reverent (45:19) and the believers (2:257; 3:68).

197 And those whom you call upon apart from Him can neither help you, nor help themselves.”

197 This verse is a reiteration of the statement in vv. 191–92 about the helplessness of idols and false deities; see commentary on these verses. That these false idols cannot even help themselves and are in need of the help of their human adherents is illustrated with irony in 21:68, where the idolaters among Abraham’s people seek to kill Abraham in order to “help their gods.”

198 If thou callest them unto guidance, they hear not. Thou seest them looking upon thee, but they see not.

198 Cf. 35:14. According to most commentators, if thou callest them unto guidance refers to the attempt to call the idols to guidance (IK, Q, R, T, Ts, Z). The idols have been fashioned to appear as if they have eyes, which are directed toward those in front of them, so that they seem to be looking upon those standing before them, but they see not (IK, T, Z). Some commentators mention a minority interpretation indicating that this verse refers to calling the idolaters, rather than the idols, unto guidance (IK, Q, R, Ts). The ambiguity that allows for the possibility that the verse is describing either the idols or the idolaters makes a strong rhetorical point. Reading this verse in conjunction with v. 179, which describes the idolaters as having eyes, ears, and hearts that do not function so as to allow them to know and be rightly guided, and v. 195, which describes the false idols they worship as without functioning eyes and ears at all, suggests that in worshipping the blind and deaf idols, the idolaters become similarly blind and deaf—or that the idolaters are already blind and deaf; otherwise they would not worship idols. Although the idolaters, unlike the idols themselves, do have physically functional eyes and ears, these faculties have become atrophied and spiritually dysfunctional, effectively making the idolaters as impervious to guidance as the idols themselves.

199 Take to pardoning, and enjoin right, and turn away from the ignorant.

including one's religious opponents or those by whom one has been wronged; see also 2:109; 3:159; 5:13; 23:96–98; 24:22; 41:34–35; 45:14; 64:14. What is meant here is forgiving and excusing people's failings of character and deed and being gentle rather than harsh. When this verse was revealed, the Prophet reportedly asked the Archangel Gabriel what was meant, and after consulting with God, Gabriel stated that it meant that one should "maintain the ties of kinship with one who would cut himself off from you; give to the one who withholds from you; and pardon the one who wrongs you" (R, Ṭ, Ṭs, Z). The Prophet also reportedly advised his followers, "Be easy; do not be difficult" (Z). Pardoning translates ʿafw, which can also mean "a surplus," and a minority interpretation understands this verse as commanding the Prophet to collect the surplus wealth of his followers for the purposes of charity prior to the Divine commandment to establish the obligatory alms (zakāh; R, Ṭ).

Enjoin right is an injunction found in several verses, although in these cases, right translates maʿrūf, while here it translates the related term ʿurf, which means what is considered right according to custom or tradition. Both terms connote proper, normative, and honorable behavior (Z; cf. 3:104, 110, 114; 7:157; 9:71, 112; 22:41; 31:17); see 3:104c. Turn away from the ignorant means to be patient with foolish or bad behavior, to avert one's eyes from behavior that is offensive (R), and to leave people alone once one has apprised them of the truth (Ṭs), rather than arguing with them or responding to them in kind (Z). See also 4:63; 6:68, 106, 112, 137; 9:95; 15:94; 32:30; 43:83; 51:54; 70:42 for similar injunctions.

This verse thus sums up the attitudes that represent nobility of character (Z). Although some have suggested that verses like this, which counsel forbearance toward idolaters or disbelievers, were abrogated by later Madinan verses that commanded the Prophet to fight his religious opponents, others argue that this is not the case, since an injunction toward gentleness and leniency with one's religious opponents does not stand in contradiction to the command to fight them when necessary or to claim one's rights when justified (R, Ṭ). As stated in 42:40: The recompense of an evil is an evil like unto it. Yet, whosoever pardons and sets matters aright, his reward is with God. Truly He loves not the wrongdoers.

200 And should a temptation from Satan provoke thee, seek refuge in God. Truly He is Hearing, Knowing.

200 See also 41:36 for an identical verse. Although the present verse is addressed to the Prophet, the injunction it contains applies to all believers (R). In context, this verse may mean specifically that if one is provoked by a Satanic temptation to respond with anger to the ignorant ones mentioned in v. 199, rather than turning away from them and being patient, one should seek refuge in God (Ṭ); however, the application of the injunction is general, as Muslims are always encouraged to seek God’s help against Satanic provocation, given Satan’s threat to mislead human beings (7:16–17; 15:39; 17:62). The formula “I seek refuge in God from the outcast Satan” (A‘ūdhu bi’Llāhi min al-shayṭān al-rajīm) is frequently uttered in Muslim daily life, not only when one fears evil forces or temptations, but also at the beginning of various ritual or religious acts. For example, when making ablutions, praying, or reciting Quranic verses, one begins by uttering the formula of seeking refuge with God, known as the isti‘ādhah, prior to the basmalah, the formula of invoking the Name of God; see 16:98c, where seeking refuge with God from Satan is specifically enjoined before reciting the Quran.

201 Truly those who are reverent, when they are touched by a visitation from Satan, they remember; then behold, they see.

201 To be touched by a visitation from Satan means to be tempted by him, perhaps in a dream or apparition, which is the lexical meaning of ṭā’if (Z), translated here as “visitation.” Some consider a visitation from Satan to refer here to the impulse toward anger (Ṭ) or to any Satanic insinuation (“whispering”; see 114:4c) that tempts one toward a moral or intellectual lapse (Ṭ). The reverent, when faced with such a Satanic visitation or temptation of this kind, remember—that is, they remember God, and in particular they remember the commands of God and the threat of His punishment—and so return to obedience (Ṭ). Remember translates tadhakkarū, which can also mean to “reflect” or “take heed.” After remembering, the reverent again see, meaning that they are restored to sound judgment and guidance (Ṭs) and return to what is right and what God has commanded (Ṭ). According to al-Zamakhsharī “remembering” God in this way whenever one is tempted is the regular habit of the reverent.

202 But as for their brethren, they draw them ever further into error, and then they cease not.

202 Their brethren—that is, the brethren of Satan, or satans (since Satan can be a collective reference to satans as a group)—may be a reference to the ignorant (v. 199) or to the idolaters in general (Ṭs); see also 2:14c. Such people, in contrast to the reverent in v. 201, allow themselves to be drawn ever further into error; that is, they are literally helped along in their error by Satanic temptation, until they err continuously, having no fear of God to give them pause (Ṭ). Given the ambiguity of the pronouns in this verse, it may also mean that the satans do not cease in their attempts to lead such people further into error (Ṭ, Ṭs).

203 And when thou bringest them not a sign, they say, “Why do you not choose it?” Say, “I only follow that which is revealed unto me from my Lord. These are insights from your Lord, and a guidance and a mercy for a people who believe.”

203 The disbelievers’ request for a sign from the prophets who had been sent to them is a theme repeated throughout the Quran; see 6:37c. Here they ask the Prophet, Why do you not choose it? since they assume that the signs or miracles brought by the prophets are matters of their own choosing, and that the Prophet can simply select at will a sign to present to them (Ṭ). The response that he is instructed to give, I only follow that which is revealed unto me from my Lord (see also 6:50; 10:15; 46:9), is similar to other statements he makes indicating that whatever power or knowledge he has is limited to what God has given him, for example, that he is simply a warner and bearer of glad tidings (v. 188). With their question, the idolaters may also be asking, “Why have you not received a sign from your Lord?” (Ṭ).

These are insights from your Lord refers to the Quranic verses, which are revealed to the Prophet (Ṭ, Z). They are further described as a guidance and a mercy. These same three descriptions are given of the Quran (implicitly) in 45:20 and of the Torah in 28:43. Elsewhere, both the Quran and the Torah are described as a guidance and a mercy; see 6:154; 7:52, 154; 10:57; 16:64, 89; 27:77; 31:3. According to Ibn Kathīr, the Prophet’s response to the idolaters’ request for a sign concludes with a reference to the Quran in order to indicate that the Quranic verses themselves are the Prophet’s greatest miracle or “sign.”

204 And when the Quran is recited, hearken unto it, and listen, that haply you may receive mercy.

204 The command to both hearken unto and listen to the Quran, employing two words that are nearly synonyms, serves to emphasize the care with which one should listen to the sacred sound of the recited Quran, paying full attention in order to understand its meaning as well as reflecting upon its teachings (Aj, Ṭ) and acting according to its prescriptions (Q, Z). Listen translates anṣitū, which connotes listening silently, and which some indicate was particularly important when the Prophet was reciting the Quran (Q). This injunction also has specific importance for the etiquette of communal prayer, requiring all those praying behind the imam to be silent and listen attentively to the Quranic passages that the imam recites, neither engaging in conversation with fellow worshippers nor uttering the recitations themselves (Aj, Ṭ, Ṭs, Z). Some commentators assert that the command to listen attentively to the recited Quran applies to any context in which one hears it (Aj, Q, Z). Listening silently and with pure receptivity to the recited Quran is considered by some as a means of developing the quality of pure servitude toward God (Su) or of coming into the Presence of God, who is the ultimate “Speaker” behind the recited words (Aj). Since the Quran is described in v. 203 as a mercy, one should hearken to its recited words so one may receive mercy. Ibn ‘Ajībāh states that “mercy is the closest thing to the one listening to the Quran.”

205 And remember thy Lord within thy soul, humbly and in awe, being not loud of voice, in the morning and the evening, and be not among those who are heedless.

205 The command to remember thy Lord is addressed to the Prophet, but applies to all people (R). It likely refers to both the invocation (dhikr) of God with the tongue and the remembrance (dhikr) of God in the heart—the latter indicated by the call to remember God within thy soul. This “remembrance” may also take the form of reciting the Quran or uttering words of praise and glorification for God as well as the testament to His Oneness (Z). Read in connection with the previous verse, remember thy Lord may be an injunction to remember God when one hears the Quran being recited (Ṭ). To remember God within thy soul may also mean to remember Him “within thyself,” and al-Ṭabarī connects this verse with a famous ḥadīth qudsī (sacred ḥadīth), “When My servant remembers Me in himself, I remember him in Myself; when he remembers Me in solitude, I remember him in solitude; when he remembers Me in an assembly, I remember him in an assembly that is nobler” (T). The present verse is one of the most important in suggesting the spiritual importance of dhikr (remembrance or invocation), encouraged, particularly by Sufis, as a means of attaining an “unveiling” by which one arrives at a more profound understanding of God (R) and realizes that God is ever near and witness to one’s thoughts and deeds (ST) and indeed as a means of experiencing His Presence and one’s immersion “in the ocean of Divinity.” According to a ḥadīth, “All that is on the earth is accursed save the remembrance of God.” Concerning dhikr, see also 13:28c; 29:45c; 33:41c.

The command to remember God humbly and in awe, being not loud of voice, is similar to the command to call upon Him humbly and in secret (6:63; 7:55) and can be understood as directions for the performance of dhikr in Sufism. Lowering one’s voice is also enjoined during supplicatory prayer (17:110), when speaking in the presence of the Prophet (49:2–3), and as part of one’s general comportment, for the vilest of voices are those of asses (31:19). To pray quietly reflects sincerity in one’s prayer (Aj, R, Z), indicating that one is not praying to be seen of men (4:142), and is best suited to facilitating reflection and recollection (Z). The Prophet was once asked by some Companions whether God was near, so that they should whisper to Him, or far away, so that they should shout, after which 2:186 was then revealed, When My servants ask thee about Me, truly I am near. I answer the call of the caller when he calls Me (IK).

Al-Rāzī explains that the invocation or remembrance enjoined here should be done not silently, but in a voice low enough that it can be heard only by oneself, since there is a profound connection between the body, soul, and spirit—each of which is a door to the others—a connection that is activated by the process of remembering or invoking God. Hearing the invocation uttered by the bodily tongue moves the imagination and soul of the one invoking, which in turn strengthens the remembrance in the spiritual heart. The act of remembrance thus takes place simultaneously on all three levels, each reflecting upon and strengthening the others. Because of the injunction to remember God quietly, some might consider this verse as prohibiting the loud, communal dhikr practiced by Sufi groups. Ibn ‘Ajībāh, however, rejects this interpretation, noting that this verse was revealed in Makkah, when the believers had to be circumspect in their worship, and that when the community migrated to Madinah, the Prophet and Companions would conduct public dhikr sessions in the mosque.

The morning and the evening are mentioned here and elsewhere as times particularly suited to remembering, supplicating, or praising God (see 3:41; 6:52; 18:28; 19:11; 24:36; 33:41–42; 48:9; 76:25). These two times of day may also be mentioned as a way of saying that one should remember and praise God at all times (Aj, Z). These two times, marking the beginning and end of the day, are mentioned specifically because of the spiritual symbolism they entail—each being a time of transition between light and darkness, sleeping and waking, and thus suggestive of death and resurrection (Aj, R).

﴿206﴾ Surely those who are with thy Lord are not too arrogant to worship Him. And they glorify Him, and prostrate unto Him.

206 Those who are with thy Lord are understood to be the angels, who are “with” Him in the sense of being near to His Mercy and Bounty (R, Z). The implication of this verse is that if the angels, with their spiritual purity and nearness to God, are not too arrogant to worship Him, how can it be that human beings, with their spiritual imperfections and distance from God, are reluctant to worship Him? (R). See also 4:172, where neither the messiah (Jesus) nor the angels would disdain to be a servant, or “worshipper,” of God. The angels’ constant praise and glorification of God is mentioned in several places in the Quran (see, e.g., 13:13; 39:75; 42:5). That they prostrate unto Him is also mentioned in 16:49. Because this verse includes a reference to prostrating, this is one of fifteen verses known as sajdah (prostration) verses; see 19:58c. These verses are noted as such in official Arabic texts of the Quran, indicating that Muslims should physically prostrate upon reciting them or hearing them recited although this is not required by Islamic law.

The Spoils

al-Anfāl

Al-Anfāl takes its name from the reference to spoils in v. 1. It is an early Madinan sūrah, though some maintain that v. 30 (Āl) is or vv. 30–36 (Ij, Q, Ṭs) are from the Makkan period, as they are understood by some to refer to the attempts made on the Prophet’s life by the Quraysh before he migrated to Madinah. Some also maintain that v. 63 is Makkan, since it is reported to have been revealed when ʿUmar ibn al-Khaṭṭāb embraced Islam (Āl).

A major theme of this sūrah is the Battle of Badr (2/624), fought a year after the hijrah (the migration from Makkah to Madinah), the first major military confrontation between the Muslim community and the Quraysh of Makkah, who had continued their hostility toward the Muslim community after it had moved to Madinah. It discusses also the matter of the spoils of war and their just distribution (vv. 1, 41), a topic that did not need to be addressed in the days when Muslims were an oppressed minority in Makkah. The spiritual dimensions of battle are also treated, including the assistance of angels (vv. 9, 12) and the Will of God in determining victory, as in the famous statement from v. 17, You did not slay when you slew, but God slew them, and thou threwest not when thou threwest, but God threw.

Al-Anfāl also describes the challenges and trials of battle (vv. 10–11, 43–46) and the triumph of the sincere believers over great odds (vv. 65–66) and provides important guidelines for dealing with captives (vv. 67–70) as well as the observation of treaties (vv. 56–59). The Battle of Badr was an important first victory for the young Muslim community and is cited in the commentary on many verses in the Quran as evidence of God’s Favor upon it. The last part of the sūrah addresses the relationship between those Muslims who had already migrated from Makkah to Madinah and those who had not, outlining their responsibilities toward one another.

In the Name of God, the Compassionate, the Merciful

① They question thee concerning the spoils. Say, “The spoils belong to God and the Messenger.” So reverence God and set matters aright among yourselves. And obey God and His Messenger, if you are believers. ② Only they are believers whose hearts quake with fear when God is mentioned, and when His signs are recited unto them, they increase them in faith, and they trust in their Lord, ③ who perform the prayer and spend from that which We have provided them. ④ It is they who truly are believers. For them are ranks in the sight of their Lord, and forgiveness and a generous provision. ⑤ [Remember] how thy Lord brought thee forth from thy home in truth, while a group of the believers were averse, ⑥ disputing with thee concerning the truth after it had become clear, as though they were being driven to death as they looked on. ⑦ And [remember] when God promised you that one of the two companies was to be yours, and you wished that the unarmed one would be yours. But God desires to verify the truth through His Words, and to cut off the last remnant of the disbelievers, ⑧ so that He may verify the truth and prove falsehood to be false, though the guilty be averse. ⑨ When you sought succor from your Lord, He responded to you, “I shall aid you with a thousand angels rank upon rank.” ⑩ And God made it not save as a glad tidings, and that your hearts may be at peace thereby. And victory comes from God alone; truly God is Mighty, Wise. ⑪ Behold, He covered you with sleepiness, security from Him, and sent down upon you water from the sky to purify you thereby, to remove the defilement of Satan from you, to fortify your hearts, and to make firm your steps thereby. ⑫ Behold, thy Lord revealed unto the angels, “Truly I am with you; so make firm those who believe. I shall cast terror into the hearts of those who disbelieve. So strike above the neck, and strike their every fingertip.” ⑬ That is because they are in schism with God and His Messenger. And whosoever opposes God and His Messenger—truly God is severe in retribution. ⑭ Thus it is, so taste it, and [know] that the disbelievers shall have the punishment of the Fire. ⑮ O you who believe! When you meet those who disbelieve arrayed [for battle], turn not your backs to them. ⑯ And whosoever turns his back to them that day—unless it be a stratagem of battle or to withdraw to another company—shall certainly earn wrath from God. And his refuge shall be Hell. What an evil journey's end! ⑰ You did not slay them, but God slew them, and thou threwest not when thou threwest, but God threw, that He might try the believers with a beautiful trial from Him. Truly God is Hearing, Knowing. ⑱ Thus it is, and [know] that God makes feeble the scheming of the disbelievers. ⑲ If you seek victory, then victory has come to you. And if you desist, it would be better for you. And if you return, We shall return, and your company will not avail you aught, even if they be many. And [know] that God is with the believers. ⑳ O you who believe! Obey God and His Messenger, and turn not away from him, even as you hear [him]. ㉑ And be not like those who say, “We hear,” though they hear not. ㉒ Truly the worst of beasts in the sight of God are the deaf and the dumb who understand not. ㉓ Had God known of any good in them, He would have caused them to hear; yet had He caused them to hear, they would have turned away in rejection. ㉔ O you who believe! Respond to God and the Messenger when he calls you unto that which will give you life. And know that God comes between a man and his heart, and that unto Him shall you be gathered. ㉕ And be mindful of a trial that will not befall only those among you who do wrong; and know that God is severe in retribution. ㉖ And remember when you were few, deemed weak in the land, fearing that the people would snatch you away. Then He sheltered you, and strengthened you with His help, and provided you with good things, that haply you may give thanks. ㉗ O you who believe! Betray not God and the Messenger, and betray not your trusts knowingly. ㉘ And know that your property and your children are only a trial, and that God—with Him is a great reward. ㉙ O you who believe! If you reverence God, He will make for you a criterion, and absolve you of your evil deeds, and forgive you. And God is Possessed of Tremendous Bounty. ㉚ And [remember] when those who disbelieve plotted against thee, to capture thee, or to slay thee, or to expel thee. They plotted, and God plotted. And God is the best of plotters. 31 And when Our signs are recited unto them they say, “We have heard already. Had we willed, we could have said the like of this. This is naught but fables of those of old.” 32 And [remember] when they said, “O God, if this be the truth from Thee, rain down stones upon us from the sky, or bring us a painful punishment.” 33 But God will not punish them while thou art among them. And God will not punish them while they seek forgiveness. 34 What have they to keep God from punishing them, while they turn [others] from the Sacred Mosque though they are not its protectors? Its protectors are none but the reverent, but most of them know not. 35 Their prayer at the House is naught but whistling and clapping. So taste the punishment for having disbelieved! 36 Truly those who disbelieve spend their wealth to turn [others] from the way of God. They will spend it; then it will be a source of regret for them, and then they will be overcome. And the disbelievers will be gathered unto Hell, 37 that God may separate the bad from the good, and place the bad one upon the other and heap them all together, and place them in Hell. It is they who are the losers. 38 Say to the disbelievers that, if they desist, what is past will be forgiven them, but if they relapse, then the wont of those of old has already passed. 39 And fight them until there is no strife, and religion is wholly for God. But if they desist, then truly God sees whatsoever they do. 40 And if they turn away, know that God is your Master—an excellent Master, an excellent Helper! 41 And know that whatsoever you take as spoils, a fifth is for God and the Messenger, and for kinsfolk, orphans, the indigent, and the traveler, if you believe in God and what We sent down upon Our servant on the Day of Discrimination, the day the two hosts met—and God is Powerful over all things— 42 when you were on the near slope and they were on the far slope, and the caravan was below you. And had you made a tryst with each other, you would have failed the tryst. But [it came to pass] so that God may conclude a matter that was to be done, so that whosoever should perish, perishes according to a clear proof, and whosoever should live, lives according to a clear proof. And truly God is

Hearing, Knowing. ④③ [Remember] when God showed them in thy dream as being few. And hadst thou seen them as being many, you would have surely faltered and quarreled over the matter. But God delivered [you]. Truly He knows what lies within breasts. ④④ And [remember] when He showed them to you, when you met them, as being few in your eyes, and made you appear to be few in their eyes, so that God may conclude a matter that was to be done. And unto God are all matters returned. ④⑤ O you who believe! When you meet a company in battle, be firm and remember God much, that haply you may prosper. ④⑥ And obey God and His Messenger, and do not quarrel among yourselves lest you falter and your good fortune depart. And be patient; truly God is with the patient. ④⑦ And be not like those who left their homes boastfully and to be seen of men, and to turn [others] from the way of God. And God encompasses whatsoever they do. ④⑧ And [remember] when Satan made their deeds seem fair unto them, and said, “None among mankind shall overcome you today, and I am indeed your defender.” But when the two hosts saw each other, he turned on his heels and said, “I am quit of you! Truly I see what you see not. Truly I fear God, and God is severe in retribution.” ④⑨ [Remember] when the hypocrites and those in whose hearts is a disease said, “Their religion has deluded them.” But whosoever trusts in God, truly God is Mighty, Wise. ⑤⑦ And if only thou couldst see when the angels take those who disbelieve, striking their faces and their backs, and [saying], “Taste the punishment of the burning! ⑤① This is for what your hands sent forth, and because God wrongs not His servants.” ⑤② [Theirs was] like the way of the House of Pharaoh and those before them; they disbelieved in the signs of God; so God seized them for their sins. Truly God is Strong, severe in retribution. ⑤③ That is because God never changes a blessing by which He blesses a people until they change what is in themselves, and because God is Hearing, Knowing. ⑤④ [Theirs was] like the way of the House of Pharaoh and those before them; they denied the signs of their Lord, so We destroyed them for their sins, and drowned the House of Pharaoh, for all were wrongdoers. ⑤⑤ Truly the worst of beasts in the sight of God are those who have disbelieved and will not believe, ⑤⑥

those among them with whom thou madest a pact and who then break their pact every time, and who are not reverent. ⑤7 So if thou comest upon them in war, use them to scatter those who will come after them, that haply they might be reminded. ⑤8 And if thou fearest treachery from a people, withdraw from them in a just way. Truly God loves not the treacherous. ⑤9 And let not those who disbelieve suppose that they have outstripped [anyone]. Indeed, they thwart nothing. ⑥0 And prepare for them what you can of strength [of arms] and horses tethered [for battle], frightening thereby the enemy of God and your enemy, and others besides them whom you know not. God knows them. Whatsoever you spend in the way of God shall be paid unto you in full. And you shall not be wronged. ⑥1 And if they incline toward peace, incline thou toward it, and trust in God. Truly He is the Hearing, the Knowing. ⑥2 And if they desire to deceive thee, then God suffices thee. He it is Who supports thee with His Help, and with the believers, ⑥3 and joined their hearts. Hadst thou spent all that is on the earth, it would not have joined their hearts. But God joined them together. Truly He is Mighty, Wise. ⑥4 O Prophet! God suffices thee and those believers who follow thee. ⑥5 O Prophet! Rouse the believers to fight. If there be twenty steadfast among you, they shall overcome two hundred. And if there be one hundred of you, they shall overcome one thousand of those who disbelieve, because they are a people who understand not. ⑥6 Now God has lightened your burden, for He knows that there is weakness in you. And if there be one hundred steadfast among you, they shall overcome two hundred. And if there be one thousand, they shall overcome two thousand by God's Leave. And God is with the steadfast. ⑥7 It is not for a prophet to take captives until he overwhelms [his enemy] in the land. You desire the ephemeralities of this world, while God desires the Hereafter. And God is Mighty, Wise. ⑥8 Were it not for a decree that had already gone forth from God, a great punishment would have befallen you for what you took. ⑥9 So consume the spoils you have taken, lawfully and in a good way, and reverence God. Truly God is Forgiving, Merciful. ⑦0 O Prophet! Say to those captives in your custody, "If God knows there to be any good in your hearts, He will give you what is better than that which was taken from you, and will forgive you. And God is Forgiving, Merciful.” 71 But if they desire treachery against thee, they have been treacherous with God before and He gave [thee] power over them. And God is Knowing, Wise. 72 Truly those who believe, and migrate, and strive with their wealth and themselves in the way of God, and those who sheltered and helped—they are protectors of one another. As for those who believe and did not migrate, you owe them no protection until they migrate. But if they ask your help for the sake of religion, then help is a duty upon you, except against a people with whom you have a covenant. And God sees whatsoever you do. 73 As for those who disbelieve, they are protectors of one another. Unless you do the same, there will be a strife in the land, and a great corruption. 74 As for those who believe, and migrate, and strive in the way of God, and those who sheltered and helped, it is they who truly are believers. Theirs is forgiveness and a generous provision. 75 As for those who believe after you and migrate and strive with you, they are [to be counted] among you. But family relations have the strongest claim on one another in the Book of God. Truly God is Knower of all things.

① They question thee concerning the spoils. Say, “The spoils belong to God and the Messenger.” So reverence God and set matters aright among yourselves. And obey God and His Messenger, if you are believers.

1 This sūrah discusses events of the Battle of Badr, but does not always treat them in their chronological order (see 8:5c for the background to the battle). It is reported that at the end of the Battle of Badr, a group of Companions pursued the enemy as they fled, a second group remained to guard the Prophet, and a third group watched over the prisoners and the spoils. When the group of pursuers returned, they laid claim to the spoils by virtue of their having fought and given chase to the enemy, but the group protecting the Prophet claimed more right to the spoils by virtue of protecting the Prophet (Q). In another account, the disagreement pertained to certain Muslims who for various reasons were not present at the battle (e.g., two were sent by the Prophet on a scouting mission), but who were given spoils by the Prophet, to which others objected (R). Though differing in the details, all these accounts point to disagreements over how the spoils should be apportioned among those with varying levels of participation and exposure to danger in the battle.

The word for spoils here is anfāl, a word whose root generally means “excess” or “beyond what is necessary or required.” Some have connected this word with the Islamic belief that, among all religious communities, only Muslims were allowed to take spoils of war (R), based upon a ḥadīth stating that this was one trait by which the Prophet was distinguished. Some commentators have made a distinction between anfāl and ghanā'im, the latter being a more common and inclusive term for spoils of war in Islamic Law (Q; see 8:41c). Other jurists have stated that anfāl refers to wealth received by means other than war (Q) or that it refers to the fifth of the spoils (khumus) mentioned in v. 41 (Q). According to some, anfāl does not refer to all spoils, but only to the spoils a warrior takes directly from his slain opponents, such as their armor and sword (R).

It is said that because of the disagreements regarding the anfāl, the Prophet was asked about the matter and this verse was revealed (Q). Some say that it was abrogated by v. 41: And know that whatsoever you take as spoils, a fifth is for God and the Messenger, and kinsfolk, orphans, the indigent, and the traveler. However, no question of abrogation arises if this verse is interpreted to mean that God and the Prophet have control over the distribution of the spoils, and v. 41 is read as specifying how the spoils will then be distributed (Q, R).

The question of spoils is a complex issue in classical Islamic Law and addresses such matters as the authority of a political or military leader to designate the distribution of spoils (both in promising beforehand what can be taken and in managing the distribution afterward); the kinds and amounts of items that can be taken (e.g., horses and weapons would be treated differently than land); how they are to be distributed; and to whom they are given (see 8:41c).

② Only they are believers whose hearts quake with fear when God is mentioned, and when His signs are recited unto them, they increase them in faith, and they trust in their Lord,

2 Hearts that quake with fear are also mentioned in 22:35 and 23:60. The various ways in which the heart is described in the Quran is discussed in 2:7c; see also the introduction to Sūrah 47. The reactions of believers in their soul and even their physical body to hearing about God or listening to the Quran are mentioned in verses such as 5:83, 39:23, and 48:4. The idea of being “increased” in faith or belief (īmān) also appears in 3:173 and 9:124; similarly, one can also be “increased” in humility (17:109) and guidance (47:17).

③ who perform the prayer and spend from that which We have provided them.

3 Cf. 2:3; 4:39; 13:22; 14:31; 22:35; 28:54; 32:16; 42:38.

④ It is they who truly are believers. For them are ranks in the sight of their Lord, and forgiveness and a generous provision.

4 This verse is similar to others that speak of people being ranked in the Sight of God, such as 12:76; 17:21; 18:48; 20:75; 46:19; 58:11; and in 40:15 God is spoken of as the Raiser of degrees (Rafī^c al-darajāt).

⑤ [Remember] how thy Lord brought thee forth from thy home in truth, while a group of the believers were averse,

5 According to the traditional account, after the hijrah (the migration of the Prophet and his Companions from Makkah, where they were persecuted by the Quraysh, to Madinah, where they found refuge), engaging in battle, which had been previously forbidden for the Muslim community, was now made permissible; see 4:74–77c; 22:39c; and the essay “Conquest and Conversion, War and Peace in the Quran,” which discusses this question at length. At first this fighting was only in the form of raids on the caravans of the Quraysh, who were then the enemies of Muslims, but these raids were only modestly successful. However, a particularly large and rich caravan of goods led by Abū Sufyān (a notable Makkan of wealth and social position who was a leader of the forces against the Prophet) was returning from Syria to Makkah, and the Prophet made plans to attack it, but Abū Sufyān managed to send word to the Quraysh that the caravan might be attacked. In response the Makkans mustered an army of approximately one thousand men to come to the aid of the caravan. Many in Makkah had a personal financial stake in the caravan, and, moreover, they hoped to have a chance to eliminate the threat they perceived to be posed by Muhammad and the new Muslim community.

By the time the Prophet and his army reached Badr, a common stop on the caravan route (approximately 115 kilometers southwest of Madinah) where they planned to wage their attack, they realized that the Makkan army was already close and that there was no chance of a successful attack against Abū Sufyān’s caravan, which in any case had taken a route closer to the sea rather than through Badr. The Prophet and his Companions were thus presented with the choice of either turning back or facing a battle against a much larger force. When the Prophet consulted with his Companions regarding the new situation, a group of the believers were averse; that is, they were hesitant to press the fight, having been prepared to face only the relatively unarmed caravan, not an army of one thousand. According to traditional beliefs, the Prophet nevertheless received a sign from God to proceed and was given the promise of Divine Help.

⑥ disputing with thee concerning the truth after it had become clear, as though they were being driven to death as they looked on.

6 The truth after it had become clear refers to the fact that the Prophet had promised them victory, having received assurance from God, but they still disputed with him about it (R). Driven to death as they looked on means that it was as though they had certain knowledge that they were being compelled into death (Q).

7 And [remember] when God promised you that one of the two companies was to be yours, and you wished that the unarmed one would be yours. But God desires to verify the truth through His Words, and to cut off the last remnant of the disbelievers,

7 One of the two companies refers to the Makkan army and the caravan from Syria, the latter being the one that was unarmed. The prospect of taking the caravan seemed realistic, but some of the Prophet's followers were less enthusiastic about facing the Makkan army and tried to persuade the Prophet not to go out to face the enemy (R). Rather than simply acquiring the fleeting wealth of the caravan, doing battle with the Makkan army would lead to a decisive victory that would fundamentally undermine the enemy and change the strategic balance between Muslims and their enemies (R).

Verify the truth refers to the rise and triumph of Islam (Q). The phrase can also be rendered "make true/real the truth" or "establish the truth." In a larger sense this clause provides a justification for the use of force, namely, the strengthening and affirmation of the truth and the abolishment of falsehood. In Islamic Law, one of the fundamental necessities of human life that societies must protect is religion itself, an imperative to which allusion is made in 22:40, which speaks of the protection of monasteries, churches, synagogues, and mosques, wherein God's Name is mentioned much as a reason for God's repelling people, some by means of others. This is in addition to other causes justifying the use of force, such as people being expelled from their homes without right, only for saying, "Our Lord is God."

8 so that He may verify the truth and prove falsehood to be false, though the guilty be averse.

8 Here verify the truth (cf. v. 7) is paired with prove falsehood to be false (yubḥila al-bāḥil), which could also be translated "render vain what is vain" or

“nullify what is false.”

⑨ When you sought succor from your Lord, He responded to you, “I shall aid you with a thousand angels rank upon rank.”

⑩ And God made it not save as a glad tiding, and that your hearts may be at peace thereby. And victory comes from God alone; truly God is Mighty, Wise.

9–10 The matter of the angels helping the believers during the Battle of Badr and the Battle of Uḥud is discussed in 3:124–26c. It is generally accepted that angels fought during the Battle of Badr and not in other battles, but the precise nature of this Divinely ordained martial participation has varied accounts, some of which describe certain miraculous occurrences on the battlefield (R). With regard to whether the angels provided physical or spiritual help (discussed in 3:124–26c), this verse seems to support an understanding that the angels did not participate in a physical manner, but gave spiritual power and strength to the believers that were directed not at their bodies, but at their inner being, so that their hearts may be at peace thereby, producing, moreover, the opposite effect in the enemy. A later verse states that God will cast terror into the hearts of those who disbelieve (v. 12).

⑪ Behold, He covered you with sleepiness, security from Him, and sent down upon you water from the sky to purify you thereby, to remove the defilement of Satan from you, to fortify your hearts, and to make firm your steps thereby.

11 Cf. 3:154, which also mentions sleepiness in the midst of battle and links it with security. It is said that the sleepiness descended the night before the battle, when anxiety would ordinarily have been at its highest. As discussed in 3:154c, commentators see this sleepiness as a kind of miracle that gave the practical advantage of physical rest before the battle and demonstrated in a most concrete fashion an attitude of contentment and trust.

There are disagreements regarding when the rain fell, but in any case the Muslims were able to benefit from it. In one account, before they had reached the wells that they were able to control and use to their advantage, rain fell to the point that it pooled and the believers were able to drink and also make their ablutions from its water (R). Moreover, the ground on which they stood, which was sandy and soft to the point of making it difficult to walk, was hardened by the water, enabling them to walk more easily upon it (Ṭ). It is further reported that the water had the opposite effect on the enemy, whose ground was constituted in such a way as to become muddy and more difficult to walk upon when it was drenched by rain (R).

The defilement of Satan is thought by some to refer to the state of ritual impurity that makes it necessary to perform ablutions with water (if water is available) as a condition for performing the canonical prayer (R, Ṭ). At a spiritual level, the defilement is seen as a result of the whisperings of Satan in the hearts of the believers, from which they are cleansed spiritually as water cleanses them bodily. Indeed, the ritual ablution by water in Islam (see 4:43c; 5:6c), far from being a simple matter of physical cleanliness, symbolizes and even actualizes the purification of the soul by the waters of the spirit, hence the language of water from the sky, which has both a literal and a symbolic significance, as the place it originates is understood as both physical heaven and spiritual Heaven. The water made their physical steps more firm and at the same time made their spiritual stance more secure and confident.

⑫ Behold, thy Lord revealed unto the angels, “Truly I am with you; so make firm those who believe. I shall cast terror into the hearts of those who disbelieve. So strike above the neck, and strike their every fingertip.”

12 Truly I am with you is understood to address the angels directly or is meant to express more generally the fact that God is with the believers (R). Revealed can mean that God informed by way of inspiration, but since angels are themselves the means of revelation and inspiration, the very sending of the angels means that God is with the believers. God uses the angels to inspire and strengthen the souls of the believers just as He uses them to cast terror into the hearts of those who disbelieve. Moreover, since the message of I am with you is meant as a reassurance, it could not be directed at the angels themselves, since they are not subject to any manner of fear (R). The believers were made firm either by virtue of the angels telling the Prophet that they would achieve victory, an assurance that the Prophet then conveyed to the believers, or by the angels casting inspiration into their hearts, as opposed to Satan does when he whispers evil promptings to the soul (R). One interpretation of the last sentence of this verse is that it means that the believers should strike at their enemies however they can, from their head to the tips of their extremities (R).

⑭ Thus it is, so taste it, and [know] that the disbelievers shall have the punishment of the Fire.

13–14 To be in schism with God and His Messenger is an idea that comes up in other verses such as 2:137; 22:53; 47:32; 59:4. Taste it means taste the aforementioned retribution (Z).

⑮ O you who believe! When you meet those who disbelieve arrayed [for battle], turn not your backs to them.

⑯ And whosoever turns his back to them that day—unless it be a stratagem of battle or to withdraw to another company—shall certainly earn wrath from God. And his refuge shall be Hell. What an evil journey's end!

15–16 These verses instruct believers, when they meet enemies in battle, to not retreat unless it is an intentional feint or unless they are joining another group from their own army with the intention of rejoining the battle (Q, Ṭ). Presumably this latter action is to be differentiated from an outright desertion, leaving the group to carry on the fight without help. In the context of the Battle of Badr, the stakes were such that a defeat might have cost the young community its very existence, since it had not yet established a base of power anywhere in the Arabian Peninsula outside of Madinah (indeed, all later generations of Muslims understood the Battle of Badr as a turning point in the very survival of Islam as such). To run away from the battlefield completely without seeking to rejoin some other group of fighters would have been tantamount to abandoning and forsaking the community as such.

Some commentators mention accounts that some warriors returned to the Prophet from having left the fighting and were afraid that they would be condemned as deserters, but the Prophet said, “I am your company (fi’ah)” (IK, Q); v. 16 uses the same term, fi’ah. Similar accounts are given regarding ‘Umar ibn al-Khaṭṭāb, who lamented hearing that a certain warrior died while standing his ground though greatly outnumbered and said, “If he had returned, I would have been his company (fi’ah)” (IK). This may be part of the reason why many commentators consider the threat of punishment here for desertion to be specific to the participants of the Battle of Badr, though jurists are divided on the question of whether fleeing from the enemy is a grave sin (kabīrah) in general or not (Q, Ṭ). The question of forgiveness for fleeing from a battle is mentioned in the context of the Battle of Uḥud in 3:159.

17 You did not slay them, but God slew them, and thou threwest not when thou threwest, but God threw, that He might try the believers with a beautiful trial from Him. Truly God is Hearing, Knowing.

17 This verse may be related to several accounts that describe the Prophet picking up a handful of pebbles or dust and throwing it at the enemy, saying, “Curse your faces!” (shāhat al-wujūh; Ṭ). In one version it is three pebbles, one cast to the right, one to the left, and one to the middle, and the disbelievers, struck by fear (in one account because of a voice from Heaven), fled. In another version the Prophet took a handful of dust and threw it, and the dust was carried by the wind and blinded them, at which they ran away (Ṭ). In another account, the “throwing” to which this verse refers took place at Uḥud. One of the prisoners of the Battle of Badr, Ubayy ibn Khalaf, was ransomed, but he vowed to kill the Prophet and told the Prophet he kept his horse ready every day to accomplish the deed. During the Battle of Uḥud, Ubayy charged the Prophet and some Companions intervened, but the Prophet told them to stand down, at which he personally hurled a spear at Ubayy and mortally wounded him (Th, Ṭ).

As a spiritual allegory, this verse has been interpreted as meaning that one cannot kill one’s carnal soul (i.e., one’s egotism and vices) with one’s own strength, but needs the Help of God to enable the spiritual grace to manifest itself in the soul (Aj). From another perspective, it is understood to mean that truly only God threw and only God killed, expressing a mystery about the relationship between God and His creation. In a famous sacred saying, or ḥadīth qudsī, God is described as saying of human beings, whom He loves, “I will be his hearing by which he hears, his sight by which he sees, his hands by which he grasps, and his feet by which he walks.” Sufis also connect this verse with other Quranic verses, such as 2:115: Wheresoever you turn, there is the Face of God; 28:88: All things perish, save His Face; 55:26–27: All upon it passes away. And there remains the Face of thy Lord, Possessed of Majesty and Bounty; 57:4: He is with you wheresoever you are; and 58:7: He is with them wheresoever they are.

V. 17 is used numerous times in Sufi writings. It is used in Sufism as a scriptural basis for the station of perfect submission, in which one’s actions become God’s Action and one’s will God’s Will. A Sufi such as Ibn ‘Arabī points to the explicit negation in this verse, thou threwest not, coupled with the explicit affirmation, when thou threwest, to indicate the irreducible tension between the world’s nearness and the distance from God, or between its existential otherness and existential “identity” in relation to Him; that is, creation is not God, but is also not in its essential reality wholly other than God. This irreducibility is also expressed in 42:11, Naught is like unto Him, and He is the Hearer, the Seer, which is to say, it denies that God is like anything, but then affirms of Him the Qualities of hearing and seeing. Seen in this way, the verse hinders facile generalizations regarding the world’s identity with God, but also prevents one from seeing the world as a reality utterly separate from God in its essential reality. At a theological but no less mystical and esoteric level, scholastic theologians have seen in this verse a proof that God is the Creator of all acts and that human beings “acquire” (kasb) them from Him.

Some interpret this verse to mean that the effect of filling the eyes of the disbelievers was from God, since a single handful of dust thrown by a man would not have been enough under ordinary circumstances to accomplish this feat (R); or that death refers to the separation of the spirit from the body, which is the direct Act of God and not the result of the wound inflicted by human beings (R, Th).

The idea of a beautiful trial is often glossed as meaning “a beautiful blessing” (Q, R, T), in the sense that even good things such as victory are tests from God in response to which one can be either virtuous or vicious. For the role of trials in the spiritual life as mentioned in the Quran, see commentary on 29:2–3.

18 Thus it is, and [know] that God makes feeble the scheming of the disbelievers.

18 The weakness of the schemes of those who oppose God is also mentioned in 3:120; 4:76; 52:46.

19 If you seek victory, then victory has come to you. And if you desist, it would be better for you. And if you return, We shall return, and your company will not avail you aught, even if they be many. And [know] that God is with the believers.

19 This verse is understood in three ways. Some see it as an address to the disbelievers, who also prayed for victory and who are thus ironically informed that victory has arrived—but with the disbelievers as the vanquished, not the victors. A second opinion sees it addressed to the believers, who are given victory, but who are warned against their conduct regarding the spoils (see 8:1c). A third opinion considers the first sentence to be addressed to the believers; then if you desist begins a new address to the disbelievers, meaning that they should desist from their hostility toward the Prophet (Q). And if you return, We shall return means that if the disbelievers return to hostilities, God will return as well. The last sentence of the verse is read by some as a continuation of v. 18, while others read it as meaning “Truly God is with the believers” (Z).

20 O you who believe! Obey God and His Messenger, and turn not away from him, even as you hear [him].

20 On the question of obeying the Prophet, see commentary on 3:32: Say, “Obey God and obey the Messenger.” If they turn away, then truly God loves not the disbelievers. See also 4:80; 5:92; 24:54; 33:33; 47:33; 49:14; 64:12. Such passages describe obedience to the Prophet as second only to obedience to God and set in place the normative character of the Prophet’s teachings and actions.

21 And be not like those who say, “We hear,” though they hear not.

21 The commentators note that this verse describes different groups of people, from the idolaters who heard the Prophet’s message but paid it no heed, to the hypocrites who heard it with their ears and assented to it outwardly, but did not hear it with their hearts (R, T), that is, did not reflect and meditate upon what they had heard (Q). Moreover, one must act upon commandments or prohibitions or one cannot be said to have truly heard them (Q).

22 Truly the worst of beasts in the sight of God are the deaf and the dumb who understand not.

22 Many verses in the Quran mention being dumb or unable to speak (2:18, 171; 6:39), and spiritual deafness and blindness are also mentioned frequently (e.g., 5:71; 6:25, 39; 10:42–43); this blindness is a blindness of the heart, not the outward eyes (22:46). The loss of one's spiritual, and hence properly human, faculties resulting in a state comparable to that of animals is also mentioned in 2:171; 7:176, 179; 62:5.

23 Had God known of any good in them, He would have caused them to hear; yet had He caused them to hear, they would have turned away in rejection.

23 This verse is said to have been revealed after the idolaters challenged the Prophet to resurrect the dead as proof of his prophethood (R, Q). It makes explicit a seeming tension between God's allowing understanding to enter people's hearts and people's responsibility for their own actions. Commenting on this verse, some offer a somewhat predestinarian explanation, saying that they would not have believed given "His eternal Knowledge of their state of disbelief (kufr)" (Q, R). This would mean that in His eternal Knowledge God knows them to be disbelievers; so it would be impossible for them to become believers after being made to hear the truth, since this would entail God knowing something that was not (R). It is used as a support for the notion that some people are destined for Hell and that this is unchangeable. See the essay "The Quran and Islamic Schools of Theology and Philosophy."

From another perspective, this verse evokes the Quranic theme that knowledge can be a trial and that, in a sense, it exposes the recipient of that knowledge to the danger of rejecting it. Jesus' apostles are warned against this after they ask for a table from Heaven, to which God says in 5:115: I shall indeed send it down unto you.

But whosoever among you disbelieves thereafter, I shall surely punish him. From one point of view it can be said that it is a mercy to conceal from someone, if only temporarily, a truth that they may reject, because such rejection could possibly cement in them an attitude of disbelief and rejection. From another perspective, as discussed in 2:7c, to be cut off from hearing or understanding the truth is a punishment as such, and not only because it leads to perdition in the Hereafter.

24 O you who believe! Respond to God and the Messenger when he calls you unto that which will give you life. And know that God comes between a man and his heart, and that unto Him shall you be gathered.

24 That which will give you life is the truth, or the Quran itself (Ṭ), meaning something that gives life to the heart (Q) or that bears the commands and prohibitions that will lead to the mode of everlasting life in the Hereafter (Q). This verse could also mean that one should respond to the call to fighting in the way of God, since death in the way of God would lead to everlasting felicity (Q).

That God comes between a man and his heart is interpreted to mean that He comes between a disbeliever and faith, or between a believer and disbelief (Ṭ), or that nothing is hidden from God, even the innermost dimensions of one's being (Ṭ). In this sense it resembles the statement in 50:16: We are nearer to him than his jugular vein. It can also mean that God has the power to change hearts, as when He changed the fear in the hearts of the participants of the Battle of Badr into a sense of security (Q; see v. 11). The notion of being gathered unto God is mentioned throughout the Quran (e.g., 2:203; 3:158; 5:96; 6:38; 23:79; 58:9; 67:24) and is related to the idea, also often mentioned in the Quran, of all things being returned to God (e.g., 2:210; 3:109; 8:44).

25 And be mindful of a trial that will not befall only those among you who do wrong; and know that God is severe in retribution.

25 Trial renders fitnah, a word that can also mean “temptation,” “sedition,” or “strife” (see 2:190–94c). Many interpret the verse as pertaining specifically to those participants in the Battle of Badr who later came to fight each other on the Battle of the Camel (i.e., the initial battle of the First Civil War during the caliphate of ʿAlī).

One Companion is quoted as having referenced this verse in the context of that battle, “I did not know what was meant by that verse until today” (Q).

Al-Qurṭubī mentions a ḥadīth that sets forth the parable of a ship with some people above deck and others below. If, rather than ask those above for water, those riding below punctured a hole in the hull to get water themselves, the whole ship would sink (Q). This means that doing wrong and allowing wrong to be done can have an effect that spreads to those who had no role in it, since human beings often have no choice but to be affected by the actions and states of others with whom they exist in community.

26 And remember when you were few, deemed weak in the land, fearing that the people would snatch you away. Then He sheltered you, and strengthened you with His help, and provided you with good things, that haply you may give thanks.

26 This verse refers to the weak and persecuted state in which the Muslims were living in Makkah, before they migrated to Madinah, where they were sheltered and strengthened, as evidenced by their success at the Battle of Badr (IK, Q).

27 O you who believe! Betray not God and the Messenger, and betray not your trusts knowingly.

27 The significance of being faithful to one’s trust is also mentioned in 2:283, 4:58, 23:8; 70:32. Some commentators try to link this Command to have trust with certain historical incidents related to later battles, but those would seem to be out of sequence in what is essentially a discussion of the Battle of Badr.

28 And know that your property and your children are only a trial, and that God—with Him is a great reward.

28 This verse is similar in message to 64:14: Among your spouses and your children there is indeed an enemy unto you; so be wary of them. This verse would also reflect the general theme of this part of the sūrah that good things can also be trials, such as victory on the battlefield (v. 17) and the spoils of war (v. 1).

29 O you who believe! If you reverence God, He will make for you a criterion, and absolve you of your evil deeds, and forgive you. And God is Possessed of Tremendous Bounty.

29 Criterion renders furqān, a word that has different shades of meaning in the Quran and is itself a name for the Quran; see 3:3–4c; 2:53, 185; 21:48; 25:1. Furqān comes from a root with the meaning of separation and division and can mean “discernment,” or that by which things are distinguished. It can also refer to a faculty or light within one’s heart by which one is able to separate truth from falsehood, as in 39:22, which speaks of one whose breast God has expanded for submission, such that he follows a light from his Lord (IK, R). This latter verse sets up illumination or knowledge as a consequence of reverence or goodness, and al-Rāzī says, “When the heart becomes illuminated by obedience to God, darkness falls away from it, because the knowledge of God is a light, and these faults are different kinds of darkness, and when light manifests itself it necessarily leads to the disappearance of darkness.”

30 And [remember] when those who disbelieve plotted against thee, to capture thee, or to slay thee, or to expel thee. They plotted, and God plotted. And God is the best of plotters.

30 This verse refers to the persecution that the Prophet personally suffered in Makkah, when, after losing the protection of his uncle Abū Ṭālib, he was often exposed to mortal danger and to sanctions that eventually resulted in the migration to Madinah, during which he was pursued by Makkans who wished to eliminate him. The final refrain of this verse is almost identical to 3:54, and a similar message about God’s plotting overcoming the plots of human beings can be found in 10:21; 13:42; 14:46; 16:26; 27:50; it is also related to 68:45: Truly My scheme is firm. When used of God, “plotter” (mākir) does not have the pejorative connotation usually connected with it. Rather, it means that God is a better “planner” than those who plot against Him.

31 And when Our signs are recited unto them they say, “We have heard already. Had we willed, we could have said the like of this. This is naught but fables of those of old.”

31 The disbelievers’ attempts to dismiss the Quran as being nothing more than fables of those of old is also mentioned in 6:25; 23:83; 25:5; 27:68; 46:17; 68:15. The disbelievers’ claim that they could have said the like of this is also related to the question of the inimitability or miraculous nature of the Quran as a sacred book. See commentary on 2:23: If you are in doubt concerning what We have sent down unto Our servant, then bring a sūrah like it, and call your witnesses apart from God if you are truthful, and the essay “Obstacles Faced in the Translation of the Quran.” Similar challenges to produce something like the Quran are made in 10:38; 11:13; 17:88.

32 And [remember] when they said, “O God, if this be the truth from Thee, rain down stones upon us from the sky, or bring us a painful punishment.”

32 This verse contains an example of the type of cynical challenges, made by those who deny the Prophet, to bring down a punishment upon them if he is telling the truth, as in 17:90–93; 22:47; 26:204; 29:53; 37:176; 42:18; 51:14.

33 But God will not punish them while thou art among them. And God will not punish them while they seek forgiveness.

34 What have they to keep God from punishing them, while they turn [others] from the Sacred Mosque though they are not its protectors? Its protectors are none but the reverent, but most of them know not.

33–34 When read in connection with the previous verse, these verses evoke the message of 29:31–32, where the destruction of Lot’s people takes place only after he and his family leave the city, as well as the account of Hūd in 11:58. In this case, on the one hand, the punishment is withheld by the presence of the Prophet or a sincere state of repentance among some of the people (while they seek forgiveness), but, on the other, unjust control and restriction of the Kaʿbah leave the Quraysh gravely liable to such punishment. While they seek forgiveness is interpreted to mean “If they seek forgiveness,” that is, on the condition that they seek forgiveness (IK, Ṭ). Or it can refer to either the believers who were still in Makkah and had not migrated to Madinah (Q, Ṭ) or the meager amount of repentance or forgiveness sought by those idolaters who at least had some notion of God, since they would also pray for forgiveness when they made their circumambulations around the Kaʿbah (Q).

The idolaters kept the Muslims who had migrated to Madinah from visiting the Kaʿbah to perform their rituals there. Being allowed to visit Makkah to perform the rites would later be made a condition of the Treaty of Ḥudaybiyah (628); see 2:114c; 2:190–94c; and Sūrah 48. Protectors, which renders awliyāʾ (sing. walī), has here the sense of “custodians,” specifically referring to the Kaʿbah’s rightful protectors and custodians.

35 Their prayer at the House is naught but whistling and clapping. So taste the punishment for having disbelieved!

35 It is said that while the Prophet was still in Makkah and would pray near the Kaʿbah, the idolaters would attempt to disrupt his prayer by whistling and clapping beside him (R). However, others said that the whistling and clapping was actually an established part of the pagan rituals performed at the Kaʿbah in pre-Islamic times (R).

36 Truly those who disbelieve spend their wealth to turn [others] from the way of God. They will spend it; then it will be a source of regret for them, and then they will be overcome. And the disbelievers will be gathered unto Hell,

36 The Makkans created and gave material support to the army that set out to fight the Prophet and his followers, since many had a stake in the caravan that was coming from Syria (Z; see 8:5c). Some think that this verse refers especially to Abū Sufyān, who used his wealth to fight the Prophet (R).

37 that God may separate the bad from the good, and place the bad one upon the other and heap them all together, and place them in Hell. It is they who are the losers.

37 Similar language is used in 3:179, which also speaks of God separating the bad from the good. The plain sense would seem to point to this separation taking place in the Hereafter, but some say it can also refer to good and bad being separated from each other in this world (IK), as when the fighting in the context of the Battle of Uḥud (3:179) separated the sincere followers of the Prophet from the hypocrites.

38 Say to the disbelievers that, if they desist, what is past will be forgiven them, but if they relapse, then the wont of those of old has already passed.

38 According to some commentators, this verse means that the disbelievers should stop their enmity and hostility and embrace Islam (IK). The last clause refers to God's wont of destroying persistently corrupt and evil peoples (IK). Wont can also refer to both what people do and what they undergo. In a ḥadīth the Prophet said, "Submission (islām) cuts off what came before it, and repentance cuts off what came before it."

However, this verse says nothing explicitly about the disbelievers becoming Muslims, and "forgiveness" can refer to the cessation of hostilities and the resolution of grievances. Cf. 2:192–93: But if they desist, then truly God is Forgiving, Merciful. And fight them until there is no strife, and religion is for God. But if they desist, then there is no enmity save against the wrongdoers.

39 And fight them until there is no strife, and religion is wholly for God. But if they desist, then truly God sees whatsoever they do.

40 And if they turn away, know that God is your Master—an excellent Master, an excellent Helper!

39–40 For v. 39, see also the similar verse 2:193: And fight them until there is no strife, and religion is for God. But if they desist, then there is no enmity save against the wrongdoers. Al-Rāzī explains that strife (fitnah), which can also mean “trial” or “temptation,” refers to the persecution the Muslims endured at the hands of the Makkan idolaters, both before and after the hijrah. Even after the hijrah, Muslims still residing in Makkah were treated badly and oppressed severely by the idolaters. This verse orders the believers to fight until this strife or trial (fitnah) is gone. In al-Rāzī’s view, they must be fought until religion is wholly for God, but he understands it as pertaining only to the environs around Makkah and not extended to the whole world. According to al-Rāzī, the reason for fighting is the cessation of fitnah, which is only possible with the disappearance of the forces of disbelief.

Some gloss strife as meaning idolatry or polytheism (shirk; IK, Ṭ). Others maintain that, in keeping with al-Rāzī’s reasoning above, it means one should struggle until Muslims are not tried in their own religion (IK). On the question of fighting until there is no more fitnah, or strife, see 2:216c, and for a more general discussion of these topics see the essay “Conquest and Conversion, War and Peace in the Quran.”

41 And know that whatsoever you take as spoils, a fifth is for God and the Messenger, and for kinsfolk, orphans, the indigent, and the traveler, if you believe in God and what We sent down upon Our servant on the Day of Discrimination, the day the two hosts met—and God is Powerful over all things—

41 Here take as spoils renders the verbal form of ghanīmah, which has the meaning of anything one acquires through exertion, but which has taken on the technical meaning in Sunni legal tradition of those things that are taken legitimately in war (Q). It is usually distinguished from fiʿah, which refers to anything that is taken through peaceful means, such as a property tax (kharāj) or the indemnity or tax on non-Muslims (jizyah). Others, however, consider the two terms to be synonymous (Q). This verse is usually discussed in relation to v. 1 (see 8:1c); some jurists believe that one abrogates the other, though most see v. 41 as a specification of the ruling given in v. 1 (Q, R).

Many maintain that the fifth that is for God and the Messenger is itself divided into five parts, the other four parts going to kinsfolk, orphans, the indigent, and the traveler, though a minority opinion states this fifth should be divided into six parts, with God and the Messenger receiving two individual sixths and the other four a sixth each (R). Most Sunnis accept that after the Prophet the political leader of the community assumes responsibility for this fifth and for the distribution of the spoils more generally. The commentators note that there is disagreement regarding the identity of kinsfolk (dhu'l-qurbā), but insofar as it concerns the degree of closeness to the Prophet, some restrict it to his immediate clan, the Banū Hāshim, while other opinions extend it to the entire tribe of Quraysh (IK, R, Tṣ).

Shiites have a much more expansive view of ghanīmah, and thus the fifth is taken from sources that extend to income beyond spoils of war, including minerals extracted from the land or from the sea (which is also applied in a much more restricted way by Sunnis); surplus income from trade or work beyond a certain level; and found treasure; as well as spoils of war (Ṭs). The recipients of this fifth, or khumus, include the descendants of the Prophet (ahl al-bayt); after the period of the Prophet and the Imams, it is the Shiite scholars (or more exactly the mujtahids, those who are qualified to independently interpret Islamic Law) who act as representatives of the Hidden Imam and who receive and distribute this wealth.

The Day of Discrimination (furqān) refers to the Battle of Badr, meaning that it was a day when truth was separated from falsehood (Q); “separation” is one of the meanings of furqān (see 8:29c). The two hosts refer to the armies of the believers and the idolaters (R).

④ when you were on the near slope and they were on the far slope, and the caravan was below you. And had you made a tryst with each other, you would have failed the tryst. But [it came to pass] so that God may conclude a matter that was to be done, so that whosoever should perish, perishes according to a clear proof, and whosoever should live, lives according to a clear proof. And truly God is Hearing, Knowing.

42 Near slope . . . far slope . . . caravan below: the two armies were on two sides of a valley with the caravan of Abū Sufyān below them in the direction of the sea (R). You would have failed the tryst means that the Muslims would not have agreed to go out to meet such a superior army in battle if they had prior knowledge of it (Q); for more detail on the events leading up to the battle, see 8:5c.

To live or perish according to a clear proof echoes the separation of the bad from the good in v. 37 and the idea that the Battle of Badr was a Day of Discrimination between one side and the other, in that the good and the bad, the true and the false, were put to the test and made manifest through the Battle of Badr.

The battle is described as a matter that was to be done, meaning that it necessarily had to come to pass (R). A clear proof is interpreted by some to refer to the rain that came just before the battle and miraculously reversed the advantage the Makkans had of being on firmer ground with the Muslims on softer ground (see 8:11c); others see it more broadly as the fact that the smaller and poorly equipped army of the Muslims defeated the well-armed contingent of Quraysh, which was three times its size (R).

④ [Remember] when God showed them in thy dream as being few. And hadst thou seen them as being many, you would have surely faltered and quarreled over the matter. But God delivered [you]. Truly He knows what lies within breasts.

43 According to commentators the Prophet had a dream before the battle in which he saw the opposing army as being relatively few in number, and he conveyed this message to the believers; a minority opinion states that this vision was not during sleep (usually denoted by the word used in this verse, manām), but occurred in a waking state (Q, R). The verse then switches from the second-person singular (hadst thou seen) to the second-person plural (you would have), denoting a shift from addressing the Prophet to addressing the believers as a whole, and repeats a message similar to that of v. 42, namely, that had they known what they would be facing, they would have lost heart and avoided the battle.

④ And [remember] when He showed them to you, when you met them, as being few in your eyes, and made you appear to be few in their eyes, so that God may conclude a matter that was to be done. And unto God are all matters returned.

44 In this verse it is the believers who are shown the opposing army as being few in number. It is reported that the Companion Ibn Mas'ūd said to a man beside him, “Would you say they are seventy?” to which the man replied, “They are close to a hundred.” Later, they asked a prisoner how many they were, and he said, “We were a thousand” (Q); for more on the question of perceiving the opposing army as being of a different size, see 3:13c. Some interpret the verse to mean that God made each side appear smaller to the other, so that neither would shrink from the battle and God could conclude a matter that was to be done (see also v. 42; IK).

④5 O you who believe! When you meet a company in battle, be firm and remember God much, that haply you may prosper.

45 This verse is understood to show the paramount importance of remembering God in even the most distracting and tumultuous situations and that one’s heart should never be empty of the remembrance of God (R). The idea of remembering God much is also mentioned in 26:227; 33:21, 35, 41; 62:10, the last of which is most similar to this verse. Some see this as being a more specific Command to pray to God for help and victory when they are going into battle (R). To truly prosper is not to seek after worldly spoils, but to achieve everlasting felicity, which is only possible through sincere intention and achieved through remembering God (R).

④6 And obey God and His Messenger, and do not quarrel among yourselves lest you falter and your good fortune depart. And be patient; truly God is with the patient.

46 Here good fortune renders rīḥ (lit. “wind”), which some commentators gloss as “a turn [in fortune]” (Z) or victory (Ṭ); it is an idiomatic usage denoting the passing of advantage or power from someone to someone else (Q). Some explain that the “wind” of the Companions departed at the Battle of Uḥud when they did precisely what this verse warns against (R). The wind is something over which one has no control (Aj) and thus can symbolize turns of fortune. Among the Arabs the “west wind” (dabūr), meaning from the west, was considered unpropitious, while the “east wind” (ṣabā), meaning from the east, was thought to be a harbinger of blessings. In this regard, some commentators mention a ḥadīth of the Prophet, “I was helped by the east wind, and the ʿĀd were destroyed by the west wind” (Q). The wind that destroyed them is mentioned in 41:16, 46:24, 51:41; 54:19; 69:6. The theme of the wind, which had a rich vocabulary even among the pre-Islamic Arabs, is an important theme in the Quran; see 30:48–49c.

④⁴⁷ And be not like those who left their homes boastfully and to be seen of men, and to turn [others] from the way of God. And God encompasses whatsoever they do.

47 This verse refers to the Makkans who left their homes to protect their caravan (see 8:5c) and to defeat the Prophet and his followers (Q). Here, as in many other instances, to turn (ṣadda) can have the meaning both of hindering someone from a path and of diverting oneself from a path. Therefore, though the most obvious sense of the verse is that the Makkans sought to stop the believers from following the way of God, the verb ṣadda can also be read to mean that they themselves abandoned and forsook the way of God. Encompasses (muḥīṭ) carries the sense of encompassing knowledge and awareness (R) as well as presence or power.

Regarding those who left their homes boastfully, it is reported that the Quraysh led by Abū Jahl were given the news that the caravan that they sought to protect was now safe, since it had taken the road near the sea, away from Badr, where the Muslims were planning to meet them. But the Makkans pressed on, and Abū Jahl was reported to have boasted that he would not turn back until they reached Badr, enjoyed wine and song, and let other groups of people remain in fear of them, that is, the Makkans (Q).

④⁴⁸ And [remember] when Satan made their deeds seem fair unto them, and said, “None among mankind shall overcome you today, and I am indeed your defender.” But when the two hosts saw each other, he turned on his heels and said, “I am quit of you! Truly I see what you see not. Truly I fear God, and God is severe in retribution.”

48 That Satan made their deeds seem fair unto them (cf. 16:63; 27:24; 29:38) is interpreted by some to mean that he whispered to them not physically, but inwardly to their souls (R). According to this interpretation, they were impelled by the pride and vanity mentioned in the previous verse, but when they came to the battlefield, their overconfidence disappeared, which caused them to suffer a defeat.

Other commentators mention an account in which Satan took the form of a leader of a tribe whom the Quraysh feared would attack them because they had killed one of its men; they were thus exposed to a two-front battle with the Muslims on one side and tribal enemies on the other. According to this version, Satan (in human form) promised the Makkans the help of his tribe, but left before the battle began (Q).

I see what you see not refers to seeing the angels who were on the side of the Muslims (R). According to the interpretation that the idolaters were goaded by the whisperings of Satan, this could mean that the power of the angels in giving strength and resolve to the believers was too great to resist; in any case Satan would not have had the best interests of the idolaters in mind, since they too were human beings created by God, all of whom Satan vowed to mislead (see 4:117–19c; 7:16–17c). Assuming that the angels did actually participate in battle, this would have meant an actual retreat by Satan from the battlefield in the form he had allegedly assumed.

④ [Remember] when the hypocrites and those in whose hearts is a disease said, “Their religion has deluded them.” But whosoever trusts in God, truly God is Mighty, Wise.

49 Some commentators, such as al-Qurṭubī, believe that the hypocrites and those in whose hearts is a disease are simply descriptions of the same people and do not refer to distinct groups (cf. 33:12). For others, the hypocrites refers to some members of the Madinan tribes of Aws and Khazraj, while those in whose hearts is a disease refers to certain Muslims who became Muslim while the Prophet was in Makkah, but whose faith was not strong enough to make them migrate to Madinah (R). These people are said to have believed that the Prophet and his followers were deluded, because they left with a little over three hundred people against a well-equipped army of a thousand (R); some commentators connect this alleged delusion with their small numbers being made to seem even smaller (Ṭ; see 8:44c), meaning they believed that the believers were deluded because they appeared to be even fewer than they were.

50 And if only thou couldst see when the angels take those who disbelieve, striking their faces and their backs, and [saying], “Taste the punishment of the burning!

50 At one level, the disbelievers, who themselves struck at the faces and the backs of the believers, will have the same punishment inflicted upon them after they die (R). Al-Rāzī gives a deeper interpretation of this verse, saying that striking at their faces refers to the fact that when the disbelievers are taken in death by the angels and face the Hereafter, all that is before them will be dark, and striking at . . . their backs means they will leave the worldly goods they love behind them and will long to recover them. See also 6:93: If thou couldst see when the wrongdoers are in the throes of death, and the angels stretch forth their hands, “Yield up your souls!”

51 This is for what your hands sent forth, and because God wrongs not His servants.”

51 Cf. 3:182; 22:10. And because God wrongs not [His] servants, which is interpreted to mean that their punishment is just (Z), is understood grammatically by some to be a new sentence, so that it would read, “And truly God wrongs not . . .” (R).

52 [Theirs was] like the way of the House of Pharaoh and those before them; they disbelieved in the signs of God; so God seized them for their sins. Truly God is Strong, severe in retribution.

53 That is because God never changes a blessing by which He blesses a people until they change what is in themselves, and because God is Hearing, Knowing.

54 [Theirs was] like the way of the House of Pharaoh and those before them; they denied the signs of their Lord, so We destroyed them for their sins, and drowned the House of Pharaoh, for all were wrongdoers.

52–54 Here the word way renders daʿb, which means a habit, custom, or practice; cf. 3:11. Some commentators understand this daʿb as both what they did as a matter of habit and what happened to them, namely, destruction or defeat for their evil actions (Q); that is, their way was both what they perpetrated and what they suffered.

In its most general sense, God never changes a blessing by which He blesses a people until they change what is in themselves means that God gives human beings intelligence, strength, free will, and good things in life, so that they can worship God and do good, but when they turn away from these blessings in favor of sin and lack of faith, they have changed what is in themselves (R; cf. 13:11). In this specific context, some see this verse as referring to God’s blessing the Quraysh by sending them a prophet who was one of them, in response to which they denied him and chased him out (Ṭ). For a longer account of the story of Moses and Pharaoh, see 7:103–36.

55 Truly the worst of beasts in the sight of God are those who have disbelieved and will not believe,

55 On the worst of beasts, see v. 22.

56 those among them with whom thou madest a pact and who then break their pact every time, and who are not reverent.

56 It is thought that, beyond the general message, this verse is referencing the tribes of Naḍīr and Qurayzah, who, though they had initially made an alliance with the Prophet, betrayed him by later cooperating with the idolaters (Q).

57 So if thou comest upon them in war, use them to scatter those who will come after them, that haply they might be reminded.

57 The instruction in this verse is to make an example of those who break pacts in order to give pause to those who would come after them and also would seek to break their pacts (Q, R, T).

58 And if thou fearest treachery from a people, withdraw from them in a just way. Truly God loves not the treacherous.

58 When the believers make a treaty and there are clear signs that the other group is going to act treacherously, the believers are commanded to give them fair warning that they will withdraw from the treaty, without acting under any pretense that they (the believers) are still abiding by the terms of the treaty. However, if the other side breaks the treaty first, there is no obligation to give them any warning (R). In discussing how suspicion, and not certainty, could lead to withdrawing from an agreement, al-Qurṭubī argues that if the other side withdraws patently by breaking the terms, withdrawal from the agreement is moot, since the treaty is broken by their very action. One enters into a treaty only when one has a reasonable expectation that the other side will uphold it, and conversely one can reasonably withdraw when that expectation no longer holds. The verse is worded as it is so that there will be an “equality of knowledge” between the two sides, meaning that the withdrawal will be done to bring the two sides back to their situation before the treaty was signed; the withdrawal is not to be used as a stratagem of war. In a just way renders ‘alā sawā’, and some commentators state that this phrase indicates that the reason for withdrawal is not to create an unfair advantage, but to make things equal or level (sawā’) between the two sides (Q).

59 And let not those who disbelieve suppose that they have outstripped [anyone]. Indeed, they thwart nothing.

59 Some read the first part of this verse to mean, “Do not suppose that those who disbelieve have outstripped” (Q, R, T). “Outstrip” here is understood to mean something like “escape” (IK, Z). The notion of the disbelievers not being able to thwart or frustrate God or His signs appears several times in the Quran, including in 9:2–3; 11:20; 24:57; 29:22; 35:44; 42:31; 46:32; 72:12.

60 And prepare for them what you can of strength [of arms] and horses tethered [for battle], frightening thereby the enemy of God and your enemy, and others besides them whom you know not. God knows them. Whatsoever you spend in the way of God shall be paid unto you in full. And you shall not be wronged.

60 On horses tethered, see the discussion of ribāṭ (“tethering”) in 3:200c. Strength [of arms] refers to the weapons of war (Q). Some commentators interpret others . . . whom you know not to mean any unknown or yet to be known enemy (Q), but some say the unknown enemy here refers to the hypocrites who claimed to be Muslims, but kept their enmity toward the Prophet a secret (Ṭ). Others say that it refers to people in other lands (such as the Persians or Byzantines) or even to the jinn (Ṭ). Whatsoever you spend refers to the expenditure that the believers are commanded to make in order to prepare themselves for battle against the enemy, mentioned earlier in the verse (Aj). As with many passages dealing with warfare, this verse can also be interpreted symbolically and as a spiritual allegory, referring to the combat that the soul undertakes against its enemies—namely, its worldly desires and ignorance. According to this interpretation, others besides them whom you know not refers to the hidden vices of the soul, like secret pride (Aj). Whatsoever you spend . . . shall be paid unto you in full and similar phrases constitute a common refrain in the Quran (e.g., 2:281; 3:161; 16:111).

61 And if they incline toward peace, incline thou toward it, and trust in God. Truly He is the Hearing, the Knowing.

61 Like other verses pertaining to peace and war with non-Muslims, there is disagreement over whether verses such as this one, which have a message of peace and reconciliation, are abrogated by verses thought to be revealed later in time that command the believers to fight. For some, this verse instructing the Muslims to incline toward peace if their enemies do the same is not abrogated and is consistent with the practice of accepting the jizyah (see 9:29)—an indemnity paid by non-Muslims living peacefully within the Islamic state; on these and similar questions see the essay “Conquest and Conversion, War and Peace in the Quran.” Al-Qurṭubī points out that the Prophet and the early Companions accepted jizyah and left people as they were, even though they were capable of destroying them.

Al-Qurṭubī also discusses the notion of a truce or armistice (hudnah) with idolaters, such as the one the Prophet himself entered into at Ḥudaybiyah, whose term was ten years; see the introduction to Sūrah 48. Although there are various opinions regarding the term of such a truce, most specify ten years, following the Prophet's example at Ḥudaybiyah; some, however, argue that it should be less than this, while others say there is no limit to how long a truce can last. He also mentions different kinds of arrangements, including those where no wealth or tax was transferred to the Islamic state, and even arrangements where the Muslims might pay the enemy, as in the case after the Battle of the Trench (5/627) when the Prophet gave a third of the date harvest of Madinah to the Ghaṭafān tribe, so that they would leave and forsake the Quraysh.

⑥② And if they desire to deceive thee, then God suffices thee. He it is Who supports thee with His Help, and with the believers, 62 This verse, which continues from the previous one, concerns the desire to deceive in the peace overtures (R). It is understood to mean that one should rely on the outward actions of those who incline toward peace (v. 61), which is to be distinguished from the fear of treachery mentioned in v. 58; that is, there is a difference between passive hypocrisy and a concrete intention to act maliciously. Al-Rāzī believes that v. 58 refers to the latter, while this verse refers to the former; see also 9:1–4c, which addresses the withdrawal from a treaty. With His help, and with the believers means that God supports the Prophet by means of help directly from Him and from the believers who follow him, which is to say both directly and indirectly (R).

⑥③ and joined their hearts. Hadst thou spent all that is on the earth, it would not have joined their hearts. But God joined them together. Truly He is Mighty, Wise.

63 This verse is generally believed to refer to the Helpers (Anṣār), the Arab tribes of Madinah who embraced Islam and welcomed the Prophet and the Makkan Muslims who came with him (the Muhājirūn, or Emigrants). Madinah's two main Arab tribes, the Aws and Khazraj, had a long history of conflict and hostility (see also 2:84; 3:100, 122) resulting from a vendetta culture of pride and honor (Q, R). That their enmity was overcome and replaced by mutual love and sacrifice is considered to be a proof of the Prophet's veracity and sincerity (Q, R, T).

64 O Prophet! God suffices thee and those believers who follow thee.

65 O Prophet! Rouse the believers to fight. If there be twenty steadfast among you, they shall overcome two hundred. And if there be one hundred of you, they shall overcome one thousand of those who disbelieve, because they are a people who understand not.

66 Now God has lightened your burden, for He knows that there is weakness in you. And if there be one hundred steadfast among you, they shall overcome two hundred. And if there be one thousand, they shall overcome two thousand by God's Leave. And God is with the steadfast.

64–66 Most commentators take vv. 65–66 to constitute Commands and not only descriptions, because if they were descriptions of what actually happens, they would always hold true, since it is God speaking, but they do not in fact always hold true (Aj, R). In one interpretation of how these verses fit together, it is said that v. 65 was revealed and caused alarm among some Companions, who lamented their state of exile and weakness in the face of the enemy, after which God lightened their burden by revealing v. 66 (IK). According to some v. 65 refers to the time when Muslims were few in number, but later, when they became greater in number, the obligation was changed (R).

Those who deny any kind of abrogation (such as Abū Muslim al-Iṣfahānī) state that v. 65 was a Command, but with the condition that they be capable of patience and steadfastness in the face of ten-to-one odds, and that v. 66 shows that this patience was not present in them; thus v. 65 states what the Command is, given certain conditions (namely, the presence of that level of patience), while v. 66 shows that this level of patience was not reached, and God knew this weakness was in them. Another reason to suppose that there is no abrogation is that one verse immediately follows the other, and such abrogation is considered unusual and unlikely (R).

Al-Rāzī offers an interpretation “known only to those of spiritual discipline and vision,” namely, that those whose hearts are filled with spiritual knowledge and understanding are fearsome to creation, and when hearts are mastered by the light of knowing God, it strengthens and empowers them, and they are capable of actions not possible before.

67 It is not for a prophet to take captives until he overwhelms [his enemy] in the land. You desire the ephemerality of this world, while God desires the Hereafter. And God is Mighty, Wise.

68 Were it not for a decree that had already gone forth from God, a great punishment would have befallen you for what you took.

69 So consume the spoils you have taken, lawfully and in a good way, and reverence God. Truly God is Forgiving, Merciful.

67–69 In most accounts, before deciding what to do with the seventy prisoners taken at the Battle of Badr, the Prophet consulted his Companions. Abū Bakr was in favor of letting them live and releasing them for ransom, arguing that even though they were enemies, they were still kin, that the money received for their release would strengthen the Muslim community, and that in the fullness of time perhaps they would even be guided to Islam. ‘Umar ibn al-Khaṭṭāb argued that they should be executed, because of their previous acts of aggression and persecution against the Prophet and his community, and because some of them were important leaders in this hostility (IK, Q, Ṭ). The prisoners were eventually ransomed.

One interpretation of this passage is that some of the believers were hasty in taking spoils. It is an Islamic belief that up until this point no prophet was permitted to take spoils (see 8:1c); rather, spoils were destroyed (Ṭ). This may refer to the herem ban in the Torah tradition that required certain conquered cities to be utterly destroyed, including any spoils; Saul is rebuked by Samuel for sparing the king of the Amalekites and keeping their best cattle (1 Samuel 15). You desire the ephemerality of this world (spoken in the second-person plural, denoting the believers as a group) is understood as a reference to the haste with which the spoils were pursued, not by the Prophet, but by some of his followers.

The verb rendered by overwhelms has the sense both of manifesting power and of sapping the power of one’s opponent. It is often incorrectly translated “make wide slaughter,” but this meaning applies only when the verb is in a construction with the word “slaughter/killing,” which it is not here. To kill many of the enemy is an interpretation offered by some commentators (Ṭ), but this is not based upon the literal meaning of the word.

That God desires the Hereafter means that the Hereafter is superior to this world and is the greatest good (Q). Were it not for a decree is interpreted to mean either that the rules on taking spoils were already decided, or that there was a special dispensation for the participants of the Battle of Badr, or that in a general way God would not take anyone to account until they were first warned about the rightness or wrongness of a deed (Q). Some interpret this to mean that those who commit a deed that they believe to be forbidden, but that is not forbidden in the Eyes of God, are not punished for it (Q). For some it means that God first “rebuked” them for it, then made it permissible (Ṭ).

Al-Rāzī interprets vv. 67–69 to mean that the reason that the Prophet should not take prisoners until he becomes an overwhelming force that enervates his enemies is to create fear and awe in the disbelievers, so that they would not rise up in war against the believers again; according to this argument, taking prisoners and ransoming them would lead only to greater death and bloodshed in the future, because the enemy would be emboldened with a belief that they could still strike an effective blow, thus prolonging and widening the harm. One could further interpret this verse to mean that, if one has reached the point of taking prisoners, one is already in the situation of open war. Early in such hostilities, it is unlikely that the enemy would rest after paying ransom for prisoners. In fact, it is reported that some Companions, including ʿAlī ibn Abī Ṭālib, said regarding the prisoners of Badr, “If you wish, ransom them and enjoy the ransom, and have the like number of you become martyrs.”

As a spiritual allegory, this passage is interpreted to mean that for those on the spiritual path, their goal should not be to have followers or devotees over whom they could exert influence—rather they must totally dominate and slay the ego (Aj).

70 O Prophet! Say to those captives in your custody, “If God knows there to be any good in your hearts, He will give you what is better than that which was taken from you, and will forgive you. And God is Forgiving, Merciful.”

70 It is thought that this verse refers to the Prophet’s uncle ʿAbbās and others who were with him. According to one account, the Prophet demanded a certain amount of ransom for the release of ʿAbbās that was more than that requested for other prisoners. When ʿAbbās claimed to be unable to pay that amount, the Prophet said, “What about the gold you entrusted to your wife?” ʿAbbās, stunned that the Prophet could know what only his wife would know, testified that he must be a true prophet and accepted Islam (although some doubt the authenticity of this account). In any case, the ransom still had to be paid, and ʿAbbās’s ransom released ʿAbbās and three others (Q). The Prophet is commanded to say to them—meaning those who claimed to be Muslims, but who were still prisoners paying a ransom—that God will give you what is better than that which was taken from you, referring to material goods in this life, in comparison with the rewards of the Hereafter (Q).

71 But if they desire treachery against thee, they have been treacherous with God before and He gave [thee] power over them. And God is Knowing, Wise.

71 This is understood to mean that if the captives are not true in their attestations to faith and go back to their old ways, then they were treacherous before and God still gave the believers power over them; namely, He gave them a victory at the Battle of Badr (R).

72 Truly those who believe, and migrate, and strive with their wealth and themselves in the way of God, and those who sheltered and helped—they are protectors of one another. As for those who believe and did not migrate, you owe them no protection until they migrate. But if they ask your help for the sake of religion, then help is a duty upon you, except against a people with whom you have a covenant. And God sees whatsoever you do.

72 Those who migrate, and strive with their wealth and themselves in the way of God refers to the Emigrants, who migrated from Makkah with the Prophet to Madinah, and those who sheltered and helped refers to the Helpers, residents of Madinah who had already embraced Islam and received the Emigrants (Q, R, Ṭ). Here protection renders walāyah, which has multiple meanings, including friendship, closeness, political authority, protection, and even a relationship of inheritance. Many commentators consider this verse to refer to the relationship of inheritance that the Prophet established between the Emigrants and the Helpers: after the hijrah (the migration from Makkah to Madinah) he joined one Helper to each Emigrant in a symbolic brotherhood that entailed a relationship of inheritance and established filiations between them (see 4:33c).

Other commentators see the walāyah here as a reference to a relationship of rule or political responsibility, meaning that until the believers who still resided in Makkah migrated to Madinah, the believers in Madinah would have no political authority over them or claim to them (Q, R). Because it is a duty upon the Madinan believers to help the Makkan believers if they ask your help for the sake of religion, commentators such as al-Rāzī interpret you owe them no protection (walāyah) to be a command that is qualified by then [such] help is a duty upon you, except against a people with whom you have a covenant; that is, in general terms they cannot be treated with the same level of walāyah as those who migrated and helped, but neither are they to be left without support. One way of understanding al-Rāzī's view is that the nonemigrating believers were not owed protection in an official or legal sense, but were nevertheless brothers in religion and were owed help as a moral and spiritual obligation. Disagreement over whether walāyah, rendered here as protection, refers to a relationship of inheritance, help, or political alliance has led to general disagreement among commentators over the interpretation of vv. 72–75.

As a spiritual allegory, those who believe, and migrate . . . and those who sheltered and helped refers to those who give their whole self to the spiritual life and plunge as deeply as they can into the mysteries of spiritual knowledge, while those who believe and did not migrate refers to ordinary believers who are unable to embark on that path, but who nonetheless can benefit from the first group of spiritual travelers in cases of religious doubt and bewilderment (Aj).

73 As for those who disbelieve, they are protectors of one another. Unless you do the same, there will be a strife in the land, and a great corruption.

73 This verse would seem to indicate that the word rendered as protection (walāyah) in the previous verse refers not to inheritance, but to help and support, and some commentators interpret it this way, while others hold to the interpretation that this verse means that the disbelievers inherit from one another (Q). Unless you do the same means unless you are protectors of one another. Warnings against strife

(fitnah) or corruption (fasād) in the land are found throughout the Quran and refer to a state of conflict, fear, persecution, and mistrust. Corruption can refer to both political, moral, and social matters in addition to the degradation and destruction of the natural environment (see commentary on 2:11–12, 30, 205; and especially 30:41).

74 As for those who believe, and migrate, and strive in the way of God, and those who sheltered and helped, it is they who truly are believers. Theirs is forgiveness and a generous provision.

74 This verse is understood to exalt the Emigrants and the Helpers above all other categories of Muslims, and this rank is seen by most Muslims as forever restricted to them, based upon a ḥadīth that states, “There is no migration (hijrah) after the victory,” thought by most to refer to the conquest of Makkah, but by others to refer to the Treaty of Ḥudaybiyah, which enabled open travel between Makkah and Madinah for the two years previous to the final conquest of Makkah by the Prophet and his followers. Some commentators mention opinions that describe leaving one’s homeland to campaign in the way of God as a kind of hijrah (Q, R).

75 As for those who believe after you and migrate and strive with you, they are [to be counted] among you. But family relations have the strongest claim on one another in the Book of God. Truly God is Knower of all things.

75 Even after the initial migration of the Prophet and the Emigrants from Makkah, there was a period—before the conquest of Makkah, which ended the period of migration to Madinah (see 8:74c)—when Muslims in Makkah could still undertake the migration (hijrah) and join the other believers in Madinah.

But family relations have the strongest claim is often thought to refer to the rights of inheritance. Many commentators mention the relationship of kinship established by the Prophet between the Emigrants and the Helpers, which allowed them to inherit from each other while forbidding them to inherit from disbelievers even if they were blood relations (see 4:33c). Some thus interpret this verse to abrogate that legal situation and replace it with the system of inheritance through blood kinship outlined in 4:11–12. But even on this question there is disagreement; some jurists see family (lit. “womb”) relations as referring to the agnatic line (male inheritors through male relatives), while others viewed it as referring to female inheritors through female relations (Q). Still others believe that this verse was revealed to eliminate the practice among some people of the time of establishing inheritance relationships by declaration, where one party would agree to inherit from another party and vice versa (R).

Commentators such as al-Rāzī do not believe that there is any abrogation at all. He thus sees this verse as a way of making clear that the walāyah mentioned in the previous verses does not extend to inheritance, and that the rights of blood kinsfolk are to be respected. In this interpretation, the Book of God refers to the fact that these rules of inheritance are laid out explicitly in the Quran.

Repentance

al-Tawbah

The name of this sūrah, al-Tawbah, comes from the reference to repentance in v. 3, though some connect it with God’s “relenting” toward the Prophet and the believers as mentioned in vv. 117–18 (Āl), since “repent” and “relent” render the same verb with a different preposition following it. Another common name for this sūrah is al-Barā’ah (“The Repudiation”), a word that appears in its first verse, and several other names are also mentioned by commentators.

This Madinan sūrah contains some of the most important passages in the Quran concerning the conduct of war and political relations during peacetime, opening with a passage about how and why the believers should fight the idolatrous Arabs and also certain groups among the People of the Book (vv. 1–29), which is followed by a criticism of the corruption of religious leaders (vv. 29–32). A long passage describes the trials and disagreements that took place within the community over setting out on a military campaign and expands upon the dissension created by the hypocrites in Madinah who did not wish to go out to fight alongside the Prophet (vv. 38–106, 117–27). Loyalty and allegiance are major themes in the latter part of this sūrah and are applied to the attitudes of the nomadic Arabs (vv. 97–101), the efforts of some hypocrites to establish a competing mosque in Madinah (vv. 107–110), and the wavering and weakness of some Muslims in their commitment to following the Prophet into battle (vv. 117–18). The rules governing the zakāh, or alms, and the giving of charity also figure prominently in this sūrah (vv. 58–60, 103–4).

This is the only sūrah of the Quran that does not begin with the basmalah, the formula In the Name of God, the Compassionate, the Merciful. It is reported that Ibn ʿAbbās asked ʿAlī ibn Abī Ṭālib why there was no basmalah at the start of this sūrah. He responded that the basmalah is a statement of security, and this sūrah begins with the severing of a covenant and a declaration of conflict, which indicate the opposite of a state of security. When it was pointed out to him that the Prophet sent letters beginning with the basmalah to call various hostile groups to embrace Islam, ʿAlī ibn Abī Ṭālib responded that this was precisely a call to God, not the rescinding of a pact; the former leads to peace, the latter to war. Commentators note that it was a custom, even in pre-Islamic times, to omit In the Name of God in a message breaking a treaty (Q).

One interpretation of the absence of the basmalah at the start of al-Tawbah is that it reinforces the connection between the final verse of the previous sūrah, which emphasizes the need to separate from the disbelievers—a message given in a different form at the start of this sūrah (R). One question that the absence of the basmalah has raised for some is whether al-Anfāl (Sūrah 8) and al-Tawbah (Sūrah 9) are two sūrahs or together make up a single sūrah, and it is recorded that there was disagreement among some of the Companions over this question. According to an account attributed to ʿUmar ibn al-Khaṭṭāb, throughout the period of revelation the Prophet would give specific instructions on the placement of sūrahs and verses. Al-Tawbah was one of the last sūrahs to be revealed, and because of its content some Companions believed that it belonged with the preceding sūrah. However, because they were unsure whether it was one sūrah or two, they placed them next to each other, but without the basmalah at the start of al-Tawbah (Q, R). In this way, some interpret the absence of the basmalah as preserving the difference of opinion between the Companions over the question of the arrangement of the sūrahs. Nevertheless, the traditional view accepted by consensus is that it was the Prophet himself who gave the order for the sūrahs in the Quran, including considering Sūrahs 8 and 9 separate sūrahs.

① A repudiation from God and His Messenger to those idolaters with whom you made a treaty. ② So travel freely throughout the land for four months, and know that you cannot thwart God, and that God shall disgrace the disbelievers. ③ And an announcement from God and His Messenger to the people on the day of the greater ḥajj: that God and His Messenger have repudiated the idolaters. So, if you repent, it would be better for you. And if you turn away, then know that you cannot thwart God. And give the disbelievers glad tidings of a painful punishment, ④ save for those idolaters with whom you have made a treaty, and who thereafter commit no breach against you, nor support anyone against you. So fulfill the treaty with them for its duration. Truly God loves the reverent. ⑤ Then, when the sacred months have passed, slay the idolaters wheresoever you find them, capture them, besiege them, and lie in wait for them at every place of ambush. But if they repent, and perform the prayer and give the alms, then let them go their way. Truly God is Forgiving, Merciful. ⑥ And if any of the idolaters seek asylum with thee, grant him asylum until he hears the Word of God. Then convey him to his place of safety. That is because they are a people who know not. ⑦ How can the idolaters have a treaty with God and with His Messenger, save for those with whom you made a treaty at the Sacred Mosque? If they remain true to you, remain true to them. Truly God loves the reverent. ⑧ How, since if they prevail over you, they will not observe any kinship or treaty with you? They please you with their mouths, while their hearts refuse. And most of them are iniquitous. ⑨ They have sold the signs of God for a paltry price, and have turned from His way. Evil indeed is that which they used to do, ⑩ observing neither kinship nor treaty with any believer. And it is they who are the transgressors. ⑪ But if they repent, and perform the prayer and give the alms, then they are your brethren in religion. And We expound the signs for a people who know. ⑫ But if they renege on their oaths after having made their treaty, and vilify your religion, then fight the leaders of disbelief—truly they have no oaths—that they might desist. ⑬ Will you not fight a people who broke their oaths, and intended to expel the Messenger, and opened [hostility] against you first? Do you fear them? For God is worthier of being feared by you, if you are believers. ⑭ Fight them and God will punish them by means of your hands and disgrace them, and He will grant you victory over them and heal the breasts of a believing people, ⑮ and will dispel the rage within their hearts. God relents unto whomsoever He will, and God is Knowing, Wise. ⑯ Or did you suppose that you would be left alone, while God had yet to know whom among you strove and took no friend apart from God, His Messenger, and the believers? And God is Aware of whatsoever you do. ⑰ It is not for the idolaters to maintain the mosques of God, bearing witness of disbelief against themselves. They are those whose deeds have come to naught, and in the Fire shall they abide. ⑱ Only they shall maintain the mosques of God who believe in God and the Last Day, perform the prayer and give the alms, and fear none but God. Such as these may be among the rightly guided. ⑲ Or do you consider giving drink to the pilgrims and maintaining the Sacred Mosque to be like those who believe in God and the Last Day and strive in God's way? They are not equal in the Eyes of God. And God guides not wrongdoing people. ⑳ Those who believe and emigrate and strive in the way of God with their wealth and their selves are greater in rank in the Eyes of God. And it is they who are the triumphant. ㉑ Their Lord gives them glad tidings of Mercy from Him, and Contentment, and Gardens wherein they shall have lasting bliss, ㉒ abiding therein forever. Truly with God is a great reward. ㉓ O you who believe! Take not your fathers and your brothers as protectors if they prefer disbelief to belief. As for those among you who take them as protectors, it is they who are the wrongdoers. ㉔ Say, "If your fathers, your children, your brothers, your spouses, your tribe, the wealth you have acquired, commerce whose stagnation you fear, and dwellings you find pleasing are more beloved to you than God, and His Messenger, and striving in His way, then wait till God comes with His Command." And God guides not iniquitous people. ㉕ God indeed granted you victory on many a field, and on the Day of Hunayn when you were impressed at how numerous you were. But it availed you naught, and the earth, despite its breadth, closed in upon you. Then you turned your backs. ㉖ Then God sent down His Tranquility upon His Messenger and upon the believers, and sent down hosts whom you saw not, and punished those who disbelieved. And that is the recompense of the disbelievers. 27 Then thereafter God will relent unto whomsoever He will. And God is Forgiving, Merciful. 28 O you who believe! The idolaters are surely unclean; so let them not come near the Sacred Mosque after this year of theirs. If you fear poverty, God will enrich you from His Bounty if He will. Truly God is Knowing, Wise. 29 Fight those who believe not in God and in the Last Day, and who do not forbid what God and His Messenger have forbidden, and who follow not the Religion of Truth among those who were given the Book, till they pay the jizyah with a willing hand, being humbled. 30 The Jews say that Ezra is the son of God, and the Christians say that the Messiah is the son of God. Those are words from their mouths. They resemble the words of those who disbelieved before. God curse them! How they are perverted! 31 They have taken their rabbis and monks as lords apart from God, as well as the Messiah, son of Mary, though they were only commanded to worship one God. There is no god but He! Glory be to Him above the partners they ascribe. 32 They desire to extinguish the Light of God with their mouths. But God refuses to do aught but complete His Light, though the disbelievers be averse. 33 He it is Who sent His Messenger with guidance and the Religion of Truth to make it prevail over all religion, though the idolaters be averse. 34 O you who believe! Verily many of the rabbis and monks consume the wealth of people falsely, and turn from the way of God. [As for] those who hoard gold and silver and spend it not in the way of God, give them glad tidings of a painful punishment, 35 on the Day when it will be heated in the Fire of Hell, and their foreheads, their sides, and their backs will be branded with it. "This is what you hoarded up for yourselves; so taste that which you hoarded." 36 Truly the number of months in the Eyes of God is twelve months, [laid down] in the Book of God, the day He created the heavens and the earth. Of them four are sacred. That is the upright religion. So wrong not yourselves during them. And fight the idolaters all together, just as they fight you all together. And know that God is with the reverent. 37 Truly the nasi' is but an increase in disbelief, whereby the disbelievers go astray. They make it lawful one year and forbid it another, in order to reconcile it with the number made sacred by God, thus making lawful that which God has forbidden. The evil of their deeds is made to seem fair unto them, but God guides not the disbelieving people. ③⑧ O you who believe! What ails you, that when it is said unto you, “Go forth in the way of God,” you sink down heavily to the earth? Are you content with the life of this world over the Hereafter? Yet the enjoyment of the life of this world, compared with the Hereafter, is but a little. ③⑨ If you go not forth, He will punish you with a painful punishment, and will place another people in your stead, and you will not harm Him in the least. And God is Powerful over all things. ④⑩ If you help him not, yet God has already helped him. Remember when those who disbelieved expelled him, the second of the two. Yea, the two were in the cave, when he said to his companion, “Grieve not; truly God is with us.” Then God sent down His Tranquility upon him, and supported him with hosts you see not. And He made the word of those who disbelieve to be the lowliest, and the Word of God is the highest. And God is Mighty, Wise. ④⑪ Go forth in the way of God, lightly or heavily, and strive with your wealth and yourselves in the way of God. That is better for you, if you but knew. ④⑫ Were it something ephemeral nearby or an easy journey, they would have followed thee. But the trek was too great for them. And they will swear by God, “If we had been able, we would have gone out with you.” They destroy themselves, and God knows that they are liars. ④⑬ God pardon thee! Why didst thou grant them leave before it became clear to thee who spoke the truth and who the liars were? ④⑭ Those who believe in God and the Last Day ask of thee no leave from striving with their wealth and their selves. And God knows the reverent. ④⑮ Only they ask leave of thee who believe not in God and the Last Day, whose hearts are in doubt, and so they waver in their doubt. ④⑯ And had they desired to go forth, they would have made some preparations for it. But God was averse to their being sent forth; so He held them back, and it was said unto them, “Stay back with those who stay back.” ④⑰ And had they gone forth with thee, it would have increased thee in naught but troubles. And they would have hurried about in your midst, seeking to incite discord among you. And among you are some who hearken to them. And God knows the wrongdoers. 48 And indeed they sought to incite trials earlier, and turned thee over in their minds, until the truth came and the Command of God was manifest, though they were averse. 49 And among them some say, "Grant me leave, and tempt me not." Nay, they have fallen into temptation. And truly Hell encompasses the disbelievers. 50 If some good befalls thee, it troubles them. But if some affliction befalls thee, they say, "We already took precautions beforehand," and they turn away, exulting. 51 Say, "Naught befalls us, save that which God has decreed for us. He is our Master, and in God let the believers trust." 52 Say, "Do you anticipate that aught will befall us save one of the two best things? But we anticipate for you that God will afflict you with a punishment from Him, or by our hands. So wait! Truly we are waiting along with you." 53 Say, "Spend willingly or unwillingly; it shall never be accepted from you. Truly you are an iniquitous people." 54 And naught prevented their spending from being accepted from them, save that they disbelieved in God and in His Messenger, and only come to the prayer lazily, and only spend reluctantly. 55 And let not their wealth or their children impress thee. God desires but to punish them thereby in the life of this world, and that their souls should depart while they are disbelievers. 56 And they swear by God that truly they are of you, but they are not of you. Rather, they are a fearful people. 57 Were they to find a refuge, or caves, or a place to enter, they would turn toward it defiantly. 58 And among them some reproach thee over the charitable offerings; if they are given thereof, they are content, but if they are not given thereof, behold, they are angry. 59 If only they had been content with what God and His Messenger gave them, and said, "God suffices us. God will give unto us from His Bounty, as will the Messenger. Truly our desire is for God." 60 The charitable offerings are only for the poor, and the indigent, and those working with them, and those whose hearts are [to be] reconciled, and for [ransoming] slaves and for debtors, and in the way of God, and for the traveler: a duty from God. And God is Knowing, Wise. 61 And among them are those who torment the Prophet, and say, "He is an ear."

Say, "An ear that is good for you. He believes in God and he has faith in the believers, and he is a mercy to those among you who believe." And [as for] those who torment the Messenger of God, theirs shall be a painful punishment. 62 They swear by God to you, to please you. But God and His Messenger are worthier of being pleased by them, if they are believers. 63 Do they know not that whosoever opposes God and His Messenger, surely for him shall be the Fire of Hell, to abide therein? That is the great disgrace. 64 The hypocrites dread lest a sūrah be sent down against them, informing them of that which is in their hearts. Say, "Go on mocking. Truly God will bring forth what you dread." 65 And if thou askest them, they will surely say, "We were only engaging [in vain talk] and playing." Say, "Is it God, His signs, and His Messenger you were mocking?" 66 Make no excuses. You disbelieved after having believed. If We pardon a group of you, We shall punish another group for having been guilty. 67 The hypocrites, men and women, are like unto one another, enjoining wrong, forbidding right, clutching their hands shut. They forgot God; so He forgot them. Truly the hypocrites are iniquitous. 68 Verily God has promised the hypocrites, men and women, and the disbelievers the Fire of Hell, to abide therein. It shall suffice them. God curses them, and theirs shall be a lasting punishment. 69 [Remember] those who were before you. They were mightier than you in power, and greater in wealth and children. So they enjoyed their share, and you enjoyed your share, just as those before you enjoyed their share. And you have engaged [in vain talk] as they engaged [in vain talk]. It is they whose deeds came to naught in this world and in the Hereafter, and it is they who are the losers. 70 Has not the account come to them of those who were before them, the people of Noah, ʿĀd, and Thamūd, and the people of Abraham, the inhabitants of Midian, and the overthrown cities? Their messengers brought them clear proofs. God wronged them not, but themselves did they wrong. 71 But the believing men and believing women are protectors of one another, enjoining right and forbidding wrong, performing the prayer, giving the alms, and obeying God and His Messenger. They are those upon whom God will have Mercy. Truly God is Mighty, Wise. 72 God has promised the believing men and the believing women Gardens with rivers running below, to abide therein, and goodly dwellings in the Gardens of Eden. But Contentment from God is greater; that is the great triumph! ⁷³ O Prophet! Strive against the disbelievers and the hypocrites, and be harsh with them. Their refuge is Hell. What an evil journey's end! ⁷⁴ They swear by God that they said it not, but indeed they spoke the word of disbelief, and disbelieved after having submitted [to God]. And they had ambitions that they did not achieve, and they were vengeful only because God and His Messenger enriched them from His Bounty. If they repent, it would be better for them. But if they turn away, God will punish them with a painful punishment in this world and in the Hereafter, and on earth they shall have neither protector nor helper. ⁷⁵ And among them are those who make a pact with God [saying], "If He gives unto us from His Bounty, we will surely spend in charity, and we will surely be among the righteous." ⁷⁶ But when He gave unto them from His Bounty, they were miserly with it, and turned away in rejection. ⁷⁷ So He requited them with hypocrisy in their hearts, till the Day they will meet Him, for having failed in that which they promised Him and for having lied. ⁷⁸ Know they not that God knows their secret and their private discourse, and that God is Knower of things unseen? ⁷⁹ As for they who reproach those believers who give freely and those who have naught but their keep [to give], and ridicule them—God ridicules them, and theirs shall be a painful punishment. ⁸⁰ Seek forgiveness for them, or seek not forgiveness for them. If thou seekest forgiveness for them seventy times, God will not forgive them. That is because they disbelieve in God and His Messenger. And God guides not iniquitous people. ⁸¹ Those who were left behind exulted in staying back, opposing the Messenger of God, and were averse to striving with their wealth and with their selves in the way of God. And they said, "Go not forth in the heat." Say, "The Fire of Hell is of a heat more intense," if they but understood. ⁸² So let them laugh little and weep much, as a recompense for that which they used to earn. ⁸³ And if God returns thee to a group of them, and they seek leave of thee to go forth, say, "You shall not go forth with me ever; nor shall you fight with me against any enemy. You were content to stay back the first time; so stay back with those who remain behind.” 84 And never pray over one of them who dies, nor stand by his grave. Truly they disbelieved in God and His Messenger and died iniquitous. 85 And let not their wealth or their children impress thee. God desires only to punish them thereby in this world, and that their souls should depart while they are disbelievers. 86 And when a sūrah is sent down [saying], “Believe in God and strive with His Messenger,” the affluent among them ask thee for leave, and say, “Let us be among those who stay back.” 87 They are content to be among those who remain behind, and a seal is set upon their hearts. And so they understand not. 88 But the Messenger and those who believe with him strive with their wealth and with their selves. And it is they who shall have good things, and it is they who shall prosper. 89 God has prepared for them Gardens with rivers running below, to abide therein. That is the great triumph. 90 Those seeking to be excused among the Bedouin came in order to be granted leave, while those who lied to God and His Messenger stayed back. A painful punishment shall befall those among them who disbelieve. 91 No blame is there upon the weak, nor upon the sick, nor those who find nothing to spend, if they are sincere toward God and His Messenger. There is no argument against the virtuous—and God is Forgiving, Merciful— 92 nor upon those who, when they came to thee to give them a mount, and thou didst say to them, “I find nothing upon which to mount you,” turned back, their eyes flowing with tears, grieving that they found nothing to spend. 93 The argument falls only upon those who seek leave of thee though they are wealthy. They are content to be among those who remain behind, and God has set a seal upon their hearts. And so they know not. 94 They will offer excuses to you when you return to them. Say, “Offer no excuses! We shall not believe you. God has already given us news of you. God and His Messenger will see your deeds. Then you will be brought back to the Knower of the Unseen and the seen, and He will inform you of that which you used to do.” 95 They will swear by God to you, when you return to them, that you may turn away from them. So turn away from them. Truly, they are a defilement, and their refuge is Hell, a recompense for that which they used to earn. 96 They swear to you, that you might be content with them. But though you may be content with them, God is not content with iniquitous people. 97 The Bedouin are more severe in disbelief and hypocrisy, and more liable not to know the limits [ordained] in what God has sent down unto His Messenger. And God is Knowing, Wise. 98 And among the Bedouin are those who regard that which they spend as a loss, and they await a change in fortune for you. Upon them shall be an evil change of fortune. And God is Hearing, Knowing. 99 And among the Bedouin are those who believe in God and the Last Day, and regard that which they spend as [a means to attain] nearness unto God and the blessings of the Messenger. Behold! It shall surely be nearness for them. God will cause them to enter His Mercy. Truly God is Forgiving, Merciful. 100 [As for] the foremost, the first among the Emigrants and the Helpers, and those who followed them with virtue, God is content with them, and they are content with Him. And He has prepared for them Gardens with rivers running below, to abide therein forever. That is the great triumph. 101 Among the Bedouin around you there are hypocrites, and among the people of Madinah, who are headstrong in hypocrisy. Thou knowest them not; We know them and We shall punish them twice. Then they shall be relegated to a great punishment. 102 And [there are] others who admit their sins; they mixed righteous deeds with others that are evil. It may be that God will relent unto them. Truly God is Forgiving, Merciful. 103 Take thou a charitable offering from their wealth, cleansing them and purifying them thereby, and bless them. Truly thy blessings are a comfort for them. And God is Hearing, Knowing. 104 Know they not that God accepts repentance from His servants, and receives the charitable offerings, and that God is the Relenting, the Merciful? 105 Say, "Perform your deeds. God will see your deeds, as will the Messenger and the believers, and you will be brought back to the Knower of the Unseen and the seen, and He will inform you of that which you used to do." 106 And others are made to await the Command of God. Either He will punish them, or He will relent unto them. And God is Knowing, Wise. 107 And as for those who established a mosque for harm and disbelief, and to divide the believers, and to be an outpost for those who made war on God and His Messenger before, they will surely swear, “We desire only what is best.” But God bears witness that truly they are liars. 108 Never stand therein! Truly a mosque founded upon reverence from the first day is worthier of thy standing therein. Therein are men who love to purify themselves, and God loves those who purify themselves. 109 So is one who founded his building upon reverence for God and [His] Contentment better, or one who founded his building on the brink of a crumbling bank, which then crumbles with him into the Fire of Hell? And God guides not wrongdoing people. 110 The building they have built will cease not to be a disquiet in their hearts, till their hearts are rent asunder. And God is Knowing, Wise. 111 Truly God has purchased from the believers their souls and their wealth in exchange for the Garden being theirs. They fight in the way of God, slaying and being slain. [It is] a promise binding upon Him in the Torah, the Gospel, and the Quran. And who is truer to His pact than God? So rejoice in the bargain you have made. That indeed is the great triumph. 112 The penitent, and the worshippers, and the celebrants of praise, and the wayfarers, and those who bow, and those who prostrate, and those who enjoin right, and those who forbid wrong, and those who maintain the limits set by God; and give glad tidings unto the believers. 113 It is not for the Prophet and those who believe to seek forgiveness for the idolaters, even if they be kin, after it has become clear to them that they shall be the inhabitants of Hellfire. 114 Abraham’s plea for forgiveness of his father was only due to a promise he had made to him. But when it became clear to him that he was an enemy of God, he repudiated him. Truly Abraham was tenderhearted, clement. 115 It is not for God to lead a people astray after having guided them, till He makes clear unto them that whereof they should be mindful. Truly God is Knower of all things. 116 Truly unto God belongs Sovereignty over the heavens and the earth. He gives life and causes death. Apart from God you have neither protector nor helper. 117 God indeed has relented unto the Prophet, and the Emigrants and the Helpers who followed him in the difficult hour, after the hearts of a group of them nearly swerved. Then He relented unto them—truly He is Kind, Merciful unto them—⁽¹¹⁸⁾ and unto the three who were left behind until the earth, despite its breadth, closed in upon them, and their own souls closed in upon them, and they deemed there to be no refuge from God, save with Him. Then He relented unto them, that they might repent. Truly God is Relenting, Merciful. ⁽¹¹⁹⁾ O you who believe! Reverence your Lord, and be among the truthful. ⁽¹²⁰⁾ It is not for the people of Madinah and the Bedouin who dwell around them to remain behind from the Messenger of God, or to prefer themselves to him. That is because no thirst, nor toil, nor hunger befalls them in the way of God, nor do they take any step enraging the disbelievers, nor do they endure aught at the hands of an enemy, but that a righteous deed is recorded for them on account of it. Truly God neglects not the reward of the virtuous. ⁽¹²¹⁾ Nor do they spend aught, be it small or large, nor traverse a valley, but that it is written down for them, that God may reward them for the best of that which they used to do. ⁽¹²²⁾ But it is not for the believers all to go forth. And why should not a party from each group go forth to gain understanding in religion, and to warn their people when they return to them, that haply they will beware? ⁽¹²³⁾ O you who believe! Fight those disbelievers who are near to you, and let them find harshness in you. And know that God is with the reverent. ⁽¹²⁴⁾ And whensoever a sūrah is sent down, some among them say, “Which of you has this increased in faith?” As for those who believe, it increases them in faith, and they rejoice. ⁽¹²⁵⁾ As for those in whose hearts is a disease, it added defilement to their defilement, and they die while they are disbelievers. ⁽¹²⁶⁾ See they not that they are tried each year, once or twice; yet they neither repent nor take heed? ⁽¹²⁷⁾ And whensoever a sūrah is sent down, they look at each other [saying], “Does anyone see you?” Then they turn away. God has turned their hearts away because they are a people who understand not. ⁽¹²⁸⁾ A Messenger has indeed come unto you from among your own. Troubled is he by what you suffer, solicitous of you, kind and merciful unto the believers. ⁽¹²⁹⁾ But if they turn away, say, “God suffices me. There is no god but He. In Him do I trust, and He is the Lord of the mighty Throne.”

1–4 The first verse of this sūrah is an announcement of the annulment of a treaty between the Prophet and the idolaters. Repudiation (barā'ah) has the sense of being or becoming unallied, being innocent of, or being disassociated from something. Here it means that the existing truce or treaty has come to an end. Regarding the circumstances and the interpretation of this verse there is what Ibn Kathīr calls “considerable disagreement.” In one account, this verse is said to refer to the breaking of the Treaty of Ḥudaybiyah, a treaty contracted between the Prophet and the Quraysh that had established a ten-year truce (see Sūrah 48). This treaty not only included the Prophet and the Quraysh, but also their respective allies, among whom were the tribes of Banū Khuzā'ah on the side of the Prophet and Banū Bakr on the side of the Quraysh. Banū Bakr later launched an attack on the Banū Khuzā'ah, stemming from a vendetta that preexisted the Treaty of Ḥudaybiyah, and it was reported that the Quraysh assisted the Banū Bakr with arms and a small number of men (Q). The Prophet considered this act to be a breach of the treaty, thereby nullifying the need to observe the truce, and this ultimately led to the final conquest of Makkah by the Prophet and his followers. According to this account, the repudiation of the treaty is addressed to the Makkans.

According to the majority of commentators, however, this verse was revealed after the conquest of Makkah in 8/630, a year after the breach of the Treaty of Ḥudaybiyah. There is considerable difference of opinion as to which idolaters are addressed and the legal import of both the repudiation (v. 1) and the announcement (v. 3). One opinion is that if some idolaters had an existing treaty with the Prophet, a treaty whose term had more than four months remaining, it was reduced to four months, and if they had one that was to expire before four months, it would be extended to a period of four months. Others add to this latter group those with whom the Prophet had made no treaty, so that they would be automatically granted a four-month truce. Yet others interpreted this four-month period to apply only to those idolaters who had less than a four-month treaty or none at all, but would not reduce an already existing treaty that was being faithfully observed. And still others believed that this directive applied only to those who had no preexisting treaty at all, and that anyone else with a treaty in hand would be dealt with according to that treaty, regardless of its term (I, Q, Ṭ). For example, Ibn ʿAbbās notes that the Muslims had a treaty with Ḥayy ibn Kinānah that still had nine months left at the time of the announcement, and they continued to observe it (R). As for those who interpret this as the rescinding of a treaty with those who had a treaty before, this ruling was considered permissible under certain conditions as outlined in 8:58c, namely, when there is a reasonable expectation that the other side will not fulfill the treaty terms or in cases where they have already in fact violated the treaty (R, Ṭ).

There are also disagreements among commentators as to the precise timing of the four months mentioned in v. 2 and the end of the sacred months mentioned in v. 5. If the announcement of v. 3 was made on the day of the greater ḥajj—interpreted to be either the Day of Sacrifice or the Day of ʿArafah (Ṭ; see 2:196c)—it would leave fifty days until the ending of sacred months—that is, the remainder of the pilgrimage month of Dhu’l-Ḥijjah (the twelfth month of the calendar) followed by the entire month of Muḥarram (Ṭ). One view understands this passage to mean that v. 3 addresses the idolaters with whom the Prophet and his followers had no existing treaty, while the group with whom they did have a treaty was given the four months mentioned in vv. 1–2. According to another view, this repudiation and announcement were made to both groups at the same time, so that the treaty-holding idolaters had four months (until the middle of Rabīʿ al-Thānī, which comes four months after Dhu’l-Ḥijjah) while the nontreaty group had until the end of the sacred months (fifty days from the day of the announcement) as mentioned above.

According to still another opinion, this sūrah was revealed at the start of Shawwāl (the tenth month of the calendar), thus making the end of the four-month period mentioned in v. 2 coincide with the end of the sacred months as described in v. 5. Yet another opinion is that the period of four months refers to those with whom the Muslims had a treaty that was set to expire earlier than four months, and the verse commanded that they grant them four months, while for its duration refers to those treaties stipulating a period of more than four months, which the Muslims were thus instructed to observe in full. According to this last opinion, the Prophet was commanded to repudiate the treaties only with those idolaters who had broken it already and to maintain all others. Al-Ṭabarī makes it clear that this passage could not possibly mean that after the lapse of the sacred months the believers were free to kill any idolater; see the essay “Conquest and Conversion, War and Peace in the Quran.”

It is important to remember that after the Muslims had conquered Makkah, there were still idolaters in the Arabian Peninsula, and other battles, such as Ḥunayn, remained to be fought (see v. 25). Some idolaters were still coming to the Ka^ʿbah to perform the pilgrimage rites according to pre-Islamic practices (even though there were no longer any idols to worship). It is reported that, for the first ḥajj after the conquest of Makkah, the Prophet sent Abū Bakr to lead the ḥajj, and with him sent ʿAlī to announce four matters to those who had assembled in Makkah: only a believing soul shall enter the Garden; no idolater shall approach the Ka^ʿbah after that year; no one will circumambulate the Ka^ʿbah naked ever again; and whosoever has a treaty will have that treaty observed according to its terms (Ṭ). Most commentators note that ʿAlī was chosen to make the announcement of the repudiation, because Arab custom demanded that a treaty be broken either by the contracting party—in this case the Prophet himself—or a near kinsman, and the Prophet wanted the message to be understood unambiguously (Q).

⑤ Then, when the sacred months have passed, slay the idolaters wheresoever you find them, capture them, besiege them, and lie in wait for them at every place of ambush. But if they repent, and perform the prayer and give the alms, then let them go their way. Truly God is Forgiving, Merciful.

5 There is disagreement over whether the sacred months in this verse were those four traditionally considered to be sacred by the Arabs (the seventh, tenth, eleventh, and twelfth) mentioned in v. 36, or whether the word translated here as sacred, ḥurum (lit. “forbidden”), refers to the fact that the idolaters were given four months of free travel and the believers were forbidden from fighting them (IK).

This passage is significant for debates concerning the use of force. For some, v. 5 of this sūrah abrogates all previous treaties and obligations in relation to the idolaters. Other commentators and jurists interpret this to mean that the idolaters are fought by reason of their idolatry and polytheism (Q, R). However, since this passage itself explicitly affirms the validity and propriety of keeping treaties with those idolaters who uphold their side of the treaty in good faith, a more plausible reading of this passage would not see the very fact that certain persons were idolaters as a reason to fight them; on this question see also 2:256c.

From the perspective of the Muslim community, the years of conflict preceding this announcement created a political environment where the idolaters of Arabia could not be left in a position of power and political strength to menace the Muslim community in the future; treaties were indeed often made, but they were just as often broken by the idolaters and their allies. This concern regarding treaties is made explicit in v. 8, which states that if the idolaters were to come into a position of power over the believers, they would not observe kinship or treaty. Rather, the idolaters in Arabia would have continued to form a persistent political alliance against the Prophet and the believers. According to this understanding of the political context, the idolaters' conversion to Islam would not have been the purpose of fighting them, though this conversion (based on the plain sense of v. 5) would be the only way for them to ensure their physical security; that is, they could avoid a state of war by renouncing idolatry and disavowing their previous actions and alliances, but being non-Muslim was not their original crime. See also the essay "Conquest and Conversion, War and Peace in the Quran."

Moreover, v. 13 seems to provide the underlying rationale for why the idolaters were to be treated as hostile: Will you not fight a people who broke their oaths, and intended to expel the Messenger, and opened [hostility] against you first? The command of 8:58, establishing the conditions for rescinding a treaty, is some indication of how precarious such treaties could turn out to be, and most famously the Quraysh and their allied tribe of Banū Bakr violated the Treaty of Ḥudaybiyah (mentioned in 9:1–4c), an act that eventually led to the conquest of Makkah by the Prophet and his followers.

⑥ And if any of the idolaters seek asylum with thee, grant him asylum until he hears the Word of God. Then convey him to his place of safety. That is because they are a people who know not.

6 This verse says that idolaters could come and hear the Quran and the teachings of Islam and then be taken to a place of safety (Q) until they reached their own home (Ṭ). Commentators record some disagreement as to whether this verse was abrogated by other verses, such as 47:4, Free them graciously or hold them for ransom, till war lays down its burdens, which explicitly mentions the option of freeing or ransoming prisoners. The dominant opinion, however, is that neither 9:6 nor 47:4 was abrogated, and that the Prophet and the believers were given the authority to slay the enemy, take them prisoner, or release them from the very beginning of the years of war, beginning with the Battle of Badr in 2/624 (Q, Ṭ). There is some disagreement as to how much of the Quran this verse requires that such a person be made to hear, some saying it should be the entire Quran, others restricting it to this sūrah, since it contains the essence of what idolaters need to hear about their situation (R).

7 How can the idolaters have a treaty with God and with His Messenger, save for those with whom you made a treaty at the Sacred Mosque? If they remain true to you, remain true to them. Truly God loves the reverent.

7 According to some those with whom you made a treaty refers to certain members of Banū Bakr (who had been in alliance with the Quraysh according to the terms of the Treaty of Ḥudaybiyah) who never violated their treaty with the Prophet even when others did so (R, Q, Ṭ, Th); see 9:1–4c. Other commentators believe that this verse refers to the Banū Khuzā^cah, who were allied with the Prophet, or even to the Quraysh (Ṭ). Al-Ṭabarī believes that this verse could refer only to those members of Banū Bakr who did not violate the Treaty of Ḥudaybiyah, arguing that at the time these verses were revealed (after the conquest of Makkah) there were no remaining non-Muslim members of Khuzā^cah, and the Quraysh held no treaty, because they had violated it and rendered it null and void. Al-Tha^clabī records an account that it also refers to certain members of the Quraysh who were given that period of four months to either become Muslims or accept exile in a land of their choosing. Before the period of four months expired, they became Muslims. Al-Tha^clabī also accepts the opinion that this verse refers to certain members of Banū Bakr, using reasoning similar to that of al-Ṭabarī.

8 How, since if they prevail over you, they will not observe any kinship or treaty with you? They please you with their mouths, while their hearts refuse. And most of them are iniquitous.

8 Kinship renders ill, which can also mean a pact or sworn alliance (ḥilf; Ṭ). Treaty renders dhimmah, referring generally to “that which sets up an obligation” (R), and in this sense ahl al-dhimmah can be rendered “treaty peoples” (Q) or “those to whom one has an obligation.” On the concept of dhimmah, also see 9:29c. Prevail signifies that the disbelievers would come to a position of strength over the Muslims (Q, R, Ṭ).

They please you with their mouths—namely, by speaking sweet words—while their hearts contain the opposite (R). Since all disbelievers are considered to be “iniquitous” (Q, R), most of them are iniquitous is understood to mean that many (though not all) of the disbelievers lie and will fail to uphold their agreements (Q), are faithless even to their own religion (R), and are thus iniquitous in both a general and a specific sense.

9 They have sold the signs of God for a paltry price, and have turned from His way. Evil indeed is that which they used to do, 9 The “sale” of God’s signs for a paltry price is an object of rebuke in several verses of the Quran, as in 2:174; 3:187; 16:95. In other places, the language of buying and selling is used in a positive manner, as when God asks believers, Who is it that will lend unto God a goodly loan? He will multiply it for him, and his shall be a generous reward (57:11; cf. 2:245; 5:12; 57:18; 64:17; 73:20); and 61:10, which speaks of a commerce that will save you. Turned from His way can mean, here and in other instances of this verb phrase, both that they turn away from the way of God themselves and that they hinder others from following it.

10 observing neither kinship nor treaty with any believer. And it is they who are the transgressors.

10 See v. 8. “Transgression” has the general meaning of going beyond limits and is also used in relation to the use of force, as in 2:194: So whosoever transgresses against you, transgress against him in like manner as he transgressed against you.

⑪ But if they repent, and perform the prayer and give the alms, then they are your brethren in religion. And We expound the signs for a people who know.

11 If they repent means if they abandon idolatry (IK). Many commentators point out that then they are your brethren in religion “makes sacrosanct the blood of the people of the qiblah [those who face Makkah to pray],” referring to those who worship as Muslims (Q, T); in other words, Muslims do not need a separate treaty to establish peaceful relations with one another, although in later history when multiple Islamic political entities emerged, these entities would make treaties with one another.

⑫ But if they renege on their oaths after having made their treaty, and vilify your religion, then fight the leaders of disbelief—truly they have no oaths—that they might desist.

12 Some say that the leaders of disbelief are mentioned specifically, because they are decisive in generating hostility against the believers (R), though al-Rāzī believes that it is implied that one should fight all of the disbelievers as well; in Quranic accounts it is often the “notables” or leading members of a group that voice and drive a people’s rejection of their prophet (see, e.g., 7:60, 66, 75, 88). Others say that it refers to those who led the way in violating the treaty and opening hostilities (Q). Although it can be seen as referring to specific people such as Abū Jahl, one of the central leaders of the Makkans who were against the Prophet, it is thought to apply universally to all such treaty violators (IK). They have no oaths means that, since they break their oaths, it is as though the oaths did not exist.

For some this also means that treaty peoples (ahl al-dhimmah, see 9:29c) must not revile Islam, the latter being a condition of the treaty (R). Al-Qurṭubī points out there are differences of opinion on the matter of vilification of religion and the Prophet. For him, a severe calumny of the Prophet would merit capital punishment if spoken by a Muslim, amounting to zandaqah, a term referring to deviance in religion of a pernicious kind.

Al-Qurṭubī notes further that most jurists believed that those treaty peoples (see 9:29c) who revile the Prophet should be executed, but Abū Ḥanīfah did not, reasoning that their beliefs were already worse than any insult, and moreover the Quran set two conditions on such use of force: that they should violate the treaty and then vilify your religion. Al-Qurṭubī also records that Abū Bakr was outraged by something a man had said in his presence against the Prophet and Islam; someone asked him if he wanted that man executed, and Abū Bakr said, “No one has that right after the Messenger of God.”

Al-Rāzī points out that the breaking of the treaty can also refer to those who become non-Muslim after having become Muslim, thus framing membership in the Muslim community as a form of social and legal contract. According to this reading, if a believer violates that “treaty” by leaving Islam and then vilifying the religion, then other believers are authorized to fight the leaders of disbelief. This is part of the reason why many jurists did not demand death for those who left Islam, but only for those who, after leaving it, also subsequently engaged in the kind of verbal hostility mentioned here. Such vilification was often a precursor to violence and hence could be interpreted as a threat or potential incitement to violence.

The legality of executing people for insulting the Prophet is thus seen in terms of treaties and political loyalties and not only personally and is based upon the implicit threat of actual violence that such insults might entail—as demonstrated by the case of Kaʿb ibn al-Ashraf, who went far beyond insults to generate hostility against the Prophet—rather than on the offense of the insult itself. It is worth considering that the Prophet was subjected on countless occasions to the insults recorded in the Quran, such as the accusations that the Quran consisted of “fables of those of old” and that he was mad. He also lived peacefully with those who did not embrace his religion and thus, by implication if not declaration, did not believe him. This is partly why the Ḥanafī school of law has reasoned that treaty holders (dhimīs) are not to be executed for an insult, since their beliefs (an implicit denial of the Prophet) are already a greater offense (Q); that is, the difference between a state of mind and open vilification was a matter of real or potential violence against the Muslim community in the form of incitement or political destabilization, not merely a matter of individual ignorance, honor, or pride.

fear them? For God is worthier of being feared by you, if you are believers.

13 This verse continues to speak of the fighting that was commanded in v. 5. First refers to the fact that the idolaters initiated the conflict by attacking allies of the Prophet (ﷺ). Al-Rāzī observes that there are three reasons, any one of which is sufficient to call for the use of force: breaking a treaty, and most think this refers to the Treaty of Ḥudaybiyah; intending to expel the Messenger, which is thought by most to refer to his migration from Makkah to Madinah, but which some interpret as a reference to the attempt to dislodge him from his position of strength in Madinah, as for example at the Battle of Uḥud; and being the first to attack, referring to the attack on Banū Khuzā'ah, which violated the Treaty of Ḥudaybiyah (see 9:1–4c). Other instances where human beings are commanded to fear God and not human beings include 2:150; 3:175; 5:3.

14 Fight them and God will punish them by means of your hands and disgrace them, and He will grant you victory over them and heal the breasts of a believing people,

15 and will dispel the rage within their hearts. God relents unto whomsoever He will, and God is Knowing, Wise.

14–15 God punishing the disbelievers “by the hands” of the believers is also mentioned in v. 52: God will afflict you with a punishment from Him, or by our hands. The believing people in need of healing are the Khuzā'ah, who were attacked by Banū Bakr, which broke the treaty of Ḥudaybiyah (ﷺ; see 9:1–4c). That God relents means that He can still accept the repentance of the disbelievers (ﷺ). “Repent” and “relent” render the same verb, tāba/yatūbu, differing only with the addition of a preposition. The noun derived from this verb, tawbah, usually rendered “repentance,” means literally a “turning” or a “return”; that is, human beings turn or return to God in repentance, and He turns or returns toward them.

16 Or did you suppose that you would be left alone, while God had yet to know whom among you strove and took no friend apart from God, His Messenger, and the believers? And God is Aware of whatsoever you do.

16 Cf. 29:2–3. Friend renders here the word walījah, a word that conveys the sense of being a confidant and intimate (Q). On the question of the meaning of God doing something “in order to know,” see 2:143c.

17 It is not for the idolaters to maintain the mosques of God, bearing witness of disbelief against themselves. They are those whose deeds have come to naught, and in the Fire shall they abide.

18 Only they shall maintain the mosques of God who believe in God and the Last Day, perform the prayer and give the alms, and fear none but God. Such as these may be among the rightly guided.

19 Or do you consider giving drink to the pilgrims and maintaining the Sacred Mosque to be like those who believe in God and the Last Day and strive in God’s way? They are not equal in the Eyes of God. And God guides not wrongdoing people.

20 Those who believe and emigrate and strive in the way of God with their wealth and their selves are greater in rank in the Eyes of God. And it is they who are the triumphant.

17–20 According to one account, ʿAbbās (the Prophet’s uncle) was speaking to ʿAlī and proclaiming his own merit for being responsible for giving drink to the pilgrims, which was considered an honor and privilege; he was rebuked by ʿAlī, who noted that he himself had fought for Islam since the beginning and that ʿAbbās had only lately begun to perform the canonical prayer (IK). In another account, some Muslims were discussing among themselves what actions were best. Some mentioned giving drink to the pilgrims; others, the maintenance of the Kaʿbah; and others, struggling physically in the way of God. They were chastised by ʿUmar ibn al-Khaṭṭāb for raising their voices near the Prophet’s pulpit, and soon after this verse is said to have been revealed (IK, Q, Ṭ). Al-Qurṭubī notes that it is plausible that the latter account was an instance where a previously revealed verse was mentioned as a response to some incident, not that it was revealed in response.

That the idolaters are bearing witness of disbelief against themselves means they provide evidence against themselves through their disbelief. The possibility that the deeds of disbelievers may, in the Hereafter, come to naught is mentioned throughout the Quran (e.g., 2:217; 3:22; 5:5, 53; 6:88; 7:147; 11:16; 18:105; 33:19; 39:65; 47:9, 28, 32; 49:2). May be (v. 18) renders ‘asā, which is interpreted to mean, when it appears in the Quran, it will necessarily be so (Ṭ). Striving in the way of God with one’s wealth and one’s self is also mentioned in vv. 44, 81 of this sūrah.

21 Their Lord gives them glad tidings of Mercy from Him, and Contentment, and Gardens wherein they shall have lasting bliss, 22 abiding therein forever. Truly with God is a great reward.

21–22 Contentment (riḍwān) from God is considered to be the pinnacle of the paradisaal state; for a discussion of riḍwān, see 3:15c. Bliss renders na‘īm, a word that evokes tranquility, ease, and blessing. Other verses speak of Gardens of bliss (5:65; 10:9; 22:65; 31:8; 37:43; 56:12; 68:34); see 56:11–12c; 56:88–89c.

23 O you who believe! Take not your fathers and your brothers as protectors if they prefer disbelief to belief. As for those among you who take them as protectors, it is they who are the wrongdoers.

24 Say, “If your fathers, your children, your brothers, your spouses, your tribe, the wealth you have acquired, commerce whose stagnation you fear, and dwellings you find pleasing are more beloved to you than God, and His Messenger, and striving in His way, then wait till God comes with His Command.” And God guides not iniquitous people.

23–24 It is thought by some commentators that these verses refer to those Muslims who remained in Makkah after the migration (hijrah) of the Prophet and before the conquest of Makkah, but others prefer to see these verses as a general command applicable to all believers (Q). It is reported that, when the Command to migrate came, some of the believers were persuaded by their families to remain in Makkah (Q). That v. 25 mentions the Battle of Ḥunayn, which took place after the conquest of Makkah, may suggest that these verses were not in fact revealed in relation to those who were in Makkah before the conquest, but constitute a general moral injunction. Till God comes with His Command is understood by some to refer to the eventual conquest of Makkah by the believers (Ṭ), though the fact that v. 25 addresses the Battle of Ḥunayn (which took place after the conquest of Makkah) in the past tense makes it implausible that v. 24 could be referring to a time before the conquest of Makkah. The idea of God coming with His Command also appears in 2:109.

25 God indeed granted you victory on many a field, and on the Day of Ḥunayn when you were impressed at how numerous you were. But it availed you naught, and the earth, despite its breadth, closed in upon you. Then you turned your backs.

25 The Battle of Ḥunayn took place soon after the conquest of Makkah (see 9:1–4c). The tribes of Hawāzin and Thaḳīf, centered around the town of Ṭāʿif to the southeast of Makkah, had gathered their own forces in response to the Prophet's march from Madinah in fear that they were the true target of his army, rather than the Quraysh. It was indeed reported that Abū Sufyān, in a vain attempt to persuade the Prophet not to march on Makkah after the breach of the Treaty of Ḥudaybiyyah, suggested that he march against the Hawāzin instead, arguing that they were further in kinship and more hostile. The Prophet, for his part, intentionally created ambiguity as to his actual target.

Following the conquest of Makkah by the Prophet, the Hawāzin decided not to wait for a potential attack and set out to strike at Makkah. In response, the Prophet marched northeast from Makkah toward the valley of Awṭās, where the Hawāzin had mustered their large army of some twenty thousand men. The army of the Prophet consisted of the Madinan and Makkan Muslims and also some Quraysh who had not yet embraced Islam but nevertheless did not wish their city to fall to the Hawāzin. The battle was joined in the valley of Ḥunayn, which was on the road between Makkah and Ṭāʿif. The early stages of the battle went in the Hawāzin's favor and segments of the Makkan army fled from the powerful initial onslaught, but ultimately the Prophet and his commanders rallied and regrouped and dealt the Hawāzin a decisive defeat. Some of them scattered, while others retreated within the walls of Ṭāʾif; the Prophet's army laid siege to the town for nearly three weeks until they surrendered and agreed to embrace Islam.

Regarding impressed at how numerous you were, it is noted that most estimates placed the Prophet's army between twelve and sixteen thousand. Some in the army said, "We shall never be defeated!" (R, Ṭ). The earth, despite its breadth, closed in upon you refers to the fact that when the enemy made its first charge against them, they were forced to retreat back up a slope that was too narrow in places to accommodate them, thus restricting their movement.

26 Then God sent down His Tranquility upon His Messenger and upon the believers, and sent down hosts whom you saw not, and punished those who disbelieved. And that is the recompense of the disbelievers.

27 Then thereafter God will relent unto whomsoever He will. And God is Forgiving, Merciful.

26–27 It is recorded that at the point in the battle when some of the army was retreating from the initial onslaught of the Hawāzin, the Prophet called to them, but his voice was drowned out by the din of the battle. Among the people at his side were his uncle ʿAbbās, who had a powerful voice, and they called out to the Emigrants and Helpers. They rallied to the Prophet, who it is said then picked up a handful of dust or pebbles—in an account similar to the one usually given in connection with the Battle of Badr (see 8:17c)—and threw it at the enemy, after which the tide of the battle turned and the Hawāzin and Thaḳīf were put to rout.

On His Tranquility, see 48:4c. Hosts whom you saw not is understood to refer to angels. The commentators record accounts of members of the enemy army, long after the battle, saying that before and during the battle they encountered men with white faces that struck terror into their hearts (R). As discussed in 3:124–26c, it is traditionally believed that the angels, if they participated in fighting at all, did so only at the Battle of Badr; one interpretation of the help they would give is to strengthen the hearts and resolve of the believers, or in the words of al-Rāzī, "To cast beautiful inspirations into their hearts."

28 O you who believe! The idolaters are surely unclean; so let them not come near the Sacred Mosque after this year of theirs. If you fear poverty, God will enrich you from His Bounty if He will. Truly God is Knowing, Wise.

28 Unclean renders najas, a term usually understood in Islamic Law to refer to ritual impurity that would prevent one, for example, from touching a physical copy of the Quran or performing the prayer. The idolaters are surely unclean is literally “The idolaters are an uncleanliness,” which the commentators understand to mean “characterized by uncleanliness” (R). For some this means that, since the idolaters do not purify themselves through ablutions as the believers do, they were unclean. Others interpret it to mean that they were to be shunned as unclean things are shunned, in the sense that their false belief is, at the spiritual level, a kind of filth (R). Jurists offer different opinions regarding the restrictions against the idolaters: some limit the scope of this verse to preventing the idolaters from visiting the Ka[‘]bah and its environs (the ḥaram), while others would prohibit any non-Muslim from entering any mosque at all, although this is a minority opinion (Q, R).

Some commentators believe that this verse was revealed in the ninth year of the hijrah, after the conquest of Makkah and the same year when it is reported that the Prophet sent [‘]Alī ibn Abī Ṭālib to announce to the idolaters that they were no longer to return to perform the pilgrimage in Makkah (Q, R; see 9:1–4c). Others say that rather the time of the revelation was the tenth year (Q).

If you fear poverty is understood to mean that some Muslims expressed concern over the loss of trade and gifts from those who came from outside Makkah for the pilgrimage (Q, R, Ṭ). According to some commentators, the imposition of the indemnity (jizyah) on non-Muslim treaty holders (see v. 29) was a kind of compensation for the loss of this income (Q).

29 Fight those who believe not in God and in the Last Day, and who do not forbid what God and His Messenger have forbidden, and who follow not the Religion of Truth among those who were given the Book, till they pay the jizyah with a willing hand, being humbled.

29 Some commentators connect this verse with the Tabūk expedition. The period after the Battle of Ḥunayn corresponded with the final defeat of the Persians by the Byzantines. The former retreated from Syria and Egypt, and the Byzantine emperor Heraclius returned the True Cross to Jerusalem. Word began to reach the Prophet that the Byzantines were planning a major offensive against the now increasingly powerful Islamic polity and had enlisted the Arab tribes of Ghassān, Lakhm, Judham, and ʿĀmilah, who occupied the buffer zone in the Levant between the Arabian Peninsula and the Byzantine and Persian empires. The Prophet mustered the largest army that had yet taken the field and marched north on the Syrian campaign. The army remained in Tabūk, on the road to Syria and situated to the east of the Gulf of ʿAqabah, for twenty days, but the rumors of the Byzantine force gathered against the Muslims were unfounded, or they decided not to take the field after having heard of the size of the Prophet’s army.

Al-Rāzī, among the major commentators, devotes the most attention to this verse’s description of the People of the Book, especially as being those who do not believe in God and in the Last Day, noting that both Jews and Christians claim to affirm belief in both God and the Hereafter. The Quran itself states in 3:113–14: Among the People of the Book is an upright community who recite God’s signs in the watches of the night, while they prostrate. They believe in God and the Last Day, enjoin right and forbid wrong, and hasten unto good deeds. Also, with regard to the Christians, the Quran states in 5:82: That is because among them are priests and monks, and because they are not arrogant.

Al-Rāzī mentions that Muslim theologians themselves occupy a range of positions regarding fundamental matters of belief, such as the ontological status of the Attributes of God and the scope of human free will. By doing so, he also acknowledges that the criticisms directed at Jews and Christians for certain aspects of their belief can be equally directed at certain theological positions within the Islamic spectrum. This is significant because, according to the Quran’s own attestation and the claims of these communities themselves, they (or at least some of them) believe in God and in the Day of Judgment. However, in al-Rāzī’s view those People of the Book who can truthfully be said to believe in God and in the Last Day still fall under the legal status (ḥukm) set out by this verse—namely, being fought until they enter into a treaty and pay an indemnity; he sees no legal reason to distinguish between them, noting, “These [who believe in God] do not fall under [the description of] this verse, but the requirement of the indemnity holds for them since it is said that, when an indemnity is required for some of them one says the same for all of them, since no one [that is, no jurist] holds the view that there is a separation.” That is to say, he relies on the absence of any legal opinion to the contrary, while acknowledging that some People of the Book are not those defined by this verse. This interpretation characterizes much of the mainstream of Islamic legal opinion on the matter.

Though this verse speaks of people among those who were given the Book, the Quran also mentions “those who were given the Book” both to praise certain Jews and Christians (e.g., 6:20, 114; 13:36; 29:47) and to criticize some of them (e.g., 2:101; 145; 3:100, 186). Thus the mere fact of their identity as People of the Book cannot be the single decisive reason why they should be fought.

Al-Samarqandī glosses do not forbid by saying, “what is [forbidden] in the Torah, the Gospel, and the Quran,” while al-Zamakhsharī quotes an opinion that interprets do not forbid to mean, “They do not act in accordance with what is in the Torah and Gospel.” However, many commentators read this verse as saying that they are not Muslims and that they reject the Prophet (IK).

Jizyah means the rendering of a thing owed (Ṭ) and as a legal matter amounts to an indemnity or tribute from non-Muslim communities residing within the Islamic state with whom Muslims have a treaty. Such treaty holders paid this indemnity, but were exempt from paying the alms (zakāh) or contributing to military defense, as Muslims were obliged to do; jurists disagreed as to the precise amount of the indemnity and the method of payment. Here with a willing hand renders ‘an yad (lit. “from/for/at hand”), which some interpret to mean that they should pay directly, without intermediary and without delay (R). Others say that it refers to its reception by Muslims and means “generously” as in “with an open hand,” since the taking of the jizyah is a form of munificence that averted a state of conflict (Q, R, Z).

Some interpret being humbled (wa hum ṣāghirūn) to mean that the treaty holders should render the indemnity in a state of humility, but some say that the very fact of paying the indemnity is tantamount to this “being humbled” or “being the minor party” (R). Though the practice of forcing the treaty holders to pay the indemnity in a humbled manner was not unknown in Islamic history, many jurists, such as al-Nawawī, pointed out that the Prophet and Caliphs never did so and said that the treaty people’s indemnity should be received with gentleness, as one would receive payment of a debt. ‘Umar ibn al-Khaṭṭāb reportedly agreed to call the indemnity “charity” (ṣadaqah) when asked to change its name from jizyah.

“Those from whom an indemnity is acceptable” is a phrase often used to describe those peoples who are also known as ahl al-dhimmah, or “treaty peoples.” As noted in 9:8c, dhimmah lexically means “treaty” or “pact” (‘ahd), and Jews and Christians are often referred to as having the status of “covenant holder” (mu‘āhid), which is synonymous with dhimmī. In general there have been two primary ways in which non-Muslim communities have been considered treaty holders. Some non-Muslim groups lived in territory directly under the rule of Muslims, paying the indemnity, but retaining considerable autonomy as to their own affairs; this was the case for Jews and Christians in Jerusalem under ʿUmar ibn al-Khaṭṭāb and indeed throughout history well into the modern period in the Ottoman Empire and elsewhere. In the other main type of arrangement, treaty holders governed their own territory, but, according to treaty stipulations, paid the jizyah and provided no help to any enemy of the Muslims; in return, the Muslim community offered protection to the treaty holders. Examples of this include the Prophet’s arrangement with the people of Bahrain, who were Zoroastrians, and with the Christians of Najrān. In neither arrangement were the treaty holders required to provide military support to the Muslim polity, but pay only the indemnity (jizyah).

Jews and Christians are universally accepted to be “those from whom the jizyah is acceptable,” and to this group most add Zoroastrians. Some jurists, such as Sufyān al-Thawrī, Abū Ḥanīfah, and Mālik (Q), are of the opinion that an indemnity can be accepted from any member of any religious community whatsoever; the only exception in this case are those who had apostatized or seceded from the Islamic polity (Q). Also, many make an exception for the idolatrous Arabs, for whom the paying of the indemnity and existence as a treaty people was not an option (Q); of course, after the time of the Prophet this question became moot. See also the essay “Conquest and Conversion, War and Peace in the Quran.”

30 The Jews say that Ezra is the son of God, and the Christians say that the Messiah is the son of God. Those are words from their mouths. They resemble the words of those who disbelieved before. God curse them! How they are perverted!

30 It is said that Ezra is the son of God was the opinion of one Jew, a certain Finḥāṣ ibn ʿĀzūrā, or that it was the belief of some Jews at one time, but that this belief eventually disappeared (R, Ṭ). Some mention an opinion that the Jews elevated the status of Ezra because of his role in restoring adherence to the Torah (Q, R). As to why the Christians considered Jesus the son of God, al-Rāzī, for example, speculates that they may have called him “son” by way of honor, the way Abraham is called God’s “friend” (khalīl; see 4:125), and that because of various sectarian conflicts they may have taken this idea to an extreme; on the question of Jesus as son of God, see 4:171; 5:17; 19:35. Words from their mouths is taken to mean that they are simply sounds with no meaning and therefore different from those that are supported by evidence and demonstration (Q). God curse them! renders a kind of interjection that, though it literally reads “God fight them!” acquired in Arabic

③① They have taken their rabbis and monks as lords apart from God, as well as the Messiah, son of Mary, though they were only commanded to worship one God. There is no god but He! Glory be to Him above the partners they ascribe.

31 According to one well-known ḥadīth, a Companion who was once Christian, upon hearing this verse, told the Prophet that Christians did not worship their religious authorities. The Prophet replied, “Did they not forbid what God permitted, whereupon you considered it forbidden, and did they not permit what God forbade, whereupon you considered it permissible?” He responded, “Yes.” The Prophet then said, “That is the worship offered to them.” This verse is noteworthy in seeing a possible conflict between excessive obedience to certain religious authorities and the sincere worship of the One God. For a discussion of the tension between obeying legitimate authority and obeying God, see 4:59c.

③② They desire to extinguish the Light of God with their mouths. But God refuses to do aught but complete His Light, though the disbelievers be averse.

③③ He it is Who sent His Messenger with guidance and the Religion of Truth to make it prevail over all religion, though the idolaters be averse.

32–33 These verses are similar to 61:8–9. Some understand Light of God to mean the remembrance of God (M), or the Quran (M, R), or knowledge of God and His Guidance; that is, the Prophet and the Quran were bringing the doctrine of God’s Oneness and the remembrance of Him, and the idolaters, because of their devotion to false gods, desired to extinguish that Light (M). Light is spoken of in many ways in the Quran, in connection with revelation (e.g., 5:15, 44; 7:157), guidance (e.g., 39:22; 42:52), knowledge (e.g., 13:16), the Prophet (33:48), and others; see especially 24:35, the famous Light Verse, in which God himself is described in terms of light.

Prevail over renders ḡahara ‘alā, which can also mean to manifest, show, or make something known (R). Moreover, all religion can also be understood as “all religions” or “[the peoples] of all religions” (M). The beginning of v. 33 could thus be rendered, “He it is Who sent His Messenger with guidance and the Religion of Truth to make it known to all religions.” This would complement the notion that the community of Islam was put on earth to be witnesses for mankind (2:143; 22:78), meaning that their justice and faith would be witnessed by humanity as evidence of the truth of religion (see 2:143c; 22:78c). Some interpret this to mean that no part of the Religion of Truth will remain hidden (Q). That is, since there are those who desire to extinguish the Light of God with their mouths and thus make His religion hidden, God will instead cause His religion to appear and be made manifest through the proofs and evidences that show Islam and the Prophet to be true, such as the miracles of the Prophet and the inimitability of the Quran despite the fact that the Prophet was unlettered (R).

Some say that prevail refers to victory and conquest, but is restricted to the Arabian Peninsula (M, Q, Th). This seems to be in part because the commentators saw that they in fact had not achieved victory over the whole world. Al-Rāzī raises the theological problem that if this verse is read as a prediction, then it is one that has not been fulfilled, and this could not be, since it is the Word of God that predicted it. For others, it can be said to refer to the preeminence of the Religion of Truth on the Day of Judgment (M).

Some opinions mention that this verse refers to the end of time when the Mahdī will return, or when Jesus will return (Q, Ṭ, Ṭs). Another interpretation is that the pronoun it refers in fact to the Prophet, so that the phrase would be rendered “He it is Who sent His Messenger with guidance and the Religion of Truth to make all religion known to him,” meaning to make known all the laws and teachings of religion to the Prophet (Q, Z). It can also be read, “to make him [the Prophet] known to [the peoples] of all religions through proof and evidence” (M, Q).

34 O you who believe! Verily many of the rabbis and monks consume the wealth of people falsely, and turn from the way of God. [As for] those who hoard gold and silver and spend it not in the way of God, give them glad tidings of a painful punishment,

34 See v. 31. This verse is understood to mean that the religious leaders collect money from people in the name of religion, but use it for worldly purposes (Q) or that they engage in acts of bribery and corruption (R). Turn from the way of God can mean both that they hinder others and that they themselves turn away. Al-Rāzī notes that many of the rabbis and monks are reproached here, but not all.

35 on the Day when it will be heated in the Fire of Hell, and their foreheads, their sides, and their backs will be branded with it. “This is what you hoarded up for yourselves; so taste that which you hoarded.”

35 It will be heated refers to the gold and silver mentioned in the previous verse. “Tasting” denotes the direct experience of something and is used elsewhere in the Quran in connection with those who will experience directly the pains of the Hereafter (e.g., 10:52; 22:9; 29:55). Being punished by the wealth one hoarded in life is also mentioned in 3:180: On the Day of Resurrection they will be collared by that with which they were miserly. It is said that, hearing gold and silver described this way, some of the Companions asked which type of wealth they should prefer to own, to which the Prophet responded, “A tongue that remembers, a heart that is thankful, and a believing spouse that will help you in your religion.”

36 Truly the number of months in the Eyes of God is twelve months, [laid down] in the Book of God, the day He created the heavens and the earth. Of them four are sacred. That is the upright religion. So wrong not yourselves during them. And fight the idolaters all together, just as they fight you all together. And know that God is with the reverent.

37 Truly the nasī' is but an increase in disbelief, whereby the disbelievers go astray. They make it lawful one year and forbid it another, in order to reconcile it with the number made sacred by God, thus making lawful that which God has forbidden. The evil of their deeds is made to seem fair unto them, but God guides not the disbelieving people.

36–37 The sacred months are Dhu'l-Qa'dah, Dhu'l-Hijjah, Muḥarram, and Rajab, which are the eleventh, twelfth, first, and seventh months of the lunar calendar. A ḥadīth often cited in this context states, “O people! Truly time has come round to its state when God created the heavens and the earth. The year is twelve months, and of them four are sacred, three of which are consecutive, Dhu'l-Qa'dah, Dhu'l-Hijjah, Muḥarram, and Rajab, which is between Jumādā and Sha'bān." During them, in wrong not yourselves during them, is interpreted by some to mean during those four months and by others to mean during all the months (Ṭ). Others read the preposition differently: "Wrong not yourselves concerning them" is understood to refer to the manipulation of the months, which is condemned in v. 37.

Fight the idolaters all together is understood to mean that the believers should be united when fighting them (R). According to some, this injunction constitutes permission to fight them during all twelve months, but others say that such a reading goes against the import of this verse; see commentary on 2:217, They ask thee about the sacred month—about fighting therein.

Naṣīṭ literally means "postponement," but can also mean "addition" (R). There is no unanimity regarding what this condemned practice was. In most accounts, however, it refers to the practice of intercalation, where an extra lunar month was inserted into the calendar so that certain months (especially the month of Dhu'l-Hijjah, when the pilgrimage took place) would fall in the same season by fixing the lunar year within the solar year, making the calendar more conducive to trade and travel (R). This seemed necessary because the twelve-month lunar calendar is approximately eleven days shorter than the solar year. The intercalated month allowed the lunar month to keep pace with the solar year, rather than allowing the lunar months to move through the seasons by ten or eleven days per solar year. Muslims consider the prohibition of intercalation to preserve fairness among the followers of a worldwide religion where different geographic locations have longer or shorter days depending on the time of the solar year and results in rites such as the fast of Ramadan occurring throughout the solar year (i.e., shorter and longer days) over the course of one's lifetime and making the journey of the ḥajj easier for some and more difficult for others. By following intercalation, Islam preserved justice among believers in the degree of ease in the performance of the various rites of the religion.

In other accounts, the "postponement" is considered to pertain to the status of the sacred months insofar as they were those months in which fighting was forbidden. In one account, the status of Muḥarram (the first lunar month) as sacred or "forbidden" would be postponed, and Ṣafar (the second month) would be made "forbidden" instead (Ṭ). According to another account, this status of being forbidden would cycle through a different month each year (Q). It is reported that when Abū Bakr led the first pilgrimage after the conquest of Makkah, the manipulation of the months had brought them back to their proper places, and this is what was meant when the Prophet stated, “O people! Truly time has come round to its state when God created the heavens and the earth” (Q, ٢). They make it lawful one year and forbid it another would thus refer to the manipulation of the legal status of the months from year to year, which always tried to keep the number of sacred or forbidden months at four in order to reconcile it with the number made sacred by God.

In another account, it is said that the idolaters would make pilgrimage for two years in each of the months of the year, and that at the pilgrimage of Abū Bakr it had cycled back to its rightful place (Q). This would seem to be a version of intercalation, since two years in every lunar month would roughly correspond to keeping the pilgrimage in the same season. Al-Qurṭubī prefers an account that describes an explicit insertion of days into the calendar beyond the twelve months, and he believes this is why the verse emphasizes that the number of months is twelve, not twelve plus a number of extra days.

Whereby the disbelievers go astray can also be read, “And the disbelievers misguide [others] thereby” (R).

38 O you who believe! What ails you, that when it is said unto you, “Go forth in the way of God,” you sink down heavily to the earth? Are you content with the life of this world over the Hereafter? Yet the enjoyment of the life of this world, compared with the Hereafter, is but a little.

38 It is said that this verse and the following verse relate to those people who stayed behind when the Prophet led the Companions on the expedition to Tabūk in 9/631 after the conquest of Makkah; see 9:29c. According to some commentators, some of the tribes did not wish to participate in the campaign with the Prophet, owing to the heat, the distance, the expense required for the preparations for such a distance, and fear of the Byzantine army (R). Sink down heavily renders a verb whose root means literally to be heavy or sluggish, but that can also evoke the sense of being lazy or finding something too troubling to attempt. Reproach for those who prefer this world to the Hereafter is also mentioned in 14:3 and 16:107, while the comparative good of the Hereafter over this world is affirmed throughout the Quran, as in 13:26: Yet compared to the Hereafter, the life of the world is but [fleeting] enjoyment. On this subject, see 87:16–17c. As a spiritual allegory, this verse addresses the soul that through inertia shrinks from the demands of the spiritual life and the struggles it entails and prefers the life of this world to the life of the Hereafter (Aj).

39 If you go not forth, He will punish you with a painful punishment, and will place another people in your stead, and you will not harm Him in the least. And God is Powerful over all things.

39 The punishment was that God would withhold rain from them (Q), though others say this verse refers to an unknown punishment to come in the Hereafter (R). The replacement of one people with another is also mentioned in 5:54; 21:11; 36:81–82; 44:28; 46:33; 47:38; 55:60–61. Here it is thought to refer to God’s ability to support the Prophet with other people who would not stay at home when he left on a campaign (IK, T).

40 If you help him not, yet God has already helped him. Remember when those who disbelieved expelled him, the second of the two. Yea, the two were in the cave, when he said to his companion, “Grieve not; truly God is with us.” Then God sent down His Tranquility upon him, and supported him with hosts you see not. And He made the word of those who disbelieve to be the lowliest, and the Word of God is the highest. And God is Mighty, Wise.

40 According to some commentators this was the first verse of this sūrah in the chronological order of revelation (Q). It refers to an incident during the hijrah, when the Prophet and Abū Bakr were making their way from Makkah to Madinah with the hostile Makkans giving chase. The Makkans had resolved to assassinate the Prophet as a group, thus sharing responsibility and forcing the Prophet’s clan to accept blood money rather than retaliate (on blood money and retaliation, see 2:178c). They waited outside the Prophet’s house in ambush, but did not notice that he had left, leaving ʿAlī ibn Abī Ṭālib, the Prophet’s young cousin, sleeping in the Prophet’s bed. Having slipped away unnoticed, the Prophet joined Abū Bakr and headed south rather than northward toward Madinah. They entered a cave, having arranged for news to be brought to them and for their tracks to be hidden by a local shepherd. At one point they were nearly discovered, but according to traditional accounts they were protected by God for, when the searchers inspected the track leading to the cave, they noticed a spider’s web covering the entrance as well as two doves that had come and laid eggs in a nest at the mouth of the cave. Taking these facts as an indication that no one had entered the cave for some time, they moved on without looking inside. According to another account, Abū Bakr said, “O Messenger of God, if one of them were to look beneath his feet, he would see us!” The entrance to the cave (which is still extant) is very low, and one has to stoop to enter it. According to another ḥadīth the Prophet said, “O Abū Bakr, what dost thou think of two whose third is God?”

On His Tranquility (sakīnah), see 48:4c. According to one reading, upon him refers to Abū Bakr, because he was anxious about the fate of the Prophet (R), while the him in supported him refers to the Prophet; or both pronouns refer to the Prophet (Q). Hosts you see not is thought to be a reference to the angels of Badr (see 3:124–26c; 8:9–10c; 8:12c). Some read And He made the word . . . is the highest as “And He made the word of those who disbelieve to be the lowliest and the Word of God to be the most sublime” (Q). The word of those who disbelieve is understood to mean the ascription of partners to God, while the Word of God is the testimony of faith, “There is no god but God” (lā ilāha illa’Llāh; Q, Ṭ).

④1 Go forth in the way of God, lightly or heavily, and strive with your wealth and yourselves in the way of God. That is better for you, if you but knew.

41 Lightly or heavily can mean being either reluctant or eager, or lightly or heavily armed, or young or old (Ṭ), or poorly or well equipped, or rich or poor (Q, Ṭ). Al-Ṭabarī says that it means whether it is easy or difficult.

④2 Were it something ephemeral nearby or an easy journey, they would have followed thee. But the trek was too great for them. And they will swear by God, “If we had been able, we would have gone out with you.” They destroy themselves, and God knows that they are liars.

42 Something ephemeral (‘arad) means here a fleeting, worldly good (R). It is said that If we had been able, we would have gone out with you was spoken by hypocrites after the expedition to Tabūk (R), resembling those hypocrites described in 3:167 in connection with the Battle of Uḥud: Had we known there would be fighting, we would have followed you; and also in 24:53: And they swear by God with their most solemn oaths, that wert thou to command them, they would surely go forth. Such disingenuous oaths are also mentioned in vv. 42, 62, 74, 95, 107. Like other verses dealing with combat, this verse also possesses meaning as a spiritual allegory for those who are lax in their spiritual life and do not journey in search of knowledge and understanding (Aj).

④③ God pardon thee! Why didst thou grant them leave before it became clear to thee who spoke the truth and who the liars were?

43 Grant them leave means gave them permission to remain behind from the expedition to Tabūk (Ṭ). Many believe that this verse was abrogated by 24:62: So when they ask thy leave in some matter of theirs, give thou leave unto whomsoever thou wilt. Others, however, argue that the permission that was given was for them to participate, but that there would have been no good in their participation, as described in v. 47, had they gone forth with thee, it would have increased thee in naught but troubles (R). Another interpretation is that the Prophet gave them leave to stay behind, but this allowed their hypocrisy to remain hidden rather than becoming clear through their conduct later.

④④ Those who believe in God and the Last Day ask of thee no leave from striving with their wealth and their selves. And God knows the reverent.

④⑤ Only they ask leave of thee who believe not in God and the Last Day, whose hearts are in doubt, and so they waver in their doubt.

44-45 These two verses provide a contrast between the response of sincere believers and that of hypocrites; the former seek no excuses to stay behind and the latter ask leave to remain behind, as described in vv. 42-43 (Q). Whose hearts are in doubt is interpreted to refer to the hypocrites whose faith was not true (Ṭ).

46 And had they desired to go forth, they would have made some preparations for it. But God was averse to their being sent forth; so He held them back, and it was said unto them, “Stay back with those who stay back.”

46 If the hypocrites had truly desired to go out to fight, they would have been ready and not offered the excuses mentioned in v. 42 (Q). Those who stay back (qā'id) is literally “those who sit [out],” referring to women, children, and the infirm, who were not required to fight (Q, Ṭ). God held them back through their own cowardice (Q). Stay back with those who stay back is understood to have been spoken by either the Prophet, God, or even those who stay back to each other (Q, R).

47 And had they gone forth with thee, it would have increased thee in naught but troubles. And they would have hurried about in your midst, seeking to incite discord among you. And among you are some who hearken to them. And God knows the wrongdoers.

47 Troubles renders khubāl, which can also be interpreted to mean confusion, disquiet, and disunity. Some who hearken to them is read by some to mean, “those who convey them news,” literally, “those who cause them to hear,” meaning that among the Muslims there were those who brought news of the Prophet to the hypocrites (Q, R).

48 And indeed they sought to incite trials earlier, and turned thee over in their minds, until the truth came and the Command of God was manifest, though they were averse.

48 They sought to incite trials earlier, that is, before their true state became apparent (Q) or before the Tabūk expedition (R). They turned thee over in their minds means that they plotted against the Prophet (Q), an idiom that refers to pondering or brooding over someone’s situation.

49 And among them some say, “Grant me leave, and tempt me not.” Nay, they have fallen into temptation. And truly Hell encompasses the disbelievers.

49 Tempt me not is interpreted to mean that the hypocrites did not wish to be subject to the difficulties of the expedition or that they feared what would happen to their property while they were away (R). They have fallen into temptation means that they are already in a state of disobedience and sin (Q).

50 If some good befalls thee, it troubles them. But if some affliction befalls thee, they say, “We already took precautions beforehand,” and they turn away, exulting.

50 Some good (cf. 3:120) is usually interpreted to mean victories or spoils, and some affliction, defeat on the battlefield (Q, R). We already took precautions means that they consider any misfortune that befalls the Prophet to be evidence of their own wisdom in failing to support him (R); on this issue see 4:71–73c.

51 Say, “Naught befalls us, save that which God has decreed for us. He is our Master, and in God let the believers trust.”

51 That which God has decreed is what God has “prescribed” or “written” (kataba; cf. 2:187; 5:21; 6:12, 54; 58:21; 59:3). This is understood by some to mean that it is inscribed in the Preserved Tablet (85:22) and that this “writing” refers to one’s fate or destiny as determined by God beyond time; see 54:49c and the essay “The Quran and Schools of Theology and Philosophy.”

52 Say, “Do you anticipate that aught will befall us save one of the two best things? But we anticipate for you that God will afflict you with a punishment from Him, or by our hands. So wait! Truly we are waiting along with you.”

52 The two best things are understood to be either victory in this world or defeat and death in this world, which nevertheless lead to felicity in the Hereafter when one dies in the way of God; the two are two triumphs, one in this world and one in the next (R, Ṭ). Moreover, argues al-Rāzī, those who act with courage live with dignity and self-respect, while the hypocrites have to suffer from their own cowardice. A punishment from Him can be in either this world or the Hereafter; by our hands means punishment in this world, but as a result of their own evil actions (R). The message that the believers will wait along with their opponents is also mentioned in 6:158; 7:71; 10:20, 102; 11:122; 20:135; 32:30.

53 Say, “Spend willingly or unwillingly; it shall never be accepted from you. Truly you are an iniquitous people.”

53 This verse can mean either that the Prophet will not accept from them what they spend or that what they spend will not be considered worthy of acceptance in the Eyes of God (R). According to some, this verse refers to those who wished to stay behind, but told the Prophet they would give money to support him (R). Elsewhere willingly or unwillingly appears in connection with the worship of God by all of creation; some worship on the basis of the exercise of free will and most of the rest of creation worships through its very being, without having a choice (see 3:83c; 13:15c; 41:11c). The phrase can also refer only to human beings and mean “obediently or grudgingly.”

54 And naught prevented their spending from being accepted from them, save that they disbelieved in God and in His Messenger, and only come to the prayer lazily, and only spend reluctantly.

54 Performing the prayer lazily is also an attribute of the hypocrites as described in 4:142. Some commentators see in this verse proof that the apparent good deeds of disbelievers, such as maintaining family relations and feeding the poor, would be by themselves of no avail to them in the Hereafter (Q, R). When ‘Ā’ishah asked the Prophet whether the filial piety and charity of a certain man would benefit him, the Prophet responded, “It will not benefit him. Not on a single day did he say, ‘My Lord, forgive me my sins on the Day of Judgment.’” Al-Qurṭubī, however, argues that God does reward people without faith in this world, citing 17:18: Whosoever would desire the ephemeral, We hasten for him therein whatsoever We will for whomsoever We desire.

55 And let not their wealth or their children impress thee. God desires but to punish them thereby in the life of this world, and that their souls should depart while they are disbelievers.

55 Wealth and children (cf. v. 70) are often mentioned as desirable in this world (18:46), and those who possess them often feel superior to those who do not (34:35; 68:14), but they will not avail anyone with God (3:10; 58:17). To punish them thereby is understood by some to mean that they will be forced to part with some of their wealth through being forced to give alms (Q, Ṭ). Others read the verse to mean, “And let not their wealth or their children impress thee—God desires to punish them thereby—in the life of this world,” by which they understand that the punishment would come in the Hereafter, and in the life of this world refers to the domain in which they possess wealth and children (Q). This latter opinion, however, would seem to contradict the plain sense of the verse, especially since it concludes with an allusion to souls departing.

It is also possible, however, to read this verse in light of 8:28 and 64:15: Your property and your children are only a trial for you; and also 63:9: Let neither your property nor your children divert you from the remembrance of God; that is, wealth and children only cause some people to drift farther away from God, thus leading to their disbelief and eventual punishment. Furthermore, seen on a more spiritual level, attachment to the things of this world is itself a form of suffering, and those who possess such things in abundance without acknowledging that they come from God also live with a desperate fear of losing them, having struggled so hard to attain them (R). This verse is also interpreted by some as part of God’s “plot” concerning the hypocrites and disbelievers (see 8:30c), allowing them to clear the path, as it were, for their own suffering and punishment (IK, Qu).

56 And they swear by God that truly they are of you, but they are not of you. Rather, they are a fearful people.

56 On empty oaths of allegiance, see 9:42c; 24:53; 35:42. That the hypocrites are fearful means, according to some, “They are fearful of you” (Ṭ), namely, of the believers and their political strength, though others say it simply means they are fearful of fighting alongside the Prophet (R).

57 Were they to find a refuge, or caves, or a place to enter, they would turn toward it defiantly.

57 The hypocrites would turn toward some places of hiding to escape if they could, because they are only reluctantly loyal to the Prophet (IK, Q). Some interpret refuge to mean a place like a mountaintop (Z) and note that caves renders a word whose root has the basic meaning of slipping or hiding away (Z). A place to enter is understood by some to mean an underground cave or well (IK, R). Defiantly here renders a word that is associated with a horse that breaks free from its rider and runs away at random, heedlessly, or a ship that is ungovernable by its crew.

58 And among them some reproach thee over the charitable offerings; if they are given thereof, they are content, but if they are not given thereof, behold, they are angry.

58 It is reported that this verse was revealed after a man came to the Prophet while he was distributing some property and said, “Be just, O Messenger of God.” The Prophet said, “Woe unto you! Who shall be just if I am not just?” (Q). Other accounts describe similar accusations against the Prophet for being unjust in his apportioning (Ṭ). The fact that people are content when they receive wealth, but are angered when denied it shows that they are selfish in their concern and not driven by a sense of justice (R). On a spiritual level, this verse is interpreted to mean that truly sincere individuals should find contentment in God regardless of what they receive, as there is no difference between hypocrites and those whose happiness depends on being given what they want (Aj).

59 If only they had been content with what God and His Messenger gave them, and said, “God suffices us. God will give unto us from His Bounty, as will the Messenger. Truly our desire is for God.”

59 This verse describes the attitude that should be taken by the Prophet’s sincere Companions (R). For al-Rāzī, it describes the proper attitude of desiring the bounty of the world insofar as it leads to God, not for its own sake. That God suffices us is also mentioned in 3:173; 8:62; 8:64; 9:129; on the “sufficiency” provided by God, see 2:137c; 3:173c. That one’s “desire” be for God is also found in 94:8: And let thy desire be for thy Lord.

60 The charitable offerings are only for the poor, and the indigent, and those working with them, and those whose hearts are [to be] reconciled, and for [ransoming] slaves and for debtors, and in the way of God, and for the traveler: a duty from God. And God is Knowing, Wise.

60 Charitable offerings renders ṣadaqāt (sing. ṣadaqah), which is understood by some to refer to the mandatory alms (R). Al-Rāzī reasons this is so because the verse limits it to certain categories, whereas voluntary charity can be given for many other purposes, such as building mosques and schools. Moreover, since the administrators of the charitable offerings are entitled to a share (see below), it is not interpreted as being voluntary charity. Al-Rāzī discusses this question because, as a matter of terminology, the mandatory alms are usually called zakāh, while voluntary charity is called ṣadaqah, but this verse and others, such as 9:103, Take thou a charitable offering from their wealth, suggest that the two terms are not mutually exclusive in the Quran, though as Islamic Law developed, zakāh and ṣadaqah came to have distinct meanings.

There are disagreements over the difference between the poor (faqīr) and the indigent (miskīn). According to some, the former refers to those who stand in some partial need, while the latter refers to those who have nothing, although some hold the reverse opinion (Q). Others have said that the former refers to needy Muslims, while the latter refers to the needy People of the Book (Q). Al-Qurṭubī quotes a ḥadīth that states that when the Prophet sent Mu‘ādh to Yemen, he told him, “Teach them that God has prescribed charity for them as it concerns their property, to be taken from the rich among them and given to the poor among them.”

Those working with them refers to those who administer and distribute the charity (Q). Those whose hearts are [to be] reconciled refers to new Muslims who, for various reasons, were not necessarily financially needy, but who nevertheless were given certain payments (Q). According to some they were a class of disbelievers who were given money, so that they would be “joined to” or reconciled with Islam; others say they were a group who had become Muslim outwardly (see 49:14), but who had not yet reached a level of certainty in their hearts. Another opinion holds that they were followers of the leading idolaters, but followers who might be swayed to join or be reconciled with Islam. Some believe it refers to Christians or Jews who become Muslim (Ṭ). For yet others it refers to the notables of certain tribes whose loyalty needed to be cemented after the Battle of Ḥunayn (R). According to al-Qurṭubī, these groups are similar in that they are all groups in which Islam was not firmly established unless their members received some kind of payment. According to some jurists after the early period, when Islam became strong, there was no longer a need for payment to those whose hearts needed to be “reconciled,” but others deemed that this practice could resume as circumstances demanded (Q, R, Ṭ).

[Ransoming] slaves refers to purchasing slaves, using funds from the alms for the purposes of manumission (Q). Debtors refers to those people who are so indebted as to be unable to fulfill their obligations, for example, because their home or source of income was destroyed by natural disaster (Ṭ). Al-Qurṭubī notes a ḥadīth concerning a man who was buried under debt, and the Prophet said, “Give him charity.” So people donated money to him, but it was not sufficient to cover his obligations. The Prophet then said to his creditors, “Take what you have found, for you shall have no more than that.” In the Quran in the way of God is used in connection with actions or efforts taken for the sake of God or for one’s religion. Traveler refers to a person cut off from any source of income because of being far away from home; such persons are to be helped even if they are wealthy in their home country (Q, Ṭ).

As a spiritual allegory this verse is interpreted to refer to the bestowal of spiritual blessings and illumination on the poor and indigent in spirit, those working for spiritual purposes, whose hearts are [to be] reconciled with their Beloved, who are debtors in giving all they have, who strive in the way of God against their souls, and who travel in search of knowledge (Aj).

61 And among them are those who torment the Prophet, and say, “He is an ear.” Say, “An ear that is good for you. He believes in God and he has faith in the believers, and he is a mercy to those among you who believe.” And [as for] those who torment the Messenger of God, theirs shall be a painful punishment.

61 He is an ear is an idiomatic expression used as an insult to imply that the Prophet was easily swayed by what he heard and had no resolve (R); being called an “ear,” al-Rāzī explains, is like calling a spy an “eye.” The accusation was that the Prophet was gullible, accepting whatever he heard (Q). According to some, there were those around the Prophet who said, “We say what we wish; then we swear to him and he believes us” (Ṭ). An ear that is good is understood to mean that he hears what is good, not what is evil (R, Z). Has faith in uses the same verb as believes, but with a different preposition. He has faith in the believers could also be rendered “He believes the believers”; that is, when the believers say something, he believes them (R, Ṭ), but he does not believe the hypocrites (Ṭ).

62 They swear by God to you, to please you. But God and His Messenger are worthier of being pleased by them, if they are believers.

62 They swear . . . to you, the believers, to please you; the second-person plural here denotes that it is the believers as a whole, not only the Prophet, to whom they swear. See also commentary on 2:14: And when they meet those who believe they say, “We believe.” For the repeated oaths sworn by the hypocrites mentioned in this sūrah (vv. 42, 74, 95, 107), see 9:42c.

63 Do they know not that whosoever opposes God and His Messenger, surely for him shall be the Fire of Hell, to abide therein? That is the great disgrace.

63 Hell as a disgrace represents the spiritual aspect of the punishment, while the Fire represents the physical aspect; on this topic, see 3:192c; 3:194c.

64 The hypocrites dread lest a sūrah be sent down against them, informing them of that which is in their hearts. Say, “Go on mocking. Truly God will bring forth what you dread.”

64 Some interpret this verse to mean that, although the hypocrites did not believe that the Prophet was truthful, they nevertheless had previously experienced his ability to know their secret thoughts and their mockery of him and thus feared that this would occur again (R). Or it means that they did have a certain level of faith, but they were too overcome by jealousy and obduracy to commit themselves fully to that faith. Al-Rāzī observes that envy can make one blind to even sensible objects. Mockery by the hypocrites is mentioned frequently in the Quran (e.g., 2:14–15; 4:140; 5:57–58; 6:5; 31:6; 45:9, 35).

65 And if thou askest them, they will surely say, “We were only engaging [in vain talk] and playing.” Say, “Is it God, His signs, and His Messenger you were mocking?”

65 In one account a hypocrite spoke disparagingly about the Prophet and the Quran, saying, “I have seen no people with more fearful hearts, falser tongues, or more cowardice in the field,” referring to the Prophet and the believers (R). A Companion went to tell the Prophet about this matter, but found that the Prophet already knew. Then the person who had mocked the Prophet came to him while he was riding and pleaded with him, saying that he and his friends were only passing the time and speaking idly. The Prophet then recited the verse that had recently been revealed, Is it God, His signs, and His Messenger you were mocking? and said and did no more (R, T).

66 Make no excuses. You disbelieved after having believed. If We pardon a group of you, We shall punish another group for having been guilty.

66 Some commentators interpret this verse to mean that mockery of the Prophet is tantamount to disbelief (kufr; R). Although some interpret these two groups to be those who initiated the mockery and those who passively listened and laughed along with it (R), others interpret it to mean that one group would sincerely repent and the other would not (Ṭ).

67 The hypocrites, men and women, are like unto one another, enjoining wrong, forbidding right, clutching their hands shut. They forgot God; so He forgot them. Truly the hypocrites are iniquitous.

67 The hypocrites . . . are like unto one another means “they are of their own kind”; that is, they are not to be counted among the believers (Ṭ, Z). Clutching their hands shut refers to their reluctance to take part in fighting (Q), or to their reluctance to spend and give in the way of God (Ṭ), or both. They forgot God by abandoning devotion to Him (Ṭ), so He forgot them by abandoning them and leaving them without guidance and compassion (Ṭ); or they forgot the remembrance of God, and God acted toward them like one who forgot them (IK). See also 45:34: And it will be said, “Today We forget you just as you forgot the meeting with this your Day.” Enjoining wrong, forbidding right is an inversion of the usual command in the Quran to enjoin right and forbid wrong (3:104, 110, 114; 7:157; 9:71, 112; 22:41; 31:17); on this important concept in Islamic ethics, see 3:104c.

68 Verily God has promised the hypocrites, men and women, and the disbelievers the Fire of Hell, to abide therein. It shall suffice them. God curses them, and theirs shall be a lasting punishment.

68 Cf. 4:55: And Hell suffices as a blazing flame!; and 58:8: Hell suffices them, burning therein. What an evil journey’s end! Commentators often note that in the Quran the curse of God upon persons refers to their being distanced from God; see 2:161c.

69 [Remember] those who were before you. They were mightier than you in power, and greater in wealth and children. So they enjoyed their share, and you enjoyed your share, just as those before you enjoyed their share. And you have engaged [in vain talk] as they engaged [in vain talk]. It is they whose deeds came to naught in this world and in the Hereafter, and it is they who are the losers.

69 On the subject of Muslims imitating the practices of the religious communities of the past, some commentators (IK, Q, T) mention a well-known ḥadīth that states, “By Him in Whose Hand lies my soul, you will follow the wonts of those who went before you, span by span, cubit by cubit, until, were one of them to enter the hole of a lizard, you would enter it also.” Their share is interpreted to mean their share in religion (IK, Q) or their share of the good of this world in general (R). The greater strength or wealth of previous generations are often mentioned in the Quran to demonstrate that such worldly superiority was ultimately of no benefit to them, as in 43:7–8: Yet never did a prophet come unto them, but that they mocked him. So We destroyed those greater than them in prowess, and the example of those of old has passed; and other verses such as 28:78; 30:9; 35:44; 40:21; 47:13; 50:36.

70 Has not the account come to them of those who were before them, the people of Noah, ʿĀd, and Thamūd, and the people of Abraham, the inhabitants of Midian, and the overthrown cities? Their messengers brought them clear proofs. God wronged them not, but themselves did they wrong.

70 Overthrown cities (cf. 53:53; 69:9) is generally thought to refer to cities that were destroyed, literally “turned upside down,” although some interpret overthrown to mean their change in state from good to evil (R). Though many commentators believe that this verse refers to the people of Lot, others say that it can refer to any people who were destroyed (Q). The ʿĀd were the people to whom the pre-Islamic Arabian prophet Hūd was sent, while the Thamūd were the people to whom God sent the prophet Ṣāliḥ. The inhabitants of Midian refers to the people of the prophet Shuʿayb. See 7:59–102 and Sūrah 11 for the stories of these prophets.

71 But the believing men and believing women are protectors of one another, enjoining right and forbidding wrong, performing the prayer, giving the alms, and obeying God and His Messenger. They are those upon whom God will have Mercy. Truly God is Mighty, Wise.

71 This verse in a sense mirrors the description of the hypocrites in v. 67. On enjoining right and forbidding wrong, see 3:104c. Protectors of one another also means friends or allies of one another (cf. 5:51; 8:72; 45:19). This verse is significant with regard to the spiritual and social standing of women (cf. 33:35), because it places upon them the same spiritual and social obligations placed on men, including moral authority and protection.

72 God has promised the believing men and the believing women Gardens with rivers running below, to abide therein, and goodly dwellings in the Gardens of Eden. But Contentment from God is greater; that is the great triumph!

72 On Gardens with rivers running below, see 2:25c. Gardens of Eden (‘adn; cf. 13:23; 16:31; 18:31; 19:61; 20:76; 35:33; 38:50; 40:8) is understood by commentators to refer to an especially exalted or blessed place in the Garden, variously described as the center of the Garden, the highest level of the Garden, a city whose palace is the Divine Throne, and a palace of gold in which only prophets, martyrs, and just rulers will reside (R, Q, Ṭ). Others see ‘adn not as the name of a place, but as an adjective modifying Gardens, meaning something like “Gardens in which to dwell” (Q, R). See also the essay “Death, Dying, and the Afterlife in the Quran.”

But Contentment (riḍwān) from God is greater places the spiritual reward of the Garden above its bodily dimension, because the life of the spirit is greater than the life of the body and striving to please God is superior to striving for a reward from Him, since all strive in some way for what benefits them (M). Many, however, consider riḍwān itself to be a name of the highest Paradise and not only a state. On the significance of God’s Contentment, see 3:15c; 5:119c.

73 O Prophet! Strive against the disbelievers and the hypocrites, and be harsh with them. Their refuge is Hell. What an evil journey’s end!

73 This verse is interpreted by some to mean that the Prophet should use force against the disbelievers and persuasion against the hypocrites (Ṭ). Others, such as al-Rāzī, note that there is nothing in the word strive that limits it to either the use of force or any other type of “striving,” meaning that depending on circumstances one can employ either the use of force or the power of persuasion (Q, R). Other verses that counsel harshness or sternness toward the disbelievers include 5:54; 9:123; 48:29; 66:9.

74 They swear by God that they said it not, but indeed they spoke the word of disbelief, and disbelieved after having submitted [to God]. And they had ambitions that they did not achieve, and they were vengeful only because God and His Messenger enriched them from His Bounty. If they repent, it would be better for them. But if they turn away, God will punish them with a painful punishment in this world and in the Hereafter, and on earth they shall have neither protector nor helper.

74 It is thought that they said it not refers to an insult made against the Prophet or believers by the hypocrites; in one version they are reported to have said, “If Muhammad is truthful, then we are worse than the donkeys we ride” (Q, Ṭ). They had ambitions refers, according to some, to an incident where ‘Abd Allāh ibn Ubayy said to the Anṣār (i.e., the native Madinans), “Our situation with Muhammad is as in the saying, ‘Fatten your dog, and he will eat you.’ If we return to Madinah [after the battle of Uḥud], the mighty will expel the lowly therefrom!” meaning that they should try to be rid of Muhammad and the outsiders he brought with him (Q, Ṭ). When word of this statement reached the Prophet, ‘Abd Allāh ibn Ubayy swore he did not say it. Others say that the description here applies to all hypocrites, not only to a particular case, and describes their general attitude toward the Prophet (Q). According to another account, it refers to an outright plan to assassinate the Prophet (R, Ṭ).

In connection with they were vengeful only because God and His Messenger enriched them some commentators mention the proverb, “Beware of the evil of one to whom you have done good” (Q). Enriched them refers, in one account, to the payment of blood money by the Prophet on behalf of one of the hypocrites (Ṭ).

75 And among them are those who make a pact with God [saying], “If He gives unto us from His Bounty, we will surely spend in charity, and we will surely be among the righteous.”

76 But when He gave unto them from His Bounty, they were miserly with it, and turned away in rejection.

75–76 As with other descriptions of the hypocrites in this sūrah, these verses are understood in a general sense, but some commentators also connect them with a certain Tha^labah ibn Ḥāṭib, who insisted that he would give charity if he had the means to do so. The Prophet gave him some wealth from the spoils of war; he prospered and his wealth grew, until he eventually left Madinah and settled in a nearby valley. He then began to attend only some of the prayers in congregation, and then only the Friday prayer, and finally he stopped attending altogether, all the while growing wealthier. When the giving of alms (zakāh) was instituted, functionaries were sent to collect it from him. He refused on the grounds that it was not charity, and that it was nothing but a kind of indemnity (jizyah). He refused again and again. Finally he met the Prophet, who said to him, “Woe unto you, Tha^labah!” (R, Ṭ).

77 So He requited them with hypocrisy in their hearts, till the Day they will meet Him, for having failed in that which they promised Him and for having lied.

77 Many commentators believe that the subject of the verb requited is God (R), though others understand the beginning of the verse to mean, “And it (the miserliness) caused the result in them of having hypocrisy in their hearts” (Q). Some commentators use this verse as an occasion to quote the ḥadīth in which the Prophet describes the four signs of the hypocrite: “When he is trusted, he betrays. When he speaks, he lies. When he promises, he reneges. And when he argues, he wrongs.”

78 Know they not that God knows their secret and their private discourse, and that God is Knower of things unseen?

78 Secret (sirr) can mean both the thing kept secret as well as the aspect of a thing that is hidden or mysterious. Private discourse (cf. 4:114; 17:47; 20:62; 21:3; 43:80; 58:7; 58:8, 10, 12, 13) renders najwā, referring to conversations held between confidants, in this case referring to the insults the hypocrites exchange with one another about the Prophet and the believers (Ṭ); see commentary on 58:7–8. Unseen in the Quran refers to things that are real but absent from sensory perception in the present moment or absent because they will occur or have occurred at a different moment in time or state of being; see 2:3c. Some commentators point out that virtuous and spiritual persons are the reverse of hypocrites; they are satisfied with what God gives them and worship and remember God when no one can see; their private discourse is worship, not mockery (Aj).

79 As for they who reproach those believers who give freely and those who have naught but their keep [to give], and ridicule them—God ridicules them, and theirs shall be a painful punishment.

79 Some commentators relate that this verse was revealed in connection with an incident when the Prophet encouraged the believers to give in charity, and several of the more affluent Companions gave large donations. A man of modest means came and gave half the dates he had earned the previous evening, keeping the other half for his family. Some of those who were present derided him for this, saying that God had no need of such a meager contribution and further claiming that he was doing it for show or to be counted in the company of the larger donors. About those who mocked the man of modest means, however, the Quran states God ridicules them (R, Ṭ). Keep renders juhd, which is understood to mean the way a person of modest means makes a living, or it can mean what a person strives to earn (Q, R). God's rebuke of those who ridicule is also mentioned in 2:15: God mocks them, and leaves them to wander confused in their rebellion.

80 Seek forgiveness for them, or seek not forgiveness for them. If thou seekest forgiveness for them seventy times, God will not forgive them. That is because they disbelieve in God and His Messenger. And God guides not iniquitous people.

80 It is reported that after this verse was revealed, the Prophet said he would then ask forgiveness for them in excess of seventy times (IK, Ṭ), at which point 63:6 was revealed: It is the same for them whether thou asketh forgiveness for them or thou asketh forgiveness for them not; God will never forgive them. Truly God guides not iniquitous people. This is also similar to 2:6: Truly it is the same for the disbelievers whether thou warnest them or warnest them not; they do not believe. The number seventy is often used to symbolize a very large number and does not always mean the exact number seventy (Q).

81 Those who were left behind exulted in staying back, opposing the Messenger of God, and were averse to striving with their wealth and with their selves in the way of God. And they said, “Go not forth in the heat.” Say, “The Fire of Hell is of a heat more intense,” if they but understood.

81 This verse refers to those who chose to stay behind when the Prophet went on the campaign to Tabūk (IK, Ṭ; see vv. 38–39). They said, “Go not forth” among themselves (Q), citing heat in addition to other reasons mentioned in 9:38c.

82 So let them laugh little and weep much, as a recompense for that which they used to earn.

82 Those who stayed behind will be forced to laugh little and weep much as a result of their experience of the Hereafter (Q, R), unlike the believers who weep from belief in God (in hope and fear) in this life (Q). Cf. 53:60: And do you laugh and not weep? In this context, some commentators (Q) mention the ḥadīth, “If you knew what I knew, you would laugh little and weep much.” In another ḥadīth the Prophet said, “Weep, and if you cannot weep, try to weep.”

83 And if God returns thee to a group of them, and they seek leave of thee to go forth, say, “You shall not go forth with me ever; nor shall you fight with me against any enemy. You were content to stay back the first time; so stay back with those who remain behind.”

83 If God returns thee from battle to a group of them, since not all who remained behind were hypocrites, they will seek leave to participate in upcoming battles (Q). But this verse prohibits them from taking part in future battles because the potential harm they would cause—perhaps through disruption or sabotage—would be too great (R), and they were to remain behind in Madinah, having been content to stay back the first time, mentioned in v. 38 (R).

84 And never pray over one of them who dies, nor stand by his grave. Truly they disbelieved in God and His Messenger and died iniquitous.

84 Pray over . . . them refers to the funeral rites, which consist of a modified form of the canonical prayer (ṣalāh) in which one stands for two units of prayer, but does not bow or prostrate, in the presence of the body prior to burial, which is positioned so that the face of the deceased faces Makkah. According to one account, the son of one of the leading hypocrites, °Abd Allāh ibn Ubayy, asked the Prophet if he would pray over his father and if his father could be buried using the Prophet’s garment as a shroud. The Prophet agreed to do both, but accounts differ over whether this verse was revealed before the prayer, preventing him from performing it, or after he had already done so (Q, Ṭ). Ibn °Ajībah observes that when a sincere servant of God dies, all beings including angels, jinn, and the creatures of the earth pray for that person, but when a person is distant from God, that body and spirit are spurned by all. This question is further discussed in vv. 113–15.

85 And let not their wealth or their children impress thee. God desires only to punish them thereby in this world, and that their souls should depart while they are disbelievers.

85 See commentary on the identical verse, v. 55. Al-Rāzī reasons that this verse is repeated for emphasis, because the attraction of property and children are among the strongest in the life of this world; he also believes that v. 55 referred to those hypocrites present when v. 55 was revealed, while this one refers to others.

86 And when a sūrah is sent down [saying], “Believe in God and strive with His Messenger,” the affluent among them ask thee for leave, and say, “Let us be among those who stay back.”

86 This passage returns to the theme of a group desiring to stay back while the Prophet led the believers on the Tabūk campaign (vv. 38–39). Here strive with His Messenger is understood to refer to going out to battle (Ṭ), and a sūrah is understood to refer to the present sūrah (R). The affluent refers to those among them who were rich, but others understand it to mean the leadership and those of influence among them (R). This verse constitutes a reproach because only those who had financial means and were physically able would have to ask to stay back if they did not want to join the campaign, since those lacking either one would necessarily be excused (R); see commentary on 9:91–92.

87 They are content to be among those who remain behind, and a seal is set upon their hearts. And so they understand not.

87 That they prefer to be among those who remain behind refers to their willingness to remain with the women, the children, and the sick (Ṭ), who were not required to fight (although some women did actually participate in battles with the Prophet). See also vv. 91–92 for those who are legitimately excused from battle. A seal is set upon their hearts (cf. 7:100; 10:74; 63:3) resembles other passages of the Quran in which the sealing or covering of the heart or the sight and hearing of disbelievers and hypocrites is frequently mentioned; see 2:7c; 2:88c.

88 But the Messenger and those who believe with him strive with their wealth and with their selves. And it is they who shall have good things, and it is they who shall prosper.

88 Good things renders khayrāt, understood to refer to the good things of both this world and the Hereafter (Q, R); the former are renown, a good reputation, and having others follow in one's footsteps, and one of the latter is the reward for one's good deeds (M). Elsewhere in the Quran (except in 55:70) the word khayrāt in its plural form refers to good deeds, so this could also refer to the fact that the believers will have good deeds, that is, the reward of good deeds. Some interpret it as a reference to the best women of Heaven mentioned in 55:70: Therein are good and beautiful ones (M, Q, R).

89 God has prepared for them Gardens with rivers running below, to abide therein. That is the great triumph.

89 On Gardens with rivers running below, see 2:25c. A great triumph is often used to describe the attainment of felicity in the Hereafter (e.g., 4:13, 73; 5:119; 9:72; 33:71; 37:60; 40:9; 44:57; 48:5; 57:12; 61:12; 64:9; 85:11).

90 Those seeking to be excused among the Bedouin came in order to be granted leave, while those who lied to God and His Messenger stayed back. A painful punishment shall befall those among them who disbelieve.

90 There is disagreement over whether the word rendered by seeking to be excused is read so that it would mean "making excuses," implying that they had no legitimate reason to be excluded from the fighting, or "with an excuse," meaning that they had good reason to stay behind (Q, R, Ṭ). The former reading is supported by a statement attributed to Ibn ʿAbbās that God curses those seeking to be excused in this verse (Q, R), thus grouping together some Bedouin with the Madinan hypocrites. According to the latter reading, the verse makes a distinction between those with a valid excuse and those who were simply lying (R).

91 No blame is there upon the weak, nor upon the sick, nor those who find nothing to spend, if they are sincere toward God and His

Messenger. There is no argument against the virtuous—and God is Forgiving, Merciful—

91 The weak includes old men or those with a physical impairment, and the sick includes those who suffer from blindness, lameness, or a chronic illness (R). Nothing to spend refers to those who cannot afford, either on their own or through another's support, the minimum equipment required to participate in a campaign (R). Al-Rāzī notes that this verse does not prohibit persons without means from offering whatever support they can, only that they cannot be blamed for not doing so.

To be sincere renders the verb form of naṣīḥah, which means both giving counsel and acting sincerely toward someone with the particular connotation of giving sincere counsel or advice. It is a word also used in connection with “repentance” (tawbah) to describe a true and faithful attitude of contrition. In this regard, al-Qurṭubī mentions a ḥadīth in which the Prophet said thrice, “Religion is naṣīḥah.” It was asked of him, “Unto whom?” He replied, “Unto God, His Book, His Messenger, and the leaders and society of Muslims.” It is a concept that encompasses being devoted to God and His Book and Messenger as well as giving good counsel to other human beings and desiring their well-being (Q).

There is no argument against renders an idiomatic phrase that literally translates, “There is no way/path against them,” meaning that they are not subject to blame for their inability to contribute (R).

92 nor upon those who, when they came to thee to give them a mount, and thou didst say to them, “I find nothing upon which to mount you,” turned back, their eyes flowing with tears, grieving that they found nothing to spend.

92 A group of Companions came to the Prophet hoping that he would have mounts to give them that would enable them to participate in the campaign with him, but he had none left to provide, and in their disappointment they walked away weeping profusely; differing accounts are recorded as to the identity of “the weepers” (Q, R, Ṭ). It is reported that, because of the distance and harsh conditions of the Tabūk expedition, each participant needed at least two mounts, one to ride and one for supplies (Q, R).

93 The argument falls only upon those who seek leave of thee though they are wealthy. They are content to be among those who remain behind, and God has set a seal upon their hearts. And so they know not.

93 The latter part of this verse closely resembles v. 87. God has set a seal is interpreted by some to be the very reason why those who chose to remain behind did not see the good in expending their wealth and energy in the way of God (R), though the plain sense would indicate that the seal was set upon their hearts as a punishment for their actions, and that as a result they were reduced or even barred in their capacity for faith and understanding. For the idea of the sealing of hearts as a punishment see 2:7c (cf. 2:17; 4:155; 7:100–101; 10:74; 16:108; 30:59; 40:35; 42:24; 45:23).

94 They will offer excuses to you when you return to them. Say, “Offer no excuses! We shall not believe you. God has already given us news of you. God and His Messenger will see your deeds. Then you will be brought back to the Knower of the Unseen and the seen, and He will inform you of that which you used to do.”

94 We shall not believe you could also be rendered “We shall not have faith in you” (see 9:61c for the use of this verb in relation to God and human beings). That is to say, they will never consider the hypocrites to be truthful (Q). The news of them that they were given by God refers to their intentions, which they thought had been kept secret (Q).

Brought back refers to being brought back for judgment in the Hereafter. That He will inform you of that which you used to do is a central part of the experience of the Hereafter and is mentioned in other verses (cf. 10:23; 29:8; 31:15). Unseen renders ghayb, referring to all that is not present to ordinary human sense perception at the present moment, either because it is far removed from us (in either space or time, i.e., is past or will happen in the future) or because it is intrinsically beyond physical perception, belonging to the metaphysical realm, which exists at a higher level of reality or state of being. The seen renders shahādah, literally, “witnessed” or “witnessing,” referring to what is present to sense perception. Knower of the Unseen and the seen could thus also be rendered “Knower of what is absent and what is present.” This phrase is also used of God in 6:73; 9:105; 13:9; 23:92; 32:6; 39:46; 59:22; 62:8; 64:18. These two terms are usually used together in the Quran and appear throughout Islamic literature.

95 They will swear by God to you, when you return to them, that you may turn away from them. So turn away from them. Truly, they are a defilement, and their refuge is Hell, a recompense for that which they used to earn.

95 What they will swear by God to you is implicit, understood to mean they will swear that they were unable to accompany the Prophet (Q). That you may turn away from them refers to the hypocrites’ desire that they not be openly blamed (Q) or have their inner thoughts exposed (Ṭ). They wanted the Prophet and the believers to turn away from them by way of pardon as reflected that you might be content with them in v. 96, but instead the Prophet and believers turned away from the hypocrites with severity (R). So turn away is a Command to the believers, and upon returning to Madinah from Tabūk the Prophet told the believers not to speak or keep company with those who had remained behind without a valid excuse (Q, R). That they are defilement may mean that their actions are filthy (Q) or that they themselves represent a kind of spiritual defilement due to their inner state (R); on rijs (“filth” or “defilement”), see 7:71c.

96 They swear to you, that you might be content with them. But though you may be content with them, God is not content with iniquitous people.

96 This verse indicates that even if the believers are satisfied with the promises of the hypocrites, God is not (R). On the theme of God’s Contentment, see 3:15c; 89:28c.

97 The Bedouin are more severe in disbelief and hypocrisy, and more liable not to know the limits [ordained] in what God has sent down unto

His Messenger. And God is Knowing, Wise.

97 Bedouin translates aʿrāb, referring to nomadic Arabs as opposed to sedentary residents of the towns, and here it refers specifically to the hypocrites among the former (R); see also v. 101. Limits [ordained] in what God has sent down refers to the obligations and prohibitions of Divine Law (Q) or to the proper arguments and proofs for correct doctrines regarding God, the Messenger, and the Hereafter (Q, R). On the “limits set by God,” see also 2:187, 229, 231; 4:13–14; 9:112; 58:4; 65:1.

98 And among the Bedouin are those who regard that which they spend as a loss, and they await a change in fortune for you. Upon them shall be an evil change of fortune. And God is Hearing, Knowing.

98 That which they spend refers to what some Bedouin expend in the way of God, whether in charity or in battle; they consider it to be given without hope of reward or recompense, hence as a loss or punitive obligation (Q) or as a means of boasting (R). Change in fortune renders dawāʿir (sing. dāʿirah), whose lexical root evokes the sense of a circle or circuit; that is, they wait hoping that the good fortune of the believers will circle around and become bad again (Ṭ). Evil, here as elsewhere, refers not only to what is morally evil, but also to anything that is harmful or causes suffering.

99 And among the Bedouin are those who believe in God and the Last Day, and regard that which they spend as [a means to attain] nearness unto God and the blessings of the Messenger. Behold! It shall surely be nearness for them. God will cause them to enter His Mercy. Truly God is Forgiving, Merciful.

99 In contrast to the description in the previous verse, this verse mentions some Bedouin who discern the spiritual reasons for their physical expenditures. Blessings renders ṣalawāt (sing. ṣalāh), which can also mean “prayers” or “supplications,” here understood to include, for example, the Prophet’s prayers on their behalf for forgiveness, blessings, and other good things (R). In such contexts, ṣalāh is translated “blessing” rather than “prayer” (usually referring to the canonical obligatory prayers in Islam) because, depending on the preposition that accompanies it, it can also be used when God is the agent and human beings are the recipient, as in 33:56: Truly God and His angels invoke blessings upon the Prophet (see also 2:3c). Those who are caused to enter His Mercy are also mentioned in 45:30 in the context of the judgment of the Hereafter.

This verse describes spending in the way of God as a means of attaining nearness unto God, while other verses deny the efficacy of less sincere attempts at attaining nearness unto Him, as in 34:37: It is not your wealth or your children that bring you nigh in nearness unto Us; and 39:3, where the idolaters say of their idols, We do not worship them, save to bring us nigh in nearness unto God.

100 [As for] the foremost, the first among the Emigrants and the Helpers, and those who followed them with virtue, God is content with them, and they are content with Him. And He has prepared for them Gardens with rivers running below, to abide therein forever. That is the great triumph.

100 The foremost (sābiqūn) has a special meaning in 56:10, where it describes those of the highest virtue and spiritual attainment who have a special place in the Hereafter. Those commentators who specify the group to which the present verse refers understand it, however, to mean those who pledged allegiance to the Prophet after the signing of the Treaty of Ḥudaybiyah (see the introduction to Sūrah 48); or those who prayed in both directions of prayer (meaning very early Muslims who prayed facing Jerusalem before the qiblah was changed to Makkah; see 2:115c; Ṭ); or those who participated in the Battle of Badr (Q). In all such cases it refers to those who were with the Prophet when it brought no foreseeable material benefit. The sābiqūn is also a term used by Sufis to mean those who follow the spiritual path to God and who are contrasted with both ordinary believers and disbelievers.

Those who followed them is sometimes thought to refer to the generation after the Companions, known as the Followers (tābi‘ūn) (Q), while others say it can refer to anyone who follows them with virtue until the Day of Judgment (R). On the reciprocity expressed in God is content with them, and they are content with Him, see 5:119c; 58:22c; 89:28c.

101 Among the Bedouin around you there are hypocrites, and among the people of Madinah, who are headstrong in hypocrisy. Thou knowest them not; We know them and We shall punish them twice. Then they shall be relegated to a great punishment.

101 Depending on how one pauses in the Arabic, the beginning of this verse could also be read, “Among the Bedouin around you there are hypocrites, and among the people of Madinah [are those who] are headstrong in hypocrisy.” They are headstrong in that they are persistent and unrepentant (R, Ṭ). Punished them twice refers to the punishment they will have in this world and then in the Hereafter; for example, the illness of a believer is considered an expiation for sin, while that of the disbeliever is a punishment meted out in this life, although the disbeliever will also be punished in the Hereafter (Q). Some interpret this phrase to mean that they will be punished twice—first in this life, then while in the grave (on the punishment of the grave, see 3:169–71c), and then they will be relegated to a great punishment in the Hereafter (R). It is said that among those conditions by which they are punished in the world are hunger, death, and the rage they feel at the success of God’s religion (Ṭ).

102 And [there are] others who admit their sins; they mixed righteous deeds with others that are evil. It may be that God will relent unto them. Truly God is Forgiving, Merciful.

102 According to the most common account, this verse was revealed in connection with several men who had remained behind from the Tabūk campaign, but repented and tied themselves to the walls of the mosque, vowing not to eat or drink until God pardoned them (Q, Ṭ). They mixed righteous deeds with others could refer to the fact that some of these men had previously participated in battles with the Prophet (Q). Some consider that, coming from God, it may be implies a necessity (R, Ṭ).

103 Take thou a charitable offering from their wealth, cleansing them and purifying them thereby, and bless them. Truly thy blessings are a comfort for them. And God is Hearing, Knowing.

103 It is said that this verse was revealed in connection with the repentant men of v. 102. The men offered to give their wealth, but the Prophet said he had not been commanded to accept their offerings. Then this verse was revealed, and the Prophet commanded them to give one-third of their wealth as an expiation (Q). This reading of the verse was later used, after the Prophet's death, as justification by those Arabian tribes who believed that alms were only owed to the Prophet personally for him to distribute (IK); therefore, some of these tribes refused to give alms to Abū Bakr (Q). According to this interpretation, the charitable offering refers to the charity of expiation (R). The other main opinion is that this verse refers to the institutional alms (usually referred to as zakāh) that are obligatory (Q, R, Ṭ). This verse could not, it is argued, be the basis for restricting obligatory alms to those given directly to the Prophet, since other verses explicitly name other recommended recipients; see 9:60: The charitable offerings are only for the poor, and the indigent; and 51:19: And in their wealth was a due for the beggar and the deprived.

The purification of a people by a messenger is also mentioned in 2:129; 2:151; 3:164; 62:2, often mentioned together with the teaching of the Book and the imparting of knowledge. The giving of charity purifies one from the defilement of sin and disobedience to God (R).

On the meaning of the blessings (ṣalāh), see 2:3c; 9:99c; 33:56c. It is said that when someone brought charity to the Prophet for distribution to the community, he would pray, “O God, bless them (ṣalli ‘alayhim)!” (IK, Q). The Prophet's blessings are a comfort (sukn) in that when people heard the Prophet's prayers, they became glad and, as a result of God's Response to his prayers, found peace in their hearts (Q); his blessings were a mercy for them (IK, Ṭ).

Many say that the act of blessing in this particular way is reserved only for the Prophet, meaning that Muslims should invoke blessings only upon him and no other person, and that he was the only person who could do so for other people (Q, R). Al-Rāzī and al-Qurṭubī, however, are of the opinion that there is no reason why this particular form of invoking blessings should be restricted to the Prophet, as he is a model and exemplar for all actions. Muslims invoke blessings and peace upon the Prophet Muhammad in prayers and also when his name is mentioned, while only peace is invoked in the case of other prophets.

104 Know they not that God accepts repentance from His servants, and receives the charitable offerings, and that God is the Relenting, the Merciful?

104 On the matter of repentance, see 2:37c; 4:17–18c; 66:8c; 92:10c; 110:3c. In connection with receives the charitable offerings some mention a saying of the Companion ʿAbd Allāh ibn Masʿūd, who said, “No servant gives charity but that it lands in the Hand of God before the hand of the petitioner, and it is He who places it in the hand of the petitioner” (IK, Ṭ). Al-Rāzī likens this verse to others such as 48:10: Truly those who pledge allegiance unto thee pledge allegiance only unto God; and 33:57: those who affront God and His Messenger, in which the Prophet “stands in the place” of God.

105 Say, “Perform your deeds. God will see your deeds, as will the Messenger and the believers, and you will be brought back to the Knower of the Unseen and the seen, and He will inform you of that which you used to do.”

105 Some interpret this verse to be addressing those who acknowledge their sins in v. 102 (Ṭ). It is understood to be a source of encouragement and also a warning, both because one desires praise and fears scorn and because it mentions the judgment of the Hereafter (R). The language of this verse mirrors the second half of v. 94. That the believers will see your deeds is understood by some to mean that they will do so on the Day of Judgment (IK) or that they will be brought news of them even in this world (R).

106 And others are made to await the Command of God. Either He will punish them, or He will relent unto them. And God is Knowing, Wise.

106 Others are made to await refers most immediately to those who remained behind from the Tabūk campaign, but who were neither as ardently repentant as those described in vv. 102–3 nor as indifferent as the hypocrites mentioned in vv. 94–96 (R). They were made to wait for or anticipate the Judgment of God (Ṭ). It is thought to refer specifically to three Companions who stayed back from the Tabūk campaign, but did not immediately seek pardon when the Prophet returned; nor did they bind themselves to the mosque as some others had done. The community was commanded to shun them, neither keeping company with them nor speaking with them, and their wives were also commanded to return to their families until some decision came down in their regard (R). They were later pardoned upon the revelation of vv. 117–18; see commentary on those verses.

107 And as for those who established a mosque for harm and disbelief, and to divide the believers, and to be an outpost for those who made war on God and His Messenger before, they will surely swear, “We desire only what is best.” But God bears witness that truly they are liars.

107 This verse describes a mosque built by a group led by a certain Abū ʿĀmir al-Rāhib (“the monk”), a notable and respected member of the Aws clan of Madinah who had, before the Prophet came to Madinah, converted to Christianity and was known to be learned in the Christian scriptures. After the defeat of the Makkans at Badr, Abū ʿĀmir was angered at the apparent resilience of the Prophet and his followers and lent his support to the Quraysh, going so far as to dig ditches on the battlefield during the Battle of Uḥud, one of which injured the Prophet during the battle when he fell into it. After the Battle of Uḥud and a final encounter with the Prophet during which Abū ʿĀmir refused to accept Islam, he traveled to see the Byzantine emperor Heraclius to enlist his help against the Prophet. Having received promises of assistance from Heraclius, he sent word to his allies in Madinah to construct a mosque near the Qubāʾ mosque, just outside of Madinah, assuring them that the Byzantines would assist them in expelling the Prophet from his position of power in Madinah. After building the mosque, which they claimed was for the weak, the poor, and those who had difficulty traveling, they invited the Prophet to pray there in order to bless it and establish it as a place of prayer. The Prophet responded that he was about to set out on a journey and would do so, God willing, upon his return. When they were within a day’s journey on their return from Tabūk, this verse was revealed, and the Prophet commanded that the mosque be burned down (IK).

They wanted to divide the believers by establishing another mosque near the already existing Qubāʾ mosque with the intention of defying and defeating the Prophet (Q). It would also serve as an outpost for the scheme of Abū ʿĀmir, who informed his confederates that the Byzantines would send assistance and that they should ready themselves for battle (Q). We desire only what is best is understood to refer to their claim that the mosque was built only for the ease and convenience of the believers (IK).

108 Never stand therein! Truly a mosque founded upon reverence from the first day is worthier of thy standing therein. Therein are men who love to purify themselves, and God loves those who purify themselves.

108 Never stand therein! is a command addressed to the Prophet in the second-person singular and refers to standing for prayer in the mosque built by Abū ʿĀmir (Q). A mosque founded upon reverence refers to the mosque of Qubāʾ (Q). During the emigration (hijrah) from Makkah to Madinah, the Prophet did not enter the center of Madinah immediately, but remained for some days in Qubāʾ with the Banū ʿAmr on the outskirts of the city, while waiting for the remaining Emigrants, including ʿAlī, to reach Madinah. This was the first place where the Prophet prayed after the hijrah, and later the residents of that area asked permission to build a mosque there (Ṭ). Some opinions interpret this as a reference to the Prophet’s mosque, which was built later, but the reference to from the first day in v. 109 indicates that it is the Qubāʾ mosque (Q). Men who love to purify themselves means that their souls do not remain soiled by sin and rebellion (R), but this phrase is connected by some commentators to reports that the people of Qubāʾ were especially diligent in their personal hygiene and in maintaining bodily cleanliness for ritual purposes (Q, Ṭ).

109 So is one who founded his building upon reverence for God and [His] Contentment better, or one who founded his building on the brink of a crumbling bank, which then crumbles with him into the Fire of Hell? And God guides not wrongdoing people.

109 Similar imagery also appears in 3:103: You were on the brink of a pit of fire and He delivered you from it; and 22:11: And among mankind some worship God upon a brink: if good befalls him, he is content thereby, but if a trial befalls him, he is turned over upon his face, losing this world and the Hereafter. That is to say, it is better to found one’s building on firm truth and reverence for God than upon the weak foundation of falsehood (R).

110 The building they have built will cease not to be a disquiet in their hearts, till their hearts are rent asunder. And God is Knowing, Wise.

110 The building they have built refers to the aforementioned mosque for harm and disbelief of v. 107 (Q). It will be a disquiet in their hearts in that it will cause their hearts to be in a state of anguish and doubt (R). The disquiet can be interpreted to mean that the Prophet's act of destroying the mosque increased their hostility toward him and their doubts about his mission, or that it caused them to wonder whether that destruction would also be visited upon them personally, or that they wondered whether God would forgive them or not (R).

Till their hearts are rent asunder is read by some to mean "till Thou rend asunder their hearts" or "till it rends their hearts asunder." It is also read by some to mean "unless their hearts are rent asunder," meaning unless they repent so ardently as to rend their hearts (R). Others interpret hearts are rent asunder as a reference to their deaths, meaning they will be in that state of falsehood so long as they live (T).

111 Truly God has purchased from the believers their souls and their wealth in exchange for the Garden being theirs. They fight in the way of God, slaying and being slain. [It is] a promise binding upon Him in the Torah, the Gospel, and the Quran. And who is truer to His pact than God? So rejoice in the bargain you have made. That indeed is the great triumph.

111 Similar language relating buying and selling to spiritual matters is also found in 2:16, 86, 175; 3:177; 16:95; 57:11; 61:10. Al-Rāzī notes that a subtlety of this verse is that in this profound transaction God is both the buyer and the seller, akin to the way an adult would transact the affairs of a helpless infant. He goes on to note that in the verse God affirms that the immortal substance of a human being "owns" both its ephemeral body and its worldly property, and that by giving both of these over for God's use this immortal substance purchases, as it were, the Garden. None of this verse, in al-Rāzī's view, changes the fact that God is beyond any need for such transactions, and that the wording of this verse is meant as a kindness, a gentleness, and an act of subtlety on the part of God. Ibn ʿAjībah expounds upon the commercial language of this verse and says essentially that the souls of the disbelievers cannot be purchased in exchange for the Garden, because those souls are “worthless,” while the souls of the prophets and friends of God are “priceless” and do not enter into the realm of buying and selling. Between the two extremes are the believers’ souls, which are “bought” or “sold” for the Garden.

It is reported by some that this verse refers to the “second pledge at ʿAqabah,” a location outside of Makkah (not to be confused with the port town that is in Jordan today). The first pledge at ʿAqabah took place when a small group of people from Yathrib (not yet named Madinah) came on pilgrimage to Makkah in order to acknowledge the Prophet’s mission and pledge allegiance to him. At the second pledge of ʿAqabah, under similar circumstances, the Companion ʿAbd Allāh ibn al-Rawāḥah said, “Stipulate for thy Lord and for thyself what thou wilt.” The Prophet said, “I stipulate for my Lord that you shall worship Him and ascribe to Him no partner, and I stipulate for myself that you shall keep me from that which you keep from your selves and your property.” They said, “And if we do that, what shall we have?” He said, “The Garden.” They said, “A profitable trade! We shall neither rescind nor seek to rescind it!” (Q, Ṭ)

A promise binding upon Him in the Torah, the Gospel, and the Quran is interpreted to mean that it is an immutable promise that such people will be rewarded thus, going all the way back to the Torah (R). The pact refers to the aforementioned purchase by God of the souls and wealth of the believers, as does bargain you have made (R).

112 The penitent, and the worshippers, and the celebrants of praise, and the wayfarers, and those who bow, and those who prostrate, and those who enjoin right, and those who forbid wrong, and those who maintain the limits set by God; and give glad tidings unto the believers.

112 Penitent refers to those who repent from idolatry, hypocrisy, and sin (R, Ṭ). Celebrants of praise (ḥāmid) are those who glorify God in good times and in bad (Ṭ), by day and by night (R). Wayfarers (sāʾiḥ) is interpreted by many commentators to mean “those who fast,” citing aḥādīth such as “The wayfaring (siyāḥah) of this community is fasting,” while others interpret it to mean fighting or emigrating in the way of God (Q). Some note that the link between fasting and wayfaring is the abstention from enjoyments such as food and drink (R), which must be understood here with consideration of the difficult conditions in which it was undertaken in times of old. Al-Rāzī notes that when people travel they close the doors to passions and are exposed to hardships, which leads to the opening of the doors of wisdom, and that those who fast are journeying in the spiritual world. Others say that wayfarers refers to those who travel to seek knowledge, and that when one goes on a journey, one witnesses the world in its variety, gains insight into God’s creation, and is edified thereby (R). On those who bow, and those who prostrate, see also 2:43, 125; 3:43; 22:26. On the central Islamic concepts of enjoining right and forbidding wrong, see 2:207c; 3:104c. The limits set by God refers to the obligations and prohibitions He sets down for both transactions and acts of worship (R, Ṭ). This verse is interpreted spiritually to mean that the wayfarers on the path of God fast from what is other than God, journey with their hearts in the spiritual world of the unseen, bow and prostrate in every direction, and maintain themselves within the limits of perfect servanthood (Aj).

113 It is not for the Prophet and those who believe to seek forgiveness for the idolaters, even if they be kin, after it has become clear to them that they shall be the inhabitants of Hellfire.

114 Abraham’s plea for forgiveness of his father was only due to a promise he had made to him. But when it became clear to him that he was an enemy of God, he repudiated him. Truly Abraham was tenderhearted, clement.

113–14 According to one account this verse was revealed in relation to some believers who used to pray for their departed relatives who had died as idolaters, and when they were questioned about their actions, they responded that Abraham himself had prayed for his father even though the latter was an idolater (R, Ṭ). Abraham’s plea for forgiveness is mentioned in his words to his father in 19:47: Peace be upon you! I shall seek forgiveness for you from my Lord.

It is not for the Prophet is interpreted usually as a prohibition, but it can also be understood to mean “It is not befitting the Prophet,” by way of discouragement rather than proscription (R). Some interpret these verses to mean that while idolaters are alive and the question of having faith is open, one can pray for them, but after those persons have died and their state has been made clear, one should not do so (R). Others say that this prohibition refers not to prayer in general, but to funeral rites, in which case it would echo v. 84, And never pray over one of them who dies, nor stand by his grave (Q, R). Some commentators (R) seem to understand become clear to them that they shall be the inhabitants of the Hellfire to be a statement about idolaters in general, but become clear to them would indicate that this refers to specific knowledge about specific people in this world, since the perdition of idolaters in the Hereafter is not something that could be “made clear” as such to all human beings in this world. Others understand it to mean that it is clear if they die in a state of idolatry or disbelief, but that before death there is no way of knowing (Ṭ). Tenderhearted renders awwāh (cf. 11:75), which is understood to mean one who is kind and compassionate (raḥīm) or one who is humble or prays often (IK, Q, R).

115 It is not for God to lead a people astray after having guided them, till He makes clear unto them that whereof they should be mindful. Truly God is Knower of all things.

115 This verse is interpreted in the context of the previous Command that believers should not pray for the forgiveness of idolaters after it has become clear that they would be inhabitants of Hellfire (v. 113). Some of the believers were anxious over having made such supplications for forgiveness (v. 114) in the past (R). Other commentators connect this injunction with the prohibition of the consumption of alcohol (see 2:219c; 5:90–91c), since some Companions were worried about other Companions who died before the prohibition was enacted (Q). Spiritually, it is understood to mean that God will not divert someone from the path to Him without it having first been made clear to him that he should be mindful of the virtues and possess proper spiritual courtesy, or adab (Aj).

116 Truly unto God belongs Sovereignty over the heavens and the earth. He gives life and causes death. Apart from God you have neither protector nor helper.

116 Various elements of this verse appear throughout the Quran, namely, the Sovereignty of God (e.g., 3:189; 5:17, 18; 24:42; 45:27), God’s giving of life and death (2:258; 3:156; 7:158; 10:56; 22:6; 23:80; 40:68; 44:8; 53:44; 57:2; 67:2), and disbelievers’ plight of having neither protector nor helper in the Hereafter (e.g.,

117 God indeed has relented unto the Prophet, and the Emigrants and the Helpers who followed him in the difficult hour, after the hearts of a group of them nearly swerved. Then He relented unto them—truly He is Kind, Merciful unto them—

117 Relented means that God responds to the repentance of human beings, since “to repent” and “to relent” (in accepting repentance) are the same verb in Arabic with a different particle, both of which have the sense of “turning toward” (see v. 14; 2:37, 128, 160). Some say that the matter concerning which God relents toward the Prophet is his having granted leave to some who wished to stay behind (see v. 43); and He relents toward the believers when their hearts may have inclined toward remaining behind or when they hesitated in their commitment (Q, R). The difficult hour refers to the Tabūk expedition, undertaken in such heat that they had to slaughter camels in order to deal with dwindling water and supplies (R, Ṭ), though it can also refer to all such difficult times, such as the Battle of the Trench in 5/627 (R).

118 and unto the three who were left behind until the earth, despite its breadth, closed in upon them, and their own souls closed in upon them, and they deemed there to be no refuge from God, save with Him. Then He relented unto them, that they might repent. Truly God is Relenting, Merciful.

118 This verse refers to the three men who stayed behind, but offered no excuses, either before the Prophet left for Tabūk or after he returned. According to some, left behind here refers not to being left behind from the expedition to Tabūk, but to being left in a state waiting for God’s Judgment to come (Q, R). In the sources a lengthy account is given of one of the three, Ka’b ibn Mālik, who found himself in a perpetual state of indecision during the days leading up to the Tabūk campaign and kept putting off making the necessary preparations. Finally, the day came when the soldiers had all left and he was left with the others in Madinah. When the Prophet returned, many of those who had remained behind made their excuses vociferously with the Prophet who, according to the account, accepted the plain sense of their words and pardoned them. However, Ka'ab ibn Mālik could not bring himself to fashion any excuses and instead stated openly that he had no excuse, because at no time in his life was he materially more prepared to set out for battle than on the day the Prophet set out for Tabūk (and he had indeed participated in many battles with the Prophet before). The Prophet told him and the other two to wait until God decided their case. Meanwhile, the community was commanded to shun them, and although Ka'ab had the fortitude to walk in the markets and pray in the mosques while no one spoke to him, the other two remained in their homes for the fifty days it took for the decision in this verse to be revealed. That the earth, despite its breadth, closed in is also mentioned in v. 25; in the present verse it refers to the sense of constriction and loneliness (Q, R).

119 O you who believe! Reverence your Lord, and be among the truthful.

119 Be among the truthful is thought to refer to the fact that, though they suffered isolation on account of it, the honesty of the three men who remained behind in not making false excuses kept them from the ranks of the hypocrites and made them recipients of God's Pardon (Q). From another perspective, it means to stand together with the Prophet and the other believers (Ṭ). Truthful renders ṣādiq, which, in addition to meaning telling the truth, can also mean "sincere" and "loyal," which come from the same root as "charity" (ṣadaqah), the verb meaning "to confirm" or "to verify" (ṣaddaqa), and the intensive participle ṣiddīq, meaning both "truthful" and "friend" (4:69; 5:75; 12:46; 24:61; 57:19).

120 It is not for the people of Madinah and the Bedouin who dwell around them to remain behind from the Messenger of God, or to prefer themselves to him. That is because no thirst, nor toil, nor hunger befalls them in the way of God, nor do they take any step enraging the disbelievers, nor do they endure aught at the hands of an enemy, but that a righteous deed is recorded for them on account of it. Truly God neglects not the reward of the virtuous.

120 It is not for the people . . . to remain behind from the Messenger of God indicates the necessity of following the Prophet into battle. It is thought by some that this ruling applied only to following the Prophet, since in later times in history one did not necessarily have to follow the political leader into battle (R, Ṭ). Al-Ṭabarī interprets this verse as a statement about the failure of some Madinans and Bedouin to join the Prophet's expedition to Tabūk, meaning that although some may have been required to remain behind for some other purpose, none should, in principle, have simply refused to join him. Some think that this verse was abrogated by v. 122 (R, Ṭ), but the question of abrogation does not arise if this verse is interpreted as meaning that believers must be ready to respond to the Prophet, though they may not actually participate in battle. Some of those who base their interpretation on abrogation argue that v. 120 referred to a time when Islam was weak and Muslims few in number, but v. 122 referred to a time when they became stronger and more numerous (Ṭ).

121 Nor do they spend aught, be it small or large, nor traverse a valley, but that it is written down for them, that God may reward them for the best of that which they used to do.

121 The best of that which they used to do (cf. 16:96–97; 24:38; 29:7; 39:35; 46:16) here either refers to the fact that they would be rewarded for the good in their deeds, not the bad, or it is understood to mean “God will reward them with better than that which they did,” meaning the reward will exceed the deed (R); see 29:7c. This latter interpretation echoes verses such as 6:160: Whosoever brings a good deed shall have ten times the like thereof. The imagery of written down for them echoes other passages that speak of a person's actions in life being recorded, such as 36:12: Truly We give life to the dead and record that which they have sent forth and that which they have left behind. And We have counted all things in a clear registry; 43:19: Their witnessing shall be recorded, and they will be questioned; 43:80: Yea, and Our envoys are present with them, recording; and 78:29: And everything have We recorded in a book.

122 But it is not for the believers all to go forth. And why should not a party from each group go forth to gain understanding in religion, and to warn their people when they return to them, that haply they will beware?

122 Some interpret this verse to mean that not all the Bedouin had to come into Madinah when a call to battle was made (Ṭ). Others say that it means that when the Prophet dispatched some group for battle or for a raid (IK), they were not all to go; some were to remain behind for various reasons including spiritual and religious instruction (Ṭ), especially since new revelations were being given while the Prophet was with them and people needed to be there to learn from the Prophet and pass on their knowledge to others (R). The fighting group would represent the studying group in battle, and the latter would represent the former in studying the religious teachings of the Prophet (R).

For others, this verse does not refer to battle, but to religious instruction as such. In the final years of the Prophet's life, tribes would sometimes embrace Islam as a group. Some interpret this verse to be saying that when a tribe accepted Islam, its members should not all come at the same time to Madinah and overwhelm the accommodations of the city; rather, some should come to learn from the Prophet and then return to teach their fellow believers the doctrines and practices of the religion (IK, R, Ṭ). This is what Islamic Law would later call a collective obligation (farḍ kifāyah) as opposed to an individual obligation (farḍ 'ayn), since it only requires that there be some members of the community who seek knowledge in this way (Q). Al-Rāzī reflects on the fact that, in the time of the Prophet, journeying to find spiritual wisdom and religious knowledge was a nearly universal necessity, whereas in his own time, because the spiritual and intellectual tradition had become strong and well established, the necessity for such travel was diminished. Still, in his view acquiring true and fruitful religious understanding often required traveling to other lands and leaving one's home in pursuit of knowledge.

According to another interpretation, this verse was revealed as a rebuke to those hypocrites who tried to disparage those Companions who had been sent to the Bedouin to teach them and had not gone out to battle because of it (Ṭ) or to certain other Bedouin who had, for some reason, not gone out to battle (IK).

By "warning their people" they extend the function of the Prophet (and all prophets) as a "warner," a description of the Prophet mentioned in many verses throughout the Quran (see 4:165c). The warning should impel them to action (R), alerting them about the trials of the Fire, but also giving them news of the blessings of the Garden (IK).

123 O you who believe! Fight those disbelievers who are near to you, and let them find harshness in you. And know that God is with the reverent.

123 This verse is understood by some as stating the general principle that a near enemy should be dealt with first, although others believe that it refers specifically to the Arabs before the command was given to fight the Byzantines (see v. 29), meaning that the enemy among the Arabs should be fought before turning to the Byzantines (Q). Other commentators, understanding the mention of the near enemy as assuming engagement with a distant enemy not mentioned in the verse, saw in this verse a kind of description of a strategy of gradual conquest beyond the “near enemy” (IK), though this reasoning seems to depart starkly from the text.

The Command to be harsh with the disbelievers (cf. 9:73; 48:29; 66:9) is understood as serving as a deterrence from evil deeds (R). The wording indicates that one should be measured in one’s harshness, and that the Command is given to one in whom gentleness and kindness are predominant (R). Interpreted as a spiritual allegory, the Commands of this verse mean that one should attack one’s own faults—the “disbeliever” in the soul—first, and only then may God place on one’s shoulders the responsibility to rectify the faults within others (Aj).

124 And whensoever a sūrah is sent down, some among them say, “Which of you has this increased in faith?” As for those who believe, it increases them in faith, and they rejoice.

124 The idea of being increased in faith or belief (īmān) also appears in 3:173, 8:2, and 48:4; similarly, one can also be “increased” in humility (17:109) and guidance (47:17). Some among them means among the hypocrites (IK). Their question was posed among themselves, with the intention of keeping one another in a state of defiance against faith or as a way of mocking the believers (R). They rejoice can also mean “they will rejoice,” and commentators interpret this rejoicing to take place in either this life or the Hereafter, or both (R). The message that the same revelation would have a different effect on different people is also mentioned in 2:26, which says of the parables of the Quran: He misleads many by it, and He guides many by it, and He misleads none but the iniquitous.

Within the Islamic spiritual tradition there is a commonly accepted idea that one understands and benefits from the Quran to the degree that one’s heart is pure and one is humble before the Word of God. At the same time, the recitation of the Word of God and sincere meditation upon it have the effect of removing the hardened crust surrounding one's heart. For a fuller discussion of the relationship between one's spiritual state and one's reception of the Quran, see 3:7c.

125 As for those in whose hearts is a disease, it added defilement to their defilement, and they die while they are disbelievers.

125 The defilement (rijs) is understood as doubt, sin, and disbelief (Q) as well as vices such as greed, jealousy, and guile (R). The “disease of the heart” (cf. 2:10; 5:52; 8:49; 22:53; 33:12, 60; 47:20, 29; 74:31) consists precisely in such faults as well as false beliefs (R). Al-Rāzī notes that the hypocrites respond to this sūrah with jealousy and anger, which gives rise to further rejection of the truth, a process that is a kind of adding defilement to their defilement; that is, hearing this sūrah is not the cause of their fall into greater defilement; rather, the sūrah has this effect on a particular kind of soul. Moreover, they will die in such a state, which will lead to the Fire, unlike the believers who will rejoice (v. 124) in the Hereafter.

126 See they not that they are tried each year, once or twice; yet they neither repent nor take heed?

126 The trials are interpreted by some to be hunger or illness, or fighting and expeditions (IK, Q, R), while others interpret the yearly or twice yearly trials to refer to the Prophet's exposure of the disbelievers' secret thoughts and conversations (M); regarding the exposure of their secret converse, see commentary on 58:7–10c. In response to these trials, they neither repent of past deeds nor take heed of the future (IK).

127 And whensoever a sūrah is sent down, they look at each other [saying], “Does anyone see you?” Then they turn away. God has turned their hearts away because they are a people who understand not.

127 Does anyone see you? refers to the astonishment that hypocrites would feel when their secret conversations or thoughts were exposed by the Prophet; they would wonder if someone was aware of what they were doing and had informed the Prophet (Q). It is also understood to mean that they glance at each other in a spirit of mockery (R). According to another interpretation, it means that, when some revelation exposes them, they wish to leave the gathering in the mosque in which they find themselves, but wish to do so undetected (R). Then they turn away from guidance, which some note is all the more noteworthy because such moments could have been starting points for reflecting upon the truth, rather than the rejection of it (Q), or they turn away from having to listen to any more of the Quran (R). Some read God has turned their hearts away as a kind of interjection, “God, turn their hearts away!” which the believers should themselves then say (Q).

128 A Messenger has indeed come unto you from among your own. Troubled is he by what you suffer, solicitous of you, kind and merciful unto the believers.

128 It is thought by some that vv. 128–29 were the very last to be revealed to the Prophet before his death (IK, Q), though which passage was revealed last is a subject of considerable disagreement among commentators (see 4:176c and the introduction to Sūrah 110).

Some interpret from among your own (cf. 2:151; 3:164; 62:2) to be a reminder to the Arabs of the great blessing given to them—a prophet from among their own, speaking their language; others understand your own to mean humanity as such (Q, R). This is also a place where some commentators (IK, Q) mention, as a commentary on from among your own, the significance of the lineage of the Prophet, in particular that he comes from a noble line going all the way back to Abraham (IK, Q, T). Others say that this verse is a sign that the Arabs were and still are elevated by the fact that the Prophet was one of them (R).

The description of the Prophet offered in this verse is interpreted to mean that he is anxious for them not to enter the Fire, to be guided and find the right way (M), and is hopeful that they should enter the Garden (Q). Many commentators note that the Prophet is honored here by qualities usually attributable to God in the Quran, as in 22:65: Truly God is Kind and Merciful unto mankind.

129 But if they turn away, say, “God suffices me. There is no god but He. In Him do I trust, and He is the Lord of the mighty Throne.”

129 These words are spoken to the Prophet (Q) in the face of the rejection of the disbelievers. That God suffices the believers is also mentioned in 3:173; 8:62, 64; 9:59; see also 2:137c; 3:173c; and 39:36: Does God not suffice His servant? Regarding the virtue of trust in God (tawakkul), see 14:11–12c; see also 3:122, 160; 5:11; 9:51; 12:67; 39:38; 58:10; 64:13. On the Divine Throne, which is often conceived of as meaning the summit of the created order, see 2:255c.

Jonah

Yūnus is the first in a series of six sūrahs whose opening verses include the letters alif, lām, and rā[°], and which speak of the Book. With the possible exception of vv. 40, 94–96, which are said to have been revealed in Madinah (JJ), this sūrah in all likelihood belongs to the early Makkan period, as the context of some of the verses seems to suggest a date near to the beginning of the Prophet’s mission (see 10:2c in particular). Some say it is to be dated sometime after the Prophet’s Night Journey and Ascension (al-isrā[°] wa’l-mi^c*rāj*); see 17:1c; introduction to Sūrah 53 (JJ).

One of this sūrah’s main arguments, in response to the Makkan idolaters’ accusations, is that the Quran is of Divine Origin and the Prophet had no hand in composing it. Several verses decry the disbelievers’ labeling the Prophet a manifest sorcerer (v. 2) and saying that he has fabricated it (v. 38). The sūrah also argues that the real fabricators are those who reject God, and for them there awaits a terrible reckoning in the next life (vv. 60, 69). Their lie against God is related to the fact that they deny their own true nature, which is to believe in and serve God. The sūrah describes how even disbelievers manifest this true belief in God when affliction befalls them and they are left with no one to turn to except God; however, when they are safe, they forget God, return to their old ways, and are again left to their own machinations (vv. 22–23).

Another key theme of this sūrah is its response to the challenges made by the Makkan idolaters that the Prophet should hasten to bring upon them the Punishment of God if he is truthful in his claims (v. 11), or that he should bring a different Quran that does not condemn their gods and is thus more congenial to their ways of worship (vv. 15–17).

A good deal of emphasis is placed in this sūrah on the teaching that the ultimate return of all creatures is to God, just as their creation originated with Him (v. 56). Although the meeting with God after death is considered to be inevitable, those who are given only to the life of this world and who serve their various false gods will be punished for their disbelief (vv. 7, 52). Likewise, glad tidings (v. 2) are promised to the believers (see also vv. 4, 62–64, 103), who are encouraged to be patient with the hardships through which the disbelievers put them (v. 109). It is the believers who will be engulfed in peace (v. 10), which is confirmed in God's calling people to the Abode of Peace (v. 25).

Another key theme is the futility of conjecture (vv. 36, 60, 66). Thus, the sūrah condemns such things as the Makkans' belief in false gods as well as their anticipated intercession in the affairs of this world, when, in reality, intercession is only by God's Leave and false gods have no role in the spiritual economy of things (vv. 3, 18). This is why in the Hereafter the false gods will reject those who used to serve them (vv. 28–29), especially because these false gods have no ability to create or guide others (vv. 34–35). Rather, God is the only One Who can provide for His creatures (v. 31).

The sūrah also addresses the question of why guidance, which is considered to have a universal resonance, is received so differently. The answer is that disbelievers are opposed to the truth from the beginning and thus are not willing to listen (vv. 96–97, 101). Yet, like those who turn to God when affliction visits them but who revert to their old ways once they are safe, there are people, like Pharaoh in v. 90, who will eventually acknowledge the truth, but too late. Ultimately, guidance is dependent upon God, and none can guide those who are misguided (vv. 42–43, 99, 100).

The sūrah ends by recounting the stories of Noah (vv. 71–73) and Moses (vv. 75–93). Unlike the communities of Noah, Moses, and other previous prophets, the people of the prophet Jonah (from mention of whom in v. 98 the sūrah receives its name) heeded the warning of their prophet and thereby averted punishment. This serves to illustrate to the Makkans and, by extension, people in general that it is not too late to accept the truth, and that if they do so, they will benefit themselves and avert punishment.

① Alif. Lām. Rā. These are the signs of the Wise Book. ② Is it a marvel for mankind that We have sent revelation unto a man from among themselves, [saying], “Warn mankind and give glad tidings to those who believe that they shall have a station of sincerity with their Lord”? The disbelievers say, “Surely this is a manifest sorcerer.” ③ Truly your Lord is God, Who created the heavens and the earth in six days, then mounted the Throne, directing the affair. There is no intercessor, save by His Leave. That is God, your Lord; so worship Him! Will you not remember? ④ Unto Him is your return all together; God’s Promise is true. Verily He originates creation, then He brings it back, that He may recompense with justice those who believe and perform righteous deeds. As for the disbelievers, theirs shall be a drink of boiling liquid and a painful punishment for having disbelieved. ⑤ He it is Who made the sun a radiance, and the moon a light, and determined for it stations, that you might know the number of years and the reckoning [of time]. God did not create these, save in truth. He expounds the signs for a people who know. ⑥ Surely in the variation of the night and the day and whatsoever God has created in the heavens and on the earth are signs for a people who are reverent. ⑦ Truly those who anticipate not the meeting with Us, and who are content with the life of this world and feel secure therein, and who are heedless of Our signs, ⑧ it is they whose refuge shall be the Fire for that which they used to earn. ⑨ Truly those who believe and perform righteous deeds, their Lord guides them by their faith. They shall have rivers running below them in Gardens of bliss. ⑩ Their supplication therein shall be, “Glory be to Thee, O God!” And therein their greeting shall be, “Peace.” And the conclusion of their supplication shall be, “Praise be to God, Lord of the worlds!” ⑪ Were God to hasten evil for mankind, even as they would hasten the good, their appointed term would have been concluded. But We leave those who anticipate not the meeting with Us to wander confused in their rebellion. ⑫ And when harm afflicts man, he calls upon Us, [lying] on his side, or sitting, or standing. Then, when We remove his affliction from him, he carries on as if he had not called upon Us concerning the harm that had befallen him. Thus is that which they used to do made to seem fair unto the prodigal. ﴿13﴾ We have indeed destroyed generations before you when they did wrong, and their messengers brought them clear proofs, but they would not believe. Thus do We recompense the guilty people. ﴿14﴾ Then We made you vicegerents upon the earth after them, that We might observe how you behave. ﴿15﴾ And when Our signs are recited unto them as clear proofs, those who anticipate not the meeting with Us say, “Bring a Quran other than this, or alter it.” Say, “It is not for me to alter it of my own accord. I follow only that which is revealed unto me. Truly I fear, should I disobey my Lord, the punishment of a tremendous day.” ﴿16﴾ Say, “Had God willed, I would not have recited it unto you; nor would He have made it known to you. Indeed, I tarried among you for a lifetime before it. Do you not understand?” ﴿17﴾ And who does greater wrong than one who fabricates a lie against God or denies His signs? Surely the guilty will not prosper. ﴿18﴾ They worship apart from God that which neither harms them nor benefits them. And they say, “These are our intercessors with God.” Say, “Would you inform God about something in the heavens or on the earth that He does not know? Glory be to Him and exalted is He above the partners they ascribe!” ﴿19﴾ Mankind was but one community, then they differed. And if not for a Word that had preceded from thy Lord, judgment would have been made between them concerning that wherein they differed. ﴿20﴾ And they say, “Why has no sign been sent down unto him from his Lord?” Say, “Truly the Unseen belongs to God alone. So wait! Truly I am among those waiting along with you.” ﴿21﴾ When We make men taste mercy after hardship has befallen them, behold, they have a plot regarding Our signs. Say, “God is swifter in plotting.” Surely Our messengers record whatsoever you plot. ﴿22﴾ He it is Who carries you over land and sea, even when you are sailing in ships, till, when they sail with them upon a favorable wind, and rejoice therein, there comes upon them a violent gale, and the waves come at them from every side, and they think they shall be encompassed by them. They call upon God, devoting religion entirely to Him: “If Thou savest us from this, we shall surely be among the thankful!” 23 Then when He saves them, behold, they behave tyrannically upon the earth without right. O mankind! Your tyranny is only against yourselves—the enjoyment of the life of this world. Then unto Us shall be your return, whereupon We shall inform you of that which you used to do. 24 The parable of the life of this world is that of water which We send down from the sky: the earth’s vegetation, from which men and cattle eat, mingles with it till, when the earth takes on its luster and is adorned, and its inhabitants think they have gained mastery over it, Our Command comes upon it by night or by day, whereupon We make it a mown field, as if it had not flourished the day before! Thus do We expound the signs for a people who reflect. 25 And God calls unto the Abode of Peace, and guides whomsoever He will unto a straight path. 26 Unto those who are virtuous shall be that which is most beautiful and more besides. Neither darkness nor abasement shall come over their faces. It is they who are the inhabitants of the Garden; they shall abide therein. 27 And as for those who commit evil deeds, the recompense of an evil is one like it, and abasement shall overcome them. There will be none to protect them from God. [It will be] as if their faces are covered with dark patches of night. It is they who are the inhabitants of the Fire; they shall abide therein. 28 On the Day when We shall gather them all together, then We shall say to those who ascribed partners unto God, “Stop there! You and your partners!” Then We shall separate them, and their partners will say, “It was not us whom you worshipped. 29 God suffices as a Witness between you and us. We were heedless of your worship.” 30 There and then every soul shall experience that which it did in the past, and they shall be brought back unto God, their true Master, and that which they used to fabricate will forsake them. 31 Say, “Who provides for you from Heaven and earth? Who has power over hearing and sight? And who brings forth the living from the dead, and brings forth the dead from the living, and who directs the affair?” They will say, “God.” So say, “Will you not, then, be reverent?” 32 That is God, your true Lord. What is there beyond truth but error? How, then, are you turned away? 33 Thus the Word of thy Lord came due for those who are iniquitous: truly they believe not. ﴿34﴾ Say, "Is there, among your partners, one who originates creation and then brings it back?" Say, "God originates creation, then brings it back. How, then, are you perverted?" ﴿35﴾ Say, "Is there any among your partners who guides unto Truth?" Say, "God guides unto Truth. Is one who guides unto Truth worthier to be followed, or one who cannot guide unless he be guided? What ails you? How do you judge?" ﴿36﴾ And most of them follow naught but conjecture. Truly conjecture does not avail against the truth in the least. Truly God knows what they do. ﴿37﴾ This Quran could not have been fabricated [by anyone] apart from God; rather, it is a confirmation of that which came before it, and an elaboration of the Book in which there is no doubt, from the Lord of the worlds. ﴿38﴾ Or do they say, "He has fabricated it"? Say, "Then bring a sūrah like it, and call upon whomsoever you can apart from God, if you are truthful." ﴿39﴾ Nay, but they deny that whose knowledge they cannot comprehend and whose interpretation has not yet come to them. Even so did those who were before them deny. So behold how the wrongdoers fared in the end. ﴿40﴾ Among them are those who believe in it, and among them are those who do not believe in it, and thy Lord knows best the workers of corruption. ﴿41﴾ And if they deny thee, say, "Unto me, my deeds, and unto you, your deeds. You are quit of that which I do, and I am quit of that which you do." ﴿42﴾ And among them are those who listen to thee. But dost thou make the deaf to hear, though they understand not? ﴿43﴾ And among them are those who look at thee. But couldst thou guide the blind, though they see not? ﴿44﴾ Truly God does not wrong human beings in the least, but rather human beings wrong themselves. ﴿45﴾ On the Day when He shall gather them, it will be as if they tarried but an hour of the day, acquainting themselves with one another. Lost indeed are those who denied the meeting with God, and they were not rightly guided. ﴿46﴾ Whether We show thee a part of that which We promise them, or We take thee, their return shall be unto Us. Then God is Witness over that which they do. ﴿47﴾ For every community there is a messenger, and when their messenger comes, judgment shall be rendered between them with justice, and they will not be wronged. ﴿48﴾ And they say, "When will this promise come to pass, if you are truthful?” ﴿49﴾ Say, “I have no power over what harm or benefit may come to me, save as God wills. For every community there is a term. When their term comes, they shall not delay it by a single hour, nor shall they advance it.” ﴿50﴾ Say, “Have you considered: if His Punishment should come upon you by night or by day, what part thereof would the guilty seek to hasten?” ﴿51﴾ And then, when it comes to pass, will you believe in it? Now? While you once sought to hasten it? ﴿52﴾ Then it shall be said unto the wrongdoers, “Taste the punishment everlasting. Are you recompensed for aught save that which you used to earn?” ﴿53﴾ And they inquire of thee, “Is it true?” Say, “Yea, by my Lord it is true, and you cannot thwart [it].” ﴿54﴾ Were it so that each soul that had done wrong possessed all that is on the earth, he would surely seek to ransom himself thereby, and they will hide their remorse when they see the punishment. And judgment shall be rendered between them with justice, and they will not be wronged. ﴿55﴾ Truly unto God belongs whatsoever is in the heavens and on the earth. Verily God’s Promise is true, but most of them know not. ﴿56﴾ He gives life and causes death, and unto Him shall you be returned. ﴿57﴾ O mankind! There has come unto you an exhortation from your Lord, and a cure for that which lies within breasts, and a guidance and a mercy for the believers. ﴿58﴾ Say, “In the Bounty of God and His Mercy—in that let them rejoice! It is better than that which they amass.” ﴿59﴾ Say, “Have you seen that which God sent down unto you for provision? Then you made some of it forbidden and some lawful.” Say, “Has God granted you leave, or do you fabricate against God?” ﴿60﴾ What will those who fabricate lies against God conjecture on the Day of Resurrection? Truly God is Possessed of Bounty for mankind, but most of them do not give thanks. ﴿61﴾ Thou art not upon any task, nor dost thou recite any part of the Quran, nor do you perform any deed, save that We are a Witness over you when you engage therein. Not a mote’s weight evades thy Lord on earth or in Heaven, nor smaller than that nor larger, but that it is in a clear Book. ﴿62﴾ Behold! Truly the friends of God, no fear shall come upon them, nor shall they grieve— ﴿63﴾ those who believe and are reverent. ﴿64﴾ For them are glad tidings in the life of this world and in the Hereafter. There is no altering the Words of God. That is the great triumph. 65 And let not their speech grieve thee. Truly might belongs altogether to God; He is the Hearing, the Knowing. 66 Behold! Truly unto God belongs whosoever is in the heavens and whosoever is on the earth. And what is it that they follow, those who call upon partners apart from God? They follow naught but conjecture, and they do but surmise. 67 He it is Who made the night for you, that you might rest therein, and the day by which to see. Truly in that are signs for a people who hear. 68 They say, "God has taken a child." Glory be to Him! He is the Self-Sufficient. Unto Him belongs whatsoever is in the heavens and whatsoever is on the earth. You have no authority for this. Do you say about God that which you know not? 69 Say, "Surely those who fabricate a lie against God will not prosper." 70 An enjoyment in this world, then unto Us shall be their return, and We shall make them taste severe punishment for their having disbelieved. 71 And recite unto them the story of Noah, when he said to his people, "O my people! If my presence is grievous to you, and [so too] my reminding of the signs of God, then in God do I trust. So decide on your plan, you and your partners; then let there be no doubt concerning your plan, but carry it out against me, and grant no respite! 72 And if you turn your backs, I have not asked of you any reward. My reward lies only with God, and I am commanded to be among those who submit." 73 Yet, they denied him. So We saved him and those with him in the Ark. And We made them vicegerents, and We drowned those who denied Our signs. So observe how those who were warned fared in the end. 74 Then, after him, We sent messengers unto their people, and they brought them clear proofs. But it was not for them to believe in that which they had denied beforehand. Thus do We set a seal upon the hearts of the transgressors. 75 Then, after them, We sent Moses and Aaron with Our signs to Pharaoh and his notables. But they waxed arrogant, and they were a guilty people. 76 So when the Truth came unto them from Us, they said, "Surely this is manifest sorcery!" 77 Moses said, "Do you say [this] about the truth when it comes unto you? Is this sorcery? The sorcerers will not prosper." 78 They said, "Have you come unto us to turn us away from that which we found our fathers following, so that grandeur in the land might belong to you two? We will not believe in the two of you!” 79 Pharaoh said, “Bring me every knowing sorcerer.” 80 And when the sorcerers came, Moses said to them, “Cast what you would cast.” 81 And when they cast, Moses said, “That which you have produced is sorcery; God will soon bring it to naught. Surely God does not allow the deeds of those who work corruption to flourish. 82 God verifies the truth through His Words, though the guilty be averse.” 83 But none believed in Moses, save some progeny from among his people, for fear of Pharaoh and his notables, that he would oppress them; for truly Pharaoh was exalted in the land, and he was indeed among the prodigal. 84 And Moses said, “O my people! If you believe in God, then trust in Him, if you are submitters.” 85 And they said, “In God do we trust. Our Lord! Make us not a temptation for the wrongdoing people. 86 And save us through Thy Mercy from disbelieving people.” 87 And We revealed unto Moses and his brother, “Appoint for thy people houses in Egypt, and make your houses places of worship and perform the prayer, and give glad tidings unto the believers.” 88 Moses said, “Our Lord! Truly Thou hast given Pharaoh and his notables ornament and wealth in the life of this world, our Lord, so that they may lead astray from Thy way. Our Lord! Blot out their wealth and harden their hearts, so that they will not believe till they see the painful punishment.” 89 He said, “Your supplication has been answered. So stand firm, and follow not the way of those who know not.” 90 We carried the Children of Israel across the sea, and Pharaoh and his hosts pursued them out of envy and enmity till, when drowning overtook them, he said, “I believe that there is no god but the One in whom the Children of Israel believe, and I am among those who submit.” 91 Now, though previously you disobeyed and were among the workers of corruption? 92 Today We shall save you in your body that you might be a sign unto those who come after you. Yet many among mankind are heedless of Our signs. 93 Certainly We settled the Children of Israel in a sure settlement, and We provided them with good things. They differed not till knowledge came unto them. Thy Lord will surely judge between them on the Day of Resurrection concerning that wherein they differed. ﴿94﴾ So if thou art in doubt concerning that which We have sent down unto thee, ask those who recite the Book before thee. The truth has certainly come unto thee from thy Lord. So be thou not among the doubters. ﴿95﴾ And be not thou among those who deny the signs of God, lest thou shouldst be among the losers. ﴿96﴾ Truly those for whom the Word of thy Lord has come due will not believe, ﴿97﴾ though every sign should come unto them, till they see the painful punishment. ﴿98﴾ Why has not a single town believed and benefitted from its belief, other than the people of Jonah? When they believed, We removed from them the punishment of disgrace in the life of this world, and We granted them enjoyment for a while. ﴿99﴾ And had thy Lord willed, all those who are on the earth would have believed all together. Wouldst thou compel men till they become believers? ﴿100﴾ It is not for a soul to believe, save by God's Leave. And He lays defilement upon those who understand not. ﴿101﴾ Say, "Observe that which is in the heavens and on the earth." But neither signs nor warnings avail a people who believe not. ﴿102﴾ Do they wait for aught save the like of the days of those who passed away before them? Say, "So wait! Truly I am waiting along with you." ﴿103﴾ Then We save Our messengers and those who believe. Thus is it incumbent upon Us to save the believers. ﴿104﴾ Say, "O mankind! If you are in doubt concerning my religion, then [know that] I worship not those whom you worship apart from God; rather, I worship God, Who shall take you [unto Himself]. And I am commanded to be among the believers, ﴿105﴾ and 'Set thy face toward the religion as a ḥanīf, and be thou not among the idolaters. ﴿106﴾ And call not, apart from God, upon that which neither benefits thee, nor harms thee. For if thou dost so, thou shalt surely be among the wrongdoers.'" ﴿107﴾ And if God should touch thee with affliction, none can remove it save He; and if He desires some good for thee, none can hold back His Bounty. He causes it to fall upon whomsoever He will among His servants. And He is the Forgiving, the Merciful. ﴿108﴾ Say, "O mankind! The Truth has come unto you from your Lord. Whosoever is rightly guided is only rightly guided for the sake of his own soul, and whosoever is astray is only astray to its detriment. And I am not a guardian over you.”  And follow that which has been revealed unto thee, and be patient till God renders judgment, and He is the best of judges.

Commentary

① Alif. Lām. Rā. These are the signs of the Wise Book.

1 For the detached letters, see 2:1c. Although some have taken the Book to be an allusion to this particular sūrah (Bḏ, Z), it is generally understood to refer to the Quran itself (Bḏ, JJ, Kl, Q, R; see 2:2c; 2:89c; 2:129c). Wise (ḥakīm) refers to the wisdom to be found in the Book (Kā, R), and can also denote its being clear (mubīn; see also 12:1) and unambiguous in meaning (muḥkam; IK, Kā; muḥkam is based on the same root as ḥakīm; see also 3:7c; 11:1c).

2 It is reported that the revelation of this verse was occasioned by the Quraysh’s derisive astonishment when the Prophet came to them as God’s Messenger. They said, “Could God not find anyone to send but the orphan [belonging to the household] of [his uncle] Abū Ṭālib?” (My, Q). As a warner, the Prophet’s function was to remind them of the Resurrection and God’s Judgment of their acts (N), as well as to instill fear in them of the impending punishment for evil acts (JJ); as a bearer of glad tidings he was instructed to inform the believers of God’s Mercy (for this dual function, see 4:165c; 17:105c). Station of sincerity (qadam ṣidq) can refer to a kind of priority and high standing with God (Bḏ), Reward from Him (R), or the Prophet’s intercession (see 2:48c) on the Last Day (IK, My, R). In response to the Prophet, the disbelievers among the Quraysh labeled him a sorcerer (see also 38:4; 40:24; 51:39, 52). Some commentaries read “sorcery” (siḥr; cf. v. 76) instead of sorcerer (sāḥir), in which case this in the last sentence of the verse would refer to the Quran, not to the Prophet (N, R, Z).

③ Truly your Lord is God, Who created the heavens and the earth in six days, then mounted the Throne, directing the affair. There is no intercessor, save by His Leave. That is God, your Lord; so worship Him! Will you not remember?

3 For the meaning of creation in six days followed by a reference to God's mounting the Throne, see 7:54c (see also 11:7; 25:59; 32:4; 57:4). When mounted upon the Throne, God is described as directing the affair (see also 10:31; 13:2; 32:5), which refers to His control over all affairs (Ṭ) as well as His Decree (M). The reference to intercession in this verse is identical in meaning to the one in 2:255 (see also 2:48c). That is God, your Lord, calls attention to God's Divinity (ulūhiyyah) and Lordship (rubūbiyyah), which demand that His Unity be declared (JJ) and that worship be dedicated to Him alone (IK). Whenever That is God, your Lord appears in the Quran (see 6:102; 10:32; 35:13; 39:6; 40:62; 40:64; cf. 42:10), it precedes or is preceded by a reference to some palpable interaction of God with His creation. Will you not remember? is understood by some commentators to refer to the act of reflection (see 6:50), the least degree of which will turn one's attention to God's Divinity and Lordship (Bḍ, Kā).

④ Unto Him is your return all together; God's Promise is true. Verily He originates creation, then He brings it back, that He may recompense with justice those who believe and perform righteous deeds. As for the disbelievers, theirs shall be a drink of boiling liquid and a painful punishment for having disbelieved.

4 Some say that since the preceding verse began with a mention of the Origin of creation, this verse begins by speaking of the return to God (R; see also 6:60), which here denotes the Resurrection (Aj, Bḍ). This is also reflected in originates creation and brings it back (see also 10:34; 27:64; 30:11, 27). The references here to God's originating creation and bringing it back form the basis of the complementary Islamic cosmogonic and eschatological terms known as the Origin (mabda') and the Return (ma'ād; for the latter, see 28:85). In the Quran, the Resurrection marks the Return to God and hence to one's Origin (see 7:172c). Because returning to God entails receiving recompense for actions committed on earth (N, Q), while believers who acted righteously are promised a recompense with justice from God (cf. 30:45; 34:4), and the recompense of the disbelievers will be a drink of boiling liquid (see also, e.g., 6:70; 37:67; 56:42) as well as a painful punishment, and this because judgment shall be rendered between them with justice, and they will not be wronged (vv. 47, 54).

⑤ He it is Who made the sun a radiance, and the moon a light, and determined for it stations, that you might know the number of years and the reckoning [of time]. God did not create these, save in truth. He expounds the signs for a people who know.

5 The sun, whose splendor is described here as a radiance, and the moon, which is called a light (see also 25:61) since it receives its luminosity from the sun (Bḍ), are said to have been created in truth (see also, e.g., 16:3; 29:44), which means that they possess reality and purpose and have not been created in vain (3:191; 38:27; see also 21:16; 44:38; JJ, R, Z). For the general function of the sun and the moon in regulating one's daily activities, see 2:189c; 36:40c. For the moon's stations, see 36:39c.

⑥ Surely in the variation of the night and the day and whatsoever God has created in the heavens and on the earth are signs for a people who are reverent.

6 The people who are characterized here as reverent are those who are mindful of God and fearful of their final outcome in the Hereafter (Aj, JJ); on the concept of reverence, or taqwā, see 2:2c. This attitude leads them to reflect deeply upon the nature of things (R). The ebb and flow of the night and the day (see also 2:164; 3:190; 23:80; 45:5) indicate to them the impermanent and transient nature of this life, as do the innumerable beings that God has created in the heavens and on the earth, each of which is characterized by finitude (Aj, Bḍ, R). Thus, the signs contained in the fleeting phenomena that make up the "world" also remind the reverent of their eternal, unique, and everlasting Source (Aj, R, Ṭb). A famous couplet by the poet Abu'l-°Atāhiyah (d. 213/828) says, "In each thing there is a sign, being proof that He is One."

⑦ Truly those who anticipate not the meeting with Us, and who are content with the life of this world and feel secure therein, and who are heedless of Our signs,

7–8 The meeting with God is a reference to the general Islamic belief in the encounter with Him on the Day of Resurrection (Ṭ, Ṭs). To anticipate the meeting with God refers to the desire to receive His Recompense and Mercy in the Hereafter (R), and to the supreme hope of attaining the beatific vision of God in Paradise (Q; see 75:22–23c). People who reject the idea of a Hereafter are therefore characterized as those who anticipate not the meeting with Us (Ṭ, Ṭs); see also 2:46; 10:11, 15; 18:110; 25:21. Rather, they are content with the life of this world and feel secure therein (cf. 11:15, 13:28), directing all of their aspirations toward this world and its transient trappings (Ṭ, Z) and acting as though they will remain in it forever (Kl, Ṭ, Z). They, therefore, become heedless of God’s signs and their posthumous meeting with Him on account of that which they used to earn in the world by their fervent dedication to it (Bḍ). In this regard, the Prophet is reported to have said, “He who loves to meet God, God loves to meet him; he who disdains to meet God, God disdains to meet him.”

⑨ Truly those who believe and perform righteous deeds, their Lord guides them by their faith. They shall have rivers running below them in Gardens of bliss.

9 Guides them by their faith (cf. 3:86; 48:4) means that God will increase them in guidance (Q), that He will grant them a light with which they will be guided on the Day of Resurrection (JJ; see also 66:8), or that He will guide them to Paradise as a reward for their faith and righteous deeds (R, Z). The rivers running below will flow before the inhabitants of Paradise in Gardens of bliss (see also, e.g., 22:56; 37:43), while they are seated upon raised couches (88:13; R; see also 2:25c; 4:57c).

⑩ Their supplication therein shall be, “Glory be to Thee, O God!” And therein their greeting shall be, “Peace.” And the conclusion of their supplication shall be, “Praise be to God, Lord of the worlds!”

10 Many commentators note that supplication in this context is understood to mean a form of magnification and praise (R, Sh, Ṭs, Z). Peace, which is the common greeting among Muslims in this world, is also the greeting among the people of Paradise and is what they will hear from God and the angels (Aj, Z; see, e.g., 14:23; 33:44; 36:58; 39:73). For Paradise as the Abode of Peace, see 10:25c (see also 19:62; 56:26).

11 Were God to hasten evil for mankind, even as they would hasten the good, their appointed term would have been concluded. But We leave those who anticipate not the meeting with Us to wander confused in their rebellion.

11 It is said that this verse was revealed when the Makkans challenged God, saying, Rain down stones upon us from the sky (8:32; Q, Z). The verse makes clear the point that, were the evil that they were calling upon to come to them as quickly as God grants them the good things they seek, their appointed term would have been concluded; that is, they would have been destroyed (JJ, Z). Yet, God gives them respite out of His Divine Wisdom (Ṭb; see 68:45c; 71:4c; 86:17). For those who do not anticipate the meeting with God, see 10:7–8c (see also v. 15; 25:21). They are left to wander confused (see 2:15c), which is to say that they are left in a state of bewilderment (JJ, Q) in their rebellion (see also 2:15c; 6:110; 7:186; 10:11; 23:75), namely, in their condition of error and associating partners with God (N).

12 And when harm afflicts man, he calls upon Us, [lying] on his side, or sitting, or standing. Then, when We remove his affliction from him, he carries on as if he had not called upon Us concerning the harm that had befallen him. Thus is that which they used to do made to seem fair unto the prodigal.

12 When harm afflicts (see also 17:67; 39:8) refers to the fact that when difficulties occur (Ṭ), such as sickness and poverty (JJ), people ask for God's Help to take away the afflictions (Bḍ). Then, when God removes the affliction, they forget their troubled state and God's Help in taking away the afflictions and go back to their old ways of being heedless of God and pursuing their own caprices (Ṭ, Ṭb). The prodigal, therefore, are those who have the ability to turn to God (which becomes apparent at the time of their affliction), but who choose to expend their energies in seeking worldly objects instead. Al-Rāzī explains it as follows: "A 'prodigal' person is one who expends much wealth for a lowly purpose. It is well known that the pleasures and delights of this world are very lowly in comparison to the felicities of the Abode of the next life. God has given man the senses, an intellect, understanding, and strength in order to acquire these majestic felicities. But whoever exhausts these noble tools in order to gain those [aforementioned] lowly, bodily delights has expended many majestic things in order to gain lowly and vile things. Such a person is surely one of the prodigal." For the wider Quranic theme of people's actions being made to seem fair to them, see 3:14c; 6:42–44c.

13 We have indeed destroyed generations before you when they did wrong, and their messengers brought them clear proofs, but they would not believe. Thus do We recompense the guilty people.

13 Here generations means previous religious communities (JJ), such as the people of Noah and those of Hūd (IH). These communities were destroyed when they did wrong (see also 18:59), that is, when they ascribed partners to God (Bg, Kl) or denied the Truth (Bḍ). For the clear proofs brought by messengers to past nations, see 2:87c; 2:92c; and the introduction to Sūrah 98. Wording identical to thus do We recompense guilty people also appears in 46:25. Here guilty people refers to the disbelievers (see also 77:16–19c).

14 Then We made you vicegerents upon the earth after them, that We might observe how you behave.

14 For the different Quranic senses of vicegerent, see 2:30c. That We might observe how you behave does not indicate any deficiency in knowledge on God's part that would result in His placing vicegerents upon the earth in order to see or come to know how His servants behave. Rather, that We might observe is understood to mean “in order for it to be made manifest in existence” (Kl); and how in the expression how you behave means, according to Arabic rhetoric, “how it is” (Āl; see also 3:140; 5:94; 57:25; 67:1). Thus, that We might observe how you behave means something like “in order for it to be manifest in existence how it is that you will behave” (see also 2:143c).

⑮ And when Our signs are recited unto them as clear proofs, those who anticipate not the meeting with Us say, “Bring a Quran other than this, or alter it.” Say, “It is not for me to alter it of my own accord. I follow only that which is revealed unto me. Truly I fear, should I disobey my Lord, the punishment of a tremendous day.”

15 God’s signs often refer to the Quran’s verses, or āyāt, a term that also means more generally “signs” or “portents” in Arabic (see 3:7c; 41:53c; 45:3–9c). By them and those who anticipate not the meeting with Us (see also 10:7–8c) is meant the Makkian idolaters (Q) and, by implication, all others who turn against God. The Quran’s condemnation of the Makkans’ false deities was one of the main reasons they demanded that the Prophet bring a different scripture or at least alter the present one (My, Ṭū, W, Z). The Prophet is instructed to respond by saying, It is not for me to alter it of my own accord. Al-Rāzī points out that, on the surface, this reply only speaks to the request to alter the Quran. But the answer actually addresses both requests, since by denying the possibility of changing the Quran in its present form, it is, a fortiori, even more impossible to bring an entirely new scripture (R). The fact that the Prophet insisted that he could not change the Quran served as an argument to the Makkian idolaters that he had no role in its authorship (R), which is why he was instructed by God to say, I follow only that which is revealed unto me (see also 6:50; 53:3–4).

⑯ Say, “Had God willed, I would not have recited it unto you; nor would He have made it known to you. Indeed, I tarried among you for a lifetime before it. Do you not understand?”

16 Continuing the previous verse, this verse reiterates that the Prophet is simply the conduit for the revelation of the Quran. I tarried among you for a lifetime before it refers to the fact that the Prophet was born and raised in Makkah, and by the time the Quran was revealed to him at the age of forty he was a well-known member of Makkan society (see 9:128), having earned a reputation among his people as an honest and truthful man (K, Z). Indeed, even before the coming of Islam, the Makkans used to refer to him as “the Trustworthy” (al-Amīn). As the Prophet’s cousin Ja‘far ibn Abī Ṭālib said to the Negus (for whom, see 2:115c; 5:82–83c), “God sent a messenger to us whose truthfulness, lineage, and trustworthiness we [all] know” (IK). Hence the Prophet is instructed to ask the Makkan idolaters, Do you not understand?; that is, “Given the fact that you know that I am not a liar, why do you not ponder and reflect in order to realize that the Quran that has been revealed to me is from none other than God?” (Bḍ, JJ, My).

①⑦ And who does greater wrong than one who fabricates a lie against God or denies His signs? Surely the guilty will not prosper.

17 This verse accentuates the point that, were the Prophet to have fabricated a lie against God or denied His signs, none would have done a greater wrong against him than he would have done against himself (R; see also 6:93; 11:19; 61:7). Some commentators argue that since the Prophet is truthful and is simply communicating what is revealed to him from God, those who deny him are in fact the ones who have wronged themselves, which is why they are described as the guilty (R; see also v. 13; 6:21, 135; 12:23).

①⑧ They worship apart from God that which neither harms them nor benefits them. And they say, “These are our intercessors with God.” Say, “Would you inform God about something in the heavens or on the earth that He does not know? Glory be to Him and exalted is He above the partners they ascribe!”

18 Some Makkans believed that the idols belonging to the pre-Islamic pantheon, such as al-Lāt, al-‘Uzzah, and Manāt (see 4:117–19c; 22:52c; 53:19–20c), would intercede with God to rectify the affairs related to their livelihood in this world (Q; cf. 2:48c). But since these idols are lifeless objects crafted by human hands (see 37:95), they are rejected here as possessing neither harm nor benefit for those who worship them (Aj, Q; see also 5:76; 6:71; 21:66–67; 22:12; 25:55). Rather, the Quran insists that unto God belongs intercession altogether (39:44), which does not exclude the possibility that He will grant the power of intercession to others, such as the Prophet and some saints (see 2:48c; 2:255c). The claim that the idols would intercede with God is met with a rhetorical question, Would you inform God about something in the heavens or on the earth that He does not know? (see also 2:255; 58:7). For the expression Glory be to Him and exalted is He above the partners they ascribe unto Him, which is a statement of God’s utter transcendence and incomparability (IK), see also 16:1; 30:40; 39:67.

19 Mankind was but one community, then they differed. And if not for a Word that had preceded from thy Lord, judgment would have been made between them concerning that wherein they differed.

19 Although many commentators provide several interpretations of the Quranic reference to humanity as having been one community, what they differed over can generally be said to pertain to particular understandings of revelation (see 2:213c). Some commentators understand a Word that had preceded from thy Lord as alluding to God’s putting off His Judgment between those who differ with each other until the Day of Resurrection (Aj, Bd, JJ).

20 And they say, “Why has no sign been sent down unto him from his Lord?” Say, “Truly the Unseen belongs to God alone. So wait! Truly I am among those waiting along with you.”

20 Despite the fact that God’s signs were being given to the Prophet by virtue of the continuous revelation of the Quran, the Makkan idolaters insisted that yet another sign be sent down unto him, namely, one that conformed to their requests made in v. 15 (Z); for similar requests, see 6:37, 109; 13:7, 27. The Prophet is once again told to reiterate his passive relationship to the revelation, noting that whatever he receives issues from the Unseen, which belongs to God alone (Z; see also 11:123). The injunction at the end of the verse to wait serves a rhetorical function, meaning, “Wait, then, for the sign that you are seeking; I too am among those waiting along with you for God's Judgment between us in order for the one following the truth to triumph over the one following falsehood" (I, T).

21 When We make men taste mercy after hardship has befallen them, behold, they have a plot regarding Our signs. Say, "God is swifter in plotting." Surely Our messengers record whatsoever you plot.

21 Although this verse can be seen as applying to the human condition in general (see also 11:10; 30:36; 41:50; 42:48), many commentators say that it refers specifically to a severe seven-year drought that had afflicted the Makkans (T, Z). The Makkans approached the Prophet and asked him to pray to God to send them rain (Aj, Q). God sent abundant rain (JJ, T, Z), here described as mercy, but the Makkans then reverted to their old ways and "plotted" against God's signs; that is, they continued to reject and mock them (IK, Z). But God is swifter in plotting, since He is the best of plotters (3:54; 8:30). God's plotting is understood here to mean His Punishment (Bd), and more generally it refers to His control over the final outcome of things, as opposed to human "plotting," which by comparison is futile (see also 7:99; 13:42c; 14:46c; 27:50; 86:15–16). The messengers who record whatsoever they plot are identified by most commentators as the angels responsible for recording the deeds of human beings (JJ, Q, T, Z; see 80:15c; 82:10c).

22 He it is Who carries you over land and sea, even when you are sailing in ships, till, when they sail with them upon a favorable wind, and rejoice therein, there comes upon them a violent gale, and the waves come at them from every side, and they think they shall be encompassed by them. They call upon God, devoting religion entirely to Him: "If Thou savest us from this, we shall surely be among the thankful!"

22 Al-Rāzī observes that this verse serves as a clarification of v. 21, since that verse does not provide a specific example of how it is that people resort to a plot regarding God's signs after receiving His Mercy in the wake of some hardship that had befallen them. Thus, if v. 21 is understood to be of general import, the hardship that people experience is here described as a violent gale, with waves coming at them from every side to the point that they think they shall be encompassed by them. They call upon God, promising that if He saves them, they shall surely be among the thankful (see also 29:65; 31:32). Devoting religion entirely to Him (see also 29:65; 31:32) refers to their promise to God that they will not associate partners with Him (Z). Yet when they are delivered to safety, they forget the blessing of being saved and revert to their false beliefs and blameworthy character traits (R).

23 Then when He saves them, behold, they behave tyrannically upon the earth without right. O mankind! Your tyranny is only against yourselves—the enjoyment of the life of this world. Then unto Us shall be your return, whereupon We shall inform you of that which you used to do.

23 That such people behave tyrannically upon the earth without right means that they transgress God’s Command, while also acting corruptly (Bg, Z). O mankind! Your tyranny is only against yourselves—the enjoyment of the life of this world (see also 30:41) is one possible reading of this part of v. 23. Read with slightly different vowelings, the enjoyment of the life of this world (see also 3:14; 9:38; 28:60; 42:36; 43:35; cf. 13:26) can be understood as the predicate of the sentence. The sentence would then be rendered: “Your tyranny against yourselves is only the enjoyment of the life of this world” (R, T, Z). For the meaning of God’s informing His servants in the next life of that which they used to do, see 62:8c; see also 5:105c for additional references to this central Quranic eschatological teaching.

24 The parable of the life of this world is that of water which We send down from the sky: the earth’s vegetation, from which men and cattle eat, mingles with it till, when the earth takes on its luster and is adorned, and its inhabitants think they have gained mastery over it, Our Command comes upon it by night or by day, whereupon We make it a mown field, as if it had not flourished the day before! Thus do We expound the signs for a people who reflect.

24 After the mention of the life of this world in v. 23, v. 24 lays down a parable that draws attention to its evanescent nature (IJ, Kl; cf. 29:64); for a related parable, see 18:45. Al-Rāzī notes that this verse is aimed at those who are deluded by this world (see also 3:185) and have no concern for the Hereafter. When rain descends from the sky, the earth is rejuvenated and from it many different types of vegetation spring forth, which is referred to here as the process of the earth taking on its luster and becoming adorned. With its beautiful herbage and color, the earth’s garden brings delight to its inhabitants because of the multifarious ways in which they can benefit from it (R). Yet, in this state of being enamored by the garden, just when they think they have gained mastery over it, God’s Command, here understood to be a violent wind, torrent, or some kind of mighty blast (Kl, N, R, Z), comes upon it by night or by day—that is, at any moment (Th)—thereby obliterating its trees and vegetation (R), leaving the garden as a mown field. This verse prompts al-Rāzī to observe, “Such is the one who invests his heart in the pleasures of this world and its delights: when these things part from him, his sorrow becomes immense, and he grieves for them.”

25 And God calls unto the Abode of Peace, and guides whomsoever He will unto a straight path.

25 The opposite of the impermanent and illusory nature of the life of this world mentioned in vv. 23–24 is the Abode of Peace, to be found in the next life, which is the Abode of Permanence (40:39). Because “Peace” is one of God’s Names (see 59:23c; 6:127c), the Abode of Peace is where God “is,” namely, Paradise (Aj, Iḥ), which is why those in Paradise are described as being constantly engulfed in peace (see 19:62; 56:26). Many commentators draw attention to the connection between the words “peace” (salām) and “safety” (salāmah), noting that the inhabitants in Paradise are in a state of peace because they are safe from perishing (Iḥ, K, Qu, Th, Z).

God’s Act of “calling” is understood to be the process by which human beings come into being and are thereby within the scope of attaining felicity in the Hereafter (Ṭb), since the Abode of the Hereafter is life indeed (29:64). As al-Zamakhsharī says, “He calls all people to the Abode of Peace, but only those who are guided enter it.” Although God wishes for everyone to receive guidance, as He is not pleased with disbelief for His servants (39:7), His guiding whomsoever He will (cf. 2:142, 213; 24:46) is understood to mean that He grants guidance to those of His servants who He knows will benefit by it. In this sense God's "Will" is predicated upon His Wisdom (Āl, Z; see also 2:142, 213).

26) Unto those who are virtuous shall be that which is most beautiful and more besides. Neither darkness nor abasement shall come over their faces. It is they who are the inhabitants of the Garden; they shall abide therein.

27) And as for those who commit evil deeds, the recompense of an evil is one like it, and abasement shall overcome them. There will be none to protect them from God. [It will be] as if their faces are covered with dark patches of night. It is they who are the inhabitants of the Fire; they shall abide therein.

26–27 Many commentators understand that which is most beautiful to be a reference to Paradise (see also, e.g., 4:95; 13:18) and more besides to the vision of God in the Hereafter, alluded to in 75:23 and embraced by most Muslims as a possibility for the righteous in the Hereafter (JJ, Q, Qm, Ṭ, Th; see 75:23c), and according to Sufis, also in this life for those who attain spiritual perfection. When the Prophet was asked about the words Unto those who are virtuous shall be that which is most beautiful and more besides, he said, "When the inhabitants of Paradise enter Paradise and the inhabitants of the Fire enter the Fire, a caller will call out, 'O inhabitants of Paradise! You have a promise from God that He wishes to fulfill for you.' They will reply, 'And what can that be? Has God not [already] made heavy our scales [of good deeds], whitened our faces, caused us to enter into Paradise, and saved us from the Fire?' Then, He will remove the veil, and they will look upon Him. By God, God will give them nothing more beloved to them, nor anything cooler to their eyes, than the vision of Him" (Q).

Neither darkness nor abasement shall come over the faces of the inhabitants of the Garden because their faces shall be radiant, gazing upon their Lord (75:22–23). In contrast to this group are the inhabitants of the Fire—that is, the disbelievers (R)—whom abasement shall overcome (see 70:44c) on account of their evil deeds, for which they are recompensed in just proportion in accordance with God's Justice and Wisdom (R; see also 42:40; cf. 6:160). There will be none to protect them from God (see also 40:33) means that none will be able to save them from God's Wrath and Punishment (Z). For the phenomenon of faces being covered with darkness in the 28 On the Day when We shall gather them all together, then We shall say to those who ascribed partners unto God, “Stop there! You and your partners!” Then We shall separate them, and their partners will say, “It was not us whom you worshipped.

29 God suffices as a Witness between you and us. We were heedless of your worship.”

28–29 Them all together may include both the inhabitants of Paradise and the inhabitants of the Fire (Aj; see vv. 26–27); or, it may be limited to the inhabitants of the Fire, which would include the disbelievers (see v. 27) and their gods (My, Qu); see also 6:22. For the sin of ascribing partners unto God, see 4:48c. As al-Maybudī observes, a “partner” is anything [or being] that can be worshipped other than God. Thus, the partners who are associated with God can be physical idols, human beings (N, R), or even one’s own caprices, which are often taken as gods (see 25:43; 45:23). The famous Persian mystic °Ayn al-Quḍāt (d. 525/1131) wrote concerning this matter, “O dear friend! If you want the beauty of the secret [of self-knowledge] displayed to you, then let go of habit-worship, for habit-worship is idol-worship” (Tamhīdāt [Tehran, 1994], 12).

Just as Satan will be unable to help those who listened to him and will absolve himself of any responsibility to those who heeded his call (see 14:22; 59:16), those partners whom people associate with God will also absolve themselves of any responsibility toward those who served them, saying, We were heedless of your worship (cf. 34:22; 35:13–14c; 46:5–6). Whereas idols and the like are unable to speak in this world (see, e.g., 21:63–65), on the Day of Judgment they will be given the ability to speak (Sh), in accordance with 41:20–21: When they come upon it, their ears, their eyes, and their skins will bear witness against them for that which they used to do. And they will say to their skins, “Why did you bear witness against us?” They will reply, “God, Who makes all things speak, made us speak.” He created you the first time, and unto Him shall you be returned.

30 There and then every soul shall experience that which it did in the past, and they shall be brought back unto God, their true Master, and that which they used to fabricate will forsake them.

30 This verse can be read as initially speaking of both the obedient and the disobedient, and then ending with a specific reference to those who used to ascribe partners unto God (Bq, Z). There and then refers to the very place in which each soul is gathered before God (K; see v. 28), where it shall experience that which it did in the past, that is, the deeds it performed (Bq). When those who have lost their souls are brought back unto God, they will find nothing but that they are distant from God and therefore rejected by Him (Qu). This is because they devoted their lives to “gods” other than God (Qu), who, in reality, is their true Master. At the same time, they will also be forsaken by that which they used to fabricate (see 10:28–29c).

31 Say, “Who provides for you from Heaven and earth? Who has power over hearing and sight? And who brings forth the living from the dead, and brings forth the dead from the living, and who directs the affair?” They will say, “God.” So say, “Will you not, then, be reverent?”

31 From the Heaven and earth is understood to be a reference to rain and vegetation, respectively (Bg, Ṭs), while others note that such provision can be both bodily and spiritual (Q). Who has power over hearing and sight? means, “Who gives you hearing and sight?” (Bg, Ṭs), as in 46:26: And We endowed them with hearing, sight, and hearts (cf. 23:78; 32:9; 67:23). A response to the question, Who brings forth the living from the dead, and brings forth the dead from the living? can be seen in 30:19: He brings forth the living from the dead, and brings forth the dead from the living (cf. 6:95). In response to the questions posed in this verse, they, namely, the Makkans (R), will say, “God” (see also 29:61; 29:63; 31:25; 39:38; 43:87), because His Agency will immediately come to their minds when asked these questions (Aj, Kā), especially since a number of them had some form of belief in Allāh as the head of their pantheon of Arab gods (R; see 39:3; 10:18c). The question that the Prophet is told to ask, Will you not, then, be reverent? (see also, e.g., 7:65; 23:23, 32, 87; 26:11), addresses the Makkans’ seeing idols as partners with God and is meant to alert them to their current state of error and the impending punishment as a result of their beliefs (Z). For God’s directing the affair, see 10:3c.

32 That is God, your true Lord. What is there beyond truth but error? How, then, are you turned away?

32 That is God is an affirmation of the response provided in v. 31 (JJ, Z). Your true Lord (see also 6:95,102) is interpreted to mean that no one who has thought deeply about God can doubt His Lordship (T, Z).

33 Thus the Word of thy Lord came due for those who are iniquitous: truly they believe not.

33 The Word of thy Lord came due (see also 37:31; 41:25) relates to the actualization of the Divine Decree (Kl, Q), for which, see 54:49c. Because the iniquitous (see vv. 31–32) continued to ascribe partners unto God despite their knowledge of the true nature of God’s Sovereignty (see v. 31), the Word of thy Lord came due for them; that is, His Decree that they shall be among the wretched in Hell descended upon them (IK, Kl); see also v. 96; 40:6.

34 Say, “Is there, among your partners, one who originates creation and then brings it back?” Say, “God originates creation, then brings it back. How, then, are you perverted?”

34 For God’s originating creation and bringing it back, see v. 4. For the various partners that people ascribe unto God, see v. 28. In every verse in which How, then, are you perverted? appears (6:95; 35:3; 40:62), the question is prompted by a direct reference to God’s creative Power; see also 35:3c.

35 Say, “Is there any among your partners who guides unto Truth?” Say, “God guides unto Truth. Is one who guides unto Truth worthier to be followed, or one who cannot guide unless he be guided? What ails you? How do you judge?”

35 While v. 34 addresses the physical nature of people's origin and journey back to God, this verse addresses its spiritual nature (Bq), explaining that the guidance of the human soul unto Truth—that is, to God (Z), revelation (IH), and the correct path (Th)—is exclusively within God's purview. Whereas most commentators understand one who guides unto Truth as referring to God (Āl, JJ, Rb), the Shiite commentator al-Qummī sees it as an allusion to the guidance offered by the Prophet and the Imams. One who cannot guide unless he be guided refers to the futility of following those who cannot guide themselves, meaning that if they cannot even guide themselves, surely they cannot be expected to be able to guide others (Kl).

36 And most of them follow naught but conjecture. Truly conjecture does not avail against the truth in the least. Truly God knows what they do.

36 For the Quranic notion of conjecture, see 2:46c; 2:78c; 53:28c. God knows what they do (see also 2:283; 16:28; 35:8) is understood to be a threat against those who live their lives in conjecture, warning them that God is fully aware of their vile actions and their rejection of the Truth (Aj, Āl).

37 This Quran could not have been fabricated [by anyone] apart from God; rather, it is a confirmation of that which came before it, and an elaboration of the Book in which there is no doubt, from the Lord of the worlds.

37 This verse continues the argument made in vv. 15–16, namely, that the Quran has not been authored by the Prophet, but is from the Lord of the worlds (for this phrase, see 1:2c). The Quran is described here as confirming that which came before it (cf. 2:41, 89, 91, 97, 101; 3:3, 81; 5:48; 6:92; 35:31; 46:30), that is, the previous revealed scriptures (JJ), such as the Torah and the Gospel (Ṭ, Ṭb, Th). It is also characterized as elaborating the Book in which there is no doubt, a phrase that is usually understood to be a reference to the Quran itself (see 2:2 and commentary), but is here understood to refer to the laws and beliefs that God has ordained for Muslims to follow (Aj, JJ, Ni, Ṭ).

38 Or do they say, “He has fabricated it”? Say, “Then bring a sūrah like it, and call upon whomsoever you can apart from God, if you are truthful.”

38 What this verse is saying is, “If you claim that the Quran is imitable, then, apart from God, seek the help of whomsoever you can, and if you are truthful in your claim that it is fabricated by the Prophet (Bg, Z) and thus not from a Divine Source, then you will be able to produce a sūrah like it.” A sūrah like it is understood to mean a work that is similar to the entire Quran (Bg) or, more likely, as other commentators have asserted, one that is similar to another sūrah in eloquence, order, and beauty of meaning (Aj, R, Th, Z). For the Quran’s “challenge verses” (those calling upon others to produce something like the Quran), see 2:23c; 11:13; 17:88; 52:43c.

39 Nay, but they deny that whose knowledge they cannot comprehend and whose interpretation has not yet come to them. Even so did those who were before them deny. So behold how the wrongdoers fared in the end.

39 According to this verse, as soon as the disbelievers hear the Quran, they are quick to deny it without first understanding its message or deeply reflecting upon its meanings (N). As ʿAlī ibn Abī Ṭālib is reported to have said, “People are enemies of that of which they are ignorant” (Su, Ṭ’s). So behold how the wrongdoers fared in the end (see also 28:40) is meant to draw the attention of those who deny the truth that, like those who were before them, namely, previous human communities (IK), they too are heading toward destruction for rejecting God’s Message (IK). Throughout the Quran, the injunction to observe how a group of people have fared in the end also applies, among others, to the guilty, the corrupt, the schemers, and those who denied the warnings sent to them; see 3:137; 7:84–86, 103; 10:73; 12:109; 16:36; 27:14, 51, 69; 29:20; 30:9, 42; 35:44; 37:73; 40:21, 82; 43:25; 47:10.

40 Among them are those who believe in it, and among them are those who do not believe in it, and thy Lord knows best the workers of corruption.

40 Those who believe in it refers to those in Makkah who rejected the Prophet's message, but who God knows will come to believe in it later; those who do not believe in it are those who will never believe in it (Aj, Bd, JJ, Q, Ṭ). In it can also refer to the Prophet (Q), in which case it would be rendered "in him." For the status of the workers of corruption in God's Eyes, see 5:33c; 30:41c.

41 And if they deny thee, say, "Unto me, my deeds, and unto you, your deeds. You are quit of that which I do, and I am quit of that which you do."

41 Al-Ṭabarī glosses this verse as follows: "O Muhammad, if these idolaters disbelieve in you and reject from you that which you have brought to them, then say, 'O people! Unto me are my religion and deeds and unto you are your religion and deeds. Your actions shall not harm me, nor shall mine harm you. All those who perform actions will only be recompensed for the acts that they have performed.'" See also 26:216; 6:19c.

42 And among them are those who listen to thee. But dost thou make the deaf to hear, though they understand not?

42 For the context of this verse, see 6:25c. See also 43:40.

43 And among them are those who look at thee. But couldst thou guide the blind, though they see not?

43 Although deniers of the Prophet look at him, they are spiritually "blind" to his message, for it is not the eyes that go blind, but it is hearts within breasts that go blind (22:46); see also 43:40.

④④ Truly God does not wrong human beings in the least, but rather human beings wrong themselves.

44 For the manner in which God does not wrong human beings, see 4:40c. Since God is not unjust to human beings, He does not coerce them to perform wrong actions, and when they wrong themselves, they do so out of their free choice (R), and this is because the human being is an ignorant wrongdoer (33:72).

④⑤ On the Day when He shall gather them, it will be as if they tarried but an hour of the day, acquainting themselves with one another. Lost indeed are those who denied the meeting with God, and they were not rightly guided.

45 On how the disbelievers will deem their life in the world or the interval between their physical death and their resurrection as but an hour of the day, see 79:46c. For the loss the disbelievers will experience as a result of denying their meeting with God, see 6:31c.

④⑥ Whether We show thee a part of that which We promise them, or We take thee, their return shall be unto Us. Then God is Witness over that which they do.

46 God might show the Prophet the Makkan idolaters' punishment while he is still alive, as was the case at the Battle of Badr (Aj); or He might not show it to him during his lifetime. In the latter case, their return shall be unto God in the next world will be where God will show the Prophet their punishment (see also 40:77; Aj). For God as Witness, see 6:19c.

④⑦ For every community there is a messenger, and when their messenger comes, judgment shall be rendered between them with justice, and they will not be wronged.

47 For every community there is a messenger is one of the clearest Quranic verses that affirm the universality of revelation as a source of guidance for humanity, this truth being one of the major themes in the Quran. After the coming of God's messenger, His Judgment is rendered between the people of the community to whom the messenger has been sent with justice, which is to say that people are not taken to task until a messenger from God has offered them the option to follow Divine Guidance (R, Ṭb). Therefore, 17:15 says, And never do We punish till We have sent a messenger (R). Since a messenger comes with a message from God in accordance with the particular needs and times of each respective community to whom the messenger is sent, the specific doctrines and laws of each religion are different; see the essay "The Quranic View of Sacred History and Other Religions" as well as 16:36; 3:19c; 3:85c; 5:48c; 65:12c.

48 This verse cites what the disbelievers mockingly asked of the Prophet concerning the coming of the Hour and the Day of Resurrection, about which he warned them. They did so mockingly, since they expected a prophet to be able to foretell the future, but the Prophet did not have knowledge of when these events would take place (see 7:187); see also 21:38; 27:71; 34:29; 36:48c; 67:25.

49 Say, "I have no power over what harm or benefit may come to me, save as God wills. For every community there is a term. When their term comes, they shall not delay it by a single hour, nor shall they advance it."

49 The Prophet is told to say to the Makkan idolaters, upon their insistence that he should hasten God's Punishment (see v. 48; 10:11c), that he has no power over what harm or benefit may come to him, which is to say that neither he nor anyone else possesses the power to bring about God's Punishment (Q, Th, Z) or for that matter any benefit from Him (see also 7:188). For every community there is a term —that is, a specific life span known only to God—at the end of which that particular community will perish; alternately, it can be punished even before its earthly life comes to an end (Q); see also 7:34; 16:61; 71:4c.

50 Say, “Have you considered: if His Punishment should come upon you by night or by day, what part thereof would the guilty seek to hasten?”

51 And then, when it comes to pass, will you believe in it? Now? While you once sought to hasten it?

50–51 The disbelievers’ seeking to hasten God’s Punishment is mentioned in a number of places throughout the Quran (see 17:90–93; 22:47; 26:204; 29:53; 37:176; 42:18; 51:14). When the punishment that the Makkan idolaters were inquiring about befalls them, they will certainly not seek to hasten any of it, since all of His Wrath is terrible (N). Since their challenge in hastening God’s Punishment is itself evidence of their rejection of the truth (Z), if they “believe” when it comes to pass, it will be of no benefit to them (Q), as this would be like a deathbed repentance, much like that of Pharaoh, who, when his death was imminent, said, I am among those who submit (v. 90; see 4:17–18c; 10:90–92c).

52 Then it shall be said unto the wrongdoers, “Taste the punishment everlasting. Are you recompensed for aught save that which you used to earn?”

52 On the Day of Judgment (IK), these words will be spoken by God or by the angels who guard Hell (see 32:14c) to all of the wrongdoers, who are typified in vv. 49–51 by the Makkan idolaters. That which you used to earn (see also 27:90; cf. 83:36) refers to their disobedience of God and disbelief in Him (Bḏ).

The jurist and theologian Ibn Qayyim al-Jawziyyah (d. 751/1350), among others, argues that the root kh-l-d (from which derives the word khuld, translated here as everlasting) can refer to a long but ultimately finite measure of time (Shifā’ al-‘alīl [Jeddah, 1991], 2:228). Thus, he would likely understand the punishment mentioned here and in 32:14 as denoting a finite duration of chastisement. Such a reading would seem to be in keeping with the position that punishment in the Hereafter will not be “eternal” in an absolute sense; see 78:23c and the essay “Death, Dying, and the Afterlife in the Quran.”

53 And they inquire of thee, “Is it true?” Say, “Yea, by my Lord it is true, and you cannot thwart [it].”

53 The Makkan idolaters asked the Prophet if the promise of God’s Chastisement in the Hereafter is true (Ṭ). The Prophet is told to reply in the affirmative and to inform his interlocutors that they cannot thwart [it], which is to say that they will not be able to flee from or prevent God’s promised Punishment (Ṭ; see also 72:12c).

54 Were it so that each soul that had done wrong possessed all that is on the earth, he would surely seek to ransom himself thereby, and they will hide their remorse when they see the punishment. And judgment shall be rendered between them with justice, and they will not be wronged.

54 Had done wrong refers to disbelief in God and the ascription of partners unto Him (Q). On the idea of seeking to ransom oneself in the Hereafter, see 3:91; 5:36; 13:18; 39:47; 70:11. Although those about to enter the Fire will hide their remorse when they see the punishment (see also 34:33), when they are punished in it, they will exclaim, Our Lord! Our wretchedness overwhelmed us, and we were a people astray (23:106; Q). They will be judged with justice, because God wrongs not His servants (3:182; 8:51; 22:10; cf. 41:46; 50:29); see also 4:40c.

55 Truly unto God belongs whatsoever is in the heavens and on the earth. Verily God’s Promise is true, but most of them know not.

55 Vv. 53–54 suggest that God’s Promise mentioned here is in reference to His Punishment in the Hereafter (see also 46:17c). Because of their ignorance (Ṭs) and their heedlessness of God (Āl), most of them know not.

56 He gives life and causes death, and unto Him shall you be returned.

56 This verse says that life and death are entirely in God's Hands (see also 2:258; 3:156; 7:158; 9:116) and that we will all meet God when we die (see 10:7–8c). The Sufi commentator Rūzbihān al-Baqlī sees in this verse a reference to the manner in which God interacts with two spiritual types, namely, those who are given to knowing Him in a direct and experiential manner (“gnostics”) and those who approach Him by detachment from the world and its delights (“ascetics”): “He enlivens the hearts of the gnostics through [their] knowing and witnessing Him, and slays the egos of the ascetics through the lights of [their] awe at and vigilance toward Him. The Return of the gnostics is to the witnessing of His Beauty and Majesty, whereas the Return of the ascetics is to His Bounty and Blessing.”

57 O mankind! There has come unto you an exhortation from your Lord, and a cure for that which lies within breasts, and a guidance and a mercy for the believers.

57 An exhortation refers to the Quran (Aj, Kl, Ṭb). It is said to be a cure for that which lies within breasts, that is, for every kind of spiritual sickness that plagues the heart, such as ignorance, doubt, hypocrisy, and hatred (Aj, K, Kl); see also 17:82; 41:44.

58 Say, “In the Bounty of God and His Mercy—in that let them rejoice! It is better than that which they amass.”

58 Believers are to rejoice over God's Bounty, namely, the Quran, and His Mercy, namely, Islam (Mu, Q, Ṭ) or Muhammad, who was sent as a mercy unto the worlds (21:107; ST).

59 Say, “Have you seen that which God sent down unto you for provision? Then you made some of it forbidden and some lawful.” Say, “Has God granted you leave, or do you fabricate against God?”

60 What will those who fabricate lies against God conjecture on the Day of Resurrection? Truly God is Possessed of Bounty for mankind, but most of them do not give thanks.

59–60 For the context of these two verses, which have to do with the Makkan idolaters’ arbitrary ritualistic practices, see the commentary on 6:136–39. Sent down here is understood to convey the idea of being “created,” as in 39:6, which says that God sent down for you of cattle eight pairs (Q). Truly God is Possessed of Bounty for mankind (cf. 2:243; 12:38; 27:73; 40:61), that is, He gives them numerous blessings such as intelligence and sends them messengers who come with Divinely revealed books. But most of them do not give thanks, that is, most of them do not employ their intellects to ponder over God’s signs, follow the call of God’s messengers, or listen to and thereby benefit from His Divinely revealed books (Aj, Āl, IH, R).

61 Thou art not upon any task, nor dost thou recite any part of the Quran, nor do you perform any deed, save that We are a Witness over you when you engage therein. Not a mote’s weight evades thy Lord on earth or in Heaven, nor smaller than that nor larger, but that it is in a clear Book.

61 For God as the supreme Witness, see 3:18c. Any part of the Quran refers to reading any portion from the Quran (Kl). In his commentary on the next part of this verse, al-Rāzī says that a clear Book refers to “a book that God ‘has written’ and upon which He has established the forms of knowable things”; see also 5:15c; 99:7–8c.

Nor dost thou recite any part of the Quran reflects a reading of the syntax that, more literally, might be rendered, “Nor dost thou recite therefrom (minhu) any of the Quran,” understood to mean, “Nor dost thou recite any [of the Quran] from the Quran.” This rendering of minhu as “therefrom” could also allow one to interpret the verse to mean that the recitation of the Quran is one of the many tasks of the Prophet; that is, “Nor dost thou [as one of those tasks] recite any of the Quran” (R).

62 Behold! Truly the friends of God, no fear shall come upon them, nor shall they grieve—

63 those who believe and are reverent.

64 For them are glad tidings in the life of this world and in the Hereafter. There is no altering the Words of God. That is the great triumph.

62–64 Friends renders awliyā^o (sing. walī; see 3:28c; 4:88–90c). Although God’s friends here can generally denote those among the Muslims who are reverent (Aj, IK), it can also refer to a special group of individuals (Aj) who would correspond to “saints” in the Christian context. About them, the Prophet is reported to have said, “When they are seen, God is remembered” (IK, ST). The friends of God in this specific sense are thus a unique group of individuals who, because they have conquered their egos, are in perpetual proximity to God and totally consumed by Him. It is to this state that the poet Rūmī (d. 672/1273) alludes when summarizing the spiritual trajectory of his life: “The sum of my life is three sentences, no more: / I was raw, I was cooked, I was burned.”

This special group of people, God’s friends, shall therefore have no fear, because they constantly behold God’s Beauty; and they do not grieve, because they are continually bathed in the splendor of His Majesty (Rb). The glad tidings they receive in the life of this world come by way of the sweet taste and ecstasy they experience as they contemplate their Lord (Aj). The glad tidings they are promised in the Hereafter will come in the form of their encounter with God and the attainment of His Contentment (riḍā) and of the supreme vision of Him (My). There is no altering the Words of God (see also 6:34c; 6:115; 18:27) means that none can change or act contrary to this Promise of God (IK), that is, His Promise in vv. 62, 64 concerning His friends.

65 And let not their speech grieve thee. Truly might belongs altogether to God; He is the Hearing, the Knowing.

65 For the type of speech in question, see 36:76c. Might belongs altogether to

God means that all victory is with God (Aj; see also 4:139c). Since all things perish, save His Face (28:88; see also 55:26–27), nothing other than God can lay any claim to having true might or greatness (cf. 35:10). It is for this reason that the famous Egyptian Sufi Ibn ‘Aṭā’ Allāh al-Iskandarī (d. 709/1309) says, “If you seek greatness that does not perish, then seek not greatness that does perish” (Hikam, no. 86).

66 Behold! Truly unto God belongs whosoever is in the heavens and whosoever is on the earth. And what is it that they follow, those who call upon partners apart from God? They follow naught but conjecture, and they do but surmise.

66 They follow naught but conjecture, and they do but surmise is also found in 6:116. For the manner in which false beliefs are naught but conjecture, see 6:116–17c. For additional references to discussions related to conjecture, see also 10:36c.

67 He it is Who made the night for you, that you might rest therein, and the day by which to see. Truly in that are signs for a people who hear.

67 The first half of this verse is identical to a part of 40:61, and the second half to a part of 30:23. The night . . . that you might rest therein (cf. 40:61) refers to the respite from weariness after the work of the day, whereas the day by which to see relates to the pursuit of one’s livelihood (IH). See also 36:37c. According to a Sufi understanding, the night . . . that you might rest therein refers to the mystics’ engaging in spiritual retreat (khalwah) and intimate discourse with God (munājāt), whereas the day by which to see refers to their seeing the wonders of God’s Power and Wisdom in the created order that surrounds them (Su). A people who hear (cf. 30:23) refers to those who “listen” by reflecting upon God’s signs (Aj, Bg, Ṭs); see also 10:59–60c.

68 They say, “God has taken a child.” Glory be to Him! He is the Self-Sufficient. Unto Him belongs whatsoever is in the heavens and whatsoever is on the earth. You have no authority for this. Do you say about God that which you know not?

69 Say, “Surely those who fabricate a lie against God will not prosper.”

70 An enjoyment in this world, then unto Us shall be their return, and We shall make them taste severe punishment for their having disbelieved.

68–70 For extended discussions of the Islamic theological rejection of God’s having a child and the manner in which this constitutes “disbelief,” see 2:116c; 4:171c; 5:117–18c. The notion of authority is also invoked elsewhere in the Quran when discussing the ascription of partners to God; see 3:151; 6:81; 7:33, 71; 12:40; 30:35; 53:23. Often in the Quran, the religious innovations of previous religious communities are connected with the enormity of fabricating lies against God; see 3:24; 5:104; 6:21, 93, 137–40, 144; 7:37, 152; 16:56, 116.

71 And recite unto them the story of Noah, when he said to his people, “O my people! If my presence is grievous to you, and [so too] my reminding of the signs of God, then in God do I trust. So decide on your plan, you and your partners; then let there be no doubt concerning your plan, but carry it out against me, and grant no respite!

71 For the story of Noah, in addition to vv. 71–73 here, see 7:59–64; 11:25–48; 23:23–30; 26:105–21; 37:75–82; 54:9–15; Sūrah 71. If my presence is grievous to you is taken to mean “If my being among you causes you distress” (JJ, Ṭ), while and [so too] my reminding of the signs of God is understood to mean “and also my warning and admonishment to you” (JJ, Ṭ). Then in God do I trust signifies that “I care not what you will try to do to me, because I have consigned my affair to God on account of my firm reliance upon Him” (IJ, Ṭū). So decide on your plan means, in other words, “Resolve what you will try to do to me” (JJ), while then let there be no doubt concerning your plan is interpreted to mean “then do not conceal what you will try to do to me or act in a manner that is dubious, unclear, or equivocal” (Bḍ, Bg, IJ, JJ, Kā, Ṭ, Z).

72 And if you turn your backs, I have not asked of you any reward. My reward lies only with God, and I am commanded to be among those who submit.”

72 One of the marks of prophecy is that prophets do not seek recompense from the people to whom they have been sent. See the commentary on 36:21: Follow those who ask not of you any reward and who are guided.

73 Yet, they denied him. So We saved him and those with him in the Ark. And We made them vicegerents, and We drowned those who denied Our signs. So observe how those who were warned fared in the end.

73 Parts of this verse echo 7:64: Yet, they denied him. So We saved him and those who were with him in the Ark, and We drowned those who denied Our signs; and 7:69: Remember when He made you vicegerents after the people of Noah, and increased you amply in stature. For the different Quranic senses of the term “vicegerent,” see 2:30c; 6:165c.

74 Then, after him, We sent messengers unto their people, and they brought them clear proofs. But it was not for them to believe in that which they had denied beforehand. Thus do We set a seal upon the hearts of the transgressors.

74 Here the messengers refers to the pre-Islamic Arabian prophets Hūd, Ṣāliḥ, and Shu‘ayb as well as the Biblical figures Abraham and Lot, among others (Kl, Q). Denied beforehand refers to the fact that those people who rejected their respective messengers were already habituated to denying the truth, thereby closing themselves off to the possibility of accepting Divine Guidance when it was brought to them (Bḍ). For the sealing of hearts, see 2:7c.

75 Then, after them, We sent Moses and Aaron with Our signs to Pharaoh and his notables. But they waxed arrogant, and they were a guilty people.

75 For the story of Moses, see also, for example, 2:49–61; 7:103–55; 20:9–97; 26:10–66; 28:3–46; 79:15–25. The signs, also referred to as clear proofs (see 29:39), include Moses’ hand and staff (Mu). The notables in Pharaoh’s entourage were a group of dignitaries who had the highest social standing in Egyptian society (IT, Qm, Th). But they waxed arrogant (cf. 7:133; 23:46; 28:39; 29:39), meaning they were too proud to believe (Mu, My). Cf. 40:60: Truly those who are too arrogant to worship Me shall enter Hell debased.

76 So when the Truth came unto them from Us, they said, “Surely this is manifest sorcery!”

76 For references to similar accusations of sorcery made against Moses, Jesus, Muhammad, and other Divine messengers, see 5:110c.

77 Moses said, “Do you say [this] about the truth when it comes unto you? Is this sorcery? The sorcerers will not prosper.”

77 The sorcerers will not prosper on account of the futility of their craft, which is based on deception and falsehood (R); see also 20:69.

78 They said, “Have you come unto us to turn us away from that which we found our fathers following, so that grandeur in the land might belong to you two? We will not believe in the two of you!”

78 See also 5:104, which mentions the Makkan idolaters’ response when they were called to the Quran and the teachings of the Prophet: Sufficient for us is that which we have found our fathers practicing. This statement is then countered with a rhetorical question, What! Even if their fathers knew naught and were not rightly guided? See also 31:21.

79 Pharaoh said, “Bring me every knowing sorcerer.”

80 And when the sorcerers came, Moses said to them, “Cast what you would cast.”

81 And when they cast, Moses said, “That which you have produced is sorcery; God will soon bring it to naught. Surely God does not allow the deeds of those who work corruption to flourish.

82 God verifies the truth through His Words, though the guilty be averse.”

79–82 Every knowing sorcerer means the people most advanced in sorcery (Bq). Moses said to them, “Cast what you would cast,” not because he was affirming their sorcery, but rather to show the onlookers the falsehood of the sorcerers’ craft (R), which would soon be brought to naught. God verifies the truth through His Words means that the promises God made to Moses (for which, see 28:35) will soon come to pass and the truth will then become apparent (R).

83 But none believed in Moses, save some progeny from among his people, for fear of Pharaoh and his notables, that he would oppress them; for truly Pharaoh was exalted in the land, and he was indeed among the prodigal.

83 The his in save some progeny from among his people can refer to either Moses or, less likely, Pharaoh (Kl). If the former, then some progeny can refer to a few young Israelite males. If the latter, then it can refer to several people connected to Pharaoh’s court, not least of whom was his wife (for her belief in Moses, see 66:11c; Kl). Pharaoh was exalted in the land to the point that he even claimed to be a god, as he said, I am your lord most high (79:24). For the prodigal, see 10:12c.

84 And Moses said, “O my people! If you believe in God, then trust in Him, if you are submitters.”

84 Al-Maybudī glosses this verse as follows: “Moses said to his people, ‘If you want to submit to God, then have trust—bring the hand of submission out from the sleeve of contentment and withdraw from facing others. Know that, in reality, people possess nothing—in deception, there is no gain. Bestowal and withholding are only by virtue of the wisdom of the Wise One—the Apportioner is kind, not unaware.’”

85 And they said, “In God do we trust. Our Lord! Make us not a temptation for the wrongdoing people.

86 And save us through Thy Mercy from disbelieving people.”

85–86 For the manner in which believers can be a temptation for those who reject the truth, see 60:5c.

87 And We revealed unto Moses and his brother, “Appoint for thy people houses in Egypt, and make your houses places of worship and perform the prayer, and give glad tidings unto the believers.”

87 Since Pharaoh destroyed the Israelites’ places of worship, God revealed to Moses and Aaron that they should select dwellings that would function as temples (masājid) so that they could reestablish their devotional duties (Th). Another plausible interpretation of this verse, which does not necessarily preclude the first explanation, is that the Israelites, out of fear of persecution by Pharaoh, were granted permission by God to establish prayer spaces (muṣallā) or temples in their homes (JJ, Ṭ, Th).

88 Moses said, “Our Lord! Truly Thou hast given Pharaoh and his notables ornament and wealth in the life of this world, our Lord, so that they may lead astray from Thy way. Our Lord! Blot out their wealth and harden their hearts, so that they will not believe till they see the painful punishment.”

89 He said, “Your supplication has been answered. So stand firm, and follow not the way of those who know not.”

88–89 Al-Rāzī observes that the Arabic for so that they may in Moses’ statement so that they may lead astray from Thy way can also be read “lest they should.” The latter reading would render Moses’ words an assessment of the general situation, namely, that God has given Pharaoh and his notables an abundance of wealth so that they do not lead others astray from God’s way. For the phenomenon of God’s hardening some people’s hearts, see 5:13c.

90 We carried the Children of Israel across the sea, and Pharaoh and his hosts pursued them out of envy and enmity till, when drowning overtook them, he said, “I believe that there is no god but the One in whom the Children of Israel believe, and I am among those who submit.”

91 Now, though previously you disobeyed and were among the workers of corruption?

92 Today We shall save you in your body that you might be a sign unto those who come after you. Yet many among mankind are heedless of Our signs.

90–92 See 2:50c. Pharaoh’s “repentance” is met with a rhetorical question, which is understood to mean, “You want to repent now that you have no other alternative? This shall never be accepted from you!” (Kl). See also 10:50–51c; 4:17–18c. We shall save you in your body means that Pharaoh’s dead body will not sink to the depths of the sea, as will be the case with the bodies of the hosts. Rather, it will be preserved upon a raised surface of earth so that it will be a sign unto those who come after (Aj, Kl).

93 Certainly We settled the Children of Israel in a sure settlement, and We provided them with good things. They differed not till knowledge came unto them. Thy Lord will surely judge between them on the Day of Resurrection concerning that wherein they differed.

93 A sure settlement refers to a comely dwelling in Palestine or Syria (Bḏ, Ṭs). By good things is meant the good and pure foods that were made lawful for them (IJ). They differed over matters of religion, but only after knowledge of the Torah came unto them (Bḏ); see also 3:19; 45:17.

94 So if thou art in doubt concerning that which We have sent down unto thee, ask those who recite the Book before thee. The truth has certainly come unto thee from thy Lord. So be thou not among the doubters.

95 And be not thou among those who deny the signs of God, lest thou shouldst be among the losers.

94–95 Although these verses are directly addressed to the Prophet, it is the disbelievers (Kl, Q) or possibly people in general (IṬ, Ṭs) who are the intended audience. Those who recite the Book before thee are the Jews and Christians, who recite the Torah and the Gospel, respectively (Kl); see also 2:146 and 6:20, where the People of the Book are said to recognize the truth of the Quran.

96 Truly those for whom the Word of thy Lord has come due will not believe, 97 though every sign should come unto them, till they see the painful punishment.

96–97 On the manner in which God's Word comes due for people, see 10:33c.

See also 10:74c; 2:7c. That they will not believe . . . till they see the painful punishment suggests that their belief arises out of a state of despair as they are faced with their impending doom (N), as was the case with Pharaoh in v. 91; or it can refer to their believing only at the time of their punishment in the Hereafter, a time when everyone will “believe” (see 102:6–7c).

98 Why has not a single town believed and benefitted from its belief, other than the people of Jonah? When they believed, We removed from them the punishment of disgrace in the life of this world, and We granted them enjoyment for a while.

98 The people of Jonah, after seeing some signs of the imminent punishment about which they had been warned by their prophet on account of their disbelief, accepted his message and were spared destruction (Bg, JJ, Kl). For the Quranic account of Jonah, see 37:139–48. See also 68:48–50c.

99 And had thy Lord willed, all those who are on the earth would have believed all together. Wouldst thou compel men till they become believers?

99 Many Muslim theologians argue that if God wanted to compel all people to believe, then He would have done so. But He has willed instead that they come to believe in Him by their own free choice (N). Thus, human beings must either accept God or deny Him, which is why the Quran says, So let him who will, take a way unto his Lord (73:19; 76:29). See also the essay “The Quran and Schools of Islamic Theology and Philosophy.”

100 It is not for a soul to believe, save by God’s Leave. And He lays defilement upon those who understand not.

100 Despite the fact that people have been given the choice to believe or not believe in God, the blessing of belief itself is contingent on God’s allowing His servants to know Him. As the early Sufi figure Dhu'l-Nūn al-Miṣrī (d. 245/859 or 248/861) is reported to have said, "I came to know my Lord through my Lord. Had it not been for my Lord, I would not have known my Lord" (al-Risālat al-qushayriyya [Damascus, 2000], 475). The defilement that God lays upon those who understand not is either His Wrath or His Punishment (Bg, JJ, N).

101 Say, "Observe that which is in the heavens and on the earth." But neither signs nor warnings avail a people who believe not.

101 For the reason why neither signs nor warnings avail a people who believe not, see 10:74c.

102 Do they wait for aught save the like of the days of those who passed away before them? Say, "So wait! Truly I am waiting along with you."

102 This verse asks if the Makkani idolaters wait for the kind of punishment that afflicted previous nations for rejecting their prophets (IK). For the challenge to wait, see 10:20c.

103 Then We save Our messengers and those who believe. Thus is it incumbent upon Us to save the believers.

103 Then We save Our messengers is in the present tense, but refers back to the messengers belonging to the days of those who passed away before (v. 102) and thus means, "Then we saved Our messengers" (Bg, IK, JJ, Kl, Ṭ, Z). It is incumbent upon Us to save the believers means that God will deliver Muhammad and his followers from the persecution of the Makkans (Bg, JJ, Kl, Ṭ, Z), just as He delivered previous messengers and their followers from their persecutors (Ṭ).

104 Say, "O mankind! If you are in doubt concerning my religion, then

[know that] I worship not those whom you worship apart from God; rather, I worship God, Who shall take you [unto Himself]. And I am commanded to be among the believers, 104 For an exposition of the points raised in this verse, see the commentary on 109:1–6. I worship God is qualified by Who shall take you [unto Himself] in order to demonstrate the stark contrast between the God the Prophet worships and the gods that the Makkans idolaters serve. The God of the Prophet is their true Master (6:62), the One Whom people will meet after they die and Who shall inform them of what they used to do (5:105), whereas the Makkans' gods do not have any role to play beyond this worldly life.

105 and 'Set thy face toward the religion as a ḥanīf, and be thou not among the idolaters.

105 To set one's face toward the religion as a ḥanīf refers to the complete sincerity that one should have in serving God and turning away from what is other than Him (R); see also 2:112; 3:20; 6:79c; 7:29; 31:22; 30:43. For the concept of ḥanīf, see 2:135c; 30:30c.

106 And call not, apart from God, upon that which neither benefits thee, nor harms thee. For if thou dost so, thou shalt surely be among the wrongdoers.'"

107 And if God should touch thee with affliction, none can remove it save He; and if He desires some good for thee, none can hold back His Bounty. He causes it to fall upon whomsoever He will among His servants. And He is the Forgiving, the Merciful.

106–7 For the notion that nothing other than God can bring about benefit or harm, see 6:17c. That God causes it, namely, some good (Ṭs) or His Bounty (IH), to fall upon whomsoever He will is akin to 2:212, which says that God provides for whomsoever He will without reckoning; see 2:212c.

108 Say, “O mankind! The Truth has come unto you from your Lord. Whosoever is rightly guided is only rightly guided for the sake of his own soul, and whosoever is astray is only astray to its detriment. And I am not a guardian over you.”

108 According to this verse, now that the truth, understood here as the Quran (Bḍ, IH, Q) or the Prophet (Bḍ, Q), has come to people, they have no excuse for rejecting it (Bḍ). If they believe in the Truth and follow it, that will be to their benefit (Āl, Bḍ), but if they disbelieve in it, it will be to their detriment (Q). Although being rightly guided and going astray are based on one’s efforts from one perspective, the matter is ultimately in God’s Hands, as in 7:178: Whomsoever God guides, he is rightly guided; and 7:186: Whomsoever God leads astray, no guide has he; see also 17:97; 18:17; 32:24; 39:36–37; 74:31. Elsewhere the Quran states that guidance is entirely dependent upon God (2:120; 3:73; 6:71; 14:4; 16:93).

The Prophet is told to say, I am not a guardian over you (cf. 6:104; 11:86), since he is not a warder over his people (88:22), but is only a bearer of glad tidings and a warner (17:105); these two functions, to bring good tidings and to warn, characterize the mission of all prophets, for which, see 4:165c.

109 And follow that which has been revealed unto thee, and be patient till God renders judgment, and He is the best of judges.

109 Be patient till God renders judgment is seen as a promise by God to Muhammad that He would help him overcome his enemies and that he would be victorious over them (Bg, Kl, Th); see also 52:48c. Some commentators maintain that this verse was later abrogated by 9:5 (Q, Ṭ, Th); see the essay “Conquest and Conversion, War and Peace in the Quran.”

Hūd

Hūd

H*ūd* is the second in a series of six sūrahs whose opening verses include the letters alif, lām, and rāʾ, and which speak of the Book. As is clear from its content and message, this sūrah was revealed after Sūrah 10 and thus belongs to the earlier Makkan period (JJ), with the possible exception of vv. 12, 17, and 114, which are said by many commentators to have been revealed in Madinah (JJ). However, the context of v. 12 clearly situates it in the Makkan period, at the height of the Makkan idolaters' opposition to the Prophet's mission.

Concerning this sūrah and several others (i.e., Sūrahs 56, 77, 78, and 81), the Prophet is reported to have said, "Hūd and her sisters have turned my hair gray." The sūrah begins with the Prophet's call to the Makkan idolaters to worship the one true God (v. 2), promising them punishment if they turn away from this call (v. 3). It also seeks to address certain difficulties the Prophet encountered with the Makkans during the earlier phases of his prophetic mission, such as their concealed animosity toward him (v. 5), their rejection of the Resurrection (v. 7), their outrageous demands that he demonstrate the veracity of his message (v. 12), and their accusations that the Quran was fabricated (v. 13).

The sūrah then transitions to a long section (vv. 25–99) that recounts the stories of the prophets Noah (vv. 25–48), Hūd (vv. 50–60, from which the sūrah derives its title), Šāliḥ (vv. 61–68), Abraham (vv. 69–76), Lot (vv. 77–83), Shuʿayb (vv. 84–95), and Moses (vv. 96–99). This section has many parallels with 7:59–136, serving here to console the Prophet in the environment of the Makkan idolaters' growing hostility toward him and the believers. It demonstrates to the Prophet the manner in which the previous prophets also faced great trials in delivering their message to their people and describes how, in the end, they overcame their opponents with the Help of God. Thus at the end of the sūrah, the Prophet is told that these stories have been related to make his heart firm (v. 120), pointing to one of the main effects of the sacred history recounted in the Quran. The remaining verses in the sūrah encourage the Prophet and the believers, among other matters, to persist in the prescribed prayers (v. 114), be patient (v. 115), and trust in God (v. 123).

① Alif. Lām. Rā. A Book whose signs have been determined, then expounded, from the Presence of One Wise, Aware. ② “Worship none but God. Truly I am a warner from Him, and a bearer of glad tidings. ③ And seek forgiveness from your Lord; then turn unto Him in repentance. He will grant you goodly enjoyment for a term appointed and give His Bounty unto everyone possessed of merit. But if you turn away, then truly I fear for you the punishment of a great Day. ④ Unto God is your return, and He is Powerful over all things.” ⑤ Behold! They fold up their breasts to hide from Him. Behold! When they cover themselves with their garments, He knows that which they hide and that which they disclose. Truly He knows what lies within breasts. ⑥ There is no creature that crawls upon the earth but that its provision lies with God. And He knows its dwelling place and its repository. All is in a clear Book. ⑦ He it is Who created the heavens and the earth in six days, while His Throne was upon the water, that He may try you as to which of you is most virtuous in deed. Yet if thou sayest, “Truly you shall be resurrected after death,” the disbelievers will surely say, “This is naught but manifest sorcery!” ⑧ And if We grant them reprieve from the punishment for a limited time, they will surely say, “What holds it back?” Behold! On the day when it comes upon them, it shall not be turned away from them, and that which they used to mock will beset them. ⑨ And if We cause man to taste Mercy from Us, and then withdraw it from him, verily he is despondent, ungrateful. ⑩ And if We cause him to taste some favor after adversity has befallen him, he will surely say, “The evils have gone from me.” Verily he is exultant, boastful, ⑪ save those who are patient and perform righteous deeds; it is they for whom there shall be forgiveness and a great reward. ⑫ Perchance thou mightest omit some of that which We have revealed unto thee, and thy breast might be constrained because they say, “Why has no treasure been sent down upon him, or an angel not come with him?” Thou art only a warner, and God is Guardian over all things. ⑬ Or do they say, “He has fabricated it”? Say, “Then bring ten *sūrah*s like it, fabricated, and call upon whomsoever you can apart from God, if you are truthful.” ⑭ But if they answer thee not, then know that it has been sent down with God’s Knowledge and that there is no god but He. So are you submitters? ⑮ Whosoever desires the life of this world and its adornment, We shall pay them in full for their deeds therein, and therein they will not be deprived. ⑯ They are those for whom there shall be naught in the Hereafter but the Fire. Whatsoever they had wrought therein shall come to naught, and vain was that which they used to do. ⑰ So what of the one who stands upon a clear proof from his Lord, and for whom it is recited by a witness from Him? And before it there was the Book of Moses, a guide and a mercy. It is they who believe in it. And whosoever disbelieves in it from among the parties, the Fire is their tryst. So be not in doubt concerning it. Verily it is the truth from thy Lord, but most of mankind believe not. ⑱ And who does greater wrong than one who fabricates a lie against God? It is they who will be brought before their Lord, and the witnesses will say, “These are the ones who lied against their Lord.” Behold! The curse of God is upon the wrongdoers, ⑲ those who turn from the way of God and seek to make it crooked, and who disbelieve in the Hereafter. ⑳ Such as these cannot thwart [aught] on earth, and they have no protector apart from God. For them the punishment will be multiplied. They were not able to hear; neither did they see. ㉑ They are those who have lost their souls, and that which they used to fabricate has forsaken them. ㉒ There is no doubt that in the Hereafter they shall be the greatest losers. ㉓ Truly those who believe and perform righteous deeds and are humble before their Lord, it is they who are the inhabitants of the Garden; they shall abide therein. ²⁴ The parable of these two groups is that of one blind and deaf, and one hearing and seeing. Are they equal when compared? Will you not remember? ²⁵ Indeed, We sent Noah unto his people, “Truly I am unto you a clear warner, ²⁶ that you might worship none but God. Truly I fear for you the punishment of a painful day.” ²⁷ But the notables among his people who disbelieved said, “We see you as naught but a human being like us, and we see none who follow you, save the lowliest among us, as is clear to see. Nor do we see that you have any merit over us; nay, we think that you are liars.” ²⁸ He said, “O my people! What think you: if I stand upon a clear proof from my Lord, and He has granted me Mercy from Himself, and you are blind to it. Shall we force it upon you, though you are unwilling? ²⁹ O my people! I ask not of you any wealth in return for it; my reward lies only with God. And I shall not drive away those who believe; truly they shall meet their Lord. But I see that you are an ignorant people. ³⁰ O my people! Who would help me against God, were I to drive them away? Will you not remember? ³¹ I say not unto you that with me are the treasures of God; nor do I know the Unseen. And I say not that I am an angel; nor do I say of those who are despicable in your eyes, ‘God will not give them any good’—God knows best what is in their souls—for then I would indeed be among the wrongdoers.” ³² They said, “O Noah! You have disputed with us, and have prolonged the disputation; so bring upon us that wherewith you have threatened us, if you are among the truthful.” ³³ He said, “God alone shall bring it to you, if He will, and you cannot thwart [it]. ³⁴ And my sincere advice will not benefit you, much as I desire to advise you, if God desires to cause you to err. He is your Lord, and unto Him shall you be returned.” ³⁵ Or do they say, “He has fabricated it”? Say, “If I fabricated it, then my guilt is upon me; but I am quit of that which you commit.” ³⁶ And it was revealed unto Noah, “None of thy people shall believe, save those who had already believed. So be not distressed by that which they used to do. ³⁷ Build the Ark before Our Eyes and by Our Revelation. And address Me not concerning those who did wrong; surely they shall be drowned.” ³⁸ And he was building the Ark, and whenever notables among his people passed by him, they would scoff at him. He said, “If you scoff at us, surely we shall scoff at you, just as you scoff. ﴿39﴾ For soon you shall know upon whom there comes a punishment that disgraces him and upon whom there falls a punishment enduring.” ﴿40﴾ Till when Our Command came, and the oven gushed forth, We said, “Carry on board two of every kind, and thy family—save the one against whom the Word has already gone forth—and those who believe.” And none believed along with him, save a few. ﴿41﴾ He said, “Embark upon it. In the Name of God be its coursing and its mooring. Truly my Lord is Forgiving, Merciful.” ﴿42﴾ And it sailed with them upon waves like mountains. And Noah called out to his son, who remained aloof, “O my son! Embark with us, and be not with the disbelievers.” ﴿43﴾ He said, “I shall take refuge on a mountain; it will protect me from the water.” He said, “There is no protector on this day from the Command of God, save for the one upon whom He has Mercy.” And the waves came between them, and he was among the drowned. ﴿44﴾ And it was said, “O earth! Swallow your water! And O sky! Hold back!” And the water was made to recede, and the command was carried out, and it settled on [Mount] Jūdī. And it was said, “Away with the wrongdoing people!” ﴿45﴾ And Noah called out to his Lord and said, “O my Lord! Truly my son is from my family. Thy Promise is indeed true, and Thou art the most just of judges.” ﴿46﴾ He said, “O Noah! Truly he is not from thy family; surely such conduct was not righteous. So question Me not concerning that whereof thou hast no knowledge; truly I exhort thee, lest thou be among the ignorant.” ﴿47﴾ He said, “My Lord! Truly I seek refuge in Thee from questioning Thee concerning that whereof I have no knowledge. If thou dost not forgive me and have Mercy upon me, I shall be among the losers.” ﴿48﴾ It was said, “O Noah! Disembark with peace from Us, and blessings upon thee and upon the communities that [will arise] from those with thee, and communities for whom We shall grant enjoyment. Then a painful punishment from Us shall befall them.” ﴿49﴾ These are among the accounts of the Unseen that We reveal unto thee. Thou knewest not of them, neither thou nor thy people, beforehand. So be patient. Truly the end belongs to the reverent. ﴿50﴾

And unto ⁵¹Ād, their brother Hūd. He said, “O my people! Worship God! You have no god other than Him. You are naught but fabricators. ⁵¹ O my people! I ask not of you any reward for it. My reward lies only with the One Who originated me. Do you not understand? ⁵² O my people! Seek forgiveness from your Lord; then turn unto Him in repentance. He will send the sky upon you with abundant rain, and add strength to your strength. And turn not away, guilty.” ⁵³ They said, “O Hūd! You have not brought us a clear proof, and we shall not forsake our gods on your word, for we are not believers in you. ⁵⁴ We say only that one of our gods has smitten you with evil.” He said, “I call God as witness—and you be witness—that I am quit of that which you ascribe as partners ⁵⁵ apart from Him. So scheme against me then, all together, and grant me no respite. ⁵⁶ Truly I trust in God, my Lord and your Lord. There is no creature that crawls, but that He holds it by its forelock. Truly my Lord is upon a straight path. ⁵⁷ But if you turn away, [know that] I have delivered unto you the message wherewith I have been sent by Him. My Lord will cause you to be succeeded by a people other than yourselves, and you harm Him not in the least. Truly my Lord is Watcher over all things.” ⁵⁸ And when Our Command came, We saved Hūd and those who believed with him through a Mercy from Us; and We saved them from a grave punishment. ⁵⁹ That was ⁶⁰Ād. They rejected the signs of their Lord, disobeyed the messengers, and followed the command of every stubborn tyrant. ⁶⁰ And they were pursued by a curse in this world, and [shall be] on the Day of Resurrection. Behold! Truly ⁶¹Ād disbelieved in their Lord. Behold! Away with ⁶¹Ād, the people of Hūd! ⁶¹ And to Thamūd, their brother Ṣāliḥ. He said, “O my people! Worship God! You have no god other than Him. He brought you forth from the earth and settled you therein. So seek forgiveness from Him; then turn unto Him in repentance. Truly my Lord is Nigh, Responsive.” ⁶² They said, “O Ṣāliḥ! You were a source of hope among us before this. Do you forbid us to worship that which our fathers worshipped, while we remain in grave doubt about that to which you call us?” ⁶³ He said, “O my people! What think you: if I stand up on a clear proof from my Lord, and He has granted me Mercy from Himself, then who can help me against God, were I to disobey Him? For you would increase me in naught but loss. ﴿64﴾ O my people! This she-camel of God is a sign unto you. Leave her to graze freely on God's earth, and cause her no harm, lest you be seized by a punishment nigh." ﴿65﴾ But they hamstrung her. So he said, "Enjoy yourselves in your abode for three days—that is a promise that will not be belied." ﴿66﴾ So when Our Command came, We saved Ṣāliḥ and those who believed with him, through a Mercy from Us, and from the disgrace of that day. Truly thy Lord, He is the Strong, the Mighty. ﴿67﴾ The Cry seized those who did wrong, and morning found them lying lifeless in their abode, ﴿68﴾ as though they had never dwelt there. Behold! Truly Thamūd disbelieved in their Lord. Behold! Away with Thamūd! ﴿69﴾ And indeed Our messengers came to Abraham with glad tidings. They said, "Peace." "Peace," he said, and he hastened to bring them a roasted calf. ﴿70﴾ Then when he saw that their hands reached not toward it, he conceived a fear of them. They said, "Fear not. Verily we have been sent unto the people of Lot." ﴿71﴾ And his wife was standing there and she laughed. Then We gave her glad tidings of Isaac, and after Isaac, of Jacob. ﴿72﴾ She said, "Oh, woe unto me! Shall I bear a child when I am an old woman, and this husband of mine is an old man? That would surely be an astounding thing." ﴿73﴾ They said, "Do you marvel at the Command of God? The Mercy of God and His Blessings be upon you, O People of the House! Truly He is Praised, Glorious." ﴿74﴾ So when the awe had left Abraham and glad tidings had come unto him, he pleaded with Us concerning the people of Lot. ﴿75﴾ Truly Abraham was clement, tenderhearted, penitent. ﴿76﴾ "O Abraham! Turn away from this. Truly the Command of thy Lord has come, and surely a punishment that cannot be repelled comes upon them." ﴿77﴾ When Our messengers came to Lot, he was distressed on their account, and felt himself powerless concerning them. And he said, "This is a terrible day!" ﴿78﴾ And his people came hurrying toward him, while earlier they had been committing evil deeds. He said, "O my people! These are my daughters; they are purer for you. So reverence God, and disgrace me not with regard to my guests. Is there not among you a man of sound judgment?" ﴿79﴾ They said, "Certainly you know that we have no right to your daughters, and surely you know that which we desire.”

80 He said, “Would that I had the strength [to resist] you, or could seek refuge in some mighty support!” 81 They said, “O Lot! We are the envoys of thy Lord. They shall not reach thee. So set out with thy family during the night, and let none of you turn around, save thy wife; surely that which befalls them shall befall her. Indeed, the morning shall be their tryst. Is not the morning nigh?” 82 So when Our Command came, We made its uppermost to be its lowermost, and We rained down upon them stones of baked clay, one upon another, 83 marked by thy Lord; and they are never far from the wrongdoers. 84 And unto Midian, their brother Shu^cayb. He said, “O my people! Worship God! You have no god other than Him. Diminish not the measure and the balance. Truly I see you faring well, but I fear for you the punishment of an all-encompassing Day. 85 O my people! Observe fully the measure and the balance with justice and diminish not people’s goods, and behave not wickedly upon the earth, working corruption. 86 The remnant from God is better for you, if you are believers, and I am not a keeper over you.”

87 They said, “O Shu^cayb! Does your manner of praying require that we forsake that which our fathers worshipped, or that we should not do as we will with our wealth? Surely you are a man of forbearance and sound judgment.” 88 He said, “O my people! What think you: if I stand upon a clear proof from my Lord, and He has provided me with goodly provision from Himself? I desire not to do behind your backs that which I forbid you. I desire naught but to set matters aright so far as I am able; but my success lies with God alone. In Him do I trust and unto Him do I turn. 89 O my people! Let not your dissension with me lead you into sin, such that there should befall you that which befell the people of Noah, or the people of Hūd, or the people of Šāliḥ; and the people of Lot are not far from you! 90 And seek forgiveness from your Lord; then turn unto Him in repentance. Truly my Lord is Merciful, Loving.” 91 They said, “O Shu^cayb! We do not comprehend much of what you say, and verily we consider you to be weak among us. And were it not for your clan, we would surely stone you, for you have no power over us.” 92 He said, “O my people! Is my clan mightier over you than God? Yet, you would put Him behind you with disregard. Surely my Lord encompasses whatsoever you do. ﴿93﴾ O my people! Act according to your position; I, too, am acting. Soon you shall know upon whom there comes a punishment that disgraces him, and who is a liar. So keep watch! I, too, am among you watching.” ﴿94﴾ And when Our Command came, We saved Shu‘ayb and those who believed with him, through a Mercy from Us. And the Cry seized those who did wrong, and morning found them lying lifeless in their abode, ﴿95﴾ as though they had never dwelt there. Behold! Away with Midian, just as Thamūd was done away! ﴿96﴾ And indeed We sent Moses with Our signs and a manifest authority ﴿97﴾ unto Pharaoh and his notables. But they followed the command of Pharaoh, and the command of Pharaoh was not sound. ﴿98﴾ He shall go before his people on the Day of Resurrection and lead them to the Fire. Evil indeed is the watering place to which they are led! ﴿99﴾ And they were pursued in this [world] by a curse, and [shall be] on the Day of Resurrection. Evil indeed is the gift that will be offered them! ﴿100﴾ These are among the stories We have recounted unto thee of the towns. Among them are some that remain and some that have been mown down. ﴿101﴾ We wronged them not, but they wronged themselves. And their gods whom they called upon apart from God did not avail them in the least when the Command of thy Lord came, and they increased them in naught but ruin. ﴿102﴾ Such is the seizing of thy Lord when He seizes the towns while they are doing wrong. Surely His seizing is painful, severe. ﴿103﴾ Truly in that is a sign for those who fear the punishment of the Hereafter. That is a Day on which mankind shall be gathered together, and that is a Day that shall be witnessed. ﴿104﴾ And We delay it not, save for a limited term. ﴿105﴾ On the Day it comes, no soul shall speak save by His Leave. Among them shall be the wretched and the felicitous. ﴿106﴾ As for those who are wretched, they shall be in the Fire, wherein there shall be for them groaning and wailing, ﴿107﴾ abiding therein for so long as the heavens and the earth endure, save as thy Lord wills. Surely thy Lord does whatsoever He wills. ﴿108﴾ And as for those who are felicitous, they shall be in the Garden, abiding therein for so long as the heavens and the earth endure, save as thy Lord wills—a gift unfailing. 109 So be not in doubt concerning that which these [people] worship; they worship only as their fathers worshipped before. We shall surely give them their share, undiminished. 110 Indeed, We gave unto Moses the Book; then difference arose regarding it. And were it not for a Word that had preceded from thy Lord, judgment would have been rendered between them. Yet, truly they are confounded by doubt regarding it. 111 Surely for each, thy Lord shall pay them in full for their deeds. Truly He is Aware of what they do. 112 So be steadfast, as thou hast been commanded—and those who turn in repentance along with you—and be not rebellious. Truly He sees whatsoever you do. 113 And incline not toward the wrongdoers, lest the Fire should touch you—and you will have no protector apart from God. Thereafter you will not be helped. 114 And perform the prayer at the two ends of the day and in the early hours of the night. Truly good deeds remove those that are evil. This is a reminder for those who remember. 115 And be thou patient. Truly God neglects not the reward of the virtuous. 116 So why were there not among the generations before you those possessing merit, who would forbid corruption upon the earth, other than a few of those whom We saved among them? Those who did wrong pursued the luxuries they had been given, and they were guilty. 117 And thy Lord would never destroy the towns unjustly, while their people were reforming. 118 And had thy Lord willed, He would have made mankind one community. But they cease not to differ, 119 save those upon whom thy Lord has Mercy—and for this He created them. And the Word of thy Lord is fulfilled: “I shall surely fill Hell with jinn and men all together!” 120 All that We recount unto thee of the stories of the messengers is that whereby We make firm thine heart. And herein there has come unto thee the Truth, and an exhortation and a reminder for the believers. 121 And say unto those who believe not, “Act according to your position; we, too, are acting. 122 And wait! We, too, are waiting.” 123 Unto God belongs the Unseen in the heavens and on the earth, and unto Him are all matters returned. So worship Him, and trust in Him. And thy Lord is not heedless of that which you do.

Commentary

① Alif. Lām. Rā. A Book whose signs have been determined, then expounded, from the Presence of One Wise, Aware.

1 The Arabic letters alif, lām, and rā^o (which also appear in 10:1; 12:1; 13:1; 14:1; 15:1) are among the separated letters (al-muqattaʿāt) found at the beginning of twenty-nine sūrahs, whose ultimate meaning, most commentators attest, is known only to God; see 2:1c. That the Quran's signs are determined signifies that the Quran is clear and unambiguous in meaning (Q); see also 3:7c for a fuller discussion of this concept. Determined can also convey the idea that there are no contradictions in the Quran (Bḏ, Q); see also 4:82. For God's expounding the signs, see 6:55c; 7:174c; 41:3c.

② “Worship none but God. Truly I am a warner from Him, and a bearer of glad tidings.

2 The Quran's verses are determined and expounded, so that God may command people to worship only Him (R). This is one of several passages that refer to the Prophet as a bearer of glad tidings and a warner (5:19; 7:188; 10:2; 17:105; 25:56; 33:45; 34:28; 35:24; 48:8). In other verses these functions are attributed to all prophets (2:213; 4:165c; 6:48; 17:105c; 18:56).

③ And seek forgiveness from your Lord; then turn unto Him in repentance. He will grant you goodly enjoyment for a term appointed and give His Bounty unto everyone possessed of merit. But if you turn away, then truly I fear for you the punishment of a great Day.

3 The shunning of idols is a form of seeking forgiveness from God for the sin of ascribing partners to Him, whereas the act of devoting oneself exclusively to Him implies a form of repentance (Bḏ, JJ, Z). This verse is usually interpreted to mean that there can be no forgiveness from God unless the servant actually repents unto Him (R). For the notion of repentance in the Quran, see 110:3c. For the conditions for valid repentance, see 66:8c.

By goodly enjoyment is meant sustenance and blessings in this world (JJ, Kl); alternately, it can refer to the life of faith, in which believers place their hope in God and are content with His Decree, whereas disbelievers can only take joy in the good things of this world (Kl); see also 4:104: If you are suffering, verily they suffer even as you suffer, while you hope from God that for which they cannot hope. A term appointed refers to death (JJ, Kl), and the receiving of God's Bounty by everyone possessed of merit refers to the bestowal of rewards in the Hereafter upon those who acted righteously in this world (JJ, Kl), the bounties they receive in the Garden being commensurate with the merit of their acts of obedience (Z); see also 8:4: For them are ranks in the sight of their Lord, and forgiveness and a generous provision. The punishment of a great Day refers to the chastisement of the Day of Resurrection (Z), but, applied to the Makkans in particular, it refers also to days on which they met with great defeat, such as the day of the Battle of Badr (Kl).

④ Unto God is your return, and He is Powerful over all things.”

4 For verses that speak of the return to God in similar fashion, see 3:55; 5:48, 105; 6:60, 164; 10:4, 23; 29:8; 31:15; 39:7.

5 This verse is said to have been revealed about a certain al-Akhnas ibn Sharīq, who was very eloquent and spoke in a manner that appealed to the Prophet, but who inwardly harbored feelings of hatred and animosity toward him (Q, W). Some say that this verse pertains more generally to the Makkan idolaters' attitude toward the Prophet and the believers (Q), while others see it only as a reference to their particular concealed hatred and enmity toward him (Kl). They cover themselves with their garments denotes their aversion to hearing the Quran; that is, they put their “garments” over their heads so that they do not have to “hear” the Quran's recitation (Kl, Z); see also 71:7: Truly whenever I call them, that Thou mayest forgive them, they put their fingers in their ears, cover themselves with their garments, persist, and wax most arrogant. For God as encompassing and being aware of even the most inward dimensions of human beings, see 3:119, 154; 5:7; 8:43; 29:10; 31:23; 35:38; 39:7; 42:24; 57:6; 64:4; 67:13.

⑥ There is no creature that crawls upon the earth but that its provision lies with God. And He knows its dwelling place and its repository. All is in a clear Book.

6 Lies with God can also be read as “is an obligation upon God,” which causes some commentators to note that, although God is the source of all provision for created beings, He is not “obligated” to provide for them, for such “necessity” or “obligation” would be interpreted as contradicting the supremacy of His Will and Power (Q). Its dwelling place is understood as a reference to the father’s loins, and its repository to the mother’s womb (Kl). Alternately, the former can refer to the mother’s womb and the latter to where one eventually finds oneself in this world (Su); see also 6:98c.

That all realities are in a clear Book is also stated elsewhere in the Quran (cf. 6:59; 10:61; 27:74–75; 34:3). A clear book is understood here to be a reference to the Preserved Tablet (see 85:22c; JJ, N, R) or to God’s Knowledge (R); cf. 5:15; 12:1; 26:2; 27:1; 28:2; 43:2; 44.

⑦ He it is Who created the heavens and the earth in six days, while His Throne was upon the water, that He may try you as to which of you is most virtuous in deed. Yet if thou sayest, “Truly you shall be resurrected after death,” the disbelievers will surely say, “This is naught but manifest sorcery!”

7 For the creation of the heavens and the earth in six days, see 7:54c. Quranic references to the six days of creation (cf. 7:54; 10:3; 25:59; 32:4; 50:38; 57:4) are often followed by the statement that God then mounted the Throne (10:3; 25:59; 32:4). Since the verse implies that God’s Throne was upon the water (cf. Genesis 1:2) while the creation of the heavens and the earth was taking place, al-Rāzī notes that upon here does not indicate physical space, since God’s Throne could not be physically on the water if the heavens and the earth had not yet come into being.

Thus, one possible meaning of His Throne was upon the water could be to indicate the manner in which the heavens came about without any physical support below them (R), similar to what is expressed in 13:2: God it is Who raised the heavens without pillars that you see, then mounted the Throne.

On people being tried in this life in order to make manifest who among them is most virtuous in deed, see 18:7. See also 67:2, which states that God created death and life that He may try you as to which of you is most virtuous in deed, suggesting that trials are an inherent part of the human condition. The trials one encounters in life are not unjust, for God tasks no soul beyond its capacity (2:286; see also 2:234; 6:52; 7:42; 23:26), but rather are a necessary part of one's journey in this life; when met with the correct response, they can only help strengthen one spiritually, improve one's character, and increase one's love for God and trust in Him. From this perspective, trials are a Blessing and a Mercy from God. For the meaning of which of you is most virtuous in deed, see 67:2c.

In many places throughout the Quran the disbelievers reject God's signs and the message brought to them by the prophets as manifest sorcery, as in 34:43: Those who disbelieve say to the Truth when it comes to them, "This is naught but manifest sorcery"; see also 5:110; 6:7; 10:2, 76; 20:57; 21:3; 27:13; 28:36; 34:43; 37:15; 43:30; 46:7; 54:2; 61:6; 74:24. For the common objection by the disbelievers to the Quranic doctrine of bodily resurrection, see also 13:5; 17:49, 98; 23:35, 82–83; 27:67; 36:78; 37:16–17, 53; 50:3; 56:47–48; 79:11.

⑧ And if We grant them reprieve from the punishment for a limited time, they will surely say, "What holds it back?" Behold! On the day when it comes upon them, it shall not be turned away from them, and that which they used to mock will beset them.

8 Concerning the punishment promised to the Makkan idolaters in this world or in the Hereafter (Aj), they asked the question What holds it back? out of derision (Aj) and as an attempt to demonstrate its falsehood (Ṭ). In the end, what they used to mock will beset them, which is to say that the punishment they were seeking to hasten through their derisive comments (Sh, Z) will become a reality and descend upon them (Ṭ). The notion that people's mockery of the truth will eventually rebound upon them is found throughout the Quran; see 6:10; 16:34; 21:41; 39:48; 40:83; 45:33; 46:26.

9 And if We cause man to taste Mercy from Us, and then withdraw it from him, verily he is despondent, ungrateful.

10 And if We cause him to taste some favor after adversity has befallen him, he will surely say, “The evils have gone from me.” Verily he is exultant, boastful,

9–10 When the blessings God has conferred upon people are taken away from them by God, they despair, thereby engendering ingratitude for God’s Blessings. This is because they do not have a sufficient amount of hope in God, lack reliance upon Him, and are impatient (Aj). Cf. 22:11: And among mankind some worship God upon a brink: if good befalls him, he is content thereby, but if a trial befalls him, he is turned over upon his face; see also 89:15–16; cf. 17:83; 41:49. Al-Rāzī says that believers should know that these blessings have come to them from God’s Bounty, so their disappearance should not cause them to despair (R). Some commentaries mention a ḥadīth qudsī in conjunction with this verse that states, “I am as My servant thinks of Me. So let him think well of Me.” This ḥadīth means that believers must harbor a positive view of God’s Acts, or, as al-Rāzī puts it, in such circumstances they should say to themselves, “After this, perhaps God will return these blessings to me [and they will be] more perfect, beautiful, and excellent than they were [before].”

When people are then restored to some favor from God, they say, the evils, namely, the afflictions (JJ), have gone from me, which is to say they will not thank God for removing the difficulties and will not consider the possibility that these new blessings can also be taken away from them (JJ). Such people are thus exultant, boastful, but deluded (Bd), rejoicing over these blessings while forgetting to be grateful to God for them (Q). See also 39:49: And when harm befalls man, he calls upon Us. Then, when We confer upon him a Blessing from Us, he says, “I was only given it because of knowledge.” Nay, it is a trial, but most of them know not; cf. 10:12; 30:33; 39:8c; see also 39:49c.

11 save those who are patient and perform righteous deeds; it is they for whom there shall be forgiveness and a great reward.

11 Save those who are patient refers to times of hardship, and perform righteous deeds to times when blessings are received (JJ). In a report attributed by some to the Prophet and others to Ibn Mas‘ūd (d. 31/652), it is said that faith is composed of two parts: patience accounts for one half, and gratitude for the other (al-Ghazzālī, Iḥyā’ ‘ulūm al-dīn [Beirut, 1997], 4:316). With respect to the virtue of patience in particular, Ḥusayn ibn ‘Alī is reported to have said, “Patience is the key to success.” In this world, a great reward for patience can also be understood to be that God will be with those who are patient, as 2:153 asserts, Truly God is with the patient.

12 Perchance thou mightest omit some of that which We have revealed unto thee, and thy breast might be constrained because they say, “Why has no treasure been sent down upon him, or an angel not come with him?” Thou art only a warner, and God is Guardian over all things.

12 According to 10:15, the Makkan idolaters asked the Prophet to alter the Quran in certain respects so that it would be more acceptable to them; more specifically, they requested that the Quran not include any kind of condemnation of their gods (R). The Prophet insisted, however, that he did not have a role in its authorship; see 10:15c. They also asked him to turn the mountain in Makkah into gold to prove that he was a messenger or to bring forth angels to bear witness to the truth of his prophethood (R). As he was unable to meet such demands, the Makkans called him a liar and mocked him, which grieved him. In reciting the Quran to them, his breast was thus constrained (Z).

Perchance thou mightest omit some of that which We have revealed unto thee speaks to this situation and indicates that the Prophet would either continue to bring the Quran that was being revealed to him and face their curses and insults or omit some of it; the latter, however, is considered impossible for a prophet, since in Islamic belief one of the mandatory aspects of prophethood is conveying the message exactly as it was revealed (R). Thus, perchance, which translates la‘alla, functions as a rhetorical device intended not to express true uncertainty that the Prophet might omit some of the Quran in order to appease the Makkan idolaters or to avoid their curses, but to emphasize the importance of his faithfully conveying all that was revealed to him (R); on la‘alla, see also 2:21c.

The Prophet is also reminded here again that he is only a warner (see also 13:7; 27:92; 34:46; 35:23; 38:65–66; 79:45) and that God is Guardian over all things (cf.

6:102; 39:62), meaning that guidance or misguidance is not in the hands of the Messenger, but ultimately in the Hands of God alone (Kl).

⑬ Or do they say, “He has fabricated it”? Say, “Then bring ten sūrahs like it, fabricated, and call upon whomsoever you can apart from God, if you are truthful.”

⑭ But if they answer thee not, then know that it has been sent down with God’s Knowledge and that there is no god but He. So are you submitters?

13–14 For the Makkan idolaters’ claim that the Prophet fabricated the Quran, see 10:38c; 32:2; 46:8. The challenge to them to produce ten sūrahs like it if they are truthful is to say that if they do not believe in the Quran’s inimitability and believe that they can produce the equivalent, either the whole of it or in part, then they should attempt to do so, for if their claim that the Prophet has fabricated the Quran is true—that is, if the Quran is not from God—then it would be possible for it to be reproducible by human beings. If, however, they cannot do so, then this would prove that it is from God; for similar challenges to produce something like the Quran, see 2:23; 10:38; 17:88.

⑮ Whosoever desires the life of this world and its adornment, We shall pay them in full for their deeds therein, and therein they will not be deprived.

⑯ They are those for whom there shall be naught in the Hereafter but the Fire. Whatsoever they had wrought therein shall come to naught, and vain was that which they used to do.

15–16 Desiring the life of this world and its adornment can in a sense apply to both believers and disbelievers alike, since there are lawful means of enjoying worldly life, but it is understood here to refer to those who desire this life only and deny the reality of the Hereafter (R); this interpretation resembles the message of 42:20: Whosoever desires the harvest of the Hereafter, We shall increase for him his harvest. And whosoever desires the harvest of this world, We shall give him some thereof, but he will have no share in the Hereafter. Some understand We shall pay them in full for their deeds therein to mean that God will bestow upon believers the reward for their actions directed toward righteous ends even in this world, in the sense that God would “hasten” their reward in this world without decreasing it in the Hereafter (Q). One interpretation given by some commentators is that v. 15 was revealed about certain believers during the time of the Prophet who were given to religious ostentation in their actions (see also 107:6; Aj). For the manner in which actions with the wrong intentions are rendered null in the Hereafter, see 3:22c. Some mention in this connection the famous ḥadīth, “Verily actions are [judged] according to [their] intentions” (Q).

①7 So what of the one who stands upon a clear proof from his Lord, and for whom it is recited by a witness from Him? And before it there was the Book of Moses, a guide and a mercy. It is they who believe in it. And whosoever disbelieves in it from among the parties, the Fire is their tryst. So be not in doubt concerning it. Verily it is the truth from thy Lord, but most of mankind believe not.

17 One who stands upon a clear proof from his Lord is a reference to the Prophet, and they who believe in it to the believers (Kl). A witness from Him refers to either the Quran, Gabriel, or another angel. According to some commentators, it refers to °Alī ibn Abī Ṭālib, who is reported to have said that different verses were revealed in connection with different members of the Quraysh, and this verse was revealed with regard to him (Q). The witness is sometimes described as “the tongue of the Messenger of God” (Q). For the Book of Moses, namely, the Torah, see 11:110–11c. That most of mankind believe not is repeated in 13:1 and 40:59; here, however, some interpret most of mankind to refer specifically to the majority of the people of Makkah at the time of the Prophet (JJ).

①8 And who does greater wrong than one who fabricates a lie against God? It is they who will be brought before their Lord, and the witnesses will say, “These are the ones who lied against their Lord.” Behold! The curse of God is upon the wrongdoers,

①¹⁹ those who turn from the way of God and seek to make it crooked, and who disbelieve in the Hereafter.

18–19 By those who fabricate a lie against God is meant those who disbelieve in God and His message (Ṭ); cf. 3:94; 6:21, 93, 144; 7:37; 10:17; 18:15; 29:68. That they will be brought before their Lord refers to their being called to account for their actions on the Day of Judgment (Q). The witnesses is a reference to the angels responsible for recording the deeds of human beings (Q; see 43:80c; 50:17–18; 80:15–16; 82:10; 86:4), and to the prophets (Kl). That the curse of God is upon the wrongdoers means they are distanced or exiled from His Mercy (see also 7:44c). In seeking to make the way leading to God crooked, they attempt to distort or alter the way in such a manner that it is no longer the straight path (see 1:6 and commentary), which God has established and enjoined human beings to follow; see also the commentary on 7:45, an almost identical verse.

②²⁰ Such as these cannot thwart [aught] on earth, and they have no protector apart from God. For them the punishment will be multiplied. They were not able to hear; neither did they see.

③²¹ They are those who have lost their souls, and that which they used to fabricate has forsaken them.

④²² There is no doubt that in the Hereafter they shall be the greatest losers.

20–22 These cannot thwart [aught] on earth means that the disbelievers will not be able to prevent God's punishing them in this life if He wishes to do so (Z); cf. 8:59; 9:2–3; 24:57; 29:22; 35:44; 42:31; 46:32; 72:12. That God is the only Protector for human beings is a common Quranic refrain (cf. 2:107, 120; 4:123, 173; 9:74, 116; 29:22; 33:18, 65; 42:31; 48:22). The punishment will be multiplied refers to the fact that they will be punished for their own misguided ways and also for misguiding others (JJ); see 7:38–39c; 17:75; 29:12–13; 33:66–68. Commenting on They were not able to hear; neither did they see, al-Rāzī notes that these words refer to a “deafness of heart and blindness of soul,” which is consistent with the Quran’s characterization of those who are spiritually insensible to the prophetic messages as “blind” and “deaf” (see, e.g., 2:171, 5:71; 6:104; 7:64; 10:43; 11:28; 13:19; 27:4, 66, 81; 30:53; 41:17, 44; 43:36–37, 40). Regarding the Quranic notion that one will ultimately be forsaken by what one has fabricated, including false idols, ideas, and religious beliefs, see 6:24, 54; 10:30; 16:87; 28:75c.

23 Truly those who believe and perform righteous deeds and are humble before their Lord, it is they who are the inhabitants of the Garden; they shall abide therein.

23 Humble here means penitent and fearful (Bg), and can also describe those who are in a state of peace in the remembrance of God (Ṭs), as in 13:28: Those who believe and whose hearts are at peace in the remembrance of God. Are not hearts at peace in the remembrance of God?

24 The parable of these two groups is that of one blind and deaf, and one hearing and seeing. Are they equal when compared? Will you not remember?

24 These two groups refers to those who fabricate lies against God (see vv. 18–22)—that is, the disbelievers—and those who believe in God and act righteously (see v. 23). The former are spiritually blind and deaf (R), since they cannot see God’s signs or hear His Word (Aj), whereas the latter are hearing and seeing, because they can see God’s signs and hear His Word (Aj). The question Are they equal when compared? is similar to the one posed in 39:9: Are those who know and those who do not know equal?

25 Indeed, We sent Noah unto his people, “Truly I am unto you a clear warner,

25 For the story of Noah, see 7:59–64; 10:71–73; 23:23–30; 26:105–21;

37:75–82; 54:9–15; Sūrah 71. The story of Noah here serves as an introduction to the stories of the punished and destroyed peoples that follow in the remainder of the sūrah. The general function of the prophets is to act as both warners and bearers of glad tidings; see 2:213: Mankind was one community; then God sent the prophets as bearers of glad tidings and as warners; cf. 4:165; 6:48; 18:56. Noah describes himself to his people as a clear warner (see also 71:2), which is to say that he was warning them of the impending punishment (see 11:26c) that would befall them as well as the way in which they could avoid it (Bḍ). For other verses in which the Prophet is described as only being a warner, see 13:7; 22:49; 27:92; 29:50; 35:23; 38:70; 46:9; 67:26; and 79:45.

26 that you might worship none but God. Truly I fear for you the punishment of a painful day.”

26 In saying worship none but God, which is the same call made by other prophets in the Quran (see 41:14; 46:21; cf. 2:83; 3:64; 11:2), Noah was calling his people to cast aside their idols, to cease worshipping them, and to obey only God (Q; cf., e.g., 7:59; 23:23; 71:3). The punishment of a painful day refers to the chastisement that Noah’s people would receive in this world as well as their punishment in the Hereafter (JJ); cf. 7:59; 71:1.

27 But the notables among his people who disbelieved said, “We see you as naught but a human being like us, and we see none who follow you, save the lowliest among us, as is clear to see. Nor do we see that you have any merit over us; nay, we think that you are liars.”

27 The notables refers to the leaders of Noah’s society (Q); see also 7:60, 66. The answer of Noah’s people (see also 23:24) is the same as that given to all of God’s messengers as mentioned in 14:10: You are but human beings like us (see also 26:154 in the context of the story of the prophet Ṣāliḥ). Noah’s followers are described by his opponents as the lowliest among us; they were looked down upon because they were poor and employed in what were considered trades or occupations of low social standing (Q); see also 26:112c. Elsewhere Noah’s people refuse to believe in him precisely because the lowliest members of their society follow him: Shall we believe you, when the lowliest follow you? (26:111). Nor do we see that you have any merit over us is directed by the notables to both Noah and his followers (Kl), who were considered unworthy of being followed because they did not have any special kind of distinction in their society, by way of either dress, wealth, or high social status (Kl).

28 He said, “O my people! What think you: if I stand upon a clear proof from my Lord, and He has granted me Mercy from Himself, and you are blind to it. Shall we force it upon you, though you are unwilling?”

28 Noah’s standing upon a clear proof from my Lord refers to the clarity and truth of his message (see also 6:57–58c) and is also repeated by the prophets Ṣāliḥ and Shu‘ayb to their people later in this sūrah (see vv. 63, 88, respectively; cf. v. 11). In 6:57, the Prophet Muhammad is also instructed to tell his people, Truly I stand upon a clear proof from my Lord. The Mercy from Himself that was given to Noah is God’s conferral of prophethood upon him (Kl) or the guidance and knowledge that God gave him (Bg). Noah’s question to his people is rhetorical and accords with the principle enunciated in 2:256: There is no coercion in religion. Sound judgment has become clear from error.

29 O my people! I ask not of you any wealth in return for it; my reward lies only with God. And I shall not drive away those who believe; truly they shall meet their Lord. But I see that you are an ignorant people.

29 The it in in return for it refers to what Noah was calling his people to, namely, faith in and sincere worship of the One God (Ṭ). It is said that the notables to whom Noah brought the message told Noah that if he wanted them to believe in him, then he should shun those who were currently following him (see v. 27), because they were unworthy of being on equal footing with the notables (Ṭ, Ṭs). The Quraysh also had the same issue with the Prophet’s followers; see 6:52c. Noah’s statement But I see that you are an ignorant people is in reference to the leaders’ request that he should shun those who believed in God (Ṭ); see also 46:23 for an identical phrase used by the prophet Hūd when addressing his people.

30 O my people! Who would help me against God, were I to drive them away? Will you not remember?

30 Noah's question can be taken to mean, "Who would prevent God's Punishment against me, were I to shun those who believe and who on the Day of Judgment will make a case against me before God?" (Ts).

31 I say not unto you that with me are the treasures of God; nor do I know the Unseen. And I say not that I am an angel; nor do I say of those who are despicable in your eyes, 'God will not give them any good'—God knows best what is in their souls—for then I would indeed be among the wrongdoers."

31 Al-Rāzī explains that Noah's statement that he did not have the treasures of God (for other references to treasuries in the Quran, see 6:50; 15:21; 17:100; 38:9; 52:37; 63:7), did not know the Unseen, and was not an angel highlights his humility and lowliness before God, an attitude that allowed him to embrace those who were deemed to be lowly by their own people, while preventing him from being seduced by the company of the notables and leaders of his society. The same assertions are made by the Prophet in response to the criticisms of the Quraysh; see 6:50 and commentary.

32 They said, "O Noah! You have disputed with us, and have prolonged the disputation; so bring upon us that wherewith you have threatened us, if you are among the truthful."

33 He said, "God alone shall bring it to you, if He will, and you cannot thwart [it]."

32–33 So bring upon us that wherewith you have threatened us, which is a typical reaction by disbelievers to the teachings of the prophets (see also 7:70, 77; 46:22), refers to the impending punishment (Kl) about which Noah had informed them (see v. 26); and you cannot thwart [it] (cf. 6:135; 10:53) refers to their inability to escape it (JJ).

34 And my sincere advice will not benefit you, much as I desire to advise you, if God desires to cause you to err. He is your Lord, and unto Him shall you be returned.”

34 God’s causing people to err is tantamount to the more common Quranic notion that He causes some people to stray from the truth (see, e.g., 17:97; 18:17; 74:31), for which, see 4:88–90c; 4:143c; 6:39c. On related issues, see 3:108–9c and the essay “The Quran and Schools of Islamic Theology and Philosophy.”

35 Or do they say, “He has fabricated it”? Say, “If I fabricated it, then my guilt is upon me; but I am quit of that which you commit.”

35 This verse pertains to the Makkan idolaters and their accusation that the Prophet had fabricated the Quran (JJ; see v. 13; 10:38c; 32:2; 46:8). Then my guilt is upon me implies punishment (JJ) and is thus equivalent to saying, “Then I shall be punished for my sin.”

36 And it was revealed unto Noah, “None of thy people shall believe, save those who had already believed. So be not distressed by that which they used to do.

36 It is said that Noah had been calling his people to God for some 950 years (Aj); see 29:14, which states: And he remained among them a thousand years, less fifty. Thus, those who had already believed refers to those who had, up to that point, believed in Noah’s message (Aj). God’s counsel to Noah that he should not be distressed—that is, saddened or despairing (Ṭ)—over the actions of his people relates to the wider Quranic theme of God’s addressing the prophets’ human reactions to the trials that they would inevitably encounter; see 2:214; 15:97–99;

37 Build the Ark before Our Eyes and by Our Revelation. And address Me not concerning those who did wrong; surely they shall be drowned.”

37 Before Our Eyes is a figurative manner of saying that God will watch over and protect Noah’s building of the Ark (Kl); by Our Revelation means that God instructed Noah how to build the Ark (Bd). God’s telling Noah not to address Him concerning those who did wrong means that Noah was not to attempt to intercede with God on their behalf (Kl) and that he should not pray to God to withhold the impending punishment from them (Bd).

38 And he was building the Ark, and whenever notables among his people passed by him, they would scoff at him. He said, “If you scoff at us, surely we shall scoff at you, just as you scoff.

39 For soon you shall know upon whom there comes a punishment that disgraces him and upon whom there falls a punishment enduring.”

38–39 Noah’s words If you scoff at us, surely we shall scoff at you, just as you scoff have in view the final state of affairs, when the believers will laugh at the disbelievers, just as the disbelievers used to laugh at them during the life of this world (see 83:29–36). This verse relates to the broader Quranic notion that people’s evil actions will ultimately rebound upon them (see, e.g., 2:9, 57; 10:23; 35:43; 47:38). A punishment that disgraces (cf. 11:93; 39:40) refers to the flood, which was going to humiliate, in this world, the people who rejected Noah (IK), while a punishment enduring (cf. 5:37; 9:68; 39:40) refers to their state of punishment in the Hereafter (T).

40 Till when Our Command came, and the oven gushed forth, We said, “Carry on board two of every kind, and thy family—save the one against whom the Word has already gone forth—and those who believe.” And none believed along with him, save a few.

④① He said, “Embark upon it. In the Name of God be its coursing and its mooring. Truly my Lord is Forgiving, Merciful.”

40–41 Till when Our Command came, and the oven gushed forth indicates the beginning of the flood, which God sent to destroy the people of Noah. The oven here refers to the earth (Bg, Q) in general or a particular region, such as Syria or Iraq (Bg); for more on the oven gushed forth, see 23:27–28c. According to one account, God first gathered all manner of birds and animals before Noah, who then chose one male and one female from each species and took the pairs onto the ship (JJ). It is said that save the one against whom the Word has already gone forth characterizes both Noah’s wife (see 66:10c) and his son (JJ; see vv. 42–43, 45).

④② And it sailed with them upon waves like mountains. And Noah called out to his son, who remained aloof, “O my son! Embark with us, and be not with the disbelievers.”

42 Waves like mountains refers to the size of the waves from the flood (Z), which were formed on account of the intensity of the wind (Q).

④③ He said, “I shall take refuge on a mountain; it will protect me from the water.” He said, “There is no protector on this day from the Command of God, save for the one upon whom He has Mercy.” And the waves came between them, and he was among the drowned.

43 The son of Noah who remained aloof in v. 42 is said to have been named Yām (IK, Z) or Kan[°]ān (Z). From a spiritual point of view, his statement that he would take refuge on a mountain can be understood to refer to the false sense of security, stability, and permanence (symbolized by a mountain) that the disbelievers, in their state of denial of God, assign to the world.

44 And it was said, “O earth! Swallow your water! And O sky! Hold back!” And the water was made to recede, and the command was carried out, and it settled on [Mount] Jūdī. And it was said, “Away with the wrongdoing people!”

44 God’s Commands to the earth and sky denote the end of the flood. It is said in some traditional sources that [Mount] Jūdī, where the Ark settled, is a mountain near Mosul (JJ, Kl), while other sources associate it with Mt. Ararat in the eastern region of present-day Turkey. It is believed that Away with the wrongdoing people! was spoken by God (R); see also 23:41 for the identical phrase.

45 And Noah called out to his Lord and said, “O my Lord! Truly my son is from my family. Thy Promise is indeed true, and Thou art the most just of judges.”

46 He said, “O Noah! Truly he is not from thy family; surely such conduct was not righteous. So question Me not concerning that whereof thou hast no knowledge; truly I exhort thee, lest thou be among the ignorant.”

47 He said, “My Lord! Truly I seek refuge in Thee from questioning Thee concerning that whereof I have no knowledge. If thou dost not forgive me and have Mercy upon me, I shall be among the losers.”

45–47 It is said that Noah pleaded with God to save his son because God had promised Noah that He would save his family (IJ, Ṭ; cf. v. 40), which is the promise to which Noah was referring when he said, Thy Promise is indeed true (IJ). For God as the most just of judges, see 95:8c (cf. 7:87; 10:109; 12:80). From one perspective, God’s Words to Noah Truly he is not from thy family mean that Noah’s son did not belong to those members of Noah’s family whom God had promised to save (Q, R); cf. the wording in v. 40: Carry on board . . . thy family—save the one against whom the Word has already gone forth (see also 11:40–41c). From another perspective, Noah’s son can be described as not being from Noah’s family in a spiritual sense, as he rejected the message with which his father had come. See also 6:74, where Abraham's dissociation from his father is mentioned.

The son's unrighteous conduct was denying God and disbelieving in Him. Some read such conduct was not righteous to mean, "He was [a doer of] unrighteous conduct," with the subject being implicit (R). Ignorant in lest thou be among the ignorant refers more specifically to sinfulness (Q, R); God exhorts Noah not to question Him concerning his son's fate (see v. 45) lest he be "among the sinners." Noah's words of repentance are identical to those uttered by Adam and his wife in 7:23 after Satan's trickery against them had become clear to them.

④8 It was said, "O Noah! Disembark with peace from Us, and blessings upon thee and upon the communities that [will arise] from those with thee, and communities for whom We shall grant enjoyment. Then a painful punishment from Us shall befall them."

48 God tells Noah that he and those with him can come out of the Ark and live on land without fear of perishing (Bq, Ṭ). An elision in blessings upon thee and upon the communities that [will arise] from those with thee, and communities for whom We shall grant enjoyment causes it to mean, "blessings upon thee and upon the communities that [will arise] from those with thee; and [from those with thee] are communities for whom We shall grant enjoyment" (Z). This statement is understood to mean that the communities of believers that will arise from Noah's family will be blessed, or that the communities of both disbelievers and believers that will arise from Noah's family will receive provision from God (Z), but the disbelieving communities are promised a painful punishment from God. It is said that this phrase refers to the destroyed nations that came after Noah, such as the ʿĀd, the Thamūd, the Sodomites, and the Midianites (Z), all of whom were descendants of Noah; see vv. 50–60, 61–68, 77–83, 84–95, respectively.

④9 These are among the accounts of the Unseen that We reveal unto thee. Thou knewest not of them, neither thou nor thy people, beforehand. So be patient. Truly the end belongs to the reverent.

49 Thou knewest not of them, neither thou nor thy people, beforehand is understood to mean that the Prophet did not know such accounts as the story of Noah before the revelation came to him (Kl, Z), nor were they known to the people of Makkah at that time, since they were not “People of the Book” (Ṭs). However, given the presence of Christians and Jews in Makkah during the lifetime of the Prophet, it is more likely that this verse refers to a lack of knowledge about the details and spiritual meaning of such stories rather than a lack of general knowledge of them.

God’s counsel to the Prophet to be patient is aimed at both the task of conveying the message given to him and the hardships he was enduring from the Makkan idolaters, implying that the Prophet should be as patient as Noah was (JJ). The end belongs to the reverent is also found in 7:128; 28:83; cf. 20:132.

50 And unto °Ād, their brother Hūd. He said, “O my people! Worship God! You have no god other than Him. You are naught but fabricators.

51 O my people! I ask not of you any reward for it. My reward lies only with the One Who originated me. Do you not understand?

50–51 For the story of the prophet Hūd, see also 7:65–72; 26:123–39; 46:21–25; 54:18–21. Hūd was an Arabian prophet, not mentioned in the Bible, who is said to have been a descendant of the prophet Noah; see 7:65c. °Ād, the people to whom Hūd was sent, are believed to have come from the southern part of Arabia, from between the valley of Ḥaḍramawt and Oman. They were a tribal people who worshipped idols; their name derives from that of a man to whom they traced their common ancestry (Q). It is said that there were two peoples with the name °Ād: °Ād the Former (53:50), who are also known as Iram (see 89:7–8c); and °Ād the Latter, who are simply referred to as °Ād; see also 53:50–51c. The people to whom Hūd was sent were °Ād the Former (Q).

Hūd was the brother of the °Ād people since he was one of them (Q). Like the other prophets, Hūd called his people to worship God alone and to relinquish their idols. You are naught but fabricators means, “In your associating idols with God, you are nothing but a lying people, creating falsehood, for there is no God other than He” (Ṭ). Al-Rāzī notes that Hūd’s assurance to his people that he does not ask of them any reward for it (see also 26:127) and that his reward lies only with God is identical in meaning to Noah’s statement to his people in v. 29: O my people! I ask not of you any wealth in return for it; my reward lies only with God, and is similar to those made by other prophets throughout the Quran (see also, e.g., 6:90; 26:109, 127, 145, 164, 180; 36:22; 38:86; 42:23).

52 O my people! Seek forgiveness from your Lord; then turn unto Him in repentance. He will send the sky upon you with abundant rain, and add strength to your strength. And turn not away, guilty.”

52 For the connection between the order of the call to seek forgiveness from God and the call to then turn unto Him in repentance with reference to the Makkan idolaters, which also pertains to ʿĀd, see 11:3c (see also v. 90). Hūd’s words He will send the sky upon you with abundant rain, which addressed the problem of the drought that ʿĀd had been experiencing (JJ), were also uttered by Noah to his people (71:11); see also 7:72c. Guilty, in the sense of being culpable of wrongdoing, refers here to “people who ascribe partners unto God” (JJ). It is said that the drought they experienced lasted three years (Kl). According to traditional Islamic teachings, seeking God’s Forgiveness and repenting to Him are means by which a sinful people can beseech God to send rain to their lands (Kl). On the basis of this belief, there are special prayers performed by Muslims at the time of the drought as well as on the occasion of other national calamities.

53 They said, “O Hūd! You have not brought us a clear proof, and we shall not forsake our gods on your word, for we are not believers in you.

54 We say only that one of our gods has smitten you with evil.” He said, “I call God as witness—and you be witness—that I am quit of that which you ascribe as partners

53–54 Hūd’s people tell him that he has not brought them a clear proof, by which they mean clear evidence that testifies to the truthfulness of his claim to being a prophet sent by God (Bḍ). It is said that they were unable to see the clear proofs brought by Hūd because of their obstinacy in rejecting his message (Bḍ). The claim that one of their gods has smitten Hūd with evil manifests their belief that he was a madman who had been put under a spell by one of their idols, because he had cursed it and had called his people to cease worshipping idols (Kl); cf. 7:66. The Makkan idolaters, likewise, had accused the Prophet Muhammad of being mad or possessed; see 15:6; 23:70; 34:8; 37:36; 44:14; 68:51; 81:22.

55) apart from Him. So scheme against me then, all together, and grant me no respite.

56) Truly I trust in God, my Lord and your Lord. There is no creature that crawls, but that He holds it by its forelock. Truly my Lord is upon a straight path.

55–56 For similar statements made by prophets concerning the beliefs of the people to whom they had been sent, see also 6:19; 6:78. Hūd’s challenge, which is addressed to his people and their gods (N), to scheme and grant him no respite means, “Neither you nor your gods will be able to do anything!” (Kl). Hūd then provides them with the reason for his confidence in their inability to scheme against him, namely, his firm and unshakeable reliance upon God (Kl).

There is no creature that crawls, but that He holds it by its forelock is a metaphor to denote that all creatures are under God’s Control and Authority (N). Truly my Lord is upon a straight path means that God is upon the path of truth, is Just, and does not let wrongdoers escape Him. It also means that He will not forsake one who relies upon Him (Z). Regarding straight path, see 1:6c.

57) But if you turn away, [know that] I have delivered unto you the message wherewith I have been sent by Him. My Lord will cause you to be succeeded by a people other than yourselves, and you harm Him not in the least. Truly my Lord is Watcher over all things.”

58) And when Our Command came, We saved Hūd and those who believed with him through a Mercy from Us; and We saved them from a grave punishment.

57–58 My Lord will cause you to be succeeded by a people other than yourselves means that God will destroy the °Ād and replace them with a people who believe in God's Oneness and worship Him alone (Q, Ṭ); see also 7:69; 9:39; 47:38. By telling his people that they harm Him not in the least (cf. 3:144, 176; 9:39; 47:32), Hūd conveys the fact that they do not harm God in any fashion whatsoever by turning away from Him, nor does any harm come to Him if He destroys them, for He did not create them out of His need for them in the first place (Ṭs). Alternately, it can mean that they will not have the ability to cause God any harm if He causes another people to replace them (Ṭs).

God's Command here refers to His Punishment (JJ), which was in the form of a howling wind (54:19). Since the °Ād had experienced an extended drought (see v. 52), they mistook a cloud that had appeared to be a sign of impending rain. Thus in 46:24 they say, This is a cloud bringing us rain. But, it turned out to be a wind carrying a painful punishment, which 46:25 describes as destroying everything by the Command of its Lord. They became such that naught was seen but their dwellings. See also 54:20, which describes it as tearing out people as if they were uprooted palm trunks, and 7:72c. Some commentators mention that those who accepted Hūd's message are said to have been forty thousand in number (Z). Their being saved . . . through a Mercy from Us refers to their being guided to faith in God as well as to the performance of righteous deeds (R).

59 That was °Ād. They rejected the signs of their Lord, disobeyed the messengers, and followed the command of every stubborn tyrant.

60 And they were pursued by a curse in this world, and [shall be] on the Day of Resurrection. Behold! Truly °Ād disbelieved in their Lord. Behold! Away with °Ād, the people of Hūd!

59–60 That following the command of every stubborn tyrant is bound to fail is similar to Every stubborn tyrant fails in 14:15. In other words, those who follow people who stubbornly reject the truth brought by God's messengers will ultimately be unsuccessful, since God will aid His messengers against them; see 14:15c; in connection with the people of Hūd, see also 26:130. The curse against the people who rejected Hūd refers to their being distanced from God's Mercy (Bg). Away with functions as a kind of refrain throughout this sūrah, used here in connection with the °Ād, then with the Thamūd (v. 68), and finally with the Midianites (v. 95).

61 And to Thamūd, their brother Ṣāliḥ. He said, “O my people! Worship God! You have no god other than Him. He brought you forth from the earth and settled you therein. So seek forgiveness from Him; then turn unto Him in repentance. Truly my Lord is Nigh, Responsive.”

61 For the story of Ṣāliḥ, see also 7:73–79; 15:80–84; 26:141–58; 54:23–31. Ṣāliḥ was an Arabian prophet sent to the Thamūd, who inhabited a rocky plain located in western Arabia, between the Ḥijāz and Syria; see 7:73c. Like Hūd, Ṣāliḥ is not mentioned in the Bible, and like the ʿĀd, the Thamūd were descendants of Noah. Ṣāliḥ’s call to his people to worship God alone is identical to the words uttered by Hūd to his people; see v. 50. He is likewise described as the brother of the people to whom he had been sent, since he was one of them (see also 26:142). For the connection between seeking forgiveness and repentance, see 11:3c; see also vv. 52, 90. Truly my Lord is Near, Responsive means that God is close to those who are sincere toward Him in their worship and wish to repent, and that He answers the call of supplicants when they call upon him (Q), as in 2:186: When My servants ask thee about Me, truly I am near. I answer the call of the caller when he calls Me. So let them respond to Me and believe in Me, that they may be led aright. According to Islamic theology, God is close to all human beings, even those who feel distant from Him or even deny Him; the condition of sincerity is not a requirement for God’s closeness, but those without faith are unaware of it.

62 They said, “O Ṣāliḥ! You were a source of hope among us before this. Do you forbid us to worship that which our fathers worshipped, while we remain in grave doubt about that to which you call us?”

62 The response of Ṣāliḥ’s people, You were a source of hope among us before this, means that before Ṣāliḥ called them to worship the one true God, they had hoped he would eventually assume a leadership role (sayyid) among them (Q), as he was already one of his society’s most noble and respected figures; see 7:73c. The appeal made by the Thamūd to the religious ways of their fathers is a common Quranic theme, namely, that when prophets bring the message of God’s Oneness to an idolatrous people, they reject it on the grounds that it does not conform to the ways of their ancestors (see, e.g., 5:104; 10:70; 21:53; 31:21); cf. 7:28. See also 2:170, which responds to a similar statement of loyalty to the traditions of one's fathers: What! Even though their fathers understood nothing, and were not rightly guided?

63 He said, “O my people! What think you: if I stand up on a clear proof from my Lord, and He has granted me Mercy from Himself, then who can help me against God, were I to disobey Him? For you would increase me in naught but loss.

63 For the clear proof brought by the prophets, see 11:28c. Ṣāliḥ's rhetorical question, which is similar to Noah's in 11:30, is in response to his people's reaction to his call to them to leave their ways (see v. 62). The reference Mercy from Himself is to God's bestowal of prophethood upon Ṣāliḥ (JJ). By loss here is meant “misguidance” (JJ) or Ṣāliḥ's actions coming to naught (Z).

64 O my people! This she-camel of God is a sign unto you. Leave her to graze freely on God's earth, and cause her no harm, lest you be seized by a punishment nigh.”

65 But they hamstrung her. So he said, “Enjoy yourselves in your abode for three days—that is a promise that will not be belied.”

64–65 See 7:73c. Ṣāliḥ brought the pregnant she-camel forth from a large rock in accordance with the Thamūd's request to produce a miracle in order to prove his claim to prophethood (see 26:154). Hence, the she-camel is referred to as a sign; see also 7:73, where it is called a clear proof, and 54:27, where it is referred to as a trial for them. The injunction to let the she-camel graze freely on God's earth and to cause her no harm (see also 7:73; 26:155), which is recounted here, makes up one part of the command. The other part of the command is recounted in 26:155: She shall have drink and you shall drink on an appointed day (see also 54:28). Yet they hamstrung her and, as 7:77 says, they insolently defied the Command of their Lord, thus disobeying God's Command out of disdain for His message; see 7:77–78c. The Thamūd then challenged Šāliḥ, Bring upon us that wherewith you have threatened us, if you are among those sent [by God] (7:77), at which time Šāliḥ promised them an impending punishment after three days.

66 So when Our Command came, We saved Šāliḥ and those who believed with him, through a Mercy from Us, and from the disgrace of that day. Truly thy Lord, He is the Strong, the Mighty.

66 As in v. 58, Our Command here refers to God’s Punishment (Q), which Šāliḥ promised would be visited upon the Thamūd (v. 65). As was the case with Hūd (see 11:58c), Šāliḥ and his followers (regarding whom, see 7:75–76c) are said to have been saved through a Mercy from God.

67 The Cry seized those who did wrong, and morning found them lying lifeless in their abode, 68 as though they had never dwelt there. Behold! Truly Thamūd disbelieved in their Lord. Behold! Away with Thamūd!

67–68 The punishment that befell the Thamūd is said to have been an earthquake (7:78) accompanied by a terrible, loud sound, which is why here the punishment is also referred to as the Cry; see also 7:77–78c, which explains why morning found them lying lifeless in their abode, as though they had never dwelt there (see the identical wording in vv. 94–95; cf. 7:78).

69 And indeed Our messengers came to Abraham with glad tidings. They said, “Peace.” “Peace,” he said, and he hastened to bring them a roasted calf.

69 For the story of Abraham, see also 14:35–41; 15:51–60; 37:83–113; 51:24–36; cf. Genesis 17:1–25:10. Our messengers, also referred to in 51:24 as the honored guests of Abraham and in 15:51 as his guests, are said to have been a group of angels (Kl) ranging (according to various accounts) from three to twelve in number; see 51:24–25c. The glad tidings with which the messengers came were the announcement of the birth of Abraham’s son (Kl); see 11:71–73c. The roasted calf Abraham hastened to bring to his guests is also described in 51:26 as a fattened calf.

70 Then when he saw that their hands reached not toward it, he conceived a fear of them. They said, “Fear not. Verily we have been sent unto the people of Lot.”

70 When Abraham saw that they did not partake of the food that he put before them, he feared that they had come with some ill intent (Q, R), confirming a suspicion he had of his guests as mentioned in 51:25, where he refers to them as an unfamiliar folk. Refusing to eat food brought by a host would have been a sign of hostility; see 51:27–28c. As al-Rāzī explains, the guests did not eat the food presented to them because, although they came in the form of men, they were angels, and angels do not consume physical nourishment; for another instance of an angel appearing in the form of a man in the Quran, see 19:17. That the angels have been sent unto the people of Lot (cf. 15:58–60; 51:32–34) means they have come to destroy them (JJ). According to 15:57 and 51:31, the angels’ reply was prompted by Abraham’s question, What is your errand, O messengers?

71 And his wife was standing there and she laughed. Then We gave her glad tidings of Isaac, and after Isaac, of Jacob.

72 She said, “Oh, woe unto me! Shall I bear a child when I am an old woman, and this husband of mine is an old man? That would surely be an astounding thing.”

73 They said, “Do you marvel at the Command of God? The Mercy of God and His Blessings be upon you, O People of the House! Truly He is Praised, Glorious.”

71–73 It is said that Abraham’s wife, Sarah (JJ, R), laughed because of her joy over the fact that the guests did not pose a threat to Abraham (R). Alternately, her laughter denotes her happiness over the news of the impending destruction of the people of Lot (JJ, R); cf. Genesis 17:17; 18:12–15. Abraham was said to be 120 years old at this time, and Sarah was 99 (JJ); see also 51:29. Sarah’s astonishment over the glad tidings (see also 51:27–28; cf. 37:112) that they would have a son (Isaac; cf. 51:28; 15:53) and a grandson (Isaac’s son Jacob) was on account of their old age (see also 15:54; 51:29). The angels’ response to Sarah’s comment is similar to God’s reply to Zachariah’s prayer for a child in 19:9; see also 15:55; 51:30.

74 So when the awe had left Abraham and glad tidings had come unto him, he pleaded with Us concerning the people of Lot.

74 Abraham . . . pleaded with Us is understood to mean that he spoke to the angels and tried to dissuade them from bringing destruction down upon the people of Lot (Kl, Ṭ), as in 29:32, where Abraham protests, Verily, Lot is in it (cf. Genesis 18:23–33).

75 Truly Abraham was clement, tenderhearted, penitent.

75 See also 9:114, which describes Abraham in similar terms with reference to his plea for forgiveness of his father.

76 “O Abraham! Turn away from this. Truly the Command of thy Lord has come, and surely a punishment that cannot be repelled comes upon them.”

76 Turn away from this is said to have been uttered by the angels (Bd, Z); for the same expression in the context of the story of Joseph, see also 12:29. The Command of thy Lord has come means that God’s Decree and Judgment have been passed concerning the people of Lot and therefore cannot be stopped by supplication or any other means (Z).

77 When Our messengers came to Lot, he was distressed on their account, and felt himself powerless concerning them. And he said, “This is a terrible day!”

78 And his people came hurrying toward him, while earlier they had been committing evil deeds. He said, “O my people! These are my daughters; they are purer for you. So reverence God, and disgrace me not with regard to my guests. Is there not among you a man of sound judgment?”

79 They said, “Certainly you know that we have no right to your daughters, and surely you know that which we desire.”

77–79 For the story of Lot, see also 7:80–84; 15:57–77; 26:160–73; 27:54–58; 29:28–35; 37:133–38; 54:33–38. Lot was the nephew of Abraham, but some say he was his maternal cousin. Lot was sent to the people of Sodom and its surrounding towns, calling them to believe in the One God and relinquish their sinful ways; see 7:80–81c.

The angels went from Abraham’s village to Lot’s village, which was nearby (R). Since they arrived in the form of handsome male youths, when Lot saw them, he did not know that they were angels (R). Thus Lot was distressed on their account, because he feared that his people would attempt to have sexual relations with them (R), as the men among the people of Lot were known to have sexual interest in male foreigners, but also in males among themselves. Lot felt himself powerless, since he feared that his people had come for his guests and that he would be unable to defend them (R, Z). It is also said that the people of Lot had sought to satisfy their sexual desires with great aggression (see 7:80–81c; 15:67–71; Genesis 19), which would only augment Lot’s fears.

Although the plain sense of my daughters refers to Lot’s own daughters, which is how many commentators understand the expression (Ṭs, Z), others say that the daughters here are not Lot’s own biological children, but rather the women among the people of Lot (IK, Ṭ). By offering females to his people—that is, offering women to them in marriage (JJ, Ṭ)—Lot was attempting to divert them from his male guests, in search of whom they had come (Ṭ). Lot’s statement to his people that his daughters are purer for them is related to 7:82, where his people deride the morality of Lot and his followers by calling them those who keep themselves pure (cf. 27:56), which some commentators say refers to their refusal to engage in the sexual practices of the Sodomites. The Sodomites' reply to Lot, You know that we have no right to your daughters, is understood to mean that they have no sexual need (ḥājah) for his daughters (JJ, Ṭs).

80 He said, “Would that I had the strength [to resist] you, or could seek refuge in some mighty support!”

81 They said, “O Lot! We are the envoys of thy Lord. They shall not reach thee. So set out with thy family during the night, and let none of you turn around, save thy wife; surely that which befalls them shall befall her. Indeed, the morning shall be their tryst. Is not the morning nigh?”

80–81 Strength here refers to an army (JJ), and mighty support to family or both family and friends (Aj). They shall not reach thee means that Lot's people will not be able to inflict any kind of evil upon him (JJ). For God's saving Lot and his family, but not his wife, who is believed to have outwardly followed the religion of Lot, but who was secretly a disbeliever and thus was among those who lagged behind; see also 7:83; 15:60; 26:171; 27:57; 29:32; 37:134.

82 So when Our Command came, We made its uppermost to be its lowermost, and We rained down upon them stones of baked clay, one upon another, 83 marked by thy Lord; and they are never far from the wrongdoers.

82–83 God's Command is also referred to as the Cry that seized them at sunrise in 15:73; for the connection between God's Command and the Cry with reference to the destruction of the Thamūd, see commentary on 11:66–68. It is said that the people of Lot lived in five (Q) or seven (Āl) cities, of which Sodom was the greatest (Āl, IK, Q). We made its uppermost to be its lowermost means that God caused Sodom to become completely overturned, making it the lowliest of the cities of the people of Lot after it had been the greatest of them (Āl); see also 15:75. The rain of stones of baked clay that came down upon the people of Lot (see also 15:74) is also referred to as a rain in 7:84; 26:173; 27:58. They are described here as marked, since it is believed that each stone had inscribed upon it the name of the person for whom it was intended (IK, M, N), and by thy Lord, since each stone fell in accordance with God's Judgment (N); see also the identical wording in 51:34 as well as the commentary on this verse. Never far from the wrongdoers is understood to mean that these stones were not distant from the people of Lot (M). Alternately, it can mean that these stones could also be sent upon the Makkan idolaters (JJ, M), thus functioning as a threat (N), since it implies that the latter would be liable to the same fate as the people of Lot if they continue in their ways.

84 And unto Midian, their brother Shu^ʿayb. He said, “O my people! Worship God! You have no god other than Him. Diminish not the measure and the balance. Truly I see you faring well, but I fear for you the punishment of an all-encompassing Day.

85 O my people! Observe fully the measure and the balance with justice and diminish not people's goods, and behave not wickedly upon the earth, working corruption.

86 The remnant from God is better for you, if you are believers, and I am not a keeper over you.”

84–86 For the story of Shu^ʿayb, see also 7:85–93; 26:176–89. Shu^ʿayb was also an Arabian prophet who is identified by many Muslim authorities with the Biblical figure Jethro, the father-in-law of Moses. Shu^ʿayb was sent to the people of Midian, who resided in northwestern Arabia; see 7:85c. Like other prophets, he called his people to worship the One God. He tells them to diminish not the measure and the balance (cf. 7:85; 26:181) and to observe fully the measure and the balance with justice (cf. 7:85; 26:181–82), meaning that the Midianites should be honest in their business relations. He also calls them to diminish not people's goods (see also 7:85; 26:183)—that is, that they should give people the full measure of what they paid for—which was also a problem among the Makkan idolaters during the time of the Prophet; see Sūrah 83. For Shu^ʿayb's call to his people to behave not wickedly upon the earth, working corruption, see 7:85c.

The remnant from God renders baqiyyat Allāh; baqiyyah literally means “remainder” or “that which remains.” The wealth that is obtained through honest commercial practices and given by God is better than the gains acquired through fraudulent ones (R), the remnant being what is “left” after one observes fully the measure and the balance with justice and abstains from what is illicit. Alternately, it can refer to the reward that is with God or His Contentment, which is greater than what is gained through the act of defrauding (R), since it remains and abides in the Hereafter; see also 42:36: That which lies with God is better and more lasting for those who believe and trust in their Lord; cf. 20:73, 131. For the Quranic insistence that the Prophet Muhammad is not a keeper or guardian over his people, see 4:80; 6:66, 104, 107; 10:108; 17:54; 39:41; 42:6, 48; 88:22.

87 They said, “O Shu^ʿayb! Does your manner of praying require that we forsake that which our fathers worshipped, or that we should not do as we will with our wealth? Surely you are a man of forbearance and sound judgment.”

87 Some commentators note that the Midianites’ question here is a form of mockery (Kl, Q). Even in their estimation of Shu^ʿayb as surely . . . a man of forbearance and sound judgment, they intimate that he has these qualities only in his own opinion (Q). The implication is thus that the Midianites, who were arrogant (7:88), did not take seriously Shu^ʿayb’s message, instead referring to him as but one of the bewitched (26:185) and among the liars (26:186).

88 He said, “O my people! What think you: if I stand upon a clear proof from my Lord, and He has provided me with goodly provision from Himself? I desire not to do behind your backs that which I forbid you. I desire naught but to set matters aright so far as I am able; but my success lies with God alone. In Him do I trust and unto Him do I turn.

88 The clear proof that Shu^ʿayb brought is said to be in the form of miracles (mu^ʿjizāt), which are given to all prophets by God to prove their veracity; see 7:85c. My success lies with God alone (wa mā tawfīqī illā bi’Llāh) is a well-known expression in everyday Muslim discourse employed in many diverse contexts; it conveys the idea that no matter what one does, it is ultimately up to God whether it will be successful and carry a blessing in this world and in the next. Shu^ʿayb’s statement In Him do I trust and unto Him do I turn is identical to the statement the Prophet is taught to make in 42:10; see also 7:88–89c.

89 O my people! Let not your dissension with me lead you into sin, such that there should befall you that which befell the people of Noah, or the people of Hūd, or the people of Ṣāliḥ; and the people of Lot are not far from you!

90 And seek forgiveness from your Lord; then turn unto Him in repentance. Truly my Lord is Merciful, Loving.”

89–90 In a sense v. 89 says, “Let not your enmity toward me cause you to commit sin, so that you become afflicted with the kind of punishment that befell previous generations” (Kl); on not letting anger or resentment (even when justified) lead one to sin, see 5:2, 8. For the destruction of the people of Noah, Hūd, Ṣāliḥ, and Lot, see vv. 25–48, 50–60, 61–68, 77–83, respectively. When Shu^ʿayb tells his people, The people of Lot are not far from you! he is pointing out that Lot’s community was the most recent one, the closest to them in time, to have perished (Kl). Seek forgiveness from your Lord; then turn unto Him in repentance is also uttered by the prophet Hūd in 11:52.

91 They said, “O Shu^ʿayb! We do not comprehend much of what you say, and verily we consider you to be weak among us. And were it not for your clan, we would surely stone you, for you have no power over us.”

91 The Midianites tell Shu^ʿayb that they do not comprehend much of what he says as a way of expressing derision for him (Z), since, in their eyes, he was weak, that is, lowly (Z); see also 11:87c. In ancient Arabian tribal culture people were offered protection by their clan, and since the clan to which Shu^ʿayb belonged was a part of the religious community of the Midianites, they could not hurt him (R, Z).

92 He said, “O my people! Is my clan mightier over you than God? Yet, you would put Him behind you with disregard. Surely my Lord encompasses whatsoever you do.

93 O my people! Act according to your position; I, too, am acting. Soon you shall know upon whom there comes a punishment that disgraces him, and who is a liar. So keep watch! I, too, am among you watching.”

92–93 You would put Him behind you with disregard; that is, “You would cast God behind your backs and not be fearful of Him?” (JJ). Shu‘ayb’s words Act according to your position; I, too, am acting are similar to what the Prophet is instructed to tell the Makkan idolaters (see 6:135; 39:39), and serve as both a warning and a threat; see 6:135c. The same is the case with Shu‘ayb’s statement to those who rejected his message: they should keep watch; he too is watching along with them. The Prophet is told to speak similar words to those who do not believe in his message (see 9:52; 10:20, 102; 32:30); see also 6:135c; 7:87c.

94 And when Our Command came, We saved Shu‘ayb and those who believed with him, through a Mercy from Us. And the Cry seized those who did wrong, and morning found them lying lifeless in their abode, 95 as though they had never dwelt there. Behold! Away with Midian, just as Thamūd was done away!

94–95 For identical wording in the story of the prophet Ṣāliḥ with respect to the coming of God’s Command, the role of Divine Mercy in the salvation of those who believed in their prophet, the Cry seizing the wrongdoers, and morning finding them lying lifeless in their abode, as though they had never dwelt there, see commentary on 11:66–68. V. 95 proclaims, Away with Midian, just as Thamūd was done away, since their fates were so similar; see also 7:91–92c.

- 96 And indeed We sent Moses with Our signs and a manifest authority 97 unto Pharaoh and his notables. But they followed the command of Pharaoh, and the command of Pharaoh was not sound.

96–97 For the story of Moses, see also 2:49–61; 7:103–55; 10:75–93; 20:9–97; 26:10–66; 28:3–46; 79:15–25. The signs with which Moses came, which are also referred to as clear proofs (7:105; 29:39), are the miracles he performed (Kl); see 7:105c. Some state that a manifest authority refers to Moses' staff specifically (Q); for Moses' staff, see 7:106–8c. On the notables of Pharaoh, see 7:103c; 10:75c.

- 98 He shall go before his people on the Day of Resurrection and lead them to the Fire. Evil indeed is the watering place to which they are led!
99 And they were pursued in this [world] by a curse, and [shall be] on the Day of Resurrection. Evil indeed is the gift that will be offered them!

98–99 Watering place renders wird, a word usually associated with the quenching of thirst, thus emphasizing the severity of the punishment (Z). Pharaoh's people will be led by him to Hell on the Day of Resurrection in accordance with 17:71: On the Day We shall call every people by their imam. The sentence They were pursued in this [world] by a curse (v. 99) can refer to a curse in general (Z) or specifically to their being drowned in the Red Sea (Ṭ; see 7:136c).

- 100 These are among the stories We have recounted unto thee of the towns. Among them are some that remain and some that have been mown down.
101 We wronged them not, but they wronged themselves. And their gods whom they called upon apart from God did not avail them in the least when the Command of thy Lord came, and they increased them in naught but ruin.

102 Such is the seizing of thy Lord when He seizes the towns while they are doing wrong. Surely His seizing is painful, severe.

100–102 These verses mark the end of the long sequence of narratives in this sūrah about the prophets who had been sent to their respective communities and those communities' destruction for rejecting the message. The punishments that befell these people were not arbitrary, but were the result of the iniquities that they had committed; they thus wronged themselves and left themselves liable to punishment. In other words, God wronged them not, because they had been given fair warning through the sending of messengers, but they wronged themselves (cf. 2:57; 9:70; 16:33, 118; 29:40; 30:9) by failing to acknowledge the clear proofs and follow the teachings of the prophets who were sent to them.

The reason that the gods whom these destroyed communities called upon apart from God could not avail them in the least was because in this world they could not bring about any benefit for them; this would be the case even more so in the Hereafter (cf. 16:20). God destroyed the towns while they were doing wrong, although if they had changed their ways, He might not have destroyed them, as in v. 117: And thy Lord would never destroy the towns unjustly, while their people were reforming.

103 Truly in that is a sign for those who fear the punishment of the Hereafter. That is a Day on which mankind shall be gathered together, and that is a Day that shall be witnessed.

104 And We delay it not, save for a limited term.

103–4 In that is a sign refers to the previous stories of the destroyed nations (JJ). Mankind will all be gathered together on the Day of Judgment in order to be judged and recompensed for their actions (Bḍ), an event referred to elsewhere as the Day of Gathering (42:7; 64:9). The Day of Judgment is also called a Day that shall be witnessed, because it will be the day on which all human beings, from the beginning of creation to its end, will be present (Kl) and stand before God (Z) when He calls them to account for their actions during their time on earth. A limited term refers to the fact that the time of the Day of Judgment is already known to God (R).

105 On the Day it comes, no soul shall speak save by His Leave. Among them shall be the wretched and the felicitous.

105 That none will be allowed to speak on the Last Day except with God's Permission is also related in 78:38: That Day the Spirit and the angels stand in rows, none speaking, save one whom the Compassionate permits, and who speaks aright; and 20:108: And the voices will be humbled before the Compassionate, and you will hear naught but a murmur; cf. 36:65. The terms the wretched and the felicitous refer to the damned and the saved, respectively; these are among the more commonly used terms for these two groups in Islamic texts, and much has been written, especially in Sufi literature, about them.

106 As for those who are wretched, they shall be in the Fire, wherein there shall be for them groaning and wailing, 107 abiding therein for so long as the heavens and the earth endure, save as thy Lord wills. Surely thy Lord does whatsoever He wills.

108 And as for those who are felicitous, they shall be in the Garden, abiding therein for so long as the heavens and the earth endure, save as thy Lord wills—a gift unfailing.

106–8 The inhabitants in Hell are described as groaning and wailing, which means that they will be breathing heavily, weeping ceaselessly, and experiencing an extreme state of pain, regret, and incurable grief (R). Al-Bayḍāwī argues that the period in Hell described as for so long as the heavens and the earth endure refers to neither serial time nor time as it exists in the physical realm of existence. Rather, it refers to the heavens and earth as the basic topographic “setting” of the Afterlife. To support his point, he cites 14:48: On that Day the earth shall be changed into other than the earth, and the heavens [too]. The felicitous too remain in the Garden for so long as the heavens and the earth endure, but with the added nuance that it is a gift unfailing, which is interpreted to mean that the Garden will never cease (Kl).

According to the seventh/thirteenth-century Damascene theologian and jurist Ibn Taymiyyah (d. 728/1328), the wording in v. 107 is a clear indication that Hell itself will one day cease to exist, but not Heaven (al-Radd ‘alā man qāla bi-fanā’ al-jannah wa-l-nār [Riyadh, 1995], 66–68). The thesis that Hell would one day cease to exist or “freeze over” is also asserted by many other Islamic authorities, especially Sufis. See also the essay “Death, Dying, and the Afterlife in the Quran.”

109 So be not in doubt concerning that which these [people] worship; they worship only as their fathers worshipped before. We shall surely give them their share, undiminished.

109 According to this verse, there should be no doubt concerning the final outcome for the Makkan idolaters (Bḍ). The Makkans, like the communities before them, ardently adhered to the religious worldview of their ancestors. See also v. 62 and commentary, where the Thamūd likewise are given to the ways of their fathers. The share, undiminished that the Makkan idolaters will receive is punishment (IK); cf. 11:15–16c.

110 Indeed, We gave unto Moses the Book; then difference arose regarding it. And were it not for a Word that had preceded from thy Lord, judgment would have been rendered between them. Yet, truly they are confounded by doubt regarding it.

111 Surely for each, thy Lord shall pay them in full for their deeds. Truly He is Aware of what they do.

110–11 V. 110 is repeated verbatim in 41:45; see commentary on that verse. For the Book that was given to Moses, namely, the Torah, see also 6:154: Then We gave unto Moses the Book, complete for those who would be virtuous, as an exposition of all things, and as a guidance and a mercy, that haply they might believe in the meeting with their Lord (cf. 2:53; 17:2; 23:49; 25:35; 28:43; 32:23). A Word that had already gone forth is commonly employed in the Quran when speaking about God’s Decree; see 10:19; 20:129; 41:45; 42:14. That thy Lord shall pay them in full for their deeds means that God will give them the full reward for their actions

112 So be steadfast, as thou hast been commanded—and those who turn in repentance along with you—and be not rebellious. Truly He sees whatsoever you do.

113 And incline not toward the wrongdoers, lest the Fire should touch you—and you will have no protector apart from God. Thereafter you will not be helped.

112–13 Be steadfast, a command addressed to the Prophet, is understood by some to mean that he should hold steadfastly to the Quran (R); by extension, it is a command also directed toward those who turn in repentance along with him, namely, the Prophet's Companions (Q). And incline not toward the wrongdoers means that the believers should never approve of the actions of the Makkan idolaters (IK).

114 And perform the prayer at the two ends of the day and in the early hours of the night. Truly good deeds remove those that are evil. This is a reminder for those who remember.

115 And be thou patient. Truly God neglects not the reward of the virtuous.

114–15 The prayers here are usually understood as referring to the five daily canonical prayers (ṣalāh) in Islam. The prayers at the two ends of the day are interpreted to be the prayers performed at dawn (ṣubḥ/fajr) and sunset (maghrib), or at dawn and in the late afternoon (ʿaṣr), or at midday (ẓuhr) and in the late afternoon; the early hours of the night can collectively refer to the prayers performed at sunset and during the night (ʿishāʿ), or to the latter only (IK). A similar range of opinion regarding the five prayers can be seen in identifying the middlemost prayer in 2:238.

Truly good deeds remove those that are evil is understood to mean that performing the daily prayers erases one’s minor sins, as the Prophet is reported to have said, “Verily from prayer to prayer there is an expiation for the [minor sins committed] between them, as long as the major sins have been avoided” (Z). In a more general sense, it can refer to the manner in which the positive effects of good actions can offset the negative effects of evil actions, as the Prophet said, “Follow up an evil deed with a good deed, and it shall erase it.” In a ḥadīth the Prophet said, “For everything there is a polish, and the polish of the heart is the remembrance of God” (see also 13:28c), referring to the effect of prayer and remembrance on a heart that is hardened and darkened by sin. On the connection between patience and God’s reward, see v. 11c. Other verses that mention how God will not neglect the reward of believers include 3:171; 7:170; 9:120; 12:56, 90; 18:30.

116 So why were there not among the generations before you those possessing merit, who would forbid corruption upon the earth, other than a few of those whom We saved among them? Those who did wrong pursued the luxuries they had been given, and they were guilty.

117 And thy Lord would never destroy the towns unjustly, while their people were reforming.

116–17 The Shiite Quran commentator al-Ṭūsī observes that, in asking the question in v. 116, God intends to produce wonder and amazement in the Prophet that in past communities there were only a few who were righteous while the rest were disbelievers who deserved punishment. Some interpret v. 117 to mean that God would not destroy a people just because they were disbelievers if their worldly transactions and conduct could be characterized as fair and honest; that is, the peoples of Noah, Ṣāliḥ, Lot, and Shu‘ayb were destroyed utterly when God characterized them as harming not only their own souls, but also other human beings and other creatures (Q, R).

118 And had thy Lord willed, He would have made mankind one community. But they cease not to differ, 119 save those upon whom thy Lord has Mercy—and for this He created them. And the Word of thy Lord is fulfilled: “I shall surely fill Hell with jinn and men all together!”

118–19 Mankind is not one community, because the existence of diversity and difference (ikhtilāf) is decreed by the Divine Wisdom (Aj); see also 5:48; 16:93; 42:18; 2:213c. As a consequence of what is demanded by God’s Wisdom, people did not cease to differ, which suggests that strife and difference are a necessary part of life in this world: some people receive the Divine Mercy and follow the truth, while others, namely, those who receive God’s Vengeance, pursue falsehood (Aj). More specifically, they cease not to differ may be a reference to the religious and sectarian differences among people (Q, R). Save those upon whom thy Lord has Mercy suggests that there are people who are not bound up in the strife and difference in the world. As Ibn ‘Ajībah explains, they are “a people whom God has guided out of His Bounty. They adhere to what is the root of religion and its foundation, such as belief in God’s Oneness, and faith in all of the messengers and that with which they have come.”

For this can be a reference to the differences to be found of necessity in the human world (Aj); that is, God created the world in order for there to be differences by virtue of His Wisdom. Alternately, for this can refer to the Divine Mercy (R), which would mean that God created the world in order to manifest His Mercy. Some, however, interpret this verse as meaning, “We created the people of difference for difference, and the people of mercy for mercy,” suggesting that God created human beings for the purpose of bringing about the situation described in the first part of v. 119 (R). Yet another possibility is that for this refers to both differences and Divine Mercy, which would imply that all the differences we see in the world are ultimately nothing but manifestations of God’s Mercy. God’s Promise that He shall surely fill Hell with jinn and men all together is also repeated in 32:13 (cf. 7:18; 38:85).

120 All that We recount unto thee of the stories of the messengers is that whereby We make firm thine heart. And herein there has come unto thee the Truth, and an exhortation and a reminder for the believers.

120 This verse confirms that the stories of the previous generations were revealed to the Prophet in order to make firm his heart, that is, to strengthen and console him in the face of the difficulties he encountered in his prophetic mission;

see also 11:112–13c. The Quran’s accounts of episodes in sacred history are often read as spiritual allegories that teach human beings in general how to overcome the enemies within their own souls. Concerning the message being a reminder for the believers, see 51:55: And remind, for truly the reminder benefits the believers.

121 And say unto those who believe not, “Act according to your position; we, too, are acting.

122 And wait! We, too, are waiting.”

121–22 Regarding these statements, which function as warnings and threats against the Makkan idolaters, see 6:135c.

123 Unto God belongs the Unseen in the heavens and on the earth, and unto Him are all matters returned. So worship Him, and trust in Him. And thy Lord is not heedless of that which you do.

123 After recounting to the Prophet the fate of the previous generations and granting him assurance that, like the other prophets before him, he and his followers will ultimately triumph over their enemies and that the latter will suffer a humiliating defeat if they do not mend their ways, this sūrah ends with a summary of its message to the Prophet and, by extension, to all believers. The call to trust in Him is echoed throughout the Quran, as in 3:159: Truly God loves those who trust; and 5:23: And trust in God, if you are believers. According to a Sufi interpretation of the virtue of trust in God, trust is there when “the heart is at rest because of the Lord’s Guarantee” (Aj).

Joseph

Yūsuf

The third in a series of six sūrahs whose opening verses include the letters alif, lām, and *rā*³ and speak of the Book, Yūsuf belongs to the Makkan period (JJ). The sūrah is concerned primarily with recounting the entire story of the prophet Joseph (who is also referred to in 6:84 and 40:34) and constitutes the longest and most continuous single narrative in the Quran (vv. 3–101). The general outline of Joseph’s life and times accounted here corresponds to Genesis 37:1–46:7, although there are several significant differences between the Quranic and Biblical accounts. The story of Joseph is said to have been revealed to the Prophet when some Jewish scholars in Makkah had persuaded the Makkan idolaters to ask the Prophet about certain details pertaining to Joseph’s life and legacy (R). According to another report, God revealed the story of Joseph to the Prophet after his Companions had asked him to provide them with a story (T).

As the most beautiful of stories (v. 3) begins, Joseph discloses a special dream he had to his father, Jacob, who warns Joseph not to convey his dream to his brothers (vv. 4–5), who are exceedingly jealous of him (v. 8). The brothers plot to be rid of Joseph and manage to convince Jacob to allow Joseph to go with them into the wilderness (vv. 9–14). Once left in their care, Joseph is taken into the desert by his brothers and cast into a well (v. 15). Joseph is eventually rescued by a caravan (v. 19) and purchased in Egypt by a high-ranking official (v. 21), identified with the Biblical figure Potiphar (see 12:21–22c).

While Joseph is under Potiphar’s care, Potiphar’s wife, Zulaykhā (not mentioned by name), falls in love with him and attempts to seduce him, but Joseph does not succumb to her advances (vv. 23–25). After false accusations before Potiphar (v.

25) and widespread rumors throughout Egypt of what had transpired between Joseph and Zulaykhā (v. 30), Joseph is cast into prison (v. 35). Joseph is later exonerated, released from prison, and appointed to high office in Egyptian society (vv. 50–56). By the end of the tale, Joseph’s parents and brothers come to Egypt to stay with him (v. 99), and the dream he had at the beginning of the story is fulfilled (v. 100).

Perhaps more than any other Quranic narrative, the story of Joseph has supplied material for an astonishing array of artistic, literary, and spiritual works in the Islamic tradition. The figure of Joseph himself, who is said to have possessed exceptional physical beauty, is often associated in Islamic literature with the reflection of Divine Beauty, patience in times of adversity, and the art of dream interpretation. The commentaries on this sūrah reflect this rich tradition and incorporate into their accounts material that is often folkloric and imaginative. The incident between Joseph and Zulaykhā has formed the basis for a variety of mystical and literary romances, one of the most well known of which is a lengthy Persian poem entitled Joseph and Zulaykhā (Yūsuf wa Zulaykhā) by the famous Sufi poet ʿAbd al-Raḥmān Jāmī (d. 898/1492). The philosopher and founder of the School of Illumination, Shihāb al-Dīn al-Suhrawardī (d. 587/1191), also uses the motifs and symbols from the story of Joseph in his philosophical treatise On the Reality of Love (al-Risālah fī ḥaqīqat al-ʿishq) in order to explain the metaphysical significance of love and its relation to beauty and joy on the one hand and sadness and longing on the other. Many interpret the story of Joseph symbolically and spiritually as an account of the separation of the human soul from its Divine Origin and its return to It. At the highest level of interpretation it has often been seen as an exalted love tale that speaks about the relationship between the human lover and the Divine Beloved. As al-Maybudī says in his Quran commentary, “How beautiful the story of Joseph is! It is a story of lover and beloved, a report of separation and union. [From it,] the pain-stricken one ought to read of those who are pain-stricken, and the lover ought to receive news of the pain of love and the burning desire of lovers.”

① Alif. Lām. Rā. These are the signs of the clear Book. ② Truly We sent it down as an Arabic Quran, that haply you may understand. ③ We recount unto thee the most beautiful of stories by Our having revealed unto thee this Quran, though before it thou wert among the heedless. ④ When Joseph said unto his father, “O my father, truly I have seen eleven stars, and the sun and the moon. I saw them prostrating before me.” ⑤ He said, “O my son! Recount not thy vision to thy brothers, lest they devise some scheme against thee. Surely Satan is a manifest enemy unto man. ⑥ Thus shall thy Lord choose thee, and teach thee the interpretation of events, and complete His Blessing upon thee, and upon the House of Jacob, just as He completed it upon thy forefathers, Abraham and Isaac. Truly thy Lord is Knowing, Wise.” ⑦ Certainly in Joseph and his brothers there are signs for the inquiring. ⑧ [Remember] when they said, “Truly Joseph and his brother are more beloved unto our father than are we, though we are a group. Surely our father is in manifest error! ⑨ Slay Joseph, or cast him out to some land, that your father’s concern might be for you. And be, thereafter, a righteous people.” ⑩ One among them said, “Slay not Joseph, but cast him into the depths of the well, that some caravan might pick him up, if you would take some action.” ⑪ They said, “O father! What ails thee that thou dost not trust us with Joseph? Truly we wish him well. ⑫ Send him forth with us tomorrow, to frolic and play. We shall surely be his keepers.” ⑬ He said, “Truly it grieves me that you should go with him. And I fear that the wolf may eat him, while you are heedless of him.” ⑭ They said, “If the wolf should eat him, while we are a group, then we would surely be losers!” ⑮ So when they went with him, and agreed to put him in the depths of the well, We revealed unto him, “Verily thou wilt inform them of this affair of theirs, when they are unaware.” ⑯ And in the evening they came weeping unto their father. ⑰ They said, “O father! We went racing with one another, and left Joseph with our things, and the wolf ate him. But thou wouldst not believe us, even if we were truthful.” ⑱ And they brought forth his shirt with false blood.

He said, “Nay, your souls have seduced you in this matter. Beautiful patience! And God is the One Whose help is sought against that which you describe.” ①⑨ And then a caravan came along and sent their water carrier, and he let down his bucket. He said, “Good news! Here is a boy!” So they hid him as merchandise. And God knew well what they were doing. ②⑦ And they sold him for a low price, a number of dirhams, for they valued him not. ②⑧ The man from Egypt who bought him said unto his wife, “Give him honorable accommodation. It may be that he will bring us some benefit, or that we may take him as a son.” And thus did We establish Joseph in the land, that We might teach him the interpretation of events. And God prevails over His affair, but most of mankind know not. ②⑨ When he reached his maturity, We gave him wisdom and knowledge. Thus do We recompense the virtuous. ③① But she in whose house he was staying sought to lure him from himself. She locked the doors and said, “Come, thou!” He said, “God be my refuge! Truly He is my lord, and has made beautiful my accommodation. Verily the wrongdoers will not prosper!” ③② She indeed inclined toward him, and he would have inclined toward her, had he not seen the proof of his Lord. Thus it was, that We might turn him away from evil and indecency. Truly he was among Our sincere servants. ③③ And they raced to the door, while she tore his shirt from behind. And they encountered her master at the door. She said, “What is the recompense for one who desires ill toward thy wife, save that he be imprisoned, or a painful punishment?” ③④ He said, “It was she who sought to lure me from myself.” And a witness from her own people testified, “If his shirt is torn from the front, then she has spoken the truth and he is among the liars. ③⑤ But if his shirt is torn from behind, then she has lied and he is among the truthful.” ③⑥ So when he saw that his shirt was torn from behind, he said, “Verily this is among the schemes of you women—your scheming is great indeed! ③⑦ Joseph, turn away from this. And you, seek forgiveness for your sin. Truly you were among those at fault.” ③⑧ Some women of the city said, “The viceroy’s wife sought to lure her slave boy from himself! He has filled her with ardent love. Truly we consider her to be in manifest error.” ③⑨ So when she heard of their plotting, she sent for them, and prepared a repast for them, and gave each of them a knife. And she said [to Joseph], “Come out before them!” Then when they saw him, they so admired him that they cut their hands and said, “God be praised! This is no human being. This is naught but a noble angel!” 32 She said, “This is the one on whose account you blamed me. I indeed sought to lure him from himself, but he remained chaste. And if he does not do as I command, he shall surely be imprisoned; and he shall be among those humbled.” 33 He said, “My Lord! Prison is dearer to me than that to which they call me. If Thou dost not turn their scheming away from me, I shall incline toward them and be among the ignorant.” 34 So his Lord answered him, and turned their scheming away from him. Truly He is the Hearing, the Knowing. 35 Then it occurred to them, after they had seen the signs, that they should imprison him for a time. 36 Now two young men entered the prison with him. One of them said, “Truly I see myself [in a dream] pressing wine.” The other said, “Truly I see myself [in a dream] carrying bread atop my head, from which the birds eat.” “Inform us of its interpretation. Truly we see you as being among the virtuous.” 37 He said, “No food with which you are provided will come unto you, save that I shall inform you of its interpretation before it comes. This is among the things my Lord has taught me. I forsake the creed of a people who believe not in God, and they who are disbelievers in the Hereafter. 38 And I follow the creed of my fathers, Abraham, and Isaac, and Jacob. It is not for us to ascribe any partners unto God. That is from the bounty God has bestowed upon us and upon mankind, but most of mankind do not give thanks. 39 O my fellow prisoners! Are diverse lords better, or God, the One, the Paramount? 40 You worship apart from Him naught but names that you have named—you and your fathers—for which God has sent down no authority. Judgment belongs to God alone. He commands that you worship none but Him. That is the upright religion, but most of mankind know not. 41 O my fellow prisoners! As for one of you, he shall serve wine to his lord. But as for the other, he shall be crucified, and the birds will eat from his head. The matter about which you inquired has been decreed.” 42 And he said to the one of them whom he knew would be saved, "Mention me to your lord." But Satan caused him to forget to make mention to his lord. So he remained in prison for several years. ④③ And the king said, "Verily I see [in a dream] seven fat cows being eaten by seven lean ones; and seven green heads of grain, and others dry. O notables! Give me your opinion on my vision, if you can interpret visions." ④④ They said, "What confused dreams! And we are not experts in the interpretation of dreams!" ④⑤ Now the one who had been saved among the two said, remembering after a while, "I shall inform you of its interpretation, so send me forth." ④⑥ "Joseph, O truthful one! Give us thine opinion concerning seven fat cows being eaten by seven lean ones, and seven green heads of grain, and others dry, that haply I may return to the people, that they might know." ④⑦ He said, "You will sow diligently for seven years. Then whatever you harvest, leave in its ear, save a little that you eat. ④⑧ Then after this will come seven hard [years] which will devour that which you have saved in advance for them, save a little of that which you have stored. ④⑨ Then after this will come a year wherein people will be granted succor, and wherein they will press [wine and oil]." ④⑩ The king said, "Bring him to me!" So when the messenger came to him he said, "Return to your lord and ask him, 'What of the women who cut their hands? Surely my Lord knows well their scheming!'" ④⑪ He said, "What was your purpose when you sought to lure Joseph from himself?" They said, "God be praised! We know no evil against him." The viceroy's wife said, "Now the truth has come to light. It was I who sought to lure him from himself, and verily he is among the truthful." ④⑫ "This is so, that he may know that I betrayed him not in his absence. Truly God guides not the scheming of the treacherous. ④⑬ But I absolve not my own soul. Surely the soul commands to evil, save whom my Lord may show mercy. Truly my Lord is Forgiving, Merciful." ④⑭ And the king said, "Bring him to me, that I might reserve him exclusively for myself." Then when he had spoken with him, he said, "Truly this day thou shalt be of high rank and trusted in our presence." ④⑮ He said, "Set me over the storehouses of the land. Truly I am a skilled keeper." ④⑯ Thus did We establish Joseph in the land, that there he might settle wheresoever he will. We cause Our Mercy to fall upon whomsoever We will, and We neglect not the reward of the virtuous. ⁵⁷ And the reward of the Hereafter is better for those who believe and are reverent. ⁵⁸ The brothers of Joseph came and entered upon him, and he recognized them, while they knew him not. ⁵⁹ And when he had arranged for their provisions, he said, “Bring me a brother of yours from your father. Do you not see that I give full measure, and that I am the best of hosts? ⁶⁰ But if you bring him not unto me, you shall have no measure from me, nor shall you come nigh unto me.” ⁶¹ They said, “We shall seek to lure him from his father; that we shall surely do.” ⁶² He said to his servant boys, “Put their merchandise in their saddlebags. Perchance they will recognize it when they have gone back to their people; perchance they will return.” ⁶³ So when they returned to their father, they said, “O father! The measure has been withheld from us. So send our brother with us that we might obtain the measure. We shall surely be his keepers.” ⁶⁴ He said, “Should I entrust him to you as I entrusted his brother to you aforetime? But God is the best of keepers, and He is the most Merciful of the merciful.” ⁶⁵ And when they opened their belongings, they found their merchandise had been returned to them. They said, “O father! What [more] do we seek? This is our merchandise returned unto us! Now we can provide for our family, and keep watch over our brother, while getting another camel-load—these are meager rations!” ⁶⁶ He said, “I will not send him forth with you till you give me a solemn pledge before God that you will surely bring him back to me, unless you are surrounded.” So when they gave their solemn pledge, he said, “God is Guardian over what we say.” ⁶⁷ And he said, “O my sons! Enter not by one gate, but enter by separate gates. Yet, I cannot avail you aught against God. Judgment belongs to God alone. I trust in Him; and let those who trust, trust in Him.” ⁶⁸ And when they entered whence their father had commanded them, it did not avail them aught against God, but it fulfilled a need in Jacob’s soul. Truly he was possessed of knowledge because of that which We taught him, but most of mankind know not. ⁶⁹ And when they entered upon Joseph, he drew his brother close to himself and said, “Truly I am your brother; so be not distressed on account of that which they used to do.” ⁷⁰ And when he had made ready their provisions, he put the drinking cup into his brother’s saddlebag. Then a herald cried out, “O you men of the caravan! Truly you are thieves!” ⁷¹ Turning toward them, they said, “What are you missing?” ⁷² They said, “We are missing the goblet of the king.” “For whosoever brings it forth, there shall be a camel-load. I shall be its guarantor.” ⁷³ They said, “By God, you certainly know that we came not to work corruption in the land, and we are not thieves.” ⁷⁴ They said, “And what will be the recompense for it if you be liars?” ⁷⁵ They said, “Its recompense will be that he in whose saddlebag it is found—he himself shall be its recompense. Thus do we recompense the wrongdoers.” ⁷⁶ Then he began with their baggage, before the baggage of his brother. Then he removed it from his brother’s baggage. Thus did We devise a scheme for Joseph. Under the king’s law, he could not have taken his brother unless God willed. We raise in degrees whomsoever We will, and above every possessor of knowledge is a knower. ⁷⁷ They said, “If he has stolen, a brother of his had stolen aforetime.” But Joseph kept it secret in his soul and disclosed it not unto them. He said, “You are in a worse position! And God knows best concerning that which you describe.” ⁷⁸ They said, “O viceroy! He has a venerable, aged father; so take one of us in his place. Truly we see you as being among the virtuous.” ⁷⁹ He said, “God be my refuge that we should take any save the one with whom we found our property! For then we would surely be wrongdoers.” ⁸⁰ So when they despaired of [swaying] him, they conferred privately. The eldest of them said, “Do you not know that your father has taken a solemn pledge from you before God, and earlier you neglected Joseph? Thus I shall not depart from this land till my father grants me leave, or God renders judgment upon me, and He is the best of judges!” ⁸¹ Return unto your father and say, ‘O father! Verily your son has committed theft. And we bore witness to that which we knew, but we are not keepers of the unseen.’ ⁸² So ask the town wherein we were, and the caravan with which we approached. Verily we are truthful.” ⁸³ He said, “Nay, your souls have seduced you in this matter. Beautiful patience! It may be that God will bring them to me all together. Truly He is the Knowing, the Wise.” 84 And he turned away from them and said, “Oh, how great is my grief for Joseph!” His eyes had turned white with grief, and he was choked with anguish. 85 They said, “By God, wilt thou go on remembering Joseph till thou art ill to the point of death, or till thou hast perished?” 86 He said, “I complain of my sorrow and grief to God alone. And I know from God that which you know not. 87 O my sons! Go and inquire about Joseph and his brother and despair not of God’s Comfort; truly none despairs of God’s Comfort save the disbelieving people.” 88 So when they entered upon him they said, “O viceroy! Affliction has befallen us and our people. We bring but meager merchandise; yet grant us full measure and be charitable unto us. Truly God shall recompense the charitable.” 89 He said, “Do you know what you have done with Joseph and his brother, when you were ignorant?” 90 They said, “Art thou indeed Joseph?” He said, “I am Joseph and this is my brother. God has been gracious unto us. Verily whosoever is reverent and patient—surely God neglects not the reward of the virtuous.” 91 “By God!” they said, “God has preferred thee over us, and we were at fault.” 92 He said, “There is no reproach against you this day. God will forgive you. And He is the most Merciful of the merciful. 93 Take this shirt of mine and cast it upon my father’s face; he will come to see. And bring me your family, all together.” 94 And as the caravan set off, their father said, “Truly I sense the scent of Joseph, if you think me not senile!” 95 They said, “By God! Truly thou art astray as of old.” 96 And when the bearer of glad tidings came, he cast it upon his face and he was restored to sight. He said, “Did I not say unto you that I know from God that which you know not?” 97 They said, “O father! Seek forgiveness for us from our sins. Truly we were at fault.” 98 He said, “I shall indeed seek forgiveness for you from my Lord. Truly He is Forgiving, Merciful.” 99 So when they entered upon Joseph, he drew his parents close to himself and said, “Enter Egypt in security, if God wills!” 100 And he raised his parents up to the throne, and they [all] fell prostrate toward him. He said, “O my father! This is the fulfillment of my vision; my Lord has made it come true. He was good to me when He brought me forth from prison, and brought thee from the desert, after Satan incited evil between my brothers and me. Indeed, my Lord is Subtle in that which He wills. Truly He is the Knower, the Wise. 101 My Lord! Thou hast given me something of sovereignty, and taught me the interpretation of events. Originator of the heavens and the earth! Thou art my Protector in this world and in the Hereafter! Take me as a submitter unto Thyself, and admit me to the company of the righteous.” 102 These are among the accounts of the unseen which We reveal unto thee. And thou wert not with them when they decided upon their affair and plotted. 103 And most of mankind, however much thou mightest desire, are not believers. 104 And thou askest of them no reward for it; it is naught but a reminder for the worlds. 105 How many a sign is there in the heavens and on the earth by which they pass; yet they turn away from them! 106 And most of them believe not in God, save that they ascribe partners unto Him. 107 Do they feel secure from the coming of an overwhelming punishment from God upon them? Or from the coming of the Hour suddenly, while they are unaware? 108 Say, “This is my way. I call unto God with clear sight—I, and those who follow me. Glory be to God! And I am not among those who ascribe partners unto God.” 109 And We sent none before thee, save men unto whom We sent revelation among the people of the towns. Have they not journeyed upon the earth and observed how those before them fared in the end? And the Abode of the Hereafter is better for those who are reverent. Do you not understand? 110 Till, when the messengers despaired and thought that they were deemed liars, Our Help came unto them, and whosoever We willed was saved. And Our Might shall not be turned back from the guilty people. 111 Certainly in their stories is a lesson for those possessed of intellect. It is not a fabricated account; rather, it is a confirmation of that which came before it, and an elaboration of all things, and a guidance and a mercy for a people who believe.

① Alif. Lām. Rā. These are the signs of the clear Book.

1 The Arabic letters alif, lām, and rā^ʾ, which also appear in 10:1; 11:1; 13:1; 14:1; and 15:1, are among the separated letters (al-muqaṭṭaʿāt) that are found at the beginning of twenty-nine sūrahs and whose ultimate meaning, most commentators maintain, is known only to God; see 2:1c. The clear Book refers to the Quran (Kl, Q) and its ability to make the truth manifest (Kl; for identical verses, see 26:2; 28:2; see also 43:2; 44:2). Alternately, the clear Book could be a reference to the Preserved Tablet (see 85:22c; Ṭb). See also 10:1c, where the adjective wise is understood to be a reference to the Book's being clear.

2 For Arabic Quran, see also 20:113; 39:28c; 41:3c; 42:7. Cf. 43:3.

③ We recount unto thee the most beautiful of stories by Our having revealed unto thee this Quran, though before it thou wert among the heedless.

3 In 39:23, the Quran is described as the most beautiful discourse, part of which is the story of Joseph, to which reference is made here as the most beautiful of stories. This narrative is described this way because it is understood to bring together all of the truths that pertain to one's religious life as well as one's worldly affairs (Q). On the one hand, it speaks about such matters as the Oneness of God; the nature of prophets, angels, saints, righteous people, evil people, people who have knowledge, and people who are ignorant; dream interpretation; forgiveness; and Divine Love. On the other hand, it speaks about kingship, earthly trials and punishments, human love, travel, business transactions, social etiquette, politics, and human deception (Aj, My, Q). Beautiful could refer to the beauty of the story's language and eloquence as well as its content (R). Thou wert among the heedless means that the Prophet had no knowledge of this story before the revelation of this sūrah (Kl, N, R).

4 Joseph’s father was Jacob, the son of Isaac, the son of Abraham—all of whom were prophets; for the Abrahamic line of prophets, see 6:84c. It is widely accepted that the vision Joseph had was a true dream (Aj, R, Ṭ, Ṭs), which in Islamic tradition is bestowed not only upon prophets, but also upon ordinary human beings. True dreams are distinguished from common dreams in that they convey a truth from another level of reality or represent a manifestation of the spirit in the imaginal world (see also 12:6c). Some commentators observe that the dreams of prophets are a form of Divine Revelation (Ṭ). However, others situate the beginning of Joseph’s prophetic mission at a slightly later period (see 12:15c), in which case this vision could be seen as a portent of his impending prophetic function, as was the case with the Prophet Muhammad (see the introduction to Sūrah 96).

The eleven stars are understood to represent Joseph’s eleven brothers (Bg, Q, Ṭ, Ṭs); the sun represents his father and the moon his mother (R), or vice versa (Q, Ṭ). The prostration of these heavenly bodies before Joseph is said to have been interpreted by Jacob to mean that a great calamity would soon befall his son (cf. Genesis 37:10), based upon a belief that a created being does not prostrate before another created being, except that the one to whom prostration is made will undergo a severe trial, such as when the angels bowed down before Adam, who was soon thereafter expelled from Paradise (Aj); for the fall of Adam, see 2:35c. Al-Rāzī interprets the prostration of the heavenly bodies before Joseph as symbolizing Joseph’s brothers, father, and mother eventually coming under his care. For the fulfillment of this dream, see 12:100c.

5 Jacob told Joseph not to relate his dream to his brothers because he feared their jealousy of him, as he knew that the dream meant that Joseph would not only experience tribulations, but would also attain an exalted position (Kl). Some say that Jacob understood Joseph's dream to mean that God had chosen him for prophethood and thus feared that Joseph would suffer on account of his brothers' jealousy and oppression (Bđ). According to one account, because of the innocence of his young age, Joseph did relate his vision to his brothers (Q; see v. 8); cf. Genesis 37:5, 9–10. For Satan as a manifest enemy, see, for example, 2:168, 208; 6:142; 7:22.

⑥ Thus shall thy Lord choose thee, and teach thee the interpretation of events, and complete His Blessing upon thee, and upon the House of Jacob, just as He completed it upon thy forefathers, Abraham and Isaac. Truly thy Lord is Knowing, Wise.”

6 Thus shall thy Lord choose thee means that, just as God had chosen Joseph to have such an exalted vision, so too would He choose him to accomplish great tasks (R), which some understand to be a reference to the function of prophethood (Bđ, Q). The interpretation of events refers to the ability to interpret dreams (see also v. 21 and v. 44c). In traditional Islamic psychology, this art entails knowing the source of dreams. True dreams are said to come from an angelic source, whereas false dreams come from the lower self or a demonic force (Bđ); regarding Joseph's interpretation of dreams, see vv. 37, 41, 47–49. The interpretation of events can also refer to the ability to discern the hidden meanings within scripture (see 3:7c; Bđ). More generally, it can refer to the gift of being able to discern the true nature of things.

God's completing His Blessing upon Joseph and upon the House of Jacob (see also 19:6) can refer to the blessing of prophethood (Bđ, R), in which case just as He completed it upon thy forefathers, Abraham and Isaac refers to their prophethood. Alternately, God's Blessing upon Joseph and the House of Jacob can refer to the combination of blessings they will receive in this world and the next (Bđ). In this case, God's Blessing on the forefathers Abraham and Isaac would refer to (1) the fact that Abraham was taken by God as a friend (see 4:125) and saved from the fire into which his people had cast him (see 21:69; 37:97); and (2) the fact that Isaac obeyed Abraham's request to be his sacrifice and then was ransomed by the replacement of a ram at God's Command (Bđ; see the commentary on 37:102–7).

⑦ Certainly in Joseph and his brothers there are signs for the inquiring.

7 In the account of Joseph and his eleven brothers there are signs, meaning lessons (IJ), for those who wish to gain true knowledge and learn the universal import of the story of Joseph (Bđ, JJ). One of the moral lessons of this narrative is the ultimate futility of envy, which motivated Joseph's brothers and led the Prophet Muhammad's own kin to reject him and cause him harm. Yet, both Muhammad and Joseph were assisted by God, and their enemies ended up under their authority (R). The Prophet is reported to have said, "Beware of envy, for it consumes good deeds as fire consumes wood."

The story of Joseph also contains signs for those seeking an answer to their existential situation, counseling them to have patience in times of tribulation on the one hand, and to have gratitude for God's blessings on the other (Qu). Moreover, the story shows many of the ways God gently takes care of His friends through His protection of them. It also contains signs that demonstrate that God's Love is realized through trial and tribulation (Qu).

⑧ [Remember] when they said, "Truly Joseph and his brother are more beloved unto our father than are we, though we are a group. Surely our father is in manifest error!

8 His brother refers to Benjamin, Jacob's youngest son and Joseph's only full brother (JJ, Kl, Ṭs). Since at the beginning of the account Joseph and Benjamin were so young, Jacob was particularly kind toward them and kept them closer to him than he did their brothers, but the other brothers could not bear this distinction and felt envious (Ṭs). A group translates ‘uṣbah, which conveys the sense of a large group of people usually understood to range from ten to forty in number (Bg, Kl). Though we are a group can thus be read as an expression of shock or astonishment, for the brothers thought that, as a larger or more powerful group, they had more right to their father's love than his two younger children (Bđ, Z). In tribal cultures, having many sons to help with work and to defend the family and tribe was a reason for valuing them. According to this logic, having many grown sons would thus be more valuable than having two young ones, since the latter would not suffice as defenders of their father or as powerful bearers of his legacy. With respect to Joseph in particular, it is said that Jacob loved him so much that he would keep Joseph with him night and day, never parting company (Aj). Joseph's brothers initially envied him because Jacob preferred him, but their envy became more intense after they learned of Joseph's dream (see 12:5c; Ṭ's).

⑨ Slay Joseph, or cast him out to some land, that your father's concern might be for you. And be, thereafter, a righteous people."

9 The brothers believed that slaying or banishing Joseph to some land would remove him from Jacob's attention and cause Jacob to eventually set his heart on them instead (My), meaning that his concern would then be for them alone. And be, thereafter, a righteous people means that the brothers intended to repent later to God for their transgression against Joseph (JJ, Z), and to be upright thereafter (Kl), or that, after they had disposed of Joseph, they would seek to mend their relationship with their father (Kl, Z).

⑩ One among them said, "Slay not Joseph, but cast him into the depths of the well, that some caravan might pick him up, if you would take some action."

10 One among them is a reference to their oldest brother (IK), who is not identified in the Quran but whose action resembles that of either Judah (R) or Reuben (cf. Genesis 37:22–28; Bđ, IK, Ṭū). According to the majority of commentators, the suggestion to cast him into the depths of the well, that some caravan might pick him up did not meet with the brothers' approval until later; see 12:15c.

⑪ They said, "O father! What ails thee that thou dost not trust us with Joseph? Truly we wish him well.

⑫ Send him forth with us tomorrow, to frolic and play. We shall surely be his keepers."

11–12 The brothers’ question is an indication that Jacob feared what they would do to Joseph (R) and that they had previously asked Jacob to allow Joseph to go with them, but that he had refused their request (Q). If so, then the suggestion to throw Joseph into the well mentioned in v. 10 was perhaps one of several other plans that they had made to dispose of him. By saying Truly we wish him well, the brothers made it appear to Jacob that they had a great deal of love and compassion for Joseph (R), implying that they did not intend to harm him. It was the brothers’ custom to go to the pasture and spend some time there in leisure (R). Thus, their request that Jacob allow Joseph to go with them so that he can frolic and play was the perfect pretext for them to carry out their plan. The expression we shall surely be his keepers is also employed by the brothers in v. 63, where they attempt to convince Jacob that nothing would happen to Benjamin if he were to send him along with them; see v. 64 for Jacob’s response.

13 He said, “Truly it grieves me that you should go with him. And I fear that the wolf may eat him, while you are heedless of him.”

14 They said, “If the wolf should eat him, while we are a group, then we would surely be losers!”

13–14 Jacob was saddened by the possibility of being separated from Joseph for even an hour (N) on account of his intense love for him (see 12:8c). From a spiritual perspective, just as Jacob could not be without his beloved for even an hour, so should believers not be forgetful of their Divine Beloved for even a moment, since heedlessness of God is separation, while remembrance of Him is togetherness (Aj).

Some commentators relate an account of a dream that Jacob had in which he was at the top of a mountain and Joseph was in a valley, when suddenly ten wolves encircled Joseph in order to devour him. But one of the wolves left him, at which time the ground was rent asunder and Joseph remained concealed underground for three days. According to this account, the wolves represent the brothers; the one wolf who left Joseph represents Judah or Reuben, who convinced the others not to kill him; and the crack in the ground represents the well into which the brothers resolved to cast Joseph (see v. 10). Thus, by speaking of the wolf devouring Joseph, Jacob was referring to the ten brothers (Q), who, like wolves, would act deceptively in devouring their prey. Others, however, say that since wolves were generally the most feared creatures in the pastures, Jacob was referring to an actual wolf (Q), and even a specific wolf, as the definite article the in the wolf indicates (see also 12:16–17c). The brothers’ response is understood to be an oath or a promise that nothing would happen to Joseph (JJ).

⑮ So when they went with him, and agreed to put him in the depths of the well, We revealed unto him, “Verily thou wilt inform them of this affair of theirs, when they are unaware.”

15 So when they went with him implies that the brothers had been given permission by Jacob to take Joseph with them (IH, IJ, R); cf. Genesis 37:13, where it is Jacob who sends Joseph to the brothers. According to one account, when Jacob sent Joseph with his brothers, he took a solemn pledge from them that they would protect him (cf. v. 66). Reuben (in this account) agreed to this, and then Jacob said to him, “O Reuben, he is little. And you know, O my son, my compassion for him. If he is hungry, feed him. If he is thirsty, quench his thirst. If he is tired, carry him, and then quickly bring him back to me” (Q).

When they agreed to put him in the depths of the well refers to both the plan and its implementation (IH, JJ, Q, R). Thus, between the words they went with him and agreed to put him in the depths of the well a sequence of events took place that is not mentioned in the Quran, but that accounts for the period between Joseph’s departure with his brothers and his time in the well.

Commentators describe this extra-Quranic sequence of events as follows. When the brothers left with Joseph, they took turns carrying him upon their shoulders, and Jacob saw all of them off. Once they were out of Jacob’s sight, the brother upon whose shoulders Joseph was sitting threw him down on the ground, almost breaking some of his limbs (Q). Joseph then sought his other brothers’ help, but to no avail, since each brother to whom he went took his turn at striking him (R). It is said he was beaten so severely that he was on the brink of death (R, T). One common narrative in the commentaries suggests that the brothers had previously promised Judah or Reuben (the eldest brother in some versions) that they would at least not kill Joseph (see 12:10c). When they were about to kill Joseph, this eldest brother interceded and reminded them of their promise (R, T). It was then that they decided to put him in the depths of the well.

According to another account, when Joseph sought one brother’s help as his other brothers were attacking him, this brother was moved to compassion for him and thus interceded with the brothers, telling them to return Joseph to Jacob and not to kill him. Upon hearing this, the other brothers accused the one brother of being opportunistic, only seeking to save Joseph in order to gain status in Jacob's eyes. They then threatened to kill him along with Joseph if he chose to help him. So this brother convinced them that they should throw Joseph into a well rather than kill him (cf. Genesis 37:26–27, where he convinces the brothers to sell Joseph), since by throwing him into the well Joseph would possibly die, in which case the physical stain of his blood would not be on their hands, or he would eventually be taken off by a caravan, which would at least ensure that he would be taken far away from them (Q).

The brothers took Joseph to the well and tied him up with a rope (IK). It is said that the well was very deep, spacious at the bottom, with a narrow hole at the top (IH). They then began to lower Joseph into the well. When he attempted to cling to one of the brothers as they were lowering him, the brother struck him and reviled him; and when Joseph attempted to save himself by grasping the edge of the well, the brothers hit his hands in order to loosen his grip (IK). The brothers also tied up Joseph's hands and tore off his shirt. Then Joseph cried out, "My brothers, return the shirt to me—I will cover myself with it in the well!" to which his brothers sarcastically responded, "Call the sun, the moon, and the eleven stars [cf. v. 2] to comfort you!" (Ṭ, Ṭs). When Joseph was halfway down the well, the brothers cut the rope. He fell into the water at the bottom of the well, and the water covered him completely. In order to save himself, Joseph grabbed hold of a rock in the middle of the well and stood up on it (IK).

When Joseph was in the well, God revealed unto him, through the medium of an angel or through inspiration (ilhām; Kl), that he would inform them of this affair of theirs, when they are unaware. Some commentators have said that this was the very moment in which Joseph became a prophet (Q, Ṭs), as he had received a revelation from God. The commentators agree that these words revealed to Joseph were a foretelling of the future. They were intended to give him solace in a difficult situation (JJ), and to strengthen his heart with the firm knowledge that he would eventually be freed from his current state of trial and that his brothers would one day fall under his authority (R).

When they are unaware can also be read to mean "while they are unaware," in which case these words would not be a part of God's direct address to Joseph about a future event, but would instead be a reference within the verse to the actual situation in which Joseph found himself in the well (Bḍ): God was revealing to him something of which his brothers were unaware. Al-Rāzī observes that the wisdom in concealing this revelation from Joseph's brothers was that, had they known that Joseph was a prophet, their jealousy would have been greater, and they would surely have killed him. Al-Bayḏāwī notes that when they are unaware is a foreshadowing of v. 58, where Joseph meets his brothers and recognizes them, but they do not recognize him. This reading accords with the sequence of events that follow v. 58, where Joseph knows the identity of his brothers and eventually informs them of their wrongdoing (see vv. 58–90).

Many commentators also transmit popular folkloric details surrounding the story of Joseph. For example, the water of the well was bitter, but when Joseph went into the well, its water became sweet (My, R); and the well itself, which was previously dark, was now illuminated (My). We are also told that the only thing Joseph was wearing when he was in the well was an amulet (taʿwīdh) that contained a shirt made from the silk of Paradise. Gabriel had originally brought this shirt to Abraham when he was thrown into the fire by his people (see 21:69; 37:97), who then bequeathed it to his son Isaac, who bequeathed it to his son Jacob. When Joseph was old enough, Jacob tied it around his neck. While Joseph was in the well, Gabriel came to him, opened the amulet, and put the shirt on him (My, R, Ṭs).

①⑦ They said, “O father! We went racing with one another, and left Joseph with our things, and the wolf ate him. But thou wouldst not believe us, even if we were truthful.”

16–17 When the brothers came in weeping, Jacob became worried and asked them if anything had happened to their sheep that were out in the pasture (Bg, Q, Ṭ). Commenting on the brothers’ false tears, al-Qushayrī notes that it was their hypocrisy that allowed them to lie in such a blatant manner, saying that when people become total hypocrites, they can control their eyes to the point that they can cry at will. In responding to Jacob’s question, the brothers said that nothing had happened to their sheep, which consequently led Jacob to ask, “What happened to you then, and where is Joseph?” (Bg). They then put forward their lie: they went racing with one another in order to train themselves so that they could combat enemies and the wolf, which had been snatching away their sheep (R); they had left Joseph with their things, namely, their garments and clothes (Bg). Upon hearing the news of Joseph’s death, Jacob fainted, and the brothers poured water over him to wake him up. Yet he remained unconscious until early the next morning (Q). The brothers told Jacob that they would be unable to convince him even if they were speaking the truth, because they felt Jacob had a bad opinion of them (Bḏ); cf. Genesis 37:33, where Jacob believes their account. From Jacob’s perspective, he could not believe them, because he was suspicious of them to begin with (R), which is why the brothers themselves asked him in v. 11, What ails thee that thou dost not trust us with Joseph? (see 12:11–12c). This mistrust of the brothers foreshadows an incident later in this sūrah in which the brothers return to Jacob with some news about which they were actually being truthful; yet he still does not believe them, and they themselves become veiled from the truth of what was happening in large part due to their own actions (see vv. 81–83); see also 12:5c; 12:18c.

18 And they brought forth his shirt with false blood. He said, “Nay, your souls have seduced you in this matter. Beautiful patience! And God is the One Whose help is sought against that which you describe.”

18 The brothers had Joseph’s shirt from the moment they had torn it off him before they cast him into the well (see 12:15c); cf. Genesis 37:3, which says that Jacob loved Joseph so much that he made him “a long robe with sleeves” or “a coat of many colors.” Before returning to Jacob at night, they spattered false blood on the shirt from either a baby goat or a lamb that the brothers slaughtered for this purpose (Iṭ; cf. Genesis 37:31, where it is the blood of a goat). Jacob’s response, Nay, your souls have seduced you, indicates that they had convinced themselves that their actions were not grievous (Aj), but that he did not believe them (Ṭb). Jacob also asked his sons why the shirt did not evince any signs that a predator had attacked Joseph, since if a wolf had devoured Joseph, his shirt would have been completely torn apart by the wolf (Iṭ, Ṭ).

Upon hearing the brothers’ blatant lie and seeing their false evidence, Jacob exclaimed, Beautiful patience! which refers to a kind of patience that causes one not to complain to anyone but God; see v. 86 and 70:5c. Some interpret it to mean, “[My patience is/will be] a beautiful patience” (Ṭ). Thus, Beautiful patience! is an expression used at times of extreme grief to find solace in the fact that patience will triumph in the end and that the difficulty will eventually pass. God is the One Whose help is sought against that which you describe means that Jacob seeks God’s Help in bearing the lie that his sons were telling him concerning Joseph’s death (Aj); for an almost identical statement, see 21:112. Cf. v. 83. Jacob’s words regarding the brothers’ souls and his own patience are repeated in v. 83.

19 And then a caravan came along and sent their water carrier, and he let down his bucket. He said, “Good news! Here is a boy!” So they hid him as merchandise. And God knew well what they were doing.

20 And they sold him for a low price, a number of dirhams, for they valued him not.

19–20 Tradition records that Joseph had been in the well for three days when a caravan came from Midian on its way to Egypt (IK), a caravan that was lost and had come across the well fortuitously (Bg, My). The people in the caravan alighted near the well and sent their water carrier to take water from it. When he let down his bucket, Joseph clung to its rope and came out of the well (Bg). They presented Joseph as merchandise (T); that is, they said he was being taken as a slave. Joseph complied out of fear that they would kill him if he went against their wishes (JJ). They went on to sell Joseph in Egypt (Bg, IK) for a low price, which is understood by some to signify that he was a free person who had been taken unlawfully as a slave (R): low price also signifies that any price would be “low.” They valued him not means they did not place much importance on him, considering him only “scavenged goods,” or that they did not desire to keep him out of fear that Joseph’s rightful owner (as they imagined) would come and lay claim to him (R).

21 The man from Egypt who bought him said unto his wife, “Give him honorable accommodation. It may be that he will bring us some benefit, or that we may take him as a son.” And thus did We establish Joseph in the land, that We might teach him the interpretation of events. And God prevails over His affair, but most of mankind know not.

22 When he reached his maturity, We gave him wisdom and knowledge. Thus do We recompense the virtuous.

21–22 As in the Bible (Genesis 39:1), the man from Egypt who bought Joseph is identified by the commentators as Potiphar (Qiṭfīr or Iṭfīr), referred to in the Quran by the title al-ʿAzīz, rendered in this sūrah as viceroys (a term used for anyone occupying a high-ranking position; see vv. 30, 51, 78, 88; Ṭs) and sometimes identified by commentators (as in Genesis 37:36) as the captain of Pharaoh's guard (Ṭs). ʿAzīz can also mean “king” (IK, Ṭ), but, moreover, it denotes someone or something that is grand, powerful, cherished, or honorable; hence it can refer to a lofty or important position. Since this sūrah also speaks of a king (vv. 43, 50, 54, 76), ʿazīz would denote a powerful official, which is what Potiphar was and what Joseph would become. Other Islamic sources state that Potiphar oversaw the treasury of Egypt (Aj, R, Ṭs, Z), which perhaps derives from the fact that when Joseph is later called al-ʿAzīz, his role is as keeper of the storehouses of the kingdom (see vv. 78, 88). The name of his wife in Islamic sources is sometimes given as Rāʿīl or, more commonly, Zulaykhā (AJ, R, Ṭs), although she is not named in the Quran. It is said that Potiphar purchased Joseph in the marketplace (Kl), after he had been struck by Joseph's inner beauty (My). He then instructed Zulaykhā to give Joseph honorable accommodation, in other words, to arrange for a beautiful and dignified dwelling place for Joseph in their home (Bḍ, Z).

It may be that he will bring us some benefit, or that we may take him as a son are the same words uttered to Pharaoh by his wife in connection with the infant Moses; see 28:9. Potiphar proposed that they might take Joseph as their son, because they did not have children (Ṭs) and were unable to have them (Bḍ, JJ). And thus did We establish Joseph in the land (land meaning Egypt; IK) refers to God's actions in saving Joseph from death, taking him out of the well, and placing him in the house of Potiphar (cf. Genesis 39:2–6; Bg); see also v. 56. That We might teach him the interpretation of events refers to God's teaching Joseph the interpretation of dreams that foretold events (see vv. 6, 36–37, 41, 43–49; Bg); this gift was the primary means by which he would achieve ascendancy in Egyptian society (see vv. 54–56). God prevails over His affair is understood to mean that, although Joseph's brothers willed for him to remain in the well, God willed to exalt him to a station of proximity to the king (Qu). Most of mankind know not occurs two other times in this sūrah (vv. 40, 68) and in 7:187; 16:38; 30:6, 30; 34:28, 36; 40:57; 45:26.

We gave him wisdom, that is, prophethood or the ability to judge between people with justice (Aj), and knowledge, that is, knowledge of dream interpretation and future events or knowledge of the mysteries and the proper etiquette of servanthood toward God (Aj). Thus do We recompense the virtuous also appears verbatim in 6:84 and 28:14; see also 5:85. Virtuous is used in connection with Joseph numerous times in this sūrah; see vv. 36, 56, 78, 90; 12:36c.

23 But she in whose house he was staying sought to lure him from himself. She locked the doors and said, “Come, thou!” He said, “God be my refuge! Truly He is my lord, and has made beautiful my accommodation. Verily the wrongdoers will not prosper!”

23 The Prophet is reported to have said that Joseph was given half of beauty, which has commonly been interpreted to mean that he was given half of the beauty in the world (cf. Genesis 39:7). Potiphar’s wife, Zulaykhā, who was commissioned by her husband to tend to Joseph’s needs while he was a guest in their home, fell in love with him because of his exceptional physical beauty (IK). His beauty was such that it caused her to desire him sexually (R), and she thus sought to lure him from himself, that is, to seduce him (IK). Joseph’s objection, He is my lord, and has made beautiful my accommodation, can be a reference to Potiphar (Kl, Q, Ṭs), who in v. 21 orders Zulaykhā to give Joseph honorable accommodation (N, Z). According to this reading, Joseph’s statement is tantamount to saying, “Potiphar has honored me, and I shall not betray him” (Q; cf. Genesis 39:8–10). Alternately, the reference can be to God (Bg, Kl, Qu); according to this reading, it would mean, “He Most High is my true Master and is the One Who saved me from the well and gave me a great standing in the ʿAzīz’s heart, so that he provided for me an honorable accommodation. Therefore, it is not fitting that I should have the audacity to disobey Him” (Qu).

24 She indeed inclined toward him, and he would have inclined toward her, had he not seen the proof of his Lord. Thus it was, that We might turn him away from evil and indecency. Truly he was among Our sincere servants.

24 Most commentators mention that Joseph desired Zulaykhā just as she desired him, but he did not act on his desire; for him it was a passing feeling occurring in his heart, and he did not follow through with it. Instead, he immediately turned to God and dismissed the thought of attraction to her as soon as he had seen the proof of his Lord (Kl). Al-Rāzī compares this account to righteous persons who, while fasting during the summer, see rosewater with ice in it; they would naturally be inclined to drink it, but, given their faithful adherence to the religious law, they do not do so.

One widely reported incident explains what is meant by Joseph’s seeing the proof of his Lord. Zulaykhā, who worshipped idols, had covered an idol in the room. When Joseph asked her why she had done that, she replied by saying that she was ashamed to sin before the idol. Upon hearing this account, Joseph asked how she could be ashamed before an idol, which can neither see nor hear, but was not ashamed before God, Who is Hearing and Seeing (My). This exchange led Joseph to contemplate his own situation before God, and this realization served as his proof (My, Q). Alternately, it is said that the proof was that the Archangel Gabriel appeared before Joseph (R). That We might turn him away from evil refers to keeping him from being disloyal to Potiphar (IJ, JJ) or from having a deep-rooted sexual desire (shahwah) for Potiphar’s wife (Q); indecentry refers to the illicit sexual act (JJ).

25 And they raced to the door, while she tore his shirt from behind. And they encountered her master at the door. She said, “What is the recompense for one who desires ill toward thy wife, save that he be imprisoned, or a painful punishment?”

25 Joseph attempted to flee from Zulaykhā and made for the door; she chased after him (JJ), tearing his shirt from behind in her attempt to prevent him from escaping (Kl; cf. Genesis 39:11–12). When they met Potiphar at the door, Zulaykhā sought to exonerate herself by making it appear as though she was the victim fleeing from Joseph (Bḍ). Although Zulaykhā was in love with Joseph, her love for him was not yet complete and sincere, for she lied to Potiphar in order to save herself, even though it meant accusing Joseph of an act that he did not commit (My), namely, intending ill toward her, which alludes to illicit sexual relations (Āl); for a discussion of the progression of Zulaykhā’s love, see 12:51c. It is also said that with her question to Potiphar, which was actually a suggestion (Āl, Bḍ), Zulaykhā sought to incite Potiphar’s jealousy and rage in order to take revenge upon Joseph for not complying with her wishes (Aj; cf. Genesis 39:13–19). Some commentators, especially Sufi ones, mention that Zulaykhā’s love for Joseph was so great that it blinded her to every other consideration.

26 He said, “It was she who sought to lure me from myself.” And a witness from her own people testified, “If his shirt is torn from the front, then she has spoken the truth and he is among the liars.

27 But if his shirt is torn from behind, then she has lied and he is among the truthful.”

26–27 Joseph’s words in his defense mean, “She wanted to commit indecency with me, but I refused and fled” (Bg). A witness from her own people refers, according to many traditional sources, to one of Zulaykhā’s paternal cousins who was a wise man (R). If the shirt were torn from the front, it would indicate that Zulaykhā was telling the truth, because it would mean that Zulaykhā struggled to defend herself from Joseph (Kl). That the shirt was torn from the back indicates that Joseph was telling the truth, because it means that Zulaykhā chased Joseph and laid hold of his shirt from the back to keep him from escaping (Kl).

28 So when he saw that his shirt was torn from behind, he said, “Verily this is among the schemes of you women—your scheming is great indeed!

28 He in he saw can refer to Potiphar or to the wise man from Zulaykhā’s family (Q). If it refers to Potiphar, then his statement Verily this is among the schemes of you women would be a response to Zulaykhā’s lie to him in v. 25, What is the recompense for one who desires ill toward thy wife? (Q).

29 Joseph, turn away from this. And you, seek forgiveness for your sin. Truly you were among those at fault.”

29 Here the speaker is understood by some to be the wise man from Zulaykhā’s family (Q). His advice to Joseph to turn away from this means that Joseph should not mention this incident to anyone and should conceal its details (Q, Z), lest it become known to the public (JJ) and presumably form the basis of much speculation and rumormongering. The news of this event nevertheless spread, as indicated in v. 30.

30 Some women of the city said, “The viceroy’s wife sought to lure her slave boy from himself! He has filled her with ardent love. Truly we consider her to be in manifest error.”

30 As the news of what transpired between Joseph and Zulaykhā spread throughout Egypt, some of the wives of the notables began criticizing and blaming Zulaykhā for her attempt to seduce Joseph (IK). He has filled her with ardent love means Zulaykhā’s love for Joseph had reached the deepest recesses of her heart (My) and become all-consuming (R). Like the brothers who accused Jacob in v. 8 of being in manifest error because of his intense love for Joseph, the women considered Zulaykhā to be in manifest error because of her ardent love for him (R).

31 So when she heard of their plotting, she sent for them, and prepared a repast for them, and gave each of them a knife. And she said [to Joseph], “Come out before them!” Then when they saw him, they so admired him that they cut their hands and said, “God be praised! This is no human being. This is naught but a noble angel!”

31 The talk among the wives of the notables of Egypt concerning Zulaykhā and Joseph is referred to as plotting because it was carried out in secret (Kl) and was therefore tantamount to gossip. Al-Rāzī observes that the women’s talk here is called plotting because they themselves wanted to look upon Joseph and knew that their gossip would force Zulaykhā to let them do so in order to exonerate herself of any blame. It is said that Zulaykhā invited forty women in total, five of whom were involved in the gossip (Bg, N). They sat together, and she gave each of them some citrons and a knife and told them to cut the fruit, inviting Joseph in the room at the same time (Qm). When they saw Joseph, “the rays of his beauty illuminated their interior temples” (My), and they cut their hands instead of the fruit, as they fell into a state of utter bewilderment and lost the ordinary consciousness of themselves (My).

Here God be praised! is meant as an expression of amazement over God’s creative Power, in this case over His creating the likes of Joseph (Kl). By likening Joseph to a noble angel the women sought to express their utter amazement at his unparalleled, celestial beauty. It was also their way of acknowledging that Joseph did not commit any act of lewdness with Zulaykhā, since they saw in him his inner purity. Their vision of him made it clear to them that he was, like an angel, untainted by the normal passions that characterize the human condition (R).

32 She said, “This is the one on whose account you blamed me. I indeed sought to lure him from himself, but he remained chaste. And if he does not do as I command, he shall surely be imprisoned; and he shall be among those humbled.”

32 Zulaykhā’s statement This is the one on whose account you blamed me suggests that, since the women could not even withstand the sight of Joseph for one moment without losing their senses, she could not be blamed for what she did, as he was in her presence night and day (Ṭs). In so doing she admitted her “fault” and Joseph’s innocence. If he does not do as I command refers to her original command to Joseph to lie with her; see 12:23c.

33 He said, “My Lord! Prison is dearer to me than that to which they call me. If Thou dost not turn their scheming away from me, I shall incline toward them and be among the ignorant.”

33 It is said that when the women heard Zulaykhā’s ultimatum to Joseph, they supported her, telling him that he had no choice but to obey her command, lest he be thrown into prison (R). Joseph’s preference for prison over what the women were inciting him to do means that he preferred the next life over the fleeting pleasures of this life; succumbing to the women’s suggestion would entail pleasure in this life, but punishment in the next, whereas entering prison would entail discomfort in this life, but great felicity in the next (R), as he was forsaking a human love that was real but illicit for the Love of God. Joseph turned to God in humility (Kl) and asked for His Assistance, since he knew that he could only be saved from his plight by God, not as a result of his own efforts (Qu).

34 So his Lord answered him, and turned their scheming away from him. Truly He is the Hearing, the Knowing.

34 God responded to Joseph and turned their scheming away from him by so strengthening his ability to resist the women that he actually accepted the hardships of prison (Aj). The connection between supplication and God's Response is established elsewhere in the Quran, as in 40:60: Call upon Me, and I shall respond to you.

35 Then it occurred to them, after they had seen the signs, that they should imprison him for a time.

35 Them refers to the family of Potiphar and Zulaykhā or to those members of Potiphar's entourage with whom he consulted about this matter (Kl); the signs refers to the indications of Joseph's innocence (JJ, Kl). The decision to imprison Joseph for a time was a temporary measure until the rumors about what transpired between Joseph and Zulaykhā had subsided (JJ; cf. Genesis 39:20).

36 Now two young men entered the prison with him. One of them said, "Truly I see myself [in a dream] pressing wine." The other said, "Truly I see myself [in a dream] carrying bread atop my head, from which the birds eat." "Inform us of its interpretation. Truly we see you as being among the virtuous."

36 Most commentaries state that the two young men who were in prison with Joseph were servants to the king of Egypt. One of them was his baker (Ṭ) and the other his wine carrier (JJ, Ṭ). The baker had plotted to poison the king. He was caught and imprisoned, and the wine carrier was imprisoned as well, since the king thought that he had aided the baker in the attempt to kill him (R, Ṭ; cf. Genesis 40:1–3). The young man who had dreamed of the wine was the wine carrier, and the young man who had dreamed of the bread was the baker (Bg; for their dreams as narrated in Genesis, see 40:9–11, 16–17). They reportedly asked Joseph to interpret their dreams for them, because they had seen him interpret other people's dreams (JJ). Al-Rāzī reports that, seeing Joseph's virtuous character and kind behavior toward the other prison mates as well as his devout religious practices, the baker and the wine carrier concluded that he was among the virtuous, whose interpretation of dreams could therefore be trusted (cf. Genesis 40:6–8). For Joseph's interpretation of these two dreams, see v. 41.

37 He said, “No food with which you are provided will come unto you, save that I shall inform you of its interpretation before it comes. This is among the things my Lord has taught me. I forsake the creed of a people who believe not in God, and they who are disbelievers in the Hereafter.

38 And I follow the creed of my fathers, Abraham, and Isaac, and Jacob. It is not for us to ascribe any partners unto God. That is from the bounty God has bestowed upon us and upon mankind, but most of mankind do not give thanks.

37–38 In speaking of food with which you are provided, Joseph is alluding to the dreams that the young men in prison might have in their sleep, which he assures them he will be able to interpret before they become actualized as events in their waking state (Aj, JJ; cf. Genesis 40:8). For Joseph’s being taught the ability to interpret dreams, see 12:6c. Some interpret this verse to mean that God taught him these things because he rejected the creed of a people who believe not in God (Bd). Alternately, the verse may be understood to mean that Joseph made mention of his God-given knowledge and his faith as a means to invite the young men to believe in God’s Oneness (Aj).

That in That is from the bounty God has bestowed is a reference to the affirmation of God’s Oneness (JJ) or an allusion to the fact stated by Joseph when he said, It is not for us to ascribe any partners unto God (R), meaning, “The nonascription of partners to God is among the bounties that God has bestowed.” For the idea that the majority are ungrateful, see 2:243; 10:60; 27:73; 40:61; 10:59–60c.

39 O my fellow prisoners! Are diverse lords better, or God, the One, the Paramount?

40 You worship apart from Him naught but names that you have named—you and your fathers—for which God has sent down no authority. Judgment belongs to God alone. He commands that you worship none but Him. That is the upright religion, but most of mankind know not.

39–40 After establishing the importance of prophecy in v. 38, v. 39 seeks to establish the basis of prophecy, namely, its Divine Origin (R). The majority of prophets were faced with the reality of people’s worship of false divinities, and this was also the case with Joseph. This is why v. 39 begins with a demonstration of the futility of taking gods alongside God (R). The rhetorical question Are diverse lords better, or God, the One, the Paramount? alludes to the Quran’s teaching that if there were more than one god, the cosmic order would contain fissures and would go to ruin, whereas the being of the One God, who is the Source of all reality, makes possible the order and beauty in the cosmos (R), as in 21:22: Were there gods other than God in them, they would surely have been corrupted (R).

After establishing the necessity, both logical and ontological, of God’s Oneness, v. 40 then draws attention to the need to worship the one true God and not the false gods divinized by idolatrous people. For the Quran’s insistence that false gods are nothing more than the names assigned to them, see 7:71; 53:23. God’s Command that you worship none but Him is analogous to 17:23: Thy Lord decrees that you worship none but Him. For That is the upright religion, but most of mankind know not, see 6:161c; 30:30c.

41 O my fellow prisoners! As for one of you, he shall serve wine to his lord. But as for the other, he shall be crucified, and the birds will eat from his head. The matter about which you inquired has been decreed.”

41 Joseph offers his interpretation of the young men’s dreams: the wine carrier would be saved and restored to his former position (N) as a wine server to the king of Egypt (Kl; cf. Genesis 40:12–13); the baker would be crucified for his crime, and after his death the birds would eat from his head (My; cf. Genesis 40:18–19).

42 And he said to the one of them whom he knew would be saved, “Mention me to your lord.” But Satan caused him to forget to make mention to his lord. So he remained in prison for several years.

42 Joseph told the wine carrier to mention him to the king of Egypt (Kl; cf. Genesis 40:14–15), but Satan caused him to forget to make mention to his lord; that is, he forgot to mention Joseph to the king (Kl). On account of this, Joseph's stay in prison was prolonged for several years, a total of seven years according to most commentators (IK, N).

Satan caused him to forget to make mention to his lord can also be translated, "Satan caused him to forget remembering his Lord," in which case it would mean that at the particular moment when Joseph told the wine carrier, Mention me to your lord, he forgot to remember God (Kl, Q). As a consequence of his forgetfulness, God caused Joseph to be in prison for several years. According to Ibn ʿAbbās, had Joseph remembered God when he told the wine carrier to mention him to his lord, God would have released him from prison earlier (Q). About this, the Prophet is reported to have said, "God have mercy on Joseph. Had it not been for a statement he made—Mention me to your lord—he would not have remained in the prison as long as he did" (Ṭ).

43 And the king said, "Verily I see [in a dream] seven fat cows being eaten by seven lean ones; and seven green heads of grain, and others dry. O notables! Give me your opinion on my vision, if you can interpret visions."

43 The king's request to his notables, namely, those in his entourage and in high offices in his kingdom (Kl), to give him their opinion means that he wanted them to interpret the dream for him (JJ). By visions here are meant true or veridical dreams (see 12:4c). The verb rendered interpret (ʿabara) in if you can interpret visions comes from the root ʿ-b-r, which conveys the idea of "crossing over" from one side of something to the other. With respect to dream interpretation, the verb derived from this root connotes the notion of moving from the imaginal and symbolic forms in dreams to the actual meanings they symbolize (Bḍ). For the interpretation of the king's dream, see vv. 47–49 (cf. Genesis 41:1–8).

44 They said, "What confused dreams! And we are not experts in the interpretation of dreams!"

44 Interpretation translates taʿwīl, which etymologically conveys the sense of bringing something back to its origin; see also v. 6c and v. 21. In the Quran, the term has several usages, among which are the interpretation of the multivalent, symbolic, or equivocal (mutashābih) verses (as in 3:7; see also 10:39) and the explanation of events whose meanings are not immediately clear (as in 18:87). In the context of dreams, ta'wīl means to arrive at the original or intended meaning of a dream. In the Islamic intellectual tradition, ta'wīl also came to signify more particularly the spiritual or esoteric hermeneutics that reveals the inner meanings of a Quranic verse and is often contrasted with tafsīr, which is concerned with its outward meaning. However, the distinction between these two terms is not rigid: the title of al-Ṭabarī's encyclopedic commentary on the Quran uses the word ta'wīl, not tafsīr, in its title. For the different uses and meanings of ta'wīl in the Quran, see 3:7c; 7:53c.

Dreams translates aḥlām, which in this verse is a synonym for ru'yā, or vision, in v. 43. The notables describe the king's vision as confused dreams—that is, as belonging to the category of mixed-up and false dreams—which stem from the internal chatter of the soul (nafs) or from demonic inspiration and are therefore not susceptible to meaningful interpretation (Kl), because there is nothing in them corresponding to objective reality (My). By saying that they are not adept in the art of dream interpretation, the king's notables could be referring to false dreams in particular or, more likely, to their inability to interpret dreams in general (Kl).

④5 Now the one who had been saved among the two said, remembering after a while, “I shall inform you of its interpretation, so send me forth.”

45 The wine carrier remembered Joseph's words in v. 42 (Bg). After a while refers to a period of seven years (Bg), which corresponds to the length of time Joseph spent in prison (see 12:42c). The wine carrier managed to convince the king to allow him to consult with Joseph about the dream by pointing to his own experience with Joseph's powers of dream interpretation: when in prison, Joseph interpreted the wine carrier's dream, and it came to pass exactly as he had said that it would (My); cf. Genesis 41:9–14.

④6 “Joseph, O truthful one! Give us thine opinion concerning seven fat cows being eaten by seven lean ones, and seven green heads of grain, and others dry, that haply I may return to the people, that they might know.”

46 Returning to Joseph’s prison cell, the wine carrier calls him the truthful one, which can refer to the fact that Joseph interpreted his dream truthfully or to the fact that he had never seen Joseph tell a lie during their time together in prison (R; see also 12:36c). By telling Joseph that he sought his interpretation of the dream that they might know, the wine carrier was indicating that the king and his notables might come to know of his interpretation of the king’s dream (My), or of Joseph’s true rank and knowledge and thus release him from prison (My, T’s). When the wine carrier related the dream to Joseph, Joseph saw this as an opportunity to impress the king by interpreting the dream so that he could be set free. At the same time, Joseph also saw an opportunity to help the king, as a part of the dream signaled an agricultural crisis for the people of Egypt (see v. 48); cf. Genesis 41:14–24.

47 He said, “You will sow diligently for seven years. Then whatever you harvest, leave in its ear, save a little that you eat.

48 Then after this will come seven hard [years] which will devour that which you have saved in advance for them, save a little of that which you have stored.

49 Then after this will come a year wherein people will be granted succor, and wherein they will press [wine and oil].”

47–49 Joseph’s interpretation of the dream offers a window into what would happen during the next fifteen years of Egypt’s agrarian cycle. During the first phase, the Egyptians would sow diligently for seven years, as this would be a time of great fertility and abundance (R). The second phase would bring seven hard [years], that is, a time of dearth that would be exceedingly difficult for people (R). Joseph proposed to store up much of the harvest during the first phase so that the people would have food during the second phase. The year of succor during which people will press [wine and oil] refers to the last year of the cycle, which would be a blessed year of much bounty for the people of Egypt (R); the pressing of oil and wine is an indication that there would be food in abundance once again; cf. Genesis 41:25–36.

50 The king said, “Bring him to me!” So when the messenger came to him he said, “Return to your lord and ask him, ‘What of the women who cut their hands? Surely my Lord knows well their scheming!’”

50 When the wine carrier, here called the messenger, returned and informed the king of Joseph’s interpretation of his dream, the king asked that he bring Joseph to him (JJ). But when the messenger approached Joseph in order to release him from prison, Joseph sought to exonerate himself, asking, What of the women who cut their hands? which is understood to have been Joseph’s request that the women be confronted by the king (JJ). The messenger then returned and informed the king of Joseph’s inquiry, and the king complied by gathering the women before him (JJ).

51 He said, “What was your purpose when you sought to lure Joseph from himself?” They said, “God be praised! We know no evil against him.” The viceroy’s wife said, “Now the truth has come to light. It was I who sought to lure him from himself, and verily he is among the truthful.”

51 Confronted by the king, the women said they did not know of any evil against him, which is to say that they absolved Joseph of any blame (Kl). As for Zulaykhā, it is at this point that her love for Joseph becomes fully real. Before, she had blamed him for a sin he did not commit, because her own desire was more important than his well-being (see v. 25). Later, she admitted Joseph’s innocence, but only to a small group of women as a way of absolving herself of scorn in their eyes (see v. 32). Some commentators understand that at this juncture in the story her love for Joseph had grown so strong that it had surpassed her own self-interest, and so she spoke the truth about him (My). The narrative indicates that there was a progression in the degrees of love in Zulaykhā’s own soul and therefore in her spiritual journey. Her initial attraction to Joseph was purely sensual, but by this point in the narrative she has overcome her lower self, and her infatuation with Joseph’s physical beauty has now been transformed into a spiritual love in which she is able to see Joseph’s inward beauty, much like Potiphar did when he first saw him in the marketplace (see 12:21–22c). The catalyst here seems to have been Joseph’s inner virtues, marked by his quality of truthfulness, which Zulaykhā recognized when she referred to him as among the truthful.

52 “This is so, that he may know that I betrayed him not in his absence. Truly God guides not the scheming of the treacherous.

52 The speaker here is Joseph, who seeks to absolve himself of any blame before Potiphar (JJ, My, R, Ṭ). Alternately, the speaker here could be Zulaykhā (Kl, R, Ṭs).

53 But I absolve not my own soul. Surely the soul commands to evil, save whom my Lord may show mercy. Truly my Lord is Forgiving, Merciful.”

53 Although some have argued that the speaker here is Zulaykhā (IK, R), the majority of commentators see these words as Joseph’s (Bḍ, Bg, Kl, Q, Ṭs, Z), and thus as a continuation of his statement in v. 52. It is said that Joseph uttered I absolve not my own soul out of humility (Kl), and because he wanted to draw attention to the fact that it was God Who protected him from falling into sin (Bḍ; see 12:24c).

Surely the soul commands to evil plays a foundational role in the Muslim understanding of moral psychology and the structure of the human soul. Islamic sources identify three levels of the soul on the basis of Quranic references. The first level is the “soul that commands to evil” (al-naḥs al-ammārah bi’l-sū’, based on the present verse); this is the soul that calls a person to submit to his or her base desires, and to those thoughts and actions that lead to forgetfulness of God and go against His Command. Next is the blaming soul (al-naḥs al-lawwāmah; 75:2), which reproaches a person for his or her evil states and forgetfulness of God, while actively attempting to effect change within that person for the better. Finally, the highest kind of soul is the soul at peace (al-naḥs al-muḥma’innah; 89:27), which has conquered the lower self and resides in peace in the remembrance of God, returning to God content (rāḍiyah) and contenting [to God] (marḍiyah). Regarding these kinds of souls, see 75:1–2c and 89:27c.

54 And the king said, “Bring him to me, that I might reserve him exclusively for myself.” Then when he had spoken with him, he said, “Truly this day thou shalt be of high rank and trusted in our presence.”

55 He said, “Set me over the storehouses of the land. Truly I am a skilled keeper.”

54–55 After having summoned Joseph and spoken with him, the king realizes his intelligence, wisdom, and virtue (Q, T); he then expresses a desire to reserve Joseph’s abilities exclusively for himself and eventually sets him over the storehouses of the land. Cf. Genesis 41:37–44.

56 Thus did We establish Joseph in the land, that there he might settle wheresoever he will. We cause Our Mercy to fall upon whomsoever We will, and We neglect not the reward of the virtuous.

57 And the reward of the Hereafter is better for those who believe and are reverent.

56–57 As in v. 21, Thus did We establish Joseph in the land (cf. Genesis 41:45) comes after Joseph undergoes a period of trial and hardship. The purpose of establishing Joseph in Egypt in v. 21 is so that God might teach him the interpretation of events—that is, dreams (see 12:21–22c)—whereas in v. 56 it is in order that Joseph might settle wheresoever he will. These two verses are therefore connected, since it was only after Joseph interpreted several dreams that he was given such a powerful position in Egypt that he could choose to live wheresoever he will, which some interpret to mean that Joseph could “establish his home in any of Egypt’s cities because of his control over all of them” (Kā). It is also said that when Potiphar died, the king of Egypt gave Joseph Potiphar’s former position of being in charge of the treasury of Egypt. By extension, this would also mean that Joseph was conferred the title of °Azīz.

For God’s not neglecting the reward of the virtuous, see also vv. 90; 11:115; 11:115c. In several verses, the reward of the Hereafter is spoken of as greater than the reward of this world (16:41), and the Hereafter itself is described as better for thee than this life (93:4). This is because the life of this world is naught but diversion and play, whereas the Abode of the Hereafter is life indeed (29:64).

58 The brothers of Joseph came and entered upon him, and he recognized them, while they knew him not.

58 The brothers came to Egypt because the famine that had afflicted Egypt had also affected Canaan (cf. Genesis 42:1–8), and they sought to purchase some of the provisions that had been stored up during the seven years of Egypt’s agricultural prosperity (see 12:47–49c; Bḏ, Kl). The brothers did not recognize Joseph because a long period of time had elapsed since they last saw him. Moreover, he now stood before them adorned in rich Egyptian garments, and their awe of him naturally prevented them from recognizing him as their brother, whom they assumed had perished after they had thrown him into the well so many years before (Bḏ; see 12:15c).

59 And when he had arranged for their provisions, he said, “Bring me a brother of yours from your father. Do you not see that I give full measure, and that I am the best of hosts?”

59 Provisions here denotes the food that the brothers had purchased from Joseph (Kl). The brother from your father whom Joseph has in mind is considered by commentators to be Benjamin (JJ; see 12:8c), although his name is not mentioned in the Quran. The ten brothers who came to Egypt brought with them eleven camels and were requesting eleven camel-loads of food, ten for themselves and one for Benjamin, who was at home (Q). But Joseph requested that the other brother who was not present be brought to him as proof that there was in fact another dependent who would justify the purchase of another camel-load of food during a time of scarcity (Q). His question is seen as a subtle way of denying the brothers their request without accusing them of wrongdoing (R).

60 But if you bring him not unto me, you shall have no measure from me, nor shall you come nigh unto me.”

61 They said, “We shall seek to lure him from his father; that we shall surely do.”

60–61 Cf. Genesis 42:9–20. In the Quranic account Joseph tells his brothers that without meeting his request he would not do business with them; nor would they even be allowed to enter the city (Bg), since their failure to meet his condition would mean that they were lying when requesting the extra camel-load of food. The brothers assured Joseph that next time they would return with their eleventh brother, as they knew they would need to come to Egypt for more food in the future.

62 He said to his servant boys, “Put their merchandise in their saddlebags. Perchance they will recognize it when they have gone back to their people; perchance they will return.”

62 Their merchandise refers to those goods that the brothers had presented to Joseph in exchange for food (Bg, Z) or the actual price (athmān) the brothers paid for the food (JJ, My, Ṭ). By returning all of the merchandise to the brothers, Joseph sought to gain their confidence and reliance upon him for future transactions, with the intention that they would soon return with their brother Benjamin; cf. Genesis 42:25–26.

63 So when they returned to their father, they said, “O father! The measure has been withheld from us. So send our brother with us that we might obtain the measure. We shall surely be his keepers.”

63 The measure has been withheld from us refers to the rest of the food that the brothers sought to acquire (My), namely, the eleventh camel-load of food (see v. 59; Bg). That we might obtain the measure means “that we may obtain the food” (Bg), that is, the full measure of food they were seeking.

64 He said, “Should I entrust him to you as I entrusted his brother to you aforetime? But God is the best of keepers, and He is the most Merciful of the merciful.”

64 His brother is a reference to Joseph (JJ; see 12:15c). God is the best of keepers implies Jacob’s trust in God and his resignation of the whole affair to Him (Aj). For God as the most Merciful of the merciful, see also v. 92; 7:151; 21:83.

65 And when they opened their belongings, they found their merchandise had been returned to them. They said, “O father! What [more] do we seek? This is our merchandise returned unto us! Now we can provide for our family, and keep watch over our brother, while getting another camel-load—these are meager rations!”

65 Here the brothers appeal to Joseph’s gesture of goodwill in order to convince Jacob to allow them to take Benjamin (Bg), whose presence before Joseph was essential for obtaining more food. The meager rations are the food that the brothers already had in their possession, namely, the ten camel-loads’ worth (see 12:59c), which was not enough to sustain them for long (Kl); cf. Genesis 42:27–36.

66 He said, “I will not send him forth with you till you give me a solemn pledge before God that you will surely bring him back to me, unless you are surrounded.” So when they gave their solemn pledge, he said, “God is Guardian over what we say.”

66 Jacob has his sons make a solemn pledge that they will return Benjamin to him, as he did earlier with Joseph (see 12:15c). The only difference is that, with respect to Benjamin, Jacob also includes the caveat unless you are surrounded, which is a general condition (Z) interpreted to mean “unless you come to a situation in which you cannot uphold the oath” (JJ). God is Guardian over what we say means that God is a witness to the oath (R); cf. Genesis 42:36–38. The same statement is uttered by Moses in 28:28 when he takes an oath with his future father-in-law.

67 And he said, “O my sons! Enter not by one gate, but enter by separate gates. Yet, I cannot avail you aught against God. Judgment belongs to God alone. I trust in Him; and let those who trust, trust in Him.”

67 Cf. Genesis 43:11–15. Jacob’s advice to his sons to enter by separate gates was given to help them avoid the evil eye (R), which in many traditional cultures, especially those of the Mediterranean and Near East, is associated with bad omens that afflict people because they are objects of envy. Jacob sought to protect the brothers from the evil eye upon entering Egypt, since they were very handsome (Bđ, N) and had fallen victim to the evil eye the last time they were there (Aj). By entering through different doors instead of one door in a large group, the brothers’ presence would be more discreet, and thus they would be less prone to the effects of the evil eye. Other commentators do not associate this verse with a fear of the evil eye, but simply with practical caution against attracting unwanted attention, since the brothers had become recognizable and might have attracted hostility or jealousy if they entered as a single group (R). I cannot avail you aught against God means that, despite Jacob’s advice to his sons, they cannot escape what God has destined for them (Bđ, Z).

68 And when they entered whence their father had commanded them, it did not avail them aught against God, but it fulfilled a need in Jacob’s soul. Truly he was possessed of knowledge because of that which We taught him, but most of mankind know not.

68 It did not avail them aught against God means that, despite the measures the brothers took to avoid having evil befall them on their second trip to Egypt, they would nonetheless soon undergo a major trial (Bđ; see vv. 70–82). But it fulfilled a need in Jacob’s soul; that is, Jacob’s advice to his sons, along with their acceptance of it, was a means to assuage Jacob’s fear of losing his children (R).

69 And when they entered upon Joseph, he drew his brother close to himself and said, “Truly I am your brother; so be not distressed on account of that which they used to do.”

69 Cf. Genesis 43:29–31. When the brothers came to Joseph, he honored them and treated them kindly. He managed to inform Benjamin in private that he was his brother (IK, Kl) and explained all that had happened to him (IK). He then gave Benjamin solace, telling him not to be saddened by what the brothers had done, noting that these events were in the past and according to God’s Will (Bg). He also asked Benjamin not to mention their private meeting to the other brothers (IK). Ibn Kathīr states that Joseph and Benjamin then devised a plan that would ensure that Benjamin would remain with him (see vv. 70–82); al-Ṭabarī, however, says that the plan was not known to Benjamin.

70 And when he had made ready their provisions, he put the drinking cup into his brother’s saddlebag. Then a herald cried out, “O you men of the caravan! Truly you are thieves!”

71 Turning toward them, they said, “What are you missing?”

70–71 His brother’s saddlebag means Benjamin’s bag, filled with his belongings (Ṭ). As mentioned in v. 72, the drinking cup was the goblet of the king. It was used by him not only for drinking, but also for measuring food (Ṭ); it is said to have been made of gold and studded with jewels (JJ). Jacob had a rule about stealing—whenever was caught stealing would be distanced from him—so Joseph placed the goblet in Benjamin’s bag, because that would make Benjamin appear to be culpable for the “crime” (Aj, Kl).

72 They said, “We are missing the goblet of the king.” “For whosoever brings it forth, there shall be a camel-load. I shall be its guarantor.”

73 They said, “By God, you certainly know that we came not to work corruption in the land, and we are not thieves.”

72–73 Joseph’s companions were the ones who said, We are missing the goblet of the king (Ṭs), but the declaration for a camel-load of food (JJ) was uttered by the herald (Kl, Ṭs). I shall be its guarantor means whoever is able to produce the cup will be given the camel-load (T).

74 They said, “And what will be the recompense for it if you be liars?”

75 They said, “Its recompense will be that he in whose saddlebag it is found—he himself shall be its recompense. Thus do we recompense the wrongdoers.”

74–75 The brothers’ response, he himself shall be its recompense, means that whoever is the one in whose bag the king’s goblet is found will be punished for his crime by being given over by the brothers to Joseph and his entourage. It is said that this was the brothers’ custom when dealing with thieves, namely, to give the thief over to the one from whom he had stolen, just as the latter’s property had been taken over by the thief (Th). The brothers then let Joseph search their bags (JJ).

76 Then he began with their baggage, before the baggage of his brother. Then he removed it from his brother’s baggage. Thus did We devise a scheme for Joseph. Under the king’s law, he could not have taken his brother unless God willed. We raise in degrees whomsoever We will, and above every possessor of knowledge is a knower.

76 Thus did We devise a scheme for Joseph indicates that the plan to place the cup in Benjamin’s bag was based on Divine Revelation (wahy), because the ultimate goal of the plot was for God to show His Solicitude to Joseph’s brothers (Aj). Some commentators say that the king’s rules for theft were that if someone was caught stealing, the person would be physically beaten for the crime and then charged double the worth of the item that had been stolen (R). Thus, under the king’s law, Joseph could not have taken his brother unless God willed: if Joseph had followed the king’s law, which would have been the normal course of action, he would not have been able to keep Benjamin, who would have been free to go back with his brothers after the king’s stipulated punishment. Instead, God willed that the brothers would themselves put forward the punishment for theft according to their own custom (see 12:74–75c), because of which Joseph’s plan was carried out (R).

For We raise in degrees whomsoever We will, see 6:83c; see also 40:15, where

God is referred to as the Raiser of degrees. In the present context, above every possessor of knowledge is a knower means that, although Joseph's brothers were learned and possessed of knowledge, Joseph had more knowledge than they (R), and that all knowledge ends with God (Aj), who is referred to as the Knower throughout the Quran. This verse also has a more universal import and is often cited in a more general context by Muslim writers. It points to the hierarchy of knowledge and the fact that no matter how much knowledge a human being gains, there is always a higher degree of knowledge, the highest of which is God's Knowledge.

77 They said, "If he has stolen, a brother of his had stolen aforetime." But Joseph kept it secret in his soul and disclosed it not unto them. He said, "You are in a worse position! And God knows best concerning that which you describe."

77 A brother of his had stolen aforetime is a reference to Joseph, who, when he was younger, is said to have stolen an idol from his maternal grandfather and destroyed it, lest it be worshipped (IK, JJ, R). What Joseph kept . . . secret in his soul refers to his response to his brothers, You are in a worse position, which he said to himself and did not voice aloud (Z). By it he meant that the brothers were in a worse position than Benjamin, since they stole him (Joseph) from their father and treated him unjustly, and Benjamin did not participate in this act (JJ, Z).

78 They said, "O viceroy! He has a venerable, aged father; so take one of us in his place. Truly we see you as being among the virtuous."

79 He said, "God be my refuge that we should take any save the one with whom we found our property! For then we would surely be wrongdoers."

78-79 For the way Joseph came to occupy Potiphar's former rank and position of viceroy, see 12:56-57c. Benjamin's venerable, aged father refers to Jacob. By mentioning their father, the brothers were saying that Jacob loves Benjamin more than them, and that since Benjamin has been a means of solace for Jacob in place of Joseph, not getting Benjamin back would cause him more grief

80 So when they despaired of [swaying] him, they conferred privately. The eldest of them said, “Do you not know that your father has taken a solemn pledge from you before God, and earlier you neglected Joseph? Thus I shall not depart from this land till my father grants me leave, or God renders judgment upon me, and He is the best of judges!

80 The eldest of them refers to Reuben (not named in the Quran, but recorded as such in the commentaries; see 12:10c). For the solemn pledge that the brothers took with Jacob, see v. 66. The brothers neglected Joseph when they failed to take care of him (Bg, Ṭs) and, by extension, when they broke the vow they had made to Jacob to return Joseph safely (Ṭs; see also 12:15c). Reuben states that he will not leave Egypt until either his father grants him leave—that is, Jacob calls him to return home (see also v. 83)—or God renders judgment upon him, referring to God’s Decision to return Benjamin to him or to send him back home without Benjamin (Bg). For God as the best of judges and other cognate expressions in the Quran, see 7:87c.

81 Return unto your father and say, ‘O father! Verily your son has committed theft. And we bore witness to that which we knew, but we are not keepers of the unseen.

82 So ask the town wherein we were, and the caravan with which we approached. Verily we are truthful.’”

81–82 We are not keepers of the unseen means that there was no way the brothers could have foreseen that Benjamin would “steal” in Egypt when they made their pact with Jacob (Z). By stating this point, the brothers wished to absolve themselves of breaking the oath, implicitly invoking the exceptional condition that Jacob included in his pledge with them (see v. 66). The town refers to the people of Egypt, and the caravan to the people of Canaan (JJ). It is said that when the latter returned to Jacob, they testified to the brothers’ truthfulness (JJ).

83 He said, “Nay, your souls have seduced you in this matter. Beautiful patience! It may be that God will bring them to me all together. Truly He is the Knowing, the Wise.”

83 Jacob’s words here are similar to his response to the news of the loss of Joseph in v. 18. The pronoun them refers to Joseph, Benjamin, and Reuben, who were still in Egypt (see v. 80; K1); such a statement is a kind of prophecy, since Joseph was still not known to be alive (see commentary on vv. 85–87).

84 And he turned away from them and said, “Oh, how great is my grief for Joseph!” His eyes had turned white with grief, and he was choked with anguish.

84 It is said that in his sadness, Jacob wept so much that he went blind (My) or that his eyesight became very weak (K1), which is indicated by the words his eyes had turned white.

85 They said, “By God, wilt thou go on remembering Joseph till thou art ill to the point of death, or till thou hast perished?”

86 He said, “I complain of my sorrow and grief to God alone. And I know from God that which you know not.

85–86 The brothers’ question, motivated by love and compassion for their father (Ṭs), is a figurative way of telling him that they fear for his demise if he continues to grieve over Joseph (IK). That Jacob complains of his sorrow and grief to God alone harkens back to vv. 18 and 83, where he counsels himself to have beautiful patience, which is a form of patience in which one complains only to God about one’s suffering and not to other human beings; see 12:18c. I know from God that which you know not (see also v. 96) is interpreted by some to refer to Jacob’s intuitive knowledge that Joseph was still alive (R); see also vv. 84, 87; 12:18c.

87 O my sons! Go and inquire about Joseph and his brother and despair not of God's Comfort; truly none despairs of God's Comfort save the disbelieving people."

87 Benjamin was in custody, which is why Jacob sent his sons to inquire about him, but Jacob also told them to inquire about Joseph; he believed Joseph was still alive, because he had either seen this in a dream or been informed by the Angel of Death that the latter had not taken Joseph's soul (Q). Despair not of God's Comfort means that the brothers should not lose hope in God's Mercy (JJ, N; for their forgiveness, see vv. 92, 97). This verse is similar in meaning to 39:53: Despair not of God's Mercy. Truly God forgives all sins. Truly He is the Forgiving, the Merciful.

88 So when they entered upon him they said, "O viceroy! Affliction has befallen us and our people. We bring but meager merchandise; yet grant us full measure and be charitable unto us. Truly God shall recompense the charitable."

88 The brothers went to Egypt in order to inquire about Joseph and Benjamin in accordance with Jacob's wishes. When they came to Joseph (who was still not known to them as Joseph), they complained about their affliction, by which is meant their intense hunger (Bd), as well as their meager merchandise, referring to what little goods they had with them to trade for food (Bd, Q). The brothers were hoping their goods would suffice them in obtaining a full measure of food. And be charitable unto us is understood as a request for the return of Benjamin (Q).

89 He said, "Do you know what you have done with Joseph and his brother, when you were ignorant?"

90 They said, "Art thou indeed Joseph?" He said, "I am Joseph and this is my brother. God has been gracious unto us. Verily whosoever is reverent and patient—surely God neglects not the reward of the virtuous.”

89–90 Joseph’s question is about their separating him from Benjamin when they were young, and about their harming him (Joseph) and perpetrating injustices against Benjamin, such as debasing and reviling him (Kl). Joseph then makes an excuse for his brothers’ wrong actions (Kl, R), as he says, when you were ignorant, which refers to either their ignorance of the vileness of their actions or their general state of ignorance on account of their youth (Kl). It is said that the brothers recognized that their interlocutor was Joseph when he spoke these words to them, or when he smiled (Bd), or when he removed his crown (Sh). For Surely God neglects not the reward of the virtuous, see 9:120; 11:11c, 115c; 12:56.

91 “By God!” they said, “God has preferred thee over us, and we were at fault.”

92 He said, “There is no reproach against you this day. God will forgive you. And He is the most Merciful of the merciful.

91–92 Cf. Genesis 45:5–8. Joseph’s statement There is no reproach against you this day is described in some sources as “a beautiful form of forgiveness” (Kl). Reproach here can also mean physical punishment (‘iqāb; Kl). These words of forgiveness and comfort uttered by Joseph were cited by the Prophet Muhammad when he too forgave members of his tribe who had been his oppressors. It is said that, during the conquest of Makkah, when the Prophet had overtaken the city and the Makkan idolaters had no hope of escape, the Prophet addressed the Quraysh, “O party of the Quraysh! What do you see me doing with you?” They answered, “Good. You are a noble brother and the son of a noble brother.” Then the Prophet said, “Verily I say to you as Joseph said to his brothers: there is no reproach against you. Go, for you are free.”

93 Take this shirt of mine and cast it upon my father’s face; he will come to see. And bring me your family, all together.”

93 Joseph’s order to have his shirt cast over Jacob’s face was reportedly based on Divine inspiration (Kl, My). The shirt is said to be the same shirt made from the silk of Paradise that Gabriel brought to Joseph when he was in the well (see 12:15c; My); cf. Genesis 45:9–13.

94 And as the caravan set off, their father said, “Truly I sense the scent of Joseph, if you think me not senile!”

94 Jacob’s words were addressed to those of his tribe who were with him (My). Despite the fact that the caravan was on its way from Egypt to Canaan, Jacob was able to perceive Joseph’s scent because of the heavenly smell that came from his shirt (Bg, My). Some say that this was a miracle because Jacob and Joseph were prophets (My).

95 They said, “By God! Truly thou art astray as of old.”

95 Cf. 12:85–86c. By being astray here the brothers mean Jacob’s overabundant love for Joseph and his hope to meet with him, which they thought unreasonable under the circumstances as they knew them (JJ).

96 And when the bearer of glad tidings came, he cast it upon his face and he was restored to sight. He said, “Did I not say unto you that I know from God that which you know not?”

96 Cf. Genesis 45:9–13, 27–28. The bearer of glad tidings who cast Joseph’s shirt upon Jacob’s face was the same brother (see 12:10c; JJ) who had earlier interceded with the brothers when they plotted to kill Joseph (see 12:15c). For Jacob’s question, see his announcement in 12:85–86c.

97 They said, “O father! Seek forgiveness for us from our sins. Truly we were at fault.”

98 He said, “I shall indeed seek forgiveness for you from my Lord. Truly He is Forgiving, Merciful.”

97–98 This conversation occurred after the brothers returned home from Egypt (Q). Some record that Jacob delayed his prayer for forgiveness a certain period of time (Q, R), perhaps to ascertain whether they were being sincere and truthful (Z).

99 So when they entered upon Joseph, he drew his parents close to himself and said, “Enter Egypt in security, if God wills!”

99 For enter . . . in security, if God wills with reference to the Prophet Muhammad and his followers, see 48:27, which states that the Muslims shall enter the Sacred Mosque in security, if God wills.

100 And he raised his parents up to the throne, and they [all] fell prostrate toward him. He said, “O my father! This is the fulfillment of my vision; my Lord has made it come true. He was good to me when He brought me forth from prison, and brought thee from the desert, after Satan incited evil between my brothers and me. Indeed, my Lord is Subtle in that which He wills. Truly He is the Knower, the Wise.

100 Cf. Genesis 46:5–7. Joseph raised his parents up to the throne; that is, he seated them (JJ) upon the king’s throne (Kl). For Joseph’s vision of which this verse is the fulfillment, see 12:4c. They [all] refers to Joseph’s parents and his eleven brothers, which correspond to the sun, the moon, and the eleven stars, respectively (N). Prostrating toward someone was a way of greeting and honoring that person, much like standing up for someone out of respect or kissing the hand (N).

Joseph does not mention the well from which he was delivered, only the prison, since he had already told his brothers in v. 92, There is no reproach against you this day (N). Joseph’s blaming Satan for having incited evil between himself and his brothers is tantamount to his making an excuse for them for their wrong actions (Qu; see also 12:89–90c). Joseph’s description of God as Subtle in that which He wills means that the manner in which God carries out His Will is subtle (N).

101 My Lord! Thou hast given me something of sovereignty, and taught me the interpretation of events. Originator of the heavens and the earth! Thou art my Protector in this world and in the Hereafter! Take me as a submitter unto Thyself, and admit me to the company of the righteous.”

101 Joseph was granted something of sovereignty since he had the highest standing in Egypt next to the king (see 12:56–57c.). For God as the Originator of the heavens and the earth, see 2:117; 6:14, 101; 35:1; 39:46; 42:11; see also 6:14c; 35:1c. God is described throughout the Quran as a Protector, as in 2:257: God is the Protector of those who believe. Joseph says that God is his Protector in this world and in the Hereafter since those under God’s Protection are considered His friends (awliyāʾ, a term that derives from the same root as Protector), upon whom no fear shall come (10:62) and for whom are glad tidings in the life of this world and in the Hereafter (10:64). Joseph’s supplication to God, Take me as a submitter unto Thyself, is a request to God that he not die except in a state of complete submission to God’s Will (as in 3:102: And die not except in submission), and in accordance with the creed of Abraham (see 22:78). For a discussion of the broader meaning of submission (islām) in the Quran, see the essay “The Quranic View of Sacred History and Other Religions.”

102 These are among the accounts of the unseen which We reveal unto thee. And thou wert not with them when they decided upon their affair and plotted.

102 This verse, addressed to the Prophet Muhammad, points out that he was not with Joseph’s brothers when they planned what they would do to Joseph (R). The verse thus argues for the miraculous nature of the Prophet’s knowledge, since he was given the unseen details of the story of Joseph without being physically present during its unfolding and, according to Islamic teachings, without learning of it from human teachers or through books (R), since he is considered the unlettered Prophet (7:157).

103 And most of mankind, however much thou mightest desire, are not believers.

103 For most of mankind . . . are not believers, see 11:17c; 13:1; 40:61. Elsewhere in the Quran, the Prophet's concern for his people (and, by extension, all of humanity) is addressed (see 9:128, 18:6, 26:3), which is part of the broader Quranic theme that it is only God Who guides and only God Who causes people to believe; see 2:272; 3:20; 3:128–29; 28:56.

104 And thou askest of them no reward for it; it is naught but a reminder for the worlds.

104 For the meaning of this verse, see commentary on 6:90, where the Prophet is instructed to say, I ask not of you any reward for it. It is naught but a reminder for the worlds.

105 How many a sign is there in the heavens and on the earth by which they pass; yet they turn away from them!

105 People continuously encounter signs and proofs that indicate the being of their Creator as well as His Wisdom, Power, and Oneness, yet they do not reflect upon the meaning of these signs; nor do they take a lesson from them (Bd); thus 6:157 asks rhetorically, Who does greater wrong than one who denies the signs of God and turns away from them? Regarding the variety and significance of God's signs, see the commentary on 45:3–6. More specifically, this verse relates to the previous civilizations and peoples who have passed away and left vestiges behind, from which those who come later are meant to take a lesson, but instead fail to do so (N). Regarding the lessons to be derived from past nations, see 30:9c.

106 And most of them believe not in God, save that they ascribe partners unto Him.

106 It is said that this verse was revealed about the Makkan idolaters, who believed in God but also worshipped other gods alongside Him (Kl). For more on ascribing partners to God, see 4:48c. The gods that one might place on a par with God are not limited to physical idols, but can also be other elements that one “idolizes,” such as one’s desires, power, or ideas (see also 10:28–29c; 25:43; 45:23).

107 Do they feel secure from the coming of an overwhelming punishment from God upon them? Or from the coming of the Hour suddenly, while they are unaware?

107 For the rhetorical question Do they feel secure? (regarding God’s Punishment), see also 16:45–47; 17:68–69; 67:16–17. Here the question is about the Makkan idolaters (Ṭs). The overwhelming punishment refers to a thunderbolt (JJ, Ṭs) or some kind of enveloping punishment (Bg); the Hour refers to the Day of Judgment. For the sudden nature of the arrival of the Last Day and the general state of heedlessness in which it will find most people, see 6:31c; 7:188; 21:40.

108 Say, “This is my way. I call unto God with clear sight—I, and those who follow me. Glory be to God! And I am not among those who ascribe partners unto God.”

108 Here way can refer to either the Prophet’s wont (Bg) or the religion he brought (Bg, Z; cf. 16:125). By clear sight is meant that by which one can distinguish with certainty between truth and falsehood, namely, certainty (Bg).

109 And We sent none before thee, save men unto whom We sent revelation among the people of the towns. Have they not journeyed upon the earth and observed how those before them fared in the end? And the Abode of the Hereafter is better for those who are reverent. Do you not understand?

109 Some have said that this verse was revealed as a response to the Makkans' question in 6:8, Why has not an angel been sent down unto him? (Q). On the significance of prophets being human beings and speaking the language of their people, see 6:8–9; 11:12; 14:10; 17:94; 18:110; 23:33; 25:7; 35:15; 41:6; 54:24; 14:4c; 14:11c; 64:6c. Many commentators understand the mention of the people of the towns to signify that nomads were never chosen to be prophets since town dwellers were, according to the commentators, more knowledgeable and refined (Q, R, Z), and neither were women chosen as prophets (see 16:43c), though some believe that the mention of men signifies not gender but that they were human beings, not angels (Z; see 17:94–95c).

For Have they not journeyed upon the earth and observed how those before them fared in the end? see 30:9c (see also 12:105c). On the superiority of the Hereafter to this world, see 12:56–57c, although 12:57 mentions the reward of the Hereafter rather than the Abode of the Hereafter.

110 Till, when the messengers despaired and thought that they were deemed liars, Our Help came unto them, and whosoever We willed was saved. And Our Might shall not be turned back from the guilty people.

110 For the prophets' human reactions to the trials they encountered, see 2:214; 15:97; 21:83; 26:3. For God's exacting vengeance upon the guilty people, see 32:22.

111 Certainly in their stories is a lesson for those possessed of intellect. It is not a fabricated account; rather, it is a confirmation of that which came before it, and an elaboration of all things, and a guidance and a mercy for a people who believe.

111 By their stories is meant the stories of the messengers mentioned throughout the Quran (JJ). For those possessed of intellect, see 5:100c; 38:29c; 39:9c. On the fact that the Quran is not fabricated, but rather confirms the scriptures that came before it, see 10:37; cf. commentary on 10:15–17. Like the Quran itself (see also 16:64, 89), the Torah given to Moses is also described as an elaboration of all things, and a guidance and a mercy (see 6:154 and commentary).

The Thunder

al-Ra^cd

The fourth in a series of six *sūrah*s whose opening verses include the letters alif, lām, and *rā*³, and which speak of the Book, al-Ra^cd also contains the detached letter mīm in its opening verse. According to some commentators, it is a Makkan sūrah (Sy), while others maintain that it is Madinan. Still others are of the opinion that it is mostly Makkan with some Madinan verses (Bg, R, Sy). Al-Zamakhsharī notes simply that its time of revelation is uncertain.

The sūrah affirms the Divine Source of what has been revealed to the Prophet, even though most people do not believe in it (v. 1) or doubt both the Resurrection (v. 5) and that the Prophet is a messenger from God (vv. 7, 43). It also draws attention to the many wonders of the natural world, all of which are entirely dependent upon God for their subsistence (vv. 2–4); like the thunder mentioned in v. 13 (and from which the sūrah derives its name), they also partake in the glorification of God (vv. 12–13, 15). Drawing on natural phenomena again, an important parable of water from the sky is provided in order to illustrate the stark difference between truth and falsehood (v. 17). Those who disbelieve, fail to heed God’s call, and work corruption upon the earth encounter calamities in this world (vv. 25, 31) and are promised Hell in the next (vv. 18, 25, 34); those who believe and are righteous live tranquilly in this world (v. 28) and are promised Paradise in the next (vv. 18, 23–24, 29, 35).

In the Name of God, the Compassionate, the Merciful

① Alif. Lām. Mīm. Rā. These are the signs of the Book; and that which has been sent down unto thee from thy Lord is the truth, but most of mankind believe not. ② God it is Who raised the heavens without pillars that you see, then mounted the Throne; and He made the sun and the moon subservient, each running for a term appointed. He directs the affair, expounding the signs, so that you may be certain of the meeting with your Lord. ③ He it is Who spread out the earth and placed therein firm mountains and streams, and of every kind of fruit He placed therein two kinds. He causes the night to cover the day. Truly in that are signs for a people who reflect. ④ Upon the earth are neighboring tracts, vineyards, sown fields, and date palms of a shared root and not of a shared root, watered by one water. And We have favored some above others in bounty. Truly in that are signs for a people who understand. ⑤ And if thou dost wonder, then wondrous is their saying, “When we are dust, shall we indeed be [raised] in a new creation?” It is they who disbelieve in their Lord; it is they who will have shackles upon their necks; and it is they who will be the inhabitants of the Fire; they shall abide therein. ⑥ Yet they would have thee hasten evil before good, though examples have passed before them. Truly thy Lord is Possessed of Forgiveness for mankind despite their wrongdoing, and truly thy Lord is severe in retribution. ⑦ Those who disbelieve say, “Why has not some sign been sent down upon him from his Lord?” Thou art but a warner; and for every people there is a guide. ⑧ God knows that which every female bears, how wombs diminish and how they increase. Everything with Him is according to a measure— ⑨ Knower of the Unseen and the seen, the Great, the Exalted. ⑩ Alike among you are those who speak secretly and those who do so openly, those who lurk by night, and those who go forth by day. ⑪ For him there are attendant angels to his front and to his rear, guarding him by God’s Command. Truly God alters not what is in a people until they alter what is in themselves. And when God desires evil for a people, there is no repelling it; and apart from Him they have no protector. ⑫ He it is Who shows you lightning, arousing fear and hope, and Who produces heavy-laden clouds. ⑬ The thunder hymns His praise, as do the angels, in awe of Him. He sends forth the thunderbolts and strikes therewith whomsoever He will. Yet they dispute concerning God, and He is severe in wrath. ⑭ Unto Him is the supplication of truth; and those whom they supplicate apart from Him answer them not in the least, save as one who stretches forth his palms toward water that it may reach his mouth, though it never reaches him. And the supplication of the disbelievers is naught but astray. ⑮ And unto God prostrates whosoever is in the heavens and on the earth, willingly or unwillingly, as do their shadows in the morning and the evening. ⑯ Say, “Who is the Lord of the heavens and the earth?” Say, “God.” Say, “Then have you taken, apart from Him, protectors who have no power over what benefit or harm may come to themselves?” Say, “Are the blind and the seer equal, or are darkness and light equal?” Or have they ascribed unto God partners who have created the like of His creation, such that that creation seems alike to them? Say, “God is the Creator of all things, and He is the One, the Paramount.” ⑰ He sends down water from the sky, so that the riverbeds flow according to their measure and the torrent carries a swelling froth; and from that which they kindle in the fire, seeking ornament or pleasure, is a froth like unto it. Thus does God set forth truth and falsehood. As for the froth, it passes away as dross. And as for that which benefits mankind, it remains on the earth. Thus does God set forth parables. ⑱ Those who answer their Lord shall have that which is most beautiful. But those who answer Him not—were they to possess all that is on the earth and the like of it besides, they would seek to ransom themselves thereby. For them there shall be an evil reckoning. Their refuge is Hell. What an evil resting place! ⑲ Is one who knows that what has been sent down unto thee from thy Lord is the truth like one who is blind? Only those who possess intellect reflect, ⑳ who fulfill the pact with God and break not the covenant, ㉑ who join what God has commanded be joined, fear their Lord, and dread an evil reckoning, ㉒ and who are patient, seeking the Face of their Lord, perform the prayer, and spend from that which We have provided them, secretly and openly, and who repel evil with good. For them there shall be the reward of the Abode— ㉓ Gardens of Eden that they shall enter along with those who were righteous from among their fathers, their spouses, and their progeny; and angels shall enter upon them from every gate. ㉔

“Peace be upon you because you were patient.” How excellent is the Ultimate Abode! 25 As for those who break God’s pact after accepting His covenant, and sever what God has commanded be joined, and work corruption upon the earth, it is they who shall have the curse, and theirs shall be the evil abode. 26 God outspreads and straitens provision for whomsoever He will. They rejoice in the life of the world; yet compared to the Hereafter, the life of the world is but [fleeting] enjoyment. 27 Those who disbelieve say, “Why has some sign not been sent down upon him from his Lord?” Say, “Truly God leads astray whomsoever He will and guides to Himself whosoever turns in repentance— 28 those who believe and whose hearts are at peace in the remembrance of God. Are not hearts at peace in the remembrance of God? 29 Those who believe and perform righteous deeds, theirs is blessedness and a beautiful return. 30 Thus have We sent thee unto a community before whom other communities have passed away, that thou mayest recite unto them that which We have revealed unto thee; yet they disbelieve in the Compassionate. Say, “He is my Lord; there is no god but He. In Him do I trust and unto Him do I turn.” 31 Were there a Quran whereby the mountains were set in motion, or the earth was cleft, or the dead were made to speak! Nay! Unto God belongs the affair altogether. Do not those who believe understand that if God had willed, He would have guided mankind all together? And those who disbelieve, calamity will never cease to befall them because of that which they have wrought, or to alight close to their abode until God’s Promise comes. Truly God will not fail the tryst. 32 Certainly messengers were mocked before thee. But I granted respite to those who disbelieved; then I seized them. How, then, was My Retribution! 33 What of He Who attends to every soul in accordance with what it has earned? Yet they ascribe partners unto God. Say, “Name them! Or will you inform Him of something He does not know upon the earth, or are these vain words?” Nay! But their plotting has been made to seem fair unto those who disbelieve, and they have been turned from the way. And whomsoever God leads astray, no guide has he. 34 Theirs shall be punishment in the life of this world, and surely the punishment of the Hereafter will be more wretched; they shall have none to shield them from God. ③⑤ The parable of the Garden that has been promised to the reverent: with rivers running below, its food everlasting, as is its shade. That is the ultimate end of those who were reverent, while the ultimate end of the disbelievers is the Fire! ③⑥ And those to whom We have given the Book rejoice in that which has been sent down unto thee. And among the parties are those who reject some of it. Say, “I have only been commanded to worship God, and to not ascribe partners unto Him. Unto Him do I call and unto Him is my return.” ③⑦ Thus have We sent it down as a Judgment in Arabic. Yet if thou followest their caprices after the knowledge that has come to thee, thou shalt have no protector against God, and no defender. ③⑧ Indeed We sent messengers before thee and appointed for them wives and progeny, and it is not for a messenger to bring a sign, save by God’s Leave; and for every term there is a Book. ③⑨ God effaces what He will and establishes, and with Him is the Mother of the Book. ④⑩ Whether We show thee a part of that which We promise them, or We take thee [unto Us], thine is only to proclaim, and Ours is the Reckoning. ④⑪ Have they not considered how We come upon the land, reducing it of its outlying regions? And God judges; none repeals His Judgment, and He is swift in reckoning. ④⑫ Indeed those who were before them plotted, but unto God belongs plotting altogether. He knows what every soul earns, and the disbelievers will know whose is the Ultimate Abode. ④⑬ And those who disbelieve say, “You have not been sent.” Say, “God and whosoever possesses knowledge of the Book suffices as a witness between you and me.”

Commentary

① Alif. Lām. Mīm. Rā. These are the signs of the Book; and that which has been sent down unto thee from thy Lord is the truth, but most of mankind believe not.

1 For the detached letters, see 2:1c. Whereas the Book here is understood by some to refer to this specific sūrah (Bḏ, Kl, Z; cf. 10:1c) and the signs to its verses (Bḏ, Kl, R), that which has been sent down refers to the entire Quran (Q, Ṭ, Z). Despite the fact that the Quran is the truth, the majority of people do not accept it as true, which is why they believe not (Āl, Ṭs; see also 11:17; 40:59).

② God it is Who raised the heavens without pillars that you see, then mounted the Throne; and He made the sun and the moon subservient, each running for a term appointed. He directs the affair, expounding the signs, so that you may be certain of the meeting with your Lord.

2 Some interpret this verse to mean that the pillars holding up the heavens cannot be seen, but others say they are not supported by pillars at all (Ṭ). It is, nevertheless, God Who actually sustains the entire cosmic order (R), as in 22:65: He maintains the sky lest it fall upon the earth, save by His Leave. Responding to the people who believe not mentioned in v. 1, this verse is interpreted by some as drawing attention to the perfect order and harmony of the natural world, implying that deep reflection upon it will inevitably lead one to belief in God (R).

For God's mounting the Throne and directing the affair, see 10:3c. In the Quran, the notion of a term appointed encompasses all things in the created order (see, e.g., 6:60; 7:34; 11:3; 14:10; 16:61; 22:5; 22:33; 29:53; 30:8). In the present verse, mention of a term appointed indicates that the sun and the moon as well as all heavenly bodies will one day cease to be, as alluded to in 39:67: The whole earth shall be but a handful to Him on the Day of Resurrection, and the heavens will be enfolded in His right Hand. Reflection upon the nature of things, the manner in which they are sustained, and how they all exist for a finite measure of time is meant to engender a firm belief in God and the meeting with Him after death.

③ He it is Who spread out the earth and placed therein firm mountains and streams, and of every kind of fruit He placed therein two kinds. He causes the night to cover the day. Truly in that are signs for a people who reflect.

3 According to Ibn Juzayy, He it is Who spread out the earth may appear to suggest that the earth is flat and not, as was widely acknowledged in his time, round. For him, however, the verse speaks of the earth as spread out because of the fact that every portion of land on earth, although flat from our perspective, comprises a greater whole, namely, the surface of the earth, which is round. Of every kind of fruit He placed therein two kinds has been interpreted as referring to two colors, light and dark, or two types of taste, sweet and sour (Kl). For God's causing the night to cover the day, see also 7:54.

4 Despite the fact that the earth is watered by one water, what emerges from the neighboring tracts, vineyards, sown fields, and date palms is variegated. This is understood to disprove a purely naturalistic explanation of the manner in which objects emerge in this world, because the water is the same, yet the things that emerge from the earth are vastly different in type (Bd, Kl, Q). If it is argued that this is due to the fact that there are different kinds of seeds in the earth that are actualized by the one water that reaches them, it can then be asked where they originated in the first place (Q). Such evidence is provided as an argument for a single Creator, the existence of Whom is the only reality that can account for their existence and their variegated natures; see 13:2c.

⑤ And if thou dost wonder, then wondrous is their saying, “When we are dust, shall we indeed be [raised] in a new creation?” It is they who disbelieve in their Lord; it is they who will have shackles upon their necks; and it is they who will be the inhabitants of the Fire; they shall abide therein.

5 This verse is saying, “If you are astonished that they do not accept you despite the fact that they know you to be truthful (see 10:16c), then even more astonishing than this is their disbelief in the Resurrection” (Q). The disbelievers’ amazement at and rejection of the Resurrection are recounted many times throughout the Quran; their most common objection is, What! When we are bones and dust, shall we indeed be resurrected as a new creation? (17:49, 98; see also, e.g., 23:35, 82; 36:78). For the shackles described as being upon their necks, see 36:8c.

6 Yet they would have thee hasten evil before good, though examples have passed before them. Truly thy Lord is Possessed of Forgiveness for mankind despite their wrongdoing, and truly thy Lord is severe in retribution.

6 Though examples have passed before them of the past nations who were punished for disbelieving in their messengers (Kl), out of mockery the Makkan idolaters hastened evil, namely, God’s Punishment (R, Ṭb, Z), before the good, which is a reference to God’s Mercy (Ṭb, Ṭs); see also 10:11c; 10:49c; 27:46; 36:48c. Truly thy Lord is Possessed of Forgiveness for mankind despite their wrongdoing means that, despite people’s disbelief and disobedience, God covers their faults in this world and does not take them to task right away (Aj). The verse’s last sentence is understood to mean that, if they repent, God will forgive them, but if they do not, then they should know that He is severe in retribution (R); see also 41:43.

7 Those who disbelieve say, “Why has not some sign been sent down upon him from his Lord?” Thou art but a warner; and for every people there is a guide.

7 For the Makkans’ request for a sign to be sent down upon the Prophet from his Lord, see 6:37, 109; 10:20c. For the function of prophets as warners, see 4:165c. For every people there is a guide can refer to the fact that all nations have received guidance from God through His sending messengers to them (see 10:47c). According to Ibn ʿAjībah, when this verse was revealed, the Prophet exclaimed to ʿAlī ibn Abī Ṭālib, “I am the warner and you, O ʿAlī, are the guide.”

⑧ God knows that which every female bears, how wombs diminish and how they increase. Everything with Him is according to a measure—

⑨ Knower of the Unseen and the seen, the Great, the Exalted.

8–9 God knows that which every female bears (cf. 35:11; 41:47), whether it will be a male or female, sound or deficient, tall or short (R); and, more important, He knows the inner workings of each soul before it is born (see also 2:117c; 5:7c). How wombs diminish and how they increase refers to the length of the gestation period in each womb (JJ). For God as Knower of the Unseen and the seen, see 6:59; 59:22c. The use of measure (miqdār) evokes the use of measure in 54:49: Truly We have created everything according to a measure (qadar). Regarding the theological significance of qadar, see 54:49c.

⑩ Alike among you are those who speak secretly and those who do so openly, those who lurk by night, and those who go forth by day.

10 Following directly upon v. 9, which speaks of God’s all-encompassing Knowledge (Bḍ), this verse is understood to mean that no matter what one’s condition is, God is fully aware of one’s actions (Bḍ, Qm). This fact is meant to engender not only vigilance in one’s actions, but also constant and intense self-scrutiny of one’s thoughts and the state of one’s heart (Aj). As the second Caliph ʿUmar ibn al-Khaṭṭāb (d. 22/644) is reported to have said, “Take yourselves to account before you are taken to account.”

⑪ For him there are attendant angels to his front and to his rear, guarding him by God’s Command. Truly God alters not what is in a people until they alter what is in themselves. And when God desires evil for a people, there is no repelling it; and apart from Him they have no protector.

11 The angels are continuously attendant upon the one who lurks by night and goes forth by day (v. 10; AF). God alters not what is in a people, namely, their blessings related to this life, such as sound health and wealth (M), until they alter what is in themselves, that is, until they misuse these blessings to disobey God (Kl, My, R); see 8:52–54c. Some have also understood God alters not what is in a people until they alter what is in themselves to mean that God will not alter the positive or negative circumstances of people until they themselves bring about changes in their actions and lives. When God desires evil for a people refers to when He wishes to punish them (Q) on account of their altering the blessings that He has given them (M); cf. 10:107.

12 He it is Who shows you lightning, arousing fear and hope, and Who produces heavy-laden clouds.

13 The thunder hymns His praise, as do the angels, in awe of Him. He sends forth the thunderbolts and strikes therewith whomsoever He will. Yet they dispute concerning God, and He is severe in wrath.

12–13 Cf. 30:24. When one sees the flashes of lightning, it inspires fear of the impending thunder, but also hope that rain may descend (R). This verse is also believed to have symbolic levels of meaning. For example, according to the philosopher Shihāb al-Dīn al-Suhrawardī (d. 587/1191), the lightning referred to in this verse symbolizes the initial Divine flashes of illumination that descend suddenly upon the soul of the person walking along the spiritual path, bringing about much joy. Such a person has fear that these flashes will vanish and hope that they will remain (Majmūʿa-yi āthār-i fārsī-yi Shaykh-i Isbrāq [Tehran, 1980], 301).

That the thunder hymns His praise refers to the Quranic notion that all things in the heavens and on the earth glorify God, as in 17:44: The seven heavens, and the earth, and whosoever is in them glorify Him. And there is no thing, save that it hymns His praise, though you do not understand their praise. Truly He is Clement, Forgiving; see also 57:1; 59:1, 24; 61:1; 62:1; 64:1c. Many commentators also note a tradition asserting that thunder is the name of the angel who controls the clouds (Bg, Qm, R); see also 2:19c. In this reading, the thunder hymns His praise refers to the angel's voice as it glorifies God (Kl, M), declaring His Transcendence and Incomparability (Bq, Ṭs). The other angels, likewise, hymn His praise out of awe, that is, out of reverence for and magnification of Him (N).

He sends forth the thunderbolts and strikes therewith whomsoever He will is said to refer to the mortal thunderbolt with which God struck Arbad ibn Rabī'ah, who had plotted with °Āmir ibn al-ṭufayl to kill the Prophet (Bḍ, Z). Others, however, say that the wording in this verse is too general to refer to this specific instance (Kl); see also 24:43. According to the Sufi commentator al-Kāshānī, the thunderbolts here refer to the “august glories” (sabaḥāt) of Divinity that manifest God's Might and Grace, thereby annihilating the egotistical desires of whomsoever He will, referring to those who love God and yearn for Him (K).

Yet they, namely, the disbelievers (Kl), dispute concerning God; see also 22:3c, 22:8; 31:20. Wrath translates miḥāl, which is derived from ḥīlah, meaning “plot” or “ruse.” Thus, He is severe in wrath is understood to mean that God is intense in plotting (Kl, Ṭs); see v. 42; 3:54; 7:99; 8:30c; 10:21c; 27:50. See also 7:183 and 68:45: Truly My scheme is firm.

⑭ Unto Him is the supplication of truth; and those whom they supplicate apart from Him answer them not in the least, save as one who stretches forth his palms toward water that it may reach his mouth, though it never reaches him. And the supplication of the disbelievers is naught but astray.

14 Unto Him is the supplication of truth refers to the shahādah, “There is no god but God” (lā ilāha illa'LLāh; AF, Kl, My). More generally, it can refer to any form of supplication that God accepts and to which He responds, as in 40:60: Call upon Me, and I shall respond to you. The supplication of truth therefore is supplication to God, whereas the supplication to what is other than Him is futile (Kl), as is the case with those whom they—that is, the disbelievers—supplicate apart from Him, namely, idols and false gods (Z). The false gods that people call upon other than God answer them not in the least, because they do not have the ability to bring about harm or benefit (see 5:76; 10:18; 25:55), since they do not possess any power, as in 35:13: As for those upon whom you call apart from Him, they do not possess so much as the husk of a date stone (cf. 7:194; 31:29; 34:22). This is why, on the Last Day, they will not be able to answer those who called upon them for help (see 18:52; 28:64). The one who calls upon false gods is thus likened to one who stretches forth his palms toward water that it may reach his mouth; just as the water cannot perceive that his hands are outstretched for it, so too are those whom one calls upon apart from God unable to hear his supplications and respond to them (Z). And the supplication of the disbelievers is naught but astray is identical to a portion of 40:50.

⑮ And unto God prostrates whosoever is in the heavens and on the earth, willingly or unwillingly, as do their shadows in the morning and the evening.

15 Cf. 16:48–49; 22:18. Prostrates here expresses the idea of submission, lowliness, and the inability to refuse (R), which is why 19:93 says, There is none in the heavens and on the earth, but that it comes unto the Compassionate as a servant; see also 2:116c. That all things prostrate to God willingly or unwillingly means that all things at all moments are “prostrate,” that is, submitted existentially before God: either they understand this state of affairs and prostrate voluntarily in recognition of it, or they prostrate involuntarily and unwittingly; see also 3:83c. From a spiritual perspective and with respect to human beings’ prostration before God, al-Maybudī says that a prostration is done willingly when one submits to God’s Command and Majesty without any hope of reward or gain; the prostration done unwillingly occurs when one prostrates to God out of desire for something, whether it is to elicit blessings or to avoid some form of harm. As do their shadows is a way of saying that even their shadows submit to God (M), which means that every aspect of their being is under His Sway; and in the morning and the evening implies that they do so perpetually (N). See also 16:48: Have they not considered that whatsoever God has created casts its shadow to the right and to the left, prostrating to God while in a state of abject humility?

⑯ Say, “Who is the Lord of the heavens and the earth?” Say, “God.” Say, “Then have you taken, apart from Him, protectors who have no power over what benefit or harm may come to themselves?” Say, “Are the blind and the seer equal, or are darkness and light equal?” Or have they ascribed unto God partners who have created the like of His creation, such that that creation seems alike to them? Say, “God is the Creator of all things, and He is the One, the Paramount.”

16 Commentators observe that the answer, God, immediately follows the question posed to the Makkan idolaters, Who is the Lord of the heavens and the earth? because they will not be able to provide any answer other than “God” (Bḍ), owing to the self-evident nature of His Being (Kl) and because a number of them had some form of belief in Allāh among their pantheon of deities (see 10:18c; 39:3). For similar questions posed to the Makkan idolaters that are meant to provoke in their minds the immediacy of God’s Lordship and Agency, see also 29:61; 29:63; 31:25; 39:38; 43:87. After establishing God’s Lordship, the question that follows, Have you taken, apart from Him, protectors who have no power over what benefit or harm may come to themselves? is meant to highlight the irrationality of the Makkans’ reliance upon deities other than Him; it makes the point that if these deities cannot benefit or harm themselves, surely they cannot bring about benefit or harm for those who call upon them (Bḍ). The blind and the seer are metaphors in the Quran for the disbeliever and the believer, respectively, and darkness and light for disbelief and faith (Kl) or ignorance and knowledge; see 33:43c. For a fuller discussion of the Quranic symbolism of light, see 6:1c; 24:35c. Or have they ascribed unto God partners who have created the like of His creation, such that that creation seems alike to them? is a rhetorical question designed to make clear to them that their partners cannot do what God does, and since this is the case, there can be no likeness between God and their idols (Ṭs). This argument is meant to lead them to the conclusion that these idols they have created are not worthy of worship (Ṭs), as God is the Creator of all things.

17 He sends down water from the sky, so that the riverbeds flow according to their measure and the torrent carries a swelling froth; and from that which they kindle in the fire, seeking ornament or pleasure, is a froth like unto it. Thus does God set forth truth and falsehood. As for the froth, it passes away as dross. And as for that which benefits mankind, it remains on the earth. Thus does God set forth parables.

17 This verse provides two similitudes concerning truth and falsehood (Bg). In the first similitude, the water that God causes to fall from the sky usually fills the riverbeds . . . according to their measure; if a torrent is generated by the water that God has sent down (Bg), it churns up dirt and impurities, forming a swelling froth, which goes on to become attached to trees and the sides of valleys (Bg) and is basically useless. When the torrent subsides, the water returns to its pure state (Bg) and is then useful to people in numerous ways.

In the second similitude, when retrieving precious metals such as gold, silver, or copper from the earth (JJ, Kl), the ores are heated over fire in order to purify them so that the desired metals can be extracted, providing ornament or pleasure for people. In the refining process, impurities rise to the top of the molten metal as froth, which is like unto the froth carried by the torrent.

Falsehood, like the scum generated by the torrent and the refining process, passes away as dross. The truth, like the pure water and precious metals—that which benefits mankind—remains; cf. 17:81: Truth has come, and falsehood has vanished. Truly falsehood is ever vanishing.

18 Those who answer their Lord shall have that which is most beautiful. But those who answer Him not—were they to possess all that is on the earth and the like of it besides, they would seek to ransom themselves thereby. For them there shall be an evil reckoning. Their refuge is Hell. What an evil resting place!

18 Those who answer their Lord refers to those who respond to God’s Call to believe in Him and accept prophecy (Q). That which is most beautiful refers to Divine Assistance in this world (Q) or to Paradise (Bg); cf. 10:26–27c. On the idea of seeking to ransom oneself in the Hereafter, see 3:91; 5:36; 10:54; 39:47; 70:11.

19 Is one who knows that what has been sent down unto thee from thy Lord is the truth like one who is blind? Only those who possess intellect reflect,

19 This verse presents a fundamental distinction between one who knows that what has been revealed is the truth and one who rejects it (AF), or between one who can see the truth and one who cannot (Ṭū). Thus, one who knows that what has been sent down unto thee from thy Lord is the truth accepts it, whereas one who is blind, which is to say, blind in the heart so that one cannot “see,” does not do so (Aj, Bđ); cf. 11:24; 13:16; 35:19–20; 40:58.

20 who fulfill the pact with God and break not the covenant,

21 who join what God has commanded be joined, fear their Lord, and dread an evil reckoning,

22 and who are patient, seeking the Face of their Lord, perform the prayer, and spend from that which We have provided them, secretly and openly, and who repel evil with good. For them there shall be the reward of the Abode—

20–22 These verses describe those who possess intellect mentioned in the previous verse. Many commentators note that pact and covenant refer to the same reality, the primordial covenant mentioned in 7:172: And when thy Lord took from the Children of Adam, from their loins, their progeny and made them bear witness concerning themselves, “Am I not your Lord?” they said, “Yea we bear witness.” The word pact is thus a specific reference to the pretemporal pledge that human beings made with God before the creation of the world, guaranteeing that they would acknowledge His Lordship. Covenant, on the other hand, refers to the pact in general, encompassing such matters as the servants’ belief in God and their relationship with each other (Z); see 7:172c; 33:7c. Alternately, some have said that pact is a reference to the moral and legal responsibility (taklīf) with which God has charged human beings, whereas covenant refers to the specific details related to that charge in accordance with their free will, such as the promise to obey God and act righteously (R).

Who join what God has commanded be joined refers, among other things, to human beings keeping their family ties, acting in the best possible manner toward their blood relatives, and being kind to the poor and the needy (IK). To join what God has commanded can also refer to the fulfillment of all acts of obedience (Q). Fear their Lord refers to the fear of breaking blood ties or to the fear of all acts of disobedience toward God (Q). For the combination of patience and prayer, see 2:45, 153: Seek help in patience and prayer.

Seeking the Face of their Lord (see also 2:272; 30:38) means that they accomplish all of the things just mentioned for no selfish reason whatsoever and not out of pride or religious ostentation, but only because they seek God’s Contentment or the beatific vision of His Face (Aj). Al-Ṭabarī explains that repel evil with good means “repel evil by doing good”; cf. 23:96; 28:54; 41:34–36. For them there shall be the reward of the Abode—that is, the most praiseworthy end in the Hereafter (JJ) —namely, Paradise (IJ).

23 Gardens of Eden that they shall enter along with those who were righteous from among their fathers, their spouses, and their progeny; and angels shall enter upon them from every gate.

24 “Peace be upon you because you were patient.” How excellent is the Ultimate Abode!

23–24 Gardens of Eden are understood to refer to the reward of the Abode mentioned in vv. 22, 24 (Ṭ). The reference to those who were righteous from among their fathers, their spouses, and their progeny is to those who believed in God during life in this world (Ṭ). The angels shall enter upon them from every gate with presents and gifts from God in order to honor them (Q); see also 39:75c. For the greeting of peace in Paradise, see 10:10c; 14:23; 33:44; 36:58; 39:73.

25 As for those who break God’s pact after accepting His covenant, and sever what God has commanded be joined, and work corruption upon the earth, it is they who shall have the curse, and theirs shall be the evil abode.

25 The first part of this verse is repeated verbatim in 2:27; both verses link corruption to breaking the covenant with God. Elsewhere, working corruption is implicitly or explicitly connected to physical violence (see 2:205; 5:33, 64; 28:4); often it implies a combination of moral or worldly corruption (see 7:103; 11:85). For the overall implications of working corruption upon the earth, see 2:11–12c; 30:41c.

It is they who shall have the curse is interpreted to mean, as the idea of “curse” often is in the Quran, that they will be distant from God’s Mercy (Ṭ’s); and theirs shall be the evil abode can refer to an evil outcome in this world or to punishment in Hell in the Hereafter (Z). According to another interpretation, it is they who shall have the curse means that they will be distant from God’s Presence (Aj), while theirs shall be the evil abode refers to the sorrow that they will experience on account of being veiled from God and remaining behind the door to His Presence (Aj).

26 God outspreads and straitens provision for whomsoever He will. They rejoice in the life of the world; yet compared to the Hereafter, the life of the world is but [fleeting] enjoyment.

26 God outspreads and straitens provision for whomsoever He will appears a number of times throughout the Quran (see, e.g., 17:30; 28:82; 29:62; 30:37; 34:36, 39); see also 5:64c. The second part of this verse is related to the phrase the enjoyment of the life of this world (for which, see 3:14; 9:38; 28:60; 42:36; 43:35). This life, compared to the Hereafter, is merely [fleeting] enjoyment because, as 29:64 says, The life of this world is naught but diversion and play; and surely the Abode of the Hereafter is life indeed, if they but knew (cf. 3:185; 6:32; 47:36). As the Companion Abu'l-Dardā' (d. 31/652) is reported to have said, "When you detest this world, you will come to love the next world; and you will abstain from this world according to the measure of your love for the next world" (al-Ghazzālī, Iḥyā' [Beirut, 1997], 4:161).

27 Those who disbelieve say, "Why has some sign not been sent down upon him from his Lord?" Say, "Truly God leads astray whomsoever He will and guides to Himself whosoever turns in repentance—

27 For the request for a sign to be sent down upon the Prophet from his Lord, see 10:20c. For God's leading astray, see 4:88–90c; 4:143c (see also, e.g., 17:97; 18:17; 74:31c). Whosoever turns in repentance refers to any who believe, repent to God for their sins, and return to Him with their heart (My), namely, those who believe and whose hearts are at peace in the remembrance of God mentioned in the following verse (AF, Bḍ; Kl). On the concept of repentance, see 4:17–18c; 51:18c; 66:8c; 92:10c; 110:3c.

28 those who believe and whose hearts are at peace in the remembrance of God. Are not hearts at peace in the remembrance of God?

28 This verse is one of the main scriptural foundations for the Sufi practice of dhikr Allāh, or the invocation and remembrance of God. It also refers to the spiritual state of the heart at peace, which the Quran presents as the state of the perfected soul. The soul is first a soul that commands to evil (12:53), then becomes the blaming soul (75:2), and finally is transformed into the soul at peace (89:27); see also the commentaries on these verses. Are not hearts at peace in the remembrance of God? is therefore understood to refer to the repose (Bḍ) and spiritual intimacy (Aj) that hearts find in remembering and invoking God, which are central to Sufi spiritual practice.

There are many Prophetic sayings about the remembrance of God, such as, “The world and all that is in it is accursed, except for the remembrance of God.” Thus it is in the remembrance of God that one may find safety from the din, clamor, and dispersive power of the world. On one occasion, one of the Prophet’s Companions said, “O Messenger of God, the laws and conditions of Islam are much for me. Tell me something that I can always keep.” The Prophet replied, “Let thy tongue be always moist with the remembrance of God.” Also, the Prophet once asked his Companions, “Shall I tell you about the best of all deeds, the best act of piety in the eyes of your Lord, which will elevate your status in the Hereafter, and which carries more virtue than the spending of gold and silver in the service of God or taking part in jihād and slaying or being slain in the way of God? The remembrance of God.”

Hearts not in the remembrance of God are described in the Quran as “diseased” (see, in particular, 47:20–21c) and “blind” (see 22:46). Regarding the heart, 83:14 states, Nay! But that which they used to earn has covered their hearts with rust. The Prophet is reported to have said, “For everything there is a polish, and the polish of the heart is the remembrance of God.” One of the most common analogies for the heart therefore is a mirror. When a mirror has stains on it, it does not reflect accurately the object that stands before it. Some aspects of the object standing before a grimy mirror may come through, but not the object in its actual pristine form. The heart, likewise, is capable of becoming sullied by evil actions and thoughts in general and by the forgetfulness of God in particular, so that it cannot reflect the truth in its purity and totality. Sufis thus say that whenever human beings are in a state of forgetfulness of God, the mirror of the heart becomes rusty and is therefore in need of polishing. Constant remembrance and invocation of God thus burnishes the mirror of the heart so that it is no longer covered by the rust of forgetfulness of Him. When a heart becomes totally polished, the Reality that stands before it, namely, God, is reflected in it without the barrier of the human ego. It is this kind of purified heart to whom allusion is made in the famous ḥadīth qudsī, “The heavens and the earth cannot contain Me, but the heart of My faithful servant can contain Me.” A polished heart, also known in Islamic mysticism as the “eye of the heart” (‘ayn al-qalb) when it has opened, thus reflects God as He is to Himself, since He looks at Himself through the polished mirror and only sees Himself. Such a heart is at peace, because it is in a state of perpetually witnessing God (Aj, Rb), thereby coming to a deeper understanding of such verses as 2:115: Wheresoever you turn, there is the Face of God.

In the language of spiritual alchemy, the remembrance of God is described as an elixir that eventually turns the lead or base metal of the soul into pure gold (R). This is similar to when God’s Majesty descends upon the heart through the act of remembrance: it acts as an elixir for the heart, gradually transforming it from a dark, murky substance into one that is pure, luminous, unchangeable (R), and able to “see.” The heart is thus changed from its fallen state, symbolized by lead, to its state of perfection, symbolized by gold.

This verse can also refer to the peace that comes about by virtue of God’s remembrance of human beings. One Sufi gloss on this verse states, “There are a people whose hearts are at peace because of their remembrance of God. And there are a people whose hearts are at peace because of God’s Remembrance of them —the Remembrance of God is surely greater” (29:45; My). Each of these two perspectives, in a sense, emphasizes different aspects of 2:152, So remember Me, and I shall remember you (My); see also 2:152c; 29:45c; cf. 7:51; 9:67.

29 Those who believe and perform righteous deeds, theirs is blessedness and a beautiful return.

29 Those who believe and perform righteous deeds is seen as a reference to those who turn in repentance, mentioned in v. 27 (Kl). Blessedness translates ḫubā, which can refer to a good life in this world (Āl, Ṭū), Paradise (Ṭū), or a tree in Paradise (R, Ṭū). More generally, it is understood to describe the joyous state of people in Paradise (My). Beautiful return (see also 38:25, 40, 49, 55) means that when they die and return to God (Q), they will have a beautiful outcome in the Hereafter (JJ, Ṭ).

30 Thus have We sent thee unto a community before whom other communities have passed away, that thou mayest recite unto them that which We have revealed unto thee; yet they disbelieve in the Compassionate. Say, “He is my Lord; there is no god but He. In Him do I trust and unto Him do I turn.”

30 Thus have We sent thee unto a community, namely, the last of communities to receive revelation (N, R), before whom other communities have passed away, that is, the previous nations to whom God’s messengers have been sent (Aj). That thou mayest recite unto them that which We have revealed unto thee, meaning the revelation that God has bestowed upon the Prophet (Ṭ). They disbelieve in the Compassionate; that is, they are opposed to and reject God’s Oneness (Ṭ) because most of mankind believe not (see 13:1c). It is also said that the words yet they disbelieve in the Compassionate refer to the incident when the Makkans were told to prostrate to the Compassionate (al-Raḥmān, a Divine Name to which they were not accustomed), and they derisively said, “And who is the Compassionate?” (JJ, Q); see also 25:60c. According to another report, it refers to an incident that took place during the signing of the Treaty of Ḥudaybiyah in 6/628. When the words “In the Name of God, the Compassionate, the Merciful” were written on the treaty, one of the Makkans said, “We do not recognize the Compassionate!” (Th). For more on the Treaty of Ḥudaybiyah and this controversy, see the introduction to Sūrah 48; 2:114c; 2:190–94c.

He is my Lord; that is, “I believe in and affirm the Lordship and Divinity of the One in Whom you disbelieve” (IK). In Him do I trust “in all of my affairs” (IK). Unto Him do I turn; that is, “In a state of penitence I turn toward Him, for this is His right to which no one else can lay claim” (IK; cf. 11:88; 42:10).

31 Were there a Quran whereby the mountains were set in motion, or the earth was cleft, or the dead were made to speak! Nay! Unto God belongs the affair altogether. Do not those who believe understand that if God had willed, He would have guided mankind all together? And those who disbelieve, calamity will never cease to befall them because of that which they have wrought, or to alight close to their abode until God’s Promise comes. Truly God will not fail the trust.

31 Cf. 6:111: Even if We were to send down angels unto them, and the dead were to speak to them, and We were to gather all things in front of them, they would still not believe, unless God wills. Similarly, in the present verse the words Were there a Quran whereby the mountains were set in motion, or the earth was cleft, or the dead were made to speak were revealed in response to the mocking by the disbelievers of Makkah, who told the Prophet to pray to God, asking Him to move the mountains, cause rivers to gush forth from the ground, and to bring their ancestors back to life so that they could speak with them (W).

Unto God belongs the affair altogether refers particularly to the Makkans' guidance, which is to say that their guidance is in His Hands although it has a universal import. If He wills that they believe, then they will believe. But if He does not will it, then the signs that they demand be shown to them will not benefit them (IJ). According to Ibn al-Jawzī, this part of the verse goes on to confirm what follows it, namely, Do not those who believe understand that if God had willed, He would have guided mankind all together? For the relationship between God's Will and human guidance, see commentary on 10:99–100; 54:49. Calamity, such as afflictions to themselves, their children, and property (Kl), will never cease to befall them—that is, the Makkans (JJ)—because of that which they have wrought, that is, because of their disbelief (JJ) and the conduct caused by it. Until God's Promise comes is understood by many to refer to the conquest of Makkah by the Prophet (JJ, Kl). For the meaning of Truly God will not fail the tryst (cf. 3:9, 195; 39:20), see 3:9c.

32 Certainly messengers were mocked before thee. But I granted respite to those who disbelieved; then I seized them. How, then, was My Retribution!

32 For the manner in which those who mock God's messengers are punished for their mockery, see 6:10; 11:8; 16:34; 39:48; 40:83; 45:33; 46:26. But I granted respite to those who disbelieved; then I seized them. How, then, was My Retribution! echoes 22:44: But I granted the disbelievers a respite, then I seized them in punishment. And how, then, was the change I wrought! The meaning of How, then, was My Retribution! is, "What do you think of what I have done with them? The same shall I do to the idolaters among your people!" (Q).

33 What of He Who attends to every soul in accordance with what it has earned? Yet they ascribe partners unto God. Say, “Name them! Or will you inform Him of something He does not know upon the earth, or are these vain words?” Nay! But their plotting has been made to seem fair unto those who disbelieve, and they have been turned from the way. And whomsoever God leads astray, no guide has he.

33 In the first sentence the comparison is implied rather than explicit (JJ): Is He Who attends to, or watches over, every soul in accordance with what it has earned, whether good or evil, like those idols that some worship? Or will you inform Him of something, namely, the partners they would ascribe to God (Kl). Vain words are words with no inward meaning (JJ), because they are based on a false opinion. For the wider Quranic theme of people’s actions being made to seem fair to them, which in this verse includes their plotting, see 3:14c; 6:42–44c; and also 13:42: unto God belongs plotting altogether. For the hopelessness in guiding those whom God leads astray, see 4:88, 143: Whomsoever God leads astray, thou wilt not find a way for him; and 18:17: Whomsoever He leads astray, thou wilt find no protector to lead him aright (cf. 7:186; 17:97; 39:23, 36; 40:33; 42:44, 46).

34 Theirs shall be punishment in the life of this world, and surely the punishment of the Hereafter will be more wretched; they shall have none to shield them from God.

34 Punishment in the life of this world refers to a variety of trials (N), such as death and slavery (Bđ, Bg, Q), as well as various forms of illness and affliction (Q). Punishment in the next life is here described as more wretched than punishment in the present life (JJ); elsewhere the punishment in the next life is described as more severe and more lasting (20:127), greater (39:26; 68:33), and more disgraceful (41:16). They, the disbelievers, shall have none to shield them from God, meaning they shall have no one to prevent God’s Punishment from afflicting them (JJ); cf. v. 37; 40:21.

35 The parable of the Garden that has been promised to the reverent:

with rivers running below, its food everlasting, as is its shade. That is the ultimate end of those who were reverent, while the ultimate end of the disbelievers is the Fire!

35 For Paradise with rivers running below, see 2:25c. Al-Zamakhsharī observes that its food everlasting is similar to neither out of reach, nor forbidden (56:33), which describes the fruits of Paradise. Its shade, which is likewise everlasting, is to be contrasted with the shade in this life, which withdraws in accord with the sun’s positions (see also 56:30c); see also 47:15 and commentary.

36 And those to whom We have given the Book rejoice in that which has been sent down unto thee. And among the parties are those who reject some of it. Say, “I have only been commanded to worship God, and to not ascribe partners unto Him. Unto Him do I call and unto Him is my return.”

36 The Book here is the Quran (Ni), and those who rejoice (cf. 3:173; 5:83; 8:2; 9:124; 17:109; 39:23; 47:17) are the Prophet’s Companions and those who believe in him (Ṭs). That which has been sent down unto thee refers to the Divine injunctions and the different forms of knowledge that have been given to the Prophet (Ni). Such people contrast starkly with those who rejoice in the life of the world (v. 26). Those who reject some of it is in reference to the Jews and the Christians (IK), who accepted those aspects of the Prophet’s teachings that conformed to their laws and beliefs, such as their sacred history and some legal injunctions, but rejected what was specific to Islam, such as the prophethood of Muhammad (Ni).

37 Thus have We sent it down as a Judgment in Arabic. Yet if thou followest their caprices after the knowledge that has come to thee, thou shalt have no protector against God, and no defender.

37 A Judgment in Arabic is said to refer to the entire Quran; that is, it judges between truth and falsehood in the language of the Arabs (Q). Alternately, it can refer to the rulings found in the Quran (Q). This does not, however, mean that the Prophet was only sent to Arabs and those who have learned the Arabic language, to which allusion is made in 34:28: And We sent thee not, save as a bearer of glad tidings and a warner to mankind entire. But most of mankind know not; see also commentary on this verse as well as 4:79; 7:158; 21:107. According to Islamic belief, the Quran was revealed in Arabic, because God chose an Arab as the Messenger through whom to reveal the Quran. That is why 14:4 states, We have sent no messenger, save in the language of his people, that he might make clear unto them. Other verses speak of the Quran as an Arabic Quran (12:2; 20:113; 39:28; 41:3; 42:7; 43:3) and [in a] clear, Arabic tongue (16:103; cf. 26:195; 46:12).

Yet if thou followest their caprices after the knowledge that has come to thee— that is, “If you accept the Makkan idolaters’ caprices in worshipping other than God and turning to a direction other than the Ka’bah” (Q)—thou shalt have no protector against God, and no defender. Al-Qurṭubī notes that although this verse is directly addressed to the Prophet, it is intended for his whole community. For similar verses condemning the following of caprices after the gaining of knowledge, see 2:120, 145; see also 5:48; 42:15; 45:18. Regarding the nature of caprice, see 45:23c.

38 Indeed We sent messengers before thee and appointed for them wives and progeny is meant to be a rebuke of those who objected that the Prophet was a mortal, with human needs (Kl), as in 25:7: And they say, “What ails this Messenger, who eats food and walks in the markets? Why is there not an angel sent down unto him to be a warner with him?” In 40:78 the phrase And it is not for a messenger to bring a sign, save by God’s Leave is repeated verbatim. For every term there is a Book can refer to the fact that God has a fixed term that He has established for every matter that He has determined (M), or to the Quranic theme of the universality of revelation (Bg, Z), for which, see 3:3; 3:19c; 3:85c; 5:48c; 10:47c; 16:36; 22:67; 35:31; 65:12c. See also the essay “The Quranic View of Sacred History and Other Religions.”

③ God effaces what He will and establishes, and with Him is the Mother of the Book.

39 Al-Rāzī explains that God effaces what He will and establishes means that, in accordance with what the Divine Will has decreed, “He brings things into existence at one moment and makes them nonexistent at another; gives life at one moment and causes death at another; bestows riches at one moment and causes poverty at another.” The Mother of the Book (Umm al-kitāb; cf. 3:7; 43:4) refers, according to some, to the fundamental source of Divine Revelation from which the Quran and other Divinely revealed books are transcribed (Ṭ); others identify it with the Preserved Tablet mentioned in 85:22 (see 85:22c; Bg, Kl, R, Z), and still others say it refers to God’s Knowledge (R).

40 Whether We show thee a part of that which We promise them, or We take thee [unto Us], thine is only to proclaim, and Ours is the Reckoning.

40 Whether We show thee a part of that which We promise them, or We take thee [unto Us] is echoed in 10:46 and 40:77 (see also 10:46c). In the Quran the main duty of the prophets is to convey the message they have been given, as in 5:67: O Messenger! Convey that which has been sent down unto thee from thy Lord, and if thou dost not, thou wilt not have conveyed His message (see also 2:272; 3:20; 29:18; 88:21–22). Ours is the Reckoning means, “When they come to Us, We shall recompense them” (JJ); cf. 88:26: Then truly with Us lies their reckoning.

41 Have they not considered how We come upon the land, reducing it of its outlying regions? And God judges; none repeals His Judgment, and He is swift in reckoning.

41 They are the people of Makkah (AF, JJ), and how We come upon the land, reducing it of its outlying regions (cf. 21:44) refers to God’s giving Muhammad victory over the Makkans (JJ; see Sūrah 48) and its environs (AF). From a spiritual perspective, one can say that when God comes upon the land of the heart of the sincere believer, He reduces it of its outlying regions, that is, the believer’s concerns for things other than God. For God as swift in reckoning, see also 2:202; 3:19, 199; 5:4; 14:51; 24:39; 40:17.

④⁴² Indeed those who were before them plotted, but unto God belongs plotting altogether. He knows what every soul earns, and the disbelievers will know whose is the Ultimate Abode.

42 Here unto God belongs plotting altogether, but elsewhere He is referred to as the best of plotters (3:54; 8:30), which conveys the notion that the outcome of all things is under God's control, since His "plot" will always overcome any plots by human beings; cf. see also 7:99; 10:21c; 14:46c; 27:50; 86:15–16. This notion is connected to the broad Quranic theme that all wrongdoings rebound upon those who commit them, as in 35:43: Yet evil plotting besets none but its authors.

The disbelievers will know whose is the Ultimate Abode functions as an elucidation of God's plotting mentioned earlier in the verse (Bḍ). It is also a way of putting fear in the hearts of the disbelievers, since it implies that, although they are ignorant right now of the end of affairs, in the Hereafter they will come to know who will receive the praiseworthy end (R), namely, Paradise, which is the reward of the Abode (see 13:20–22c). In other words, whose is the Ultimate Abode will be made clear to the disbelievers when they meet God on the Day of Judgment and they are cast in Hell, and the believers enter Heaven (Ṭ).

④⁴³ And those who disbelieve say, "You have not been sent." Say, "God and whosoever possesses knowledge of the Book suffices as a witness between you and me."

43 Whosoever possesses knowledge of the Book (cf. 27:40) refers either to those who know the Quran and its inimitable nature (Aj, Bḍ), or to the Madinan Jewish convert to Islam ʿAbd Allāh ibn Salām and other Jewish and Christian converts who are said to have known about the Prophet Muhammad based on references in the Torah and the Gospel (see 46:10c; Aj). According to Shiite scholars, whosoever possesses knowledge of the Book refers to the Shiite Imams (aʿimmat āl Muḥammad; Ṭū) generally and/or to ʿAlī ibn Abī Ṭālib specifically (Qm).

Abraham

Ibrāhīm

Ibrāhīm is the fifth in a series of six *sūrah*s whose opening verses include the letters alif, lām, and rā', and which speak of the Book. It is said to have been revealed in Makkah, with the exception of vv. 28–29, which belong to the Madinan period, as these two verses are usually considered to refer to the Battle of Badr (My). This sūrah takes its name from the mention of an episode in the life of Abraham (vv. 35–41) in which he prays for the security of Makkah, protection from idolatry for himself and his children, prosperity for his progeny, and forgiveness for his parents and all believers on the Last Day.

Among the key themes of this sūrah is the stark difference between gratitude and ingratitude for God's Blessings (see vv. 5, 7–8, 28, 32–34, 37), the importance of patience (vv. 5, 12) and trust in God (vv. 11–12), and the terrible nature of God's Chastisement, whether in this world or in the next (vv. 16–17, 29–31, 42–44, 48–50). Another important teaching to be found throughout this sūrah is that those who prefer the life of this world over the Hereafter will end up as losers in the next life. Such people are typified by those who reject God's messengers (vv. 3, 9–10, 28–30), are ungrateful to God for the many blessings that He has given to them (vv. 17–18), take partners alongside God (v. 30), and succumb to Satan's false promises (v. 22). The sūrah also emphasizes the importance of prophecy as a means of guiding people out of darkness into light (vv. 1, 5), but notes that whether they are guided or not is ultimately in God's Hands (vv. 4, 21, 27, 37).

In the Name of God, the Compassionate, the Merciful

① Alif. Lām. Rā. [This is] a Book that We have sent down unto thee, that thou mightest bring forth mankind out of darkness into light, by the leave of their Lord, unto the path of the Mighty, the Praised— ② God, unto Whom belongs whatsoever is in the heavens and whatsoever is on the earth. Woe unto the disbelievers for a severe punishment. ③ Those who prefer the life of this world over the Hereafter, and who turn from the way of God and seek to make it crooked; it is they who are far astray. ④ And We have sent no messenger, save in the language of his people, that he might make clear unto them. Then God leads astray whomsoever He will and guides whomsoever He will. And He is the Mighty, the Wise. ⑤ We indeed sent Moses with Our signs, “Bring thy people out of darkness into light, and remind them of the Days of God. Truly in that are signs for all who are patient, thankful.” ⑥ And [remember] when Moses said unto his people, “Remember God’s Blessing upon you, when He saved you from the House of Pharaoh, who inflicted terrible punishment upon you, slaying your sons and sparing your women—and in that was a great trial from your Lord— ⑦ and when your Lord proclaimed, ‘If you give thanks, I shall surely grant you increase, but if you are ungrateful, truly My Punishment is severe!’” ⑧ And Moses said, “If you are ungrateful—you and whosoever is on the earth all together—[know that] verily God is Self-Sufficient, Praised.” ⑨ Has not the account come to you of those who came before you—the people of Noah, and [°]Ād, and Thamūd, and those who came after them? None knows them but God. Their messengers brought them clear proofs, but they thrust their hands into their mouths and said, “Verily we disbelieve in that wherewith you have been sent, and we are in grave doubt about that to which you call us.” ⑩ Their messengers said, “Is there any doubt concerning God, the Originator of the heavens and the earth? He calls you that He might forgive some of your sins and grant you reprieve till a term appointed.” They said, “You are but human beings like us. You desire to turn us away from that which our fathers used to worship. So bring us a manifest authority!” ⑪ Their messengers said unto them, “We are but human beings like yourselves, but God is gracious unto whomsoever He will among His servants. And it is not for us to bring you an authority, save by God's Leave; so in God let the believers trust. ¹² And why should we not trust in God, when He has guided us in our ways? And we shall surely endure patiently, however you may torment us. And let those who trust, trust in God." ¹³ But those who disbelieved said to their messengers, "We shall surely expel you from our land, or you shall revert to our creed." So their Lord revealed unto them, "We shall surely destroy the wrongdoers. ¹⁴ And We shall surely make you to dwell in the land after them. This is for those who fear My Station and fear My Threat." ¹⁵ And they sought victory, and every stubborn tyrant fails. ¹⁶ Beyond him lies Hell; and he shall be given to drink of oozing pus, ¹⁷ which he will gulp down, but can scarcely swallow. Death shall come upon him from every side; yet he will not die, and before him lies a grave punishment. ¹⁸ The parable of those who disbelieve in their Lord: their deeds are as ashes that the wind blows hard on a stormy day. They have no power over aught they have earned. That is extreme error. ¹⁹ Hast thou not considered that God created the heavens and the earth in truth? If He wills, He can remove you and bring a new creation, ²⁰ and that is no great matter for God. ²¹ They will appear before God all together, and the weak will say to those who waxed arrogant, "Truly we were your followers; so can you avail us in any way against the Punishment of God?" They will say, "Had God guided us, we would have guided you. It is the same for us whether we are anxious or patient; for us there is no refuge." ²² And Satan will say, when the matter has been decreed, "Verily God made you the Promise of truth; and I made you a promise, but I failed you. And I had no authority over you, save that I called you, and you responded to me. So do not blame me, but blame yourselves. I cannot respond to your cries for help; nor can you respond to my cries for help. Truly I disbelieved in your ascribing me as partner aforetime. As for the wrongdoers, surely theirs shall be a painful punishment." ²³ Those who believe and perform righteous deeds shall be made to enter Gardens with rivers running below, abiding therein by the leave of their Lord. Their greeting therein shall be, "Peace!" ²⁴ Hast thou not considered how God sets forth a parable? A good word is as a good tree: its roots firm and its branches in the sky. ②⑤ It brings forth fruit in every season, by the Leave of its Lord. God sets forth parables for mankind, that haply they may remember. ②⑥ And the parable of a bad word is a bad tree: uprooted from the face of the earth; it has no stability. ②⑦ God makes firm those who believe with firm speech in the life of this world and in the Hereafter. And God leads the wrongdoers astray; God does whatsoever He wills. ②⑧ Hast thou not considered those who exchanged the Blessing of God for ingratitude and caused their people to dwell in the abode of perdition— ②⑨ Hell, wherein they shall burn. What an evil dwelling place! ③① They set up equals unto God, that they might lead astray from His Way. Say, “Enjoy yourselves! For truly your journey is unto the Fire!” ③② Tell My servants who believe to perform the prayer and to spend from that which We have provided them, secretly and openly, before a day comes wherein there shall be neither bargaining nor befriending. ③③ God it is Who created the heavens and the earth, and sent down water from the sky, then brought forth fruits thereby for your provision. He has made the ships subservient unto you, so that they sail upon the sea by His Command, and has made the rivers subservient unto you. ③④ And He has made the sun and the moon subservient unto you, constant, and He made the night and the day subservient unto you. ③⑤ And He gives you something of all that you ask of Him, and were you to count the Blessings of God, you could not number them. Truly mankind is wrongdoing, ungrateful. ③⑥ And [remember] when Abraham said, “My Lord! Make this land secure, and keep me and my children from worshipping idols. ③⑦ My Lord! Surely they have led astray many among mankind. So whosoever follows me, he is of me. And whosoever disobeys me, surely Thou art Forgiving, Merciful. ③⑧ Our Lord! Verily I have settled some of my progeny in a valley without cultivation by Thy Sacred House, our Lord, that they might perform the prayer. So cause the hearts of some men to incline toward them, and provide them with fruits, that haply they may give thanks. ③⑨ Our Lord! Surely Thou knowest what we hide and what we disclose. And naught is hidden from God, on earth or in Heaven. ④① Praise be to God, Who bestowed upon me Ishmael and Isaac, in my old age. Truly my Lord is the Hearer of supplications. ④① My Lord! Make me a performer of prayer, and my progeny. Our Lord! Accept my supplication! ④② Our Lord! Forgive me and my parents and the believers on the Day when the Reckoning is come.” ④③ Do not suppose that God is heedless of the deeds of the wrongdoers; He merely grants them reprieve till a day when eyes will stare, transfixed, ④④ running with necks outstretched and heads upraised, their glance returning not to them, their hearts vacant. ④⑤ And warn mankind of the Day when the punishment shall come upon them, whereupon those who did wrong will say, “Our Lord! Grant us reprieve for a term nigh, that we might respond to Thy Call and follow the messengers.” [It will be said unto them], “Did you not earlier swear that there would be no end for you?” ④⑥ And you settled in the dwellings of those who had wronged themselves, though it was made clear to you how We dealt with them, and We set forth for you the parables. ④⑦ And they devised their plot, but their plot lies with God, though their plotting be such as to move mountains. ④⑧ So do not suppose that He would fail to keep His Promise unto His messengers. Truly God is Mighty, Possessor of Vengeance. ④⑨ On that Day the earth shall be changed into other than the earth, and the heavens [too], and they will appear before God, the One, the Paramount. ④⑩ On that Day thou wilt see the guilty bound together in fetters, ④⑪ their garments made of pitch, and the Fire covering their faces, ④⑫ that God may recompense every soul for that which it has earned; surely God is swift in reckoning. ④⑬ This is a proclamation unto mankind, that they may be warned thereby, and that they may know that He is the One God, and that the possessors of intellect might be reminded.

① Alif. Lām. Rā. [This is] a Book that We have sent down unto thee, that thou mightest bring forth mankind out of darkness into light, by the leave of their Lord, unto the path of the Mighty, the Praised—

1 For the separated letters, see 2:1c. A Book refers to the Quran (Bg, My, T; cf. 13:1). By means of calling people to the Quran (Q), the Prophet brings human beings out of darkness into light, that is, from the darkness of disbelief, ignorance, and doubt to the light of guidance, knowledge, and certainty (My); see also v. 5; 65:11. Elsewhere in the Quran God is the subject of similar phrases in which He is said to bring forth mankind out of darkness into light; see 2:257; 5:16; 33:43; 57:9. By the leave of their Lord refers to God's Kindness in bestowing grace upon people and granting them success in being guided out of darkness into light (T). The path can refer to being led to the light mentioned in this verse (Aj), or to Islam itself (AF). According to the Shiite commentator al-Qummī, the path refers to the leadership of the Twelve Imams. The name Mighty refers to the perfection of God's Power, whereas the name Praised means that God is deserving of praise in all that He does (R); see also 34:6.

② God, unto Whom belongs whatsoever is in the heavens and whatsoever is on the earth. Woe unto the disbelievers for a severe punishment.

2 For unto Whom belongs whatsoever is in the heavens and whatsoever is on the earth, see also 34:1. For a similar verse, namely, Unto Him belongs whatsoever is in the heavens and whatsoever is on the earth, see 2:255; 10:68; 20:6; 22:64. Woe unto the disbelievers for a severe punishment is seen as a threat against those who do not believe in the Book and who are thus not guided by it out of darkness into light (Bd).

3 Those who prefer the life of this world over the Hereafter are those who choose to remain in this life rather than to be in the next life (Ṭs), although this world is the abode of impermanence and the Hereafter is the abode of permanence (Ṭs). Commenting on this verse, Ibn ʿAjībāh says, “Whoever loves something prefers it and pursues it.” From a spiritual point of view, it can be said that the more a person’s heart is attached to this world, the more the spirit is imprisoned by the body and thus is unable to aspire for what lies beyond the realm of physical existence, namely, the Hereafter. In this vein, the Sufi poet Fakhr al-Dīn ʿIrāqī (d. 688/1289) said, “Every heart that prefers the caprice of this world, / Increases in body, but diminishes in spirit” (Dīwān-i ʿIrāqī [Tehran, 1997], 342).

Turn from the way of God (cf. 4:167; 7:45; 9:34; 11:19; 22:25; 47:1, 32, 34) refers to preventing people from having faith (Aj) or turning to the religion of Islam (IH, JJ), and can also mean to turn away oneself; see 47:1c. Seek to make it crooked means seeking to change the way of God through lies, deviation, and falsehood (Ṭ).

④ And We have sent no messenger, save in the language of his people, that he might make clear unto them. Then God leads astray whomsoever He will and guides whomsoever He will. And He is the Mighty, the Wise.

4 Messengers speak the language of the people to whom they are sent and know their idiom (Kl) so that they will be understood (Bg). The Prophet spoke to his people, who were Arabs, in a clear, Arabic tongue (26:195). According to Islamic belief, this does not mean that the Prophet was only sent to Arabs; see 13:37c. For the often repeated assertion that God leads astray whomsoever He will, see 4:88–90c; 4:143c (see also, e.g., 17:97; 18:17; 74:31c). For God’s guiding whomsoever He will, see 10:25c (see also 35:8; 74:31).

⑤ We indeed sent Moses with Our signs, “Bring thy people out of darkness into light, and remind them of the Days of God. Truly in that are signs for all who are patient, thankful.”

⑥ And [remember] when Moses said unto his people, “Remember

God's Blessing upon you, when He saved you from the House of Pharaoh, who inflicted terrible punishment upon you, slaying your sons and sparing your women—and in that was a great trial from your Lord

5–6 For the Quranic account of the story of Moses, see, for example, 2:49–61; 7:103–55; 20:9–97; 26:10–66; 28:3–46; 79:15–25. In Arabic, “days” has different symbolic meanings, one of which is cosmic periods (22:47; see also 7:54c). It can also be used idiomatically to mean blessings (Q), in which case the Days of God can refer to the many blessings that God bestowed upon the Children of Israel, such as His delivering them from bondage in Egypt and saving them from the wrath of Pharaoh and his people (IK, Ṭ). It can also refer to the punishments that God visited upon the disbelievers of previous communities (AF). In that refers to the Days of God (Q), which contain signs for all who are patient, thankful, that is, those who are patient in their obedience to God and thankful for His Blessings (Q). The Prophet is reported to have said, “Faith consists of two halves: one half is patience, and one half is gratitude” (My); he then recited the last part of v. 5: In that are signs for all who are patient, thankful (Q). The words when He saved you from the House of Pharaoh, who inflicted terrible punishment upon you, slaying your sons and sparing your women—and in that was a great trial from your Lord are repeated, almost verbatim, in 2:49. The great trial might be an allusion to the deliverance of Moses and his people from Egypt, since trial can, depending on context, also refer to a blessing (Bḍ); see 2:49c.

7–8 If you give thanks, which is to say, if one is grateful for God's Blessings and acknowledges them (Ṭū), I shall surely grant you increase; in other words, God will increase one in good in this world, in blessings in the next world, or both (Kl).

Ja‘far al-Şādiq is reported to have said, “Whenever God bestows a blessing upon a servant and he acknowledges it with his heart and praises God for it with his tongue, the blessing does not finish except that God commands that the servant receive an increase” (Qm). But if one is ungrateful for what God has bestowed, covers it up, or strives against it (IK), then truly God’s Punishment is severe; that is, the recompense for ingratitude will be God’s Punishment (JJ). For God as Self-Sufficient, Praised, see 2:267; 31:12; 64:6c.

9 Has not the account come to you of those who came before you—the people of Noah, and ‘Ād, and Thamūd, and those who came after them? None knows them but God. Their messengers brought them clear proofs, but they thrust their hands into their mouths and said, “Verily we disbelieve in that wherewith you have been sent, and we are in grave doubt about that to which you call us.”

9 The tribes of ‘Ād and Thamūd are the communities to whom the prophets Hūd and Şāliḥ were sent, respectively. For Thamūd, see 7:73–79; 11:61–68; 26:141–58; 54:23–31; for ‘Ād, see 7:65–72; 11:50–60; 41:15–16. For the story of Noah, see 7:59–64; 10:71–73; 11:25–48; 23:23–30; 26:105–21; 37:75–82; 54:9–15; Sūrah 71. None knows them but God means that no one knows the exact number of communities that came after the people of Noah, the ‘Ād, and the Thamūd except God (R, Ṭ). It can also be an expression used to indicate their vast numbers (Kl), as in 25:38; see also 40:78. Clear proofs here refers to the miracles that the prophets brought (mu‘jizāt; N) that affirmed their prophethood (My). They thrust their hands into their mouths means that they bit their fingers either out of anger on account of their intense enmity, or because they were mocking and needed to withhold their laughter (R). Alternately, their hands can be a reference to the hands of the disbelievers and their mouths can mean the mouths of the messengers (R), in which case it would be read as a metaphor indicating that the disbelievers rejected the teachings of the messengers and attempted to silence them (R).

10 Their messengers said, “Is there any doubt concerning God, the Originator of the heavens and the earth? He calls you that He might forgive some of your sins and grant you reprieve till a term appointed.” They said, “You are but human beings like us. You desire to turn us away from that which our fathers used to worship. So bring us a manifest authority!”

10 In response to the disbelievers’ doubt mentioned at the end of v. 9, the messengers ask whether there is any doubt concerning God, which is to ask if there is any doubt about God’s Being or His Divinity (Kl). What the messengers mention next, namely, the Originator of the heavens and the earth, serves as a reminder of what should dispel this doubt (Kl), alerting the disbelievers to the Origin of all things that exist. He calls you; that is, “He calls you to faith” (Ṭs). Some commentators observe that God will forgive some . . . sins, not all of them, because there are some He will not forgive, such as the sin of ascribing partners unto Him (shirk; Ṭs) and violating the rights of God’s servants (Āl), forgiveness for which is entirely up to the one who has been wronged; on the question of the forgiveness of some or all sins, see 4:48c. Others, however, propose that some, used in this instance as a stylistic feature of classical Arabic rhetoric, actually means “all” (Ṭb). A term appointed refers to death (Q). For other places in which the disbelievers express their astonishment that a human being has come to them with guidance from God, see 6:91; 11:27; 17:94; 21:3; 23:24, 33; 64:6.

11 Their messengers said unto them, “We are but human beings like yourselves, but God is gracious unto whomsoever He will among His servants. And it is not for us to bring you an authority, save by God’s Leave; so in God let the believers trust.

12 And why should we not trust in God, when He has guided us in our ways? And we shall surely endure patiently, however you may torment us. And let those who trust, trust in God.”

11–12 For the prophets’ confirming that they themselves are but human beings like yourselves, see 18:110; 41:6. In the context of v. 11, God is gracious unto whomsoever He wills among His servants refers to God’s bestowal of prophethood (Ṭs, Z) and granting prophets the ability to perform miracles (Ṭs). Why should we not trust in God? is understood to mean, “What is it that we have, if we do not trust in God and entrust our affairs to Him?” or “We have no excuse if we do not . . .” (Ṭs). In God let the believers trust in v. 11 (see also 3:122, 160; 5:11; 9:51; 12:67; 39:38; 58:10; 64:13) introduces the virtue of trust in God (tawakkul), whereas And let those who trust, trust in God (see also 12:67) in v. 12 refers to the need to strive in order to maintain this virtue (R, Z).

⑬ But those who disbelieved said to their messengers, “We shall surely expel you from our land, or you shall revert to our creed.” So their Lord revealed unto them, “We shall surely destroy the wrongdoers.

⑭ And We shall surely make you to dwell in the land after them. This is for those who fear My Station and fear My Threat.”

13–14 For a similar threat issued to the prophet Shu‘ayb by his people, see 7:88; see also 27:56. Although it is the messengers who are mentioned explicitly in this verse, it is possible that both the messengers and their followers are intended here (Bḍ). The second option introduced by the disbelievers, namely, that the messengers revert to their creed, does not imply that the messengers had previously followed their false creed and are now being given the option to return to it. Rather, revert here, in keeping with common Arabic usage, means that the messengers would start to follow that creed (Bḍ, Kl, Z); see also 7:89.

We shall surely destroy the wrongdoers is understood to be a promise from God to the messengers that He will assist them against their enemies (Qu). Regarding God’s promise to help the prophets, see, for example, 37:171–73; 58:21. And We shall surely make you to dwell in the land after them; that is, after God has destroyed the wrongdoers and they have perished (Bg), He will cause the messengers and their followers to inherit their land and homes (N, Qu); see also 7:137. My Station refers to human beings’ standing before God on the Day of Judgment (Aj, R; see also 55:46; 79:40) or to God’s Awareness of all that human beings do, whether in secret or openly (Aj). The expression can also be a reference to the greatness of God’s Majesty and Essence (Aj). My Threat means God’s Punishment in the Hereafter (Bg).

⑮ And they sought victory, and every stubborn tyrant fails.

15 They sought victory; that is, the messengers sought God's Assistance against their enemies (Bđ, Kl, Q, T), as in 7:89, where Shu'ayb says, Our Lord! Decide between us and our people in truth, and Thou art the best of deciders. The phrase every stubborn tyrant fails signifies that God aided and granted success to the messengers, whereas their people who acted haughtily before God and stubbornly rejected the truth were not granted success (Bđ), as the messengers' request for Divine Help was answered and their people were destroyed (Qu).

16 Beyond him lies Hell; and he shall be given to drink of oozing pus, 17 which he will gulp down, but can scarcely swallow. Death shall come upon him from every side; yet he will not die, and before him lies a grave punishment.

16–17 The subject of these verses is every stubborn tyrant mentioned in v. 15 (T). Beyond him lies Hell is understood to mean that after his death he will go to Hell (Q); it can also be read “before him lies Hell,” referring to his state in this world, meaning it is as if Hell is right in front of him and he is on its edge, about to fall into it (Q, Z). The oozing pus that he will be given to drink is a mixture of blood and pus (Bg, T), which oozes from the bodies of the people in Hell (Bg, Z). He will gulp it down because of the liquid's bitterness and heat (Q). He will scarcely swallow the liquid, since he will choke on it. (Bđ). Death shall come upon him from every side; yet he will not die refers to a state of torment in which each part of his body will be affected by the pains and afflictions that bring about death, but they will not lead to death (R), which would be a state of rest from the torment (Bđ).

18 The parable of those who disbelieve in their Lord: their deeds are as ashes that the wind blows hard on a stormy day. They have no power over aught they have earned. That is extreme error.

18 Like ashes blown about by a stormy wind until no trace of them remains, so too are the disbelievers' deeds—because of their disbelief in God, their deeds become nullified and no trace of them remains (R). Yet, there are several ways in which the deeds of those who disbelieve in their Lord can be understood here. Deeds can refer to their good actions, such as giving charity and feeding the hungry; to their evil actions, such as worshipping idols; or to a combination of both good and bad deeds (R). They have no power over aught they have earned means that on the Day of Judgment, the disbelievers will not receive even a trace of heavenly reward for their actions (Bḍ). This is another way of saying that the disbelievers will not benefit even from their good actions (Ṭs). Extreme error refers to the farthest distance from the path of Truth (Bḍ). It also refers to the extreme grief and regret that the disbelievers will experience upon realizing that their deeds have gone to waste (R). For the deeds of the disbelievers being brought to naught, see also, for example, 2:217; 7:147; 18:105.

19 Hast thou not considered that God created the heavens and the earth in truth? If He wills, He can remove you and bring a new creation, 20 and that is no great matter for God.

19–20 God’s creating the heavens and the earth in truth means that He did not create them falsely or in vain; rather, He created them for an exalted purpose (My); see also 6:73c.; 64:3c. This part of the verse complements 23:115: Did you suppose, then, that We created you frivolously, and that you would not be returned unto Us? The words He can remove you and bring a new creation mean that God can make the present creation nonexistent and bring about another creation in its place if He so wills, because He is the Creator of the heavens and the earth (Bḍ); see also 4:133; 6:133; 35:16; 47:38; 5:54c. And that is no great matter for God means that it is not difficult or impossible for God to bring about a new creation (Bḍ). Rather, it is easy for Him, since He is All-Powerful by nature (Bḍ, My).

21 They will appear before God all together, and the weak will say to those who waxed arrogant, “Truly we were your followers; so can you avail us in any way against the Punishment of God?” They will say, “Had God guided us, we would have guided you. It is the same for us whether we are anxious or patient; for us there is no refuge.”

21 People will appear before God all together on the Day of Judgment, when they come forth from their graves (Q, Ṭū). The weak represent those who were the followers of those who waxed arrogant, that is, their leaders (Q). The latter inform the former, in response to their request for help in averting God’s Punishment, Had God guided us, we would have guided you, which is to say that had those who waxed arrogant been guided to faith in God, they would have guided their followers (Q). But since they had not been guided, they tell their followers that for them too there is no refuge, meaning that they have no way to distance themselves from the Fire (Q). In other words, just as they were unable to guide their followers without themselves being guided, so too are they now unable to save them from the Fire if they themselves are not saved from it. This verse seems to provide a wider context for 40:47–48: And when they are arguing with one another in the Fire, the weak will say to those who waxed arrogant, “Truly we were your followers; so can you avail us against any portion of the Fire?” Those who waxed arrogant will say, “Truly we are all in it. God has indeed judged between His servants.”

22 And Satan will say, when the matter has been decreed, “Verily God made you the Promise of truth; and I made you a promise, but I failed you. And I had no authority over you, save that I called you, and you responded to me. So do not blame me, but blame yourselves. I cannot respond to your cries for help; nor can you respond to my cries for help. Truly I disbelieved in your ascribing me as partner aforetime. As for the wrongdoers, surely theirs shall be a painful punishment.”

22 When the matter has been decreed refers to the Hereafter, after people have taken their places of residency in Heaven or Hell, respectively (Bg, Kl). The Promise that God made here refers to the Resurrection and the meting out of rewards on the Last Day, whereas Satan’s promise, which failed—taken to mean that he lied (Ṭs)—refers to his promise to God’s servants that the Resurrection and accounting on the Last Day are untrue, and that if these are realities, then the idols shall act as their intercessors (Bḍ). But Satan’s promises are false, as attested by 4:120: He makes them promises and stirs in them desires, but Satan promises naught but delusion. In the Islamic tradition, although there are demonic forces within and external to the self that can prompt one to do evil, they cannot compel one to do evil. Thus, Satan can only lead God’s servants astray by inciting them to evil actions by means of whispering or suggesting evil (see 4:119; 114:4c). This explains why he says to his followers, I had no authority over you, save that I called you, and you responded to me, which al-Ṭabrisī takes to mean, “I had no power to force or compel you to disbelieve and disobey—I only had the means of whispering and calling.” Listening to Satan’s suggestions in no way exonerates one from the responsibility for one’s actions, which is why Satan says, Do not blame me, but blame yourselves. In other words, they did not have firm proof or evidence to disobey God and follow Satan (Ṭs), especially since they had been shown the truth by God’s messengers (IK). I cannot respond to your cries for help; nor can you respond to my cries for help (see also 8:48; 59:16), which is to say that Satan cannot benefit or save in any manner those who succumbed to his whisperings (IK), since individuals will only be taken to task for their own wrong actions (AF) and their own choice to heed or not heed Satan’s call; for the Quranic theme of personal accountability for one’s actions, see 74:38. Satan’s statement, I disbelieved in your ascribing me as partner aforeside, refers to his rejection even before the Day of Judgment, in the life of this world, of his being taken as a partner alongside God (Āl). Alternately, aforeside can refer to the time when Satan was commanded to bow before Adam but refused to do so on account of his pride (Ṭs; see 7:12), in which case the verse would be read, “I disbelieved in that which you ascribed to me as a partner,” meaning that Satan had already rejected God (R).

②③ Those who believe and perform righteous deeds shall be made to enter Gardens with rivers running below, abiding therein by the leave of their Lord. Their greeting therein shall be, “Peace!”

23 For the greeting of Peace! in Paradise, see 10:10c; 33:44; 36:58; 39:73. For Paradise as the Abode of Peace, see 10:25c; 19:62; 56:26.

②④ Hast thou not considered how God sets forth a parable? A good word is as a good tree: its roots firm and its branches in the sky.

②⑤ It brings forth fruit in every season, by the Leave of its Lord. God sets forth parables for mankind, that haply they may remember.

24–25 A good word is understood to refer here to the formula of the shahādah, “There is no god but God” (Q), and a good tree can be a reference to the date palm (Kl). In a famous report narrated by ʿAbd Allāh ibn ʿUmar, the son of the second Caliph ʿUmar ibn al-Khaṭṭāb, the Prophet asked his Companions if they knew what kind of tree was being referred to in this verse. Ibn ʿUmar knew the answer, but was too shy to speak in front of his elders. Then the Prophet revealed the answer, and it was just as Ibn ʿUmar had thought: it was a date palm.

Like the date palm, which is firmly rooted in the earth, so too is the meaning of the shahādah (“There is no god but God”) firmly rooted in the hearts of the people of Divine Unity (Aj). Al-Rāzī refers to this same reality by saying that when the tree of knowledge is firmly rooted in the land of one’s heart, one becomes stronger and more complete, thereby enabling “fruit” to issue forth from its “branches” in abundance. This tree of knowledge, which is rooted in the land of one’s heart, thus has “branches” that are in the sky; that is, it has forms of knowledge that reach the Divine realm (R). This tree thus brings forth fruit in every season, which is to say that the soul of a person who is firmly rooted in knowledge develops a spiritual disposition through which it produces “fruit” perpetually in the form of beautiful words, righteous actions, a state of humility, self-effacement, weeping, and lowliness (R).

26 And the parable of a bad word is a bad tree: uprooted from the face of the earth; it has no stability.

26 A bad word is usually understood to mean a statement of disbelief in God (Kl), which is the opposite of the shahādah symbolically represented as a good tree in v. 24. More specifically, a bad tree is usually understood to be a reference to a ḥanzalah tree, which is easily uprooted from the face of the earth, because its roots are shallow, close to the surface of the earth (Aj). It thus provides no stability and is therefore the opposite of the date palm, which is firmly fixed in its place, with deep roots (Kl).

27 God makes firm those who believe with firm speech in the life of this world and in the Hereafter. And God leads the wrongdoers astray; God does whatsoever He wills.

27 The firm speech mentioned here can be interpreted to mean the full form of the shahādah formula, “There is no god but God, and Muhammad is the Messenger of God” (N), which makes the believers firm by protecting their faith from the trials of this world (Bḍ), while in the Hereafter it makes them firm from the moment when the angels Munkar and Nakīr visit them in the grave and ask them the questions, “Who is your Lord?” and “Who is your prophet?” (Bḍ, Q). On the subject of God’s leading astray, see 4:88–90c; 4:143c; see also 17:97; 18:17; 74:31c.

28 Hast thou not considered those who exchanged the Blessing of God for ingratitude and caused their people to dwell in the abode of perdition—

29 Hell, wherein they shall burn. What an evil dwelling place!

28–29 Those who exchanged the Blessing of God refers to those who exchanged being grateful on account of God’s Blessings (JJ) for ingratitude. It is said that the reference here is particularly to the disbelievers among the Quraysh (Bg, JJ), although it can also have a general application. According to the former reading, the Blessing of God refers to the Prophet Muhammad (Bg), and caused their people to dwell in the abode of perdition refers to the defeat that the Quraysh suffered at the Battle of Badr (IK) or to the destruction they brought upon their own people in general (JJ). Others see the abode of perdition as related to the mention of Hell in v. 29 (N).

30 They set up equals unto God, that they might lead astray from His Way. Say, “Enjoy yourselves! For truly your journey is unto the Fire!”

30 That they might lead astray from His Way does not mean that the reason people set up equals unto God is so that they can misguide or lead others astray. Rather, it means that misguidance and leading astray are the result of their setting up equals alongside God and thus are tantamount to such a purpose (Bḍ); see also 39:8. Enjoy yourselves! is ironic because it encourages them to persist in their incorrect ways, although the net result will be the opposite of enjoyment, since their journey is unto the Fire; cf. 16:55; 30:34c; 39:8.

31 Tell My servants who believe to perform the prayer and to spend from that which We have provided them, secretly and openly, before a day comes wherein there shall be neither bargaining nor befriending.

31 A day . . . wherein there shall be neither bargaining nor befriending refers to the Day of Judgment, when the ability to negotiate and appeal to friends for help will be of no avail; see the commentary on the almost identical phrase in 2:254: O you who believe! Spend from that which We have provided you before a day comes wherein there shall be neither bargaining, nor friendship, nor intercession. And the disbelievers, they are the wrongdoers; cf. 40:18; 43:67; 44:41; 70:10.

32 God it is Who created the heavens and the earth, and sent down water from the sky, then brought forth fruits thereby for your provision. He has made the ships subservient unto you, so that they sail upon the sea by His Command, and has made the rivers subservient unto you.

33 And He has made the sun and the moon subservient unto you, constant, and He made the night and the day subservient unto you.

32–33 These verses convey the notion, found elsewhere in the Quran (2:29; 16:5–8, 10–16), that the beings of the natural world have been made subservient (taskhīr) to human beings; that is, God has put the world of nature at their service in order to help them fulfill various needs and achieve certain goals in life; see also 16:12c. Although people have nature at their disposal, they are not without responsibility toward it. They are to be its humble custodians, not its tyrannical controllers (cf. 30:4), since God has appointed human beings as vicegerents upon the earth (6:165).

Parallel with the idea that all things in the cosmic order have been made subservient to human beings, it can be said that all elements within human beings are made subservient to God. In Islamic anthropology and psychology, the heart is identified as the seat of human beings' consciousness and knowledge; in other words, it is not only the center, but also the "totality" of his being. This is why Ja'far al-Ṣādiq said that God has made the heart of the believer "subservient to love for, and knowledge of, Him” (Su). So subservient to God is the heart of the sincere believer that the Prophet is reported to have said, “The heart of the believer is the Throne of the All-Merciful (‘arsh al-Raḥmān).”

34 And He gives you something of all that you ask of Him, and were you to count the Blessings of God, you could not number them. Truly mankind is wrongdoing, ungrateful.

34 And He gives you something of all that you ask of Him can be read to mean that God gives people something of all that they ask for with their tongues, or of what they ask for by being in a state of need without actually articulating it verbally (Bḍ). Because of the possible meanings of the article mā, some read this to mean, “He gives you of that which you do not ask of Him,” referring to blessings such as the sun and the moon (Q). The Prophet is reported to have said that God will grant one’s legitimate requests (i.e., requests that do not involve sin or the severance of family ties) in one of these ways: “Either his request will be granted to him [in this world], or God will store it away for him for the Hereafter, or He will divert from him an evil equivalent to the request.”

Not only are people unable to count the Blessings of God, they are also unable to thank Him for all of them (Bg; see also 16:18). For human beings as being ungrateful, see 2:243; 10:60; 12:38; 17:67, 69; 22:66; 25:50; 27:73; 40:61; 42:48. Truly mankind is wrongdoing, ungrateful is complemented by the last part of 33:72: Truly he has proved himself an ignorant wrongdoer; see 33:72c.

35 And [remember] when Abraham said, “My Lord! Make this land secure, and keep me and my children from worshipping idols.

35 It is said that when Hagar gave birth to Ishmael, Sarah became jealous of her; so Abraham took Hagar and Ishmael from Syria to Makkah. This land therefore refers to Makkah (Q). Some commentators see the answer to Abraham’s prayer that Makkah be made secure in the wording of 29:67: Or have they not considered that We have made a secure sanctuary while people are snatched away all around them? (IK). When Abraham says, Keep me and my children from worshipping idols, he is saying, “Make me and my children totally distant from idol worship” (T). For another aspect of Abraham's prayer at Makkah, see commentary on 2:126–29.

36 My Lord! Surely they have led astray many among mankind. So whosoever follows me, he is of me. And whosoever disobeys me, surely Thou art Forgiving, Merciful.

36 Surely they have led astray many among mankind is a figurative expression used to indicate the manner in which people have been misguided in their service to lifeless idols (Q); see also 71:24. So whosoever follows me, he is of me; that is, whoever follows Abraham in believing in God's Oneness belongs to his monotheistic creed (Q). And whosoever disobeys me, surely Thou art Forgiving, Merciful refers to the teaching that any sin will be forgiven by God except for the ascription of partners unto Him (Bg, IJ, Q), as in 4:48: Truly God forgives not that any partner be ascribed unto Him, but He forgives what is less than that for whomsoever He will, for whosoever ascribes partners unto God has surely fabricated a tremendous sin (see also v. 10c; 4:48c, 116). Alternately, this part of the verse can also include the sin of ascribing partners unto God, which, according to some commentators, would then pertain to the time before God informed Abraham that He does not forgive people for ascribing partners unto Him (Bg, IJ, Q).

37 Our Lord! Verily I have settled some of my progeny in a valley without cultivation by Thy Sacred House, our Lord, that they might perform the prayer. So cause the hearts of some men to incline toward them, and provide them with fruits, that haply they may give thanks.

37 Some of my progeny can be a reference to Abraham's son Ishmael (Kl) or to Ishmael and his mother, Hagar (Q). A valley without cultivation is a reference to Makkah (Kl), and Thy Sacred House is the Ka'bah. Prayer here is said to denote "religion" in its entirety, in light of prayer's superior rank in religion (Q). That they might perform the prayer would therefore mean something like "so that they may uphold religion" (see also 42:13).

Although Makkah did not have date trees, Abraham's prayer to God to provide Hagar and Ishmael with fruits was answered, since fruits came to Makkah from many outlying regions (IK). According to some commentators, Abraham's prayer was answered by the bestowal of abundant date palms upon the town of Ṭāʿif (JJ), a neighboring region that had a great deal of historical and commercial contact with Makkah.

38 Our Lord! Surely Thou knowest what we hide and what we disclose. And naught is hidden from God, on earth or in Heaven.

38 Surely Thou knowest what we hide and what we disclose (see also 3:29) means that God knows more about what will benefit human beings than they do themselves, and He is more merciful to them than they are to themselves (Bd). Despite this fact, human beings must still beseech God, so that they may manifest their state of servanthood to Him and their need for His Mercy, and because it hastens the Divine Response to their needs (Bd).

39 Praise be to God, Who bestowed upon me Ishmael and Isaac, in my old age. Truly my Lord is the Hearer of supplications.

39 Here Abraham thanks God for giving him Ishmael through Hagar and Isaac through Sarah, despite the fact that he was advanced in years when he had both children. For the glad tidings of the birth of Isaac given to Abraham and Sarah, who was also in her old age, see 11:71–74; 51:28–29.

40 My Lord! Make me a performer of prayer, and my progeny. Our Lord! Accept my supplication!

40 A performer of prayer can refer to one who is firm in religion (Q) or to one who is persistent in the actual act of prayer (Bd). Our Lord! Accept my supplication! may be a request on the part of Abraham that God accept his worship in general or his supplication as mentioned in this verse in particular (Bd).

④① Our Lord! Forgive me and my parents and the believers on the Day when the Reckoning is come.”

41 Abraham’s supplication for the forgiveness of his parents is seen as a request to God that He forgive them on the condition that they submit to Him and believe in Him (Kl); on Abraham’s prayer of forgiveness, see also 19:47 and 9:114: Abraham’s plea for forgiveness of his father was only due to a promise he had made to him. But when it became clear to him that he was an enemy of God, he repudiated him; see 9:113–14c. Alternately, it is said that Abraham made the supplication for his parents before coming to know that his father was an enemy of God (Kl), or that both his parents were enemies of God (JJ). An alternate reading of this verse has “my father” instead of “my parents” (JJ). For Abraham’s father, Azar, see 6:74c.

④② Do not suppose that God is heedless of the deeds of the wrongdoers; He merely grants them reprieve till a day when eyes will stare, transfixed, ④③ running with necks outstretched and heads upraised, their glance returning not to them, their hearts vacant.

42–43 Do not suppose that God is heedless of the deeds of the wrongdoers is understood to be an admonition that God will exact vengeance upon the wrongdoers for their unjust actions. Some argue that if God were not to do so, it would mean that He is ignorant of their injustices, or is incapable of exacting vengeance upon them, or is pleased by their injustices. Since ignorance, incapacity, or pleasure in seeing injustice do not apply to God, it is considered impossible that He not take the wrongdoers to task for their wrong actions (R). He merely grants them reprieve from punishment (N) till a day when eyes will stare, transfixed, that is, when eyeballs come out of their sockets on account of the terrors that will be seen on the Last Day (N); for God’s granting reprieve until an appointed term, see 16:61; 35:45c. That Day, people will be running with necks outstretched, in a state of humiliation and defeat, like slaves (Aj); with heads upraised, out of intense fear or because of the chains around their necks (see also 36:8; Aj); their glance returning not to them, since they will not be able to look at themselves because of their extreme terror (Aj) or because the chains around their necks will prevent this; and their hearts vacant, bereft of any kind of understanding they will be so consumed by their stupor (Bḍ).

44 And warn mankind of the Day when the punishment shall come upon them, whereupon those who did wrong will say, “Our Lord! Grant us reprieve for a term nigh, that we might respond to Thy Call and follow the messengers.” [It will be said unto them], “Did you not earlier swear that there would be no end for you?”

44 The reference here is to the Day of Judgment (Bg, Kl, Q). According to Ibn ʿAbbās, by mankind is meant the Makkan idolaters specifically (Q). The period of reprieve they will ask for when they see the punishment—that is, when the truth is made manifest to them in the Hereafter (Q)—is also mentioned in 6:27–28: If thou couldst see when they are arraigned before the Fire, whereupon they will say, “Would that we were sent back! Then we would not deny the signs of our Lord, but we would be among the believers!” Nay, but it has now become clear to them what they used to hide; cf. 32:12; 40:49–50. Yet this is a futile request, since 6:28 maintains that even if they were returned to their life on earth to mend their ways, they would return to the very thing they had been forbidden. Truly they are liars; see also 6:27–28c.

The end that the Makkan idolaters swore would not come to them is their going from the life of this world to the Hereafter and the punishment in the Hereafter itself (Q). Many commentators connect the last part of this verse, Did you not earlier swear that there would be no end for you? with the Makkan idolaters’ statement mentioned at 16:38: And they swear by God their most solemn oaths [that] God will not resurrect those who die (Bḍ, IK, Q, Z).

45 And you settled in the dwellings of those who had wronged themselves, though it was made clear to you how We dealt with them, and We set forth for you the parables.

45 You settled in the dwellings of those who had wronged themselves, which is to say that the people of Makkah had settled in a land that had previously been inhabited by groups who rejected the prophets sent to them, such as the tribes of ʿĀd and Thamūd (Bḍ, Q). Though it was made clear to you how We dealt with them means that the Makkans could still witness the vestiges of the destroyed peoples by looking at the ruins of their dwellings and hearing the stories about them that were passed down from generation to generation (Bḍ). We set forth for you the parables; that is, in the Quran God shows that the Makkans were like these previous nations in their disbelief, and were likewise worthy of being punished (Bḍ, Q).

④⑥ And they devised their plot, but their plot lies with God, though their plotting be such as to move mountains.

46 Their plot lies with God, which is to say that God knows either their plot (R) or the recompense for it (Kl); see also 7:99; 10:21c; 13:42c; 27:50; 86:15–16. Many commentators note that though their plotting be such as to move mountains implies that no plot, no matter how great—even as great in scope as a mountain—can overcome the Will of God (Z). Mountains are also understood as a reference to God’s signs, the Sacred Law, and prophecy (Kl, Z), since, like mountains, they are fixed and firmly rooted (Kl; cf. vv. 24–25). In other words, no matter how hard the disbelievers attempt to alter the truth, they will be unable to do so.

④⑦ So do not suppose that He would fail to keep His Promise unto His messengers. Truly God is Mighty, Possessor of Vengeance.

47 This verse represents the one instance in the Quran that employs an active participle (mukhlif, lit. “one who breaks [a promise]”) to refer to a quality that one should never suppose of God, thus conveying the idea that God’s Promise is always true; cf. 4:122. The sense here is that one should never deem God to be “a breaker of His Promise” and thus this is an emphatic statement indicating that not breaking a promise is intrinsic to the Divine Nature; cf. 3:9: Truly God will not fail the trust.

④⑧ On that Day the earth shall be changed into other than the earth, and the heavens [too], and they will appear before God, the One, the Paramount.

48 This verse refers in general terms to the overturning of the entire cosmic order on the Last Day; for specific descriptions elsewhere in the Quran, see *Sūrah*s 81–83. Some maintain that the change that will take place when the earth shall be changed into other than the earth, and the heavens [too] pertains only to the different attributes that comprise the earth and the heavens, but that their fundamental substance will remain unaltered; others, however, maintain that the change in the attributes of the earth and the heavens will be so total that they will literally become something else in their substance (R). They will appear before God, the One, the Paramount refers to the Resurrection, when all people will be driven from their graves (Bg, JJ) and brought face-to-face with God, their Lord and Master (see also 36:51; 40:16).

49 On that Day thou wilt see the guilty bound together in fetters,

50 their garments made of pitch, and the Fire covering their faces, 49–50 The guilty is a reference to the disbelievers (JJ). Their being bound together in fetters is also mentioned in 38:38 (cf. 25:13). Their garments—that is, their shirts (JJ)—will be made of pitch, which signifies the extreme degree to which they will be scorched in the Fire (Bd, JJ, Ṭs).

51 that God may recompense every soul for that which it has earned; surely God is swift in reckoning.

51 This verse reiterates a Quranic theme that people will only receive what they deserve in the Hereafter, as God is in no way unjust to His servants; see 4:40; 10:4c. For God as swift in reckoning, see 2:202; 3:19, 199; 5:4; 24:39; 40:17.

52 This is a proclamation unto mankind, that they may be warned thereby, and that they may know that He is the One God, and that the possessors of intellect might be reminded.

52 The proclamation unto mankind by which they may be warned is the Quran; it is an admonishment meant to instill fear of God's Punishment in people (Q). At the same time, people are meant to reflect deeply and ponder over the Quran's verses in order to understand the fact that He is the One God (Bđ, Bg). This awareness will then cause them to worship Him truly and turn away from every kind of false god, such as the passing attractions of this world, their own caprices, or Satan (IH). Whoever takes heed is therefore saved (Qu). For the possessors of intellect, see 5:100c; 2:269; 3:7, 190; 12:111; 13:19; 38:29, 43; 39:9, 18, 21; 40:54.

Ḥijr

Al-Ḥijr is the last in a series of six *sūrah*s whose opening verses include the letters alif, lām, and rāʾ, and which speak of the Book. Like the previous five *sūrah*s in this series, it belongs to the Makkan period (JJ) and seeks to address the Makkan idolaters' negative reactions to the Prophet's message. The sūrah begins with a discussion of the inevitability of God's Punishment and the inescapability of His Decree, after whose declaration it will be too late to submit to God or defer His Chastisement (vv. 2–5). It then offers responses to the Makkan idolaters' challenge that the Prophet bring angels to them (vv. 7–8) and reminds them that nothing the Prophet brings them would cause them to gain faith and believe (vv. 14–15).

The sūrah also seeks to console the Prophet in light of the insults and mockery (v. 7) he received from the Makkan idolaters (vv. 95–97), reminding him that this was a common phenomenon among prophets (v. 11). The rebelliousness of the Makkan idolaters in face of the truth is then juxtaposed with the refusal of Iblīs to bow before Adam when Adam was created by God (vv. 28–43). The sūrah goes on to recount the stories of the prophets Abraham (vv. 51–60), Lot (vv. 61–77), and Shuʿayb (vv. 78–79). The account of the inhabitants of al-Ḥijr (vv. 80–84), the community to whom the Prophet Ṣāliḥ had been sent, then follows. They bear this name because they inhabited a rocky plain (ḥijr, from which the sūrah derives its title). The sūrah ends by encouraging the Prophet to have forbearance, to worship, to be resolute in spreading the message, and to not grieve over his people's rejection of it (vv. 88–99).

① Alif. Lām. Rā. These are the signs of the Book and a clear Quran. ② It may be that those who disbelieve will wish that they had submitted. ③ Leave them to eat and enjoy themselves and to be beguiled by hopes, for soon they will know. ④ Never did We destroy a town, but that it had a known decree. ⑤ No community can hasten its term, nor delay it. ⑥ And they say, “O you unto whom the Reminder has been sent down, truly you are possessed. ⑦ Why do you not bring us the angels, if you are among the truthful?” ⑧ We do not send down the angels, save in truth, and were We to do so, they would be granted no respite. ⑨ Truly it is We Who have sent down the Reminder, and surely We are its Preserver. ⑩ We indeed sent [messengers] before thee to communities among those of old. ⑪ And never did a messenger come unto them, but that they mocked him. ⑫ Thus do We place it into the hearts of the guilty. ⑬ They believe not in it, though the wont of those of old has already passed away. ⑭ Were We to open for them a gate unto Heaven, that they might continue to ascend through it, ⑮ they would say, “Our eyes are merely spellbound. Nay, we are a people bewitched!” ⑯ We have set constellations in the sky, and We have adorned them for the onlookers. ⑰ And We have preserved them from every satan outcast, ⑱ save he who gains a hearing by stealth, and then a manifest flaming star pursues him. ⑲ And the earth We spread out, and cast therein firm mountains, and We caused to grow therein all manner of things in due balance. ⑳ And We placed therein means of livelihood for you and for those for whom you provide not. ㉑ Naught is there, but that its treasures lie with Us, and We do not send it down, save in a known measure. ㉒ And We sent forth the winds, fertilizing. And We sent down water from the sky, providing you with sufficient drink thereby, and you are not the keepers of its stores. ㉓ Surely it is We Who give life and cause death, and We are the Inheritor. ㉔ We indeed know those among you who advance, and We indeed know those who lag behind, ㉕ and verily it is thy Lord who will gather them.

Truly He is Wise, Knowing. 26 And We indeed created man from dried clay, made of molded mud, 27 and the jinn We created earlier from scorching fire. 28 And [remember] when thy Lord said unto the angels, “Behold! I am creating a human being from dried clay, made of molded mud; 29 so when I have proportioned him and breathed into him of My Spirit, fall down before him prostrating.” 30 Thereupon the angels prostrated, all of them together, 31 save Iblīs. He refused to be with those who prostrated. 32 He said, “O Iblīs! What ails you that you are not with those who prostrate?” 33 He said, “I am not one to prostrate to a human being whom Thou hast created from dried clay, made of molded mud.” 34 He said, “Go forth from it! Surely thou art outcast, 35 and surely the curse shall be upon thee till the Day of Judgment!” 36 He said, “My Lord! Grant me respite till the Day they are resurrected.” 37 He said, “Then verily thou art among those granted respite 38 till the Day of the Moment Known.” 39 He said, “My Lord! Since Thou hast caused me to err, I shall surely make things seem fair unto them on earth, and I shall cause them to err all together, 40 save Thy sincere servants among them.” 41 He said, “This is a straight path unto Me. 42 As for My servants, truly thou hast no authority over them, save for those in error who follow thee. 43 And verily Hell shall be their tryst, all together.” 44 Seven gates it has, and for each gate is appointed a separate portion of them. 45 Truly the reverent shall be amidst gardens and springs: 46 “Enter them in peace, secure”— 47 We shall remove whatever rancor lies within their breasts—“as brothers, upon couches, facing one another.” 48 No weariness shall befall them therein; nor shall they be expelled therefrom. 49 Tell My servants that I am indeed the Forgiving, the Merciful, 50 and that My Punishment is the painful punishment. 51 And tell them of the guests of Abraham, 52 when they entered upon him and said, “Peace!” He said, “Verily of you we are afraid.” 53 They said, “Be not afraid. Truly we bring thee glad tidings of a knowing son.” 54 He said, “Do you bring me glad tidings when old age has befallen me? So of what do you bring me glad tidings?” 55 They said, “We bring thee glad tidings in truth; so be not among those who despair.” 56 He said, “Who despairs of the Mercy of his Lord, save those who are astray?” 57 He said, “What is your errand, O messengers?” 58 They said, “We have been sent unto a guilty people, 59 save for the family of Lot. We shall surely save them, all together, 60 except for his wife; We have determined that she is indeed among those who lagged behind.” 61 So when the messengers came to the family of Lot, 62 he said, “Verily you are an unfamiliar folk.” 63 They said, “Nay, but we bring thee that which they used to doubt. 64 And we bring thee the truth, and surely we are truthful. 65 So set out with thy family during the night, and follow behind them, and let not any of you turn around, but go forth wheresoever you are commanded.” 66 And We decreed this matter unto him: that the last remnant of those people will be rooted out in the morning. 67 And the people of the city came, rejoicing. 68 He said, “Truly these are my guests; so dishonor me not! 69 Reverence God, and disgrace me not.” 70 They said, “Did we not forbid you from [providing protection] to all the people?” 71 He said, “These are my daughters, if you must act.” 72 By thy life, they wandered confused in their drunkenness. 73 So the Cry seized them at sunrise, 74 then We made its uppermost to be its lowermost, and We rained down upon them stones of baked clay. 75 Truly in that are signs for those who discern, 76 and verily they are on a path still standing. 77 Truly in that is a sign for the believers. 78 And verily the inhabitants of the thicket were wrongdoers. 79 So We took vengeance upon them. Truly the two of them are on a clear road. 80 And indeed the inhabitants of al-Hijr denied the messengers. 81 And We gave them Our signs, but they used to turn away therefrom. 82 And they would hew dwellings in the mountains, [feeling] secure. 83 Yet the Cry seized them in the morning, 84 and that which they used to earn availed them not. 85 And We did not create the heavens and the earth and whatsoever is between them, save in truth. And surely the Hour is coming; so forbear with beautiful forbearance. 86 Truly thy Lord is the knowing Creator. 87 And We have indeed given thee the seven oft-repeated, and the Mighty Quran. 88 Strain not thine eyes toward the enjoyments We have bestowed upon certain classes of them, and grieve not for them, and lower thy wing unto the believers, 89 and say, “Truly I am the clear warner.” 90 Such as We have sent down for those who make division, 91 who made the Quran into fragments. 92 So by thy Lord, We shall question them all 93 concerning that which they used to do. 94 So proclaim as thou hast been commanded, and turn away from the idolaters. 95 Truly We shall suffice thee against those who mock, 96 those who set up another god along with God; yet soon they will know. 97 And certainly We know that thy breast is straitened because of what they say. 98 So hymn the praise of thy Lord, and be among those who prostrate. 99 And worship thy Lord, till certainty comes unto thee.

① Alif. Lām. Rā. These are the signs of the Book and a clear Quran.

1 The Arabic letters alif, lām, and rā^ʾ, which also appear in 10:1; 11:1; 12:1; 13:1; and 14:1, are among the separated letters (al-muqaṭṭaʿāt) found at the beginning of twenty-nine sūrahs; their true meaning, most commentators maintain, is known ultimately only to God; see 2:1c. The Book and a clear Quran (see also 36:69) may refer to the same reality, either the Quran (Bḍ, R, Z) or this particular sūrah (Bḍ). Others understand the Book to refer to the revelations prior to the Quran, such as the Torah and the Gospel (Q, Ṭ). A clear Quran denotes the Quran's ability to make known with clarity what is true as distinct from what is false (JJ).

③ Leave them to eat and enjoy themselves and to be beguiled by hopes, for soon they will know.

2–3 That the disbelievers will wish that they had submitted is a reference to their state at the time of death or on the Day of Judgment (Kl); see also 4:42; 78:40. The injunction to leave the disbelievers in their state of rebellion is a recurrent theme in the Quran (see also 6:91, 112, 137; 23:54; 43:83; 52:45; 70:42), which is parallel to God's leaving them in this state (cf. 2:15; 6:110; 7:186; 10:11; 27:4). Here they are to be left to eat and enjoy themselves—that is, to be immersed in this worldly life (Bḍ)—and beguiled by hopes, preoccupied with the thought that they will live long lives, while failing to prepare for their final return to God (Bḍ); cf. 31:24: We grant them enjoyment a little; then We compel them toward a grave punishment (see also 3:178; 10:69–70; 16:55; 26:205–7). Being beguiled by one's false hopes is known in Islamic spiritual psychology as the malady of “extended hope” (ṭūl al-amal), which can also be thought of as “overconfidence,” and which ʿAlī ibn Abī Ṭālib says is what causes one to forget about the Hereafter (R). The warning that soon they will know is a theme frequently encountered in the Quran (see 15:96; 29:66; 37:170; 40:70; 43:89). V. 3 is similar to 29:66: So let them be ungrateful for that which We have given them, and let them enjoy themselves, for soon they will know!

4 A known decree refers to the appointed time for the town's destruction as inscribed upon the Preserved Tablet (see 85:22c; Q, Z). This means that God will not destroy a community until its appointed time arrives (Ṭ); cf. 17:15.

⑤ No community can hasten its term, nor delay it.

5 Since the term of each community is fixed, its members cannot do anything to hurry or delay it, as in 7:34: And for every community there is a term appointed. When their term comes, they shall not delay it by a single hour, nor shall they advance it (see also 10:49; 16:61).

⑥ And they say, "O you unto whom the Reminder has been sent down, truly you are possessed."

6 The Reminder here refers to the Quran (JJ; see also v. 9; 7:2c; 16:44; 20:3; 36:11), whereas elsewhere in the Quran the Reminder can also refer to the scriptures preceding the Quran (16:43; 21:2, 7; 40:53). It is reported that the Makkan idolaters heard the Prophet say, "Verily God (Most High) has sent down the Reminder unto me" (R). This then prompted his opponents' reference to him as the one unto whom the Reminder has been sent down. This was not an affirmation of their belief in him as God's Messenger; rather, as al-ṭabrisī notes, it was a way of mocking him. For the accusation that the Prophet was possessed, see 23:70; 34:8; 44:14; 51:39; 68:51. Elsewhere, the Quran states that this charge of being possessed is also leveled against the other prophets by the people to whom they were sent, as in 51:52: Likewise, there came no messenger unto those before them, but that they said, "A sorcerer or one possessed." More specifically, this accusation is also leveled against Moses (26:27) and Noah (54:9).

⑧ We do not send down the angels, save in truth, and were We to do so, they would be granted no respite.

7–8 The pre-Islamic Arabs understood angels to be the “daughters of God” (see 4:117; 16:57–59; 17:40; 37:149–53; 52:39; 53:19–21, 27; commentary on 43:16–17). V. 7 cites the desire to see an angel as one of the many disingenuous requests made by the Makkan idolaters of the Prophet (see 17:92, where they ask the Prophet to bring God and the angels); for more of these kinds of challenges, see 13:31c; 17:90–93c. The demand described in this verse is a variation on a theme related to the Makkans’ asking why an angel was not sent with the Prophet (6:8; 11:12; 21:3; 25:7, 21; 43:53), and why angels were not sent as messengers instead of human beings (see 17:94–95c).

Perhaps in response to their request, the Prophet is told to say in 17:95: Were there angels walking about upon the earth in peace, We would have sent down upon them an angel from Heaven as a messenger. Although they demanded to see the angels as a proof of the Prophet’s truthfulness, this request was motivated by the desire to mock (see v. 6), and they would not necessarily have believed in his message even if angels did come down to them (see 6:111). V. 8 also forms a response to the Makkan idolaters’ challenge, namely, that God will only send the angels in truth—that is, in this case with God’s Punishment (JJ, †)—at which time the disbelievers would be granted no respite from the event, which is to say that they would not be able to delay it (JJ). See also 6:8: Had We sent down an angel, then the matter would be decreed, and they would be granted no respite.

⑨ Truly it is We Who have sent down the Reminder, and surely We are its Preserver.

9 For the Reminder as a reference to the Quran, see v. 6. We are its Preserver, which is one of the Quranic phrases most often quoted by Muslims as proof of the inviolability of the Quranic text, is understood to mean that God will protect the Quran from any alterations or additions to its words, as in 41:42: Falsehood comes not upon it from before it or from behind it; a revelation from One Wise, Praised; and 4:82: Do they not contemplate the Quran? Had it been from other than God, they would surely have found much discrepancy therein (R); see also 18:1; 75:17. Based upon the understanding of this and other verses, Muslims maintain that the Quran is not susceptible to being falsified, owing to the widespread manner in which it has been memorized, studied, and proliferated among believers (R). It is also said that God's Protection of the Quran extends to the miraculous nature of its order, which protects the Quran just as the walls surrounding a city fortify and protect the city (R). According to another interpretation, God preserves the Quran through the Quran reciters (qurrā'), who traditionally memorize it and whose hearts are "the treasuries of His Book" (Qu). See also the essay "The Islamic View of the Quran."

⑩ We indeed sent [messengers] before thee to communities among those of old.

⑪ And never did a messenger come unto them, but that they mocked him.

10–11 The stories of the messengers whom God sent to their respective communities are related throughout the Quran. In this sūrah, the stories of Abraham, Lot, Shu'ayb, and Ṣāliḥ are told in vv. 51–84. The common thread in these narratives is that the prophets were mocked by their people (just as Muhammad was mocked by his people, as described in v. 6), but that in the end God destroyed these people for their mockery. For the manner in which those who mocked God's messengers were punished, see 6:10; 11:8; 16:34; 39:48; 40:83; 45:33; 46:26.

⑫ Thus do We place it into the hearts of the guilty.

12–13 Cf. 26:200 and commentary. The it in We place it into the hearts of the guilty can refer to misguidance, disbelief, mockery, or idolatry (Q). Alternately, it can refer to the Quran (Kl, R, Ṭb, Z), since the pronoun may refer to the Reminder mentioned in v. 9. According to this interpretation, God causes the Quran to enter the hearts of the guilty, meaning that He causes them to hear it, but on account of their hardened hearts, ignorance, and obstinacy they disbelieve in it (R) and mock it (Kl). This latter interpretation is supported by the understanding that in it in v. 13 refers to the Quran (Bđ, R, Ṭb, Ṭs). In other words, vv. 12–13 refer to the Quran, which, although accessible to the guilty, is denied by them. The verb in the phrase We place it into (naslukuhu) might also be understood to mean “cause it to pass through,” as a thread passes through the eye of a needle or a spear passes through what it pierces (R). For the wont of those of old, see 8:38c; 35:43c.

⑭ Were We to open for them a gate unto Heaven, that they might continue to ascend through it,

⑮ they would say, “Our eyes are merely spellbound. Nay, we are a people bewitched!”

14–15 They refers to those who requested that the Prophet come with angels (see 15:7c; Bg). Taken together, vv. 14–15 mean that even if God were to cause them to ascend to Heaven and witness all of its wonders, they would still reject what they saw because they were in a state of denial and doubt regarding the truth, claiming that they had merely been thrown into a state of bewilderment through sorcery (siḥr), of which they were known to have accused the Prophet (Aj). For the Makkans’ labeling of the Prophet as a sorcerer, see 10:2; 38:4; 40:24; 51:39; 51:52. For similar accusations of sorcery made against Moses, Jesus, and other Divine messengers, see 5:110c.

⑯ We have set constellations in the sky, and We have adorned them for the onlookers.

16 Constellations (burūj; see also 25:61c; 85:1c) is believed by many to refer to the twelve constellations of the zodiac (Kl).

⑰ And We have preserved them from every satan outcast,

⑱ save he who gains a hearing by stealth, and then a manifest flaming star pursues him.

17–18 These verses address the role played by the jinn, here referred to as “satans,” in providing information for fortune-tellers and sorcerers. See the commentary on the similar verses at 37:6–10 and the introduction to Sūrah 72.

19 And the earth We spread out, and cast therein firm mountains, and We caused to grow therein all manner of things in due balance.

19 Cf. 50:7. The reference to the earth being spread out by God is generally believed to mean that the earth was spread out over the surface of the water (N). Mountains are fixed firmly in the earth so that the earth does not quake (Q; cf. 16:15); as a spiritual metaphor, mountains are often interpreted as a reference to God’s signs, the Sacred Law, and prophethood, since, like mountains, these realities are fixed and firmly rooted and also cause human life to be firm and rooted in the truth; see 14:46c; 21:30–31c. In due balance refers to something that is weighed on the scales of God’s Wisdom and apportioned accordingly (Z), or it can refer more specifically to a measure of something that is weighed (Bg). Therein in We caused to grow therein can refer to either the mountains or the earth (Aj). If the former, then all manner of things would refer to the different kinds of rocks and minerals that one finds on and in mountains (Q), such as gold, silver, copper, and iron (Z). If, however, therein refers to the earth, then all manner of things refers specifically to the fruits and vegetation that grow on the earth (Q; see 15:21c). V. 20 indicates that this reading is the more likely of the two.

20 And We placed therein means of livelihood for you and for those for whom you provide not.

20 Cf. 7:10c. Therein refers to the earth, and means of livelihood pertains to the food and drink through which people maintain life (Q). Those for whom you provide not refers to one’s cattle and beasts of burden (Ṭ), or to one’s dependants, such as family members (Z). Concerning those who “provide” for their dependants, al-Zamakhsharī says, “They deem that they are providing sustenance for them, but they err. God is the Provider, and He provides for both of them.” See also 51:58: Truly

God is the Provider, the Possessor of Strength, the Firm.

21 Naught is there, but that its treasures lie with Us, and We do not send it down, save in a known measure.

21 Naught is there, but that its treasures lie with Us is understood by some to be a specific reference to rain (Kl, R, Th), which causes vegetation to grow on the earth and produces the means of livelihood mentioned in vv. 19–20 (R; see also 15:22c). More generally, it refers to every existing thing (IJ), meaning that there is nothing that God cannot bring into existence (Bḍ). In this reading, God’s treasuries symbolize God’s Power, and the treasures within them symbolize what is subsumed under His Power (maqḍūrāt), all of which can be brought into existence by Him easily (Bḍ). See also 6:50; 11:31; 52:37; 63:7, which speak of God’s treasures, and 17:100; 38:9, which speak of the treasures of God’s Mercy. In Islamic theology God’s Power (qudrah) is directed by His Will (irādah), which is determined by His Knowledge (‘ilm). Many Islamic thinkers, such as those in the school of Ibn ‘Arabī, have conceived of the treasuries metaphysically as the archetypes or unmanifested essences of all things in God’s Knowledge.

Following this latter interpretation, the reference to “sending down” in We . . . send it down signifies creation (as in 39:6; 57:25; R), meaning that God brings things into existence after they had been nonexistent (R), that is, nonexistent in the world, but with their archetypes residing in His treasuries. For a known measure, see also 42:27: But He sends down whatsoever He will according to a measure; and 54:49: Truly We have created everything according to a measure (and the commentary on this verse). According to the famous Sufi Abū Sa‘īd al-Kharrāz (d. 286/899), only those who do not fully believe the truth of this verse would depend on other than God for either their worldly or otherworldly affairs (Su).

22 And We sent forth the winds, fertilizing. And We sent down water from the sky, providing you with sufficient drink thereby, and you are not the keepers of its stores.

22 Winds are mentioned as signs of God and His Blessings in several places in the Quran; see 7:57; 25:48; 27:63; 30:46; 45:5. The winds are described as fertilizing in reference to the rain-laden clouds they carry (Ṭs), which some commentators juxtapose to the barren wind mentioned in 51:41 (Ṭ, Z). You are not the keepers of its stores means that people are not guardians of the rain, and that they cannot produce rain whenever they wish (Ās). See also 56:68–70: Have you considered the water that you drink? Is it you who sent it down from the clouds, or is it We Who send down? If We had willed We would have made it bitter; will you not, then, give thanks?

23 Surely it is We Who give life and cause death, and We are the Inheritor.

23 For give life and cause death, see 50:43c. The Inheritor, which is one of the Divine Names (see also 28:58; cf. 57:10), means that God is the only Reality unto which everything will return after all of creation has perished, and is the Reality that will remain after all of creation has perished (Aj, Āl, R), as in 28:88: All things perish, save His Face; cf. 55:26–27.

24 We indeed know those among you who advance, and We indeed know those who lag behind, 25 and verily it is thy Lord who will gather them. Truly He is Wise, Knowing.

24–25 Those among you who advance refers to those who are dedicated to acts of obedience to God, and those who lag behind to those who are not given to these acts (R). Alternately, the former can mean those who have already passed away, and the latter those who are still alive (R). Them refers to both of these groups, since all people will be raised from the dead and judged by God, who is the Reviver of the dead (30:50; see also 41:39).

26 And We indeed created man from dried clay, made of molded mud, 27 and the jinn We created earlier from scorching fire.

26–27 The clay from which human beings have been created is variously described as simply clay (6:2); a draught of clay (23:12); a viscous clay (37:11); and dried clay, like earthen vessels (55:14); see 55:14c. Elsewhere, the jinn are described as created from smokeless fire (55:15).

28 And [remember] when thy Lord said unto the angels, “Behold! I am creating a human being from dried clay, made of molded mud;

28 The narrative in vv. 28–43 describing the fall of Iblīs from Heaven is similar to the one in 38:71–85; these two accounts are the only ones in which there is no specific reference to Adam. Other accounts throughout the Quran situate the story of Iblīs in the context of the creation, temptation, and banishment of Adam from the Garden; see 2:30–39; 7:11–25; 17:61–65; 20:115–24. The opening verse of the account here is almost identical to 38:71, the major difference being that the latter has clay whereas this verse has molded mud (see 23:12c). God tells the angels in these two verses that He is going to create a human being, but in 2:30 He informs them that He is going to place a vicegerent upon the earth (for the meaning of vicegerent in this context, see 2:30c.). Although the human being or vicegerent refers to Adam, it also represents humanity as such; see 7:11c.

29 so when I have proportioned him and breathed into him of My Spirit, fall down before him prostrating.”

29 This verse is identical to 38:72; cf. 32:9. I have proportioned him is understood to be a reference to God’s creating the human being in the most perfect manner in order to receive His Spirit (Z); cf. 95:4: Truly We created man in the most beautiful stature. In interpreting I . . . breathed into him of My Spirit, many commentators see My Spirit as a reference to God’s Power, though others take the phrase more literally as the Spirit (al-rūḥ) and see it as explaining why Iblīs would be called upon to bow before Adam; see 38:72c.

God’s commanding the angels to bow before Adam is an essential part of the Quranic account of his creation; see 2:34; 7:11; 17:61; 18:50; 20:116; 38:73–74. The angels' bowing implies that before falling from Heaven, human beings occupied a station higher than that of the angels, or that the angels were bowing to God but taking Adam as their qiblah (i.e., the direction of prayer); see 7:11c. See also 12:100, where Joseph's family bows down to him in fulfillment of his dream in 12:4.

30 Thereupon the angels prostrated, all of them together,

31 save Iblīs. He refused to be with those who prostrated.

30–31 Iblīs is said to have refused God's Command to prostrate before Adam and thus to have deviated from the Command of his Lord (18:50), because he waxed arrogant, and was among the disbelievers (2:34; cf. 7:13; 38:74); see also 20:115–16. That the angels prostrated, all of them together, save Iblīs suggests that Iblīs was among the angels, although in 18:50 he is said to be of the jinn. These verses have given rise to debate among Muslim scholars about whether Iblīs should be classified as an angel or as a jinn; see 2:30c; 7:11c.

32 He said, "O Iblīs! What ails you that you are not with those who prostrate?"

33 He said, "I am not one to prostrate to a human being whom Thou hast created from dried clay, made of molded mud."

32–33 Iblīs's reply, that he is not one to prostrate to a human being whom God created from dried clay, made of molded mud, is motivated by pride and false analogical reasoning (see also 2:34; 38:74–76). Iblīs, as one of the jinn (18:50), perceives his origin from a smokeless fire (55:15) to be superior to an origin from clay, as when he says, I am better than him. Thou hast created me from fire, while Thou hast created him from clay (7:12; 38:76). In his commentary on 5:6, al-Maybudī notes that fire can symbolize pride and arrogance, since by nature fire flames up and reaches for the sky, whereas the clay from which Adam was made represents humility, since clay by nature is from the earth and therefore lowly; see also commentary on 7:12–13.

34 He said, “Go forth from it! Surely thou art outcast, 35 and surely the curse shall be upon thee till the Day of Judgment!”

34–35 In 7:13, Iblīs’s arrogance is cited as the cause for his expulsion from Heaven, at which time God tells him, Thou art surely among those who are humbled. See also the almost identical verses 38:77–78, where Iblīs is banished with God’s curse upon him: Go forth from it! Surely thou art outcast! And surely My curse shall be upon thee till the Day of Judgment. Iblīs’s banishment from Heaven on account of his pride is in accordance with a well-known ḥadīth qudsī in which God says, “Pride is My mantle and greatness My garment. Whoever vies with Me for either of them, I shall cast him into the Fire.”

36 He said, “My Lord! Grant me respite till the Day they are resurrected.”

37 He said, “Then verily thou art among those granted respite 38 till the Day of the Moment Known.”

36–38 These verses are identical with 38:79–81. One of the signs of Iblīs’s pride is that when he is banished from Heaven by God, he does not ask God to forgive him for his pride, but rather asks for respite till the Day they are resurrected (see also 7:14; 38:79 for identical wording; see also 7:14–15c). Iblīs’s request here contrasts with the response in 7:23 of Adam and Eve after being fooled by Iblīs: Our Lord! We have wronged ourselves. If Thou dost not forgive us and have Mercy upon us, we shall surely be among the losers.

39 He said, “My Lord! Since Thou hast caused me to err, I shall surely make things seem fair unto them on earth, and I shall cause them to err all together, ④① save Thy sincere servants among them.”

39–40 Cf. 7:16–17. Unlike Adam and Eve, who attribute their mistake to themselves (7:23), Iblīs tells God, Thou hast caused me to err, which is consistent with Quranic verses that, on the surface, seem to indicate that God “misleads” certain people or allows them to go astray (see, e.g., 2:26; 40:74; 74:31). In a sense, God was the “cause” of Iblīs’s failure in that His Command to Iblīs to bow down to Adam was the means by which Iblīs’s inner pride became outwardly manifest (see 7:16c). It can be said that Iblīs’s resolve to misguide God’s creatures and make things seem fair unto them is the result of his state of despair after being banished from God’s Presence (“Iblīs” is said to be etymologically related to an Arabic root meaning “to despair,” though its true etymology most likely stems from the Greek diabolos, which had already entered into Arabic before the revelation of the Quran); cf. 15:56, where Abraham asks, Who despairs of the Mercy of his Lord, save those who are astray?

For other instances in the Quran where Iblīs makes people’s actions seem fair to them, see 6:43; 8:48; 16:63; 27:24; 29:38. This is one of many ways in which he can cause God’s servants to go astray. Other instances include his “whispering” to them (e.g., 114:4–5), as he does to Adam in 7:20 and 20:120; commanding indecency (2:268; 24:21); “deranging” human beings with his touch (2:275) or voice (17:64); making them slip (3:155); sowing fear (3:174); making them (false) promises (4:120; 14:22; 17:64); inciting evil between them (12:100; 17:53), sometimes through wine and gambling (5:90); causing them to forget God (6:68; 12:42; 18:63; 58:19); and even attempting to alter revelation (22:52). I shall cause them to err all together, save Thy sincere servants among them is identical to 38:82–83.

④① He said, “This is a straight path unto Me.

④② As for My servants, truly thou hast no authority over them, save for those in error who follow thee.

41–42 The straight path to God here implies the true path of servitude and obedience to Him (R), by virtue of which one can avoid the evil insinuations of Satan. For Satan’s inability to exercise control over God’s servants, see also 16:99–100: Truly he has no authority over those who believe and trust in their Lord. His authority is only over those who take him as a protector, and those who take him as a partner.

43 And verily Hell shall be their tryst, all together.”

44 Seven gates it has, and for each gate is appointed a separate portion of them.

43–44 Their in their tryst refers to Iblīs, his party, and those who follow him in error (v. 42; R); see also 7:18; 38:85. The mention of Hell’s seven gates alludes to the seven levels of Hell (Bg, JJ, Kl, Ṭ), which are a part of traditional Islamic eschatological beliefs. For each gate is appointed a separate portion of them means that the followers of Iblīs will occupy a level of Hell in accordance with the degree to which they followed him (Aj).

45 Truly the reverent shall be amidst gardens and springs:

46 “Enter them in peace, secure”—

45–46 V. 45 is identical to 51:15; cf. 44:51–52. It is said that the springs refer to rivers of water, wine, milk, and honey in Paradise (Q), which are mentioned in 47:15: Therein lie rivers of water incorruptible, rivers of milk whose flavor does not change, rivers of wine delicious for those who imbibe, and rivers of purified honey.

Enter them in peace, secure is said to be the greeting that the reverent shall be met with by God (Q, R, Sh), the angels (Sh), or one of the angels (R) when they enter Paradise (see, e.g., 10:10c; 14:23; 33:44; 36:58; 39:73). For Paradise as the Abode of Peace, see 10:25c (see also 19:62; 56:26).

47 We shall remove whatever rancor lies within their breasts—“as brothers, upon couches, facing one another.”

47 By rancor is meant the hatred and enmity that existed among the believers during their earthly lives (Aj); see also the identical wording in part of 7:43 and its commentary; cf. 59:10. According to al-Rāzī, this verse alludes to the fact that since spirits in the Hereafter are free from the limitations of the faculties that characterize the embodied human state, they are also free from time-bound thoughts, which are what allow rancor to come about.

The couches upon which the inhabitants of Paradise will sit, facing one another (see also 37:41–44c) and reclining upon them (56:16), are elsewhere described as arrayed (52:20) and embroidered (56:15). According to al-Rāzī, brothers, upon couches, facing one another means that the souls in Paradise, being freed from bodily defilements, will be in such a pure state that they will become illumined by the Divine Lights of the next world and will reflect their light to the other purified souls.

④8 No weariness shall befall them therein; nor shall they be expelled therefrom.

48 Weariness here means the fatigue and exhaustion that result from great exertion (R); see also 35:35. Al-Rāzī explains that their not being expelled therefrom means that the reverent will be in Paradise “eternally without loss, subsisting without annihilation, in a state of perfection without deficiency, and victorious without deprivation.”

④9 Tell My servants that I am indeed the Forgiving, the Merciful, ⑤0 and that My Punishment is the painful punishment.

49–50 V. 49 is meant specifically to bring comfort and hope to God’s sinful servants, whose hearts will break upon reading in v. 48 of the rewards in store for the righteous, telling them, “If I am Thankful and Generous toward the obedient, then I am Forgiving and Merciful toward the sinful” (Qu). The Prophet is reported to have said that if the children of Adam did not sin, then God would replace them with a people who did sin and who then would repent to Him, so that He could forgive them. The Prophet also taught believers to pray, “O God, Thou art Forgiving. Thou lovest forgiveness; so forgive us.”

The mention of God’s Mercy and Forgiveness in v. 49 and the immediate reference to His Punishment in v. 50 indicate that, although God is Forgiving and Merciful, He is also Just and Severe toward those who disbelieve and are morally corrupt. In the end, however, God's Mercy is given precedence over His Wrath, as mentioned in the ḥadīth qudsī in which God says, "Verily My Mercy precedeth My Wrath." This is also why in the Quran it is said that God's Mercy encompasses all things (7:156), while the same is not said of His Wrath; see also 6:12, 54, which say that God has prescribed Mercy for Himself, indicating that Mercy and Forgiveness, in contrast to Wrath, are essential aspects of the Divine Nature.

51 And tell them of the guests of Abraham,

52 when they entered upon him and said, "Peace!" He said, "Verily of you we are afraid."

51–52 For the story of Abraham, see also 11:69–76; 14:35–41; 37:83–113; 51:24–36. Abraham's guests, who are also referred to as God's messengers (11:69) and Abraham's honored guests (51:24), were a group of angels said in various traditional sources to number between three and twelve; see 11:69c; 51:24–25c. Abraham feared the guests because they did not eat of the roasted calf (11:69) or fattened calf (51:26) that he had offered them following the custom of his day. In the society in which Abraham lived, if guests did not eat the food that was brought to them by their host, it would have been considered a sign of hostility; see 11:70c; 51:27–28c.

53 They said, "Be not afraid. Truly we bring thee glad tidings of a knowing son."

54 He said, "Do you bring me glad tidings when old age has befallen me? So of what do you bring me glad tidings?"

53–54 The knowing son is a reference to Isaac (see 11:71). Abraham is said to have been 120 years old when the angels came to him, while his wife, Sarah, was 99 years old; see 51:29. Abraham's question, So of what do you bring me glad tidings? expresses his shock (JJ); see also 11:71 where, upon receiving glad tidings of Isaac as well as his son Jacob, Sarah likewise expresses her astonishment: Oh, woe unto me! Shall I bear a child when I am an old woman, and this husband of mine is an old man? That would surely be an astounding thing.

55 They said, “We bring thee glad tidings in truth; so be not among those who despair.”

56 He said, “Who despairs of the Mercy of his Lord, save those who are astray?”

55–56 In replying to the angels’ admonition to not be among those who despair, Abraham sought to clarify that his statement of shock (see 15:54c) was not on account of his despairing of God’s Mercy; rather, he found it hard to believe that he could have a son despite his old age (Q). By saying that only those who are astray despair of God’s Mercy, Abraham was distancing himself from any notion of despondency, since, as attested in 16:120–21, he was not among those who were astray. For the connection between despair and disbelief, see 12:87; 29:23.

57 He said, “What is your errand, O messengers?”

58 They said, “We have been sent unto a guilty people,

57–58 These verses are identical to 51:31–32. In 11:70, the angels tell Abraham that they have been sent unto the people of Lot, by which they are indicating that they have come to destroy the people to whom they have been sent; see 11:70c. The story of Lot, the nephew of Abraham or his maternal cousin (see 7:80–81c), is also recounted in 7:80–84; 11:77–83; 26:160–73; 27:54–58; 29:28–35; 37:133–38; 54:33–38. Lot was sent to the people of Sodom and its surrounding towns, calling people to believe in the One God and to relinquish their sinful ways, namely, the indecentcy (7:80) of their coming with desire unto men instead of women (7:81); see also 7:80–81c; 26:165–66; 27:54–55; 29:28–29; 37:135.

59 save for the family of Lot. We shall surely save them, all together, 60 except for his wife; We have determined that she is indeed among those who lagged behind.”

59–60 For God’s saving Lot and his family, but not his wife, who was among those who lagged behind (7:83; 26:171; 27:57; 29:32), see 7:83c.

61 So when the messengers came to the family of Lot,

62 he said, “Verily you are an unfamiliar folk.”

61–62 When the angels came to Lot in the form of handsome male youths, Lot did not know that they were angels; see 11:77–79c. As 11:77 states, he thus was distressed on their account, as he was fearful that his people would attempt to have sexual relations with them; see 7:80–81c; 11:77–79.

63 They said, “Nay, but we bring thee that which they used to doubt.

64 And we bring thee the truth, and surely we are truthful.

63–64 That which they used to doubt refers to the impending punishment of which Lot had been warning his people; but they doubted him and accused him of lying (Z).

65 So set out with thy family during the night, and follow behind them, and let not any of you turn around, but go forth wheresoever you are commanded.”

65 See also 7:83c; 11:81. In the Biblical account (Genesis 19:26), Lot’s wife left with him, but turned into a pillar of salt when she looked back as they fled the city.

66 And We decreed this matter unto him: that the last remnant of those people will be rooted out in the morning.

66 In the morning the last of those remaining among Lot's people will be destroyed (Ṭs). See also 11:81: Indeed, the morning shall be their tryst. Is not the morning nigh?

67 And the people of the city came, rejoicing.

68 He said, "Truly these are my guests; so dishonor me not!

69 Reverence God, and disgrace me not."

67–69 Lot's people came to him rejoicing, because they had received the news of the arrival of Lot's male guests and wanted to satisfy their sexual desires with them (Ṭ); see also 11:78, where they come hurrying. According to a spiritual and esoteric interpretation of this verse, the people of Lot who come rejoicing represent people who are heedless of God: when they find those whom they think will conform to their caprices, they rejoice over them. But if others come to them and admonish them to leave their sinful ways, they turn away and are hostile toward them (Aj). It is said that Lot's wife informed the people of the guests' arrival (R); see also 26:170–71c. By telling his people not to bring dishonor or disgrace (cf. 11:78) upon him, Lot was asking them not to approach his guests with sexual intent, for if they did, it would bring shame upon him (R); see also 11:77–79c.

70 They said, "Did we not forbid you from [providing protection] to all the people?"

70 The reference here is to Lot's people forbidding him from attempting to dissuade them when they intended to approach any man with sexual intent (Q, R). Alternately, it can be a reference to their forbidding Lot from hosting any guests (Kl, Q), for Lot's people used to attempt to have sexual relations with strangers (Q);

by hosting them, Lot was obligated to provide his guests protection.

71 He said, “These are my daughters, if you must act.”

71 For Lot’s offering his daughters to his people, which was an attempt to divert them from his guests, see 11:77–79c. If you must act refers to their satisfying their sexual desires. In other words, it is as if Lot was saying, “If you wish to satisfy your sexual desires, then marry them [the daughters]” (JJ).

72 By thy life, they wandered confused in their drunkenness.

72 By thy life is understood to mean that God is swearing by the life of the Prophet Muhammad (IK, Kl, M, R, Ṭ, Ṭs). Alternately, it can be the angels swearing by the life of Lot (Kl, R, Z). If the former, then God’s swearing by the life of the Prophet is seen as an honor for which he alone has been singled out (IK), since in the Quran God does not swear by the life of any other human being (M). There are many beautiful Sufi poems concerning the words by thy life, such as the lines of the great Persian poet and Sufi sage Farīd al-Dīn ʿAṭṭār (d. 618/1221): “When the crown of by thy life was placed upon his head, / the mountain became immediately like a hill at his threshold” (Manṭiq al-Ṭayr [Tehran, 2008], 248).

They may refer to the Quraysh (Ṭ) but, more likely, to the people of Lot (Kl). Confused refers to their state of misguidance and bewilderment (Bg), and drunkenness to their state of doubt and uncertainty (Bg, JJ).

73 So the Cry seized them at sunrise,

74 then We made its uppermost to be its lowermost, and We rained down upon them stones of baked clay.

73–74 See 11:82–83c.

75 Truly in that are signs for those who discern,

76 and verily they are on a path still standing.

77 Truly in that is a sign for the believers.

75–77 By those who discern [the signs] are meant those who are so given to deep reflection that they can recognize the reality behind the outward forms (simah) of things (Z). On a path still standing refers to a road upon which people travel, where they can see the vestiges of the destroyed people of Lot (Aj).

78 And verily the inhabitants of the thicket were wrongdoers.

78 The inhabitants of the thicket (also in 26:176; 38:13; 50:14) refers to the Midianites, a mercantile people from northwestern Arabia who engaged in corrupt business transactions, or it can refer to some other people (see 7:85c). The Arabian prophet Shu^ʿayb called them to worship the one true God and to relinquish their sinful ways. For the story of Shu^ʿayb, see also 7:85–93; 11:84–95; 26:176–89.

79 So We took vengeance upon them. Truly the two of them are on a clear road.

79 The vengeance taken upon Shu^ʿayb’s people was in the form of a Cry that effaced them completely (for an explanation of the Cry, see 7:91–92c). The two of them are the people of Shu^ʿayb and the people of Lot (JJ), who were relatively close together in time (IK; see also 11:89–90c). A clear road refers to a road that is visible (Bg, Q, R) and appears to be identical to a path still standing (v. 76; see 15:75–77c).

80 And indeed the inhabitants of al-Ḥijr denied the messengers.

80 The inhabitants of al-Ḥijr are the tribe Thamūd, who inhabited a rocky plain (ḥijr, from which they derived their name; Z) located in western Arabia between the Ḥijāz and Syria; the prophet sent to them was Ṣāliḥ; see 7:73–79; 11:61–68; 26:141–58; 54:23–31; 7:73c. Although the Thamūd denied the messengers, the reference here is to their denial of the prophet Ṣāliḥ specifically (Bg, R, Z). Alternately, the messengers here could be interpreted to be a general reference to the prophet Ṣāliḥ and the believers who were with him (Z).

81 And We gave them Our signs, but they used to turn away therefrom.

81 The signs given to the Thamūd refer to various proofs and miracles (Ṭs) or to the pregnant she-camel, which was accompanied by many other signs (Bḍ, Q), such as its enormous size and Ṣāliḥ’s miraculously producing it from a large rock (Q; see 7:73c). Elsewhere, the she-camel is referred to as a clear proof (7:73), a sign (11:64), and a trial for the Thamūd (54:27). Along with the injunction to let the she-camel graze freely on God’s earth and cause her no harm (see 7:73; 11:64; 26:155), Ṣāliḥ asked his people to let her drink from the well on an appointed day (26:155; see also 54:28). Yet they hamstrung her (11:65); see also 7:73c; 7:77–78c.

82 And they would hew dwellings in the mountains, [feeling] secure.

82 That the Thamūd would hew dwellings in the mountains is also mentioned in 7:74 (see also 26:149; 89:9). During the time of the Prophet Muhammad, the Arabs were familiar with the remains of these mountain dwellings; see 7:74c. It is said that the Thamūd built their homes in the mountains because they would be less vulnerable to destruction (Kl). Alternately, this could be interpreted to mean that they did so in order to evade God’s Punishment (Kl, R).

83 Yet the Cry seized them in the morning,

84 and that which they used to earn availed them not.

83–84 The punishment visited upon the Thamūd, also referred to as the Cry in 11:67, is said to have been an earthquake (7:78) accompanied by a terrible, loud sound; see 7:77–78c. See also 11:67: Morning found them lying lifeless in their abode. The phrase that which they used to earn availed them not (cf. 39:50; 40:82) can be taken as a general reference to the communities of old that had rejected their messengers. For an alternate reading of this phrase, see 39:50c.

85 And We did not create the heavens and the earth and whatsoever is between them, save in truth. And surely the Hour is coming; so forbear with beautiful forbearance.

86 Truly thy Lord is the knowing Creator.

85–86 The first part of v. 85 is identical to a part of 46:3; cf. 10:5; 30:8. That God’s creation has been carried out in truth (see also, e.g., 16:3; 29:44) means that it possesses reality and purpose and has not been created in vain (3:191; 38:27). See also 44:38–39: And We did not create the heavens and the earth and whatsoever is between them in play. We did not create them, save in truth. But most of them know not (see also 21:16).

The Prophet spoke often of the imminence of the Hour, in one instance indicating symbolically that the time between him and the coming of the Hour was as the distance between his index and middle fingers; see 53:57; 54:1c. In a famous ḥadīth, the Archangel Gabriel appeared to the Prophet as a man and posed a set of questions to him, his last question was about the Hour. He asked, “When is the Hour?” The Prophet replied, “The one questioned knows no more than the questioner.” In 33:63 the Prophet is instructed to say that knowledge of the Hour is only with God: People question thee concerning the Hour. Say, “Knowledge thereof lies only with God. And what will apprise thee? Perhaps the Hour is nigh.” See also 42:17.

The Prophet is encouraged in several instances in the Quran to forbear and have patience in the face of the hostility he was encountering, in both Makkah and Madinah; see 5:13; 43:89; cf. 70:5.

87 And We have indeed given thee the seven oft-repeated, and the Mighty Quran.

87 Some say that the seven oft-repeated refers to the first seven sūrahs of the Quran (Ṭ, Z), but many others believe it refers to the first sūrah of the Quran, the Fātiḥah (Aj, Qm, R, Ṭ, Z), which consists of seven verses (Aj, R) if one counts as a verse the opening formula In the Name of God, the Compassionate, the Merciful; see 1:1c. The Fātiḥah is also referred to as oft-repeated because it is the most often recited sūrah of the Quran, recited in each of the daily prayers (ṣalāh; Aj, R).

The Prophet is reported to have referred to the Fātiḥah as the seven oft-repeated (R) and moreover to have said, “By the One in Whose Hand is my soul, God did not reveal the like of the Fātiḥah in the Torah, Gospel, Psalms, or [anywhere else in] the Quran. It is the Mother of the Book [43:4] and the seven oft-repeated. It is divided between God and His servant, and for His servant is what he asks”; see the introduction to Sūrah 1.

88 Strain not thine eyes toward the enjoyments We have bestowed upon certain classes of them, and grieve not for them, and lower thy wing unto the believers, 88 In the first part of this verse, the Prophet is admonished not to desire the things of the world that have been given to the Makkans who are rejecting him (Aj, Bḍ), since what he has been given, namely, the seven oft-repeated, and the Mighty Quran (v. 87), is greater than anything they have (Aj). It is reported that the first Caliph, Abū Bakr, said, “Whoever is given the Quran and thinks that anything given [to him] from this world is better than what he has been given, has deemed a great thing small, and a small thing great” (Aj, Bḍ).

The injunction to the Prophet to grieve not on behalf of the Makkan idolaters is in reference to the grief he experienced when they did not believe in the message (Bḍ); see 18:6: Yet perhaps thou wouldst destroy thyself with grief for their sake, should they believe not in this account (see also 3:176; 5:41, 68; 6:33; 10:65; 16:127; 18:6; 26:3; 27:70; 35:8; 36:76). Lower thy wing unto the believers means that the Prophet should be humble and gentle toward them (Aj); see also 17:24c; 26:215.

89 and say, “Truly I am the clear warner.”

89 For the Prophet as a clear warner, see also 22:49; 29:50; 38:70; 46:9; 51:50;

67:26.

90 Such as We have sent down for those who make division,

91 who made the Quran into fragments.

92 So by thy Lord, We shall question them all

93 concerning that which they used to do.

90–93 V. 90 can be connected with v. 89, such that together they could be read to mean, “I am a clear warner to you of a punishment like the punishment that visited those who make division” (Bg, R). Those who make division may refer to a group of Makkans who were stationed on the outskirts of Makkah by al-Walīd ibn al-Mughīrah, one of the main enemies of the Prophet, in order to tell people entering Makkah that there was a man in Makkah who was claiming prophethood, but who was in reality a possessed magician, soothsayer, and poet (R; see 26:224–26c). It may also be a more general reference to the Makkan idolaters who rejected the Quran. Thus, those . . . who made the Quran into fragments refers to the Makkans who rejected the Quran by calling it sorcery, fables of the ancients (e.g., 83:13), or soothsaying rather (see 26:224–26c; Bg), meaning that it was not a whole, but rather was cobbled together from these false sources (R). Others say that those who made the Quran into fragments refers to those who believe in the parts of the Quran they like and reject the rest (Q; cf. 2:85). According to one reading, fragments is understood to come originally from the root ^c-d-h rather than ^c-d-w; if so, it would mean “lies” (Q, R).

According to a ḥadīth, God’s questioning the Makkan idolaters concerning that which they used to do refers to how they responded to the statement, “There is no god but God,” that is, whether or not they believed in it and acted in accordance with it or not (Q).

94 So proclaim as thou hast been commanded, and turn away from the idolaters.

94 This verse enjoins the Prophet to declare openly the teachings that have been revealed to him and to pay no attention to the idolaters (Bd); see also 6:106: Follow that which has been revealed unto thee from thy Lord—there is no god but He—and turn away from the idolaters.

95 Truly We shall suffice thee against those who mock, 96 those who set up another god along with God; yet soon they will know.

95–96 This verse is understood as an assurance to the Prophet that God will destroy a particular group of Makkan idolaters known as the “mockers,” among whom was al-Walīd ibn al-Mughīrah (JJ). They were the ones most bitterly opposed to the Prophet’s message and, in addition to insulting and mocking him, were known to spit and throw animal entrails on him. That God will suffice the Prophet against them is understood to mean that He will destroy them without need of any effort on the part of the Prophet (Kl). On the idea of God’s being “enough” or “sufficient,” see 2:137c. It is reported that members of this group all died before the Battle of Badr (Kl, Z).

97 And certainly We know that thy breast is straitened because of what they say.

97 For the grief experienced by the Prophet on account of the Makkan idolaters’ failure to believe, see 11:12c. See, moreover, 5:68; 16:127; 18:6; 26:3; 27:70; 35:8, where the Prophet is consoled by God for his people’s rejection of his message; see also 27:70c.

98 So hymn the praise of thy Lord, and be among those who prostrate.

99 And worship thy Lord, till certainty comes unto thee.

98–99 Certainty here refers to death (Q, R, Ṭ, Z), because of death’s inevitable nature (R) and because with death one attains to certainty of all that is promised in the Hereafter (Ṭ). In this sense, these verses are understood as an injunction to continue to hymn God’s praises and worship Him until the moment of death. Others understand certainty here as a reference to the station where the worshipper is with the Worshipped and thus knows God with certainty (Bq, K), so that nothing distracts from the fullness of worship (Bq); this station is known in Islamic sapiential teachings as the truth of certainty (56:95; see 56:95c; 69:51; 102:5c).

This verse also alludes to a deep connection between certainty and death: to be certain of the truth is to die to falsehood, since nothing of one’s being can dwell any longer in falsehood. In this state one sees nothing but God and converses with none but Him (Su). This type of death, characterized by the station of certainty (maqām al-yaqīn), is what is known in Islamic thought as “voluntary death”; in it one undergoes a spiritual transformation while still alive in this world, dying to one’s ego and to worldly attachments.

The Bee

al-Naḥl

A late Makkan sūrah, al-Naḥl was likely revealed shortly before the migration to Madinah. Some maintain, however, that vv. 126–27 were revealed in Madinah, after the Battle of Uḥud (3/625), and instruct the Prophet about how to respond to the killing and mutilation of his beloved uncle, Ḥamzah (Q). Some also consider v. 110, which promises God’s Mercy toward those who emigrated after being oppressed, to be Madinan and to refer to those who emigrated from Makkah to Madinah (Q). An earlier reference to those who emigrate for the sake of God (v. 41) is usually understood to refer to those Muslims who emigrated from Makkah to Abyssinia several years before the migration of Makkan Muslims to Madinah (Q), although some consider v. 41 to be Madinan as well (IJ). Others also consider vv. 95–97 (Āl, IJ) and v. 112 (IJ) to be Madinan verses. The sūrah takes its name from the discussion of God’s revelation to the bee in vv. 68–69. According to al-Qurṭubī, some refer to this sūrah as al-Ni‘am (“The Blessings”) because of the many references to the blessings God has given to human beings; and in v. 18, it is said that His blessings cannot be counted.

This sūrah is one of the most important of those in the Quran that point out the spiritual significance of nature. Substantial parts of this sūrah are devoted to the wonders of the natural world and to rehearsing the specific blessings that God has bestowed on human beings through natural phenomena, including various kinds of livestock and their benefits and uses, crops and vegetation, the celestial bodies, the sea and its bounties, and the mountains, streams, and other natural landmarks that guide human beings’ travel (vv. 5–17). Later the sūrah mentions the four drinks with which God has blessed human beings (water, milk, drink derived from the fruit of the vine, and honey; vv. 65–69) as well as the blessings of spouses and children (v. 72) and various kinds of dwellings and protections (vv. 80–81).

Much of this sūrah is also concerned with the Makkan idolaters, including their denial of and arrogance toward the Prophet, their plotting against him (vv. 22–26), their corrupt pagan practices (vv. 56–60), and their accusation that the Prophet had fabricated the revelation (vv. 101–5). Contained in it are repeated warnings about the impending punishment to come in this world and the Hereafter for those who disbelieve (vv. 45–55; 61–63; 84–89); in v. 112, it presents a parable about the punishment of a town that was, like pagan Makkah, ungrateful for its blessings. The sūrah also instructs believers regarding the importance of fulfilling the pact of God and keeping their oaths to others (vv. 91–96). Vv. 114–18 discuss the dietary laws that Muslims should observe, suggesting that more extensive dietary laws were given to the Jews. The sūrah closes by instructing the Prophet and his followers about how to deal with their religious opponents, that is, by disputing with them in the most virtuous manner (v. 125) and by responding with restraint and patience when they have been wronged (vv. 126–27).

① The Command of God is coming; so seek not to hasten it. Glory be to Him and exalted is He above the partners they ascribe. ② He sends down angels with the Spirit from His Command to whomsoever He will among His servants, “Give warning that there is no god but I, so reverence Me!” ③ He created the heavens and the earth in truth. Exalted is He above the partners they ascribe. ④ He created man from a drop, and behold, he is a manifest adversary. ⑤ And cattle has He created for you, in which there is warmth and [other] uses, and whereof you eat. ⑥ And in them there is beauty for you, when you bring them home, and when you take them out to pasture. ⑦ And they bear your burdens to a land you would never reach, save with great hardship to yourselves. Truly your Lord is Kind, Merciful. ⑧ And [He has created] horses, mules, and asses, that you may ride them, and as adornment, and He creates that which you know not. ⑨ And it is for God to show the way, for some of them lead astray. Had He willed, He would have guided you all together. ⑩ He it is Who sends down water from the sky, from which you have drink, and from which comes forth vegetation wherewith you pasture your cattle. ⑪ Therewith He causes the crops to grow for you, and olives, and date palms, and grapevines, and every kind of fruit. Truly in that is a sign for a people who reflect. ⑫ He has made the night and the day subservient unto you, and the sun, and the moon, and the stars are subservient by His Command. Truly in that are signs for a people who understand. ⑬ And whatsoever He created for you on the earth of diverse hues—truly in this is a sign for a people who reflect. ⑭ He it is Who made the sea subservient, that you may eat fresh meat therefrom, and extract from it ornaments that you wear. You see the ships plowing through it, and [this is so] that you may seek His Bounty, and that haply you may give thanks. ⑮ And He cast firm mountains in the earth, lest it shake beneath you, and streams, and ways, that haply you may be guided, ⑯ and landmarks, and by the stars they are guided. ⑰ Is He Who creates like one who creates not? Will you not, then, reflect? ⑱ And were you to count the blessings of God, you could not number them. Truly God is Forgiving, Merciful. ⑲ And God knows what you hide and what you disclose. ⑳ And those whom they call upon apart from God create naught, and are themselves created. ㉑ [They are] dead, not living, and they are not aware of when they will be resurrected. ㉒ Your God is one God. And those who believe not in the Hereafter, their hearts deny and they wax arrogant. ㉓ There is no doubt that God knows what they hide and what they disclose. Truly He loves not the arrogant. ㉔ When it is said unto them, “What has your Lord sent down?” they say, “Fables of those of old!” ㉕ [This is so], that on the Day of Resurrection they may bear their burdens completely, along with some of the burdens of those whom they lead astray without knowledge. Behold! Evil is that which they bear. ㉖ Those before them also plotted. Then God came upon their building from the foundations, and the roof fell down upon them from above, and the punishment came upon them whence they were not aware. ②⑦ Then on the Day of Resurrection He will disgrace them and say, “Where are My partners on whose account you were defiant?” Those who were given knowledge will say, “Surely, this day, disgrace and evil are upon the disbelievers”— ②⑧ those whom the angels took while they were wronging themselves. Then they will offer submission, “We were not doing any evil.” Nay, but God knows best that which you were doing. ②⑨ So enter the gates of Hell, to abide therein. Evil indeed is the abode of the arrogant! ③① And it will be said unto those who are reverent, “What has your Lord sent down?” They will say, “Goodness.” For those who are virtuous in this world, there shall be good, and the Abode of the Hereafter is better. Excellent indeed is the abode of the reverent! ③② They shall enter the Gardens of Eden with rivers running below. Therein shall they have whatsoever they will. Thus does God recompense the reverent, ③③ those whom the angels take while they are in a state of goodness. They will say, “Peace be upon you! Enter the Garden for that which you used to do.” ③④ Do they await aught but that the angels should come upon them, or that the Command of thy Lord should come? Those before them did likewise. And God wronged them not, but they wronged themselves. ③⑤ Thus they were stricken by the evil deeds they had done, and were beset by that which they used to mock. ③⑥ Those who ascribe partners unto God say, “Had God willed, we would not have worshipped aught apart from Him—neither us nor our fathers—nor would we have considered sacred aught apart from Him.” Those before them did likewise. Is aught incumbent upon the Messenger save the clear proclamation? ③⑦ We indeed sent a messenger unto every community, “Worship God, and shun false deities!” Then among them were those whom God guided; and among them were those who were deserving of error. So journey upon the earth and behold how the deniers fared in the end! ③⑧ Though thou eagerly desire that they be guided, verily God guides not those who lead astray, and they shall have no helpers. ③⑨ And they swear by God their most solemn oaths [that] God will not resurrect those who die. Nay, but it is a promise binding upon Him, though most of mankind know not. ③⑨ [This is so] that He might make clear unto them that wherein they differed, and that those who disbelieved might know that truly they were liars. ④① And Our Word unto a thing, when We desire it, is only to say to it, “Be!” and it is. ④② And those who emigrate for the sake of God, after having been wronged, We shall surely settle them in a good place in this world—and the reward of the Hereafter is greater, if they but knew— ④③ those who are patient and trust in their Lord. ④④ We sent no messengers before thee, save men unto whom We revealed—ask the people of the Reminder, if you know not— ④⑤ clear proofs and scriptures. And We have sent down the Reminder unto thee that thou mightest clarify for mankind that which has been sent down unto them, that haply they may reflect. ④⑥ Do those who have plotted evil deeds feel secure that God will not cause the earth to engulf them, or that the punishment will not come upon them whence they are not aware? ④⑦ Or that He will not seize them in the midst of their going to and fro, and they will be powerless to thwart [it]? ④⑧ Or that He will not seize them with a gradual diminishing? And truly your Lord is Kind, Merciful. ④⑨ Have they not considered that whatsoever God has created casts its shadow to the right and to the left, prostrating to God while in a state of abject humility? ⑤① And unto God prostrates whatever crawling creatures or angels are in the heavens or on the earth, and they do not wax arrogant. ⑤② They fear their Lord above them, and they do whatsoever they are commanded. ⑤③ And God says, “Do not take up two gods. Truly He is only one God. So be in awe of Me.” ⑤④ Unto Him belongs whatsoever is in the heavens and the earth, and religion belongs to Him forever. Will you then revere something other than God? ⑤⑤ Whatever blessing you have, it is from God. Then, when affliction befalls you, it is unto Him that you cry for help. ⑤⑥ Then, when He removes the affliction from you, behold, a group among you ascribes partners unto their Lord. ⑤⑦ So let them be ungrateful for that which We have given them: “Enjoy yourselves! For soon you will know.” ⑤⑧ And they dedicate a share of that which We have provided them unto that which they know not. By God, you shall surely be questioned about that which you used to fabricate. 57 And they assign unto God daughters—glory be to Him!—while they have that which they desire. 58 And when one of them receives tidings of a female [child], his face darkens, and he is choked with anguish. 59 He hides from the people on account of the evil of the tidings he has been given. Shall he keep it in humiliation, or bury it in the dust? Behold! Evil indeed is the judgment they make! 60 Those who believe not in the Hereafter have an evil description, while unto God belongs the loftiest description. And He is the Mighty, the Wise. 61 And were God to take mankind to task for their wrongdoing, He would not leave a single creature upon [the earth]. But He grants them reprieve till a term appointed. And when their term comes, they shall not delay it a single hour, nor shall they advance it. 62 They assign unto God that to which they are averse. And their tongues utter the lie that the best shall be theirs. There is no doubt that theirs shall be the Fire, and they shall be hastened [toward it]. 63 By God, We have indeed sent messengers unto communities before thee. But Satan made their deeds seem fair unto them. So he is their protector on this day, and theirs shall be a painful punishment. 64 And We did not send down unto thee the Book, save that thou mightest make clear to them that wherein they differed, and as a guidance and a mercy for a people who believe. 65 And God sends down water from the sky, and thereby revives the earth after its death. Surely in this is a sign for a people who hear. 66 And surely in the cattle there is a lesson for you: We give you to drink from that which is in their bellies, between refuse and blood, as pure milk, palatable to those who drink [thereof]. 67 And from the fruits of the date palm and the vine, from which you derive strong drink and a goodly provision. Surely in this is a sign for a people who understand. 68 And thy Lord revealed unto the bee, “Take up dwellings among the mountains and the trees and among that which they build. 69 Then eat of every kind of fruit, and follow the ways of your Lord made easy.” A drink of diverse hues comes forth from their bellies wherein there is healing for mankind. Truly in that is a sign for a people who reflect. 70 God created you; then He takes you [unto Himself]. And among you are those who are brought back to the weakest of ages, such that they know nothing after having had knowledge. Truly God is Knowing, Powerful. (71) And God has favored some of you above others in provision. Those who have been favored do not hand over their provision to those whom their right hands possess, such that they would be equal in this regard. Would they thus reject the blessings of God? (72) And God has ordained mates for you from among yourselves, and from your mates He has ordained for you children and grandchildren. And He provided you with good things. Will they then believe in that which is false, and show ingratitude for the blessings of God? (73) And they worship, apart from God, that which has no power over any provision that may come to them from the heavens and the earth; nor are they capable [of such]. (74) So set forth no parables for God. Truly God knows and you know not. (75) God sets forth a parable: a servant enslaved, with power over naught, and he unto whom We have provided a goodly provision from Us, who then spends of it secretly and openly. Are they equal? Praise be to God! Nay, but most of them know not. (76) God sets forth a parable: two men, one of whom is dumb, with power over naught, who is a burden unto his master; wheresoever he dispatches him, he brings no good. Is he equal to one who enjoins justice, and who is on a straight path? (77) Unto God belongs the Unseen of the heavens and the earth. The matter of the Hour is as the blinking of an eye, or nearer still. Truly God is Powerful over all things. (78) And God brought you forth from the bellies of your mothers, knowing naught. And He endowed you with hearing, sight, and hearts, that haply you may give thanks. (79) Have they not considered the birds, made subservient, in midair? None holds them save God. Truly in that are signs for a people who believe. (80) And God has ordained for you a place of rest in your dwellings, and He has made dwellings for you from the skins of cattle, which you bear with ease on the day you travel and the day you pitch camp. And from their wool, and their fur, and their hair, furnishings and enjoyment for a while. (81) And God has made shade for you from among that which He created, and He has made places of refuge for you in the mountains. He has made coats for you that protect you from the heat and coats that protect you from your own might. Thus does God complete His Blessing unto you, that haply you may submit. 82 Then if they turn away—only the clear proclamation is incumbent upon thee. 83 They recognize the Blessing of God, and then deny it, and most of them are disbelievers. 84 And on that Day We shall raise up a witness from every community; then those who disbelieved will not be permitted [to speak], nor can they make amends. 85 And when those who did wrong see the punishment, it shall not be lightened for them, nor shall they be granted respite. 86 When those who ascribed partners unto God see the partners they ascribed, they will say, “Our Lord! These are our partners whom we called upon apart from Thee.” But they will retort, “Verily you are liars!” 87 And they will offer submission unto God on that Day, and that which they used to fabricate will forsake them. 88 Those who disbelieve and who have turned from the way of God, for them We shall add punishment on top of punishment, for their having worked corruption. 89 And on that Day We shall raise up in every community a witness against them from among themselves, and We shall bring thee as a witness against these. And We sent down unto thee the Book as a clarification of all things, and as a guidance and a mercy and glad tidings for those who submit. 90 Truly God commands justice, virtue, and giving to kinsfolk, and He forbids indecency, wrong, and rebelliousness. And He admonishes you, that haply you may remember. 91 Fulfill the pact of God when you have pledged it, and break not your oaths after solemnly affirming them, and having made God a Witness over you. Surely God knows whatsoever you do. 92 Be not like she who unravels her yarn, breaking it after it had been strong [by] taking your oaths to practice deception among yourselves, so that one community might be larger and wealthier than another. God only tries you thereby. And on the Day of Resurrection, He will surely clarify for you that wherein you differed. 93 Had God willed, He would have made you one community. But He leads astray whomsoever He will and guides whomsoever He will. And you shall surely be questioned about that which you used to do. 94 Take not your oaths to practice deception among yourselves, lest a foot slip after it had been firmly planted, and you taste evil for your having turned from the way of God, and yours should be a great punishment. 95 Sell not the pact of God for a paltry price. Surely that which is with God is better for you, if you but knew. 96 That which is with you comes to an end, but that which is with God subsists. And surely We shall render unto those who are patient their reward for the best of that which they used to do. 97 Whosoever works righteousness, whether male or female, and is a believer, We shall give them new life, a good life, and We shall surely render unto them their reward in accordance with the best of that which they used to do. 98 So when you recite the Quran, seek refuge in God from the outcast Satan. 99 Truly he has no authority over those who believe and trust in their Lord. 100 His authority is only over those who take him as a protector, and those who take him as a partner. 101 And when We replace one sign with another—and God knows best that which He sends down—they say, “You are only a fabricator!” Nay, but most of them know not. 102 Say, “The Holy Spirit has brought it down from thy Lord in truth, to make firm those who believe, and as guidance and glad tidings for those who submit.” 103 Indeed, We know that they say, “He has merely been taught by a human being.” The tongue of the one whom they falsely implicate is foreign, while this is [in] a clear, Arabic tongue. 104 Truly those who believe not in the signs of God, God guides them not, and theirs shall be a painful punishment. 105 Only those who believe not in the signs of God fabricate lies. It is they who are liars. 106 Whosoever disbelieves in God after having believed—save one who is coerced, while his heart is at peace in faith—but whosoever opens his breast unto disbelief, upon them shall be the Wrath of God, and theirs shall be a great punishment. 107 That is for their having preferred the life of this world to the Hereafter. And surely God guides not disbelieving people. 108 It is they on whose hearts God has placed a seal, and on their hearing and their seeing. It is they who are heedless. 109 There is no doubt that in the Hereafter they are the losers. 110 Then indeed thy Lord, for those who emigrated after being oppressed, then strove and were patient, surely thy Lord thereafter is Forgiving, Merciful. 111 That Day every soul will come disputing on behalf of itself, and every soul will be paid in full for that which it has done. They shall not be wronged. 112 God sets forth a parable: a town secure and at peace, its provision coming unto it abundantly from every side. Yet, it was ungrateful for the blessings of God; so God let it taste the garment of hunger and fear for that which they had wrought. 113 A messenger from among themselves had surely come unto them, but they denied him. And so the punishment seized them while they were wrongdoers. 114 So eat of the lawful and good things God has provided you, and give thanks for the Blessing of God, if it is He Whom you worship. 115 He has only forbidden you carrion, and blood, and the flesh of swine, and that which has been offered to other than God. But whosoever is compelled by necessity, without willfully disobeying or transgressing, truly God is Forgiving, Merciful. 116 And utter not lies in what your tongues assert, [saying], “This is lawful and this is forbidden,” such that you fabricate a lie against God. Surely those who fabricate lies against God will not prosper. 117 A little enjoyment, while theirs shall be a painful punishment. 118 And unto those who are Jews, We forbade that which We recounted unto thee beforehand. We wronged them not, but they wronged themselves. 119 Then truly thy Lord—for those who commit evil in ignorance, then later repent and make amends—truly thy Lord thereafter is Forgiving, Merciful. 120 Truly Abraham was a community, devoutly obedient to God, a ḥanīf, and he was not among the idolaters. 121 [And he was] thankful for His Blessings. He chose him and guided him unto a straight path. 122 And We granted him good in this world, and surely in the Hereafter he shall be among the righteous. 123 Then We revealed unto thee, “Follow the creed of Abraham, a ḥanīf, and he was not among the idolaters.” 124 And the Sabbath was only ordained for those who differed concerning it, and surely thy Lord will judge between them on the Day of Resurrection, concerning that wherein they used to differ. 125 Call unto the way of thy Lord with wisdom and goodly exhortation. And dispute with them in the most virtuous manner. Surely thy Lord is He Who knows best those who stray from His way, and He knows best the rightly guided. 126 And if you would punish, then punish with the like of that wherewith you were punished. But if you are patient, then that is better for the patient. ¹²⁷ So be patient, and thy patience is only with God. And grieve not on their account, nor be distressed by what they plot. ¹²⁸ Truly God is with those who are reverent, and those who are virtuous.

Commentary

① The Command of God is coming; so seek not to hasten it. Glory be to Him and exalted is He above the partners they ascribe.

1 When the Prophet received a revelation saying the Hour has drawn nigh (54:1), the Makkan idolaters temporarily stopped what they were doing in order to await the events that were about to unfold. When the Hour did not come, they mocked the warning that the Prophet had delivered (Z). This verse was revealed, affirming that the Command of God is indeed coming; see also 4:47; 33:37; 65:3, where it is said that the Command of God will be fulfilled. The Command of God refers to the coming of either earthly punishment or the Last Day (see, e.g., 11:40; 23:27; 40:78; 57:14; 82:18). The warning seek not to hasten it suggests that God's Judgment or Punishment may be hastened by either disbelief or wrongdoing (see, e.g., 6:57–58; 7:150; 10:51). See also 21:37: Man was created of haste. Soon shall I show you My signs; so seek not to hasten Me; as well as 22:47; 26:203–4; 27:72; 29:53–54; 37:176; 42:18; 46:24; 51:13–14. That God is exalted above the partners people ascribe to Him is also mentioned in 6:100; 7:190; 10:18; 16:3; 23:92; 27:63; 28:68; 30:40; 39:67.

② He sends down angels with the Spirit from His Command to whomsoever He will among His servants, “Give warning that there is no god but I, so reverence Me!”

2 The Spirit with which God sends down angels is understood here as a reference to the Quran or to revelation more generally (Q, Ṭs); revelation may be referred to as the Spirit since it conveys Divine Guidance and gives life to the soul (Q, Ṭs), reviving hearts just as spirits revive bodies (Q). The angels with whom the Spirit descends refers most specifically to the Archangel Gabriel (JJ), the agent of revelation. Other verses mention a connection between the Spirit and God's Command, for example, 17:85: They ask thee about the Spirit. Say, “The Spirit is from the Command of my Lord, and you have not been given knowledge, save a little” (cf. 40:15; 42:52; 97:4). In Islamic metaphysics, the “world of the Command” (‘ālam al-amr) is identified with the world of the Spirit (al-Rūḥ). God sends the Spirit to whomsoever He will among His servants, that is, to whomever He chooses as messengers (JJ, T). The Divine command Reverence Me! is also found in 2:41, 197; 23:52; 39:16.

③ He created the heavens and the earth in truth. Exalted is He above the partners they ascribe.

3 God created the world in truth, that is, with purpose and goodness and not in vain, an idea that is repeated in many other verses; see 6:73c; 10:5; 30:8c; 44:39; 45:22; 46:3; 64:3.

④ He created man from a drop, and behold, he is a manifest adversary.

4 That human beings were created from a drop of fluid (cf. 18:37; 22:5; 23:12–14; 35:11; 40:67; 53:45–46; 75:37; 76:2; 80:19) evokes their essential weakness (IK) and helplessness. Human beings are a manifest adversary of the Lord (IK, Z) insofar as they deny His Power and the blessings He has bestowed upon them and refuse to believe in His ability to resurrect the dead (R), although they were created to be servants (51:56), not opponents (IK). This verse was reportedly revealed in reference to Ubayy ibn Khalaf, a Makkan who expressed skepticism about God's ability to resurrect the dead (W). See also commentary on 36:77: Has not man seen that We created him from a drop and, behold, he is a manifest adversary.

⑥ And in them there is beauty for you, when you bring them home, and when you take them out to pasture.

⑦ And they bear your burdens to a land you would never reach, save with great hardship to yourselves. Truly your Lord is Kind, Merciful.

5–7 In the Quran cattle is used to designate four types of grazing animals: sheep, goats, camels, and oxen; see 6:142–44. The manifold benefits of cattle for human beings (also mentioned in vv. 66, 80; 23:21–22; 36:71–72; 40:79–80; 43:12–13) include their service as riding animals and beasts of burden, their provision of milk and meat, and the use of their skin and wool for making dwellings and furnishings. It is only in this passage, however, that their beauty (jamāl) is invoked (v. 6) as one of their benefits for humanity, indicating that the natural world should be seen as a source of beauty and wonder, not just of material benefits. In his commentary on these verses, al-Rāzī suggests a hierarchy of animals in which human beings are at the pinnacle, followed by those animals of most use to them in matters of material survival, then by those that provide beauty and adornment, then by those that provide no benefit, and finally by those about whom human beings have no knowledge at all (see v. 8, which states that God creates that which you know not).

8 And [He has created] horses, mules, and asses, that you may ride them, and as adornment, and He creates that which you know not.

8 The grazing animals mentioned in this verse, horses, mules, and asses, unlike the cattle mentioned in vv. 5–7, are of use primarily for riding and adornment rather than for food. Most schools of law agree that the meat of mules and asses is not permissible to eat; the latter was explicitly banned by the Prophet during the Battle of Khaybar (7/629; Q). Some consider the eating of horse meat to be permissible, but nonetheless discouraged (Q), primarily because it is seen as a waste of a creature that has greater usefulness as a premier riding animal. Such animals are a source of adornment insofar as riding them not only provides a means of transportation, but also confers a measure of dignity or nobility, and hence a kind of worldly adornment, upon the rider. That God creates that which you know not is meant to indicate His great Power (Z), which surpasses human understanding (Z).

9 And it is for God to show the way, for some of them lead astray. Had He willed, He would have guided you all together.

9 It is for God to guide people to the straight path that leads to salvation (Bd), because some of them—that is, some paths—lead astray. Some commentators understood this to mean that it is God’s self-imposed obligation to guide His servants (Z); others described God’s guiding people as an act of bounty and generosity on His part, not an obligation (Bđ, R). This verse can also be understood to mean that only God can guide people in this way, as in 92:12: Truly Ours it is to give guidance. That God could have guided all people to the straight path, had He willed, is also mentioned in 5:48; 6:35, 149; 16:93. For Ash^carite thinkers, this and similar verses indicate that God does not necessarily will that all people should be guided aright (R). Mu^ctazilite thinkers, however, understood this verse to mean that, although God is capable of compelling all people to follow His Guidance, He prefers to allow them to exercise the free will that He has given them to choose for themselves; or they understood it to mean that God could guide all people to Paradise (regardless of their deeds), but that He wishes that only those who have earned Paradise through their actions should go there (R).

⑩ He it is Who sends down water from the sky, from which you have drink, and from which comes forth vegetation wherewith you pasture your cattle.

⑪ Therewith He causes the crops to grow for you, and olives, and date palms, and grapevines, and every kind of fruit. Truly in that is a sign for a people who reflect.

10–11 God’s sending down water is mentioned throughout the Quran as one of His fundamental gifts to humanity (see, e.g., 15:22; 22:63; 29:63; 30:24; 41:39), since in addition to its direct use by human beings, it also sustains plants and animals that are of use to people as well; see 6:99c; 7:57; 14:32; 20:53–54; 22:5; 23:18–19; 27:60; 31:10; 35:27; 39:21; 78:14–16; 80:25–32. That this and other natural phenomena serve as a sign for a people who reflect is an idea also found in 10:24; 13:3; 16:13, 69; 30:21; 39:42; 45:13.

⑫ He has made the night and the day subservient unto you, and the sun, and the moon, and the stars are subservient by His Command. Truly in that are signs for a people who understand.

12 Various natural phenomena are described in the Quran as being made subservient by God's Command (7:54; 13:2; 29:61; 31:29; 35:13; 39:5). Subservience is also mentioned in relation to the sea (v. 14) and the birds (v. 79). In the present verse and elsewhere, however, it is said that God has made certain phenomena subservient unto you, that is, unto human beings (14:32–33; 22:36–37; 22:65; 31:20; 43:13; 45:12). The subservience of natural phenomena to human beings can be understood cosmologically as a consequence of the fact that the human being is God's vicegerent (khalīfat Allāh) on earth (see 2:30 and commentary). In some cases, even humanly constructed phenomena, particularly ships that sail upon seas and rivers, are included among those things that God has made subservient to human beings (14:32–33c; 43:13; 45:12).

That such majestic phenomena have been made subservient to human beings means that these phenomena have been designed or constrained by God to serve human needs (R). For example, night and day provide human beings the opportunity to rest at night (10:67) and to seek God's Bounty by day (Z), while the stars provide them with a means of navigation or guidance on both land and sea (v. 16). To describe something as subservient implies the existence of a conscious will that is constrained to obey and serve another. Because the sun, the moon, and other phenomena that are described as subservient are understood to be inanimate objects, some consider their "subservience" merely a metaphor for God's creating them in a particular way to serve their designated function. However, others suggest that the Divine Command by which they are made subservient is actually a "prescriptive command," which these phenomena obey as a matter of religious responsibility (R). This latter understanding is consistent with the literal reading of other verses indicating that there are stones that crash down for the fear of God (2:74), stars and trees that prostrate to God (55:6), and thunder that hymns His praise (13:13). That such natural phenomena are signs of God's Power and Benevolence for people who understand is also mentioned in 2:164; 13:4; 16:67; 30:24; 45:5.

13 And whatsoever He created for you on the earth of diverse hues —truly in this is a sign for a people who reflect.

13 Cf. 35:27–28, where God's creating the earth, human beings, and cattle of diverse hues is a reason to be in awe of Him. The present verse marks a shift from the sūrah's discussion of the wonders of the celestial world to those of the terrestrial realm (IK). Diverse hues refers not only to variations of color, but also to differences in shape and appearance (Bd, IK, Q).

⑭ He it is Who made the sea subservient, that you may eat fresh meat therefrom, and extract from it ornaments that you wear. You see the ships plowing through it, and [this is so] that you may seek His Bounty, and that haply you may give thanks.

14 For a discussion of the “subservience” of natural phenomena, see 16:12c. Regarding the sea as a source of fresh meat—that is, fish (Ṭ)—and ornaments, alluding to pearls and coral (55:22; Ṭ), see 35:12c. The fresh meat of the sea differs from the meat derived from land animals in Islamic Law in that fish do not need to be ritually slaughtered and can be caught and eaten even in a state of iḥrām (a state of purity for pilgrimage, which is nullified by the slaughtering of an animal); see 5:1, 95–96. Ships that sail upon the sea are mentioned elsewhere as a benefit for which people should be grateful to God (see, e.g., 2:164; 14:32; 23:22; 31:31). Plowing through it refers to the ships’ cutting through the water or through the wind (Ṭ). The ships allow human beings to seek His Bounty (17:66; 30:46; 35:12; 45:12), a reference to the goods that one may acquire through distant trade and the profit one may make thereby (see 28:73; 30:23).

⑮ And He cast firm mountains in the earth, lest it shake beneath you, and streams, and ways, that haply you may be guided,

15 A nearly identical verse is 21:31; see 21:30–31c. God’s casting or placing firm mountains into the earth for humanity suggests their functioning as a source of stability for the earth, lest it shake beneath them (cf. 13:3; 15:9; 41:10; 50:7; 77:27; 79:32); see also 21:31; 31:10; and 78:7, where the mountains are described as stakes like those that hold up a tent. Al-Rāzī suggests that mountains and streams are mentioned together (cf. 13:3; 27:61), because most streams have their origin in mountain springs. The stability provided by the mountains will be overturned on the Last Day, however, which is described as a day on which the earth and the mountains shake, and the mountains will be like heaps of shifting sand (73:14; cf. 56:4–6; 101:5).

16 and landmarks, and by the stars they are guided.

16 Just as the streams serve as a source of guidance for human beings, so too do other landmarks, visible along the roads by day (Q, T, Z), and the stars, which are visible by night or when at sea (R)—thus providing humanity with sources of guidance night and day, on land or at sea. Landmarks translates ‘alāmāt and may include mountains (Q, T), springs along the road (Z), and winds (Q), all of which can provide directional guidance. The nomadic pre-Islamic Arabs had developed complex knowledge of winds, which is reflected in the rich vocabulary in Arabic for different kinds of winds, and the Quran makes reference to some of them; cf. 2:266; 17:69; 41:16; 51:41; 52:27. Stars translates najm, which is “star” in the singular. It may be singular in the Arabic because it is referring to stars as a single category (Q, Z), although others have suggested that it refers to a particular star or constellation, such as the Pleiades, Ursa Major or Minor, or the North Star (Q, Z). Since the Quraysh were dependent on the stars for navigation during their travels in the desert, they should have been particularly grateful for this blessing (Z); for Muslims, these natural sources of guidance are also useful for finding the direction of prayer (qiblah) in unfamiliar territory (Q, R).

17 Is He Who creates like one who creates not? Will you not, then, reflect?

17 Following the mention in the preceding verses of natural phenomena, which God has created for the benefit of human beings, the present verse asks whether one would still worship lifeless idols rather than God, Who created all of these blessings (R). The one who creates not is a reference to the idols worshipped by the Makkan idolaters (R, Z), and the verse serves as a rebuke to those who would make their idols equal to the Creator by referring to them as “gods” and worshipping them (R).

Ash‘arite theologians adduced this verse to indicate that the title “Creator,” and thus the act of creation, can only be rightfully attributed to God. Thus human beings cannot be said to be the “creators” of their own acts; rather, all acts, like all things, are created by God (R). Some Mu‘tazilites responded by saying that the verse does not deny that the act of “creating,” in a limited sense, can also be attributed to human beings; rather, the point of the verse is that human beings, who possess intelligence and agency and thus have at least some capability for “creating,” should not worship idols that do not possess even these limited faculties or capabilities and thus can create nothing at all (R).

⑱ And were you to count the blessings of God, you could not number them. Truly God is Forgiving, Merciful.

18 For the impossibility of counting the blessings of God, see 14:34c. To say that human beings cannot count the blessings of God in their entirety is also to say that human beings can never be sufficiently grateful to God or worship Him “enough,” since they cannot mentally encompass the greatness and extent of the gifts that He has given them (R, Z). For this reason, God is described as Forgiving and Merciful with regard to the incapacity of human beings to offer sufficient praise to Him (R, Ṭs, Z). Al-Rāzī asserts that if one were to contemplate all that God had created for the benefit of human beings, the human intellect would be exhausted and extinguished merely by seeking to comprehend the wisdom with which God created humanity, let alone trying to take into account all of the other bounty and goodness He has provided.

⑲ And God knows what you hide and what you disclose.

19 This verse and many others like it refer to God’s knowledge of what human beings hide—that is, their inward thoughts and intentions—as well as of what they disclose through outward actions; see also 2:33, 77; 3:29; 5:99; 14:38; 21:110; 24:29; 27:25, 74; 28:69; 33:54; 36:76; 64:4. The reference to God’s all-encompassing Knowledge is meant as a warning to those who conceal evil intentions (Z). In the context of this sūrah, it may also mean that in addition to their outward polytheism and idolatry, the idolaters also conceal other forms of disbelief and wrongdoing, such as their plots to undermine the Prophet and his mission (R). The statement here may also be intended to provide a contrast between God, who knows human beings both outwardly and inwardly, and the inanimate idols, which have no knowledge at all (R).

20 And those whom they call upon apart from God create naught, and are themselves created.

20 Cf. 25:3. That the idols are “created” presents an additional contrast with God, Who is “uncreated” and therefore not “created” by another. See 37:95–96: He said, “Do you worship that which you carve, while God created you and that which you make?”

21 [They are] dead, not living, and they are not aware of when they will be resurrected.

21 This verse offers the final contrast between God and the idols: the latter are dead, not living, whereas God is the Living (2:255; 3:2; 20:111; 40:65) and never dies (R). See 25:58: And trust in the Living, Who dies not, and hymn His praise. Some commentators suggest that they in they are not aware refers to the idols, and they in when they will be resurrected refers to the idolaters, meaning that the idols have no knowledge of when those who worship them will be resurrected (R); nor do they know when the Hour will come (IK). It is reported from Ibn ʿAbbās, however, that God will indeed quicken the idols at the time of the Resurrection, bring them together with the satans, and command them all into the Fire (R).

22 Your God is one God. And those who believe not in the Hereafter, their hearts deny and they wax arrogant.

23 There is no doubt that God knows what they hide and what they disclose. Truly He loves not the arrogant.

22–23 Your God is one God is also found in 2:163; 22:34; 41:6; see also v. 51: Truly He is only one God. The hearts of the idolaters deny, that is, refuse to accept admonition (Q). To wax arrogant is an attitude associated with Satan (2:34; 7:13; 38:74–75) and the disbelievers (6:93; 14:21; 25:21; 28:39; 35:43; 37:35; 40:60; 46:20; 71:7; 74:23), whose pride prevents them from following the Prophet and leads them to deny anything that they do not already know (Bḍ). This attitude contrasts with that of believers, who contemplate the indications and signs of God and the guidance they are given, from which they benefit (Bḍ).

God loves not the arrogant, as He loves not the vainglorious boaster (4:36; 31:18; 57:23) or the exultant (28:76); He also does not love transgressors (2:190; 5:87; 7:55), disbelievers (3:32; 30:45), wrongdoers (3:57, 140; 42:40), those who practice treachery (4:107; 8:58; 22:38), workers of corruption (5:64, 28:77), or the prodigal (6:141; 7:31). The arrogant here may mean those who are too arrogant to believe in the Oneness of God, that is, the idolaters in particular, or it may be a general reference to all who are arrogant (Z). In relation to God's knowledge of what people hide and disclose, mentioned in v. 19 and restated here, al-Qurṭubī observes that arrogance is the only sin that cannot be hidden, since it is an attitude visible by nature, and that it is the root of all disobedience.

24 When it is said unto them, “What has your Lord sent down?” they say, “Fables of those of old!”

24 Regarding the common accusation that the Prophet was bringing mere fables of those of old, see 6:25; 8:31; 23:83; 25:5; 27:68; 68:15; 83:13.

25 [This is so], that on the Day of Resurrection they may bear their burdens completely, along with some of the burdens of those whom they lead astray without knowledge. Behold! Evil is that which they bear.

25 Those who lead others astray will carry an extra burden of punishment, as they will be punished for their own sins as well as for the sins of those whom they led astray; see 11:19–20. At the same time, the Quran asserts that none shall bear the burden of another (6:164; 17:15; 35:18; 39:7; 53:38). Thus even if those who lead others astray bear an extra or double burden of punishment, this in no way lessens the burden that those whom they led astray bear for their own sins (IK, Q). See 29:12–13: Those who disbelieve say to those who believe, “Follow our path and we shall bear your sins.” But they bear not aught of their sins. Truly they are liars. Surely they will bear their own burdens, and others’ burdens along with their own, and on the Day of Resurrection they will surely be questioned concerning that which they used to fabricate; and also 7:38. According to a ḥadīth, “Whoever calls to error and is followed, upon him are the burdens of those who followed him, without lessening their burdens at all; and whoever calls to guidance and is followed, he shall have the reward [of those who followed him] without lessening their reward” (IK, Q). Without knowledge pertains to those who are led astray; that is, they are in a state of ignorance. Despite their ignorance, however, they remain culpable for being led astray, because it is incumbent upon all people to exercise their judgment and intellect to distinguish between what is true and what is false (Z). They bear their burdens completely, meaning that the punishment will not be lessened for them in any way; for example, any misfortune that befell them in the world as a result of their disbelief will not absolve them of punishment in the Hereafter (Q).

26 Those before them also plotted. Then God came upon their building from the foundations, and the roof fell down upon them from above, and the punishment came upon them whence they were not aware.

26 This verse is meant both as a consolation for the Prophet and as a warning to his people, the Quraysh (Ṭs). It is one of several verses that warn of the futility of “plotting” against God, His prophets, or the believers; see, for example, 3:54: And they plotted, and God plotted. And God is the best of plotters (see also 6:123; 8:30; 10:21; 13:42; 14:46; 27:50c).

Those before them also plotted is reportedly a reference to an ancient tyrannical king among the Nabateans (Ṭ) or the people of southern Syria and Mesopotamia, and commentators commonly consider the tyrant here to be the one encountered by Abraham in 2:258, which legendary reports identify as Nimrod. The present verse is said to refer to this king’s desire to erect a building to Heaven to make war upon its inhabitants (JJ, Ṭ, Th, Ṭs) and God’s subsequent destruction of the building. This account is reminiscent of the Biblical story of the Tower of Babel in Genesis 11 and is explicitly connected with this story by several commentators (Ṭ, Th, Z). The identification of the tyrant as Nimrod is perhaps related to the Biblical mention of Nimrod as a mighty and dominant figure in Genesis 10. Others consider the verse to be a reference to Nebuchadnezzar (IK, Ṭ).

God came upon their building; that is, God’s Command (Ṭs) came upon the building and it was utterly uprooted and destroyed (Ṭ)—God’s Command is an expression used elsewhere to refer to the descent of destructive punishment (see, e.g., 7:150c; 10:24). Their building may be a metaphor for all the various ways in which the disbelievers and idolaters try to lead others astray (IK). The verse may thus mean that God came upon their plot, undoing all their efforts (IK) or making its intended harm devolve upon the plotters themselves (Ṭs). That the roof fell down upon them may refer metaphorically to the uncovering of a plot that they had sought to keep hidden (IK) or to the descent of Divine Punishment from the sky (Ṭ).

27 Then on the Day of Resurrection He will disgrace them and say, “Where are My partners on whose account you were defiant?” Those who were given knowledge will say, “Surely, this day, disgrace and evil are upon the disbelievers”—

27 The destruction of their building was their punishment in this life, and disgrace will be their punishment in the Hereafter (Z). Where are My partners? is meant to rebuke (IK, Ṭs) or mock those who were defiant on account of the false partners they ascribed to God (Z); see also 6:22; 28:62–65; 28:74–75; 40:73–74; 41:47–48. Their ascribing partners to God made them defiant toward the believers (Ṭs, Z) as well as toward God (Z). Those who were given knowledge refers to the prophets and the learned people (‘ulamā’) who, in earthly life, have called others to faith and have admonished them (Z); or it refers to the believers (Ṭs), the angels (Ṭs), or all who are noble and truthful in this world and the next (IK).

28 those whom the angels took while they were wronging themselves. Then they will offer submission, “We were not doing any evil.” Nay, but God knows best that which you were doing.

29 So enter the gates of Hell, to abide therein. Evil indeed is the abode of the arrogant!

28–29 Wronging themselves refers to the disbelievers persisting in their disbelief. Offer submission translates alqaw al-salam, which may also be translated “offer peace”: they will offer peace and behave humbly—in contrast to their arrogance and dissension in life (Z). Although they offer submission, they do so only when death has come upon them, and thus at a time when their submission can no longer avail them (Ṭs). In this verse, the wrongdoers blatantly deny their wrongdoing in a vain attempt to escape punishment (cf. 6:22–24c), although in other verses, they acknowledge their wrongdoing in the face of Divine Punishment (21:46, 23:106; 68:29–31). Nay, but God knows best that which you were doing. So enter the gates of Hell is said by some commentators to have been uttered by those who were given knowledge (v. 27; Ṭs, Z); others claim these words are spoken by the angels (Ṭs) or by God Himself (IK, Ṭs).

30 And it will be said unto those who are reverent, “What has your Lord sent down?” They will say, “Goodness.” For those who are virtuous in this world, there shall be good, and the Abode of the Hereafter is better. Excellent indeed is the abode of the reverent!

30 The response of the reverent to the question What has your Lord sent down? is offered without hesitation and serves as a contrast to the response of the arrogant to that same question in v. 24 (Bḍ, Z): the arrogant considered what has been sent down to be mere fables, but the reverent describe what God has sent down as goodness. For other descriptions of contrasting responses to revelation, see 2:26; 9:124–25. For those who are virtuous in this world, there shall be good—that is, in this world (Q)—although some say good here may be a reference to Paradise (Q). If the good they receive in this world is merely commensurate with good deeds they have done, their reward in the Hereafter will well exceed the good they have earned through their deeds (Bḍ, Z); cf. 6:160. The Abode of the Hereafter is better in every respect, but also because, in contrast to this world, it is lasting (Q; see 20:127; 28:60; 42:36; 87:17). Since with God is the reward of this world and the Hereafter (4:134), people are enjoined to pray to God for the good things of both worlds; see 2:200–2. But just as goodness can be rewarded in this world as well as the Hereafter (see v. 41; 10:63–64), so too are disbelievers and wrongdoers recompensed with disgrace in this world and punishment in the Hereafter (2:114; 3:56; 5:33, 41; 9:74; 13:34, 24:19, 23; 33:57; 39:26).

31 They shall enter the Gardens of Eden with rivers running below. Therein shall they have whatsoever they will. Thus does God recompense the reverent, 31 Throughout the Quran, Gardens of Eden refers to the paradisaal Gardens of the Hereafter; see also 9:72; 13:23; 19:61; 18:31; 20:76; 35:33; 38:50; 40:8; 98:8. Regarding the description of with rivers running below, which is repeated dozens of times throughout the Quran, see 2:25c. That those in the paradisaal Garden shall have whatsoever they will (see also 36:55–57; 37:41–49; 38:50–54; 41:31; 44:51–57; 52:22–24; 55:46–76; 56:12–38; 77:41–44) is understood by some to indicate that human beings can only have all of their desires fulfilled in the Garden (Bđ).

32 those whom the angels take while they are in a state of goodness. They will say, “Peace be upon you! Enter the Garden for that which you used to do.”

32 Regarding the angels taking souls of the deceased, see 4:97c; 6:61–62c; 7:37; 8:50; 32:11c. Peace be upon you is the greeting the angels give to the righteous, conveying greetings from God Himself and giving them glad tidings of Paradise (Z). Peace be upon you is also the greeting heard among those in the Garden (7:46; 10:10; 13:24; 14:24; 19:62; 33:44; 39:73) and is the proper greeting between Muslims in this world generally. In 36:58, “Peace!” is a “word” given to them by a Lord most Merciful. Those taken in a state of goodness refers to those who die innocent of all polytheism and pure in speech and action (Bđ, Z), or to those who were taken in an easy manner without hardship or pain, in contrast to the way the souls of the disbelievers are taken (Bđ; see, e.g., 8:50).

33 Do they await aught but that the angels should come upon them, or that the Command of thy Lord should come? Those before them did likewise. And God wronged them not, but they wronged themselves.

33 See 6:158c; 2:210. The coming of the angels or the Command of thy Lord can refer to either individual death or the coming of the Last Day and thus universal Resurrection and Judgment (Bđ, Z). The rhetorical question in this verse is meant to indicate the foolishness of waiting until the Final Judgment comes to heed the warnings that have been given or of seeking such proof of impending punishment before believing. Those before them did likewise is a reference to previous peoples destroyed for disbelieving in their prophets and is thus meant as a warning for the Quraysh. God wronged them not, but they wronged themselves by committing deeds that necessitated their destruction (Z); see also 3:117; 9:70; 10:44; 11:101; 16:118; 29:40; 30:9; 43:76. The repeated Quranic assertion that human beings wrong themselves through their actions indicates that human beings are responsible for their actions and thus confirms human free will in moral matters.

③④ Thus they were stricken by the evil deeds they had done, and were beset by that which they used to mock.

34 People suffer punishment for the deeds they have committed (Z), and the terrible consequences of their deeds fall ultimately upon themselves, since evil plotting besets none but its authors (35:43). Those who do wrong are thus solely responsible for the evil that befalls them; see 4:79: Whatever good befalls thee, it is from God, and whatever evil befalls thee, it is from thyself; and 6:164: No soul does evil, save against itself. That disbelievers will ultimately be beset by that which they used to mock is repeated in several places; see 11:8; 21:41; 39:48; 40:83; 45:33; 46:26.

③⑤ Those who ascribe partners unto God say, “Had God willed, we would not have worshipped aught apart from Him—neither us nor our fathers—nor would we have considered sacred aught apart from Him.” Those before them did likewise. Is aught incumbent upon the Messenger save the clear proclamation?

35 Cf. 6:148 and 43:19–20, where the idolaters make similar claims. The idolaters’ claim that, if not for God’s Will, they would not have considered sacred, or forbidden, aught apart from Him likely refers to the various kinds of camels that the idolatrous Arabs considered sacred and therefore forbidden to be eaten (see 5:103c; IK, Z) or to the arbitrary prohibitions the Arabs placed on the meat of certain animals (6:136–39). The idolaters’ assertion is offered disingenuously as an excuse, but from the Quranic perspective their statement is not necessarily untrue, for in 6:137, after recounting the evil practices of the idolaters, the Quran itself states: Had God willed, they would not have done so. The latter verse can be understood to mean that at some level God wills all things; but it can also be interpreted to mean that although God is capable of forcibly preventing the idolaters from engaging in such practices, He instead gave them the free will to choose their own religious beliefs and practices, thus making the idolaters fully accountable for their religious choices. Cf. 36:47, where the disbelievers similarly invoke God's Will in order to reject calls to spend their wealth in charity, saying, Are we to feed those whom, if God willed, He would feed? All such references to God's Will are based upon the false, if implicit, argument that, since all that exists comes about as a matter of God's Will, everything in existence is as it should be and therefore human beings as moral agents have no responsibility to rectify the errors and injustices or ameliorate the suffering they see in the world.

The verse's final rhetorical question (cf. 3:20; 13:40; 5:99; 16:82; 24:54; 29:18; 36:17) makes it clear that, having delivered the message with which he has been charged, the Prophet is innocent of whatever his people do thereafter of their own free will (Z). For Ash'arites, this does not necessarily mean that the responsibility for belief or disbelief lies with each individual as a matter of free will, but only that the Messenger himself is not responsible for it (R), leaving open the possibility that God could cause individuals to believe or disbelieve in His message. This Ash'arite view, however, is rejected by most Mu'tazilite and Shiite thinkers.

36 We indeed sent a messenger unto every community, "Worship God, and shun false deities!" Then among them were those whom God guided; and among them were those who were deserving of error. So journey upon the earth and behold how the deniers fared in the end!

36 Regarding the idea that every community of human beings has been sent a messenger, see also 10:47: For every community there is a messenger, and when their messenger comes, judgment shall be rendered between them with justice, and they will not be wronged; as well as 35:23; 67:9c. Elsewhere in the Quran it is said that for every community there will be a witness (4:41; 16:84; 28:75) and that every community is called to its book (45:28). The command to worship God is understood to be the heart of every revealed message and is uttered directly by several prophets, including Jesus (5:72, 117); Noah (7:59; 23:23); Abraham (29:16); Hūd (7:65; 11:50); Šālih (7:73; 11:61; 27:45); and Shu'ayb (7:85; 11:84; 29:36). See also 21:25: And We sent no messenger before thee, save that We revealed unto him, "Verily, there is no god but I, so worship Me!"

Ash'arite theologians suggest that among them were those whom God guided; and among them were those who were deserving of error (see also 7:30c) means that, after revealing the message to all, God guides some toward believing in it and causes others to disbelieve (R). Muʿtazilite commentators, however, adduce the phrase deserving of error as evidence of the opposite—namely, that guidance or misguidance is not compelled by God, but rather is something that is deserved or earned through an individual’s own moral choices (Bḍ). For example, the Quran indicates that God leads astray wrongdoers in particular (14:27; R) or those who have led others astray (see v. 37). The recommendation that one should journey upon the earth in order to learn the fate of earlier disbelieving people refers in particular to the Arabs, who reportedly would pass by the ruins of destroyed peoples as they traveled through the desert (cf. 3:137; 6:11; 27:69; 30:42), although this command is not limited to the Arabs. Regarding the spiritual value of journeying in general, see 30:9c.

37 Though thou eagerly desire that they be guided, verily God guides not those who lead astray, and they shall have no helpers.

37 This verse informs the Prophet that even though he ardently desired for his people to accept the Quranic message, the matter of guidance lay with God. See 10:99–100: And had thy Lord willed, all those who are on the earth would have believed all together. Wouldst thou compel men till they become believers? It is not for a soul to believe, save by God’s Leave. God does not guide those who lead astray, just as He does not guide wrongdoers (2:258; 3:86; 5:51; 6:144; 9:19, 109; 28:50; 46:10; 61:7; 62:5), disbelievers (2:264; 5:67; 9:37; 16:107), or the iniquitous (5:108; 9:24, 80; 61:5; 63:6). God guides not those who lead astray could also be translated to mean, “God guides not those whom He leads astray” (IK), as in 13:33: And whomsoever God leads astray, no guide has he (also 7:186). That such people have no helpers means that no one can protect them from God’s Punishment on the Day of Judgment (see, e.g., 2:270; 3:22; 5:72; 30:29).

38 And they swear by God their most solemn oaths [that] God will not resurrect those who die. Nay, but it is a promise binding upon Him, though most of mankind know not.

38 The idolaters' denial of the Resurrection is a recurrent Quranic theme (see, e.g., 17:49; 23:35–37; 37:16–17). That the idolaters swear . . . solemn oaths when denying the possibility of the Resurrection indicates for some that their hearts and intellects had completely rejected the idea as irrational (R). Other commentators observe that for the idolaters to swear in this way is paradoxical, for, on the one hand, they invoke God in their solemn oaths, indicating the great esteem they have for God's Power, while, on the other hand, they do so in the context of denying His ability to resurrect (Q). Al-Rāzī states that the idolaters' disbelief in the Resurrection and Judgment was, in effect, a rejection of the prophethood of Muhammad, whose mission consisted largely of delivering the message of their moral accountability in the Hereafter.

That the Resurrection is a promise binding upon Him means that it is something God has promised to fulfill (Ṭs). According to al-Ṭabrisī, it is a promise that could not but be fulfilled, since without Resurrection and Judgment there would be no purpose or meaning to moral accountability in this world. God can thus be said to have made the Resurrection of human beings and all morally accountable creatures incumbent upon Himself, as when it is said of God in 6:12: He has prescribed Mercy for Himself (see also 6:54). What most of mankind know not is the certainty of the Resurrection or the wisdom behind it (Ṭs)—namely, to give purpose and meaning to human moral responsibility and earthly life itself.

39 [This is so] that He might make clear unto them that wherein they differed, and that those who disbelieved might know that truly they were liars.

39 God also resurrects human beings that He might make clear unto them that wherein they differed during their earthly lives (Ṭs); see also 2:113; 5:48; 6:164; 10:93; 16:92. This verse may also be read as a continuation of the statement in v. 36, We indeed sent a messenger unto every community, meaning that God sent messengers to every community so that He might make clear unto them that wherein they differed. For the idea that the prophets and scriptures were sent for the purpose of resolving differences among people, see 2:213; 16:64.

40 And Our Word unto a thing, when We desire it, is only to say to it,

“Be!” and it is.

40 This description of the Divine creative Fiat is repeated throughout the Quran (see 2:117c; 3:47, 59; 6:73; 19:35; 36:82; 40:68) and indicates the manner in which God brings all things into existence through His Word, or more specifically through His command Be!

41 And those who emigrate for the sake of God, after having been wronged, We shall surely settle them in a good place in this world—and the reward of the Hereafter is greater, if they but knew—

41 Cf. 16:110. According to al-Rāzī, after the Makkan disbelievers swore solemn oaths that there would be no Resurrection (v. 38), it was clear that they were intent on persisting in their ignorance and disbelief, and the Muslims were thus told to emigrate from Makkah. This verse then addresses the rewards of emigration for the sake of God, that is, in the way of God and seeking to please Him (IK, R).

After having been wronged may refer to the various forms of persecution that the Prophet and his Makkan Companions endured before leaving for Madinah (Z) and to the persecution of those who had migrated earlier to Abyssinia (Z)—the latter group numbered about eighty and included ʿUthmān ibn ʿAffān (later the third Caliph, d. 36/656); his wife, Ruqayyah, the daughter of the Prophet; and the Prophet’s cousin Jaʿfar ibn Abī Ṭālib (IK). Some understand the verse as a reference specifically to those Companions who were tortured in Makkah before migrating to Madinah: Bilāl, ʿAmmār ibn Yāsir, Abū Jandal ibn Suhayl, Ṣuhayb ibn Sinān, and Khabbāb ibn al-Arat (Ṭs, W, Z).

The verse indicates that emigration for the sake of God brings also worldly benefit, for God will settle them in a good place in this world (see also 4:100, where it is said that emigrants will find upon the earth many a refuge and abundance). That they will be settled in a good place may refer to their settling in Madinah specifically (IK, JJ, R, Ṭ, Ṭs, Z) or more generally to the provision God would make for them in this world (IK, Ṭ) and the ultimate victory He would grant them in Makkah and other lands (R, Ṭs). Emigration also brings the reward of the Hereafter, especially for those who suffer and die as a result of it (3:195; 4:100; 22:58). See also 9:20, where those who emigrate are said to be greater in rank in the Eyes of God. If they but knew may refer to the disbelievers (JJ, Ṭs) who, if they had known the benefits the emigrants would obtain in this world and the next, would have accepted the religion (R, Z). It could also mean that if the emigrants themselves knew the rewards that awaited them, it would have increased their joy, striving, and patience (R, Ṭs, Z). Although the verse is widely understood as a reference to the historical Emigrants of the first Muslim community, some indicate that it applies to all who set out on the path of God, that is, in search of knowledge of God (Aj).

④⁴² those who are patient and trust in their Lord.

42 This verse refers to the Emigrants, who endured suffering and separation from their homeland in Makkah (Z). Regarding the importance of patience, see, for example, 2:45; 2:153c; 8:46; 11:11; 12:18c; 16:97, 126–27. Regarding the spiritual quality of trust in God (tawakkul), see 3:122; 4:81; 5:23; 8:61; 11:123c; 12:67; 25:28. According to al-Rāzī, patience represents the effort to subdue the ego, and trust in God comes when one has severed attachment to all worldly things and devoted oneself wholly to the Truth (God); patience is thus the beginning of the spiritual path and trust in God is its end.

④⁴³ We sent no messengers before thee, save men unto whom We revealed—ask the people of the Reminder, if you know not—

43 See also 12:109; 21:7. In response to the idolaters' assertion that God is too great to have a mere human being as His messenger, v. 43 asserts that all messengers sent by God were indeed men—that is, human beings like themselves (IK, Q, Ṭs)—rather than angels (Ṭ). In several verses, the disbelievers wonder why an angel has not been sent to deliver God's message (6:8; 11:12; 25:7; see also 6:8–9c) or express skepticism that a mere human being has been sent to them (6:91; 7:63, 69; 10:2; 11:27; 14:10; 17:94–95; 21:13; 23:24, 33–34; 26:154, 186; 38:4; 50:1; 54:24; 64:6). Although men here translates rijāl, which is often understood to be gender specific, most commentators indicate that it refers in this context to the prophets' human rather than angelic character, not to their gender. Al-Rāzī, however, notes that it may also mean that God sends men, and not women, as prophets. For further discussion of the possibility of female prophets, see the introduction to Sūrah 19. God sends as messengers men unto whom He revealed —that is, through the medium of angels (Z)—clear proofs and scriptures (v. 44). Some commentators suggest that the verse could also mean that when God sends angels (specifically the Archangel Gabriel) to convey revelation or Divine messages, the angels appear in human form (R); see 19:17, where Gabriel appears to Mary in the form of a perfect man, and commentary.

The people of the Reminder (see also 21:7c) may refer to those Arabs of the Prophet’s time (including both believers and disbelievers) who were knowledgeable about earlier peoples and generations (R, Ṭs). Others consider it to be a reference to the People of the Book, specifically Jews and Christians (Q, Ṭ, Ṭs, Z)—since even among the Makkan idolaters some reportedly considered the books of the Jews and Christians to contain true knowledge of past events (Ṭs)—or to the people of the Torah specifically, since the Torah is referred to as the Reminder (al-Dhikr) in 21:105 (R). Others assert that it refers to former Jews and Christians who had embraced Islam (Ṭ) or to the Jews and Christians of the past (IK). Still others say that the people of the Reminder refers to those who are knowledgeable about the Quran, since the Quran is also referred to as the Reminder in other verses (see, e.g., v. 44; 7:2; Q, Ṭ, Ṭs), or to all people of knowledge (Q, Qu, R).

According to Shiites, the people of the Reminder are the Shiite Imams, since the Reminder is a name also given to the Prophet (88:21), and the Imams are the people of the Reminder in that they are the family of the Prophet (Ṭs). Both the fifth and sixth Shiite Imams, Muḥammad al-Bāqir and Jaʿfar al-Ṣādiq, are reported to have said, “We are the people of the Reminder (ahl al-dhikr)” (IK, Ṭ). Although this is a predominantly Shiite view, the Sunni commentator Ibn Kathīr agrees with the identification of the people of the Reminder as the family of the Prophet (ahl al-bayt), arguing that many of the greatest scholars from the Muslim community were descendants and relatives of the Prophet.

Some legal scholars who opposed the use of qiyās, or “analogical reasoning,” as a source of Islamic Law adduced this verse to indicate that when jurists are confronted with a new matter for which they have insufficient knowledge, they should seek out a scholar, or mujtahid (a jurist capable of deriving Islamic Law from its revealed sources), more knowledgeable than themselves and follow the latter’s opinion, rather than relying on their own powers of analogical reasoning. Al-Rāzī reports but also dismisses this interpretation, observing that qiyās was a well-established method of deriving legal rulings within the early Muslim community.

44 clear proofs and scriptures. And We have sent down the Reminder unto thee that thou mightest clarify for mankind that which has been sent down unto them, that haply they may reflect.

44 Clear proofs (bayyināt), a term used throughout the Quran, may refer to the miracles performed by the prophets (R; see, e.g., 2:87, 92, where the term refers to the miracles performed by Jesus and Moses, respectively) or to anything the prophets bring as a clear demonstration of the truth of the guidance they convey (see, e.g., 2:185, where the Quran is said to manifest clear proofs of guidance). Scriptures translates zukur, a term used to denote scripture generally (see, e.g., 23:52) and also mentioned in conjunction with clear proofs in 3:184 and 35:25. Zukur is related to zabūr, which the Quran uses as a specific reference to the Psalms of David (al-Zabūr; see 4:163; 17:55; 21:105) and which al-Rāghib al-Iṣfahānī describes as a scripture that contains spiritual wisdom, but not legal prescriptions. The Reminder in this verse refers to the Quran (Q, Ṭs), whose purpose is to clarify for mankind that which has been sent down unto them, that is, the laws, rulings, and indications or proofs of God's Oneness (Ṭs). That haply they may reflect indicates that God wishes all human beings to ponder and consider carefully the scriptures and prophetic messages sent to them, so that they might come to know the truth, a view contrary to the one that argues that God does not necessarily wish for all to be guided (Ṭs, Z); see 16:9c.

45 Do those who have plotted evil deeds feel secure that God will not cause the earth to engulf them, or that the punishment will not come upon them whence they are not aware?

46 Or that He will not seize them in the midst of their going to and fro, and they will be powerless to thwart [it]?

47 Or that He will not seize them with a gradual diminishing? And truly your Lord is Kind, Merciful.

45–47 Cf. 7:97–99; 12:107; 17:68–69; 67:16–17 for similar sets of questions posed to idolaters, all of which are meant as a warning (R). Those who have plotted evil deeds refers most likely to the Makkan idolaters and their attempts to persecute and harass the Prophet and his followers by secret means (R) or otherwise to thwart the religion of Islam (Q). That God might cause the earth to engulf them may be understood literally, as this seems to have been the fate of the Israelite renegade Korah (21:81; Q, R), but it may also mean that God will cause them to vanish from the earth (Q). That punishment might come upon them whence they are not aware (cf. 16:26; 39:25) could be a reference to the destruction of the people of Lot (Q, R) or a foretelling of the disaster that would strike the Makkan idolaters at Badr (Q). God may also seize them in the midst of their going to and fro—that is, while traveling (Q, R)—or wherever they may be (Q), or by night or by day (Q). The threat that God might seize them with a gradual diminishing (see also 13:41; 21:44) is understood by some to mean “seize them with fear” (Q, R). Despite these threats, God is described as Kind and Merciful, because He is not quick to punish the disbelievers, but delays punishment (R), in order to give them an opportunity to repent.

48 Casts its shadow to the right and to the left refers to the motion of a shadow from one side of an object to the other as a result of the daily movement of the sun from east to west. The “prostrate” position of the shadows on the ground is presented as a symbolic illustration of the idea that all creatures are ultimately submitted to the Will of God—if not voluntarily, then existentially—and that it is in the nature of all created beings to prostrate themselves before God (Bq), as in 13:15: And unto God prostrates whosoever is in the heavens and on the earth, willingly or unwillingly, as do their shadows in the morning and the evening. While in a state of abject humility describes the prostration of the shadows, but also describes the created bodies casting the shadows (Bđ, Ṭs, Z). Just as the prostrate position of a creature’s shadow can be said to represent the creature’s inward prostration to God (IK), so too can the waves of the sea be said to be “prostrating” when they come crashing down (IK), and the palm tree “prostrating” when it bends over from the weight of its ripened fruit (Bđ). All such references to the “prostration” of natural phenomena as reflected in their ordinary way of being are meant to serve as a contrast to human beings, who outwardly prostrate or refuse to do so as a matter of will. Thus according to Islamic thought, human beings (and jinn) are the only creatures capable of rebelling against God and their own nature, which is submission to God.

49 And unto God prostrates whatever crawling creatures or angels are in the heavens or on the earth, and they do not wax arrogant.

50 They fear their Lord above them, and they do whatsoever they are commanded.

49–50 Angels and other nonhuman creatures (except jinn) are not considered to have free will and thus live in utter submission to God’s Will. Those in the heavens refers to the angels, the sun, the moon (the latter two are described as subservient to God’s Command in 13:2; 31:29), and the stars (55:6); those on the earth may include all earthly creatures along with the terrestrial angels (Q), meaning those angels who carry out aspects of God’s Will on earth rather than residing exclusively in the celestial realm. Crawling creatures refers to creatures that have bodies and exercise bodily movements in contrast to the angels, who, as pure spirits, move without bodies (Bḍ). They do not wax arrogant; that is, they are not too arrogant to worship God (Q). They fear their Lord above them, meaning that they fear punishment may come down upon them from above (Q, Ṭs) or that they fear God, Who is above them in His very being—as in the Quranic statement He is Dominant over His servants (6:18; see also 7:127)—not that He can be said to be “above them” in a physical sense, since God cannot be defined by a physical relation to anything else (Ṭs). They fear their Lord above them can also be rendered, “They fear their Lord from above them,” meaning that the angels, despite their lofty position in the celestial realm above human beings, remain always in fear of and submissive to their Lord (Q, Ṭs).

51 And God says, “Do not take up two gods. Truly He is only one God. So be in awe of Me.”

51 This is the only place in the Quran where the idea of a duality, rather than a plurality, of gods is rejected; the likely meaning here, however, is simply that one should not take, in addition to God, any other as god (Ṭs)—two gods meaning anything more than the One. In the present context, the Divine command Be in awe of Me (cf. 2:40) means that one should fear God and no other (see also 7:154, 205; 13:13; 23:57), as in 2:150: Fear them not, but fear Me (see also 3:175; 5:3, 44). From a metaphysical perspective, one can fear nothing but God and long for nothing but God, even if one does not realize it, since all that one might fear or desire is dependent for its own existence upon Him (R).

This verse provides an example of the Quranic phenomenon of iltifāt, that is, a change of grammatical voice in the middle of a verse. The verse begins by speaking of God in the third person (God says, . . . “Truly He is only one God”), but finishes with a direct Divine command in the first person, Be in awe of Me! The shift is meant to inspire fear or awe (R, Z), suddenly revealing to readers or listeners, in a very direct way, the immanence of the Divine Voice and Presence in the Quranic words.

52 Unto Him belongs whatsoever is in the heavens and the earth, and religion belongs to Him forever. Will you then revere something other than God?

52 Unto Him belongs whatsoever is in the heavens and on the earth is repeated throughout the Quran (see, e.g., 2:116; 6:12; 10:68). Religion belongs to Him forever may also be rendered, “Judgment belongs to Him forever,” since religion translates dīn, which is also used to refer to judgment in the Quran, as in the Day of Judgment (yawm al-dīn; see 1:4c). Many early commentators, such as Ibn ʿAbbās, Mujāhid, and Qatādah, understood dīn here as a general reference to the obedience that is owed to God (R, Ṭs), in which case the verse might be rendered, “Obedience is ever due unto Him.” Since, in addition to “religion,” dīn can also mean both obedience to God and God’s Judgment, the verse can be understood to mean that obedience to God is always obligatory and that the reward or punishment given by God (i.e., His “Judgment”) is eternal (Z).

53 Whatever blessing you have, it is from God. Then, when affliction befalls you, it is unto Him that you cry for help.

54 Then, when He removes the affliction from you, behold, a group among you ascribes partners unto their Lord.

55 So let them be ungrateful for that which We have given them: “Enjoy yourselves! For soon you will know.”

53–55 Cf. 30:33–34. The Quran repeatedly mentions people who turn to the One God for help in times of affliction, fear, or uncertainty, but then return to forgetfulness, idolatry, and polytheism when their troubles have passed; see 7:189–90; 10:12; 11:10; 17:67, 83; 29:65; 30:33; 39:8; 39:49; 41:50; 70:21. For Quranic examples of the correct response to worldly affliction, see 2:155–56; 21:83.

Whatever blessing you have, it is from God (cf. 4:79) indicates that, just as all creatures owe their creation, continued existence, and obedience exclusively to Him (see 16:52c), so too do they owe Him all gratitude for the blessings they have been given (R). Some note that this includes the blessing of faith (īmān), for blessings can be both spiritual (such as knowledge of God) and material (R) and are manifold for all human beings, for were you to count the blessings of God, you could not number them (v. 18; see also 16:18c; 14:34). In the face of God’s Bounty and Mercy, the Quran presents ingratitude as a basic human flaw, declaring repeatedly, Man is ever ungrateful! (17:67; 22:66; 25:50; 42:48; 43:15; 80:17; 100:6). Ingratitude is, in fact, one of the basic meanings of the word kufr, usually translated as “disbelief.”

So let them be ungrateful could also be read to mean that God lifts their affliction “only to have them be ungrateful” (IK, R, Q, Z). The command Enjoy yourselves! (cf. 29:66; 30:34) is meant as a warning (Q, R) and takes the form of other Quranic warnings rendered as a statement of license: So wait! (9:52; 10:20; 10:102); So worship whatsoever you will apart from Him (39:15); and So do [as you will]; we shall do [as we will] (41:5). Soon you will know; that is, soon the disbelievers will know the consequences of their ingratitude in this life and their punishment (IK, Q, R).

56 And they dedicate a share of that which We have provided them unto that which they know not. By God, you shall surely be questioned about that which you used to fabricate.

56 This verse refers to the pagans’ practice of considering certain animals sacred and their meat forbidden for consumption as well as dedicating a certain portion of their wealth to their idols; see 5:103c; 6:136–39 (R). The Makkans dedicate their animals and their wealth to that which they know not, that is, to their idols, whom the idolaters “did not know” were incapable of bringing them harm or benefit or of interceding on their behalf, as they imagined (R, Z). This verse could also be read to mean that the idolaters dedicate a share “to those who know not,” meaning to the idols, who are inanimate and thus do not know even that a share has been dedicated to them (R, Z). You shall surely be questioned is meant as a threat (R, Z) and may refer to the questioning human beings are said to undergo in the grave after death but before Resurrection or to their questioning on the Day of Judgment after Resurrection (R); see 21:23; 55:39. That which you used to fabricate refers to these sacrificial practices, which the idolaters falsely claimed were commanded by God (Q).

57 And they assign unto God daughters—glory be to Him!—while they have that which they desire.

57 Regarding the attribution of daughters to God and the Quran’s rejection of it, see vv. 58–59; 6:100c; 37:149–53c; 43:16; 52:39, where the idolaters’ assigning daughters to God is contrasted with their own preference for sons, which is what is meant here by they have that which they desire (Q). The belief that the angels were daughters of God was reportedly particular to the Kinānah and Khuza^cah tribes in Arabia (Q, R). Their beliefs are considered abominable primarily because they attributed offspring to God, but perhaps also because they considered the angels to be females (R).

58 And when one of them receives tidings of a female [child], his face darkens, and he is choked with anguish.

59 He hides from the people on account of the evil of the tidings he has been given. Shall he keep it in humiliation, or bury it in the dust? Behold! Evil indeed is the judgment they make!

58–59 Receives tidings translates bushshira, from a root that commonly connotes the deliverance of good news (or “glad tidings”), although al-Rāzī argues that it can be used for any kind of news that alters the expression and demeanor of the hearer. However, the Quran elsewhere uses this term in a way that may seem ironic, for example, when it speaks of glad tidings of a painful punishment (e.g., 3:21). In the present verse, the use of this term may be meant to emphasize the contrast between what was in reality good news—the birth of a child—and the idolater’s distressed reaction to it as a result of the blindness caused by his false beliefs. His face darkens metaphorically describes an expression of extreme sadness and distress; that he is choked with anguish means that he is unable to speak due to his overwhelming sadness (IK). He contemplates burying his female child in the dust, a reference to the pre-Islamic practice of female infanticide through live burial.

In the warrior culture of pre-Islamic Arabia, daughters were seen as a liability, and burying them alive is alluded to in the Quran and in other Islamic accounts of the period as the common method for killing infant daughters. Sometimes this was done out of fear of poverty (cf. 6:151; 17:31) and sometimes to protect or defend the father’s “honor” (R). The Quran’s condemnation of this practice, however, makes it clear that killing one’s children for such reasons is among the most heinous and evil practices of the idolatrous Arabs. In fact, although embracing Islam was considered to absolve former idolaters or disbelievers of previous sins, many of the Prophet’s Companions continued to experience terrible remorse and sadness over what they had done to their infant daughters in pre-Islamic times, to the extent that the Prophet felt compelled to suggest additional forms of atonement for them to assuage their guilt (R).

Evil indeed is the judgment they make refers to the idolaters’ attitude toward their daughters, their sense of shame on account of them, and their practice of killing them as well as to their attributing daughters to God Himself (R). Ibn ‘Ajībah says that this verse should serve as a chastisement and a warning to those who dislike daughters, an attitude that he describes as based on a Satanic impulse and carried over from the practices of idolatrous times. He argues that it is incumbent upon people to show great generosity and kindness to their daughters, even more so than to sons, and that supporting daughters receives greater reward than supporting sons. According to a ḥadīth, the Prophet said that whoever has daughters and treats them well will be shielded from the fire of Hell by those daughters (Q).

⑥ Those who believe not in the Hereafter have an evil description, while unto God belongs the loftiest description. And He is the Mighty, the Wise.

60 Evil description refers to the idolaters' excessive desire for sons and aversion to daughters (R) or simply to their disbelief and ignorance and final end in Hellfire (Q). God possesses the loftiest description (see also 30:27); that is, He is exalted above the notion of Him having children at all (R) or He is beyond all need of creatures and any similarity to them (Z). God's loftiest description is also said to include His being One, Creator, Provider, and Powerful (Q). Others say the loftiest description of God is found in the shahādah, the declaration of God's Oneness, "There is no god but God." (Ṭ).

There may seem to be a contradiction between God's having the loftiest description in this verse and the command in v. 74, Set forth no parables for God (R), or the statement in 42:11 Naught is like unto Him (Q). Description in this verse translates mathal, which has several meanings, including the metaphysical "archetype," but in the Quran mathal more generally denotes a purported description or likeness, or a "parable," meaning an extended metaphor, as it is translated in v. 74. Al-Rāzī asserts that any description or metaphor that God may use for Himself in the Quran should be accepted as true, and al-Qurṭubī gives an example from 24:35, God is the Light of the heavens and the earth, which many understand as a metaphorical or symbolical description, although metaphysically this does not exclude its literal and outward meaning. However, human beings should not contrive their own descriptions or metaphors for God (R).

61 And were God to take mankind to task for their wrongdoing, He would not leave a single creature upon [the earth]. But He grants them reprieve till a term appointed. And when their term comes, they shall not delay it a single hour, nor shall they advance it.

61 See commentary on the similar verse in 35:45; cf. 18:58. Instead of taking people to task, God grants them reprieve till a term appointed. However, such reprieve is only given while people are alive, for God will not grant any soul reprieve when its term has come (63:11). God grants reprieve or respite to Iblīs/Satan (7:14–15; 15:36–37; 38:79–80) as well as to human beings in various states of wrongdoing (see, e.g., 14:42; 7:183; 13:32; 22:44; 71:4). Reprieve or respite is sometimes granted to allow people to repent of their sins (71:4), but in other cases it provides an opportunity for wrongdoers to increase in sin (3:178) or, in the case of Satan, to cause others to sin. Thus, one cannot assume that a respite from Divine Punishment means permanent security or that it is a sign of Divine approval of one's actions. That people cannot delay or advance their term is also mentioned in 7:34; 10:49; 23:43; 34:30; 71:4.

62 They assign unto God that to which they are averse. And their tongues utter the lie that the best shall be theirs. There is no doubt that theirs shall be the Fire, and they shall be hastened [toward it].

62 That to which they are averse are daughters, which the Makkan idolaters despise for themselves, but attribute to God (see commentary on 16:57–59). They claim that the best shall be theirs; that is, they will have sons (Ṭ); cf. 19:77; 19:77–78c. Hastened [toward it] translates mufraṭūn, which can also mean “to be abandoned” (Ṭ), so that the clause might be translated, “and they shall be abandoned [in it].” Both interpretations are plausible. It is also possible that mufraṭūn should be read mufriṭūn, meaning those who are excessive in sin and in the false things they attribute to God (R).

63 By God, We have indeed sent messengers unto communities before thee. But Satan made their deeds seem fair unto them. So he is their protector on this day, and theirs shall be a painful punishment.

63 The message that some previous communities to whom messengers were sent refused to change their false beliefs and practices because those things seemed “fair” or right to them is meant as a consolation to the Prophet, who was saddened by the ignorance and disbelief of many among his people and their persistence in idolatry (Q, R). The Quran frequently mentions that the deeds of disbelievers and wrongdoers were made to seem fair to them (6:122; 10:12; 13:33; 35:8; 47:14); in some cases, as here, it is Satan who makes their deeds seem fair (6:43; 8:48; 29:38), although in 6:108 it is God Who makes their deeds seem fair, perhaps as a test (see 6:108c). That Satan is their protector on this day may mean that he is the protector of such people on the Day of Resurrection (Q, R, Z), in which case this is meant to be ironic or satirical in tone, for to have Satan as a protector on this Day is to have no protector at all (R, Z); see, for example, 14:22, where Satan disowns his followers on the Day of Judgment and says that he can offer them no help. So he is their protector on this day also means that Satan is the (false) protector or friend of the disbelievers in earthly life, deceiving them and turning them away from the Prophet, just as he did with those who disbelieved in earlier prophets, by making their deeds seem fair unto them (R) and leading them into error (Ṭs, Z). For “satans” as the false friends of the disbelievers, see 6:121; 7:27, 30.

64 And We did not send down unto thee the Book, save that thou mightest make clear to them that wherein they differed, and as a guidance and a mercy for a people who believe.

64 The Book—that is, the Quran—is sent to clarify differences regarding religion (R), as are all prophets and revelations, and to make clear God’s Oneness, the principles of just relations between people, and what is permitted or forbidden by God (Ṭs); see also 16:89; 27:76; 43:63. God also clarifies the religious differences between people after their death and resurrection; see, for example, vv. 39, 92; 5:48. The Quran is sent as a guidance and a mercy from God; see also 6:157; 7:203; 10:57; 16:89; 27:77; in 6:154 the Torah is described in the same manner. The guidance and mercy in Divine Revelation are specifically for a people who believe; this is similar to 2:2, where the Quran is described as a guidance for the reverent. Al-Rāzī says that this should not be understood as contradicting the reality of the Quran as a source of universal guidance and mercy, but rather as indicating that only the believers and the reverent will accept its guidance and benefit from it.

65 And God sends down water from the sky, and thereby revives the earth after its death. Surely in this is a sign for a people who hear.

65 In vv. 65–69 the Quran mentions or alludes to four drinks that benefit human beings (cf. 23:81): water, milk, the strong drink of the vine, and honey. If we understand the strong drink in v. 67 to refer to wine, then these same four substances are mentioned in the same order as the contents of the four rivers in Paradise in 47:15, suggesting that the enjoyments of this world reflect those of the Hereafter as implied in 2:25: Whensoever they are given a fruit therefrom as provision, they say, “This is the provision we received aforesaid,” and they were given a likeness of it.

God’s sending down water in the form of rain (Ṭs) to revive the earth is mentioned throughout the Quran as one of God’s most important blessings as well as a symbol of His power to resurrect the dead to new life; see, for example, 6:99; 7:57; 13:17; 14:32; 15:22; 16:10; 20:53; 22:5; 27:60. Based on the description of the Quran in v. 64 as a guidance and a mercy, Ibn Kathīr makes an analogy between the Quran, whose guidance revives hearts previously deadened by disbelief, and the “water sent down” in this verse, which revives the earth after its death. People who hear means those who heed and pay attention to the signs of God, consider them well, and take a lesson from them (Ṭs).

66 And surely in the cattle there is a lesson for you: We give you to drink from that which is in their bellies, between refuse and blood, as pure milk, palatable to those who drink [thereof].

66 The blessings that God provides to human beings through the cattle are also mentioned in vv. 5–7, 80 and include warmth, food, bearing burdens, and beauty; see 16:5–7c. This verse adds the milk that they provide to the list of blessings from which human beings should take a lesson and for which they should be thankful (see also 23:21; 36:73). In addition to being one of the four rivers of the Garden (see 47:15), milk was the drink the Prophet chose when offered either milk or wine during his Night Journey (see 17:1c). Having chosen milk, the Prophet was told that he had been guided to the drink of fiṭrah (Ibn Hishām, al-Sīrah al-nabawiyyah [Beirut, 1999], 2:31), that is, the drink of primordial purity, which is thus symbolically contrasted to wine, a drink related to notions of maturity and age.

We give you to drink translates nusqīkum, which can mean to provide a perpetual source of drink (Ṭ), since cattle provide a continuously replenished source of milk throughout most of their lives. The milk comes forth between refuse and blood, meaning that it is not contaminated by either of these impure substances that exist in the animal and also issue from it (Ṭ). Commentators observe that there is a barrier between the different fluids, so that neither the color, nor the taste, nor the smell of blood or refuse enters the milk, and it remains pure (Z). The pure milk that comes forth from between refuse and blood is likened by Ibn ‘Ajībāh to the pure path of Sufism that emerges as a middle way between following the Sharī‘ah only outwardly, on the one hand, and seeking to cling only to pure truth and ignoring the external requirements of the Sharī‘ah, on the other. Similarly, he likens it to the path of true spiritual training (tarbiyah), which lies between the paths of (sober) wayfaring (sulūk) and ecstatic attraction (jadhb): if the people of wayfaring are veiled from God and those of pure attraction have left the path of God altogether, the people of spiritual training are a barzakh, or “isthmus,” between these “two seas” (25:53; 27:61; 55:19), for they are ecstatically attracted inwardly and sober wayfarers outwardly.

67 And from the fruits of the date palm and the vine, from which you derive strong drink and a goodly provision. Surely in this is a sign for a people who understand.

67 This verse can be read as a continuation of v. 66, meaning either, “We give you to drink from that which is in their bellies . . . and [We give you to drink] from the fruits of the date palm and the vine” (Q), or that in the fruits of the date palm and the vine, as in the cattle, there is a lesson for you (v. 66; Q). The vine and date palm are mentioned elsewhere as among God’s many blessings to human beings (13:4; 23:19; 36:34; 80:28–29); the two refer symbolically to rich and luxurious gardens (2:266; 17:90).

Strong drink translates sakar, which etymologically refers to something that is intoxicating and is thus a reference to the wine that can be made from either grapes (the fruit of the vine) or dates. This verse, which suggests that the strong drink of the date palm and the vine is among the many blessings God has bestowed on human beings, was revealed to the Prophet in Makkah and is earlier than Quranic verses revealed later in Madinah that discouraged the consumption of intoxicating beverages (2:219; 4:43) and eventually prohibited them altogether (5:90). Wine and, by extension, all intoxicating beverages are therefore considered to have been gradually limited and eventually prohibited by these successive revelations; see 5:90–91c. As Islamic Law explicitly forbids all intoxicating beverages and substances, most commentators and legal scholars consider the present verse to be abrogated (Q, Ṭ). Some, however, do not consider this to be a case of abrogation, technically speaking, since 5:90 explicitly prohibits khamr (wine made from grapes), but not more broadly sakar (Ṭ). Moreover, abrogation only applies to verses that set down a clear legal ruling, and the present verse simply points out the benefits of the strong drink derived from these fruits (Aj), even if it seems to contain an implicit ruling that the strong drink of these fruits is permissible (Q). Rather than considering the verse to be abrogated, therefore, some commentators interpreted sakar here as referring to the nonintoxicating juices derived from the fruit of these plants (Q, Ṭ), arguing that these licit beverages are only referred to as sakar, because they could become intoxicating if left to ferment (Q). Others suggested that the drink referred to in this verse is nabīdh, a juice made from dates and/or raisins that Ḥanafī law considered permissible to drink as long as it had not become intoxicating (Q).

Despite its legal prohibition, wine retains an important spiritual and symbolic significance in Islam. It is among the pleasures of the Garden, and in 47:15, it is one of the four rivers of Paradise, suggesting that wine in its essence, or at least in its purified paradisaical form, is a sublime substance of which the inhabitants of the Garden will partake (see 83:25). The contrast between the Quran's mention of wine as one of the enjoyments of the Hereafter and the explicit prohibition against drinking wine in this world served to make wine and intoxication a potent symbol in Sufi discourse for knowledge of God (maʿrifah), and for the encounter with and the realization of the reality of the Divine Presence, which ordinarily one cannot experience in this life, but which the pious will enjoy in the Hereafter and the spiritually realized might enjoy inwardly even in this life. Moreover, as wine can represent simultaneously both the forbidden and the sublime, it served as a powerful symbol of certain Sufi spiritual practices and experiences, particularly ecstatic ones, the intensity of which was sometimes the subject of criticism by exoteric authorities. Wine in fact became a central symbol in Sufi literature, as seen in the poetry of such great Sufi masters as ʿUmar ibn al-Fāriḍ (d. 632/1235) and Jalāl al-Dīn Rūmī (d. 672/1273).

From the date palm and the vine, one also derives goodly provision, which is generally considered to refer to all of the lawful things that one might consume from these plants (Q, Ṭ), including their fruits and nonfermented forms of juice made from them. A people who understand refers to those who use their intellect to discern and contemplate the signs and proofs of God and take lessons from them (Aj, Ṭ).

68 And thy Lord revealed unto the bee, “Take up dwellings among the mountains and the trees and among that which they build.

69 Then eat of every kind of fruit, and follow the ways of your Lord made easy.” A drink of diverse hues comes forth from their bellies wherein there is healing for mankind. Truly in that is a sign for a people who reflect.

68–69 Thy Lord revealed unto the bee is understood by some to refer to God's inspiring the bee or placing a certain kind of knowledge in its heart that is unique to this creature (Z). Revealed translates awḥā, which is derived from a root often used in the Quran for Divine Revelation in a formal, scriptural sense, but also for other modes of Divine communication or inspiration (Ṭs): for example, God’s communication to Moses’ mother (20:38; 28:7), God’s inspiring Jesus’ apostles (5:111), God’s “inspiring” the earth to relate its chronicles (99:5), and His “revealing” to each heaven its command (41:12). The “revelation” to the bee may simply be a metaphorical way of referring to the innate, instinctual behaviors that God has implanted in the bee (R, Ṭs), although al-Rāzī suggests that it is at least possible that bees can be said to possess intelligence, including the ability to know God’s commands and prohibitions. Al-Rāzī argues that there is evidence of the bees’ intelligence in their construction of their hives and the perfectly symmetrical, hexagonal structures characteristic of them—the secrets of which elude even human intelligence—as well as their apparent social organization, headed by a leader recognized and obeyed by the rest. The idea that bees knowingly and consciously obey the commands “revealed” to them by God would be consistent with literal readings of other verses that describe all creatures as constituting an ummah, that is, a religious community (6:38), as glorifying and praising God (17:44; 57:1; 59:1, 24; 60:1; 61:1; 62:1; 64:1), or as “prostrating” (see commentary on 16:48–50).

The content of God’s revelation to the bee is understood to refer to the bees’ construction of hives in the mountains and the trees as well as in that which they build, that is, in the structures and roofs of human buildings (R, Ṭū, Z). That which they build may also refer to the beehives constructed by human beings for keeping bees and obtaining their honey (Q). Follow the ways of your Lord made easy enjoins the bee to follow the process God has taught it for making honey (Z) or to follow the paths by which it may obtain the fruits that God has ordained for it to consume (R).

The drink of diverse hues that comes forth from their bellies is honey (Z), wherein there is healing for mankind. According to al-Qurṭubī, this verse legitimates and makes permissible in a general way seeking medicinal treatments for physical ailments, against the view of those who might argue that, since all that befalls one in life comes from God (4:78), one should simply endure illness until God decides to remove it. Regarding the healing properties of honey specifically, a man told the Prophet that his brother had a stomach ailment. The Prophet instructed the man to give his brother honey. When the man later returned to say that the honey had not helped him, the Prophet again instructed the man to feed his brother honey, saying, “God speaks the truth [regarding the healing power of honey] and your brother’s stomach lies.” The man again fed his brother honey, and he was cured (IK, R, Z).

Some Sufi commentators say that a knower and seeker of God who follows the ways and commands of the Lord, as does the bee, will, like the bee, become a source of spiritual healing for others (Aj, Su).

The Quran is also described as a source of healing for humanity (10:57; 17:82), and in a ḥadīth the Prophet combines the mention of these two forms of “healing,” saying, “Honey is the cure for every ailment, and the Quran is the cure for that which lies within breasts [10:57], so I commend to you the two cures: the Quran and honey!” (Ṭs, Z)—both of which come about, according to the Quran, through wahy, or “revelation,” at least symbolically in the case of the bee. It is reported from Ibn ʿAbbās that the Prophet forbade his followers to kill bees and other animals mentioned favorably in the Quran, such as ants (see 27:18–19; Q). According to the Mālikī school of law and some interpretations of al-Shāfiʿī’s view, honey is exempt from the mandatory alms (zakāh), meaning that one does not have to pay alms on stores of honey (Q).

According to some Shiite interpretations, the bee here is a reference to ʿAlī and the family of the Prophet, and the drink of diverse hues refers symbolically to the knowledge of the Quran and its wisdom that is found in the teachings of ʿAlī and his descendants, teachings that are spiritually healing (Kā, Qm). This interpretation is also noted by some Sunni commentators, such as al-Qurṭubī and al-Zamakhsharī, although its soundness is refuted by them. The Shiite commentator al-Ṭabrisī indicates that this interpretation derives from ʿAlī’s statement that he was the yaʿsūb of the believers (Ṭs); yaʿsūb means both a male bee and a leader or chieftain.

70 God created you; then He takes you [unto Himself]. And among you are those who are brought back to the weakest of ages, such that they know nothing after having had knowledge. Truly God is Knowing, Powerful.

70 Cf. 22:5–6c. Life is here described as a process of moving from the weakness of infancy, to the strength of adulthood, to the weakness of old age, as in 30:54: God is He Who created you from weakness, then ordained strength after weakness, then ordained weakness and old age after strength. Weakness and strength are here correlated with degrees of knowledge. In v. 78, it is said, God brought you forth from the bellies of your mothers, knowing naught, and the present verse describes old age, the weakest of ages, as one in which people come to know nothing after having had knowledge in their adult lives. God, by contrast then, is Knowing and Powerful, indicating that His Attributes of Knowledge and Power, unlike human knowledge and power, do not wax and wane (Ṭ). That God takes you [unto Himself] is a reference to every individual's earthly death. Some consider the weakest of ages to be seventy-five or ninety (R, Ṭ, Ṭs), a time when, for many, weakness begins to appear in limb and mind. That some reach an age when they know nothing after having had knowledge refers to the state of forgetfulness and senility that afflicts some in advanced age (Ṭs). This description does not negate, however, the wisdom and maturity associated with old age in the Islamic tradition, as manifested in the term shaykh (or in Persian, pīr), which in its most basic meaning refers to a person of advanced age, but which is used to designate a Sufi master or any person of great learning and intellectual authority.

71 And God has favored some of you above others in provision. Those who have been favored do not hand over their provision to those whom their right hands possess, such that they would be equal in this regard. Would they thus reject the blessings of God?

71 That God gives greater earthly provision to some and not to others (see also 13:4) is meant as a test (see 6:165) and should not be the cause of envy, covetousness (4:32), or excessive pride (18:32–43), for in any case surely the Hereafter is greater in ranking and greater in favor (17:21). Commentators point out that those favored . . . in provision and those who are servants or slaves (those whom their right hands possess) are equal in their humanity; indeed, Muslims are enjoined to think of them as brothers and sisters, and many aḥādīth instruct Muslims to feed and clothe them with the same food and clothing they enjoy themselves (Z). The purpose of this verse is thus not to declare an existential inequality between masters and servants or slaves, but rather to make an analogy with regard to human behavior. The verse points to the fact that human masters would not be willing to give their slaves so much of their provision that the slaves would become equal in wealth to themselves; in fact, those masters would consider such a thing unacceptable. Yet those who ascribe partners unto God presume to do exactly this when they make God's servants or slaves—that is, creatures of His own making—equal to God Himself (R, Z). This argument, also made in 30:28, is similar to the argument in vv. 57–59, where the Quran asks how the idolaters can ascribe daughters to God when they themselves loathe having daughters.

72 And God has ordained mates for you from among yourselves, and from your mates He has ordained for you children and grandchildren. And He provided you with good things. Will they then believe in that which is false, and show ingratitude for the blessings of God?

72 Among the many Divine gifts to human beings are mates from among yourselves with whom one might find rest, affection, and mercy (30:21); see also 4:1; 7:189; 42:11. Here and in 26:33, children are described as a blessing granted by God, but along with wealth children are also emblematic of specifically worldly goods and status (see, e.g., 9:69; 18:39; 23:55), and they cannot avail one in the Hereafter (3:10). Like all worldly blessings, they can also be a trial (8:28; 64:15), a diversion (63:9), and even a spiritual enemy (64:14). Grandchildren translates hafadah, which can also refer to sons-in-law, male aides and servants, and even stepsons (T).

73 And they worship, apart from God, that which has no power over any provision that may come to them from the heavens and the earth; nor are they capable [of such].

73 That which has no power over any provision refers to the idols and false deities, who, in contrast to God, Whose manifold provision for humanity is recounted in this sūrah, give no provision at all (see also 29:17), since it is God Who outspreads and straitens provision for whomsoever He will (13:26; 17:30; 28:82; 30:37; 34:36, 39; 39:52; 42:12; see 34:39c).

74 So set forth no parables for God. Truly God knows and you know not.

74 Set forth no parables for God is intended as a criticism of those who would attribute partners unto God or consider other beings to be comparable to Him in some way (Z), for naught is like unto Him (42:11; 112:4). The only acceptable “parables” or descriptions of God are those expressed in the Quran itself (see 16:60c). See also 36:78: And he has set forth for Us a parable and forgotten his own creation, saying, "Who revives these bones, decayed as they are?"

75 God sets forth a parable: a servant enslaved, with power over naught, and he unto whom We have provided a goodly provision from Us, who then spends of it secretly and openly. Are they equal? Praise be to God! Nay, but most of them know not.

76 God sets forth a parable: two men, one of whom is dumb, with power over naught, who is a burden unto his master; wheresoever he dispatches him, he brings no good. Is he equal to one who enjoins justice, and who is on a straight path?

75–76 Cf. 30:28 and commentary. In these two verses, the difference between God and the idols worshipped by the Arabs is likened to the difference between free persons with great wealth and the power to dispense it for the benefit of others and in the cause of goodness, and helpless slaves, who have power over nothing, not even over themselves, and no means to bring benefit to others (R, Z). The verse makes it clear that not only is it absurd to compare such helpless idols to God, but their power cannot even be compared to the capabilities of human beings. V. 75, like v. 71, should not be read to mean that slaves are somehow inferior to free persons spiritually or with regard to their humanity, but only in their physical and social capabilities or autonomy in external matters. It is this lack of self-determination in their physical and social circumstances that is presented as analogous to the abilities of the idols worshipped by the pre-Islamic Arabs: the idols have no capacity for provision or self-determination, and their physical condition is, ironically, determined by those who worship them, buy and sell them, and move them about at will, similar to the control that masters exert over slaves. In v. 76, the idols are similarly likened to a helpless and useless slave (dumb, with power over naught) who is nothing but a burden unto his master, for the idols are unable to speak or exercise power over anything. Their devotees have the burden of caring for them and maintaining them, while the idols can give them nothing in return for this “service.” One who enjoins justice, and who is on a straight path represents individuals who not only are rightly guided and morally upright, but also have control over their own actions and affairs and use that autonomy to accomplish good.

77 Unto God belongs the Unseen of the heavens and the earth. The matter of the Hour is as the blinking of an eye, or nearer still. Truly God is Powerful over all things.

77 This is one of four verses that speak of the Unseen as “belonging” to God (see also 10:20; 11:123; 18:26). The Quran more commonly mentions God’s Knowledge of the Unseen (see, e.g., 2:33; 5:109; 6:73; 9:78), so that His possession of the Unseen here likely refers to His Knowledge of it or to His encompassing the Unseen in His Knowledge. Possession and knowledge of the Unseen are also connected in 6:59, where it is said that God possesses the keys of the Unseen and none knows them but He. Although the Quran asserts that none knows when the Hour—that is, the Last Day—will come (7:187; 33:63), several verses warn of its imminence; see 54:1: The Hour has drawn nigh; and 70:6–7: Truly they see it as far off, but We see it as nigh. In a ḥadīth the Prophet states, “I and the Last Hour have been sent like this,” and then he drew two fingers close to one another. The present verse and others like it are meant to describe the immediacy with which God can bring about the Hour if He so wishes (Ṭ). That the nearness of the Hour is like the blinking of an eye is a metaphor invoking something that seems to be immediate to ordinary human perception. But even the blinking of an eye encompasses a small extension of time, whereas God’s Command of the Hour, like all His commands, is effected instantly; hence the additional qualification or nearer still (R).

78 And God brought you forth from the bellies of your mothers, knowing naught. And He endowed you with hearing, sight, and hearts, that haply you may give thanks.

78 Just as God brings things forth from hidden places—milk from the bellies of cattle (v. 66), honey from the bellies of bees (v. 69), and the Hour from the realm of the Unseen (v. 77)—so does He bring forth human beings from the bellies of their mothers. See also 53:32: He knows you best, from when He brought you forth from the earth and when you were hidden in your mothers’ bellies. Human beings are born knowing naught; see v. 70 and 30:54, which together indicate that human beings’ strength and knowledge wax and wane throughout the course of their lives. Hearing, sight, and hearts are repeatedly mentioned all together or in various combinations as Divine gifts (10:31; 23:78; 32:9). These are the faculties through which guidance is received and through which religious knowledge and understanding are acquired (22:46); but the Quran states that these faculties are corrupted in some human beings, so that they become impervious to Divine Guidance (see, e.g., 2:7; 6:25, 110; 7:179; 18:57).

79 Have they not considered the birds, made subservient, in midair? None holds them save God. Truly in that are signs for a people who believe.

79 Birds are presented here and elsewhere as one of the marvels of Divine creation (24:41; 67:19), and this verse specifically mentions the wonder of seeing birds in the air with no apparent support (see also 67:19). Birds are also distinguished in the Quran by their offering praise to their Creator along with the prophet David (21:79; 34:10; 38:18–19), their rendering service to Solomon (27:17), and their role as agents of Divine Destruction (105:3). The birds are made subservient just as all natural phenomena have been made subservient—to God and to human beings—by God’s Command; see 22:65: Hast thou not considered that God has made whatsoever is on the earth subservient unto you—and the ship sails upon the sea—by His Command? (see also, e.g., 7:54; 13:2; 14:32).

80 And God has ordained for you a place of rest in your dwellings, and He has made dwellings for you from the skins of cattle, which you bear with ease on the day you travel and the day you pitch camp. And from their wool, and their fur, and their hair, furnishings and enjoyment for a while.

80 This verse continues the discussion of the manifold benefits that God has provided to human beings through cattle as mentioned in vv. 5–7, 66 (see commentary on these verses). That God provides the material for dwellings and furnishings from the skins and hair of cattle is similar to the mention of the use of their skin for warmth in v. 5. Their use for bearing burdens is also mentioned in v. 7 and 6:142.

81 And God has made shade for you from among that which He created, and He has made places of refuge for you in the mountains. He has made coats for you that protect you from the heat and coats that protect you from your own might. Thus does God complete His Blessing unto you, that haply you may submit.

81 Shade was experienced as an especially salient Divine gift in the desert environment of Arabia, where it would have been relatively scarce but very necessary during the hottest parts of the day (R). In 24:45–46, the Quran mentions the “spreading out” and “withdrawing” of the shade as a cause for wonder at Divine Power and Beneficence. Shade is also one of the many delights of the Garden (see 4:57; 13:35; 36:56; 56:30; 76:14; 77:41), where, unlike on earth, it is everlasting (13:35). Places of refuge refers to the caves and crevices in the mountains in which people can make dwellings (following the references to dwellings made from cattle skins in v. 80) and where they may hide and remain out of the sight (Ṭ) of possible enemies (Q).

The coats serve a similar pair of purposes. Some coats, like shade, protect you from the heat, while others, like places of refuge, protect you . . . from your own might, referring to coats of armor that protect one in war; see 21:80, where the art of making armored garments was bestowed on David as a Divine favor. Since all of the objects mentioned in this verse offer protection to human beings, some commentators read the final clause, that haply you may submit (tuslimūn) with slightly different vowelings to mean, “that haply you may be safe (taslamūn)” (IK, Ṭ, Z), that is, from the natural elements, human violence, or idolatry and the punishment for it in the Hereafter (Z).

82 Then if they turn away—only the clear proclamation is incumbent upon thee.

82 For the repeated reminder to the Prophet that he need not concern himself with the way the message he was proclaiming would be received, since only the clear proclamation of the message was incumbent upon him, see also 3:20; 5:92, 99; 13:40; 16:35c; 24:54; 29:18; 36:17; 42:48; 64:12.

83 They recognize the Blessing of God, and then deny it, and most of them are disbelievers.

83 According to some commentators, the Makkan idolaters recognized the blessings mentioned throughout this sūrah as coming ultimately from God. They nonetheless denied it by refusing to be appropriately grateful to God for them (Q), or else they believed that these blessings, although created by God, only came to them personally through the intercession of their false idols and deities (Z) or as an inheritance from their forefathers (Q, Z). Some interpret the Blessing of God here as referring to the prophethood of Muhammad, which many of them recognized, but denied out of stubbornness (Z).

84 And on that Day We shall raise up a witness from every community; then those who disbelieved will not be permitted [to speak], nor can they make amends.

84 The witness from every community is likely a reference to the prophets who were sent to particular communities and who on the Day of Judgment will be a witness for or against those to whom they were sent (Z); see also 4:41 and commentary as well as v. 89; 28:85; 33:45; 57:19; and 4:159, where Jesus is said to be a witness against the People of the Book. On this Day, the disbelievers are not permitted [to speak] (30:57; 45:35), meaning that they will not be permitted to make excuses (IK, Q, R, Z); see also 77:35–36: That is the Day on which they speak not, nor is permission granted them, such that they might offer excuses. They are also not permitted to make amends, that is, to try to please or propitiate God, for the earthly world is the only arena of moral choice and the only place in which one might repent of error and evil deeds. After death, it is not possible to make amends (Q, Z), nor can human beings return to earthly life to make amends (Q; see, e.g., 6:27–28 and commentary; 23:99–100; 32:12).

85 And when those who did wrong see the punishment, it shall not be lightened for them, nor shall they be granted respite.

85 Once the judgment is made, the punishment shall not be lightened, for wrongdoers cannot repent at this point (Q, T; see v. 84), nor can they be released from punishment through their own death or annihilation (see 4:56; 20:74; 35:36) or through other means, for example, through the pity of those in the Garden (7:50). See also 2:86, 162; 3:8; 21:40; 43:75–77; and 5:37: They will wish to come forth from the Fire, but they shall not come forth from it. And theirs shall be a lasting punishment.

86 When those who ascribed partners unto God see the partners they ascribed, they will say, “Our Lord! These are our partners whom we called upon apart from Thee.” But they will retort, “Verily you are liars!”

86 The partners they ascribed may refer to the idols, the jinn, or other false objects of worship adopted by the polytheistic Arabs. Al-Rāzī suggests that these false objects of worship are identified, even by the idolaters themselves here, as their “partners,” both because, by granting them a share of the worship owed only to God, they considered them to be partners with Him and because the idolaters made them “partners” in their own wealth by granting them a share of their crops and cattle through ritual offerings. Some suggest that partners here refers specifically to the jinn or satans who led the idolaters into disbelief, since the partners themselves speak in this verse, and idols do not speak (see 16:75–76c). Al-Rāzī, however, notes that God is capable of endowing anything with life, intelligence, and speech, as when He grants the bodily limbs and organs of people the ability to testify against them on the Day of Judgment (24:24; 41:20–22).

The idolaters themselves admit and identify these false objects of worship as their partners, either in hopes of shifting some of the blame for their idolatry onto the very idols that they worshipped or out of amazement that, although they are facing punishment, the objects of their worship seem to have no sin attributed to them (R). But they—that is, the partners they ascribed—will call them liars, refuting the idolaters’ suggestion that the idols or jinn that they worshipped were somehow complicit in their idolatry and arguing that they—that is, the idols or jinn that the idolaters worshipped—neither commanded nor approved of such worship (IK, T, Z). Satan similarly disowns those who followed him and denies or rejects those who considered him a partner with God (14:22). Several verses speak of the mutual disavowal and dissociation between false objects of worship and their worshippers on the Day of Judgment; see 2:165–67; 19:81–82; 29:25; 35:14; 46:5–6. In his commentary on this verse, Ibn ʿAjībah expands the meaning beyond the context of crass idol worship, saying that indeed anything that individuals love apart from God—that is, in a way that is completely disconnected from the love of God—will dissociate from them on the Day of Resurrection.

87 And they will offer submission unto God on that Day, and that which they used to fabricate will forsake them.

87 They—that is, both the idolaters and the “partners” that they falsely worshipped—will submit themselves to God on the Day of Judgment, in recognition of His Lordship, and disavow any partners or equals they ascribed to Him (IK, R). That which they used to fabricate may refer either to the false rituals and corrupt practices that pleased the idolaters in their earthly lives (R) or to their false idols (IK, R) and the idolaters’ “fabricated” belief that these idols would intercede for them in the Hereafter (R). But all such idols, practices, and beliefs will forsake them, because all hope they may have had in such things will be replaced by an awareness of their utter futility.

88 Those who disbelieve and who have turned from the way of God, for them We shall add punishment on top of punishment, for their having worked corruption.

88 Punishment on top of punishment refers to the double punishment that awaits those who both disbelieve themselves and turn others away from belief in God and His message (see 7:38–39 and commentary; 11:19–20; 29:12–13; 38:61). Those disbelievers who lead other people into disbelief have effectively added “disbelief to disbelief” and thus deserve punishment on top of punishment (R). For discussion of the Quranic phrase “working corruption,” see 2:11–12c; 5:33c; 30:41c.

89 And on that Day We shall raise up in every community a witness against them from among themselves, and We shall bring thee as a witness against these. And We sent down unto thee the Book as a clarification of all things, and as a guidance and a mercy and glad tidings for those who submit.

89 On the Day of Judgment, each community will have a witness from among themselves, meaning that God calls the prophet of every community to bear witness to how well the people received the message he was charged with bringing and how well they followed it (Ṭ); see also v. 84. That God shall bring thee as a witness against these means that the Prophet Muhammad will be a witness against his people and his religious community (Ṭ), as the other prophets will be witnesses against theirs. The Book, understood to mean the Quran here, is a clarification of all things in that it contains all the religious knowledge that individuals need (Ṭ, Z); regarding the comprehensive nature of “the Book,” see 6:38: We have neglected nothing in the Book; and 12:111. For “the Book” as a clarification, see v. 64; 5:15, 19; 6:154; 7:145; see also 37:117, where similar statements are made about the Torah. The Quran is also described as a guidance and a mercy in 6:157; 7:203; 10:57; 27:77.

90 Truly God commands justice, virtue, and giving to kinsfolk, and He forbids indecency, wrong, and rebelliousness. And He admonishes you, that haply you may remember.

90 This verse and the following one together invoke the basic foundations of morality and righteousness as found throughout the Quran, including justice and charity. For more detailed descriptions of righteousness, see 2:83, 177; 4:36. Justice can be described as taking the middle or moderate course in all things (R), a quality central to the Quranic perspective, which warns against transgressing “the balance” (see 55:8–9c) and describes Muslim believers as constituting a middle community (2:143). Citing well-known aḥadīth, al-Rāzī describes virtue (iḥsān) as the quality of “worshipping God as if you saw Him,” or of “loving for one’s brother what one loves for oneself.” Others gloss justice as a reference to the fulfillment of obligatory duties and virtue as the performance of supererogatory or recommended deeds (Z). Giving to kinsfolk (cf. 2:177) includes offering charity even before one is asked for it and maintaining good relations with one’s family in general (R); cf. 4:36; 8:41; 24:22.

Indecency here translates faḥshāʾ, which can refer to any act that transgresses the limits set by God (Z), and the related term fāḥishah, also translated “indecent,” is often associated in the Quran, implicitly or explicitly, with sexual transgression (see 4:15, 19, 25; 7:80; 17:32). Al-Rāzī therefore says indecent here refers to various sins associated with the concupiscent aspect of the soul. God forbids indecent, but Satan commands it; see 2:169, 268; 24:21. See 7:28–29: When they commit an indecent, they say, “We found our fathers practicing it, and God has commanded us thus.” Say, “Truly God commands not indecent. Do you say of God that which you know not?” Say, “My Lord has commanded justice. So set your faces [toward Him] at every place of prayer, and call upon Him, devoting religion entirely to Him. By wrong (munkar) is meant deeds that any person of sound intellect and rational faculties could not fail to recognize as inherently wrong (Z); al-Rāzī asserts that wrong here refers to sins associated with the irascible aspect of the soul, that is, sins rooted in love of power and characterized by violence. Similarly, rebelliousness can be interpreted to mean sins that indulge human pride and ambition (R) and entail gross injustice (Z). Perhaps because Satan was the first creature to rebel against God and His Command, al-Rāzī suggests that these sins derive from Satanic whims and illusions.

91 Fulfill the pact of God when you have pledged it, and break not your oaths after solemnly affirming them, and having made God a Witness over you. Surely God knows whatsoever you do.

91 Regarding the importance of fulfilling the pact of God, see v. 95, which warns people against selling the pact of God for a paltry price; see also 2:40; 3:76; 6:152; 13:20; 17:34; 33:15. Break not your oaths is said by some to refer to the Pledge of Good Pleasure (bayʿat al-riḍwān), which the Companions took with the Prophet (Ṭ, Z) at Ḥudaybiyyah, a pledge that is also understood to be one over which God was Witness (see 48:10c). Others suggest that oaths here has a more general meaning, since any righteous oath is in some sense an oath one takes before God (R), given the religious responsibility to fulfill all oaths that one takes in earnest; see 2:177; 4:33. However, one is not “taken to task” for careless oaths (2:225), and 5:89 provides a means of expiation for broken oaths. See also 3:77, where people are enjoined to be true to both their oaths and the pact of God.

92 Be not like she who unravels her yarn, breaking it after it had been strong [by] taking your oaths to practice deception among yourselves, so that one community might be larger and wealthier than another. God only tries you thereby. And on the Day of Resurrection, He will surely clarify for you that wherein you differed.

92 Weaving strands of yarn together to form a strong thread, only to senselessly unravel it, was reportedly the practice of a mentally impaired woman in Makkah who did this as a regular habit (JJ, R, Ṭ). In this verse, it is used as a metaphor for those who take oaths to form strong bonds of alliance, only to break those oaths and undo those bonds when they seem to have lost their political expediency or in order to forge an alliance with a larger and more powerful group (IK, JJ, R, Ṭ, Ṭs, Z). Insofar as the oaths in v. 91 are interpreted as the oaths of allegiance to the Prophet, the temptation to undo one's oath here may refer to the temptation to abandon allegiance to the Prophet and the Muslim community and instead seek alliance with the Quraysh of Makkah, who were larger, wealthier, and more powerful than the early community of believers (Z). To be perfidious with regard to such oaths is what is meant by taking oaths to practice deception among yourselves. Regarding God's clarifying of differences on the Day of Resurrection, see 2:113; 3:55; 5:48; 6:164; 10:93; 16:124; 22:69; 32:25; 39:3, 46.

93 Had God willed, He would have made you one community. But He leads astray whomsoever He will and guides whomsoever He will. And you shall surely be questioned about that which you used to do.

93 The counterfactual statement Had God willed, He would have made you one community can be interpreted to mean that humanity does not exist as “a single (religious) community,” because God has not willed it to be so, and thus that the multiplicity of religious communities is a matter of Divine Providence; see 5:48c; 2:213; 11:118; 42:8. It may also mean that God does not compel people to be one community or to follow one religion, although He is capable of doing so (Z). That God guides but also “leads astray” whomever He wills (cf. 6:39; 7:178; 13:27; 14:4; 17:97; 18:17; 35:8) is considered by some theologians, especially the Ash'arites in contrast to the Mu'tazilites, to mean that all guidance or misguidance is ultimately a matter of Divine Will rather than exclusively a product of human will. In several verses, however, the Quran notes more specifically that God “leads astray” the iniquitous (2:26), the disbelievers (40:74), and the prodigal doubter (40:34), leading many theologians to argue that God leads people astray only as a consequence of or a punishment for their actions; see 6:39c. According to some, God leads astray those whom He knows will choose error of their own accord and guides those whom He knows will choose guidance (N, Z); others say He “leads people astray” by abandoning them (Bđ, Z) and guides them by granting them success and ease in their spiritual and moral endeavors (Bđ, Z).

94 Take not your oaths to practice deception among yourselves, lest a foot slip after it had been firmly planted, and you taste evil for your having turned from the way of God, and yours should be a great punishment.

94 Take not your oaths to practice deception, that is, as a means of committing treachery; see 16:92c. Lest a foot slip after it had been firmly planted means lest one perish after having been safe from perdition (Ṭ); or lest one slip from the path of Islam after one’s feet had been firmly planted upon it (Z); or else lest one slip from faith after having been firmly established in the knowledge of God (Q). To taste evil is said to refer in this verse to the experience of Divine Punishment in this world for one’s sins (Q, Ṭ, Z), while great punishment refers to Divine Punishment in the Hereafter (Q, Ṭ, Z). Negative experiences such as death and punishment are frequently described as being “tasted” (see, e.g., 3:106, 185; 4:56; 6:30; 7:39; 8:14; 21:35; 29:57), perhaps because to taste something is to gain direct and immediate knowledge of it. Moreover taste is also the most intimate of the senses, in that, unlike sight or hearing, it is connected with taking something physically into oneself. Divine Mercy is also sometimes described as being “tasted,” although less frequently (see, e.g., 10:21; 11:9–10; 30:33).

95 Sell not the pact of God for a paltry price. Surely that which is with God is better for you, if you but knew.

96 That which is with you comes to an end, but that which is with God subsists. And surely We shall render unto those who are patient their reward for the best of that which they used to do.

95–96 See 3:77, where people are warned not to sell God’s Pact and their oaths for a paltry price, as well as 3:187, where some of the People of the Book are criticized for selling their covenant with God for a paltry price. Selling spiritually valuable realities for a paltry price is a common metaphor in the Quran, and other verses warn against selling God’s signs for a paltry price (2:41; 3:199; 5:44). To “sell” God’s pact and His signs for a paltry price is understood to mean trading the guidance, protection, and spiritual felicity they offer for the ephemeral goods of this world (R, Z), such as material wealth, power, and status. That which is with God is better, because it subsists (see also 20:131; 28:60; 42:36), while that which is with you in this world comes to an end. Patience is considered an integral element of piety (2:177; 33:35), a virtue that brings great spiritual reward, for God is with the patient (2:153, 249; 8:46) and loves the patient (3:146); and the patient are rewarded bounteously in the Hereafter (see 25:75; 28:54; 39:10). The Quranic model for patience is Jacob, who patiently bore the absence of his beloved son Joseph (see 12:18, 83–86); and in the Quranic story of Jacob and Joseph, the importance of patience is repeatedly and explicitly emphasized (and rewarded). The patience of Job, often mentioned in the Judeo-Christian tradition, is also implied in the Quran through the mention of Job’s enduring great affliction with faith (21:83–84; 38:41–44); and Job, like several other Quranic prophets, is described as steadfast, or “patient” (ṣābir; 38:44).

97 Whosoever works righteousness, whether male or female, and is a believer, We shall give them new life, a good life, and We shall surely render unto them their reward in accordance with the best of that which they used to do.

97 The Quran indicates that men and women are of the same moral and spiritual stature; that is, they share the same moral responsibility, the same capability for independent moral choice, and the same recompense for their deeds. See, for example, 3:195: So their Lord answered them, “I shall not let the work of any worker among you, male or female, be in vain; each of you is like the other. So those who emigrated, and were expelled from their homes, and were hurt in My way, and fought and were slain—I shall absolve them of their evil deeds and shall make them enter Gardens with rivers running below, a reward from God; see also 4:124;

33:35. That God shall give the righteous new life, a good life may refer to His provision for them in this world and their contentment with their provision (Q, R) as well as the aid and success He grants them in carrying out acts of obedience that lead to God being content with them (Q). In general, it is understood to refer to the various ways in which belief and virtue make one's life, even in this world, satisfying and peaceful. For example, the good life is said to be characterized by the "sweetness of obedience" (Q), turning over to God the management of one's affairs (Q, ST), and having one's breast "expanded" by knowledge of God (R).

As believers become more aware of the ephemerality of worldly things, they are said to be less distressed by the vicissitudes of earthly life (R) and to enjoy a spirit of certitude (Su) that allows them to entrust their affairs to God (ST). The sixth Shiite Imam, Ja'far al-Ṣādiq, interprets the good life here as referring to the life of an individual who has both knowledge of God and a noble standing with Him (Q, Su). A minority opinion suggests that the good life refers to life after death, meaning what believers experience either in posthumous states prior to Resurrection (R) or in the Garden after Resurrection (Q); most, however, consider the good life to refer to life in this world, and God's rendering unto them their reward to refer to the good they will experience in the Hereafter (Q).

98 So when you recite the Quran, seek refuge in God from the outcast Satan.

98 Cf. 7:200; 23:97; 41:36; 114:1–4. The specific instruction here to seek refuge in God from . . . Satan before reciting the Quran is part of everyday Muslim practice, since almost all Muslims begin every recitation of the Quran with the statement, "I seek refuge in God from the outcast Satan" (a'ūdhu bi'LLāhi min al-shayṭān al-rajīm), followed by the basmalah. Most religious authorities agree, however, that this is a recommended rather than a required practice (R, Ṭ). According to one interpretation, the Quran indicates that even prophets were subject to Satan's attempts to insinuate error into the revelation; see 22:52: And no messenger or prophet did We send before thee, but that when he had a longing Satan would cast into his longing, whereupon God effaces what Satan cast. Although the command in this verse to seek refuge in God from Satan is specifically addressed to the Prophet, all who recite the Quran are similarly advised to do so, for if even the Prophet needs to seek such refuge, all the more do ordinary believers need to do the same (R). Ibn 'Ajībāh says that seeking refuge in God is necessary, for Satan is like a vicious dog: if you try to defend yourself against the animal, it only intensifies its barking and may tear your clothes or your skin, but if you turn the matter over to the dog's master, the master will be able to restrain it.

99 Truly he has no authority over those who believe and trust in their Lord.

100 His authority is only over those who take him as a protector, and those who take him as a partner.

99–100 That Satan has no authority over those who believe (see also 15:39–42; 17:65) means either that he has no power to cause them to commit unforgiveable sins or that he has no power over them at all, because believers seek refuge in God from Satan and thus are protected against him (Ṭ; see 7:200). Al-Rāzī indicates that these verses should dispel any notion that Satan can take bodily control of a person, as some people have thought; rather, it is clear that Satan is only capable of whispering and insinuating and thereby tempting people toward wrongdoing and disbelief. Thus Satan's "authority" is only over the souls of those who have chosen to follow him (15:42) and those who respond to his call (14:22) or, as here, those who take him as a protector, that is, those who accept his authority and obey him (R, Ṭ). In context, those who take him as partner seems to refer to those who take Satan as a partner, but commentators suggest that the phrase could also be rendered "those who ascribe partners unto Him [that is, God]" (Ṭ, Z); "those who [having taken Satan as a protector] are thereby idolaters"; or "those who are idolaters because of him [that is, Satan]" (R).

101 And when We replace one sign with another—and God knows best that which He sends down—they say, "You are only a fabricator!" Nay, but most of them know not.

101 That God might replace one sign with another is widely understood to refer to the possibility of God's abrogating a ruling found in one verse and replacing it with a ruling in another verse (JJ, Ṭ). In some cases, both verses remain part of the Quranic corpus, although some commentators claim that this phrase can refer to the abrogation both of the legal ruling and of the verse itself from the corpus of the Quran (Ṭs); regarding abrogation, see 2:106c; 13:39.

Abrogation is considered a manifestation of Divine Beneficence toward human beings, for what might be a beneficial ruling at one time could pose a moral problem at a later one (Z). A clear illustration of abrogation in the Quran can be found in the verses containing seemingly contradictory rulings on the consumption of intoxicating beverages, which were implicitly or conditionally permitted by some verses (2:219; 4:43; 16:67), but later explicitly forbidden in 5:90–91; see commentary on these verses. Some held that the abrogation referred to here and elsewhere in the Quran related to God’s replacing a revealed ruling from an earlier religious community with another one specifically for Muslims, for example, the change of the Muslim direction of prayer from Jerusalem to Makkah (R; see 2:143–44 and commentary). When such abrogation occurred, the Makkan idolaters reportedly accused the Prophet of being a fabricator, that is, fabricating the revelations at will (JJ, W, Z). Most of them know not means that they are not aware of the possibility and benefits of abrogation (JJ, R, Ṭs) or the reason for it (Ṭs).

102 Say, “The Holy Spirit has brought it down from thy Lord in truth, to make firm those who believe, and as guidance and glad tidings for those who submit.”

102 According to most commentators, the Holy Spirit here refers to the Archangel Gabriel, the angel of revelation (R); see also 2:87c; 2:253; 5:110. According to al-Rāzī, the abrogation of verses or rulings, mentioned in the previous verse, was a test for the believers; if they continued to accept the revelation as coming from God and trusted in His Wisdom, this would make firm those who believe, in that they would show themselves to be firm in their faith and the path of their religion.

103 Indeed, We know that they say, “He has merely been taught by a human being.” The tongue of the one whom they falsely implicate is foreign, while this is [in] a clear, Arabic tongue.

103 This verse refers to an accusation made by some of the Makkan idolaters that the Prophet was learning his revelations from a local Christian blacksmith (or, variously, two blacksmiths) who was able to recite the Christian scriptures in his native language. Because the Prophet would occasionally stop to listen to his recitation (Z), the Makkans accused him of deriving the Quranic revelations from what he heard from this man. The Quran’s response to this accusation is to point out that the native language of the Christian blacksmith was foreign, and some commentators report that he knew either no Arabic at all or only very little (IK). Moreover the scriptures he recited were in a foreign language, perhaps Greek (Ṭ, Ṭs), which the Prophet did not understand—while the Quranic revelations were, by contrast, in such clear and eloquent Arabic (JJ, W, Z) that even a native Arabic speaker, let alone a foreigner, would have been incapable of composing them (Ṭs). According to some, the one they accused of “teaching” the Prophet was Salmān al-Fārsī (Ṭ, Ṭs, Z), but this is doubtful since Salmān was a Persian of Zoroastrian origin who later converted to Christianity before embracing Islam in Madinah, and al-Naḥl is a Makkan sūrah. Others indicate that the verse is referring to another young man who embraced Islam in Makkah (Ṭs, Z).

104 Truly those who believe not in the signs of God, God guides them not, and theirs shall be a painful punishment.

105 Only those who believe not in the signs of God fabricate lies. It is they who are liars.

104–5 Those who reject the signs of God when they come to them, God guides them not; that is, they do not benefit from God’s Guidance. The Quran also states that God does not guide wrongdoers (2:258; 3:86; 5:51; 6:144; 9:19, 109; 28:50; 46:10; 62:5), disbelievers (2:264; 5:67; 9:37; 16:107; 39:3), the iniquitous (5:108; 9:24, 80; 61:5; 63:6), or those who lead others astray (16:37). The Makkan idolaters accused the Prophet of fabricating the revelations (v. 101), but v. 105 responds that the true “fabricators” of lies are the disbelievers.

106 Whosoever disbelieves in God after having believed—save one who is coerced, while his heart is at peace in faith—but whosoever opens his breast unto disbelief, upon them shall be the Wrath of God, and theirs shall be a great punishment.

106 This verse is believed by most commentators to have been revealed about the case of ʿAmmār ibn Yāsir, an early Makkan convert to Islam whose parents were tortured and killed because of Islam and who was himself coerced through torture and threat of death into outwardly renouncing his faith (Ṭ, W); see 3:28c. When the Prophet was told of this matter, he denied that ʿAmmār had truly renounced Islam, and when ʿAmmār later came to the Prophet weeping with regret, the Prophet asked him, “In what state was your heart?” ʿAmmār replied, “At peace in faith” (Ṭ, Ṭū). The Prophet consoled him and indicated that he approved of what he had done (W). This verse was then revealed (Ṭ, W), indicating an exception for those who renounce their faith outwardly under duress while their hearts are at peace in faith, for God only holds one to account for what one believes in one’s heart (Ṭ). A minority report claims that the verse was revealed about a group of Makkans who had embraced Islam and were encouraged to migrate to Madinah to become full members of the community. After leaving Makkah, they were pursued by the Quraysh, who caught up to them and compelled them to renounce their faith (W).

The first clause of the verse is the beginning of an incomplete conditional statement whose consequence has been elided. Some suggest that the meaning of the statement is that whoever renounces faith after having believed—save one who is coerced (as was ʿAmmār)—“will have a great punishment” (JJ). The elided phrase, “will have a great punishment,” is implied by the fact that the second conditional statement in the verse begins with a similar antecedent phrase mentioning disbelievers and concludes with the threat of God’s Wrath and of great punishment. One can therefore assume that the two statements have parallel meaning, or that upon them shall be the Wrath of God, and theirs shall be a great punishment is the consequence for both antecedent clauses (Ṭ). Others suggest that the first clause of this verse may be a continuation of the previous verse, so that it could be understood to mean: “They only fabricate lies, those who believe not in the signs of God, . . . [those] who disbelieve in God after having believed,” although this is less likely (Ṭ). But whosoever opens his breast unto disbelief willingly, in contrast to ʿAmmār and those who were tortured, is the one who has truly preferred disbelief over belief (Ṭ).

107 That is for their having preferred the life of this world to the Hereafter. And surely God guides not disbelieving people.

108 It is they on whose hearts God has placed a seal, and on their hearing and their seeing. It is they who are heedless.

109 There is no doubt that in the Hereafter they are the losers.

107–9 The disbelievers preferred the life of this world to the Hereafter (see also 14:3; 79:38), which is a foolish choice according to the Quran, since the life of this world is naught but the enjoyment of delusion (3:185; 57:20) or play and diversion (6:32; 29:64; 47:36). The Quran states that it is better to sell the life of this world for the Hereafter (4:74), for the life of this world is but fleeting enjoyment, whereas the Hereafter is truly the Abode of Permanence (40:39). That God guides not disbelieving people is also mentioned in 2:264; 5:67; 9:37; 16:104; 39:3. God’s placing a “seal” on hearts is understood to make them impervious to guidance, but it is often mentioned explicitly as a consequence of or punishment for willful disbelief or wrongdoing; see 2:7c; 4:155; 7:100–101; 9:87, 93; 10:74; 40:35; 45:23; 47:16; 63:3. Those whose belief and good deeds have earned them Paradise are described as those who prosper (see, e.g., 2:5; 3:104; 7:8), whereas those who disbelieved are repeatedly described as the losers (see, e.g., 2:27; 3:85; 5:4).

110 Then indeed thy Lord, for those who emigrated after being oppressed, then strove and were patient, surely thy Lord thereafter is Forgiving, Merciful.

110 Those who emigrated refers to those who left their homes in Makkah to move to Madinah to join the Islamic community; see 2:218; 3:195; 8:72–75; 9:20; 16:41; and 22:58, where emigrating is similarly connected with striving in the way of God and with Divine Reward and Forgiveness. This verse was reportedly revealed about a group of Muslims who were initially unable to migrate to Madinah with the Prophet in 1/622 and continued to reside in Makkah. The Emigrants in Madinah later wrote to them, informing them that they had to migrate to Madinah to be considered full members of the believing Muslim community (see commentary on 8:74–75); they attempted to leave, but were stopped and brought back by the Makkans. During a second attempt to emigrate, they were again overtaken by the Makkans, but this time they resisted strongly. Some were killed, and some were able to escape (Ṭ, W), after which this verse was revealed; see 4:98–99c; 29:2c. The verse could also be a continuing reference to ʿAmmār ibn Yāsir and those tortured along with him (see 16:106c), indicating that because they emigrated and strove in the way of God patiently after being oppressed through torture and compelled to recant their belief outwardly, God is Forgiving and Merciful toward them (Z).

111 That Day every soul will come disputing on behalf of itself, and every soul will be paid in full for that which it has done. They shall not be wronged.

111 That Day refers to the Last Day or the Day of Judgment. Every soul will come disputing on behalf of itself, because every soul on that day will be and can be concerned only with itself (IK, R, Z); see 80:37. The disputing of some individual souls will take the form of offering excuses for their wrongdoing (Z), for example, by blaming others for leading them astray (33:67); others will attempt to deny their error (e.g., 6:23). Yet, each soul will be paid in full the reward or recompense for its deeds, without stint and without diminution (R). Some Muʿtazilite theologians have argued that this verse supports their claim that there are no means by which to lessen God’s threatened punishment for those guilty of a major sin, not even intercession on their behalf (R). Others, however, interpret paid in full to indicate that neither will the reward earned be lessened, nor the punishment earned be increased (IK).

112 God sets forth a parable: a town secure and at peace, its provision coming unto it abundantly from every side. Yet, it was ungrateful for the blessings of God; so God let it taste the garment of hunger and fear for that which they had wrought.

113 A messenger from among themselves had surely come unto them, but they denied him. And so the punishment seized them while they were wrongdoers.

112–13 The parable of the town secure and at peace with its provision coming . . . abundantly is meant to evoke the situation of Makkah (R, T, Z). Makkah was secure, because the Kaʿbah sanctuary in its midst made it a sacred city in which no violence was permitted (R, T). It was at peace, or “at rest,” since its residents had no need to leave their homes in search of food (R, Ṭ); that is, its residents were not forced to live the nomadic lifestyle of other Arabs on the peninsula, and the city enjoyed healthy air and a good physical environment (R). Its provision came abundantly in the form of the wealth it obtained as a result of the yearly pilgrimage and the profit its inhabitants earned along the trade routes between Yemen and Syria. The blessings that Makkah enjoyed can also be understood as a Divine response to Abraham’s prayer for the city in 2:126 and 14:35–37.

By putting forth the parable of a city with blessings similar to those of Makkah, which was nonetheless made to taste the garment of hunger and fear, the verse directs its warning to the Makkan Quraysh (Z), indicating that their worldly bounty may not last and is no guarantee against sudden and total destruction; see also 6:6: Have they not considered how many a generation We destroyed before them? We had established them on the earth more firmly than We have established you, and We sent the sky upon them with abundant rains, and made rivers flow beneath them. Then We destroyed them for their sins, and brought into being after them another generation. That this city “tasted” the garment of hunger and fear is said by some to presage, by way of analogy, several years of famine Makkah suffered and their fear of the Prophet’s growing military power in the years prior to the conquest of Makkah (Ṭ). Garment here is a metaphor for something that covers and surrounds and is meant to suggest the degree to which the town was overwhelmed from all sides by hunger and fear (R, Z). That which they had wrought is a reference to their ingratitude for the blessings of God as well as their rejection of His signs and the prophethood of Muhammad (R, Ṭ)—the messenger from among themselves. Regarding the human tendency toward ingratitude, see 16:53–55c.

114 So eat of the lawful and good things God has provided you, and give thanks for the Blessing of God, if it is He Whom you worship.

114 Human beings are repeatedly enjoined in the Quran to eat the “lawful” and “good” things that God has given them; see 2:168; 5:88. In 5:4 all good things are said to be lawful for human beings, and 5:87 warns people against arbitrarily forbidding the good things that God had made lawful.

115 He has only forbidden you carrion, and blood, and the flesh of swine, and that which has been offered to other than God. But whosoever is compelled by necessity, without willfully disobeying or transgressing, truly God is Forgiving, Merciful.

115 For the dietary prohibitions and exemptions listed here, see 2:172–73c; 6:145c. For a more detailed list of dietary prohibitions, see 5:3.

116 And utter not lies in what your tongues assert, [saying], “This is lawful and this is forbidden,” such that you fabricate a lie against God. Surely those who fabricate lies against God will not prosper.

117 A little enjoyment, while theirs shall be a painful punishment.

116–17 The lies regarding the lawful and forbidden refers to the arbitrary ritual prohibitions the pagan Arabs established for themselves; see 5:103c; 6:138–39. The Quran warns against declaring lawful things to be forbidden; see 10:59: Say, “Have you seen that which God sent down unto you for provision? Then you made some of it forbidden and some lawful.” Say, “Has God granted you leave, or do you fabricate against God?” According to al-Qurṭubī, this verse means that no one has the right to declare something religiously lawful, ḥalāl, or forbidden, ḥarām, when there is no explicit Divine or scriptural statement (including aḥādīth) about it. Even if the process of jurisprudential reasoning leads one to think that something is ḥarām, if it is not ḥarām according to one of the main sources of Islamic Law, some consider it better to say that it is “discouraged” or “reprehensible” (makrūh), rather than ḥarām. Those who render legal opinions (fatāwā) should also be careful to avoid making declarations of lawfulness or unlawfulness regarding things that are not directly addressed in scriptural sources; in such cases, some say it is preferable for legal authorities to limit themselves to making recommendations about what one should or should not do (Q). According to Ibn Kathīr, this verse pertains to any situation where one permits what is forbidden or forbids what is permitted on the basis of one’s own opinion. The warning that wrongdoers will have little enjoyment in this world followed by punishment in the Hereafter is also found in 2:126; 3:197; 10:70; 26:204–7; 31:24.

118 And unto those who are Jews, We forbade that which We recounted unto thee beforehand. We wronged them not, but they wronged themselves.

118 That which We recounted unto thee beforehand refers to the dietary prohibitions ordained for the Jews, as mentioned in 6:146 (Q, T, Z): And unto those who are Jews, We forbade every animal with claws; and of oxen and sheep We forbade them the fat thereof, save that upon their backs or their entrails or that which is mingled with bone. Thus did We recompense them for their willful disobedience, and surely We are truthful. These dietary prohibitions are more extensive than those established for Muslims in the Quran, and 6:146 indicates that the additional prohibitions were a punishment for earlier disobedience; see also 4:160–61. Although v. 117 criticizes those who would impose arbitrary dietary and ritual prohibitions on themselves, the present verse makes it clear that the additional dietary prohibitions of the Jews are in fact Divinely ordained. We wronged them not, but they wronged themselves is repeated verbatim or in slight variation throughout the Quran (see, e.g., 3:117; 9:70; 10:44; 11:101; 16:33; 29:40; 30:9; 43:76).

119 Then truly thy Lord—for those who commit evil in ignorance, then later repent and make amends—truly thy Lord thereafter is Forgiving, Merciful.

119 Those who commit evil in ignorance may refer to those who sin unintentionally, but some commentators suggest that it refers even to purposeful sinners who are not fully aware of the repercussions of their sin. Some consider it a reference to all sinners, since anyone who disobeys God can be considered, at some level, to be in a state of ignorance; for these interpretations, see 4:17–18c; 6:54c.

120 Truly Abraham was a community, devoutly obedient to God, a ḥanīf, and he was not among the idolaters.

121 [And he was] thankful for His Blessings. He chose him and guided him unto a straight path.

122 And We granted him good in this world, and surely in the Hereafter he shall be among the righteous.

120–22 Abraham may be described here as a community (ummah), because the reference to Abraham also includes his sons Ishmael and Isaac, his grandson Jacob, and Jacob’s sons. Alternately, some commentators suggest Abraham constituted a community unto himself insofar as all good qualities were combined and perfected in him (R, Z) or because he was the only believer on earth, or at least in his land, at a time when all others there were disbelievers (R, Ṭs, Z). Others note that the word for community (ummah) is derived from the same root as imām, a title of spiritual authority ascribed to Abraham and his sons (2:124; 21:73). In the present verse, then, community is understood by many to mean one who is a teacher of the good (IK, Ṭ, Ṭs, Z) or one who, like an imām, is a leader and model for others to follow or imitate (IK, Ṭ, Z).

Abraham is further described as ḥanīf and not among the idolaters, a common description of Abraham also found in 2:135; 3:67, 95; 6:79. Ḥanīf denotes a primordial monotheist who is neither a Jew nor a Christian. It is associated most frequently in the Quran with Abraham (see also 4:125), but is also used in the Islamic tradition to describe Muhammad’s spiritual life prior to his becoming a prophet and to others who were monotheist even in the Age of Ignorance (jāhiliyyah), that is, in pre-Islamic Arabia. Ḥanīf refers to a person who is inclined toward the central creed of islām, or submission to the One God (Z), and ḥunafā^o (pl.) were said to observe the Abrahamic rites of circumcision and the ḥajj, or pilgrimage to the Ka’bah in Makkah (R). For further discussion of ḥanīf, see 2:135c; 30:30c. The mention of Abraham in these verses is meant to make it clear to the Makkani idolaters that Abraham cannot be associated with them, nor they with him (Ṭ), since he had rejected idolatry and they embraced it. Some report that the Makkans wished to associate themselves with Abraham and wrongly considered themselves to be following the creed of Abraham, their forefather (Z).

God chose Abraham, either as a prophet (R), as He chooses other prophets (see 6:84–87; 19:58; 20:122–23), or as His “intimate friend” (khalīl; Ṭ; see 4:125c) or both. Abraham was thankful for His Blessings, unlike those in the parable of the town (a thinly veiled reference to Makkah) in v. 112, and he did not make any other a “partner” with God in the gratitude he rendered to Him (Ṭ). His blessings included being delivered from the fire into which his people had thrown him (21:69; 29:24); his sons, Isaac and Ishmael (14:39; 19:49; 21:72; 29:27); his being made an imām for mankind (2:124; 21:73); the gift of prophethood for himself and his progeny (4:54; 29:27; 57:26); sound judgment (21:51); and his sublime reputation (19:50), meaning that he was and is praised among various religious communities (IK, R, T, Ts, Z), even those of the pagan Arabs (R). That Abraham enjoyed good in this world and will be among the righteous in the Hereafter is also mentioned in 2:130 and 29:27. This verse can be read as a response to Abraham's prayer in 26:83: My Lord! Grant me judgment, and bind me to the righteous! (R).

123 Then We revealed unto thee, "Follow the creed of Abraham, a ḥanīf, and he was not among the idolaters."

123 The Prophet is commanded to follow the creed of Abraham, that is, by rejecting idol worship and believing in the One God (R) or calling people to God's Oneness in a gentle manner, through sound proofs and arguments (R). The creed of Abraham is connected with his being ḥanīf and not among the idolaters; see 6:161, where the Prophet declares, Truly my Lord has guided me unto a straight path, an upright religion, the creed of Abraham, a ḥanīf, and he was not of the idolaters. Abraham is revered by various religious communities (see 19:49–50c), but the Quran indicates a special connection between Abraham and the Prophet Muhammad and his community, as in 3:68: Truly the people worthiest of Abraham are those who followed him, and this prophet and those who believe (see also 22:78). The creed of Abraham represents what is best in religion (4:125), and the Quran asks in 2:130, Who shuns the creed of Abraham, but a foolish soul?

124 And the Sabbath was only ordained for those who differed concerning it, and surely thy Lord will judge between them on the Day of Resurrection, concerning that wherein they used to differ.

124 The Sabbath is mentioned in the Quran as an obligation established for the Children of Israel at the time of the covenant on Mt. Sinai (4:154), and the Jews are chastised in several verses for not observing it properly (2:65; 4:47; 7:163–66). The present verse, however, reiterates that the Sabbath is not a universal aspect of religious practice, since it was only ordained for those who differed concerning it, understood to mean the Jews. It was not part of the religion of Abraham (Q), nor is it part of religious practice established by the Prophet Muhammad. That the Jews differed concerning it may mean that some considered it sacred while others did not (Ṭ, Ṭs) or that sometimes they considered hunting (or fishing) permissible on this day and at other times did not (R, Ṭ, Z); see commentary on 7:163–66. The commentators also use this verse to discuss the different days of congregational worship among Jews, Christians, and Muslims, noting Muslims observe Friday, since it was the day on which God completed His creation (Ṭ); the Jews observe Saturday, because it was a day of “rest” after the completion of creation (although the idea that God tires or rests is unacceptable in Islam; see 2:255); and the Christians are said by these commentators to observe Sunday because it is the day on which God began the creation of the world (Q, R), although in Christian doctrine it is related to the belief that Christ was resurrected on this day. For the idea that God will judge between them, or adjudicate religious differences, on the Day of Resurrection, see 3:55; 22:69; 32:25; 45:17.

125 Call unto the way of thy Lord with wisdom and goodly exhortation. And dispute with them in the most virtuous manner. Surely thy Lord is He Who knows best those who stray from His way, and He knows best the rightly guided.

125 To call . . . with wisdom may mean that people should call others to religion on the basis of the revelation that has come to them (Ṭ), or with firm and truthful words, avoiding obscure language (Z), or by means of conclusive proofs that bring intellectual certitude, which al-Rāzī considers to be the best way; see 2:269: Whosoever is granted wisdom has been granted much good. The term goodly exhortation may also be rendered “beautiful exhortation” and can be understood to refer to the beautiful expressions that constitute the arguments, proofs, and reminders found in scripture, including those brought together in this sūrah (Ṭ). Goodly exhortation can also mean exhortation that is done sincerely and purely for the benefit of people (Z) or exhortation offered without coarseness, in a manner that would soften hearts (Ṭs), that is, with gentle persuasion and reasonable commands (R). Some suggest that wisdom and goodly exhortation collectively refer to the Quran (Ṭs, Z). Similarly, the injunction to dispute with them in the most virtuous manner is understood to mean that one should dispute in matters of religious difference by using logical argumentation based upon sound and mutually agreed-upon principles (R), without harassment (Ṭ), rudeness, or harshness (Z); see also 29:46: And dispute not with the People of the Book, save in the most virtuous manner, and commentary on this verse. Thy Lord is He Who knows best those who are inherently good, and thus need only the slightest admonition or advice to take the right course, and those without inherent goodness, who cannot be helped and for whom admonishment is like “striking cold iron” (Z).

126 And if you would punish, then punish with the like of that wherewith you were punished. But if you are patient, then that is better for the patient.

126 Most commentators consider the last three verses of this sūrah to be Madinan (IK, R, Ṭ), although others claim that all of this sūrah is Makkan or that it is unlikely that these verses are a sudden reference to something very different than the rest of the sūrah (R). If Madinan, they are thought to have been revealed after the Battle of Uḥud (3/625), when the Muslims saw the carnage, especially the mutilation, that the Makkan idolaters had inflicted upon their dead, and they vowed to retaliate in a more devastating way (IK, Q, R, Ṭ, Ṭs). Some say the Prophet himself made this vow after seeing his beloved uncle Ḥamzah terribly mutilated. This verse was then revealed, enjoining the Muslims to respond only with the like of what they suffered and, better yet, to forgo retaliation altogether (R, Ṭ, Z); the Prophet thereafter renounced his oath of vengeance (Z) and declared he would be patient (Ṭ). When the Quraysh eventually surrendered Makkah to the Prophet in 8/630, one of the Prophet’s Companions said, as they prepared to enter the city, “Today is a day of vengeance!” But the Prophet responded, “No, today is a day of mercy.” On this day, Hind, the woman who had mutilated Ḥamzah, was allowed to enter Islam under the general amnesty for the Quraysh, and Waḥshī ibn ḥarb, the Abyssinian slave who had killed Ḥamzah, later sought and was granted the Prophet’s pardon. If you are patient, then that is better means that it is better to forgo punishing those who have wronged you and to leave their reckoning to God (Ṭ).

Some have suggested that this verse was abrogated by 9:5, which commands Muslims, Slay the idolaters wheresoever you find them, although many major commentators disagree, considering the present verse to be general in its meaning, that is, applying to anyone at any time who has been wronged, and therefore not abrogated (Q, R, Ṭ, Ṭs). The Quran’s intention to establish a limitation on retaliation so that it does not exceed the original wrong is also manifest in 2:190: And fight in the way of God against those who fight against you, but do not transgress. Truly God loves not the transgressors. Its preference for pardon over retaliation is also seen in 42:40: The recompense of an evil is an evil like unto it. Yet whosoever pardons and sets matters aright, his reward is with God. Truly He loves not the wrongdoers. See also the essay “Conquest and Conversion, War and Peace in the Quran.”

①¹²⁷ So be patient, and thy patience is only with God. And grieve not on their account, nor be distressed by what they plot.

127 This verse is addressed to the Prophet (ﷺ). That patience is only with God is interpreted to mean that one can only be patient with God’s Help (R, ﷻ, ﷻs, Z). The Prophet is instructed, Grieve not on their account; that is, he should not be distressed by those who deny him and accuse him of sorcery or of being a poet (ﷻ) or by what they plot in order to try to turn others away from the path of God (ﷻ).

①¹²⁸ Truly God is with those who are reverent, and those who are virtuous.

128 God is also said to be with the reverent in 2:194; 9:36, 123; and with the virtuous in 29:69. In other verses, He is said to love the reverent (3:76; 9:4, 7) and the virtuous (2:195; 3:134, 148; 5:13, 93).

The Night Journey

al-Isrāʾ

A*l-Isrāʾ* is a late Makkan sūrah, and most commentators consider the whole of it to have been revealed in Makkah (Āl, IJ). Some, however, consider vv. 73 and 76 to be Madinan, and others have suggested variously that vv. 60, 74–75, 80, and 107 may also have been revealed in Madinah (Āl, IJ, Q).

The sūrah takes its name from the elliptical reference in the first verse to the Night Journey (isrāʾ) of the Prophet from Makkah to Jerusalem from where the Nocturnal Ascent (al-miʿrāj) took place. This journey is likely to have taken place around the year 619, toward the end of the Prophet’s time in Makkah and just after the death of his beloved wife Khadījah and his uncle Abū Ṭālib, who had long sheltered him from the idolaters. This Night Journey (isrāʾ) to Jerusalem and the Ascension (miʿrāj) of the Prophet from the site of the ancient Jewish Temple in that city through the seven heavens, where he encountered several Judeo-Christian prophets and finally came within two bows’ length of God Himself or nearer (53:9; see commentary on 53:7–18), is one of the most significant spiritual events in the Prophet’s life. From this time onward, the Islamic community saw itself as deeply connected to the Jewish and Christian prophetic heritage, and this is one of the reasons that Jerusalem was and is revered as a sacred city for Muslims, serving also as the direction of prayer for the Muslim community for several years thereafter, until 2/624. The Prophet was also reportedly given the final form of the Islamic canonical prayer (ṣalāh) during his Ascension. This sūrah is also sometimes referred to as the Sūrat Banī Isrāʾīl (IJ), because vv. 2–8 discuss the Children of Israel and the historical destruction that came upon them and their Temple, or as Subḥān (“Glory”) after the opening word of the sūrah (Āl).

This sūrah contains several themes and elements common to later Makkan sūrahs, including references to God's Power over the natural world (vv. 66–70), repeated warnings to human beings about the coming of Divine Punishment either on earth or in the Hereafter (vv. 13–18, 58–59, 71–72), and criticism of the idolaters' ascribing partners and daughters to God (vv. 39–41), their imperviousness to Quranic guidance (vv. 45–47), their disingenuous requests for miracles as proof of Muhammad's prophethood (vv. 90–96), and their denial of the Resurrection and Final Judgment (vv. 49–52, 97–99). In vv. 70–76, the Prophet is said to have nearly succumbed to the idolaters' attempt to lead him away from the revelations that he had received, but that God made him firm. The sūrah also contains exhortations to the believers: in vv. 22–38, they are told to be virtuous and charitable and to avoid major sins, such as idolatry, murder, and adultery, as well as dishonesty, excessive curiosity, and pride; and in vv. 78–79, they are instructed to perform the mandatory prayers at different times of the day and night and the supererogatory night vigil. There are also some brief accounts of certain pre-Islamic prophets, including an account of Adam's creation and fall (vv. 61–65) as well as Moses' confrontation with Pharaoh and deliverance of the Israelites (vv. 101–4). Finally, the sūrah discusses various qualities of the Quran itself, including its benefits for humanity, its revelation by means of the Spirit, its use of parables, its division into sections, and its effects upon the believers (vv. 82–89; 105–9).

In the Name of God, the Compassionate, the Merciful

- ① Glory be to Him Who carried His servant by night from the Sacred Mosque to the Farthest Mosque, whose precincts We have blessed, that We might show him some of Our signs. Truly He is the Hearer, the Seer.
- ② And We gave unto Moses the Book, and We made it a guidance for the Children of Israel—“Take no guardian apart from Me”— ③ the progeny of those whom We carried with Noah. Truly he was a thankful servant. ④ And We decreed for the Children of Israel in the Book,

“Surely you will work corruption upon the earth twice, and you will ascend to great height.” ⑤ So when the promise of the first of these came to pass, We sent against you servants of Ours, possessed of great might, and they ravaged your dwellings, and it was a promise fulfilled. ⑥ Then We gave you a turn against them, and We aided you with wealth and children, and We made you greater in number. ⑦ If you are virtuous, you are virtuous for the sake of your own souls, and if you commit evil, it is for them. So when the other promise comes to pass, they will make wretched your faces, and enter the Temple as they entered it the first time, and utterly ruin whatsoever they overtake. ⑧ It may be that your Lord will have mercy upon you, but if you revert, We shall revert. And We have made Hell a prison for the disbelievers. ⑨ Truly this Quran guides toward that which is most upright, and gives glad tidings to the believers who perform righteous deeds that theirs shall be a great reward, ⑩ and that We have prepared a painful punishment for those who believe not in the Hereafter. ⑪ Man prays for evil as he prays for good, and man is ever hasty. ⑫ We made the night and the day two signs. Then We effaced the sign of the night, and made the sign of the day, giving sight, that you might seek bounty from your Lord, and that you might know the number of years and the reckoning. And We have expounded everything in detail. ⑬ And [for] every man We have fastened his omen upon his neck, and We shall bring it forth for him on the Day of Resurrection as a book he will meet wide open. ⑭ “Read your book! On this Day, your soul suffices as a reckoner against you.” ⑮ Whosoever is rightly guided is only rightly guided for the sake of his own soul, and whosoever is astray is only astray to its detriment. None shall bear the burden of another. And never do We punish till We have sent a messenger. ⑯ And when We desire to destroy a town, We command those who live a life of luxury within it; yet they commit iniquity therein. Thus the Word comes due against it and We annihilate it completely. ⑰ How many a generation have We destroyed after Noah! Thy Lord suffices as One Aware of the sins of His servants, Seeing. ⑱ Whosoever would desire the ephemeral, We hasten for him therein whatsoever We will for whomsoever We desire. Then We appointed Hell for him, wherein he shall burn, blameworthy, banished. ①⑨ And whosoever desires the Hereafter, and endeavors for it earnestly, and is a believer, it is they whose efforts shall be appreciated. ②⑩ Each do We aid—both these and those—with the Gift of thy Lord; and the Gift of thy Lord is not confined. ②① Observe how We have favored some of them over others, and surely the Hereafter is greater in ranking and greater in favor. ②② Do not set up another god along with God, lest you sit blameworthy, forsaken. ②③ Thy Lord decrees that you worship none but Him, and be virtuous to parents. Whether one or both of them reaches old age, say not to them “Uff!” nor chide them, but speak unto them a noble word. ②④ Lower unto them the wing of humility out of mercy and say, “My Lord! Have mercy upon them, as they raised me when I was small.” ②⑤ Your Lord knows best that which is in your souls. If you are righteous, then verily He is Forgiving toward the penitent. ②⑥ Give unto the kinsman his right, and unto the indigent and the traveler, but do not squander wastefully. ②⑦ Truly the wasteful are the brethren of satans, and Satan is ungrateful to his Lord. ②⑧ But if thou turnest away from them, seeking a mercy from thy Lord, for which thou dost hope, then speak unto them a gentle word. ②⑨ And let not thine hand be shackled to thy neck; nor let it be entirely open, lest thou shouldst sit condemned, destitute. ③⑩ Truly thy Lord outspreads and straitens provision for whomsoever He will. Verily of His servants He is Aware, Seeing. ③① And slay not your children for fear of poverty. We shall provide for them and for you. Surely their slaying is a great sin. ③② And approach not adultery; verily it is indecency and an evil way. ③③ And slay not the soul that God has made inviolable, save by right. And whosoever is slain unjustly, We have appointed authority unto his heir. Then let him not be excessive in slaying. Verily he shall be helped. ③④ And approach not the orphan’s property, save in the most virtuous manner, till he reaches maturity. And fulfill the pact; surely the pact is called to account. ③⑤ And give full measure when you measure, and weigh with the straight balance. That is better and more virtuous in the end. ③⑥ And pursue not that whereof you have no knowledge. Truly hearing, and sight, and the heart—all of these will be called to account. 37 And walk not exultantly upon the earth; surely thou shalt not penetrate the earth, nor reach the mountains in height. 38 The evil of all this is loathsome unto thy Lord. 39 That is from the wisdom thy Lord has revealed unto thee. Do not set up another god along with God, lest thou be cast into Hell, condemned, banished. 40 Did your Lord favor you with sons, while He took females from among the angels [for Himself]? Surely you speak a monstrous word! 41 And We have indeed varied [Our signs] in this Quran, that they might reflect, though it increased them in naught but aversion. 42 Say, "If there were gods with Him, as they say, they would surely seek a way unto the Possessor of the Throne." 43 Glory be to Him! Exalted is He above whatsoever they say. 44 The seven heavens, and the earth, and whosoever is in them glorify Him. And there is no thing, save that it hymns His praise, though you do not understand their praise. Truly He is Clement, Forgiving. 45 And when thou recitest the Quran, We place a hidden veil between thee and those who believe not in the Hereafter. 46 And We have placed coverings over their hearts, such that they understand it not, and in their ears a deafness. And whenever thou dost mention thy Lord alone in the Quran, they turn their backs in aversion. 47 We know best that which they listen for when they listen to thee, and when they converse in secret, when the wrongdoers say, "You follow naught but a man bewitched!" 48 Look how they set forth descriptions of thee. Thus they go astray and cannot find a way. 49 They say, "What! When we are bones and dust, shall we indeed be resurrected as a new creation?" 50 Say, "Be you of stone, or of iron, 51 or some other created thing more difficult [to resurrect] to your minds." Then they will say, "Who will bring us back?" Say, "He Who originated you the first time." And they will shake their heads at thee and say, "When will it be?" Say, "It may well be nigh." 52 The Day when He calls you, you will respond by praising Him, and you will think that you tarried but a short while. 53 Say unto My servants that they should say that which is more virtuous. Surely Satan provokes ill feeling between them. Surely Satan is a manifest enemy unto man. 54 Your Lord knows you best. If He wills, He has Mercy upon you, and if He wills, He punishes you, and

We have not sent thee as a guardian over them. 55 And thy Lord knows best whosoever is in the heavens and the earth. And We indeed favored some of the prophets over others, and unto David We gave the Psalms. 56 Say, "Call upon those whom you claim apart from Him, but they have no power to remove affliction from you, nor to change [it]." 57 It is they who make supplication, seeking a means of approach to their Lord. Which of them is nearer? And they hope for His Mercy and fear His Punishment. Truly the Punishment of thy Lord is something of which to be wary. 58 There is no town, save that We shall destroy it before the Day of Resurrection, or punish it with a severe punishment. That is inscribed in the Book. 59 Naught hinders Us from sending signs, save that those of old denied them. And We gave unto Thamūd the she-camel as a clear portent, but they wronged her. And We do not send down Our signs, save to inspire fear. 60 And [remember] when We said unto thee, "Surely thy Lord encompasses mankind." We did not ordain the vision that We showed thee, save as a trial for mankind, and the Accursed Tree in the Quran. And We inspire fear in them, but it increases them in naught but great rebellion. 61 And when We said unto the angels, "Prostrate before Adam," they all prostrated, save Iblīs. He said, "Shall I prostrate before one whom Thou hast created of clay?" 62 He said, "Dost Thou see this, which Thou hast honored above me? If Thou dost grant me reprieve till the Day of Resurrection, I shall surely gain mastery over his progeny, all save a few." 63 He said, "Go! And whosoever among them should follow thee, surely Hell shall be thy recompense—an ample recompense! 64 So incite whomsoever thou canst among them with thy voice, and bear down upon them with thy cavalry and thy infantry, and be their partner in wealth and children, and make them promises." Satan promises them naught but delusion. 65 "As for My servants, truly thou hast no authority over them." And thy Lord suffices as a Guardian. 66 Your Lord is He Who makes the ships sail upon the sea, that you might seek of His Bounty. Verily, He is Merciful unto you. 67 And whenever affliction befalls you at sea, forgotten are those whom you would call upon, save for Him. Then when He has delivered you safely to land, you turn away. Man is ever ungrateful! 68 Do you feel secure that He will not cause the shore to engulf you or unleash a torrent of stones upon you? Then would you find no guardian for yourselves. 69 Or do you feel secure that He will not cause you to return to it another time, and unleash upon you a tempestuous wind, and drown you for your having been ungrateful? Then you would find no avenger therein against Us. 70 We have indeed honored the Children of Adam, and We carry them over land and sea, and provide them with good things, and We have favored them above many We have created. 71 On the Day We shall call every people by their imam, whosoever is given his book in his right hand, it is they who shall read their book, and they shall not be wronged so much as the thread of a date stone. 72 And whosoever was blind in this [life] will be blind in the Hereafter, and further astray from the way. 73 And they were about to tempt thee away from that which We revealed unto thee, that thou mightest falsely ascribe unto Us something other than it, whereupon they would surely have taken thee as a friend. 74 And had We not made thee firm, thou wouldst certainly have inclined toward them a little. 75 Then We would have made thee taste double in life and double in death. Then thou wouldst have found for thyself no helper against Us. 76 And they were about to incite thee from the land, in order to expel thee therefrom, whereupon they would not have tarried after thee, save a little— 77 the wont of those among Our messengers whom We sent before thee. And thou wilt find no change in Our wont. 78 Perform the prayer at the declining of the sun till the darkening of the night. And the recitation at dawn—truly, the recitation at dawn is ever witnessed! 79 And keep vigil in prayer for part of the night, as a supererogatory act for thee. It may be that thy Lord will resurrect thee in a praiseworthy station. 80 And say, “My Lord! Make me enter in a sincere manner, and make me go forth in a sincere manner, and ordain for me, from Thy Presence, an authority to help me.” 81 Say, “Truth has come, and falsehood has vanished. Truly falsehood is ever vanishing.” 82 And We send down of the Quran that which is a cure and a mercy for the believers. And it increases the wrongdoers in naught but loss. 83 And whenever We bestow a blessing upon man, he turns away and withdraws. And whenever evil befalls him, he is in despair. ﴿84﴾ Say, “Each acts according to his disposition, and your Lord knows well who is more rightly guided on the way.” ﴿85﴾ They ask thee about the Spirit. Say, “The Spirit is from the Command of my Lord, and you have not been given knowledge, save a little.” ﴿86﴾ And if We willed, We could take away that which We revealed unto thee. Then thou wouldst not find, for thyself, any guardian against Us, ﴿87﴾ save a mercy from thy Lord. Truly His Bounty toward thee is ever great. ﴿88﴾ Say, “Surely if mankind and jinn banded together to bring the like of this Quran, they would not bring the like thereof, even if they supported one another.” ﴿89﴾ And indeed We have employed every kind of parable for mankind in this Quran. Yet most of mankind refuse aught but disbelief. ﴿90﴾ And they say, “We shall not believe in you till you make a spring gush forth for us from the earth, ﴿91﴾ or till you have a garden of date palms and grapevines, and you make streams gush forth in the midst of it, ﴿92﴾ or till you make the sky fall upon us in pieces, as you have claimed, or you bring God and the angels before us, ﴿93﴾ or till you have a house of gold ornament, or you ascend to Heaven. And we shall not believe in your ascension till you bring down unto us a book we can read.” Say, “Glory be to my Lord! Am I aught but a human being, a messenger?” ﴿94﴾ And nothing hindered men from believing when guidance came unto them, save that they said, “Has God sent a human being as a messenger?” ﴿95﴾ Say, “Were there angels walking about upon the earth in peace, We would have sent down upon them an angel from Heaven as a messenger.” ﴿96﴾ Say, “God suffices as a Witness between you and me. Verily, of His servants He is Aware, Seeing.” ﴿97﴾ Whomsoever God guides, he is rightly guided; and whomsoever He leads astray, thou wilt find no protectors for them apart from Him. And We shall gather them on the Day of Resurrection upon their faces—blind, dumb, and deaf—their refuge shall be Hell. Every time it abates, We shall increase for them a blazing flame. ﴿98﴾ That is their recompense for having disbelieved in Our signs. And they say, “What! When we are bones and dust, shall we indeed be resurrected as a new creation?” ﴿99﴾ Have they not considered that God, Who created the heavens and the earth, has the power to create the like of them? And He has ordained for them a term, about which there is no doubt. Yet the wrongdoers refuse aught but disbelief. ¹⁰⁰ Say, “Were you to possess the treasuries of my Lord’s Mercy, you would surely withhold them, out of fear of spending. Man is ever miserly!” ¹⁰¹ And We indeed gave unto Moses nine clear signs. So ask the Children of Israel. When he came unto them, Pharaoh said, “Truly I think that you, O Moses, are bewitched!” ¹⁰² He said, “You certainly know that no one has sent these down as clear portents, save the Lord of the heavens and the earth. And truly I think that you, O Pharaoh, are doomed.” ¹⁰³ And he desired to incite them from the land; so We drowned him and those with him all together. ¹⁰⁴ And We said thereafter unto the Children of Israel, “Dwell in the land. And when the promise of the Hereafter comes to pass, We shall bring you as a mixed assembly.” ¹⁰⁵ In truth We sent it down, and in truth it descended. And We sent thee not, save as a bearer of glad tidings and as a warner, ¹⁰⁶ and [We sent it down] as a recitation We have divided in parts, that thou mayest recite it unto men in intervals, and We sent it down in successive revelations. ¹⁰⁷ Say, “Believe in it, or believe not.” Surely those who were given knowledge before it, when it is recited unto them, fall down prostrate on their faces. ¹⁰⁸ And they say, “Glory be to our Lord! The Promise of our Lord is indeed fulfilled.” ¹⁰⁹ And they fall down on their faces, weeping, and it increases them in humility. ¹¹⁰ Say, “Call upon God, or call upon the Compassionate. Whichever you call upon, to Him belong the Most Beautiful Names. And be not loud in your prayer, nor too quiet therein, but seek a way between.” ¹¹¹ And say, “Praise be to God, who has no child! He has no partner in sovereignty; nor has He any protector out of lowliness.” And proclaim His Greatness!

① Glory be to Him Who carried His servant by night from the Sacred Mosque to the Farthest Mosque, whose precincts We have blessed, that We might show him some of Our signs. Truly He is the Hearer, the Seer.

1 This verse refers to the Prophet's Night Journey (al-isrāʿ), considered by most to have taken place a year or two prior to the migration to Madinah (R, Z). The Prophet was reportedly taken upon a winged horse, named Burāq, and led by the Archangel Gabriel to Jerusalem; from there he ascended through the seven heavens and came before God Himself. The whole experience occurred outside the realm of ordinary time, because, despite the great distance between Makkah and Jerusalem, the Prophet is said to have made the journey and returned in a single night; according to some, the door of his house, through which he passed when he left on the journey, was still swinging on its hinges when he returned. This event is foundational in the life of the Prophet Muhammad and for Islamic spirituality, and most of the Prophet's Companions agreed that this miraculous journey took place physically and not only spiritually, although a few maintained that it was an inner, purely spiritual journey. Mainstream Islamic tradition holds, however, that the Ascension (miʿrāj) was bodily as well as spiritual and considers it a special miracle granted to the Prophet, although spiritual ascension is believed by some Muslims, particularly Sufis, to be a possibility open to all Muslims who follow a spiritual path in this life. Indeed, a well-known ḥadīth states, "The canonical prayer (ṣalāh) is the ascension (miʿrāj) of the believers."

Detailed accounts of the Night Journey exist in the Ḥadīth, and the event resonates throughout Islamic literature, especially in mystical works, where the journey is seen as the prototype for all spiritual journeying toward the encounter with God. This central spiritual event in the life of the Prophet has also been the subject of some of the greatest masterpieces of Islamic miniature painting and poetry. Elements of the account of the Prophet's Night Journey may have even influenced accounts of mystical journeying in other traditions, such as Dante's Divine Comedy, whose architecture of the heavens is similar to that described in accounts of the Prophet's ascension, some of which had reached the Latin West.

Jerusalem is considered the third most sacred site for Muslims primarily because of the Prophet's miraculous journey to the city and his heavenly ascension from the site of the ancient Jewish Temple located there. In fact, after the Prophet's return from the Night Journey and for several years thereafter, the Prophet and the Muslim community prayed in the direction of Jerusalem, making the city the first direction of prayer (al-qiblat al-ūlā), which also contributes to its sacred status in Islam. The direction of prayer was changed from Jerusalem to Makkah in the year 2/624, after the revelation of 2:143–44, which instructed the Prophet and the Muslim community to turn in prayer toward the Sacred Mosque in Makkah; see commentary on these verses.

Despite the importance of the Prophet’s Night Journey and Ascension, the Quran’s mention of this event is brief and elliptical. The present verse is considered to refer to the first, “horizontal,” part of the journey, from Makkah to Jerusalem (isrāʿ), while 53:1–18 contains allusions to the Prophet’s experience during the “vertical” part of the journey, that is, his Ascension (miʿrāj) through the seven heavens to the Divine Throne and the encounter with God. In the present verse, then, His servant is a reference to Muhammad who was carried . . . by night from the Sacred Mosque in Makkah to the Farthest Mosque, referring to the site of the ancient Temple in Jerusalem, which today is the site of the Mosque of the Dome of the Rock, inside which is the rock from which the Prophet ascended to the Divine Throne. Carried . . . by night translates asrā . . . layl^{an}. The verb asrā by itself means to travel at night, and thus the additional qualifier, layl^{an}, by night or “in a night,” emphasizes that this journey from Makkah to Jerusalem and back again—a journey that would ordinarily have taken over a month at that time—was accomplished in a single night (R, Z). Although a few have identified the Sacred Mosque with the environs of Makkah generally (Ṭ, Z), the literal reading of the verse indicates that he left from the Sacred Mosque itself (Z). The literal interpretation is further supported by a ḥadīth describing how the Prophet was roused for the journey by the Archangel Gabriel as he lay between sleeping and waking in the sanctuary (ḥaram) that immediately surrounds the Kaʿbah (IK, R, Z).

The Farthest Mosque translates al-masjid al-aqṣā, which is also the name given by Muslims to the mosque built in Jerusalem in the first/seventh century near the site of the ancient Jewish Temple, which had been destroyed centuries earlier by the Romans. The precincts of the Jerusalem Temple are referred to as the Farthest Mosque, according to some, because it was the farthest sacred place visited by the Prophet and the farthest place in which he prayed during his lifetime (Ṭ), although he had likely traveled farther, to Damascus, for trade before he became a prophet. The precincts We have blessed refers to Jerusalem and its environs, comprising the Biblical land of Canaan; see also 7:137; 21:71, 81. Some reports indicate that the blessedness of the land referred to its fertility and its abundant fruits and crops (Ṭ), although others indicate that it was blessed with both worldly and spiritual bounty, since many prophets had worshipped or received revelation there (R, Z). Our signs may include the miraculous journey itself as well as the visions and encounters with past prophets, angels, and God Himself that the Prophet reportedly experienced during its course.

2-3 The Book given to Moses is the Torah. The command to the Israelites, Take no guardian apart from Me, is similar to reminders throughout the Quran that one has no protector other than God (cf., e.g., 2:107, 257; 5:55; 6:14). The progeny of those whom We carried with Noah is an additional description of the Children of Israel in v. 2.

4 And We decreed for the Children of Israel in the Book is understood by most to mean that God informed the Israelites in the Torah of the events alluded to in this verse (IK, R, Ṭ, Z). Some, however, understand this to mean that God decreed these future events in the Preserved Tablet (see 85:22c; Q). For the meaning of the Quranic concept of “working corruption upon the earth” see 7:56c; 30:41c. In the present context, that the Israelites will work corruption upon the earth twice is understood to refer to times of serious deviation from the commands of the Torah (Q, Ṭ), which some commentators connect with particular episodes of spiritual crisis for the Israelites described in the Quran, such as their slaying of the prophets (see 2:61c; 4:155; Ṭ, Z). Given the subsequent reference to the destruction of dwellings (v. 5) and the desecration of the Temple (v. 7), the present verse may be an allusion to the two times when the Temple in Jerusalem was destroyed (the first in 586 BC by the Babylonian army of Nebudchadnezzar and the second by the Romans in AD 70) or to the destruction of the Northern Kingdom, Israel (722 BC), and the Southern Kingdom, Judah (586 BC).

The classical commentators, however, do not seem to have been fully familiar with this history. Events and people associated with these various time periods are mentioned by several commentators in connection with these verses (IK, T), but there is significant chronological confusion in the reports. The commentators thus do not present these two instances of corruption and destruction as directly or schematically fitting either of these two sets of historical events. Although the literal rendering you will ascend to great height may appear positive in context, the commentators understand it to mean that the Israelites had become tyrants (IK, JJ, R), had rebelled against God (IK, Q, Z), or had shown great arrogance toward Him (Q, T).

⑤ So when the promise of the first of these came to pass, We sent against you servants of Ours, possessed of great might, and they ravaged your dwellings, and it was a promise fulfilled.

5 The commentators do not agree about which events in Israelite history are being referenced in this verse; some identify the leader of the servants of Ours whom God sent against the Israelites as Goliath, Sennacherib, or Nebudchadnezzar (Q, R, Z). Some commentators, however, suggest that the identity of those sent against the Israelites is not significant; what is important is the concept that such a fate befell the Israelites at times of collective moral and spiritual failing (IK, R). That they ravaged your dwellings is explained by some as referring to the plundering of homes and wealth and the destruction of sacred objects, including the desecration of the Temple, the burning of the Torah, and the killing of those trained to read it (IK, R, Z), as well as taking the remaining Israelites into captivity (R). That it was a promise fulfilled indicates that it was a fate decreed by God that could not be avoided (R).

⑥ Then We gave you a turn against them, and We aided you with wealth and children, and We made you greater in number.

6 God gave the Israelites a turn against them, after they had repented of the corruption and arrogance mentioned in v. 4 (Z). Some consider this change of fortune to refer to the killing of Goliath or, more commonly, to the defeat of Babylon, the liberation of the land from the oppressors (Ṭ, Z), and the Israelites' subsequent ability to return to the area around Jerusalem, during which time new prophets rose among them (R). God's aiding the Israelites with wealth and children indicates that He increased them in worldly prosperity, since wealth and children are two common signifiers of earthly good fortune in the Quran (see, e.g., 18:46). That He made them greater in number means He increased the size of their population (Ṭ).

⑦ If you are virtuous, you are virtuous for the sake of your own souls, and if you commit evil, it is for them. So when the other promise comes to pass, they will make wretched your faces, and enter the Temple as they entered it the first time, and utterly ruin whatsoever they overtake.

7 The idea that the consequences of moral or immoral actions ultimately devolve upon those who commit them is conveyed in various ways throughout the Quran; see 2:272, which indicates that whatever one spends in charity is spent for oneself, and 10:108, where one is guided for the benefit of one's soul and led astray only to its detriment, as well as 17:15; 27:40; 31:12; 39:41; 40:28; 45:15. That being virtuous, in particular, is ultimately for the sake of your own souls is also alluded to in the rhetorical question in 55:60: Is the reward of goodness aught but goodness? The other promise that comes to pass refers to the second time God sent a people against the Israelites (Z). Some reports connect this second set of events with the Jewish king Herod's execution of John the Baptist (JJ, Ṭ) and thus consider it to refer to the time of the Roman occupation, which also saw the second destruction of the Jewish Temple, possibly alluded to by they will . . . enter the Temple as they entered it the first time. Although the second destruction of the Temple was carried out by the Romans, the destruction mentioned in this verse is associated by some commentators, anachronistically, with Nebuchadnezzar (JJ, Ṭ). The chronological discrepancy is noted by al-Rāzī, who suggests that interpreting the ultimate meaning of this passage should not be dependent upon knowing the specific details of Israelite history to which it alludes.

When this second period comes to pass, they—that is, those whom God will send against the Israelites—will make wretched their faces, meaning that the grief and distress that will befall the Israelites will show on their faces (R, Z). The face is usually considered a reflection of the soul and serves as its symbol in both positive and negative contexts in the Quran; see, for example, 2:112, where one submits his face to God; 3:106, where on the Day of Resurrection faces whiten and faces blacken in accordance with the fate of the souls; and 14:50, where those in Hell have the Fire covering their faces.

⑧ It may be that your Lord will have mercy upon you, but if you revert, We shall revert. And We have made Hell a prison for the disbelievers.

8 The Lord may have mercy upon the Israelites and remove the adversity visited upon them if they repent (R); according to some, to say that God may have mercy upon them means that He certainly did or will (Ṭ). But if they again revert to corruption, God will also revert, meaning that He will punish them again. That this pattern of Israelite disobedience and Divine Punishment would continue into the future is understood by some commentators to be implied in 7:167, referring to the Israelites: And when thy Lord proclaimed that He would surely send against them, till the Day of Resurrection, those who would inflict upon them a terrible punishment.

Hell is a prison for the disbelievers, because, in contrast to earthly punishment, which may change with time and which one may escape through death, the punishments of Hell are inescapable and surround the condemned on every side like a prison (R). Here prison translates ḥaṣīr, which may also mean a mat or cushion, thus ironically indicating that Hell is where the disbelievers will rest or repose; also see 2:206; 3:12, 197; 13:18; 38:56, where Hell is described as an evil resting place; and 7:41, where it is simply the resting place of arrogant disbelievers and wrongdoers.

⑨ Truly this Quran guides toward that which is most upright, and gives glad tidings to the believers who perform righteous deeds that theirs shall be a great reward, ⑩ and that We have prepared a painful punishment for those who believe not in the Hereafter.

9–10 That the Quran guides toward that which is most upright can mean that it guides to the truth or to religion (Ṭ). However, the Arabic pronoun rendered that which in that which is most upright is grammatically feminine, and thus some consider this to be a reference to the straight, or upright, path (ṭarīqah) or to the upright religious community or creed (millah), since both are grammatically feminine (Z). The great reward is a reference to the paradisaal Garden (Ṭ).

⑪ Man prays for evil as he prays for good, and man is ever hasty.

11 Man prays for evil as he prays for good refers to situations where people pray in ignorance for what seems beneficial to them but will only bring them harm (R), or when they pray, in a moment of anger or passion, for what will bring harm to themselves, their families, or their property by way of curse or imprecation (R, Ṭ, Z). The implication is that if God were to respond to such requests, human beings would be destroyed by their own supplications (Ṭ). This behavior reflects that man is ever hasty, and throughout the Quran people hasten unto disbelief (5:41) and to sin and enmity (5:62); they seek to hasten evil before good (27:46) and seek to hasten their own destruction when they repeatedly ask their prophets when the punishments about which they have been warned will come to pass (Z; see, e.g., 6:57–58c; 8:32; 29:29). That being hasty is intrinsic to human nature is also indicated by 21:37, which says that man was created of haste. It is said that when God breathed His Spirit into Adam, He started from the head, and as the Spirit flowed downward, the clay became living flesh. Adam watched, impatient for the process to be completed, and sought to stand up before the Spirit reached his feet (R, Ṭ).

⑫ We made the night and the day two signs. Then We effaced the sign of the night, and made the sign of the day, giving sight, that you might seek bounty from your Lord, and that you might know the number of years and the reckoning. And We have expounded everything in detail.

12 This is one of many verses to invoke the night and the day as two of God's great signs to humanity (see, e.g., 2:164; 3:190; 6:96–97; 7:54; 10:6, 67; 13:3; 23:80; 24:44; 28:73; 30:23; 40:61). These are both signs of God's Power and Beneficence, in that the night provides a time for repose (6:96) and the day a time for "seeking bounty." The regular alternation between day and night also allows people to know the number of years and "reckon" time; see also 6:96 and 10:5, where the reckoning of time is similarly facilitated by the cycles of the sun and moon. That God has expounded all things in detail means that He has explained them clearly (Ṭ) in the Quran; similarly described as expounded are God’s signs (6:97–98, 126; 7:133; 11:1; 41:3; 41:44) and His Book (7:52).

13 And [for] every man We have fastened his omen upon his neck, and We shall bring it forth for him on the Day of Resurrection as a book he will meet wide open.

14 “Read your book! On this Day, your soul suffices as a reckoner against you.”

13–14 Omen here translates ṭā’irah, a word that derives from the same root as that for “birds” (ṭayr), since the early Arabs, like certain other premodern societies, considered the movement and behavior of birds as indicators of impending good or bad fortune or as harbingers of the positive or negative consequences of a decision or action (R). That God has fastened a human being’s omen upon his neck is an image used to convey the idea that God has foreknowledge of a human being’s ultimate destiny and that from this perspective one’s destiny is as if sealed about one’s neck. The neck is singled out in particular, as it is said to be the site where tokens of either honor or shame are hung—for example, necklaces indicating high social status or honor, or chains or collars indicating servitude (R, Ṭ). Many commentators consider the omen upon one’s neck to represent one’s deeds in life, which, like an omen, portend either bliss or wretchedness in the Hereafter (IK, Q, Ṭ, Z). But many of these same commentators also take it as referring to the Divine Decree, or qadar (“measuring out”) for each individual.

Various traditions indicate that all human beings are born with a Divinely apportioned life span, material provision, and number of offspring as well as with the determination of their status in the Hereafter (Q, R, Ṭ). Both these traditions and the present verse can be read in a predestinarian vein to indicate that all moral destiny is foreordained, but they can also be understood simply as indicating that God has foreknowledge of an individual’s eventual moral choices and consequent fate; indeed, some suggest that the omen may refer to individual moral responsibility itself (taklīf), meaning that no human being can escape the responsibility to live according to God’s Law and follow His commands (Q).

Here as elsewhere, the collected record of one’s deeds in life is described as a book that one will encounter on the Day of Judgment (cf. 17:71; 18:49; 69:19–25; 84:7–10). That an individual’s book is wide open indicates that its contents are well known to the individual as well as to God, and although some of the deeds and their repercussions may have remained hidden in earthly life, they will become fully manifest in the Hereafter. The recording of deeds is often ascribed to two angels assigned to every individual, one recording good deeds and the other evil deeds (IK, R; see commentary on 82:10–12). Al-Rāzī, however, describes the spiritual reality of this recording metaphorically, suggesting that every deed one commits in life is like a drop of water that, no matter how small, leaves some small impression upon the “rock” that is the substance of the soul. Thus each deed—and especially repeated or habitual behaviors—eventually has a part in inscribing the destiny of each individual upon the soul.

It is God, perhaps speaking through the voice of the angels (R), who issues the command in v. 14, Read your book! In reading one’s own book, one effectively renders judgment upon oneself; since the book is composed solely of one’s own deeds, all individuals can be said to be able to judge as to whether they deserve to enter the Garden or the Fire by “reading” their own actions. Although the effect of Divine Mercy on individual salvation remains imponderable and a source of hope, it can be said that human beings are saved or condemned through their own actions. For this reason, the Quran repeatedly states that God does not wrong people; rather, it is they who wrong themselves (e.g., 3:117; 10:44; 29:40). In this way, one’s soul suffices as a reckoner, and the Quran offers elsewhere the powerful image of one’s own limbs testifying against one on the Day of Judgment (24:24; 36:65; 41:20–22). This book can thus be understood as referring to one’s very soul, inscribed with its deeds in life. Some describe the book in this way, “Your tongue is its pen, your saliva is its ink, and your limbs are the paper upon which it is written; it is you who dictates [it] to your own memory” (Q).

⑮ Whosoever is rightly guided is only rightly guided for the sake of his own soul, and whosoever is astray is only astray to its detriment. None shall bear the burden of another. And never do We punish till We have sent a messenger.

15 This verse brings together three themes commonly invoked throughout the Quran, including the related ideas that the consequences of one’s moral actions and one’s state of guidance or misguidance ultimately devolve upon oneself (see 16:7c) and that no one assumes the burden of another. This means that no one is punished for the misdeeds of another, but all must bear the consequences of their own actions (see 6:164; 35:18; 39:7; 53:38). Although some may lead others astray, the burden of the sins committed by those who were thus misguided is still borne by themselves, although some verses indicate that those who mislead bear an additional burden (cf. 7:38; 16:25; 37:32–33). That God does not punish a people without warning, identified here specifically with His sending a messenger, is mentioned elsewhere (26:208; 28:59); see also 6:131, which states that God would never destroy towns for their wrongdoing while their people were heedless, meaning before a messenger had made them aware of their wrongdoing and its destructive consequences (see 6:131c).

⑩ And when We desire to destroy a town, We command those who live a life of luxury within it; yet they commit iniquity therein. Thus the Word comes due against it and We annihilate it completely.

16 Throughout the Quran, it is mentioned that it is often the privileged members of a community—its leaders and those who enjoy high social status—who are most resistant to the warnings of the prophets and most likely to be disbelievers (see 6:123c; 7:60–62c; 23:33–38; 34:34–35; 43:23). We command those who live a life of luxury is understood by most commentators to mean that God commands such people to belief and obedience (JJ, R, Ṭ, Ṭ's), but that they disobey and commit iniquity. According to al-Rāzī, when We desire to destroy a town means when the time draws near for the destruction of a town whose fate is already known to God. At that time, God commands those who live a life of luxury within it, knowing that they will disobey. The disobedience and disbelief of people of privilege is in some ways the least excusable because of the many blessings they have been given, although the attractions of the world may be greater for such people and they may face greater temptation. Al-Zamakhsharī understands the verse to mean that God commands those who live a life of luxury to disobey and to commit iniquity. However, al-Zamakhsharī understands this to be a metaphorical statement, meaning that in giving such people the means and power to disobey and lead others astray, it is as if He has commanded them to iniquity, for, as al-Zamakhsharī and others point out, the Quran clearly states that God does not command indecency (7:28). Some have read the verbal phrase amarnā, We command, as ammarnā, meaning that God places those who live a life of luxury in positions of authority (R, Ṭ). That the Word comes due for a town or a people indicates that their period of respite has elapsed and the threatened Divine Punishment is imminent (cf. 10:96; 28:63; 32:13; 36:7, 70; 37:3; 39:19; 40:6; 41:25; 46:18). In some of the foregoing cases, Word translates kalimah, although here and elsewhere it translates qawl. That the town is subsequently “annihilated completely” means that it is utterly destroyed and uprooted from its very foundations (R).

①⑦ How many a generation have We destroyed after Noah! Thy Lord suffices as One Aware of the sins of His servants, Seeing.

17 In Islamic sacred history, Noah is the first in a series of prophets whose peoples were destroyed for rejecting the message of repentance and tawḥīd (God’s Oneness) brought by these prophets; see, for example, 7:59–136; 7:59c. The Quran repeatedly invokes as signs to be heeded the towns, peoples, and generations destroyed for their wrongdoing, often with phrasing similar to this verse (see, e.g., 6:6; 7:4; 19:74; 20:128; 21:11; 22:45).

①⑧ Whosoever would desire the ephemeral, We hasten for him therein whatsoever We will for whomsoever We desire. Then We appointed Hell for him, wherein he shall burn, blameworthy, banished.

①⑨ And whosoever desires the Hereafter, and endeavors for it earnestly, and is a believer, it is they whose efforts shall be appreciated.

18–19 This verse indicates that, for those who seek only worldly things while denying or despairing of the rewards of the Hereafter, God may hasten for them precisely what they desire; that is, He may grant them worldly goods in the here and now, but with the caveat whatsoever We will for whomsoever We desire, for the matter is controlled by Divine rather than human will. He then “appoints Hell” for them in the Hereafter. However, the efforts of those whose desire and endeavor are for the Hereafter are appreciated by God, and God’s appreciation (lit. “thankfulness”) for their deeds is the reward He grants them in the Hereafter (T); cf. 2:200–201; 3:145.

This verse is an important basis for the Islamic doctrine that deeds are judged according to their intentions (R), since here one is rewarded for desiring and earnestly endeavoring for the good, as a believer, without mention of the success or completion of all of one's endeavors (Z). This verse can be said to set three conditions for attaining reward for a good deed: one must intend goodness by it; one must make an earnest attempt to complete the deed; and one must do so in the context of being a believer (R). Those who desire the ephemeral in v. 18 may include not only those whose worldly desires lead them to outwardly sinful behavior, but also those who perform seemingly pious and virtuous acts, but only for worldly benefit or hypocritically (Z). In this vein, the Prophet said in a famous ḥadīth, “Deeds are only according to intentions, and verily each shall have what he intended. Whosoever emigrated [to Madinah] for God and His Prophet, his emigration is for God and His Prophet. Whosoever emigrated to attain worldly benefit or to marry a woman, his emigration is for that for which he emigrated” (Z). Having emigrated for a worldly rather than spiritual purpose, one may attain that worldly desire, but will not be rewarded for this emigration in the Hereafter.

20 Each do We aid—both these and those—with the Gift of thy Lord; and the Gift of thy Lord is not confined.

21 Observe how We have favored some of them over others, and surely the Hereafter is greater in ranking and greater in favor.

20–21 God aids both those who desire the ephemeral (v. 18) and whosoever desires the Hereafter (v. 19), for God's Gift, meaning earthly provision, is not confined to one group or the other. That He favored some of them over others (see 4:34) in earthly life may indicate that whosoever desires the Hereafter have been given the greater gift, namely, sound judgment, which is more valuable than the “ephemeral things” desired by others (Ṭ). It might also simply indicate that God gives and withholds provision in different degrees among both believers and disbelievers (R). Al-Rāzī observes that the Divine purpose behind such differences in earthly provision is elucidated in 43:32: We have apportioned for them their livelihood in the life of this world and have raised some of them above others in rank, that some of them may take others into service; and in 6:165: He it is Who appointed you vicegerents upon the earth and raised some of you by degrees above others, that He may try you in that which He has given you. But the ranking and favor will be even greater—that is, far more pronounced and clear—in the Hereafter, as the guided and the misguided will be separated into the people of the Garden and the people of the Fire, respectively (R).

22 Do not set up another god along with God, lest you sit blameworthy, forsaken.

22 This is one of many repeated Quranic warnings against “setting up” partners (e.g., 3:151; 4:48; 13:16), equals (e.g., 2:22; 14:30; 41:9), or other gods along with God, that is, establishing them as objects of worship (see also 15:95–96; 17:39; 50:26).

23 Thy Lord decrees that you worship none but Him, and be virtuous to parents. Whether one or both of them reaches old age, say not to them “Uff!” nor chide them, but speak unto them a noble word.

23 For other verses in which the imperative to worship God is paired with a command to be good to parents, see 2:83; 4:36c; 6:151; 31:13–14. That the Lord decrees that you worship none but Him can mean that He commands it (Ṭ) or that in an ultimate sense nothing is worshipped other than God, as in 13:15: And unto God prostrates whosoever is in the heavens and on the earth, willingly or unwillingly, as do their shadows in the morning and the evening; and v. 44: The seven heavens, and the earth, and whosoever is in them glorify Him. And there is no thing, save that it hymns His praise, though you do not understand their praise.

This verse specifically counsels respect for parents as they age. Uff! can be an expression of complaint or annoyance, and the implication here is that one should be tolerant and patient with parents and their needs and dependencies, just as they were patient with one as a child (R, Ṭ, Z). More specifically, uff can refer to something that is filthy or soiling (R, Ṭ), and some thus suggest that the verse is addressing the irritation a son or daughter might feel in having to assist elderly parents with personal hygiene (Ṭ). The prohibition against saying Uff! to one’s parents may also be meant to discourage the use of any kind of ugly, harsh, or dismissive expression with them (Ṭ). To chide them (tanharhumā) may also mean to rebuff them or turn away from them in anger.

24 Lower unto them the wing of humility out of mercy and say, “My Lord! Have mercy upon them, as they raised me when I was small.”

24 To lower . . . the wing of humility out of mercy expresses the abundance of mercy, affection, and humility with which children should treat their parents. A child’s showing mercy to parents and praying that God will have mercy upon them are a fitting recompense for the mercy they showed the child when he or she was young (Z). Moreover, even if one’s parents are disbelievers, one should still pray for God’s Mercy upon them, asking particularly that He give them guidance (Z). In connection with this verse, al-Zamakhsharī cites the ḥadīth: “The Contentment of God lies in the contentment of parents; and the Anger of God lies in the anger of parents.”

25 Your Lord knows best that which is in your souls. If you are righteous, then verily He is Forgiving toward the penitent.

25 That God knows what is in souls is also mentioned in 2:234 and 11:31. Similarly, He is said to know what lies within breasts (see, e.g., 3:154; 5:7; 11:5; 29:10) and in hearts (4:63; 33:51).

26 Give unto the kinsman his right, and unto the indigent and the traveler, but do not squander wastefully.

27 Truly the wasteful are the brethren of satans, and Satan is ungrateful to his Lord.

26–27 For a very similar verse, see 30:38; see also 2:83, 177, 215; 4:36; 8:41; 24:22. In 59:7 one is similarly enjoined to be charitable or kind to, among others, relatives, the indigent, and travelers. To give unto the kinsman his right may mean to maintain good relations with one’s kin and to visit them often (Ṭ, Z), since maintaining kinship relations (ṣilat al-raḥim) is an important principle in Islamic ethics. A report attributed to ‘Alī Zayn al-‘Ābidīn (d. 92/711), the pious great-grandson of the Prophet and the fourth Shiite Imam, understands kinsman here to refer specifically to the kin of the Prophet Muhammad, meaning that they should be given their specially allotted share of bounties and spoils (Q, Ṭ, Ṭs), since they were forbidden from receiving other forms of charity. To give unto . . . the traveler may mean to provide travelers with food or accommodation (Ṭ). But one should not squander such charity wastefully by being excessive in one's giving (Q, Ṭ, Z), perhaps in the interests of pride or enhancing one's reputation or by giving it to those who do not need it rather than to those who have a moral claim upon one's charity (Q, Ṭ), that is, relatives, the poor, and travelers, among other groups (such as orphans) mentioned elsewhere (see 2:177). Wastefulness or prodigality is to be avoided in charity as in all things (see, e.g., 7:31), for God loves not the prodigal (6:141). In charitable giving, then, one should strike a balance between being "wasteful" and being "miserly" (see v. 29; 25:67). Those who are wasteful are the brethren of satans, meaning that they are their friends and supporters (Ṭ).

28 But if thou turnest away from them, seeking a mercy from thy Lord, for which thou dost hope, then speak unto them a gentle word.

28 Vv. 28–30 are addressed to the Prophet, but the injunctions they contain apply to all believers. Here, the verse instructs the Prophet regarding situations in which he must "turn away" from someone seeking his charity, because he does not have the means to provide what is being requested. Seeking a mercy from thy Lord may be an expression referring to the state of temporary poverty that prevents the Prophet from fulfilling such a request (R). In this context, to call poverty a state of seeking a mercy from God suggests both the temporary nature of the Prophet's state of need and his hope and trust that God will eventually grant him the mercy, that is, the provision (Ṭ, Z) he needs—for the Prophet anticipates that this mercy will come.

It is reported that when the Prophet was asked for charity that he could not provide, he would remain silent while the provision was not available, preferring to await the necessary provision rather than refuse the request (Q). Instead of remaining silent, however, the Prophet is here instructed to speak unto them—that is, the petitioners—a gentle word, explaining that he cannot fulfill their need at the moment because of a lack of means (R), but encouraging and promising them that provision from God shall come (Ṭ). Speak unto them a gentle word may also be understood to mean "speak for them gentle words," indicating that the Prophet should supplicate God on their behalf to grant them the needed provision (Q). An alternate interpretation explains that this verse was revealed after the Prophet refused to grant the requested charity to a group of people whom he knew would use the funds to engage in corruption. In denying them, the Prophet was seeking a mercy from God for thwarting any corruption they had intended (Q).

29 And let not thine hand be shackled to thy neck; nor let it be entirely open, lest thou shouldst sit condemned, destitute.

29 That thine hand be shackled to thy neck is a metaphorical reference to miserliness, which is also condemned elsewhere in the Quran; see 47:38: And whosoever is miserly is only miserly toward himself. God is the Rich, and you are the poor; as well as 3:180; 4:37; 9:76; 57:24. But even in matters of charity, one's hand should also not be entirely open, referring to an excessive and thus irresponsible generosity, which may well leave one devoid of the means to provide for oneself. This is one of several Quranic passages that indicates the importance of moderation in all things and avoiding the extremes of miserliness and prodigality (see vv. 26–27); see also 25:67. Miserliness will render one condemned by those to whom one has refused charity (IK, Ṭ), while prodigality renders one liable to condemnation from oneself and others, as well as from God, for depleting one's wealth so quickly (Ṭ), rendering oneself destitute through foolish excess (Z). Destitute translates maḥsūr, which can also mean “exhausted” or “depleted” (R, Ṭ, Z).

30 Truly thy Lord outspreads and straitens provision for whomsoever He will. Verily of His servants He is Aware, Seeing.

30 That God outspreads and straitens provision for whomsoever He will (cf. 13:26; 28:82; 29:62; 30:37; 34:36, 39; 39:52; 42:12) indicates that God controls all earthly provision, an idea also found in a well-known ḥadīth from the Prophet that includes earthly provision among the things decreed by God for each individual. Outspreads translates yabsuṭu, and this action, attributed to God here and elsewhere, is derived from the same root as the Divine Name al-Bāsiṭ, the Open-Handed. Although the Name al-Bāsiṭ as such does not appear in the Quran, this quality of Divine Open-handedness is also reflected in 5:64: The Jews say, “God’s Hand is shackled.” Shackled are their hands, and they are cursed for what they say. Nay, but His two Hands are outstretched (mabsūtātān, derived from the same root as al-Bāsiṭ).

31 And slay not your children for fear of poverty. We shall provide for them and for you. Surely their slaying is a great sin.

32 And approach not adultery; verily it is indecency and an evil way.

33 And slay not the soul that God has made inviolable, save by right. And whosoever is slain unjustly, We have appointed authority unto his heir. Then let him not be excessive in slaying. Verily he shall be helped.

31–33 A similar list of injunctions against slaying one’s children, committing adultery (or “indecency” in 6:151), and slaying innocent souls is found in 6:151; see 6:151–52c. As for the slaying of one’s children, it was reportedly a common practice in parts of pre-Islamic Arabia to kill infant girls immediately after birth for fear of the shame or liability they might bring to the family (cf. 81:8–9c). Here and in 6:151, the prohibition against slaying one’s children out of fear of poverty is followed by the assurance of God’s Provision. Warnings about the evil of and punishment for fornication or adultery (often referred to as “indecency”) are also found in 4:15, 24–25; 6:151; 24:2–3; 25:68; 33:30. In 60:12, a promise not to slay one’s children or commit adultery is part of a pledge taken by women seeking to join the Prophet’s community at Madinah.

The warning against slaying souls that God has made inviolable—that is, innocent souls—is also found in 6:151 and 25:68; see also 4:29, 92–93; 5:32. The exception save by right refers to cases where the Quran warrants slaying as a punishment for a capital transgression, such as for murder or “waging war against God and His Messenger” (5:33). In the case of one who is slain unjustly, meaning without right or just cause, God has appointed authority (sulṭān) unto his heir (walīhi)—that is, to the relative close enough to the deceased to be responsible for claiming retribution for the death (Z)—to demand the execution of the murderer as retaliation, to pardon the murderer, or to accept the wergild (IK, Q, Ṭ). This verse was invoked by °Amr ibn al-°Āṣ (d. 43/664) at the arbitration (37/658) that took place after the Battle of Ṣiffīn (37/657) as part of his argument that Mu°āwiyah ibn

Abī Sufyān (then the governor of Syria) had the right to assume the caliphate. °Amr’s argument was that Mu°āwiyah, as the walī (in the sense of a near male relative) of his “unjustly slain” cousin, the third Caliph, °Uthmān ibn °Affān, should be granted sulṭān, meaning political authority (IK).

Some commentators indicate that only a male heir (walī) can exercise this authority, but others disagree. Here heir translates walī, which can also mean “protector,” and thus some cite 9:71, But the believing men and believing women are protectors (awliyā’; sing. walī) of one another, as evidence that female heirs and next of kin might also be granted such authority (Q). The warning against being excessive in slaying is understood to mean that only the actual murderer is subject to the death penalty, and the retaliation must not extend beyond the perpetrator of the crime; this was meant to prevent the extended blood feuds that were often generated by such crimes in pre-Islamic Arabia (Ṭ); see 2:178c; 2:194; 5:45c. It is also understood to mean that the murderer should not be tortured, maimed, or mutilated before execution (Q). Verily he shall be helped most likely refers to the heir of the slain individual (Q, Ṭ), although some suggest it is the slain individual who is helped (Ṭ).

34 And approach not the orphan’s property, save in the most virtuous manner, till he reaches maturity. And fulfill the pact; surely the pact is called to account.

34 The injunction to approach not the orphan’s property . . . till he reaches maturity means that the guardian of an orphan is not entitled to take the property belonging to the orphan through inheritance or otherwise. Moreover, the guardian is responsible for maintaining the orphan’s property and returning it when the orphan reaches maturity. Save in the most virtuous manner may refer to certain exceptions made with regard to the guardian’s use of an orphan’s property. For example, in cases where the orphan’s property is in the form of land or riding animals, the guardian might temporarily use this property as long as it is maintained and not depleted thereby; and indigent guardians might use or borrow an orphan’s property to the extent that it is absolutely needed. The orphan’s property can also be used or exchanged by the guardian if it is done in order to improve or increase the value of the orphan’s inheritance (see 6:151; see also commentary on 2:220; 4:2, 6, 10). The Quran repeatedly enjoins the fulfilling of pacts, covenants, and vows both to God and to others; see for example, 2:40; 3:76; 5:1; 6:152; 13:20; 16:91; 48:10;

35 And give full measure when you measure, and weigh with the straight balance. That is better and more virtuous in the end.

35 To give full measure when you measure and to weigh with the straight balance mean to measure honestly, rather than cheating people when trading goods and currency by using a balance that falsely overstates or understates the weight of what has been placed upon it. It also means, in a general way, to barter or exchange goods fairly and honestly, so that what is given is equal to what is received. For similar injunctions, see 6:151–52c; 7:85; 11:84–85; 26:181–82; 55:8–9; 83:1–3c.

36 And pursue not that whereof you have no knowledge. Truly hearing, and sight, and the heart—all of these will be called to account.

36 Pursue not that whereof you have no knowledge can mean that one should not speak of things about which one does not have proper knowledge or falsely claim to have knowledge about something that one does not in fact have (R, Ṭ). The verse can thus be understood as alluding to any type of false or unjust testimony (R, Ṭ, Z). One should not pursue, in the sense of investigating, private matters in order to expose the faults of others. In this context in which a series of moral injunctions are given regarding the treatment of others, the verse may be interpreted to mean more specifically that one should not level accusations or charges against others concerning affairs about which one does not have sufficient knowledge, in effect slandering them (R, Ṭ); see, for example, 24:15, which criticizes those who pass along false rumors about the sexual transgressions of another: When you accepted it with your tongues, and spoke with your mouths that whereof you had no knowledge, supposing it to be insignificant, though it is great in the Eyes of God.

Pursue not can also be rendered simply “Follow not,” indicating that one should not follow a path or a guide without knowing whether one will be led or misled; the verse can thus be read as supporting the traditional Islamic discouragement of taqlīd (Z), the blind imitation or following of another in matters of theology (although not in matters of law, which always requires some degree of following the Sunnah and, for those who are not jurisprudents themselves, following the legal rulings of others). In fact, some suggested that this verse meant, with regard to legal rulings, that one should not make judgments based on speculation, even through the process of analogical reasoning (qiyās), though others argued that various legal determinations, such as estimating the direction of the qiblah or issuing a nonbinding legal opinion (fatwā), necessarily entail some level of speculation (R).

The human faculties of hearing, and sight, and the heart are frequently invoked in the Quran, as they are understood to be three means by which people are guided to truth; the heart is traditionally considered the seat of understanding as well as faith; see 2:7c. The three faculties are thus mentioned as gifts for which people should be grateful (see 16:78; 23:78; 32:9c; 67:23), but also as faculties that can be “removed,” “sealed,” or otherwise rendered ineffective by God as a punishment for wrongdoing or disbelief (2:7; 6:46; 16:108; 45:23; 46:26). Thus these three faculties will be called to account, meaning that one will be held accountable for their proper or improper use (R, Ṭs). The verse may also be read to mean that the faculties of hearing, sight, and the heart will themselves be questioned (R, Ṭs). This would be similar to other verses where one’s limbs and one’s skin are said to testify about and even against one on the Day of Judgment (Ṭ; cf. 24:24; 41:20–22).

37 And walk not exultantly upon the earth; surely thou shalt not penetrate the earth, nor reach the mountains in height.

37 That one should walk not exultantly upon the earth (cf. 31:18) means that one should be humble and moderate in one’s demeanor (see 31:19c), rather than acting in a boastful or arrogant manner, for God loves not one who is a vainglorious boaster (4:36; cf. 31:18; 57:23). This can also be understood as a moral guideline addressed to all human beings, instructing them not to act triumphantly toward other creatures. In contrast to those who would assume such an arrogant demeanor, the servants of the Compassionate . . . walk humbly upon the earth (25:63). A famous report of the Prophet’s appearance and demeanor, composed by ‘Alī ibn Abī Ṭālib, describes the Prophet as walking energetically, but never proudly (al-Ṭabarī, Ta’rīkh). That neither the Prophet nor anyone else shall penetrate the earth, nor reach the mountains in height is meant symbolically to remind human beings of their own weakness and powerlessness, surrounded as they are by vast phenomena that demonstrate, by contrast, their own smallness. Human beings thus have no reason to assume their own greatness or behave arrogantly or boastfully (R).

38 The evil of all this is loathsome unto thy Lord.

39 That is from the wisdom thy Lord has revealed unto thee. Do not set up another god along with God, lest thou be cast into Hell, condemned, banished.

38–39 The evil of all this in v. 38 refers to the series of sinful behaviors warned against in vv. 31–37. That in v. 39 refers more broadly to all of the moral injunctions and prohibitions mentioned in vv. 22–39 (R, Z), which are from the wisdom thy Lord has revealed unto thee, that is, Muhammad, through the Quran. V. 22 begins this section with an exhortation to not set up another god along with God, and v. 39 closes it with the identical admonition, because, according to al-Zamakhsharī, knowledge of the Oneness of God (tawḥīd) is the beginning and foundation of all wisdom. The inherent virtue of the various moral guidelines set out in vv. 22–39 is self-evident to the intellect, according to al-Rāzī, and as such these moral guidelines are found in all religions and creeds and are never subject to abrogation by later revelations. One report specifically mentions that all of these injunctions were found in the tablets of the Torah given to Moses (R, T).

40 Did your Lord favor you with sons, while He took females from among the angels [for Himself]? Surely you speak a monstrous word!

40 This is one of several passages that mocks the pre-Islamic belief among the Quraysh that the angels were female and that they were the daughters of God; see also 4:117; 16:57–59; 37:149–53; 43:16–19; 52:39; 53:19–21, 27. Here and elsewhere, the belief that God had daughters is juxtaposed with the extremely low regard the pre-Islamic Arabs reportedly held for daughters in general—the birth of a daughter brought shame and anguish to a family. Thus the rhetorical question Did your Lord favor you with sons, while He took females? is meant to reveal the foolishness of such a belief (cf. 53:21), which is described as a monstrous word. Monstrous translates ‘aẓīm, which also means “great” or “tremendous,” but here in a negative context can be translated “monstrous” or “terrible.” Such a belief is monstrous, because attributing to God what they would consider a misfortune and a disgrace for themselves reveals the pre-Islamic Arabs' profound lack of reverence for God and His Power.

④⁴¹ And We have indeed varied [Our signs] in this Quran, that they might reflect, though it increased them in naught but aversion.

41 That God varies His signs (6:46, 65, 105; 7:58; 46:27) or elsewhere His parables (17:89; 18:54) in the Quran means that He presents them in varying ways (R): sometimes through rational proofs, sometimes in an awesome manner inspiring fear, and sometimes in a gentle manner that attracts listeners (Bd on 6:46). The purpose of the Quran's multifarious presentation is so that they—that is, its listeners or readers—might reflect upon these truths and signs and come to a greater understanding of them. That it increased them in naught but aversion means that it did so for some, which is consistent with other verses of the Quran that describe the wide range of responses among people to hearing and seeing the revelations and signs of God. See, for example, 2:26, where God's parables guide some and mislead others; 9:124–25, where every sūrah increases some in faith, but is the cause of spiritual defilement for others; and v. 82, where what is sent down of the Quran is a cure and a mercy for the believers, but increases the wrongdoers in naught but loss. Disbelievers are also increased in naught but aversion by the words of the prophets in 17:46; 25:60; 35:42. Those who are increased in naught but aversion in this verse might also be presumed to be disbelievers and wrongdoers (IK). Mu^ctazilite theologians argued that this verse indicates that God wills for all to understand His message, since He displays His signs in various ways precisely to encourage different types of people to reflect; but some Ash^carite theologians adduce this verse to show the opposite, namely, that God wills to turn certain people away from the truth, since He revealed His signs knowing that they would increase some people in naught but aversion (R).

④⁴² Say, “If there were gods with Him, as they say, they would surely seek a way unto the Possessor of the Throne.”

42 The Prophet is instructed to challenge the idolaters' belief in multiple gods by asserting that if there were other gods besides God, they would surely seek a way *unto the Possessor of the Throne, that is, the One God. In other words, if there were multiple gods, they would all vie with one another for a way to dethrone the Possessor of the Throne and struggle with Him for dominance (JJ, Q, R, Z), thereby creating chaos; for a similar idea, see 21:22: Were there gods other than God in them (i.e., in the heavens and on the earth), they (the heavens and the earth) would surely have been corrupted. So glory be to God, Lord of the Throne, above that which they ascribe. See also 23:91.*

Alternately, the present verse can also be interpreted to mean that these other gods, were they to exist, would seek a way unto the One God in order to come near Him and ingratiate themselves with Him, being aware of His Dominance over them (IK, Q, R, Z). If we juxtapose this verse with 39:3, where the idolaters claim to worship other gods as a means of approaching the One God, this verse might seem to respond to their claim by suggesting, “If there were other gods, would they not seek a way to approach the One God on their own behalf, rather than simply as intermediaries for the idolaters?” This hypothetical situation is meant to demonstrate that there can be only one God, and that whatever one might claim as an object of worship other than God, to the extent it exists at all, is itself dependent on the One God and so cannot rightly be called a “god” in any true sense.

④⁴³ Glory be to Him! Exalted is He above whatsoever they say.

43 Glory be to Him (or Glory be to God) frequently follows the mention of false deities, or of sons and daughters attributed to God, as it does here. In such contexts, this exclamation is often followed by a statement of God’s being exalted above the “partners” the idolaters ascribe to Him or above all false claims and descriptions regarding Him; see 6:100; 10:18; 16:1; 21:22; 23:91; 28:68; 30:40; 37:159, 180; 39:67; 43:82; 52:43; 59:23.

④⁴⁴ The seven heavens, and the earth, and whosoever is in them glorify Him. And there is no thing, save that it hymns His praise, though you do not understand their praise. Truly He is Clement, Forgiving.

44 This is one of several verses indicating that God is worshipped by all creatures in existence—both those on earth and those in heaven, angels as well as beasts, and even inanimate creatures—as these are variously described as praising or prostrating to God. See, for example, 13:13: And the thunder hymns His praise, as do the angels, in awe of Him. He sends forth the thunderbolts and strikes therewith whomsoever He will. Yet they dispute concerning God, and He is severe in wrath; and 22:18: Hast thou not considered that unto God prostrates whosoever is in the heavens and whosoever is on the earth, the sun, the moon, the stars, the mountains, the trees, and the beasts, and many among mankind? See also 13:15; 16:49–50. The present verse can be read as continuing the idea in v. 42 that all things are ultimately subordinate to the One God, Who created them, and correspondingly turn toward Him, willingly or unwillingly (13:15). Thus to consider created things to be objects of worship themselves, even as intermediaries, is to be ignorant of the complete and utter dependence of all things on their Creator. See 41:37: Among His signs are the night and the day, the sun and the moon. Prostrate not unto the sun, nor unto the moon. Prostrate unto God, Who created them, if it is He Whom you worship. It is the contingency of all these phenomena that points to the existence of the one uncreated Creator, who is necessary in Himself (Bḍ).

Although this universal praise for God transcends human understanding—you do not understand their praise—some have considered Glory be to Him (as in v. 43) to be the universal prayer of all creatures (Ṭ). Some commentators have suggested that one should never show disrespect to any animal, or indeed to any creature, for they too are possessed of spirit and praise God (Ṭ). God is Clement, in that He does not bring punishment down upon wrongdoers immediately (Bḍ), and Forgiving of those who seek His Forgiveness; these two Divine Names are also paired in 2:225, 235; 3:155; 5:101; 35:41.

45 This verse is addressed to the Prophet. That God places a hidden veil between the Prophet and the disbelievers when he recites the Quran means either that there is a barrier preventing the disbelievers from comprehending the words he is reciting (cf. v. 46), and hence from deriving guidance or spiritual benefit from them (Ṭ), or that the barrier is there to protect the Prophet against harassment or harm from the disbelievers (JJ, R); also see 41:5c. According to al-Rāzī, the hidden veil in this verse, like the “seals” that God places on hearing and hearts elsewhere (e.g., 2:7; 7:101; 9:87), is meant to prevent disbelievers and wrongdoers from understanding the revelation and deriving guidance from it.

④⑥ And We have placed coverings over their hearts, such that they understand it not, and in their ears a deafness. And whenever thou dost mention thy Lord alone in the Quran, they turn their backs in aversion.

46 This verse offers a description similar to that of the hidden veil placed between the disbelievers and the Prophet in v. 45 and to the “seals” placed on hearts and hearing in 2:7; 7:101; 9:87; and elsewhere. An identical description of the coverings placed on their hearts and the deafness in their ears can be found in 6:25 and 18:57. See 6:25c and also 41:5, where the disbelievers themselves say, Our hearts are under coverings from that to which you call us, and in our ears there is deafness, and between us and you there is a veil. To mention thy Lord alone in the Quran refers to the Prophet’s reciting verses from the Quran that explicitly mention God’s Oneness and refute the idea that He has partners or associates (Bḍ, R).

④⑦ We know best that which they listen for when they listen to thee, and when they converse in secret, when the wrongdoers say, “You follow naught but a man bewitched!”

④⑧ Look how they set forth descriptions of thee. Thus they go astray and cannot find a way.

47–48 When the disbelievers listen to the Prophet, that which they listen for is not guidance, but rather an opportunity to mock and deny the Prophet and the Quranic message (Bḍ, R, Z). God also knows what they say when they converse in secret. “Secret converse” is mentioned in several verses as having mostly nefarious purposes; see commentary on 4:114: There is no good in most of their secret converse, save for him who enjoins charity or kindness or reconciliation between men; as well as commentary on 58:7–10. The wrongdoers’ accusation that Muhammad is bewitched (also 25:8), or deceived by sorcery (R), is a more passive version of the disbelievers’ claim that Muhammad and other prophets are active purveyors of manifest sorcery, as mentioned in 5:110; 6:7; 10:76, 81; 11:7; 20:57; 21:3; 26:35; 27:13; 28:36; 34:43; 37:15; 43:30; 46:7; 54:2; 61:6; 74:24. Other prophets are also called bewitched: Ṣāliḥ (26:153), Shu‘ayb (26:185), Moses (17:101), and the messengers generally (15:15). The descriptions they set forth for Muhammad in v. 48 is a reference to their calling him bewitched in v. 47 and their dismissing him elsewhere as merely a poet (21:5; 37:36; 52:30) or possessed (15:6; 23:70; 34:8; 44:14; 68:51; R, Q, Z).

④⁴⁹ They say, “What! When we are bones and dust, shall we indeed be resurrected as a new creation?”

④⁵⁰ Say, “Be you of stone, or of iron,

④⁵¹ or some other created thing more difficult [to resurrect] to your minds.” Then they will say, “Who will bring us back?” Say, “He Who originated you the first time.” And they will shake their heads at thee and say, “When will it be?” Say, “It may well be nigh.”

49–51 These three verses include a set of skeptical questions about the Resurrection and Judgment that the disbelievers put forth in other verses as well. The first question demonstrates the disbelievers incredulity at the idea that the dead matter of bones and dust can be given life anew (cf. 17:98; 23:35, 82; 36:78; 37:16–17; 56:47; 79:10–11). The response, indicating that God could give life even to stone or iron, is meant to suggest that it should not be so difficult for the disbelievers to conceive of such a powerful God giving bones new life since, unlike stone and iron, bones were once endowed with life by Him and can simply be returned to that state (Z). Their second question asks who has the power to do such a thing (cf. 36:78), and the answer is the God Who created them the first time, implying that since they acknowledge that God had created them once, they have no reason to doubt His ability to do so again (cf. 36:79). That the resurrection of human beings will be similar to God’s creation of them the first time is also mentioned in 6:94 and 18:48. God’s power to resurrect implies His total power over death; in connection with this verse some commentators mention a ḥadīth that says that on the Day of Resurrection death will be brought forth in the form of a beautiful ram and will then be slaughtered between Paradise and Hell (IK, Q).

The third question in this passage asks when the Resurrection will come about (cf. 10:48; 21:38; 27:21; 32:28; 34:29; 36:48; 67:25). The Prophet elsewhere is told to reply to similar questions by saying that he has no knowledge of the coming of the Hour (21:109; 67:26; 72:25), but here he is told to say, by way of further warning, that it may well be nigh (cf. 27:72). This is understood by some to mean that it is indeed near at hand, for, according to commentators, when the phrase it may well be is spoken by God, it indicates something that is necessarily the case, not something that is merely possible (Q, Ṭ). According to a ḥadīth, the Prophet said, “I and the Hour have been sent [as close together] as these two,” and he raised his index and middle finger to demonstrate (Ṭ).

52 The Day when He calls you, you will respond by praising Him, and you will think that you tarried but a short while.

52 The Day when He calls you—that is, when God summons everyone collectively from the grave on the Day of Resurrection—the response of all will be to praise God (cf. 39:75). This universal praise is the result of human beings’ now inescapable recognition of God as their Creator (Q), His power to resurrect them (Q), and the many blessings He has bestowed upon them (Ṭs). Their praise is also a way of demonstrating their complete obedience to God’s Command (IK, Ṭ) and their full submission to the process of Resurrection and Judgment (Z). However, the recognition and obedience after death of those who refused to recognize and obey God in earthly life bring them no benefit (Q, R, Ṭs). On that day, one’s earthly life will seem to have been brief, as if one had tarried in earthly life or perhaps in the grave (Bḍ) for but a short while. Elsewhere, the Quran says more specifically that those who are resurrected will think that they had tarried for a day or part of a day (18:19; 23:113; cf. 20:104; 79:46) or for merely an hour of a day (10:45; 30:55; 46:35). In all respects, earthly life will seem utterly transient and contemptible in the face of the Hereafter (Z).

53 Say unto My servants that they should say that which is more virtuous. Surely Satan provokes ill feeling between them. Surely Satan is a manifest enemy unto man.

53 My servants likely refers to the believers specifically (R, Z), but may also refer to all human beings (Q, Ṭs). Say that which is more virtuous may be a general injunction to speak gently, without harshness (Z); see also 2:83; 4:5, 8–9; 6:152;

16:125; 17:23, 28; 29:46; 33:70. Because speaking harshly will only encourage one's opponents to do likewise (see 6:108) and may further entrench them in their opposition (R), one should rather respond to the insults of disbelievers with words such as, "May God have Mercy upon you!" (Q). In this vein, some reports indicate that the verse was revealed regarding an incident in which the prominent Companion and second Caliph, °Umar ibn al-Khaṭṭāb (d. 22/644), was insulted by an Arab, whom he then cursed or threatened in return (Mw, Q, W). This verse was revealed indicating that he should pardon the man instead (W).

Since that which is more virtuous is in the feminine form, some suggest that there is an elided feminine noun that this phrase describes; the most common suggestion is kalimah ("word"), so that the verse would could be rendered, "Say [the word] which is more virtuous" (Q, Ṭs). The "word" in this case may be identified with the Islamic testimony of faith, "There is no god but God, and Muhammad is the Messenger of God" (Ṭs), which is sometimes referred to as al-kalimah in the Islamic tradition. Others have glossed say that which is more virtuous as a reference to enjoining right and forbidding wrong (Mw, Q), a repeated Quranic injunction (see 3:104c).

One of the ways in which Satan seeks to mislead human beings according to the Quran is by provoking ill feeling between them; see 5:91, where Satan seeks to sow enmity and hatred . . . through wine and gambling; and 12:100, where it is Satan who incited evil between the prophet Joseph and his brothers. That Satan is a manifest enemy of human beings (see also 2:168, 208; 6:142; 12:5; 28:15; 35:6; 36:60; 43:62) is established in the accounts of Adam's temptation and fall (7:22).

54 Your Lord knows you best. If He wills, He has Mercy upon you, and if He wills, He punishes you, and We have not sent thee as a guardian over them.

54 The you in this verse refers to the believers, continuing the address in v. 53. God knows you best means that He has full knowledge of the states of human beings and arranges their affairs for their well-being (Ṭs). That God is merciful toward or forgives whomever He wills and punishes whomever He wills is mentioned in several verses (cf. 2:284; 3:129; 5:18, 40; 29:21; 48:14; 76:31) and in most cases is thought to pertain to forgiveness and punishment in the Hereafter. In the present verse, however, some indicate that it means that God may show Mercy to the believers by delivering them from the persecutions of the pagan Makkans or may punish them by continuing to grant the Makkans power over them (Q, R, Ṭs). Or, if v. 53 is read as addressed to the disbelievers themselves, the present verse would mean that God may either lead the disbelievers to faith or punish them for their disbelief (Q, R). The Prophet is not a guardian over them; his only responsibility is to deliver God’s message to them (see 5:92c; R); see also 6:66; 10:108; 39:41; 42:6.

55 And thy Lord knows best whosoever is in the heavens and the earth. And We indeed favored some of the prophets over others, and unto David We gave the Psalms.

55 That God has favored some of the prophets over others means that, while all prophets possess the highest spiritual station among human beings (Ṭs), God has also given spiritual gifts of varying kinds in different degrees to different prophets; see 2:253c. Elsewhere, the Quran indicates that true believers “make no distinction between” the prophets, meaning that they believe in all the prophets, and make no distinction with regard to their belief in the various prophets (see 2:136; 285; 3:84; 4:152c). Here, however, the Quran is referring to the distinctions between the prophets with regard to the gifts and vocations they have been given by God. This verse presents the example of David, who was given various gifts (see 2:251; 21:79–80; 38:17–20; 34:10–11) and was also distinguished by his being given the Psalms, which translates al-Zabūr. This Arabic term is generally assumed to refer to the Psalms found in the Biblical corpus; and the Judeo-Christian tradition considers some of the Psalms to be of Davidic authorship. The Psalms (al-Zabūr) are described by some commentators as a revealed book containing no religious law, but only praises and glorifications of God (Q). The Psalms are also mentioned as a scripture given to David in 4:163; the Psalms are mentioned without explicit connection to David in 21:105.

56 Say, “Call upon those whom you claim apart from Him, but they have no power to remove affliction from you, nor to change [it].”

56 The Quran challenges the idolaters to call upon the false deities whom they claim to worship other than God, seeking their help; see 7:194–95; 10:38; 11:13. The Quran indicates that they will not answer (28:64), that they have no power to help those who worship them (34:22), and that these false objects of worship will forsake their worshippers on the Day of Judgment (6:94; 7:37; 10:28; 16:86; 28:62–64; 40:73–74). That none can remove affliction or change it (see also 6:17) is something the Quran argues that people know innately, since in a situation of true peril or affliction or when faced with judgment and punishment in the Hereafter, they will call only upon God (see, e.g., 6:40–41, 67; 10:12c).

57 It is they who make supplication, seeking a means of approach to their Lord. Which of them is nearer? And they hope for His Mercy and fear His Punishment. Truly the Punishment of thy Lord is something of which to be wary.

57 According to some, it is the false deities and partners that the idolaters associate with God who make supplication and seek a means of approach to God (see 17:42c), because these partners are servants like themselves (7:194); that is, they are created. According to others, this verse refers to the angels, whom the idolaters falsely claimed were the daughters of God (IK, T, Ts, Z), or to the jinn, whom the idolaters took as partners with God (IK, T, Ts, Z); see 6:100: They make the jinn partners with God, though He created them. As created beings with free will, the jinn are also subject to Divine Judgment, and so they hope for His Mercy and fear His Punishment. On the importance of hope and fear as complementary attitudes toward God on the part of the faithful, see 7:56c; 32:16c. One of the ways in which those falsely worshipped by the idolaters will seek a means of approach to God is by forsaking the idolaters who worshipped them (see 17:56c). God's Punishment is something of which to be wary, even for the prophets (Z); see 10:15, where the Prophet is told to say, Truly I fear, should I disobey my Lord, the punishment of a tremendous day.

58 There is no town, save that We shall destroy it before the Day of Resurrection, or punish it with a severe punishment. That is inscribed in the Book.

58 The Quran frequently mentions the destruction of “towns” for the wrongdoing of their inhabitants (e.g., 7:4, 59–101; 17:16; 21:11; 22:45), and this destruction usually means the utter uprooting and annihilation of their people (Ṭ, Z). In this verse, however, destruction is the fate that awaits all towns before the Day of Resurrection. Some commentators suggest that although all towns will eventually be destroyed, righteous towns will be “destroyed” through ordinary death, whereas severe punishment, entailing terrifying modes of destruction, is the fate of those that are wicked (Q, Ṭs, Z). That this fate is inscribed in the Book—likely a reference to the Preserved Tablet (see 85:22c; Ṭ, Ṭs)—means that the appointed time of destruction for all towns has already been decreed (cf. 7:34; 15:4; 18:59).

59 Naught hinders Us from sending signs, save that those of old denied them. And We gave unto Thamūd the she-camel as a clear portent, but they wronged her. And We do not send down Our signs, save to inspire fear.

59 This verse is widely viewed as a response to the repeated requests from the Quraysh for a sign to confirm the truth of Muhammad’s prophethood, as when they reportedly asked him to turn the sacred hill of Ṣafā into gold (IK, Ṭ, Ṭs, Z); see also 6:109 and commentary as well as 6:37; 7:203; and 10:20, where these requests for signs are dismissed. In at least one case, however, the Prophet is reported to have responded to the request for a sign by cleaving the moon so that it appeared in two halves in the sky (see the introduction to Sūrah 54; 54:1c). Those of old—that is, previous peoples—had asked for and been granted similar signs, but they denied them, just as the Quraysh dismissed the cleaving of the moon by saying they had merely been “bewitched” by the Prophet. Indeed, the Quran indicates that such signs are often rejected (6:4), and as a consequence punishment is brought down swiftly upon the deniers (6:157). The verse then gives the example of Thamūd, who slaughtered the sacred she-camel God had sent them in response to their request for a sign, and suffered annihilation by God shortly afterward; see 7:73–79; 11:61–68; 26:141–58; 54:23–31; 91:13–14. Given that signs are often rejected, and rejection brings destruction, God’s withholding of such requested signs (other than the cleaving of the moon) from the Quraysh ultimately represented an act of mercy, according to commentators (Ṭ, Ṭs, Z). God sends signs only to inspire fear, that is, as a warning and admonition (Ṭs, Z).

60 And [remember] when We said unto thee, “Surely thy Lord encompasses mankind.” We did not ordain the vision that We showed thee, save as a trial for mankind, and the Accursed Tree in the Quran. And We inspire fear in them, but it increases them in naught but great rebellion.

60 This verse assures the Prophet that thy Lord encompasses mankind in both power and knowledge, and that none of their actions can overcome His ability to protect and aid the Prophet (JJ, R, Ṭ). Others maintain that it refers to God’s informing the Prophet of his eventual victory over the idolaters of the Quraysh at the Battle of Badr (2/624) and in general (R, Z).

The vision that God grants the Prophet is most commonly understood to mean the vision he received on the Night Journey, when he was taken from Makkah to Jerusalem and from there to the Divine Throne in a single evening (see 17:1c; JJ, R, Ṭ, Z). This vision became a trial or a test, since it led even some of the Prophet’s supporters to doubt him, as they found it difficult to accept his account of this event (JJ, Ṭ). Alternately, some suggest that this vision refers to the dream the Prophet had in Madinah that he and his followers would make the pilgrimage to Makkah. When their attempted pilgrimage was blocked by the Quraysh on the outskirts of the city (see the introduction to Sūrah 48), the apparent thwarting of the Prophet’s vision became a test of faith for some of his followers (R, Ṭ, Z). Still others have suggested that the vision was a reference to a vision the Prophet had of his overcoming the Quraysh at either Badr (2/624) or the conquest of Makkah (8/630; R). However, since these three events occurred in the Madinan period, it is unlikely that the vision in this Makkan sūrah refers to them (R, Ṭ).

The Accursed Tree in the Quran refers to the tree of Zaqqūm (37:62; 44:43; 56:52), which is created of fire (Ṭ) and has spathes like the heads of satans (37:65). It is accursed in that those who will eat from it are cursed and its fruit is poisonous (R) or because it is distant from all good things and from God’s Mercy (R, Z).

The idolaters of the Quraysh ridiculed both the Prophet’s account of the Night Journey and the Quranic reference to the tree of Zaqqūm; with regard to the latter, they were incredulous that a tree could grow and not be consumed in the Fire of Hell, which elsewhere is said to consume even stones (JJ, R, Ṭ, Z). Abū Jahl, one of the leaders of the opposition to the Prophet in Makkah, mockingly dismissed the fearful descriptions of the tree of Zaqqūm, suggesting instead that the tree was a source of wonderful rich foods that they would delight in eating (R, W). Thus although the description of the Accursed Tree was, like all of God’s signs (see v. 59), meant to inspire fear, it only increased the Makkans' opposition to the Prophet and the Quran. In other verses, the revelations, warnings, and signs that God delivers through His messengers serve to increase denial in some (cf. 5:64, 68; 17:41, 82; 25:60; 35:42; 71:6).

61 And when We said unto the angels, “Prostrate before Adam,” they all prostrated, save Iblīs. He said, “Shall I prostrate before one whom Thou hast created of clay?”

61 The prostration of the angels before Adam (2:34; 7:11; 15:29–31; 18:50; 20:116; 38:73–74) is understood to indicate the superiority of the spiritually perfected human being (or Adam before the fall) even over the angels, particularly with regard to his knowledge (see commentary on 2:31–33). Iblīs's question, Shall I prostrate before one whom Thou hast created of clay? (see also 15:33), demonstrates the arrogance for which he is rebuked in 7:13. Iblīs's disregard for Adam on the basis of his physical constitution is made most explicit in 7:12 and 38:76, where he explains his refusal to prostrate before Adam by saying that whereas Adam was made of clay, he himself was made of fire, with the assumption that fire is nobler than clay; see 7:12c.

62 He said, “Dost Thou see this, which Thou hast honored above me? If Thou dost grant me reprieve till the Day of Resurrection, I shall surely gain mastery over his progeny, all save a few.”

62 For slightly fuller accounts of Iblīs's request for reprieve from punishment and God's explicit granting of the request, which is only implicit here, see 7:14–15; 15:36–38; 38:79–81. Iblīs's threat to gain mastery over Adam's progeny is a threat to lead them astray from the straight path; see 7:16–17; 15:39–40.

63 He said, “Go! And whosoever among them should follow thee, surely Hell shall be thy recompense—an ample recompense!”

63 In response to Iblīs's threat, God banishes him with the command Go! (cf. 7:13; 15:34; 38:77) and a promise to fill Hell with those who follow him in 7:18. Hell shall be thy recompense is thus a threat addressed to both Iblīs and those whom he will lead astray; similar threats issued collectively to Satan and his human followers are found in 15:43; 38:85. See also 11:119 and 32:13, where jinn and human beings are said to be punished together in Hell.

64 So incite whomsoever thou canst among them with thy voice, and bear down upon them with thy cavalry and thy infantry, and be their partner in wealth and children, and make them promises." Satan promises them naught but delusion.

64 So incite whomsoever thou canst should not be understood as a command to Iblīs, but rather as an indication that God will not interfere in the struggle between Iblīs and humanity (Z). It may also be a challenge meant to reveal Iblīs's ultimate weakness (Q), since he has no power over God's servants (v. 65). Many commentators nonetheless raised the issue of why God would grant Satan respite and allow him to tempt people in these various ways. According to some Mu^ctazilite thinkers, God did this in order to intensify the moral challenges facing human beings in this world and thus provide them with greater opportunity to be rewarded in the Hereafter (R).

That Iblīs (or Satan) incites with his voice may refer to any of the various means by which he attempts to mislead human beings (Q, R, Ṭ). Some commentators suggest that with thy voice may refer to Satan's misleading human beings through singing or music (IK, Q, R, Ṭ), and this verse was often cited by those who maintained that singing and music should be prohibited in Islam (Q). The verse does not, however, explicitly mention music or singing, and the mention of Satan's voice as the instrument of his provocations is more likely an allusion to Satan "whispering" his inducements to people (see 7:20; 20:120; 114:4c). Although the Quran does not directly mention music at all, the acceptability of different kinds of music varies across different Islamic perspectives and cultural settings, and some legal scholars explicitly prohibit all musical forms other than the chanting of the Quran and the call to prayer (adhān). Beyond these forms of chanting, however, music and indeed musical expressions of Islamic piety have always had a place in Islamic culture, beginning with the account of the Prophet Muhammad being greeted by a joyous song as he entered Madinah for the first time. This song, known by its first line, Ṭalaʿa al-badru ʿalaynā (“The Full Moon Has Risen over Us”), is still remembered and sung often today.

Bear down upon them translates ajlib, which may also mean to “call forth against them” (Q, R, Z), continuing the connection with Satan’s voice, or it may mean to bring all of one’s forces and might upon them (Q, R). Satan’s cavalry and . . . infantry was interpreted by some to mean “all those who ride or walk in acts of disobedience” (IK, JJ, Q, R, Ṭ), whether they are jinn or human beings, since both are capable of leading others astray (Q, R, Ṭ; cf. 41:29; 114:6). In several verses, wealth and children signify the good things of this world (e.g., 3:14; 9:69; 18:46) and as such can be a source of “trial” for human beings (8:28). Satan is their partner in wealth and children when either of these two are acquired or treated wrongfully or are means of distraction from God and religion. In the case of wealth, this may refer to Satanic incitement to acquire wealth through usury or other illicit means or to spend it in immoral ways. With regard to children, this may refer to Satan’s incitement to fornication and adultery, through which children may be produced; to mistreating, misguiding, or even killing children (IK, JJ, R, Ṭ); or to taking pride in having children.

Satan will make them promises as a means of inciting them to wrongdoing (cf. 4:120; 14:22), perhaps by suggesting to them that there will be no Resurrection or Reckoning and no Heaven or Hell (JJ, Q, R) or by giving them hope that they will be protected by the intercession of idols and false deities in the Hereafter (R). The description of his promises as naught but delusion offers a clear contrast with the repeated Quranic assertion that God’s Promise is true (see, e.g., 4:122; 10:4; 14:22; 18:21; 30:60; 35:5), and it is consistent with the Quranic reference to Satan as the Deluder (31:33; 35:5; 57:14).

65 “As for My servants, truly thou hast no authority over them.” And thy Lord suffices as a Guardian.

65 God’s servants over whom Satan has no authority most likely refers to God’s righteous servants (R, Z); see 15:40 and 38:83, where Satan himself exempts God’s sincere servants from those whom he will cause to err. That Satan has no authority over God’s sincere servants is understood to mean that he cannot succeed in leading them astray (Z); see also 15:42. Some commentators suggest, however, that servants may refer to all morally responsible individuals, and that this verse thus indicates Satan’s ultimate powerlessness over all human beings, who are alone responsible for their spiritual and moral error, as in 14:22, where Satan says to human beings, I had no authority over you, save that I called you, and you responded to me. That God suffices as a Guardian is also mentioned in 3:173; 4:81, 132, 171; 33:3, 48.

66 Your Lord is He Who makes the ships sail upon the sea, that you might seek of His Bounty. Verily, He is Merciful unto you.

66 The existence of ships that can carry human beings over the water is repeatedly mentioned as a sign of God's Power and Benevolence and as a gift for which people should be grateful (see 2:164; 14:32; 16:14; 30:46; 31:31; 35:12; 40:80; 42:32; 43:12; 45:12).

67 And whenever affliction befalls you at sea, forgotten are those whom you would call upon, save for Him. Then when He has delivered you safely to land, you turn away. Man is ever ungrateful!

67 This is one of several verses in which people are moved to call upon God when faced with peril at sea (see 6:40–41; 10:22–23; 29:65; 31:32). In the face of such danger, the false deities whom people used to call upon are forgotten (lit. “lost”), seeming suddenly useless and contemptible in their eyes (Q, Ṭ, Z). Yet when God has delivered them safely to land, they turn away from their momentary devotion to God alone and revert to their previous practices (cf. 7:189–90; 10:22–23; 29:65; 30:33; 31:32; see also commentary on 10:22–23). That humanity, or at least most human beings, are ungrateful by nature is also mentioned in 14:34; 22:66; 25:50; 42:48; 80:17; 100:6. Ungrateful translates kafūr, which derives from the same root as kāfir, meaning “disbeliever.” The two meanings are profoundly related in Islamic thought, in that to be a disbeliever is to exist in a state of ingratitude toward God for the various gifts and blessings He has provided.

68 Do you feel secure that He will not cause the shore to engulf you or unleash a torrent of stones upon you? Then would you find no guardian for yourselves.

69 Or do you feel secure that He will not cause you to return to it another time, and unleash upon you a tempestuous wind, and drown you for your having been ungrateful? Then you would find no avenger therein against Us.

68–69 Following the indictment of people’s ingratitude in v. 67, this set of rhetorical questions emphasizes their constant liability to Divine Punishment for having been ungrateful; the disbelievers’ false sense of security is similarly challenged in 7:97–99; 12:107; 16:45–47; 67:16–17. For the relationship between worldly security and ingratitude, see also 10:7 and 16:112. The rhetorical questions in this verse invoke some of the punishments brought down on other disbelieving people according to the Quran, as in 29:40: Each We seized for his sin. Among them are some upon whom We sent a torrent of stones, and among them are some whom the Cry seized, and among them are some whom We caused the earth to engulf, and among them are some whom We drowned. The punishment of being “engulfed by the earth” is mentioned in 28:81 and 34:9. A torrent of stones destroyed the people of Lot (11:82; 15:74; 54:34) as well as the masters of the elephant (105:1–4). Torrent of stones translates ḥāshib, which may also mean a violent wind that is destructive on land (Ṭs).

Cause you to return to it another time means that they may be returned to a situation of peril at sea (Q, Ṭ, Ṭs) after having been delivered from it in v. 67. Tempestuous wind translates qaṣīf, which some describe as a destructive wind at sea (Ṭs).

70 We have indeed honored the Children of Adam, and We carry them over land and sea, and provide them with good things, and We have favored them above many We have created.

70 According to some, God has honored the Children of Adam by granting them authority over other creatures and by making the rest of creation subservient to them (see, e.g., 14:33; 16:12; Ṭ, Ṭs). Others mention various blessings given uniquely to human beings, including their use of arms and hands (which other animals do not employ in the same way; Ṭs, Z), their powers of intellect, discernment, and speech (R, Ṭs), and their ability to know God (Ṭs). In the Quran God also ennobled Adam and, by extension, his progeny by creating him with His two Hands (38:75), breathing into him of His Spirit (15:29; 32:9; 38:72), and endowing him with extraordinary knowledge (2:31). Human beings are carried over land by riding animals, which are mentioned elsewhere as a Divine blessing (16:8; 40:79), and over . . . sea by ships, for which the Quran indicates people should be grateful (see 17:66c). The good things provided to them refer to the various kinds of food and drink provided for them on earth (Ṭ; cf. 8:26; 16:72; 40:64). That God has avored them above many whom He has created means, according to some, that He favored them over all that He has created (Ṭs), including even the angels (Ṭ, Z), as indicated in God’s command to the angels to bow before Adam (2:34; 7:11; 17:61; 15:29; 18:50; 20:116; 38:73–74). Some commentators consider God’s “honoring” the Children of Adam as referring to the worldly blessings He gives them and His “favoring” them to spiritual blessings (Ṭs) or the blessings of the Hereafter (Mw).

71 On the Day We shall call every people by their imam, whosoever is given his book in his right hand, it is they who shall read their book, and they shall not be wronged so much as the thread of a date stone.

71 An imām (anglicized as imam) is a person or sometimes a source of religious instruction taken as a guide or model to be imitated. The term derives from a root meaning to be or stand in front of something; imām can thus refer to one who, standing in front, leads the Muslim congregation in prayer. In the Islamic tradition, imām is also a title given to a religious scholar who has acquired great knowledge and influence, such as the great theologian and mystic Abū Ḥāmid al-Ghazzālī (d. 505/1111), who is commonly referred to as Imam al-Ghazzālī. Lexically, however, imām is a value-neutral term, and the Quran mentions as imāms both righteous individuals, such as Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob (2:124; 21:73), and iniquitous ones, such as Pharaoh and his hosts, who are described as imāms calling unto the Fire (28:41). That people will be called by their leader may mean that they will be called according to the prophet (see 4:41c), the revelation (see 45:28), or the religion that they followed in this life (IK, Q, R, Ṭ, Ṭs, Z). The imāms of disbelievers or wrongdoers are those who led them into moral and spiritual error, including Satan or other evil guides and authorities (IK, Q, R, Ṭs). By extension, the imāms by which people are called may refer to the spiritual leaders, religious scholars, or indirectly the religious schools of thought that they followed in this life

(Q, Ṭs, Z).

Among Twelver Shiites, imām is the title given to the twelve inerrant spiritual guides of the community from among ahl al-bayt, that is, the family and descendants of the Prophet. According to the eighth Shiite Imam, °Alī al-Riḍā, “On [the Day of Judgment] He will call all people by the imām of their time, the Book of their Lord, and the sunnah of their prophet” (Ṭs; see also Q for a similar statement attributed to °Alī ibn Abī Ṭālib). According to the sixth Imam, Ja°far al-Şādiq, everyone will be called according to the Imam of their time, and the (Shiite) Imams will be called by the Prophet Muhammad (Ṭs). Although the twelfth and last of the Twelver Shiite Imams was said to have gone into indefinite occultation in 329/941, Twelver Shiites believe that this Imam continues to guide the Shiite community to the present day, and he is thus considered by contemporary Shiites to be the Imam of their time (ṣāhib al-zamān).

Their leader in this verse may also be a reference to the book of their deeds (IK, Q, R, Ṭ, Ṭs), since imām is used in 36:12 to refer to the record of human deeds. This reading also seems to be supported by the subsequent mention in the present verse of those receiving their book in their right hand. Al-Qurṭubī suggests that this book is referred to as an imām because it is consulted as an authoritative register of their deeds (see below). Another, less favored, interpretation reads imām as an unusual plural of umm, meaning “mothers,” thus suggesting that all people will be called by the names of their mothers. Those who mention this interpretation indicate that this might be done for the sake of Jesus, who had no father; or to manifest the noble descent of the Prophet’s grandsons, Ḥasan and Ḥusayn, by calling them by the name of their mother, Fāṭimah; or in order to avoid defaming the children born of adultery (Q, Ṭs, Z).

Still others give imām an inward, spiritual interpretation, suggesting that it refers to the inner reality or particular character trait that defined a person in life: this may be a virtue, such as generosity, the thirst for knowledge, or bravery; or a vice such as hatred, passionate desire, or anger (R; see also Q for a similar interpretation).

To be “given one’s book” is to be presented on the Day of Judgment with the full account of one’s deeds (see, e.g., 18:49; 45:29). Receiving one’s book in the right hand is an indication of Divine Contentment, and receiving it in the left portends Divine Wrath (Ṭs; see 69:19–25; 84:7–8). Those given their book in the right hand read it willingly and with joy (Ṭs), but those who receive the book in their left hand are, according to al-Zamakhsharī, so overwhelmed with fear, shame, and regret that they are incapable of reading it. Human beings will not be wronged in the Hereafter (see also 2:272, 281; 3:25; 6:160; 8:60; 19:60; 23:62; 39:69) even so much as the thread of a date stone, since God does not treat people unjustly even in the slightest way; see 4:49–50c; 4:77, 124; 19:60.

72 And whosoever was blind in this [life] will be blind in the Hereafter, and further astray from the way.

72 Whosoever was blind in this [life] most likely means whoever is blind in “this world” (R, Ṭ); such people will be blind in the Hereafter, for if they are blind in this world to the knowledge and reality of God, they will be blind in the Hereafter to the path to Paradise (R). According to the interpretation of many commentators, such people will indeed be more blind in the Hereafter (R, Ṭ, Z), since in this world the possibility of repentance remains open, but in the Hereafter it will be closed to them (R). This latter interpretation fits better the context of the verse, which also describes such people as further astray in the Hereafter. Alternately, the verse can be interpreted to mean that “whosoever is blind regarding these [earthly blessings],” which are mentioned in v. 70 and which can easily be seen, is even more blind to the Hereafter, whose blessings are still hidden from human perception (R). The blindness mentioned here and in many other places in the Quran refers to spiritual rather than physical blindness, for truly it is not the eyes that go blind, but it is hearts within breasts that go blind (22:46; cf., e.g., 2:18, 171; 5:71; 6:50). Regarding blindness in the Hereafter, see also 20:124–26. Using a different metaphor, the Quran indicates that on the Day of Judgment the cover that had obscured the truth for people will be removed and their sight will be piercing (see 50:22c).

73 And they were about to tempt thee away from that which We revealed unto thee, that thou mightest falsely ascribe unto Us something other than it, whereupon they would surely have taken thee as a friend.

74 And had We not made thee firm, thou wouldst certainly have inclined toward them a little.

75 Then We would have made thee taste double in life and double in death. Then thou wouldst have found for thyself no helper against Us.

73–75 According to one report, these verses were revealed when the people of the town of Thaqīf asked the Prophet to grant them a year’s respite during which they could continue to worship their deity, al-Lāt, before fully embracing Islam, or else to make their land as inviolable and sacred as Makkah, or both (JJ, Ṭ, W). Another report connects these verses with the pagan Makkans’ request that the Prophet come close to and touch their idols (Ṭ, W)—according to some versions, they requested this in exchange for their permitting him to approach and touch the Black Stone of the Kaʿbah (Ṭ). The reports indicate that the Prophet was close to accepting these terms, as indicated by the opening line of v. 73, And they were about to tempt thee away from that which We revealed unto thee. But God then thwarted their attempt by making the Prophet firm in the face of their offer (v. 74), demonstrating His protection of the Prophet from moral and spiritual error as well as from the machinations of those who would do evil (IK, Z).

Had the Prophet inclined toward them a little, he would have been made to taste double, meaning double punishment from God, both in life and in death. According to some, the double punishment in death refers to the punishment in the grave before the Day of Resurrection and the punishment in the Fire after the Day of Judgment (Z). Doubled or multiplied punishment is also mentioned for those who lead others astray (see 7:38; 11:19–20) and for those whose spiritual status would make any serious moral error or sin on their part particularly egregious; for example, the wives of the Prophet are told that, should they commit indecency, their punishment will be doubled (33:30). Although Islamic doctrine holds unequivocally that the Prophet was Divinely protected from sin (maʿṣūm), al-Zamakhsharī states, perhaps hypothetically, that the high station of the Prophet would have made any sin on his part especially abominable. He further reports that when v. 75 was revealed, the Prophet said, “O God! Do not entrust me to my own soul, even for the blink of an eye.”

⑦⑥ And they were about to incite thee from the land, in order to expel thee therefrom, whereupon they would not have tarried after thee, save a little—

⑦⑦ the wont of those among Our messengers whom We sent before thee. And thou wilt find no change in Our wont.

76–77 Those who were about to incite thee from the land most likely refers to the Quraysh, who through persecution and enmity eventually drove the Prophet and his followers from Makkah (IK, Mw, R, Ṭ, Ṭs, Z). According to some commentators, the fact that the Quraysh did not forcibly expel the Prophet from Makkah averted total or immediate Divine punishment for the Quraysh (R, Ṭs); rather, the Prophet left by Divine Command. If they had expelled him, they would not have tarried thereafter save a little, meaning they would have been annihilated by Divine Wrath. This is because it is the Divine wont to punish through complete destruction those who reject their messengers sent by God (Ṭ, Z), as was the case with those who rejected earlier messengers such as Noah, Hūd, Ṣāliḥ, Shuʿayb, Lot, and Moses. There is no change in God’s wont (cf. 33:62; 35:43; 48:23), that is, in His Will with regard to human beings and His response to their obedience or disobedience.

To incite thee can also be interpreted to mean “to kill thee.” In this case, the latter part of v. 76 can be understood to mean that once the Quraysh had attempted to kill the Prophet, which immediately preceded the Prophet’s migration to Madinah, the Quraysh did not remain in their former state save a little, meaning for a short amount of time. This is because within two years of his migration to Madinah, the Battle of Badr significantly weakened the Quraysh (Mw, R, Ṭ, Ṭs, Z).

According to a minority interpretation, v. 76 refers to some Jews of Madinah who tried to persuade the Prophet to leave Madinah by arguing that he should go to the land of Syria, from which their previous prophets arose (IK, R, Ṭs, Z). Some reports mention that the Prophet nearly agreed to this suggestion before the verse was revealed (IK, R, Z). Commentators have generally considered the connection of this verse with the Jews of Madinah unlikely, however, since the present sūrah is Makkan and thus predates the Prophet’s time in Madinah.

78 Perform the prayer at the declining of the sun till the darkening of the night. And the recitation at dawn—truly, the recitation at dawn is ever witnessed!

78 This verse is commonly interpreted as alluding to all five canonical prayers and the times of day when they are to be performed. Although some consider the declining of the sun a reference to the sunset (maghrib) prayer (Bḍ, Mw, Q, Ṭ), most understand it as referring to the moment when the sun first begins its decline and to the prayer performed at that time, namely, the midday, or ẓuhr, prayer (JJ, Bḍ, Mw, Q, Ṭ). The prayer performed at the darkening of the night is most commonly thought to refer to the night, or ‘ishā’, prayer. Thus the command to perform the prayer from the declining of the sun till the darkening of the night can be understood as a reference to completing all four prayers performed during that time period, namely, the ẓuhr (midday), ‘aṣr (late afternoon), maghrib (sunset), and ‘ishā’ (evening) prayer (Bḍ, JJ, Ṭs, Z). For Shiites, who often pray the two afternoon prayers and two evening prayers together, the prayers performed at the declining of the sun are the ẓuhr and ‘aṣr, and those performed at the darkening of the night are the maghrib and ‘ishā’ (Ṭs). In some Sunni schools of law, the darkening of the night may refer simply to the disappearance of the sun (Q), although the Shiite (Ja‘farī) school considers it to mean the disappearance of the sun and all its rays or the beginning of the middle of the evening (Ṭs). Since the present sūrah was revealed in Makkah, the various interpretations of this verse as relating to specific prayer times may, however, be a result of commentators reading the ritual regularity of the prayers as they were established by Prophetic practice in the middle Madinan period back into the late Makkan and early Madinan periods of the Prophet’s life.

The recitation at dawn refers to the fifth canonical prayer, namely, the fajr prayer (Bḍ, JJ, Q), performed between dawn and sunrise. Although most understand the recitation at dawn to refer to the dawn prayer as whole, which like all canonical prayers entails recitations from the Quran, some suggest that it is specifically the Quranic recitation performed during this prayer that is referenced here (Mw, Q). The recitation at dawn is ever witnessed by the angels of both the day and the night, according to several aḥādīth (Bḍ, Mw, Q, Z).

Although most commentators consider this verse to concern the five canonical prayers, some Sufi commentaries suggest that the command to perform the prayer at these various times throughout the day is also a reference to the importance of continuous, inward prayer, or the “prayer of the heart” (Aj), meaning the constant remembrance and invocation (dhikr) of God, since the goal of Sufis is to be in a state of constant invocation (dā‘im al-dhikr).

79 And keep vigil in prayer for part of the night, as a supererogatory act for thee. It may be that thy Lord will resurrect thee in a praiseworthy station.

79 This injunction to perform the night vigil prayer (tahajjud) is addressed specifically to the Prophet, although other Muslims may and many do also perform

it. It is described here as a supererogatory act for thee, but most commentators agree that the night vigil was made obligatory for the Prophet (Ṭ); see also 73:1–2c. The night vigil is thus referred to as a supererogatory act only figuratively (Q) or because it is a supererogatory or voluntary act for all other Muslims (Ṭ); see 73:20. The night vigil is said to be a source of merit for the Prophet and a means of expiation for other believers (Mw, Ṭ, Ṭs). In the present verse, the Prophet’s performance of the night vigil is implicitly connected with his being resurrected in a praiseworthy station, which many commentators consider a reference to the Prophet’s power of intercession in the Hereafter (Mw, Q, Ṭ, Ṭs) or to his being seated near the Throne and carrying the “Banner of Praise” (liwā’ al-ḥamd) on the Day of Resurrection (Mw, Q, Ṭ).

The night vigil, which has the same form as the obligatory canonical prayers in its recitations and movements, is performed in the latter part of the night, after one has already slept for a while (Ṭ, Ṭs, Q), although some hold that it may be performed either before or after sleeping (Mw). According to al-Qurṭubī, the purpose of all supererogatory acts is the spiritual expansion, joy, and ennobling of the soul; and the night vigil brings particular spiritual benefit because the prayer is performed when one is completely alone with God.

80 And say, “My Lord! Make me enter in a sincere manner, and make me go forth in a sincere manner, and ordain for me, from Thy Presence, an authority to help me.”

80 As with v. 76, this verse is read in the context of the Prophet’s emigration from Makkah to Madinah (W, Z). Some commentators report that when the Makkans wanted to expel the Prophet forcibly, God commanded the Prophet to migrate to Madinah before they could carry out their intention, thereby preserving the people of Makkah from destruction through Divine Punishment for expelling their messenger (W); see 17:76–77c. Thus the Prophet’s prayer that he might enter in a sincere manner pertains to his entrance into Madinah, and his prayer that he might go forth in a sincere manner pertains to his going forth from Makkah (JJ, Ṭ, Ṭs, Z). The entering may also refer to the entrance into the grave at death, and the going forth to the going forth from the grave at the time of the Resurrection (Ṭ, Ṭs, Z). Others suggest that the entering and going forth may pertain to all situations into which the Prophet entered or from which he went forth (Z), including his prophetic mission (Ṭ, Ṭs, Z).

The Prophet is instructed to pray for authority to help him in establishing the religion of Islam (Ṭ, Ṭs, Z) and aid him in overcoming its opponents (JJ, Ṭ, Z)—a prayer that is perhaps particularly appropriate in the context of his emigration from Makkah to Madinah, since it was in Madinah that the Prophet acquired the social and political authority to establish a society guided by Quranic principles, and it was from Madinah that he was able eventually to establish Islam in the whole of Arabia (Ṭ).

81 Say, “Truth has come, and falsehood has vanished. Truly falsehood is ever vanishing.”

81 This is perhaps the most well known of several Quranic verses that establish the total incommensurability of truth and falsehood, in that truth is always and inherently victorious over falsehood, which is ultimately nothingness and thus always “vanishes” in the face of truth; see also 21:18 and 34:49. This is one of the most often quoted verses of the Quran, used in both political and intellectual contexts. The Prophet is reported to have repeated this verse continuously as he smashed the idols around the Kaʿbah after Makkah had surrendered and accepted Islam in 8/630 (R, Ṭs). In context, the Truth that has come may refer to the Quran or to the religion of Islam in general, in the face of which idolatry and false religion were made to vanish (R, Ṭ). From a metaphysical perspective, however, Truth refers to the one certain, unchanging, Necessary Being or Reality, which is God, whereas falsehood ultimately refers to all contingent realities, which are ever subject to annihilation and indeed are ever in the process of annihilation, or “vanishing” (K).

82 And We send down of the Quran that which is a cure and a mercy for the believers. And it increases the wrongdoers in naught but loss.

82 In several verses, the Quran and other scriptures are described as a mercy or as containing mercy (see 7:52, 154; 28:43; 31:2–3). The Quranic revelation is described as a cure explicitly only here, although it is implied in 10:57, where the exhortation brought to the Prophet is described as a cure for that which lies within breasts. Some mention a ḥadīth, “Whosoever does not seek a cure from the Quran, God will not cure him” (R, Z). For those who are receptive to its guidance, the Quran is said to be a cure for various ailments of the heart, including ignorance, doubt, hypocrisy, rancor, hatred, and enmity (K); and it is a mercy insofar as it helps one acquire virtue and perfection of character and adorns one with wisdom and knowledge (K). The Quran is both mercy and cure for the believers, but it has the opposite effect upon the wrongdoers, whom it increases . . . in naught but loss. That Divine Revelation may have the effect of leading those who are wrongdoers or iniquitous even further astray is mentioned elsewhere; see, for example, 2:26; 5:64; 9:124–25.

83 And whenever We bestow a blessing upon man, he turns away and withdraws. And whenever evil befalls him, he is in despair.

83 The Quran presents the vagaries of human existence as a spiritual and moral test, since God tries people with evil and with good (21:35). Yet, human beings often fail the test, responding to “blessing” with disdain (see also 41:51), arrogance, and self-satisfaction (11:10; 39:49; 41:50), rather than with the gratitude they should feel, since whatever blessing they have, it is from God (16:53; see also 4:79). When evil befalls human beings, they are given to despair (see also 41:49) and to anxiety (70:20) and will sometimes call upon God, only to forget Him again when the evil has passed (see, e.g., 10:12; 16:54; 30:33). Their response, however, should be to bear their affliction with patience (22:35; 31:17) and to say, Truly we are God’s, and unto Him we return (2:156).

84 Say, “Each acts according to his disposition, and your Lord knows well who is more rightly guided on the way.”

84 Disposition here may be a reference to one’s inward nature or inclination (IK, Ṭ), to one’s spiritual path (R, Ṭ, Z), or to one’s religion and the doctrines that one accepts (IK, R, Ṭ, Z). To act according to one’s disposition may mean to act according to what one believes to be right and just (Ṭs) or according to one’s intentions (Qm, Ṭ). That your Lord knows well who is more rightly guided (cf. 53:30) has a universal import, but in its specific historical context, it was likely intended as a warning to the disbelievers in Makkah, similar to the statement that the Prophet is instructed to make to the disbelievers in 11:121: And say unto those who believe not, “Act according to your position; we, too, are acting” (IK).

85 They ask thee about the Spirit. Say, “The Spirit is from the Command of my Lord, and you have not been given knowledge, save a little.”

85 The Spirit here and elsewhere in the Quran may refer to the Spirit that is the source of human life (JJ, Ṭ, Ṭs, Z), as God breathes into Adam of His Spirit (32:9; cf. 38:72). As such, many Muslim thinkers consider it the source of human knowledge, perception, and spiritual capability and thus also of human beings’ religious, moral, and spiritual obligation. The Spirit may also refer, according to some, to the Archangel Gabriel (Z), the angel of revelation, who is given the title the Holy Spirit, as in 16:102: Say, “The Holy Spirit has brought it down from thy Lord in truth, to make firm those who believe, and as guidance and glad tidings for those who submit.” According to a tradition from ‘Alī ibn Abī Ṭālib, the Spirit is an angel with seventy thousand heads, each of which has seventy thousand tongues with which he praises God (Ṭs). Another opinion interprets Spirit here as a reference to the Quran (Z). On the basis of this verse, Spirit (rūḥ) is often identified with the realm of Divine Command (‘ālam al-amr). That the Spirit comes down or is revealed by God’s Command is also mentioned in 16:2; 40:15; 42:52, and in 97:4 the Spirit and the angels descend by the leave of their Lord, with every command. Various reports indicate that the present verse was revealed in response to a group of either Madinan Jews or Makkan idolaters who asked the Prophet about the Spirit (W).

86 And if We willed, We could take away that which We revealed unto thee. Then thou wouldst not find, for thyself, any guardian against Us, 87 save a mercy from thy Lord. Truly His Bounty toward thee is ever great.

86–87 Although both of these verses employ the second-person singular, which usually indicates an address to the Prophet specifically, most commentators read v. 86 as addressed to people in general (Ṭ, Z) or to both the Prophet and his community (Ṭs). The last sentence of v. 87, however, is widely held to be addressed to the Prophet (Bḍ, IK, Q, R, Ṭs); in it Bounty refers to his station of excellence among human beings (Q, R, Ṭs; cf. v. 79) and his status as “the seal of the prophets” (R, Ṭs; 33:40). In v. 85, human beings are said to have been given only a little knowledge, and v. 86 thus warns that even this little can be taken away (Q, R).

That God might take away what He had revealed is said to refer to His ability to remove the Quran completely from human access, that is, by removing it from both the “breasts” of human beings (i.e., from their memories) and written copies (R, Ṭ, Z). The Companion and early Quran commentator ʿAbd Allāh ibn Masʿūd (d. ca. 29/650) said, “The first thing that will be lost from your religion is trust and the last that will be lost is prayer, so that people will pray but will have no religion, and you will awaken one day and there will be nothing of the Quran with you. . . . It will be taken by night, and people will awake in the morning and all of it will have been lifted from the written copies and removed from the hearts” (Z). ʿAbd Allāh ibn ʿUmar (d. 74/693), the son of the second Caliph, ʿUmar ibn al-Khaṭṭāb, is reported to have said, “The Hour will not come until the Quran is returned whence it descended” (Q). When it returns, it will complain that the people were reciting it, but not acting in accord with it (Q).

That they have no guardian after the removal of revelation means they would have no one (Ṭ) who could return the Quran to them (R, Z). The exception save a mercy means either that God might choose not to remove it or that He might return it after removing it (Q, R, Z). Both the warning and the exception indicate that God’s Mercy is manifested not only in revealing the Quran, but also in preserving it in the hearts and writing of human beings (R, Z). God’s Mercy and His Bounty are mentioned together in v. 87 as well as in 2:64; 4:83, 113, 175; 24:10, 14, 20.

88 Say, “Surely if mankind and jinn banded together to bring the like of this Quran, they would not bring the like thereof, even if they supported one another.”

88 This verse was reportedly revealed in response to a request by some Madinan Jews that the Prophet produce a new verse of revelation to prove his prophethood. The Prophet responded by reminding them that they know that the Quran is only from God, since its teachings are consistent with the Torah’s teachings (Ṭ).

The impossibility of mankind and jinn producing something like the Quran serves as an argument for the Divine provenance of the Quran; it is similar to the challenges issued to the opponents of the Prophet to produce a revelation like the Quran (2:23; 10:38; 11:13) solely to demonstrate their inability to do so. The Quranic assertion that they could never produce the like of the Quran is understood as proof of the inimitability of the Quran—a fundamental doctrine held by all Muslims. The Quran cannot be imitated, it is understood, in any of its aspects, including its eloquence, the beauty of its organization and composition (Z), the knowledge it contains, the excellence of its content and refinement of its expression, or the absence of inconsistency within the text (Ṭs).

89 And indeed We have employed every kind of parable for mankind in this Quran. Yet most of mankind refuse aught but disbelief.

89 That God has employed every kind of parable (cf. 18:54; 30:58; 39:27) is understood to mean that He has employed in the Quran all of the indications, proofs, and modes of expression that people need to reflect upon for their religious and worldly life (Ṭs); that in it He has given human beings every reminder of the truth as well as everything that they need to follow and do (Ṭ); and that the Quran presents every argument, conclusive proof, and explanation that human beings need to understand the truth (IK). Parables are employed throughout the Quran, sometimes in the form of short allegories (18:32–43), but more commonly as short or extended metaphorical images (10:24; 13:17; 14:18, 24–26; 16:75–76, 112; 18:45; 29:41; 39:29), some of which, like the Light Verse (24:35), are symbolic images with deep metaphysical and cosmological meaning. The elusive meaning of such parables, especially for disbelievers, is mentioned in some verses as a source of their doubt about the Quran (cf. 2:26; 74:31). That most of mankind refuse aught but disbelief is repeated in 11:17; 12:103; 40:59.

90 And they say, “We shall not believe in you till you make a spring gush forth for us from the earth,

91 or till you have a garden of date palms and grapevines, and you make streams gush forth in the midst of it,

92 or till you make the sky fall upon us in pieces, as you have claimed, or you bring God and the angels before us,

93 or till you have a house of gold ornament, or you ascend to Heaven. And we shall not believe in your ascension till you bring down unto us a book we can read.” Say, “Glory be to my Lord! Am I aught but a human being, a messenger?”

90–93 These verses relate a series of demands presented to the Prophet by the leaders of the Quraysh (Ṭ, W), who implored him to desist from preaching in Makkah and sought to bribe him with worldly goods. When that strategy did not work, they asked him for various signs (Ṭ, W) that would demonstrate power over worldly matters, such as the production of springs, gardens, streams (v. 91), or items of gold (v. 93), or that would serve as proof of his prophethood, such as the fulfillment of his warning about the sky falling upon them (v. 92), bringing them into direct contact with God or the angels, or ascending to Heaven and bringing down a book. According to some, their request that the Prophet bring God and the angels is a request to see God directly (Ṭ); a similar request is made by the Israelites in 2:55. The request that the Prophet bring a physical book that they can read is also made by the Makkan disbelievers in 6:7 and 6:124 as well as by the People of the Book in 4:153. Disingenuous requests for signs from the Prophet Muhammad and earlier prophets are mentioned in various places in the Quran; see commentary on 6:7–9; 6:37; 13:31.

That God might punish people by causing the sky to fall upon them in pieces is also mentioned in 34:9. Your ascension is understood to refer to their challenge to the Prophet to ascend to Heaven, which immediately precedes it (R, Ṭ). The Prophet’s response to their extravagant requests, Am I aught but a human being, a messenger? indicates his inability to perform such signs upon demand and that he is completely dependent upon God for the “signs” he receives; see also 18:110; 41:6; and 14:11, where similar responses are given by earlier messengers as well.

94 And nothing hindered men from believing when guidance came unto them, save that they said, “Has God sent a human being as a messenger?”

95 Say, “Were there angels walking about upon the earth in peace, We would have sent down upon them an angel from Heaven as a messenger.”

94–95 In various Quranic passages, disbelievers dismiss the messengers as “mere human beings like themselves” (cf. 11:27; 14:10–11; 21:3; 23:24, 33–34, 47; 26:154, 186; 36:15; 54:24; 64:6; 74:25) and indicate that they expect an angel rather than a human being as a messenger (6:8; 11:12; 15:7; 25:7, 21; 43:53). That God would have sent an angel as a messenger were there angels walking about upon the earth in peace is consistent with the Quranic assertion that when God sends messengers, He chooses those messengers from among the very people to whom they are sent (3:164; 7:35, 63, 69; 9:128; 10:2; 16:113; 23:32; 38:4; 62:2); since it is human beings and not angels who walk about on earth, He sends other human beings as messengers (R, Ṭ). Some also mention the idea that angels are not perceptible to most human beings (Bd, Ṭ), and thus sending a messenger in angelic form would not be effective; hence in 6:8–9 it is said that even if God were to send an angel as a messenger, He would send him in the form of a human being; when the Archangel Gabriel appeared to Mary, the mother of Jesus, he assumed for her the likeness of a perfect man (19:17).

96 Say, “God suffices as a Witness between you and me. Verily, of His servants He is Aware, Seeing.”

96 That God suffices as a Witness is mentioned in 4:79, 166; 13:43; 29:52; 46:8; 48:28. In 6:19, the Prophet invokes God as Witness between you and me, meaning between himself and the disbelievers in Makkah. That God is described as Aware of His servants and as Seeing is meant as a consolation to the Prophet and as a threat to the disbelievers (Z); see also vv. 17, 30.

97 Whomsoever God guides, he is rightly guided; and whomsoever He leads astray, thou wilt find no protectors for them apart from Him. And We shall gather them on the Day of Resurrection upon their faces—blind, dumb, and deaf—their refuge shall be Hell. Every time it abates, We shall increase for them a blazing flame.

97 Regarding whomsoever God guides, he is rightly guided and the subsequent mention of the fate of those whom He leads astray, see 18:17; 7:178. For some this statement suggests that God alone determines the fate of human beings by either guiding them or leading them astray, whereas others indicate that God only leads certain people astray as a punishment for disbelief or iniquity; see 7:178c. The Quran indicates that the disbelievers' rejection of revelation is the result of a kind of spiritual insensitivity, which is likened to being blind, dumb, and deaf; see 2:18c; 2:171; 5:71; 6:39; 8:22. The description of the unrelenting punishment of Hell with which this verse ends is similar to that in 4:56, where it is said that whenever the skin of those in Hell is burned away, it is replaced with new skin.

98 That is their recompense for having disbelieved in Our signs. And they say, "What! When we are bones and dust, shall we indeed be resurrected as a new creation?"

98 In several places, the disbelievers express their skepticism about the Resurrection by posing questions about the possibility of giving new life to bones and dust; see 17:49–51c; 23:35, 82; 36:78; 37:16, 53; 56:47; 79:10–11.

99 Have they not considered that God, Who created the heavens and the earth, has the power to create the like of them? And He has ordained for them a term, about which there is no doubt. Yet the wrongdoers refuse aught but disbelief.

99 The greatness of God's creative Power is invoked in response to the disbelievers' skepticism regarding His ability to give new lives to the bones and dust of dead bodies (v. 98); see also vv. 49–51; 14:19; 21:30; 29:19; 46:33. Since everything with God is according to a measure (13:8; cf. 15:21; 25:2), all individual creatures have a decreed term, referring to their life span and their eventual judgment by and before God (see also 6:60; 11:3; 19:75); such terms are also decreed for communities of human beings (7:34) and the world as a whole (30:8; 46:3). There is no doubt about this decreed term, just as there is no doubt about the Last Day, Resurrection, and Judgment, as mentioned in 3:9, 25; 4:87; 6:12; 18:21; 22:7; 40:59; 42:7; 45:6, 32. For the statement that the wrongdoers refuse aught but disbelief, see commentary on 17:89, where the same statement is made about most of mankind.

100 Say, “Were you to possess the treasuries of my Lord’s Mercy, you would surely withhold them, out of fear of spending. Man is ever miserly!”

100 In this verse the Prophet is told to address the Makkans in response to their requests for signs in vv. 90–93 (R). The treasuries of my Lord’s Mercy may refer to the worldly goods (Ṭ) that are part of the Divinely bestowed provision, or rizq, for each human being (Z) or to all blessings, including nonworldly ones, decreed and bestowed by God (Ṭs). The treasuries of God’s Mercy and Bounty are limitless, but the nature of human beings is such that, even if they were to possess limitless bounty, they would still withhold it (R), irrationally, out of a fear of spending. The fear of spending derives from an inherent fear of poverty and need that exists in all human beings because, as creatures, they exist by definition in a state of existential poverty (R). Man is ever miserly, because, given this existential poverty, people can only be generous with what is superfluous to their own needs (R, Ṭs); or if they give, they give only to get something in return (R). Yet many fail to recognize that their instinct for miserliness derives from their own existential poverty and that God alone is the Rich and beyond need, while they are the poor (47:38); see 92:8, which is critical of the one who is miserly and deems himself beyond need. By contrast, God, who has no need, gives to all without limit—to the obedient and the disobedient (Ṭs).

Other commentators note that people only love good things when they benefit themselves (Aj), and that when they are generous, they are acting contrary to their own innate disposition toward miserliness (Su). Regarding the miserly nature of human beings, see 70:19–21. The Quran repeatedly criticizes miserliness (3:180; 4:37; 9:76) and counsels people to spend in moderation, avoiding the extremes of both prodigality and miserliness (see 17:26–27 and commentary; 25:67).

101 And We indeed gave unto Moses nine clear signs. So ask the Children of Israel. When he came unto them, Pharaoh said, “Truly I think that you, O Moses, are bewitched!”

101 Commentators consider the nine clear signs given to Moses (see also 27:12) to refer to the various miracles performed by Moses during his prophetic mission, although they do not all agree upon which ones are referred to here, and al-Rāzī maintains that the verse should not be understood to mean that Moses was given only nine signs. The Bible mentions ten plagues brought by Moses upon Pharaoh and his people: blood, frogs, lice, flies, disease of cattle, boils, hail, locusts, darkness, and death of the firstborns (see Exodus 7–11). Some commentators suggest that the nine clear signs in this verse refers, similarly, to the successive punishments brought upon the Egyptians in 7:130–33 (drought, shortage of crops, flood, locusts, lice, frogs, and blood) along with other miracles Moses performed. Combining the lists given by different commentators, the nine signs may also be said to include: the miracle of Moses’ staff turning into a serpent (7:109; 20:19–21; 26:32; 28:31); his hand turning white after being placed in his bosom (7:108; 20:22; 26:33; 27:12; 28:32); the “untying of a knot” from his tongue (20:27–28); the plagues of flood, locusts, lice, frogs, and blood (7:133) as well as the drought and scarcity that preceded these plagues (7:130); the parting of the sea (2:50; 26:63); the “blotting out” of the wealth of Pharaoh and his notables in response to Moses’ prayer (10:88); his making streams come forth by striking a rock with his staff (2:60; 7:160); the miraculous provision of manna and quails in the desert (2:57; 7:160; 20:80); and the mountain towering over Moses and the Israelites at Sinai (see 2:63–64c; 2:93; 4:154; 7:171; IK, JJ, R, Ṭ, Z). Alternately, the nine clear signs given to Moses are identified in a ḥadīth as referring to the nine prohibitions given by Moses to his people, namely, the prohibitions against associating other gods with God, theft, adultery, murder, sorcery, usury, slandering chaste women, fleeing from a just and righteous battle, and working on the Sabbath; the last of these, unlike the other eight prohibitions, is unique to the Israelites (IK, R, Ṭ).

Pharaoh’s accusation that Moses is bewitched (mashūr) is similar to accusations that he is a sorcerer (10:76; 20:57, 63; 26:34; 27:13; 28:36; 40:24; 51:39). Some commentators read bewitched in this context as synonymous with being a sorcerer (R, Ṭ), but others suggest that here Pharaoh is accusing Moses of being misled or confused by sorcery (JJ, Z).

102 He said, “You certainly know that no one has sent these down as clear portents, save the Lord of the heavens and the earth. And truly I think that you, O Pharaoh, are doomed.”

102 Clear portents here renders baṣāʾir (lit. “insights” or “perceptions”), which may thus be interpreted to mean signs that should cause people to “perceive” the truth (Ṭ). Other commentators gloss clear portents as clear arguments or proofs for the truthfulness of Moses’ prophethood (IK, R) or as clear indications of God’s Power and Oneness (Q). Moses tells Pharaoh that he (Pharaoh) “certainly knows” that these portents are sent by God alone, despite his rejection of them. According to al-Rāzī, it should be obvious to any who use their intellect that such signs could only be Divine in origin, and it is only willful stubbornness that prevents Pharaoh from accepting them as such. See 27:14, where it is said that Pharaoh and his people rejected the signs of Moses though their souls were convinced of them. Doomed translates mathbūr, which can also mean “destroyed” (cf. 25:13–14; R, Ṭ), prevented from all goodness (R, Ṭ), or devoid of reason or intelligence (Ṭ).

103 And he desired to incite them from the land; so We drowned him and those with him all together.

103 That Pharaoh desired to incite Moses and the Israelites from the land parallels the desire of the Quraysh to incite the Prophet Muhammad from Makkah (see 17:76–77c). As in v. 76, to incite them from the land can refer to removing them from the land by either exiling or killing them (Q, R) or to inciting them to leave as a result of harassment (Ṭs). The word for incite, yastafizza, is the same verb used in v. 64 in God’s challenge to Satan, So incite whomsoever thou canst among them with thy voice. Thus the word might also mean to “unsettle” or “disturb.” That Pharaoh and his people were subsequently drowned (see also 2:50; 7:136; 8:54; 10:73, 90; 43:55) therefore served as a warning to the Quraysh of the fate that might await them if they continued to reject Muhammad and persecute his followers. Despite their efforts to eliminate Moses and the Israelites, it is Pharaoh and his supporters who are drowned, because evil plotting besets none but its authors (35:43; R).

104 And We said thereafter unto the Children of Israel, “Dwell in the land. And when the promise of the Hereafter comes to pass, We shall bring you as a mixed assembly.”

104 God’s command to the Israelites to dwell in the land may refer to their settling parts of the land of Egypt, now devoid of Pharaoh and his supporters (Z), to their settling in Palestine (Canaan; Ṭ), or to both (Q); see 7:137c. As Pharaoh’s destruction in the previous verse was meant to be a warning to the Quraysh, this verse can be understood as a glad tiding to the Prophet of the future conquest of Makkah for Islam (IK). The Children of Israel will be brought in the Hereafter as a mixed assembly , meaning that there will be various types of people among them—noble and base, obedient and disobedient, pious and iniquitous, strong and weak (R)—or that God will bring them and their enemies together for judgment on that day (IK).

105 In truth We sent it down, and in truth it descended. And We sent thee not, save as a bearer of glad tidings and as a warner, 105 Cf. 2:119. In truth We sent it down refers to God’s having sent down the Quran commanding justice and virtue and forbidding injustice and iniquity (Ṭ) and to the impossibility of anyone altering it (IK). The Quran attests in many verses that the Prophet has been sent as a bearer of glad tidings and as a warner (see also 2:119; 5:19; 25:56; 34:28), as have all the prophets before him (2:213; 4:165; 6:48; 18:56).

106 and [We sent it down] as a recitation We have divided in parts, that thou mayest recite it unto men in intervals, and We sent it down in successive revelations.

106 That the Quran was sent down divided into parts is understood to refer to the successive and gradual revelation of the Quranic verses to the Prophet (JJ, Ṭ), allowing him to recite it to his followers in intervals . Some commentators say that the Quran was sent down as a whole to the lower heavens in a single night (IK, Ṭ), the “Night of Power” (Laylat al-qadr ; see the introduction to Sūrah 97; 97:1–2c), which refers to one of the odd-numbered nights in the last ten days of the month of Ramadan. It was then gradually revealed to the Prophet over twenty-three years. The Quran is also understood by some as having been sent down as a whole into the very heart of the Prophet (see 26:192–94) on this same night; it was then gradually revealed to his consciousness over the period of his prophethood. The reference to the Quran as divided can also refer to the division of the Quran into distinct sections (IK, Ṭ), for example, into verses (āyāt) or into sūrahs of unequal length.

The wisdom of the Quran’s revelation in discrete sections is precisely that it allowed the Prophet to recite it unto men in intervals, so that they would have time to learn it properly, memorize it, and come to understand it (Bḍ, Ṭ). In 25:32, when the Quraysh express skepticism about the revelation of the Quran in parts, rather than as a whole, a similar reason is given for its gradual descent: It is so, that We may make firm thine heart thereby. And We have recited it unto thee in a measured pace; see commentary on this verse. We sent it down in successive revelations affirms that the gradual revelation is a matter of Divine purpose.

107 Say, “Believe in it, or believe not.” Surely those who were given knowledge before it, when it is recited unto them, fall down prostrate on their faces.

107 The Prophet is instructed to say to the Makkian disbelievers regarding the Quran, Believe in it, or believe not, meaning their belief or disbelief has no effect upon God (Bḍ, Ṭ), for the disbelievers’ rejection cannot harm God in the least (see 3:144, 176; 11:57; 47:32). Moreover, if the Makkans refuse to believe, those who were given knowledge before, meaning the People of the Book, or at least some of them, are said to recognize the Quran’s Divine provenance; and as followers of Divine Revelation, the People of the Book are better and nobler than the pagan Makkans (Bḍ, Ṭ). See 2:146 and 6:20, where the People of the Book are said to recognize the Quran as they recognize their own children (see also 19:58; 28:52–53). For the believers and the pious among the People of the Book, the recitation of the Quran “softens their hearts and moistens their faces” (Z), as in 5:83, referring to Christians: And when they hear that which was sent down unto the Messenger, thou seest their eyes overflow with tears because of the truth they recognize. According to Ibn Kathīr, when it is recited unto them they fall down prostrate in gratitude for having lived to see the Prophet as described in their scriptures. Demonstrating humility and obedience upon hearing the Quran is the response of believers, and thus the failure to do so is indicative of disbelief; see 84:20–21, where the Quran asks concerning the disbelievers of Makkah, So what ails them that they believe not, and when the Quran is recited to them, that they do not prostrate?

108 And they say, “Glory be to our Lord! The Promise of our Lord is indeed fulfilled.”

108 The exclamation here of the People of the Book that the Promise of our Lord is indeed fulfilled may refer to the fulfillment of His Promise to send a future prophet to guide them (Z). Elsewhere, God’s Promise is said to be fulfilled at the time of the apocalypse (73:18), and the Quran repeatedly asserts that the Promise of God is true (see 4:122; 10:4, 55; 18:98; 31:33; 35:5; 40:55, 77; 45:32; 46:17).

109 And they fall down on their faces, weeping, and it increases them in humility.

109 According to some commentators, the believers among the People of the Book fall down on their faces, weeping when they hear the Quran recited because of their humility toward God and their belief in His Book and His Prophet (IK) or because they are greatly moved by the teachings of the Quran (Bd). Also see 19:58, which describes the prophets and progeny in the line of Noah and Abraham as falling down prostrate and weeping upon encountering the signs of the Compassionate. In other verses, the different responses of individuals to hearing the Quran or to encountering the signs of God in any form are indicative of their inward state of belief or hypocrisy (see, e.g., 9:124; 74:49–51; 17:41c).

110 Say, “Call upon God, or call upon the Compassionate. Whichever you call upon, to Him belong the Most Beautiful Names. And be not loud in your prayer, nor too quiet therein, but seek a way between.”

110 One can call upon God, or call upon the Compassionate, because the latter, one of the most important Names of God, is considered a Name pertaining to the Divine Essence; see 1:3c. Although the description of God as the Compassionate (al-Raḥmān) is found throughout the Quran, it is also used on its own as a proper Name of God in several places, including throughout Sūrah 19, Maryam, “Mary” (see, e.g., 19:18, 26, 44, 58, 61). According to one report, this verse was revealed after some of the Makkan idolaters heard the Prophet invoking God as “O God (Allāh), O Compassionate (Raḥmān)” or, according to another account, “O Compassionate, O Merciful (Raḥīm)” and accused him of invoking two separate Divine beings (Bḍ, IK); this verse was revealed to make it clear that these Names, and indeed all of the Most Beautiful Names, refer to the One God. The mention of God’s Most Beautiful Names is also found in 7:180; 20:8; 59:24. For the significance of the Names of God in Muslim belief, practice, and piety, see 7:180c.

One should be not loud in . . . prayer (see also 7:205), but rather demonstrate reverence and humility when praying. Elsewhere, the believers are enjoined not to raise their voice before the Prophet or to raise it above his voice (49:2–3), and some understand this to mean in the context of the prayer when the Prophet was leading it. As this verse comes at the end of an extended rhetorical challenge to the Makkan idolaters, some indicate that the injunction Be not loud in your prayer meant that one (or perhaps specifically the Prophet, since the command is in the second-person singular) should recite quietly, lest the idolaters overhear the prayer and respond by cursing or disparaging the sacred act (Bḍ, IK).

One should also not be too quiet in prayer, lest those who might benefit from hearing the recitation be unable to hear it (IK); or when leading others in prayer, the imām, or prayer leader, should not recite so quietly that it is inaudible to those praying behind him (Bḍ). Another report indicates that this injunction pertains to personal supplicatory prayer (du‘ā‘), although the verse uses ṣalāh, which usually designates the canonical prayer (IK). That one should seek a way between is consistent with the Quran’s exhortation toward moderation in other matters, for example, being neither miserly nor prodigal when one spends in the way of God (25:67); also, Muslims constitute a middle community (2:143) following a straight path (see 1:6c), which can be read as a path between extremes. According to Ibn ‘Abbās, one should not pray loudly, so as to make an ostentatious display for other people, or too quietly, out of fear of them (IK).

111 And say, “Praise be to God, who has no child! He has no partner in sovereignty; nor has He any protector out of lowliness.” And proclaim His Greatness!

111 That God has no child is a frequent assertion of the Quran (19:35, 92; 25:2; 39:4; 112:3), presented as a refutation, variously, of the Christian belief in Jesus as the son of God, of Jews' and Christians' claim that they are the "children of God" (5:18), and of the pagan Makkan belief in divine or semidivine daughters of God (16:57; 37:149–53; 43:16; 52:39); for a fuller discussion, see 6:100c; 112:3c. Nor has He any protector out of lowliness means that God neither seeks nor needs the aid or support of anyone, as a lowly person might for his own protection. The command to proclaim His Greatness (kabbirhu takbīr^{an}) can be understood as a reference to the commonly repeated formula "God is Great" (Allāh^u akbar), known as the takbīr. The takbīr is recited ritually at the initiation of each canonical prayer and at its intervals and is repeated multiple times as part of other prayers, such as the funeral prayer. It is also the opening line of the call to prayer (adhān) and is repeatedly chanted as Muslims gather in the mosque for both ʿĪd prayers. In addition to these ritual uses of the takbīr, Muslims may utter this formula, often in unison, as an exclamation of joy at religiously significant events such as at the conclusion of a marriage ceremony, upon another individual's embrace of Islam, or even after a particularly moving religious sermon. The takbīr is also uttered as a means of summoning strength, unity, and resolve in the face of a spiritual or physical challenge and is usually uttered when going into battle or as a response to victory in battle.

The Cave

al-Kahf

Al-Kahf is a late Makkan sūrah, although a minority hold that the first eight verses are Madinan (Q). Several reports indicate that reciting the first and last ten verses of this sūrah has the power to protect one from the trials of the grave (Q) or from al-Dajjāl, identified with the Antichrist or the figure whom Christ will defeat in the end times (IK, Q). This sūrah contains three main narratives—that of the inhabitants of the cave, from which the sūrah takes its name (vv. 9–26); the tale of Moses and the mysterious servant (vv. 60–82); and the story of Dhu’l-Qarnayn (vv. 83–98)—as well as a lengthy parable about the dangers of enjoying the good things of this world, without gratitude to God, while neglecting the Hereafter (vv. 32–46). Between these narrative sections are woven various warnings to the disbelievers, including reminders about the coming of judgment and punishment in the Hereafter. The sūrah closes by evoking the inexhaustibility of God’s Word (v. 109), followed by a reminder that the Prophet is but a human being to whom Divine Revelation has been sent (v. 110).

The narratives of the inhabitants of the cave and of Dhu’l-Qarnayn were reportedly revealed to the Prophet in response to a challenge from the Quraysh. According to a widely reported account, the Quraysh sent Naḍr ibn al-Ḥārith and °Uqbah ibn Abī Mu°īṭ to some Jewish religious scholars of Madinah to ask them about Muhammad and his claims to prophethood. The Jewish scholars told them that in order to know the validity of Muhammad’s claims to prophethood, they should ask him about three matters, and if he could not answer, then he was not a true prophet: (1) a group of young men of ancient times who had an extraordinary story (the inhabitants of the cave); (2) a man who had journeyed until he reached the east and west of the earth (Dhu'l-Qarnayn); and (3) the Spirit. They returned and questioned the Prophet. He told them that he would give them his response the next day, expecting that a revelation concerning them would come to him. When fifteen days had passed and no revelation had come, the Prophet grew worried, and the Quraysh began to assume that he had no answers to these questions and that his claims of prophethood were therefore false. The revelation finally came to him, but in v. 6 the Quran reprimands the Prophet for being overly concerned with the disbelief of the Quraysh (IK, Q, Ṭs), and in vv. 23–24 the Prophet is warned not to promise anything in the future (such as answers to questions the next day) without acknowledging that all matters depend on God's Will.

The three main narratives share some thematic elements, including that of journeying or leaving the comfort of one's home. The youths of the cave leave home to escape religious persecution; Moses goes off in search of the servant of God he has been told is more knowledgeable than himself; and Dhu'l-Qarnayn journeys from east to west to establish righteous sovereignty over the land. These three narratives are also concerned with intermediate states of being and hence with the concept of the barzakh, which signifies both the meeting point of opposites and the barrier between them. The concept is elucidated in the Quran through reference to the barrier between the "two seas" of saltwater and freshwater (25:53; 55:19–20), at which point the two waters briefly intermingle, but neither trespasses into the realm of the other.

In Islamic tradition barzakh came to denote the temporal state between the death of the individual soul and universal judgment, or the period of testing and punishment in the grave, as well as an intermediate posthumous state or number of states between Heaven and Hell. In its mystical interpretation, it refers ontologically to the state of the soul as the intermediate realm between pure spirit and base matter, which together constitute the state of human beings; epistemologically it refers to the realm of the imaginal, known through the power of imagination, which is a mode of knowing between sense perception and pure intellection. The youths of the cave, seeking refuge from religious persecution, are made to sleep in the cave for hundreds of years, and their sleep represents an intermediate realm between life and death and thus, by analogy, the state between individual death and universal resurrection. Moses can only encounter the mysterious servant and esoteric figure, identified traditionally with the enigmatic prophet Khaḍir or Khiḍr, at the junction of the two seas (v. 60), at which point the two prophets—one representing exoteric and the other esoteric knowledge—are able to meet and briefly journey together. And Dhu'l-Qarnayn, after journeying to the extremes of west and east, returns to the place of an opening between the two mountain barriers (v. 93), which he then seals up, forming a barrier to hold back Gog and Magog from terrorizing people. This barrier will only hold for the intermediate period of earthly life and will be destroyed by God before the Day of Resurrection.

Finally, these three narratives involve figures who are granted miracles and marvelous powers, even though they are not prophets or their prophetic status is somewhat ambiguous. The youths of the cave are righteous men, but not prophets; yet they are given protection by God through a miraculous sleep. Khiḍr is considered by most to be a prophet who is kept alive by God beyond the range of ordinary human life, even beyond the very long lifetime of certain ancient prophets, such as Noah. But his vocation is exclusively a secret and hidden one, in contrast to the vocation of other prophets who are ordered by God to proclaim revelation publicly, give glad tidings, and issue warnings. Dhu'l-Qarnayn is considered by most commentators to have been a righteous king who was nonetheless granted miraculous means for conquering the world and was spoken to directly by God (v. 86). He is compared by commentators to the prophet-king Solomon, and most commentators have considered him to be Alexander the Great.

In the Name of God, the Compassionate, the Merciful

① Praise be to God, Who sent down the Book unto His servant, and placed no crookedness therein, ② upright, that He may warn of a great might coming from His Presence and give glad tidings unto the believers who perform righteous deeds that theirs shall be a beautiful reward, ③ wherein they shall remain forever, ④ and that He may warn those who say, “God has taken a child.” ⑤ They have no knowledge thereof, nor do their fathers. A monstrous word it is that issues from their mouths. They speak naught but a lie. ⑥ Yet perhaps thou wouldst destroy thyself with grief for their sake, should they believe not in this account. ⑦ Surely We made whatsoever is on the earth an adornment for it, that We may try them as to which of them is most virtuous in deed. ⑧ And surely We shall make whatsoever is upon it a barren plain! ⑨ Dost thou reckon that the Companions of the Cave and the Inscription are a marvel among Our signs? ⑩ When the youths took refuge in the cave, they said, “Our Lord! Grant us mercy from Thy Presence, and make us incline to sound judgment concerning our affair.” ⑪ So We placed [a veil] over their ears in the cave for a number of years. ⑫ Then We raised them up again, that We might know which of the two parties had best calculated how long they had tarried. ⑬ We recount their story unto thee in truth. Verily they were youths who believed in their Lord, and We increased them in guidance. ⑭ And We fortified their hearts. When they arose, they said, “Our Lord is the Lord of the heavens and the earth. We shall call upon no god apart from Him, for then we would have certainly uttered an outrage. ⑮ These, our people, have taken gods apart from Him. Why do they not bring a clear authority concerning them? For who does greater wrong than one who fabricates a lie against God? ⑯ And when you have withdrawn from them and all that they worship save God, then take refuge in the cave. Your Lord will spread forth something of His Mercy for you, and make you incline to ease in your affair.” ⑰ Thou wouldst have seen the sun when it rose, slanting away from their cave to the right; and when it set, turning away from them to the left, while they were in an open space within it. That is among the signs of God. Whomsoever God guides, he is rightly guided; and whomsoever He leads astray, thou wilt find no protector to lead him aright. ⑱ Thou wouldst have thought them awake, though they were asleep. And We turned them to the right and to the left, with their dog stretching forth his paws at the threshold. Hadst thou come upon them, thou wouldst have turned away in flight and been filled with terror on their account. ⑲ And in this way We raised them up again, that they might question one another. One of them said, “How long have you tarried?” They said, “We have tarried a day or part of a day.” They said, “Your Lord knows best how long you have tarried. So send one of you with this money of yours into the city, and let him observe which of them has the purest food and bring you some provision therefrom. Let him be discreet and make no one aware of you. 20 Verily, if they come to know of you, they will stone you, or make you revert to their creed, and then you will never prosper.” 21 And in this way We caused them to be discovered, that they might know that God’s Promise is true, and that there is no doubt about the Hour. When they were disputing among themselves about their affair, they said, “Erect a building over them; their Lord knows them best.” Those who prevailed over their affair said, “We shall build a place of worship over them.” 22 They say, “[They were] three, and the fourth was their dog.” And they say, “Five, and the sixth was their dog”—guessing at the unseen. And they say, “Seven, and the eighth was their dog.” Say, “My Lord knows best their number; none know them save a few.” So dispute not concerning them, save with clear argument, nor consult any of them about them. 23 And say not of anything, “Surely, I shall do it tomorrow.” 24 Save that God wills. And remember thy Lord when thou dost forget, and say, “It may be that my Lord will guide me nearer than this to rectitude.” 25 And they tarried in their cave three hundred years, plus nine more. 26 Say, “God knows best how long they tarried. Unto Him belongs the Unseen of the heavens and the earth. How well He sees, how well He hears! They have no protector apart from Him, and He makes no one a partner unto Him in His Judgment.” 27 Recite that which has been revealed unto thee from the Book of thy Lord. None alters His Words. And thou wilt find no refuge apart from Him. 28 Make thy soul patient with those who call upon their Lord morning and evening, desiring His Face. Turn not thine eyes away from them, desiring the adornment of the life of this world, nor obeying one whose heart We have made heedless of the remembrance of Us and who follows his caprice and whose affair exceeds the bounds. 29 And say, “It is the truth from your Lord! So whosoever will, let him believe, and whosoever will, let him disbelieve.” Verily We have prepared for the wrongdoers a Fire whose canopies will encompass them. And if they plead for relief, they will be showered with water like molten lead that will scald faces—an evil drink indeed, and how evil a resting place! ③①

As for those who believe and perform righteous deeds, surely We neglect not the reward of one who is virtuous in deed. ③② For such as these, theirs shall be the Gardens of Eden with rivers running below. Therein they shall be adorned with bracelets of gold, and shall wear green garments of fine silk and rich brocade, reclining upon couches. Blessed indeed is the reward, and how beautiful a resting place! ③③ Set forth for them the parable of two men: For one of them We made two gardens of grapevines, and surrounded them with date palms, and placed crops between them. ③④ Both gardens brought forth their produce and failed not in the least, and We made a stream gush forth in their midst. ③⑤ And he had [abundant] fruit and said unto his companion as he conversed with him, “I am greater than you in wealth and stronger in men.” ③⑥ And he entered his garden, wronging himself, and said, “I think not that this will ever perish. ③⑦ Nor do I think that the Hour is imminent. And if I am brought back to my Lord, I shall surely find something better than this in the Hereafter.” ③⑧ His companion said unto him as he conversed with him, “Do you disbelieve in the One Who created you from dust, then from a drop, then fashioned you as a man? ③⑨ But He is God, my Lord, and I ascribe none as partner unto my Lord. ④① When you entered your garden, why did you not say, ‘[This is] as God wills. There is no strength save in God.’ If you see that I am less than you in wealth and children, ④② it may be that my Lord will give me something better than your garden, and unleash against it a reckoning from the sky, so that it becomes a flattened plain. ④③ Or its water may sink deep, so that you cannot seek after it.” ④④ And his fruit was encompassed. So he began to wring his hands on account of what he had spent on it while it lay in waste upon its trellises, saying, “Would that I had not ascribed anyone as partner unto my Lord!” ④⑤ And he had no party to help him apart from God; nor could he help himself. ④⑥ There, protection belongs to God, the Real. He is best in reward and best in requital. ④⑦ Set forth for them a parable of the life of this world:

[It is] like water We send down from the sky. Then it mixes with the vegetation of the earth. Then it becomes chaff, scattered by the winds. And God is capable of all things. ﴿46﴾ Wealth and children are the adornment of the life of this world, but that which endures—righteous deeds—are better in reward with thy Lord, and better [as a source of] hope. ﴿47﴾ On the Day We will set the mountains in motion, and you will see the earth an open plain. And We will gather them, and leave not one of them behind. ﴿48﴾ They shall be arrayed before thy Lord in ranks. “Indeed, you have come unto Us as We created you the first time. Nay, but you claimed that We would never appoint a tryst for you.” ﴿49﴾ And the Book will be set down. Then thou wilt see the guilty fearful of what is in it. And they will say, “Oh, woe unto us! What a book this is! It leaves out nothing, small or great, save that it has taken account thereof.” And they find present [therein] whatsoever they did. And thy Lord wrongs no one. ﴿50﴾ When We said unto the angels, “Prostrate before Adam,” they prostrated, save Iblīs. He was of the jinn and he deviated from the command of his Lord. Will you then take him and his progeny as protectors apart from Me, though they are an enemy unto you? How evil an exchange for the wrongdoers! ﴿51﴾ I did not make them witnesses to the creation of the heavens and the earth, nor to their own creation. And I take not those who lead astray as a support. ﴿52﴾ On the Day when He says, “Call those whom you claimed as My partners,” they will call upon them, but they will not respond to them, and We will place a gulf between them. ﴿53﴾ The guilty will see the Fire, and know they shall fall into it, but they will find no means of escape therefrom. ﴿54﴾ And indeed We have employed every kind of parable for mankind in this Quran. And man is the most contentious of beings. ﴿55﴾ And naught prevents men from believing when guidance comes unto them, and from seeking forgiveness of their Lord, save that [they await] the wont of those of old to come upon them, or the punishment to come upon them face-to-face. ﴿56﴾ And We send not the messengers, save as bearers of glad tidings and as warners. And those who disbelieve dispute falsely in order to refute the truth thereby. They take My signs and that whereof they were warned in mockery. ﴿57﴾ And who does greater wrong than one who has been reminded of the signs of his Lord, then turns away from them and forgets that which his hands have sent forth? Surely We have placed coverings over their hearts, such that they understand it not, and in their ears a deafness. Even if thou callest them to guidance, they will never be rightly guided. 58 And thy Lord is Forgiving, Possessed of Mercy. Were He to take them to task for that which they have earned, He would have hastened the punishment for them. Nay, but theirs is a tryst, beyond which they shall find no refuge. 59 And those towns, We destroyed them for the wrong they did, and We set a tryst for their destruction. 60 And when Moses said unto his servant, “I shall continue on till I reach the junction of the two seas, even if I journey for a long time.” 61 Then when they reached the junction of the two, they forgot their fish, and it made its way to the sea, burrowing away. 62 Then when they had passed beyond, he said to his servant, “Bring us our meal. We have certainly met with weariness on this journey of ours.” 63 He said, “Didst thou see? When we took refuge at the rock, indeed I forgot the fish—and naught made me neglect to mention it, save Satan—and it made its way to the sea in a wondrous manner!” 64 He said, “That is what we were seeking!” So they turned back, retracing their steps. 65 There they found a servant from among Our servants whom We had granted a mercy from Us and whom We had taught knowledge from Our Presence. 66 Moses said unto him, “Shall I follow thee, that thou mightest teach me some of that which thou hast been taught of sound judgment?” 67 He said, “Truly thou wilt not be able to bear patiently with me. 68 And how canst thou bear patiently that which thou dost not encompass in awareness?” 69 He said, “Thou wilt find me patient, if God wills, and I shall not disobey thee in any matter.” 70 He said, “If thou wouldst follow me, then question me not about anything, till I make mention of it to thee.” 71 So they went on till, when they had embarked upon a ship, he made a hole therein. He said, “Didst thou make a hole in it in order to drown its people? Thou hast done a monstrous thing!” 72 He said, “Did I not say unto thee that thou wouldst not be able to bear patiently with me?” 73 He said, “Take me not to task for having forgotten, nor make me suffer much hardship on account of what I have done.” 74 So they went on till they met a young boy, and he slew him. He said, “Didst thou slay a pure soul who had slain no other soul? Thou hast certainly done a terrible thing!” 75 He said, “Did I not say unto thee that thou wouldst not be able to bear patiently with me?” 76 He said, “If I question thee concerning aught after this, then keep my company no more. Thou hast attained sufficient excuse from me.” 77 So they went on till they came upon the people of a town and sought food from them. But they refused to show them any hospitality. Then they found therein a wall that was about to fall down; so he set it up straight. He said, “Hadst thou willed, thou couldst have taken a wage for it.” 78 He said, “This is the parting between thee and me. I shall inform thee of the meaning of that which thou couldst not bear patiently: 79 As for the ship, it belonged to indigent people who worked the sea. I desired to damage it, for just beyond them was a king who was seizing every ship by force. 80 And as for the young boy, his parents were believers and we feared that he would make them suffer much through rebellion and disbelief. 81 So we desired that their Lord give them in exchange one who is better than him in purity, and nearer to mercy. 82 And as for the wall, it belonged to two orphan boys in the city, and beneath it was a treasure belonging to them. Their father was righteous, and thy Lord desired that they should reach their maturity and extract their treasure, as a mercy from thy Lord. And I did not do this upon my own command. This is the meaning of that which thou couldst not bear patiently.” 83 And they question thee about Dhu’l-Qarnayn. Say, “I shall recite unto you a remembrance of him.” 84 Truly We established him in the land, and gave him the means to all things. 85 So he followed a means, 86 till when he reached the place of the setting sun, he found it setting in a murky spring, and there he found a people. We said, “O Dhu’l-Qarnayn! Thou mayest punish, or thou mayest treat them well.” 87 He said, “As for the one who has done wrong, we shall punish him. Then he shall be brought back to his Lord, whereupon He will punish him with a terrible punishment. 88 But as for the one who believes and works righteousness, he shall have a reward, that which is most beautiful, and we shall speak unto him that which is easy from our command.” 89

Then he followed a means, 90 till he reached the place of the rising sun. He found it rising over a people for whom We had not made any shelter from it. 91 Thus [it was], and We encompassed that which lay before him in awareness. 92 Then he followed a means, 93 till he reached the place between the two mountain barriers. He found beyond them a people who could scarcely comprehend speech. 94 They said, “O Dhu’l-Qarnayn! Truly Gog and Magog are workers of corruption in the land. Shall we assign thee a tribute, that thou mightest set a barrier between them and us?” 95 He said, “That wherewith my Lord has established me is better; so aid me with strength. I shall set a rampart between you and them. 96 Bring me pieces of iron.” Then, when he had leveled the two cliffs, he said, “Blow!” till when he had made it fire, he said, “Bring me molten copper to pour over it.” 97 Thus they were not able to surmount it, nor could they pierce it. 98 He said, “This is a mercy from my Lord. And when the Promise of my Lord comes, He will crumble it to dust. And the Promise of my Lord is true.” 99 And We shall leave them, on that Day, to surge against one another like waves. And the trumpet shall be blown, and We shall gather them together. 100 And We shall present Hell, on that Day, as an array before the disbelievers, 101 those whose eyes were veiled from the remembrance of Me, and could not hear. 102 Do those who disbelieve reckon that they may take My servants as protectors apart from Me? Truly We have prepared Hell as a welcome for the disbelievers! 103 Say, “Shall I inform you who are the greatest losers in respect to their deeds? 104 Those whose efforts go astray in the life of this world, while they reckon that they are virtuous in their works.” 105 They are those who disbelieve in the signs of their Lord, and in the meeting with Him. Thus their deeds have come to naught, and on the Day of Resurrection We shall assign them no weight. 106 That is their recompense—Hell—for having disbelieved and for having taken My signs and My messengers in mockery. 107 Those who believe and perform righteous deeds, theirs shall be the Gardens of Paradise as a welcome. 108 Abiding therein, they seek not any change therefrom. 109 Say, “If the sea were ink for the Words of my Lord, the sea would be exhausted before the Words of my Lord were exhausted, even if We brought the like thereof to replenish it.”  Say, “I am only a human being like you. It is revealed unto me that your God is one God. So whosoever hopes for the meeting with his Lord, let him perform righteous deeds and make no one a partner unto his Lord in worship.”

Commentary

① Praise be to God, Who sent down the Book unto His servant, and placed no crookedness therein,

1 Praise be to God for sending down the Book—that is, the Quran—described by some as God’s greatest gift to humanity, since it brings them from darkness into light (IK). His servant refers to the Prophet. That God has placed no crookedness in the Quran (see also 39:28) is widely understood to mean that it contains no contradictions or discrepancies (Ṭs, Z); see 4:82: Do they not contemplate the Quran? Had it been from other than God, they would surely have found much discrepancy therein. This phrase is also understood to mean that the Quran contains no corruption or falsehood (R, Ṭs) and that it remains continuously beneficial (Ṭs) as it guides people toward the straight path (IK); for the Quranic concept of the “straight path,” see 1:6c.

② upright, that He may warn of a great might coming from His Presence and give glad tidings unto the believers who perform righteous deeds that theirs shall be a beautiful reward,

2–3 Upright translates qayyim, which is used elsewhere in the Quran to describe religion (6:161; 9:36; 12:40; 30:30, 43; 98:5), but here describes the Book sent down (v. 1); see also 17:9: Truly this Quran guides toward that which is most upright. That God made the Quran upright, or “straight,” emphasizes that there is no crookedness in it (v. 1; Z) and that it is balanced and harmonious (Ṭs), and not susceptible to corruption (Ṭs). Qayyim can also mean to be a custodian of something or someone, and some thus interpret it to mean that the Quran is a custodian of earlier scriptures, a confirmer of them, and a witness to their truth (Ṭs, Z), while also, according to some, removing falsehoods in them and abrogating some of their laws (Ṭs). The Quran can also be understood as a “custodian” of people’s welfare (R, Z) and of religious affairs (R, Ṭs). According to al-Rāzī, the Quran is described as qayyim, because it is both perfect in itself and something that perfects something else. The Muṭazilite theologian al-Qāḍī ‘Abd al-Jabbār argued that vv. 1–3 support the Mu^ctazilite view that the Quran is created rather than eternal or uncreated, as the Ash^carites claimed, because the descriptions of the Quran in these verses point to a created object: it was sent down, which implies change and there can be no change in the eternal, and it was made straight or upright and “made” with no crookedness therein, both of which suggest something that God made or created (R). This Book was sent down as a means by which the Prophet could both warn and give glad tidings—the twin vocations of all messengers and prophets; see 2:213: Mankind was one community; then God sent the prophets as bearers of glad tidings and as warners. See also 2:119; 6:48; 4:165; 7:188; 11:2; 17:105; 18:56; 25:56; 33:45; 34:28; 48:8. The beautiful reward refers to the paradisaal Garden (Ṭs, Z).

⑤ They have no knowledge thereof, nor do their fathers. A monstrous word it is that issues from their mouths. They speak naught but a lie.

4–5 “To take a child” is a Quranic idiom meaning to assume special paternal responsibility for a child, to recognize a child, to take the child to oneself or into one’s care. This wording choice criticizes not just the belief that God could somehow “beget” a child, but the idea that He would single any individual human being out for that special relationship (even through adoption, for example). The Quran repeatedly rejects the notion that God has offspring of any kind, whether it be the idolatrous Makkan belief that the angels were God’s daughters or various claims made by or attributed to Jews or Christians. See 6:100c as well as 2:116; 4:171; 5:18; 10:68; 16:57; 19:35, 88; 21:26; 25:2; 39:4; 43:81. Given that this is a Makkan sūrah, however, these verses are likely referring to the idolatrous belief regarding the angels (IK). Those who make such claims have no knowledge thereof, nor do their fathers, meaning that their claim derives not from knowledge, but from gross ignorance and blindly following the belief of their ancestors without exercising independent thought (Ṭs, Z). In the Quran, blindly following one’s forefathers rather than using one’s intelligence to discern the truth of the messages brought by the prophets is presented and criticized as a common human tendency; see 2:170; 5:104; 7:70–71; 21:53–54; 37:68–72; 43:23–24. That the claim that God has offspring is called monstrous (also in 17:40) expresses the moral gravity of this claim (Ṭs) as well as the shock and surprise that such a claim should elicit (Z). That the claim issues from their mouths emphasizes that it is something completely fabricated for which they have no valid source (IK).

⑥ Yet perhaps thou wouldst destroy thyself with grief for their sake, should they believe not in this account.

6 Cf. 26:3, which contains a nearly identical statement. To destroy thyself with grief could also mean “to expend thyself in grief” (R), that is, to utterly exhaust oneself with concern and sadness on account of those who believe not in this account, that is, the Quran (Ṭs). The Prophet is frequently presented in the Quran as being distraught by the failure of the Makkans to accept the message he had brought them as well as by their repeated requests for miraculous signs as proof of his prophethood. Several verses seem to console the Prophet about this matter, as in 6:33: We know well that what they say grieves thee. Yet it is not thee that they deny. Rather, it is the signs of God that the wrongdoers reject; see also 3:176; 5:41; 35:8.

⑦ Surely We made whatsoever is on the earth an adornment for it, that We may try them as to which of them is most virtuous in deed.

⑧ And surely We shall make whatsoever is upon it a barren plain!

7–8 The earth is “adorned” by the various phenomena found upon it or in it, including its flora and fauna and its precious gold and metals (R). Adornment may also refer to humanity, which al-Rāzī considers to be the noblest of creatures on the earth. According to Abū Ḥāmid al-Ghazzālī, the “adornment” of the earth is a means by which God tries human beings with regard to their ability to maintain an attitude of detachment and asceticism toward the world (Iḥyā’ ‘ulūm al-dīn [Beirut, 2005], 5:340). That God shall make whatsoever is upon it, that is, the earth, a barren plain indicates that none of its adornments will endure forever, but will come to end and return to God (IK); see 55:26: All upon it (the earth) passes away.

⑨ Dost thou reckon that the Companions of the Cave and the Inscription are a marvel among Our signs?

9 This verse introduces the story of the Companions of the Cave (aṣḥāb al-kaḥf), from which the sūrah derives its name. This account was revealed to the Prophet in response to a challenge issued by the Quraysh. The Prophet was reportedly unfamiliar with this story and waited for a long period of time to receive revelation about it so that he could relate it to the skeptical Makkans. See the introduction to this sūrah for a fuller account.

The story of the Companions of the Cave is also known in Christian tradition as the “Seven Sleepers of Ephesus.” The Quranic and Christian accounts are very similar, both in the religious significance of the story as a proof of God’s power of resurrection (cf. v. 21) and in the smaller details of the narrative. Following upon the admonition to the Prophet that he need not destroy himself with sadness over those who disbelieve (v. 6), the story is perhaps meant to suggest that, just as God saved this small group of believers during a time of persecution, so too would He deliver the Prophet and his followers (Ṭs). Moreover, the story of the youths of the cave who fled all earthly goods and benefits to preserve their faith (Ṭs), suggesting a kind of voluntary death to the world, is particularly salient after the reference to the adornment of the earth as a trial for human beings (v. 7). Because the Companions of the Cave are not considered prophets, but simply very pious and pure youths, and because they are miraculously delivered and protected by God through their long sleep, shaded from the normal light of the sun, the story is adduced by some as evidence of the possibility that miracles (karāmāt) of a lesser kind than prophetic miracles (muʿjizāt) may be bestowed by God upon His sincere friends (awliyāʾ?, or “saints”). See al-Rāzī’s commentary on v. 11 and al-Qushayrī’s commentary on v. 17.

The question to the Prophet, “Dost thou reckon that the account of the Companions of the Cave is a marvel among Our signs?” is meant to suggest that there are other “signs” that are even more wondrous in nature, such as God’s creation of the heavens and the earth (IK, R, Ṭ, Ṭs). If the story of the companions is understood as an example of a nonprophetic miracle (karāmah), then the rhetorical question can be meant to suggest that the natural order of the world is itself a greater wonder and miracle than the occasional alteration of its regularity through miracles.

Cave translates al-kaḥf, which is said to designate more specifically a very spacious cave situated in a mountain (R, Ṭs, Z). The Inscription translates al-raqīm, a word that derives from a root meaning “to write.” Many commentators indicate that al-raqīm here refers to an inscription made on a leaden tablet placed at the entrance of the cave or an inscription carved into the mountain near the cave detailing the story and fate of the Companions of the Cave (Q, Ṭ, Ṭs, Z), although some have suggested that al-raqīm in this passage refers to a book containing the laws and teachings of Christianity (Q), as the companions were Christians fearing persecution for their religion (see 18:10c). Alternately, some have suggested that al-raqīm refers to the name of the valley, the mountain, or the region in which the cave was located (IK, Ṭ, Ṭs, Z), which some say was in the area between northwest Arabia and southern Palestine (Ṭ, Ṭs, Z), although other locations in present-day Turkey (Ephesus) or Jordan (near Amman) have also been suggested. Still others report that it is the name of the building built to commemorate the cave (IK), the name of the leader of the companions (ST), or the name of their dog (Z; see 18:18c).

10 When the youths took refuge in the cave, they said, “Our Lord! Grant us mercy from Thy Presence, and make us incline to sound judgment concerning our affair.”

10 The youths—that is, the Companions of the Cave—took refuge in the cave, fleeing to God for the sake of their religion (IK, Ṭs), seeking refuge from a king named Daqyānūs (Th, Ṭs) or Daqyūs (Q), which may be an Arabization of Decius, the name of the king in the Christian account, who was attempting to force his subjects to worship idols (Ṭs). Al-Ṭabrisī also mentions the possibility, as suggested in some Christian sources, that it was a Zoroastrian king trying to force his Christian subjects to follow his religion (Ṭs). Some report that the youths, who may have been among the king’s courtiers (Ṭs) or the sons of local noble families (Q), lived in Ephesus and were believers hiding their faith out of fear of persecution (Th, Ṭs). Others indicate that they were Christians attempting to maintain the beliefs and practices of Christianity at a time of great religious corruption, oppressive kings, and a turn toward idolatry (Th).

According to some reports, the king eventually learned that the youths had sought refuge in a cave. He thus had the entrance to the cave sealed, thinking that they would die of hunger and thirst (Th). The youths prayed for a mercy from Thy Presence—that is, from God’s storehouse of Mercy (R, Z)—and sound judgment concerning their affair, expressing their hope that God would grant them guidance and knowledge, provision, patience in their trial, security from their enemies, and eventual deliverance (R, Ṭs, Z). They prayed that the end of their affair would be sound and rightly guided, as in the prayer of the Prophet reported in a ḥadīth, “O God, make virtuous the ends of all our affairs” (IK). According to some, they were praying that God would eventually grant them a safe exit from the cave (Ṭs).

The cave is the place where the youths withdrew from the world, having despaired of its kindness, and sought the protection of God alone (Aj). From a mystical perspective, the cave represents the heart. According to some reports, the youths spent their time in the cave praying and praising God and devoting themselves fully to Him (Th). Thus for some, their plea for mercy was a plea for God to preserve them in or through the remembrance of Him (ST). Insofar as one who is fully engaged in the remembrance or invocation of God can be said to be outside the experience of ordinary time, the extended life of the youths of the cave can be seen as symbolic of this experience.

⑪ So We placed [a veil] over their ears in the cave for a number of years.

11 God placed [a veil] over their ears, literally, “struck them upon the ears,” meaning that He made them incapable of hearing sounds that could awaken them (R, Z) or that He put them into a very deep slumber (IK, Th, Ṭs). A number of years may refer to a long or short period of time (Z): v. 25 gives the number of years as 309, but the Companions of the Cave experienced this long amount of time as but a day or part of a day (v. 19). The description here indicates that the companions did not die, but remained in a deep sleep (Ṭs).

⑫ Then We raised them up again, that We might know which of the two parties had best calculated how long they had tarried.

12 Raised them means awakened them from their sleep (R, Ṭs). God raised them so that He might know which of the two parties had best calculated the time they were asleep. This statement seems to call into question God’s foreknowledge of events, since it indicates He had to raise the youths in order to know. However, the Quran frequently uses such language, and it might be understood to mean that, although God might test people in order to know something, He already has the answer prior to the accomplishment of the test (see 2:143c; 47:31c). The two parties who differed over the length of time they had remained in the cave may refer to two groups among the companions themselves (see v. 19; R, Ṭs); the companions and the kings who reigned over the city (R); or all those who differed regarding this matter (IK).

Al-Rāzī notes that the Sufis understand this verse to be proof that, besides the evidentiary miracles (muʿjizāt) that God gives only to the prophets in support of their prophetic mission and as evidence of their prophethood, other kinds of miracles (karāmāt) can be bestowed on those who have attained exceptional nearness to God, that is, the “saints” or “friends of God” (awliyāʾ Allāh). These two kinds of miracles are clearly distinguished in Islamic texts.

⑭ And We fortified their hearts. When they arose, they said, “Our Lord is the Lord of the heavens and the earth. We shall call upon no god apart from Him, for then we would have certainly uttered an outrage.

13–14 In v. 13, the Quran emphasizes the young age of the Companions of the Cave, and some commentators observe that it is often the youth of a community who are most likely to respond to the messages of the prophets, while the elders of the community are more entrenched in their false religious practices (IK); for example, it was the younger members of the Quraysh who were more likely to follow the Prophet. The Quran also juxtaposes the faith of the youthful Abraham against the idolatry of his father and the leaders of his people (see 21:60); see also 7:60, 66, 75, 88, 90, 103; 11:27, 38; 23:24, 33; 34:34; 43:23, where it is the “notables” or “leaders” (presumably elders) of various communities who reject the call of the prophets sent to them. The word for youths (fatiyyah) is related to the word used in the classical tradition to denote spiritual chivalry (futuwwah), which is based upon faith (Q, Ṭs). Futuwwah (or jawānmardī in Persian) is characterized by being virtuous and generous, refraining from what is forbidden and from harming others, never complaining about one’s situation (Q), being true to one’s word, avoiding all hypocrisy, and cutting oneself off from all (worldly) attachments (Su). Later this term became associated with guilds in which these virtues were cultivated.

Although already believers, the youths were increased . . . in guidance, meaning their faith was increased (Q) or they were given greater understanding and discernment of the truth through faith (ST) as well as the patience to endure separation from their people (Ṭ). The Quran mentions in several verses that God increases the tendencies already manifested by human beings: if the diseased of heart do not turn to God, their disease is increased (2:10); and for those who believe, their faith is increased (e.g., 48:4). Regarding guidance in particular, see 19:76: God increases in guidance those who are rightly guided; and 47:17: But those who are rightly guided, He increases them in guidance. God also fortified their hearts, strengthening them in patience and faith (R, Ṭ, Z) and also certitude (Qu). When they arose refers to the youths' open defiance of the tyrant king Daqyānūs and his demand that they worship his false deities (R, Ṭ, Z) and to their declaration that their Lord is the Lord of the heavens and the earth, while the false deities of Daqyānūs are nothing more than the subjects of the one Lord (Ṭ). According to another report, the youths secretly harbored their belief in one God independently of one other. When the group happened to meet by chance outside the city on one occasion, the eldest of them confessed to his belief in one God (IK, R) and, finding the others in agreement, they collectively uttered the proclamation about their Lord in v. 14, either there and then (R) or after they had returned to the court of the king (IK).

⑮ These, our people, have taken gods apart from Him. Why do they not bring a clear authority concerning them? For who does greater wrong than one who fabricates a lie against God?

15 Clear authority means a clear proof or indication that such deities are worthy of worship; for some this verse supports the important Islamic principle that religious worship must be based upon intellectual proof and should not derive solely from blind imitation (taqlīd) of the practices of others (R, Ṭs, Z). The rhetorical question, Who does greater wrong than one who fabricates a lie against God? in this case, by ascribing partners to Him, is repeated in several verses; see 6:21c; 7:37; 10:17; 11:18; 29:68; 61:7c.

⑯ And when you have withdrawn from them and all that they worship save God, then take refuge in the cave. Your Lord will spread forth something of His Mercy for you, and make you incline to ease in your affair.”

16 These are the words of Tamlikhā (or Yamlikhā, Iamblichus) the reported chief of the youths (Ṭs). He instructs them to take refuge in the cave, to hide themselves from the disbelievers. Many see this event as analogous to the Prophet and Abū Bakr’s seeking refuge in a cave during their migration (hijrah) to Madinah as they sought to elude the pursuing Makkans (see 9:40 and commentary; IK). In both cases the cave, which is a symbol of the interior “space” of the heart, offers miraculous sanctuary and refuge from the world and its evils. Tamlikhā’s promise that God will make you incline to ease in your affair suggests a response to the youths’ supplication to God in v. 10 that He make them incline to sound judgment in their affair.

17 Thou wouldst have seen the sun when it rose, slanting away from their cave to the right; and when it set, turning away from them to the left, while they were in an open space within it. That is among the signs of God. Whomsoever God guides, he is rightly guided; and whomsoever He leads astray, thou wilt find no protector to lead him aright.

17 This verse is addressed to the Prophet, according to al-Ṭabarī, although others consider it to be addressed to an unspecified interlocutor (Q, R). The sun slanted away from their cave to the right as it rose and turned away from them to the left when it set; despite the different phrases, these movements can be understood as parallel to one another (Ṭ). That they were in an open space within it is understood to mean that the cave was spacious with a broad opening that allowed fresh air and cool breezes to reach the youths as they slept within it (IK, JJ, Z); the slanting of the sun away from the cave meant that they did not suffer from the heat of direct sunlight, but remained comfortably in the shade (Ṭ, Th, Z). In the Quran, shade is one of God’s blessings in this world (2:57; 25:45–46) and especially in the Hereafter (e.g., 4:57; 13:35; 36:56). See also 16:81, where both shade and places of refuge in the mountains are mentioned among God’s blessings.

In several verses, it is said that God both guides and leads astray; for the meaning of this idea and the respective fates of those involved, see 7:178c; 17:97c.

18 Thou wouldst have thought them awake, though they were asleep. And We turned them to the right and to the left, with their dog stretching forth his paws at the threshold. Hadst thou come upon them, thou wouldst have turned away in flight and been filled with terror on their account.

18 The youths in the cave are described as asleep (see 18:11c), but also as seeming to be awake, perhaps because they slept with their eyes open or because of their turning, which some suggested occurred once or twice a year (R, Z). This may indicate that they were in an intermediate state between ordinary waking and sleeping. Sleeping and waking can also serve as metaphors for life and death—as in the well-known ḥadīth, “Man is asleep, and when he dies he awakens,” where ordinary awakesness is associated with sleep and death with full awakening—and can symbolize death and resurrection, as in 6:60: He it is Who takes your souls by night, and He knows what you commit by day. Then by day He resurrects you, that a term appointed may be fulfilled. Sleep can therefore represent the finite space and time of earthly life, situated between the eternity that precedes and follows it, but also the finite period of death in the grave that one experiences between one’s earthly death and the universal resurrection.

Thus sleep is associated with the barzakh, the intermediate realm between two opposites: when one is sleeping, one is still alive, but one’s soul has been “taken” by God (6:60), so that it is a kind of “minor death,” after which waking is like a resurrection; see the essay “Death, Dying, and the Afterlife in the Quran.” In this sense, the story of the Companions of the Cave can be read not only as a proof of God’s power of resurrection, but also as an allegory for the barzakh, or intermediate realm between individual death and universal resurrection. From a Sufi perspective, the turning of the youths in their sleep can also represent their alternation between the states of annihilation (fanāʾ) and the subsistence (baqāʾ) in God (Su).

In their sleep, God caused them to turn to the right and to the left in order to prevent them from being covered and eventually consumed by the earth (Ṭ). According to some commentators the dog served as their hunting animal (Th); regarding the permissibility of using dogs for hunting, see 5:4c. Some report that the youths happened to come upon the dog as they were fleeing from the king (Q, Th). They initially tried to chase him off, fearing that he would give away their location, but the dog was miraculously given the ability to speak (Q, Th) and said to the youths, “I love the lovers of God; so sleep while I keep watch” (Q, R, Th). Some report that he was a sheepdog belonging to a shepherd whom they had met on the way, both of whom followed the youths (R). Others do not consider this to be a dog at all, but rather suggest that the word for “dog,” kalb, was actually the name of another individual who accompanied the youths, according to some their cook (Ṭ) and according to others their dog keeper (reading kālib rather than kalb; Z), in which case the word rendered paws in the translation would be “arms.” Threshold translates waṣīd, which can also refer to the door or entrance to the cave or to the earth or dust in front of it (Ṭ).

Addressing the Prophet, the verse indicates that had he himself come upon the youths in the cave in their miraculous sleep, he would have fled in fear of them, because, according to some, God had cloaked them in a fearsome appearance to prevent anyone from touching or disturbing them while they slept (Ṭ, Z).

19 And in this way We raised them up again, that they might question one another. One of them said, “How long have you tarried?” They said, “We have tarried a day or part of a day.” They said, “Your Lord knows best how long you have tarried. So send one of you with this money of yours into the city, and let him observe which of them has the purest food and bring you some provision therefrom. Let him be discreet and make no one aware of you.

20 Verily, if they come to know of you, they will stone you, or make you revert to their creed, and then you will never prosper.”

21 And in this way We caused them to be discovered, that they might know that God’s Promise is true, and that there is no doubt about the Hour. When they were disputing among themselves about their affair, they said, “Erect a building over them; their Lord knows them best.” Those who prevailed over their affair said, “We shall build a place of worship over them.”

19–21 It is reported that the youths awoke after their cave was discovered by a shepherd looking for a place to shelter his flock from the rain. When he cleared the entrance of the cave, the youths awoke (Ṭ). Unaware of how long they had slept, they reckoned they had tarried a day or part of a day. Some say they estimated they had passed a day, since they entered the cave in the morning and awoke at sunset (IK, Ṭ, Z); only upon seeing the length of their hair and nails did they say, Your Lord knows best how long you have tarried (R, Z). However, their estimation of having tarried a day is identical to that made by a man who had doubted the resurrection, was put to sleep by God, and was then awakened after a hundred years in 2:259. Similarly, on the Last Day, the Quran says that people will reckon that they had tarried but a short while before their resurrection (see 10:45; 17:52; 20:104; 23:112–13; 30:55; 46:35; 79:46). That the reactions of the youths upon awakening are described as similar to the reactions of those resurrected from the dead indicates the close symbolic connection of this story to death, resurrection, and the intermediate state, or barzakh, between them; see the essay “Death, Dying, and the Afterlife in the Quran.”

One of the youths is designated to take some money, referring to a silver dirham bearing the imprint of the oppressive king of their own time, and to enter the city in order to purchase food; but he was to do this discreetly, because they feared they would be discovered and persecuted. However, the dirham gives him away, for the people were amazed to see the old coin. They informed the youth that centuries had passed. They were now ruled by a righteous king, Tīdhusīs (Theodocius; Ṭ), during whose reign the people had been disputing among themselves about their affair, that is, about whether the body was resurrected along with the spirit or the spirit alone was raised. The king believed in bodily resurrection and prayed to God for a sign to convince his people. When he learned of the story of the youths of the cave, he announced it as a sign that resurrection is both a bodily and spiritual reality and, guided by the youth, led a delegation of the people to the cave. When the youth entered the cave where his companions were, however, he was instantly returned to his deep sleep, as were his companions. The king and the townsfolk later entered and found them in a state of bodily perfection, without any sign of decomposition (Ṭ).

There are varying versions of this account in the commentaries; some indicate that the youth talked briefly with the king and the townspeople, bidding them well, then returned to their state of sleep, and finally died. Some report that the townsfolk later found in the cave the tablets bearing the inscription (v. 9) that told the names of the youth and their story (Ṭ). In this way, God is said to have caused the youths to be discovered by the king and his people so that they might know that God’s Promise is true and so that they would not have doubt regarding the Hour, or the Resurrection on that Day, for one who can raise sleepers unaltered after many centuries can certainly raise the dead (Ṭ). Later some of the townsfolk suggested that they erect a building over them, but others decided it better to erect a place of worship (masjid) at the site. According to al-Ṭabarī, they erected a building that later become a place of prayer. Some consider the disputing among the townspeople to refer to their disagreement about how to memorialize the site of the cave, in which the disbelievers argued for a building and the believers for a place of prayer (JJ, R), or to their disagreement regarding the state of the youth, whether they were dead or sleeping, the time they spent in the cave, or their number (see v. 22). When they could not solve their disagreements, they said, Their Lord knows them best.

22 They say, “[They were] three, and the fourth was their dog.” And they say, “Five, and the sixth was their dog”—guessing at the unseen. And they say, “Seven, and the eighth was their dog.” Say, “My Lord knows best their number; none know them save a few.” So dispute not concerning them, save with clear argument, nor consult any of them about them.

22 This verse discourages further debate and discussion about the number of youths, as all such debate amounts to guessing at the unseen, a vain endeavor, for as the Quran says in 6:59: And with Him are the keys of the Unseen. None knows them but He. With regard to the youths, however, it is said that none know them save a few. Some identify the “few” here as the People of the Book (Ṭ). So dispute not concerning them, save with clear argument is addressed to the Prophet and instructs him not to debate with them about the matter, but rather to let the parts of the story that had been revealed to him in this Quranic account suffice (Ṭ). The verse adds nor consult any of them about them, meaning that he should not question the People of the Book further about this matter (Ṭ).

23 And say not of anything, “Surely, I shall do it tomorrow.”

24 Save that God wills. And remember thy Lord when thou dost forget, and say, “It may be that my Lord will guide me nearer than this to rectitude.”

23–24 These verses are addressed to the Prophet Muhammad, reminding him that he should never make a promise regarding what he might do tomorrow, meaning the future in general (Z), without acknowledging that its fulfillment depends upon the Will of God. In context, it pertains to the Prophet's initial promise to the Makkans that he would respond to their queries about the youths of the cave the following day, assuming he would receive revelation from God before that time about how to answer their questions; he did not receive revelation for fifteen days according to some, leading the Makkans to doubt his ability to answer their questions and ultimately to doubt his prophethood (Ṭ). Some commentators suggest that the verse can be read as an instruction to the Prophet to acknowledge verbally God's Will in all such matters by adding the conditional clause, "if God wills" (in shā' Allāh) to any promise of future action (R, Z). It is thus a regular Muslim practice to utter this formula whenever one is speaking of what one expects to accomplish or hopes will come to pass in the future. This practice serves as a constant reminder that nothing happens outside the Will of God and acknowledges that the future is firmly in His Hands.

V. 24 further instructs the Prophet, and by extension all people, to remember thy Lord again if he were to forget to mention the dependency of all future action on God's Will. The Quranic injunction here, to respond to forgetfulness of God not with bitter regret, but simply with renewed recollection and correction of one's state of soul and mind, is similar to the injunction in 6:68: And when thou seest those who engage in vain discussion about Our signs, turn away from them till they engage in other discourse. And if Satan should cause thee to forget, then once thou hast remembered, sit not in the company of wrongdoing people. According to some, it is best if one realizes one's error in forgetting to acknowledge the role of God's Will and corrects oneself while still in the same place and situation in which one made the original statement (JJ, Z). Others assert that one can utter the formula even much later (Ṭ, Z), although one may still be liable for offering expiation for an unfulfilled oath (Ṭ); regarding the importance of keeping oaths, see commentary on 16:91–92; regarding expiation for broken oaths, see 5:89c. It may be that my Lord will guide me nearer than this to rectitude may be understood to be the content of the remembrance one makes upon realizing one has forgotten to acknowledge God's Will in a matter (Z), or it may be the Prophet's prayer that he would be given even greater signs and proofs of his prophethood than that of his having been informed by God about the youths of the cave (Bḏ, JJ, Z).

25 And they tarried in their cave three hundred years, plus nine more.

26 Say, “God knows best how long they tarried. Unto Him belongs the Unseen of the heavens and the earth. How well He sees, how well He hears! They have no protector apart from Him, and He makes no one a partner unto Him in His Judgment.”

25–26 The statement that the youths remained in the cave for 309 years is said by some to be God’s informing the Prophet of the number of years the People of the Book say they remained in the cave (Ṭ, Z); however, it may not be the actual number of years, as suggested by the statement that follows it, God knows best how long they tarried (v. 26). Others claim that this figure represents the actual number of years the youths slept in the cave (Ṭ), and God knows best refers to the amount of time they remained in the cave after their death, which occurred shortly after their waking and being discovered (see 18:19–21c; Ṭ). Still others suggest that the figure of 309 years represents the actual number of years in the cave and settled an existing dispute about the matter, hence God knows best how long they tarried (Z). Some commentators also note that the number of years is referred to as three hundred years, plus nine more, because 300 years represents the amount of time they slept in the cave according to the solar calendar, and another 9 years would have to be added if this same period of time were reckoned according to the lunar calendar, which was followed by the Prophet and the Arabs (IK, JJ, Q).

The Unseen belongs to God alone (10:20, 11:123; 16:77) and God alone knows the unseen, as in 6:59: And with Him are the keys of the Unseen. None knows them but He; and He knows what is on land and sea; no leaf falls but that He knows it, nor any seed in the dark recesses of the earth, nor anything moist or dry, but that it is inscribed in a clear Book (see also 23:92; 27:65; 72:26). How well He sees, how well He hears is an exclamation indicating that none sees or hears like or better than God (IK, Q), who is the Hearing, the Seeing, and regarding whom it is said, Sight comprehends Him not, but He comprehends all sight (6:103). They—that is, either the youths of the cave (R) or those who disputed about their affair (R)—have no protector but God (see also, e.g., 6:70; 11:20; 29:22; 33:18; 42:32; 46:32). That He has no partner . . . in His judgment, means that His Judgment is final and that there is no appeal to or revision of it (IK); or in this context specifically, it may mean that His statement about the youths of the cave and the length of time they slept is the final judgment on the matter (R).

27 Recite that which has been revealed unto thee from the Book of thy Lord. None alters His Words. And thou wilt find no refuge apart from Him.

27 The Makkans, who were displeased by the Quran revealed to the Prophet, used to ask him to bring a different Quran or to alter it to be more to their liking (see 10:15). The present verse is a response to such requests (Z), instructing the Prophet to recite that which has been revealed to Him (see also 29:45) and reminding him that none alters His Words (see also 6:115; 10:64). Only God can alter His revelations, replacing one with another (see 16:101 and commentary).

28 Make thy soul patient with those who call upon their Lord morning and evening, desiring His Face. Turn not thine eyes away from them, desiring the adornment of the life of this world, nor obeying one whose heart We have made heedless of the remembrance of Us and who follows his caprice and whose affair exceeds the bounds.

28 This verse relates to the time when some prominent Makkans indicated that they were willing to sit and listen to the Prophet's teachings, but they wanted the Prophet's poorer followers to leave, so that they would not have to associate with those of low social standing (Ṭ, W), a story discussed in detail in the commentary on 6:52: And driveth not away those who call upon their Lord morning and evening, desiring His Face. Naught of their reckoning falls upon thee and naught of thy reckoning falls upon them, such that thou mightest drive them away and thus become one of the wrongdoers. Here, as in 6:52, the Prophet is instructed to remain steadfast with his sincere followers who call upon their Lord—that is, by invoking Him, praising and glorifying Him, supplicating Him, and performing their prayers (Ṭ).

That they call upon Him morning and evening may mean that they do so at these times specifically or that they do so constantly; the injunction to praise, glorify, or invoke God morning and evening is also found in 33:42; 48:9; 76:25. They call upon him desiring His Face, that is, seeking to please God and earn His Reward rather than earthly rewards or benefits (Ṭ); cf. 2:272; 13:22; 30:38–39; 76:9; 92:18–20. From a mystical perspective this phrase, on the highest level, can refer to seeking a vision of God. The Prophet is instructed not to turn his eyes away from them, desiring the adornment of the life of this world, that is, not to look past them toward other potential followers who may be wealthier or more influential (Ṭ; for a similar situation, see 80:1c) or prefer to sit with the wealthy and prominent rather than the lowly, who are pious and sincere (Ṭ). Later, the Prophet was reported to have said concerning this latter group: “Praise be to God, Who did not let me die before commanding my soul to be patient with some men among my community” (IK, Ṭ, W). The one whose heart We have made heedless refers to the Makkans who wished the Prophet to drive away his poorer followers (Ṭ). That their affair exceeds the bounds means that they are prodigal, wasteful, and negligent, putting their own petty desires before the truth.

29 And say, “It is the truth from your Lord! So whosoever will, let him believe, and whosoever will, let him disbelieve.” Verily We have prepared for the wrongdoers a Fire whose canopies will encompass them. And if they plead for relief, they will be showered with water like molten lead that will scald faces—an evil drink indeed, and how evil a resting place!

29 This verse is also said to have been revealed in connection with the incident described in v. 28. Whosoever will, let him believe, and whosoever will, let him disbelieve is meant as a warning. The implication of this statement is that the Prophet’s duty is only to declare the truth; he is not responsible for determining who will accept the truth and who will reject it. This is a matter that lies ultimately with God (Q, R) or, from the human point of view, with the individual, who must choose whether to follow the truth or turn away from it (Z). That this verse is meant as a warning rather than a license is indicated by the lines in the second half of the verse, which recount the horrors of Hell that have been prepared for the wrongdoers.

The Fire is described as taking the form of canopies that encompass them; that is, the Fire will surround them from all sides, from above and below; see also 29:55; 39:16. Water like molten lead is one of several terrible liquids that will torment the denizens of Hell. Either such liquids are poured upon those in Hell, or they are made to drink them; see 6:70; 10:4; 22:19; 37:67; 38:57; 40:72; 44:48; 47:15; 56:42, 54, 93; 78:25; 88:5 as well as 44:43–46: Truly the tree of Zaqqūm is the food of the sinner, like molten lead boiling in their bellies, like the boiling of boiling liquid. In the present verse, the water like molten lead is both showered on those in Hell and made an evil drink for them. Some describe the image here as a wall of water poured down into Hell, and when those in Hell seek to drink from it to seek relief, the heat of the water burns their faces (Z). The evil drinks of Hell—both boiling and freezing cold—are meant to contrast with the exceedingly pleasant drinks of the Garden (see 47:15). That this water will scald faces is consistent with other verses indicating that punishment in the Hereafter is either meted out or manifested upon “faces”—faces being symbolic here of persons as a whole, rather than merely indicating a part of their bodies; see 3:106; 4:47; 8:50; 10:27; 14:50; 17:97; 21:39; 23:104; 25:34; 27:90; 33:66; 39:60; 47:27; 54:48; 67:27; 80:40–41.

③⑩ As for those who believe and perform righteous deeds, surely We neglect not the reward of one who is virtuous in deed.

30 Believing and performing righteous deeds are frequently mentioned together as the twin bases of success in this world as far as it affects life in the Hereafter; see, e.g., 2:25; 3:57; 4:57; 5:69; 7:42; 17:9. See also 98:7: Truly those who believe and perform righteous deeds, they are the best of creation. For We neglect not the reward of the virtuous, cf. 9:120; 11:115; 12:56, 89; the same is said for the believers (3:171) and the workers of righteousness (7:170). Belief, submission through the performance of righteous deeds, and virtue represent the three basic components of religion—īmān, islām, and iḥsān—according to the well-known ḥadīth of Gabriel, in which īmān is associated with fundamentals of belief; islām with the five pillars, or essential practices (bearing witness to God’s Oneness, performing the prayer, paying the alms, fasting during the month of Ramadan, and performing the ḥajj); and iḥsān with virtue.

③⑪ For such as these, theirs shall be the Gardens of Eden with rivers running below. Therein they shall be adorned with bracelets of gold, and shall wear green garments of fine silk and rich brocade, reclining upon couches. Blessed indeed is the reward, and how beautiful a resting place!

31 The believers described in v. 30 will be rewarded with the Gardens of Eden (also described as such in 9:72; 13:23; 16:31; 19:61; 20:76; 35:33; 38:50; 40:8; 98:8). The description of paradisaic Gardens as having rivers running below them is found in more than two dozen verses throughout the Quran; for a discussion of this image, see 2:25c. This verse also describes the joys of the Garden as including what appear to be, at least on a literal level, a set of material or sensual pleasures, including bracelets of gold (or of silver in 76:21) and green garments of fine silk; see also 22:23; 35:33; 76:21, where these are also mentioned together as well as 44:53, which mentions only silk garments. These sensual descriptions are considered by many commentators to be symbolic, however, and not to be taken literally. The garments are described as green, because, according to some, this color is the most pleasing to the eye (Q), and in 55:76 those in Paradise recline on green cushions. Al-Rāzī speculates that the green silken garments represent what they have earned with their deeds, while the bracelets represent an additional bounty from God (R). According to a ḥadīth, the extent of one’s ornaments in the Garden reflects the degree to which one has purified oneself through ablutions in earthly life (Q). The inhabitants of Paradise are also said to be reclining upon couches (see also 15:47; 36:56; 37:44; 52:20; 56:15; 76:13; 83:23, 35; 88:13), which are described by some as curtained or canopied (IK, Q, R, Ṭ) and bejeweled (Q). Gold jewelry, fine silk garments, and raised couches would all have signified immense luxury, particularly in the context of Arabian desert life, where rough woolen garments and sitting on the ground would have been the norm, and some commentators indicate that these images are meant to suggest that those in Paradise will be like kings, finely ornamented and seated upon thrones (Q, Z). If interpreted in a literal fashion, these paradisaical pleasures may seem worldly and materialistic in nature; indeed, in 43:35 gold ornaments and couches are described as the enjoyment of the life of this world. At the same time, gold and silk are considered noble in nature; they are also luxuries forbidden for Muslim men, according to several aḥādīth, and thus are goods that only women are permitted to enjoy in earthly life. Although the prohibition against men wearing gold and silk was not as central or important as the prohibition against consuming intoxicating beverages (see 5:90), there is an analogy between such beverages and gold and silk in that, at least for men, they were pleasures present but forbidden in this world, to be enjoyed only in the Hereafter. In Sufi interpretations, the various luxuries of the Garden as described in the Quran are understood to be symbols of the spiritual joys of witnessing God in all His Majesty and Beauty and of the intimacy, love, and union with God that the righteous will experience there (Qu, Su).

32 Set forth for them the parable of two men: For one of them We made two gardens of grapevines, and surrounded them with date palms, and placed crops between them.

33 Both gardens brought forth their produce and failed not in the least, and We made a stream gush forth in their midst.

32–33 The parable of the two men told in vv. 32–44 follows the discussion of the prominent and wealthy Makkans’ aversion to sitting with those of the Prophet’s followers whom they considered below their social status. It warns that those who are ungrateful for the worldly blessings that God has granted them and make them a source of personal pride are liable to think that these blessings are impervious to change and to be devastated when they are lost; cf. 2:264–66; 68:17–32; 34:15–16. That this parable is aimed most immediately at the Makkan idolaters is suggested by the fact that the gardens as described in this parable are similar to those the Makkans challenged the Prophet to bring forth as a condition of their believing in him in 17:90–91: And they say, “We shall not believe in thee till thou makest a spring gush forth for us from the earth, or till thou hast a garden of date palms and grapevines, and thou makest streams gush forth in the midst of it.” Gardens of grapevines and date palms are emblematic in the Quran of worldly prosperity but also Divine Beneficence; see 6:99, 141; 23:19; 36:34.

Some reports say that the two men were brothers—either two Israelites or two brothers among the Makhzūm clan in Makkah—one of whom was a believer and the other a disbeliever (R, Z); the disbelieving brother invested all of his inheritance in worldly goods, while the believing brother gave his away in charity (Z). Some commentators suggest that these two brothers are the same two debating resurrection in 37:51–60 (R, Z). That the two gardens failed not in the least could be translated more literally to mean that the gardens “did him no wrong,” since they produced fruit regularly. This contrasts with the description of the garden owner as wronging himself with his pride and worldly illusions in v. 35.

34 And he had [abundant] fruit and said unto his companion as he conversed with him, “I am greater than you in wealth and stronger in men.”

34 The man with the two gardens had [abundant] fruit, which may refer to the fruit of the gardens, although thamar, here rendered “fruit,” also means “profit,” and may refer to great wealth of various kinds, including gold and silver (R, Ṭ, Z). The wealthier man also boasts that he is stronger in men, meaning in children, especially sons, as well as aides and servants (Z). Wealth and children are mentioned together in the Quran as signifiers of worldly status (see v. 46), although the Quran warns that these blessings are not necessarily signs of Divine Favor (9:55, 85; 23:55–56) and cannot protect one against Divine Punishment (3:10, 116; 9:69; 26:88), despite the claims of some disbelievers who rejected prophetic warnings of destruction, saying: We are greater in wealth and children, and we shall not be punished (34:35).

35 And he entered his garden, wronging himself, and said, “I think not that this will ever perish.

36 Nor do I think that the Hour is imminent. And if I am brought back to my Lord, I shall surely find something better than this in the Hereafter.”

35–36 The description of disbelief and sin as acts of “wronging oneself” is found throughout the Quran (e.g., 3:117; 10:44). Here, the wealthy man “wronging himself” through pride and his refusal to acknowledge that his provision comes from God (Z). The abundance of his gardens deludes the man in this parable into thinking that they will never perish, though all things perish, save His Face (28:88; cf. 55:26). This delusion points to the moral error of “excessive hope in worldly things” (tūl al-amal; Z), which entails being heedless of the impermanence of all created things and of one’s own mortality. See 104:3, where it is said that some who amass great wealth suppose that their wealth makes them immortal. The wealthy man in this parable does not think that the Hour is imminent, and commentators understand this and his conditional statement if I am brought back to my Lord to indicate his overall doubt in the Hereafter or his own resurrection (Ṭ). Despite this uncertainty, he is confident that if he is indeed resurrected, he will find something better than this—that is, better than his abundant gardens—in the Hereafter. This is because he believes that his wealth and good fortune belong to him on the basis of his own personal merit, and since he assumes that this merit transcends death, he expects to enjoy wealth and children in the Hereafter as well (R); see also 19:77: Hast thou not considered the one who disbelieves in Our signs, and says, “I shall be given wealth and children”; and 19:77–78c.

37 His companion said unto him as he conversed with him, “Do you disbelieve in the One Who created you from dust, then from a drop, then fashioned you as a man?”

38 But He is God, my Lord, and I ascribe none as partner unto my Lord.

37–38 That human beings are made from dust (cf. 3:59; 30:20) and created from a drop (cf. 16:4; 23:13–14; 36:77; 75:37; 76:2; 80:19) is understood as an indication of human beings’ lowliness, especially in relation to God. Elsewhere, human beings’ origination from dust and then from a drop represents two stages in human development (22:5; 35:11; 40:67). Fashioned you as a man refers to God’s having further shaped him as a mature individual (Z), endowed with intelligence and religious responsibility (taklīf; R). The believer continues his address to the disbeliever, saying, I ascribe none as partner unto my Lord; that is, he realizes that all poverty and wealth comes from God (Q, R) and so is grateful in times of plenty and patient in times of adversity (R).

39 When you entered your garden, why did you not say, ‘[This is] as God wills. There is no strength save in God.’ If you see that I am less than you in wealth and children, 40 it may be that my Lord will give me something better than your garden, and unleash against it a reckoning from the sky, so that it becomes a flattened plain.

41 Or its water may sink deep, so that you cannot seek after it.”

39–41 As God wills (mā shā’ Allāh), a very common phrase in everyday Muslim speech, indicates a recognition that nothing happens outside of God’s Will; see 7:188, where the Prophet is told to say, I have no power over what benefit or harm may come to me, save as God wills (see also 10:49). There is no strength save in God (lā quwwata illā bi’Llāh) acknowledges that no individual can accomplish anything without the Help of God (R). According to Ibn Kathīr, this verse is the source of the Muslim religious custom of saying, whenever one is pleased by some good fortune, mā shā’ Allāh (“as God wills”) and lā quwwata illā bi’Llāh (“there is no strength, save in God”), although the latter phrase is also uttered commonly in situations where one feels helpless in the face of distress or difficulty. According to a ḥadīth, the Prophet identified the latter phrase, or the related formula lā ḥawla wa lā quwwata illā bi’Llāh (“there is no power and no strength, save in God”), both used regularly in Muslim discourse, as among the “treasures of the Garden” (IK).

In v. 40, the believer’s words continue, as he challenges the boasts of the disbeliever, and expresses his hope that God may well give him something better than the gardens of the disbeliever, either in this world or in the Hereafter (Aj, R); see 4:77; 7:169; 12:57; 16:30, where the Hereafter is said to be better for the reverent than this world. The believer’s expression of hope for his own future is followed by a warning to the disbeliever that God may unleash against his gardens a reckoning from the sky, that is, a punishment from above (IK, R, Ṭ). Some commentators interpret reckoning from the sky here as thunderbolts (ṣawā’iq; Bd, R, Z), suggesting a torrential storm or rain that will wash away his trees and crops and render his gardens a flattened plain, that is, as nothing but bare and barren earth (IK). The thunderbolt is mentioned elsewhere in the Quran as an agent of Divine Punishment and destruction or as a demonstration of Divine Power; see 4:153; 13:13; 14:13, 17; 51:44. See also vv. 7–8, which state that despite the many “adornments” God has made for the earth, it will eventually be rendered a barren plain; see also 20:106.

④² And his fruit was encompassed. So he began to wring his hands on account of what he had spent on it while it lay in waste upon its trellises, saying, “Would that I had not ascribed anyone as partner unto my Lord!”

④³ And he had no party to help him apart from God; nor could he help himself.

④⁴ There, protection belongs to God, the Real. He is best in reward and best in requital.

42–44 His fruit was encompassed—that is, by ruin—meaning either that he lost all his wealth or that his garden was destroyed unexpectedly as his believing brother had warned him in vv. 40–41 (IK, JJ). Upon seeing this he began to wring his hands as a gesture of remorse and regret (IK, R). Despite the disbeliever’s earlier boasts that he was stronger in men than his brother (v. 34), in this state of ruin he finds himself without any party to help him apart from God, as he is helpless by himself (see also 28:81).

Some commentators note that vv. 43–44 can be punctuated differently to read, “And he had no party to help him apart from God, nor could he help himself there. Protection belongs to God,” so that “there” is an adverb describing the disbeliever’s helplessness rather than the state in which “protection belongs to God” (IK). Protection translates walāyah, and it belongs to God alone, ultimately, since God is the Walī, “Protector” (from the same root), particularly for the believers (see 2:257; 3:68; 5:55 and commentary). The Quran asserts often that there is no protector other than God (2:107, 120; 4:123, 173; 6:70).

Walāyah here can also be read as wilāyah, in which case it would mean “authority belongs to God” (IK). The two terms, walāyah and wilāyah, are written identically in an unvoweled Arabic text, and scholars differ over which pronunciation was intended in this verse (IK, Ṭ). Although the meaning of the two terms can overlap in ordinary usage, walāyah designates primarily a state of closeness, nearness, friendship, attachment, and protection. Wilāyah more commonly denotes a kind of authority that comes from one’s relationship to a higher authority—in political usage it may denote the authority of a local or provincial governor who has been appointed by the caliph or some other central authority; in mystical discourse, it refers to the state of Sufi saints who have acquired spiritual authority by virtue of their closeness to God, and thus have the power to initiate others into the mystical path.

The Real translates al-ḥaqq, which could also be rendered “the True” or “the Truth.” The Real or “the True” (al-Ḥaqq) is considered one of the ninety-nine Divine Names and is particularly favored as a reference to God in philosophical and mystical writings. Alternately, some suggest that al-ḥaqq in this verse can be read as an adjective describing protection, so that the verse could be rendered, “true protection belongs to God” (Bḍ).

④ Set forth for them a parable of the life of this world: [It is] like water We send down from the sky. Then it mixes with the vegetation of the earth. Then it becomes chaff, scattered by the winds. And God is capable of all things.

45 This parable recapitulates the moral lessons of the longer parable in vv. 32–44, namely, that the life of this world is dependent on Divine Beneficence, here in the form of water sent down from the sky. For a while life flourishes, as God's Power and Mercy allow vegetation to come forth; but He then allows it to become chaff, that is, lifeless matter scattered by the winds. This imagery evokes the gardens of the disbeliever in the earlier parable, which flourish seemingly without end through God's Provision, but then come to an abrupt end as a flat and barren plain. For similar parables, see also 39:21; 57:20.

④⑥ Wealth and children are the adornment of the life of this world, but that which endures—righteous deeds—are better in reward with thy Lord, and better [as a source of] hope.

④⑥ Wealth and children are the adornment of this world, because they are considered a source of status and security. However, the Quran makes it clear that these blessings are not necessarily indications of Divine Favor, that they cannot protect one from punishment in this world or the next (see 18:34c; 17:6c), and that like all other “adornments” in this world, they will ultimately pass away (see 18:7–8c). By contrast, righteous deeds “endure” in that they bring lasting reward in the Hereafter; see also 19:76: And that which endures—righteous deeds—are better in reward with thy Lord, and better in return.

④⑦ On the Day We will set the mountains in motion, and you will see the earth an open plain. And We will gather them, and leave not one of them behind.

④⑦ The mountains are referenced in several verses as a source of stability and support for the earth (see 16:19; 21:31; 31:30; and also 78:7, where they are described as stakes, in the sense of supports for a tent). Yet on the Last Day, or at the apocalypse, the mountains are described as being set . . . in motion (see also 27:88; 52:10; 78:20; 81:3); some understand this to mean that they will be removed from the earth (T, Z) or rendered nonexistent (R), or that they will be lifted from it and pass through the air like clouds (27:88; Q). Elsewhere, they are described as scattered (20:105; 77:10); pulverized to powder (56:5); ground up (69:14); like heaps of shifting sand (73:14); and as carded wool (70:9; 101:5) on the Last Day. With the mountains removed or leveled, the earth will then become an open plain with nothing to obstruct one's vision. Some say that it will be an open plain, because all trees and vegetation as well as all human constructions will be removed from it (Q, R, Ṭ). Open translates bārīzah, which comes from a root meaning “to come into clear view,” or “to emerge,” and some suggest that the reference here is to the emergence of the dead from their graves for the final gathering and judgment (R).

④8 They shall be arrayed before thy Lord in ranks. “Indeed, you have come unto Us as We created you the first time. Nay, but you claimed that We would never appoint a tryst for you.”

48 On the Day of Judgment, people will be arrayed . . . in ranks before God; commentators describe these ranks or rows as similar to those formed for prayer (Q) or around the Ka'bah in Makkah (R). Each rank or row is said to be occupied by a particular religious community (Q). This phrase may also be translated “arrayed . . . in a row,” that is, in a single line so that all are visible to one another (R).

On this Day people will come to God as He created them the first time, indicating that just as He created and gave life to people initially, so too does He have the power to give them new life on the Day of Resurrection. This is a repeated argument against those who believed in God as Creator, but denied His power to resurrect, as in 17:51: Then they will say, “Who will bring us back?” Say, “He Who originated you the first time”; see also 36:79; 41:21. That people will come to God on this Day as He created them the first time could also mean they come to Him in the same state as that in which He initially created them, that is, alone, bare, and without any worldly support (Q, Z), as in 6:94: And [God will say], “Now you have come unto Us alone, just as We created you the first time, and you have left behind that which We had bestowed upon you; see also 19:80. This verse is a response to those who, like the prominent Makkans, considered themselves superior to those who did not enjoy the same wealth and social standing, indicating that all such worldly distinctions will be absent on that Day (R). The tryst refers to the time when the Resurrection and Gathering of which the prophets warned will come to pass (Z).

④9 And the Book will be set down. Then thou wilt see the guilty fearful of what is in it. And they will say, “Oh, woe unto us! What a book this is! It leaves out nothing, small or great, save that it has taken account thereof.” And they find present [therein] whatsoever they did. And thy Lord wrongs no one.

49 The Book here refers not to the Quran or sacred scripture in general, but to the record of deeds done in life that all will receive on the Day of Judgment. That this book serves as a comprehensive witness to human deeds is also mentioned in 10:61; 34:3–4; 36:12; 45:29–30. Elsewhere this book is described as being written by noble guardians, understood to mean angels (82:10–12), and fastened as an omen upon the neck of every human being (17:13). It is given to some in their right hand, which portends a favorable judgment, and to some in their left, which portends punishment (69:18–25; 84:7–11); see also 83:7–9, 18–20.

The guilty express regret for having squandered their lives (IK) and are fearful of the book that leaves out nothing, and in which they find all of their deeds, good and bad, small and great recorded. They fear both punishment from God and disgrace in the eyes of other people (R), for the book now openly reveals those evil deeds that may have been hidden from others during earthly life. That the Lord wrongs no one in the process of judgment is mentioned throughout the Quran, for the punishment meted out to individuals on this Day will be only for what their own hands have sent forth (3:182; 8:51; 22:10), that is, the deeds they freely chose to commit. Furthermore, a ḥadīth states that God will place no one in either the Garden or the Fire until all accounts between human beings are fairly settled, and all that is due to the people headed for the Fire, even from those destined for the Garden, has been rendered and vice versa (IK). Reading this verse together with v. 47 makes clear the point that human beings have no escape from judgment for their actions, for God will leave not one of them behind (v. 47) on the Day of Resurrection, and there they will confront a record of their deeds that leaves out nothing, a point emphasized by the use of the same verb, ghādhara, to mean “leave behind” or “leave out.”

50 When We said unto the angels, “Prostrate before Adam,” they prostrated, save Iblīs. He was of the jinn and he deviated from the command of his Lord. Will you then take him and his progeny as protectors apart from Me, though they are an enemy unto you? How evil an exchange for the wrongdoers!

50 The reference to the command given to the angels and Iblīs to prostrate before Adam is part of the fuller account of the creation and fall of Adam found elsewhere in the Quran; see 2:30–39; 7:11–25; 15:28–43; 17:61–65; 20:115–24; 38:71–85 (see also commentary on 2:35–37; 7:19–25). The account is briefly referenced here as a further admonition to the wealthy and proud Makkans, reminding them that Iblīs’s refusal to prostrate before Adam was based similarly on pride and a false sense of superiority to Adam (R). That all the angels prostrated, save Iblīs, suggests that Iblīs himself was among the angels, although immediately after this statement Iblīs is identified as of the jinn. This has given rise to a debate among Islamic scholars as to whether Iblīs should be classified as an angel or a jinn; see 2:30c. Some say the fact that Iblīs is identified as a jinn immediately after the reference to his failure to prostrate before Adam in this verse is an explanation of that act; that is, if he were an angel, he would have bowed, since angels are protected against any disobedience toward God (see 21:27), but because Iblīs was a jinn, he refused to do so and thus deviated from the command of his Lord (Z). Others hold that he was indeed an angel, perhaps the head of the angels, but after his disobedience he was transformed from an angel into a satan (Satan is the name used to refer to him after his disobedience) and thus into a jinn (Z). His progeny refers to the evil jinn and the satans mentioned elsewhere in the Quran who, like him, seek to lead human beings astray. That some people take Satan or his minions as protectors apart from God—meaning that they obey them instead of God (Z)—is also mentioned in 7:30: Some He has rightly guided, and some are deserving of error. Truly they took satans as their protectors apart from God and deem them rightly guided (cf. 4:119). They are the enemies of human beings, like Satan himself, who is repeatedly described as a manifest enemy (see, e.g., 2:208; 6:142; 7:22; 12:5; 17:53; 28:15). The evil exchange is the exchange of God’s true protection (see 18:42–44c) for the illusory “protection” of Satan (see 14:22c).

51 I did not make them witnesses to the creation of the heavens and the earth, nor to their own creation. And I take not those who lead astray as a support.

51 That God did not make the satans witnesses to the creation of the heavens and the earth indicates that, since the satans were not partners with God in creation, it is illogical to consider them as partners with God in being worshipped (Z); cf. 10:28; 13:16. That they were not witness even to their own creation emphasizes that they are themselves mere creatures (R).

52 On the Day when He says, “Call those whom you claimed as My partners,” they will call upon them, but they will not respond to them, and We will place a gulf between them.

52 This is one of several verses according to which on the Day of Judgment God will challenge those who ascribed partners to Him in earthly life to call upon their “partners” (see, e.g., 6:22; 16:27; 28:62) to intercede for them or to help them (R), but only as a means of rebuke, for those partners will abandon them, dissociate from them, or be unable to help them in any way (e.g., 6:94; 10:28; 16:86; 28:63). The gulf (mawbiq) between them may refer to a place of destruction (IK, Q, R, Ṭ) or a valley of Hell into which those who ascribed partners to God will be cast (IK, Q, R, Ṭ). Others suggest that mawbiq may refer here to the enmity that will manifest itself between the idolaters and the partners they ascribed to God on the Day of Judgment (R, Ṭ, Z). Still others interpret the gulf between them as referring to the vast intermediate expanse (barzakh) in the Hereafter between those who considered the angels to be partners to God (as did the Makkan idolaters) and the angels themselves, for the former will be in the depths of Hell and the latter in the highest reaches of the celestial realm (R, Z).

53 The guilty will see the Fire, and know they shall fall into it, but they will find no means of escape therefrom.

53 That the guilty know they shall fall into it means that they are certain that it is their destiny (R, Z). Know here translates ẓannū, which can also mean merely to think or suppose something to be the case. Al-Rāzī therefore suggests that the verse may also mean that the guilty see the Fire while it is still far away; yet they think that it is near because of the intensity with which they can hear its raging and roaring (25:12), and they fear that they will fall into it at that moment. In either case, they cannot escape; that is, they have no means of changing their course, since they are being driven forward by the angels (R); see 37:1–3c; 50:21c. See also 19:86, where the guilty are driven into Hell as a thirsty herd; and 39:71, where the disbelievers are driven unto Hell in throngs; as well as 41:19.

54 And indeed We have employed every kind of parable for mankind in this Quran. And man is the most contentious of beings.

54 For the statement that the Quran contains every kind of parable for mankind—that is, for the moral and religious instruction of human beings—see 17:89c; 30:58; 39:27. Human beings are contentious, vainly opposing and arguing against the prophets and messengers sent to them (Ṭ) on the basis of false ideas (Bḍ); see v. 56, and also 16:4, where human beings are described as a manifest adversary, and the commentary.

55 And naught prevents men from believing when guidance comes unto them, and from seeking forgiveness of their Lord, save that [they await] the wont of those of old to come upon them, or the punishment to come upon them face-to-face.

55 People wait for the wont of those of old to come upon them; that is, they wait to see if the same worldly destruction that befell earlier peoples will be visited upon them as well (Z); cf. 16:33; 43:86; 47:18. Elsewhere, the Quran suggests that similar destruction may well be imminent, for God does not change His way of dealing with disbelievers; see 35:43: So do they await aught but the wont of those of old? Thou shalt find no alteration in the wont of God, and thou shalt find no change in the wont of God. The punishment that may come upon them face-to-face likely refers to punishment in the Hereafter (Z). Face-to-face translates qubulan, which may also mean “suddenly” (Ṭ), as this is the manner in which Divine Punishment is often said to come upon people (see, e.g., 6:44; 7:95; 26:202). It is also possible to read this word with alternate vowelings as qabalan, meaning “in the future” (Z).

56 And We send not the messengers, save as bearers of glad tidings and as warners. And those who disbelieve dispute falsely in order to refute the truth thereby. They take My signs and that whereof they were warned in mockery.

56 The term messengers here translates mursalīn and so denotes all message bearers from God, including both messengers (rusul) and prophets (anbiyāʾ). The messengers were sent both as bearers of glad tidings and as warners (cf. 2:213; 4:165; 6:48). The same is said of the Prophet Muhammad specifically in 2:119; 7:188; 11:2; 17:105; 25:56; 33:45; 34:28. The disbelievers not only dispute the truth, but they also mock the signs and warnings they have been given, which commentators note is the worst kind of denial (IK) and an attitude that manifests their profound ignorance and hardness of heart (R). Other verses speak of those who take God's signs or religion itself in mockery (2:231; 5:57; 45:9, 35).

57 And who does greater wrong than one who has been reminded of the signs of his Lord, then turns away from them and forgets that which his hands have sent forth? Surely We have placed coverings over their hearts, such that they understand it not, and in their ears a deafness. Even if thou callest them to guidance, they will never be rightly guided.

57 The rhetorical question beginning Who does greater wrong than is repeated throughout the Quran, often in relation to those who deny God's signs; see 32:22, where the identical question is posed, as well as 6:21; 7:37; 10:17; 29:68; 39:32. Regarding God's placing coverings over their hearts . . . and in their ears a deafness, see commentary on the identical statement in 6:25, and on a similar statement in 2:7. Those who are spiritually "covered" or "deaf" are impervious to the guidance offered by God's signs; thus, even if they are called to guidance, it will have no effect. See also 2:6: Truly it is the same for the disbelievers whether thou warnest them or warnest them not; they do not believe.

58 And thy Lord is Forgiving, Possessed of Mercy. Were He to take them to task for that which they have earned, He would have hastened the punishment for them. Nay, but theirs is a tryst, beyond which they shall find no refuge.

58 Similar warnings about God's ability to take the disbelievers to task for that which they have earned are found in 16:61 and 35:45, although in those verses the warning is that if God were to do so, He would not leave a single creature upon the earth; see 35:45c. In the present verse, God does not take the disbelievers to task immediately, because He is Forgiving and Possessed of Mercy. Rather, He leaves them be until their tryst, referring to the appointed time for their death or destruction, in order to give them time to repent and mend their ways. According to some, this verse is understood to be a warning to the disbelievers in Makkah specifically, whom God did not punish immediately despite their extreme enmity toward the Prophet (R, Z). The tryst appointed for their destruction may refer either to their coming to judgment on the Day of Resurrection (R) or to the Battle of Badr (2/624; R, Z), during which many Makkans, including several prominent opponents of the Prophet, were killed. Beyond or after this tryst has arrived, they shall find no refuge or means of deliverance from God's Punishment (R, Z).

59 And those towns, We destroyed them for the wrong they did, and We set a tryst for their destruction.

59 The Quran refers repeatedly to the destruction of whole towns as a result of their disbelief and wrongdoing. All such references are found in Makkan *sūrah*s and it is widely understood that these were intended as warnings for the Quraysh of Makkah; see 6:131; 7:96; 11:100–102; 28:59; 46:26–27. That God has set a tryst for their destruction means that He has appointed a specific time, known only to Him, for their punishment, and it cannot be advanced or delayed; see 34:30, where the Prophet is instructed to warn the Makkans, saying, Yours shall be the tryst of a Day that you cannot delay by a single hour, nor advance.

60 And when Moses said unto his servant, “I shall continue on till I reach the junction of the two seas, even if I journey for a long time.”

60–82 These verses contain the account of Moses and the mysterious “servant” he meets at the junction of the two seas (v. 60). This is the only account of Moses in the Quran that does not also have some reference in the Biblical text. The mysterious servant is not named in the Quran, but is identified by all commentators and by a ḥadīth of the Prophet as Khiḍr (or al-Khaḍir, the “Green One”). Khiḍr is considered widely to be a prophet who lives well beyond the ordinary span of a human lifetime and is indeed associated with eternal life or with what lies beyond or between the realms of life and death. This association with perpetual life and the contrast between Moses as the bringer of Divine exoteric law and Khiḍr as the possessor of an esoteric knowledge from God's Presence (v. 65) are the bases of the story's metaphysical and mystical richness and have made it the subject of much interpretation and elaboration in Islamic literature. In Sufism, Khiḍr is considered the prophet of initiation into Divine mysteries as well as a special spiritual guide from whom many, including the famous Sufi metaphysician Ibn ʿArabī (d. 638/1240), claimed to have received initiation.

With the other two major accounts in this sūrah—that of the youths of the cave in vv. 9–26 and that of Dhu'l-Qarnayn in vv. 83–98—this story shares the theme of intermediate realms: between life and death, between exoteric and esoteric knowledge, between the two seas, between the two mountain barriers (v. 93) lying between the eastern and western extremes reached by Dhu'l-Qarnayn.

The story of Moses and Khiḍr recounted in these verses has been read in many different ways. It provides one of the most dramatic demonstrations of God's power over life, death, and resurrection, a theme also found in the earlier account of the youths of the cave. But this story is also understood to be a symbolic account of the difference between formal and exoteric knowledge based upon revealed scripture or reason, on the one hand, and esoteric knowledge that comes directly from God, on the other; it is also a symbolic account of spiritual mastery and discipleship and of the different levels of the human soul and its spiritual training. Finally, the story indicates that God's Will is mysteriously operating through all events and actions and attests to the existence of a hidden interpretation (ta'wīl) of what one witnesses and experiences in this world—an interpretation known only to a few, like Khiḍr, who have been given this knowledge directly by God Himself. This knowledge may transcend the understanding of even a great prophet like Moses, who in this story represents the exoteric, or outward, dimension of religion.

60 Moses' servant is widely identified as Joshua (Q, R, Ṭ, Z). Servant translates fatā, which can also mean simply a youth or a young man. In a ḥadīth, the Prophet instructed people to refer to their slaves or servants as my “young man” (fatā) or my “young woman” (fatāt; Q, R, Z) rather than as “my slave” or “my servant”; in this case, the term refers to the fact that the younger Joshua followed Moses, served him, and gained knowledge from him (Z). The relationship between Moses and Joshua is one in which Moses is the master and Joshua the disciple, and it is Moses who sets the goals and parameters for their journey, saying I shall continue . . . even if I journey for a long time. Eventually, when Moses meets Khiḍr, Moses will become the disciple to the master, Khiḍr, while Khiḍr himself is a servant only to God (see v. 65, where Khiḍr is described as a servant from among Our servants).

Moses is seeking the junction of the two seas (majma^c al-baḥrayn). In the Quran, the two seas are understood in the most literal sense to refer to the freshwater of rivers and the saltwater of the seas (25:53). The Quran mentions the point where the two meet as the site of an impenetrable “barrier” (barzakh or ḥājiz) set between them, in which the two types of water mingle, but neither transgresses beyond that into the other (cf. 25:53; 27:61; 55:19–20). Several commentators suggest possible locations for the junction of the two seas mentioned in this verse, although these suggestions tend to be vague or geographically impossible, such as the meeting point of the Persian sea (perhaps the Persian Gulf) and the Roman sea (likely a reference to the Mediterranean) or in Tangiers (R, Ṭ, Z). The geographical location, however, is ultimately immaterial to the story. Rather, Moses seeks this junction, because he was told that at this location he would meet one more knowledgeable than himself (Z). It is reported in a ḥadīth that Moses was once questioned by his people as to who was most knowledgeable, and he replied that he was. God was displeased by this, since Moses did not acknowledge Him as the source of all knowledge and therefore as the most knowledgeable, and He responded (through Gabriel) by telling Moses that there was a servant of God whose knowledge exceeded Moses’ own and that Moses would find this servant at the junction of the two seas (IK, Q, Z; for different versions of this story, see R).

Some commentators suggest that the two seas here refer to Moses and Khidr themselves as representatives of two “seas of knowledge” (R, Z). To the extent that this story is a symbolic narrative about knowledge, the two seas represent two kinds of knowledge. The freshwater rivers, with their linear and directional nature, symbolize rational thought and knowledge of the Divine Law that leads to salvation or to God, while the saltwater sea, with its vastness, unpredictable currents, and fathomless depth, symbolizes deep inner knowledge and the infinite and all-encompassing nature of Divine Knowledge, or the Divine Itself, which human beings cannot “penetrate” with linear or logical forms of knowing, just as the freshwater of the rivers cannot penetrate the barrier between the two seas. The two seas thus serve as a symbol of the different kinds of Divine Knowledge possessed by Moses and Khidr—Moses represents Divine Knowledge as manifested in Divine Law, and Khidr represents Divine Knowledge in direct and immediate form, the acquisition of which is the goal of the mystical path (see 18:65c). If this verse is read as an allegory for the nature of the soul, then the two seas can refer to the world of the spirit and the world of bodies (K), with the human soul representing the junction, or the meeting point, of these two realms.

61 Then when they reached the junction of the two, they forgot their fish, and it made its way to the sea, burrowing away.

61 Although Moses and his servant, Joshua, knew that they were seeking the junction of the two seas, the story suggests that they did not recognize this junction when they reached it and that it is at this point that they forgot their fish. They also lost their fish at this junction when it came back to life and made its way to the sea. The fact that the fish was revived in that place is an indication of Khiḍr’s presence there (Qu), insofar as Khiḍr represents life that transcends the limits of time—in both his “greening” effect upon his surroundings (see 18:65c) and his apparent agelessness.

It is reported that at one point in their journey, Moses and Joshua settled down to sleep by a rock near a spring referred to as the “spring of life” (IK, Q, Z), not knowing that this was indeed the junction between the two seas that they had been seeking. The fish they were carrying in a basket was said to have been a salted and preserved fish, and Moses and Joshua had already eaten from it (Q, Th, Z). Nonetheless, at this point the salted and partially eaten fish came in contact with the water from the spring and miraculously sprang back to life. The fish contacted the water either when Moses or Joshua accidentally splashed the fish with some water as they were making their ablutions for prayer (Q, R, Z) or when water from the stream, coming from the “spring of life,” flowed near the basket, reaching and reanimating the fish inside and eventually overturning the basket, allowing the fish to escape to the sea (Q). The fish is also described as burrowing away, making itself a tunnel to the sea. Although one might expect that such a tunnel to the sea would be filled with water flowing from the sea toward the opening of the tunnel, the commentators report that the water from the sea was miraculously held back from the tunnel, allowing the fish to travel through it to the sea (JJ, Q).

62 Then when they had passed beyond, he said to his servant, “Bring us our meal. We have certainly met with weariness on this journey of ours.”

62 Despite the miracle of the fish—unknown to Moses, and witnessed but forgotten by Joshua (see v. 63)—Moses and Joshua passed beyond that place to continue their journey. That Moses and Joshua “miss” the junction or do not recognize it for what it is can be explained by understanding that this junction represents a barzakh, a liminal place between two worlds or realms, which itself has no space or extension. Having left the junction and the spring of life, Moses began to experience hunger and weariness (K, Z); Moses thus asked his servant, Joshua, to bring them their meal, meaning the fish. Some suggest that God induced Moses' hunger in order to remind him of the fish (Ṭs) and so facilitate his return to the junction of the two seas.

If this story is read as a symbolic narrative for the soul in its journey away from God into worldly existence and then its journey back to God, one can say that while at the junction of the two seas, Moses was sustained like a child in the mother's womb, having no need to eat or struggle, and experiencing no hunger or weariness; but his passing beyond this point symbolizes the soul being born into worldly existence and its separation from its source of nourishment, and Moses, like the soul, is thus wearied by the new difficulties and needs that this birth entails (K).

63 He said, “Didst thou see? When we took refuge at the rock, indeed I forgot the fish—and naught made me neglect to mention it, save Satan—and it made its way to the sea in a wondrous manner!”

64 He said, “That is what we were seeking!” So they turned back, retracing their steps.

63–64 When asked for the fish, Joshua remembered having witnessed its miraculous escape to the sea. Didst thou see? is not meant as a question, for Joshua knew that Moses had not witnessed the loss of the fish; rather, this is Joshua's way of introducing the marvelous account to Moses (Ṭs).

Commentators note that Joshua, like Moses, knew that they were seeking the junction of the two seas—according to some reports, he even knew that losing their fish was to be a sign that they had reached their destination (JJ, R)—yet he fell asleep after witnessing the fish's escape and forgot the matter upon awakening. Joshua attempted to excuse his oversight by claiming it was Satan who had caused him to neglect to mention the matter of the fish to Moses (Q). But now, as Joshua recounts the matter of the fish to Moses, he marvels at it.

When Moses learned what had happened to the fish, he exclaimed, That is what we were seeking! as he immediately realized—or according to some accounts was apprised beforehand (R, Ṭ)—that the place where the fish was lost to the sea was precisely where he would meet the servant of God more knowledgeable than himself (see 18:60c). Moses thus knew that they must return to that place, so they turned back, retracing their steps. If the story is read as a symbolic narrative for the journey of the soul, Moses retracing his steps represents the spiritual journey back to God, reversing the “fall” into worldly existence and separation from God—a return to the first fiṭrah (see 30:30c), or primordial nature, in which the human being was created (K).

65 There they found a servant from among Our servants whom We had granted a mercy from Us and whom We had taught knowledge from Our Presence.

65 The servant from among Our servants is identified by all commentators as Khiḍr on the basis of aḥādīth (IK, Q). He was said to have been given the name Khiḍr (or al-Khāḍir, “the Green One”) because wherever he prayed or stood, everything around him became green (Q, R, Th), that is, renewed with life; and in Islamic art forms, such as Persian miniatures, Khiḍr is always portrayed as wearing green.

Khiḍr is widely considered a prophet (Q, R), although some say that he was just a righteous servant of God or an angel (Q). Commentators put forward several arguments in support of Khiḍr’s being a prophet, however, including that he was given direct and unmediated knowledge from God, which is the mark of prophethood (R), and that Moses followed him and sought knowledge from him, suggesting that, at least in some ways, Khiḍr was superior to Moses, and none can be superior to a prophet save another prophet (Q, R). Moreover, in v. 82, Khiḍr states that the various acts that he performs, which are shocking to Moses, are not acts that he did upon his own command, indicating that he did them upon God’s Command, another mark of prophethood, as in 21:27: They precede Him not in speech, and they act according to His Command. Finally, some commentators observe that the inner meaning of acts and events known by Khiḍr (see vv. 78–82) can only be known through Divine revelation, such as is received by the prophets alone (Q).

According to one report, when they returned to the junction of the two seas, Moses found Khiḍr seated or lying on a green carpet upon the water and enshrouded in his robe, and Moses offered him greetings of peace (Q). Various accounts report that Khiḍr removed the part of the robe covering his face and asked, “Is there peace in your land? Who are you?” after which Moses introduced himself (Q, Th); in another account, Khiḍr immediately recognized Moses and greeted him as the “prophet of the Children of Israel” (Q). Some consider Khiḍr to have been alive at the time of the legendary Persian hero and king Afarīdūn (Faraydūn), and at the beginning of the time of Dhu’l-Qarnayn (whose story follows immediately upon this one), as well as during the time of Moses (Z). Khiḍr remains an important figure in Islamic thought, particularly among Sufi practitioners, some of whom consider him to be an eternal and mysterious mystical master who still guides or even initiates certain people into the Sufi path through dreams and visions.

In the present verse, Khiḍr is said to have been granted a mercy from God, which many understand as a reference to prophethood (Q, R, Z) or to a kind of spiritual perfection that allows him to remain completely unencumbered by base matter (K), bestowing upon him perpetual life. He has also been taught knowledge from Our Presence (‘ilm min ladunnā), which is widely understood to mean knowledge of the Unseen, which lies only with God (JJ, Q, Z). It is an esoteric knowledge of the inner realities of things and of universal truths revealed directly to him (K, Q) without the intermediary of a human teacher (K, R, Su)—acquired through Divine inspiration rather than through human effort (Qu). Invoking the Arabic terminology in this verse, Abū Ḥāmid al-Ghazzālī and other Sufis often refer to the knowledge that can be acquired only through Divine “unveiling” (‘ilm al-mukāshafah) as “knowledge from God’s Presence” (‘ilm ladunī; R), and the Baghdādī Sufi master Junayd (d. 297/910) referred to Khiḍr’s knowledge as the “unveiling of lights from the recesses of the Unseen” (Su). The description of Khiḍr receiving both “a mercy from God” and “knowledge from His Presence” echoes the supplication of the youths of the cave in v. 10, where they pray to God seeking mercy from Thy Presence.

Khiḍr told Moses that God had given him knowledge that He had not given to Moses, but also that Moses had also been given knowledge that God had not given to him (i.e., Khiḍr; see IK, R, Z on 18:60); hence the reference to Moses and Khiḍr as representing “two seas” of knowledge (see 18:60c). The Sufi commentator al-Sulamī says in his commentary on 18:66 that although Moses was more knowledgeable than Khiḍr in what Moses had taken from God, Khiḍr was more knowledgeable in other ways; and although Moses “subsisted” in the truth, Khiḍr was annihilated in it, referring to the two spiritual stations that Sufis describe as “subsistence in God” (baqā’) and annihilation in God (fanā’). Yet for all of the knowledge between them, Khiḍr is reported to have said to Moses, as he watched a sparrow by the water: “My knowledge or your knowledge, compared with the Knowledge of God, is naught but the small amount of water the sparrow takes in its beak” (IK, Th).

66 Moses said unto him, “Shall I follow thee, that thou mightest teach me some of that which thou hast been taught of sound judgment?”

66 Upon encountering Khiḍr, Moses immediately asks, Shall I follow thee, that thou mightest teach me? which reveals Moses’ genuine quest for inner knowledge for its own sake, his lack of pride, and his willingness to humble himself before one more knowledgeable than himself despite his own status as a prophet (R). In light of the previous account of the youths of the cave, in which the Jews told the Makkans that they could determine whether Muhammad was a legitimate prophet by testing his knowledge of the youths and their story, al-Rāzī observes in his commentary on 18:60 that the account of Moses and Khiḍr makes it clear that even great prophets, such as Moses, do not possess all knowledge, for above every possessor of knowledge is a knower (12:76). Moses therefore demonstrates the proper attitude one should have when encountering those who know more than oneself, namely, an attitude of humility and a sincere desire to learn from them. Moses’ attitude and behavior also serve as a moral rebuke to the idolatrous Makkans, whose arrogance and rejection of the revelation brought by the Prophet contrast sharply with Moses’ humility and sincerity upon encountering Khiḍr. Moses requests specifically to be taught some of that which Khiḍr had been taught of sound judgment; in v. 10, the youths of the cave also pray to God to grant them sound judgment in their affairs.

67 He said, “Truly thou wilt not be able to bear patiently with me.

68 And how canst thou bear patiently that which thou dost not encompass in awareness?”

67–68 Khiḍr’s response, Thou wilt not be able to bear patiently with me, is not merely a protest, but a statement of truth and a foreshadowing of Moses and Khiḍr’s parting in v. 78. Moses cannot bear patiently with Khiḍr, because Moses has been sent as a prophet of the Divine Law, while Khiḍr has been entrusted with some acts that seem outwardly to be contrary to that Law, but possess an inner significance. Knowing this, Khiḍr warns that both he and Moses have been entrusted with a particular, but distinct or even apparently contradictory spiritual vocation, and that Moses therefore cannot be his companion (IK, Ṭs), at least not for very long. Like the water of the two seas that briefly comingle at the junction, or barzakh, between them, Moses and Khiḍr can travel together for a short period of time, but ultimately each must go his separate way so that the one prophet does not compromise the mission of the other. Khiḍr asks, How canst thou bear patiently that which thou dost not encompass in awareness? for, according to other verses, what one encompasses of Divine Knowledge is a matter of God’s Will and choosing, as in 2:255: And they encompass nothing of His Knowledge, save what He wills. In this narrative, Moses has only been taught what is just and righteous with regard to the outward and apparent reality of things, and he has no knowledge of the Unseen—a knowledge that has been granted to Khiḍr (K). Moses, unlike Khiḍr, is bound by time and the limits of the material body, which according to some Sufi commentators, is what veiled him from knowledge of the unseen realities and spiritual truths that had been granted to Khiḍr (K), who in his agelessness appears free of the body’s encumbrance and decay.

69 He said, “Thou wilt find me patient, if God wills, and I shall not disobey thee in any matter.”

70 He said, “If thou wouldst follow me, then question me not about anything, till I make mention of it to thee.”

69–70 Moses affirms, Thou wilt find me patient, because of the strength of Moses’ preparedness to receive this knowledge and the sincerity of his seeking (K), but he adds the qualification if God wills, acknowledging that all future events depend on God’s Will (Q, Ṭs). See vv. 23–24, where the Prophet Muhammad is advised never to promise anything in the future without acknowledging God’s Will in the matter. Khiḍr instructs Moses, as a condition of allowing Moses to follow him, Question me not about anything, till I make mention of it. Al-Qushayrī observes that Khiḍr’s request indicates the proper etiquette that a student should demonstrate toward a teacher or a disciple toward a master (Qu). Having placed his trust in Khiḍr as his guide, it is for Moses only to follow his teacher’s path; it is not for him to seek out spiritual truths until the teacher has determined that the time has come for them (K, R). Khiḍr’s words also suggest the etiquette of a teacher or master toward a disciple: the master assumes the responsibility for taking into account the needs and capabilities of the student for a particular teaching (R).

71 So they went on till, when they had embarked upon a ship, he made a hole therein. He said, “Didst thou make a hole in it in order to drown its people? Thou hast done a monstrous thing!”

71 Moses and Khiḍr boarded a ship whose owner reportedly recognized Khiḍr as a prophet and therefore allowed them to ride without charge (IK, Th, Z). Khiḍr then made a hole in the ship, nearly sinking it, which outraged Moses. If this account is interpreted as a symbolic narrative for the journey of the soul, the ship may then symbolize the body, which carries individuals across the sea of material existence and allows them to perform acts of worship; Khiḍr’s breaking the ship can thus represent the manner in which the hold of the body upon the soul may be “broken” through spiritual exercises and asceticism (K).

72 He said, “Did I not say unto thee that thou wouldst not be able to bear patiently with me?”

73 He said, “Take me not to task for having forgotten, nor make me suffer much hardship on account of what I have done.”

72–73 Khiḍr reminded Moses of his warning that Moses would not be able to bear patiently with him, which is a warning that one’s resolve must be stronger if one is to follow such a path (K). Moses’ asking not to be taken to task for having forgotten his promise not to question Khiḍr recalls 2:286, where the believers pray, Our Lord, take us not to task if we forget or err!

74 So they went on till they met a young boy, and he slew him. He said, “Didst thou slay a pure soul who had slain no other soul? Thou hast certainly done a terrible thing!”

74 Journeying farther, Moses and Khiḍr encountered a young boy whom Khiḍr killed, reportedly by striking him in the head with a stone (IK). Moses was outraged that Khiḍr would slay a pure soul, that is, a young, innocent boy who had slain no other soul or even committed a major sin (IK). Such a slaying is completely contrary to the Divine Law brought by Moses; see 5:32, We prescribed for the Children of Israel that whosoever slays a soul—unless it be for another soul or working corruption upon the earth—it is as though he slew mankind all together. Moses considered this act to be worse than what Khiḍr had done before (IK). From a mystical perspective, the slain boy represents the soul that inclines toward evil and is “slain” when one overcomes the anger and other negative passions within oneself (K).

75 He said, “Did I not say unto thee that thou wouldst not be able to bear patiently with me?”

76 He said, “If I question thee concerning aught after this, then keep my company no more. Thou hast attained sufficient excuse from me.”

75–76 Khiḍr repeated his warning about Moses’ inability to be patient, and Moses was again contrite. His statement If I question thee . . . after this, then keep my company no more, like Khiḍr’s warning, also anticipates the ultimate parting of ways between Moses and Khiḍr in v. 78. Thou hast attained sufficient excuse from me is Moses’ acknowledgment that he has already given Khiḍr sufficient justification to leave his company, since Moses had twice violated Khiḍr’s demand that he not ask questions.

77 So they went on till they came upon the people of a town and sought food from them. But they refused to show them any hospitality. Then they found therein a wall that was about to fall down; so he set it up straight. He said, “Hadst thou willed, thou couldst have taken a wage for it.”

77 The people of the town, which some speculate may have been Antioch or Eilat (R), refused to show them any hospitality. As they were leaving, Khiḍr stopped to repair a wall that was leaning. Moses had promised to ask no further questions, but his statement Hadst thou willed, thou couldst have taken a reward for it contains an implicit question about why Khiḍr sought no compensation for the good deed he had done for a town that had shown them no kindness. Moses' protest here led Khiḍr to declare their final parting (in v. 78). Commentators read a moral lesson into Moses' protest and Khiḍr's reaction, namely, that doing a good deed and then seeking worldly reward for it nullifies the spiritual merit of the good deed (Su). Spiritual virtue and perfection come from God and should be sought for their own sake, not for the sake of worldly reward (K). Some commentators also suggest that Moses' protest here was the last straw, because although Moses' earlier protests concerned the welfare of others (those on the ship, the young boy), his protest in this case arose from his own hunger and desire (Qu).

According to the interpretation of this account as a symbolic narrative for the journey of the soul, if the ship broken by Khiḍr represents the body "broken" by spiritual exercises and asceticism, and the slain boy represents the lower soul inclined to evil, which is slain by overcoming the passions, then the repaired wall symbolizes the "soul at peace" (al-naḥs al-muṭma'innah; see 89:27c), which can be restored through the perfecting of character and virtue once the bodily passions and the lower soul have been subdued (K).

78 He said, "This is the parting between thee and me. I shall inform thee of the meaning of that which thou couldst not bear patiently:

78 As suggested from the beginning of this account, the parting between Moses and Khiḍr is inevitable, for when Moses did not prove to be patient enough to refrain from questioning Khiḍr's actions, as Khiḍr predicted, Khiḍr no longer had the patience to keep company with Moses (Qu). The junction between these "two seas of knowledge" (see 18:60c), like the junction between the two physical seas, can only be a temporary meeting. Despite the brief intermingling of Moses, as representative of exoteric law and prophet of the Divine Word revealed in time, and Khiḍr, as representative of esoteric and timeless truth, the two prophets must carry out their vocations separately from one another—like the two seas, whose distinct natures as salty and fresh must remain separated, though they mingle at the barzakh. Yet al-Qushayrī states that although Moses desired to remain with Khiḍr and continue to learn from him, Khiḍr preferred to leave Moses' company, preferring solitude with God to the company of created beings.

Before their parting, however, Khiḍr offered to inform Moses of the meaning (taʿwīl), or hidden wisdom, of his actions (R), which Moses could not bear patiently. Taʿwīl is translated both here and in 3:7 simply as “interpretation,” but in later Islamic tradition this term is often used to refer to the inner or esoteric meaning of Quranic verses and aḥādīth—a usage of the term that seems to be supported by the statement in 3:7 that the taʿwīl of certain Quranic verses is known only to God (see 3:7c). If taʿwīl is understood here to signify inner or esoteric meaning, then Khiḍr’s use of this term suggests that there is a hidden or esoteric meaning to all phenomena and events as well as to what God has revealed in sacred scriptures—a meaning that is known only to God and those who, like Khiḍr, have been given knowledge from God’s Presence (v. 65). Although this verse marks the parting between Khiḍr and Moses, Khiḍr’s ability to share the taʿwīl of his actions with Moses indicates that Moses’ soul had been purified and strengthened enough for the reception of the spiritual meaning and the encounter with the Unseen that had been veiled from Moses up to this point and about which he was forbidden to ask (K).

79 As for the ship, it belonged to indigent people who worked the sea. I desired to damage it, for just beyond them was a king who was seizing every ship by force.

79 Khiḍr explained that his act of damaging the ship was actually a means of saving it, for a tyrannical king was seizing all sound vessels, and Khiḍr’s damage to the ship made it undesirable for the king and ultimately saved it for its owners. The moral lesson here may be that when forced to choose between two harmful things, one should choose the least harmful, for damaging the ship resulted in a lesser harm to its owners than having it seized from them permanently (R). Following the interpretation of this account as a symbolic narrative for the soul’s journey, al-Kāshānī suggests that Khiḍr’s damaging the ship symbolizes the “breaking” of the body through spiritual exercise and asceticism in order to prevent the body from being “seized” by the lower soul inclined to evil (K). That Khiḍr’s seemingly destructive act is ultimately a salvific one draws parallels with the casting of the infant Moses into the water in a basket—an act that may have seemed likely to result in his death, but one that is ultimately the means of his deliverance from Pharaoh’s tyrannical order to “seize” and kill every male Israelite child.

80 And as for the young boy, his parents were believers and we feared that he would make them suffer much through rebellion and disbelief.

81 So we desired that their Lord give them in exchange one who is better than him in purity, and nearer to mercy.

80–81 In these verses the slaying of the young boy is explained as a means of sparing his parents grief and distress over the rebellion and disbelief he would exhibit later in life. However, given that the boy is described as still very young, his parents would not yet have witnessed rebellion and disbelief from him and thus could only have considered his death a tragedy, not knowing what future difficulties God had spared them. Thus in connection with these verses, Ibn Kathīr quotes the ḥadīth, “God does not decree anything for a believer, save that it is better for him” (IK). Moses’ objection to Khiḍr’s slaying of the boy is based upon the religious law that forbids the killing of innocents, whereas Khiḍr’s explanation indicates that the slaying was commanded as an act of wisdom and ultimately of mercy on the part of the Omniscient God. The story also serves as a narrative demonstration of the difference between God’s Will for human beings as discerned through the prescriptive commands found in Sacred Law and revelation and His ultimate Will or Decree, which transcends human understanding. It thus serves as a source of meditation on the different levels of God’s Will and the relationship between Divine Will and human justice.

82 And as for the wall, it belonged to two orphan boys in the city, and beneath it was a treasure belonging to them. Their father was righteous, and thy Lord desired that they should reach their maturity and extract their treasure, as a mercy from thy Lord. And I did not do this upon my own command. This is the meaning of that which thou couldst not bear patiently.”

82 Khiḍr explained that the wall was about to fall in a place where the inherited treasure belonging to two orphans boys was buried. By repairing and straightening the wall, Khiḍr made it possible for the boys to access their treasure when they grew up. Although the treasure beneath the wall would seem to refer to wealth of some kind, commentators suggest that it might refer to some form of knowledge (IK, R) that had been hidden or “buried” for the boys to discover later, when they were capable of understanding it. This interpretation seems especially likely given the earlier mention of the hidden interpretation (taʿwīl) of Khiḍr’s actions, which, like the buried treasure, was obscured from Moses’ outward vision. Reading the story as an analogy for the soul, al-Kāshānī suggests that the repaired wall symbolizes the “soul at peace” (al-naḥs al-muḥmaʿinnah; 89:27; see also 18:77c), which can be “repaired” once the baser elements of the soul have been subdued. The treasure buried beneath the wall refers to spiritual knowledge (maʿrifah) buried within the heart, which can only be accessed once the soul has been rendered “at peace” and once intellectual faculties reach their maturity (K) and are free from the temptations of the body and the lower soul.

Khiḍr affirms that he did not act upon his own command, indicating that he was acting upon the Command or Will of God, which remains inscrutable to the human mind, even the mind of a prophet like Moses, without an explanation of the hidden meaning (taʿwīl) of phenomena, such as Khiḍr provides here. Reading the reference to Khiḍr’s taʿwīl of his actions in conjunction with the reference in 3:7 to a taʿwīl, or interpretation of revelation, known only to God and those firm in knowledge indicates that whatever one encounters, either in scripture or in the world, contains a meaning that is known only to God and perhaps to a very few of His “servants,” such as Khiḍr. That Khiḍr’s acts are done according to God’s Command, as Khiḍr suggests here, indicates further that the Will of God is manifest on one level in Divine Law (i.e., in His prescriptive commands for human beings), but on another level in all that He brings into being, including events and acts that on their surface seem to contradict the Divine Will as manifest in the Law.

Al-Rāzī comments that the judgments of the prophets are necessarily based upon the outward aspect of phenomena and events, citing the ḥadīth of the Prophet: “We judge according to the outward; and God is responsible for the inward [or secrets, sarāʾir]”; by contrast, Khiḍr’s judgments were based upon the true purposes of the phenomena and events. Yet after Moses had perfected the state of knowledge of the sharīʿah—that is, the Divine Law, as applied to outward phenomena—God sent him to Khiḍr in order to teach him knowledge on a more perfect, inward level. This indicates, for al-Rāzī, that the proper trajectory for religious knowledge is for people to move from a mastery of the science of sharīʿah, or Divine Law, which orders and judges according to the outward aspect of phenomena, to the science of the inward, which apprises one of the true realities of things (ḥaqāʾiq al-umūr; R).

83 And they question thee about Dhu'l-Qarnayn. Say, "I shall recite unto you a remembrance of him."

83 The story of Dhu'l-Qarnayn, "the man whose travels encompassed the east and the west," is one of the matters about which the Makkans questioned the Prophet on the advice of some Jewish scholars, whose counsel the Makkans had sought in trying to determine the truth of Muhammad's prophethood; see the introduction to this sūrah. According to one report, some of the People of the Book came to the Prophet directly to ask him about Dhu'l-Qarnayn (Ṭ).

A ḥadīth identifies Dhu'l-Qarnayn as a youth from Rūm (i.e., from the western lands) who built the Egyptian city of Alexandria (Ṭ, Ṭs), in other words, the Greek Alexander son of Philip (R), widely known as Alexander the Great. Although he is most widely identified with Alexander in traditional Muslim commentaries, some Islamic scholars of the modern period have identified him with the ancient Persian king Cyrus the Great (Ṭb). According to a ḥadīth, Dhu'l-Qarnayn was visited by an angel who ascended with him through the sky until he could see the whole of the earth and the fathomless sea that surrounds the world (Q, Ṭ). Some consider him to be simply a righteous servant of God to whom God granted sovereignty over the world along with knowledge and wisdom (R, Z). Others suggest that he was a prophet (R, Ṭs, Z) or an angel (R, Z). He is described as one who loved God and whom God loved (Ṭ, Ṭs). The clouds, and even light and darkness themselves, were said to have been placed at his service, so that if he traveled by night, a guiding light would illuminate the path before him, while darkness would protect him from behind (R, Z).

Much speculation and legend surrounds the meaning of his name or title, Dhu'l-Qarnayn (lit. "he of the two horns"). Some suggest that he had on his head what appeared to be two horns (R, Ṭ, Ṭs, Z); after calling people to the One God, he was struck in the right horn and killed, but then resurrected by God; then he was struck in the left horn, died (Ṭ), and, according to some, was resurrected again (R, Z). Other accounts say this name refers to his being the king of both Rūm and Persia (Ṭ, Z); or according to a ḥadīth, it refers to his journeys, which are said to have circled around both "horns" of the earth—the east and the west (R, Ṭs, Z). Some report that he had a dream in which he drew near to the sun until he seized in his grasp the eastern and western horns of it, and after that the people referred to him as Dhu'l-Qarnayn (R, Ṭs). Still others mention that the two sides of his head were made of copper (R, Ṭ, Z), or that he wore a headdress or helmet with two horns at the side (R, Z). Finally, some suggest that it was simply a title he was given as a way of indicating his bravery and fearlessness (R, Z). Some suggest that his name means that he lived for two centuries (qarnayn; Ṭs), although this is inconsistent with the historical Alexander, who died quite young.

84 Truly We established him in the land, and gave him the means to all things.

84 That God established Dhu'l-Qarnayn in the land means that He made the land smooth and easy for him (Ṭ, Ṭs), so that he could journey through it and bring it under his control with ease. God is also said to have given him the means to all things, which most understand to mean a knowledge of all things (Ṭ, Ṭs) as well as the power and the tools with which to acquire all that he desired (R, Ṭs, Z).

85 So he followed a means,

86 till when he reached the place of the setting sun, he found it setting in a murky spring, and there he found a people. We said, "O Dhu'l-Qarnayn! Thou mayest punish, or thou mayest treat them well."

85–86 Dhu'l-Qarnayn followed a means; that is, he journeyed along a path or a route (IK, Ṭ, Ṭs) between east and west (Ṭ), following landmarks and various stopping points (Ṭ). Since God gave Dhu'l-Qarnayn the means to all things (v. 84), al-Rāzī says that when he desired something, he would follow these means to attain it (R). That he found the sun setting in a murky spring is not understood literally by most commentators, but is rather thought to describe how the setting sun would appear to the human eye (IK, JJ, Ṭs): the westernmost point of the land known to Dhu'l-Qarnayn (if understood as referring to Alexander) was bordered by the ocean (IK, R), and as the sun set, it would appear to set into the distant reaches of the ocean, which would appear dark in the distance.

At this westernmost point, he found a people, according to legend, residing in a city of twelve thousand gates (IK, R). The context of the verse suggests that Dhu'l-Qarnayn found this people living in a state of disbelief (kufṛ) or idolatry (shirk; R, Ṭs). Thus God gave him the choice to either punish them, that is, slay them for their persistence in idolatry (R, Ṭs, Z), or treat them well, literally “take [a way of] kindness regarding them” (tattakhidha fīhim ḥusnan). This is understood to mean that he should call them to islām—that is, to submission to and worship of the One God—and should seek to guide them (Z), or that he should be generous and forgiving toward them (R). Dhu’l-Qarnayn chose to call them to islām, indicating that those who rejected his call would be punished (v. 87), while those who believed would receive a most beautiful reward (v. 88). That God spoke to him and instructed him directly in this way suggests that he received a form of Divine revelation (wahy), which supports the idea that he was a prophet (R, Ṭs), although others understand God’s instructions to him as having been communicated through inspiration (ilhām; Ṭs).

87 He said, “As for the one who has done wrong, we shall punish him. Then he shall be brought back to his Lord, whereupon He will punish him with a terrible punishment.

87 The one who has done wrong, in this context, refers to those who ascribed partners unto God (Ṭs) and persisted in disbelief (R) after having been called to monotheistic belief by Dhu’l-Qarnayn (IK). We shall punish him refers to their being slain in this life as punishment for their disbelief (R, Ṭs), and the terrible punishment mentioned later in the verse refers to the disbelievers’ punishment in the Hereafter (Ṭs).

88 But as for the one who believes and works righteousness, he shall have a reward, that which is most beautiful, and we shall speak unto him that which is easy from our command.”

88 The one who believes and work righteousness refers to those who do so after Dhu’l-Qarnayn calls the people to monotheistic worship (IK). Both faith and good deeds are requirements for entry into the paradisaal Garden, as is repeated in dozens of verses (e.g., 2:25; 3:57; 4:57; 5:9; 7:42; 19:60; 28:80; 34:37). Have a reward, that which is most beautiful may mean that the reward itself is that which is most beautiful (R); see, for example, 3:148; 4:95; 10:26; 13:18; 18:2, where the reward of the believers and the virtuous is described as beautiful. Some also suggest that it may mean “have a reward [for the deed] which is most beautiful” (R, Z); this “most beautiful” deed may refer to the utterance of the testimony of God’s Oneness (shahādah; Z) or to “believing and working righteousness” (R). That Dhu’l-Qarnayn will speak unto them that which is easy from our command may mean that he will only impose the requirements of mandatory charity and land tax (zakāh and kharāj) to a degree and in a manner that is easy for them to fulfill (R, Z); or it may simply mean that he will treat them with kindness (IK).

89 Then he followed a means,

90 till he reached the place of the rising sun. He found it rising over a people for whom We had not made any shelter from it.

89–90 For followed a means, that is, a path, see 18:85–86c. When Dhu’l-Qarnayn came to the place of the rising sun, that is, the easternmost point of human civilization, he found a people for whom We had not made any shelter from it, that is, from the sun. Commentators report that this people lived in a land with neither mountains nor trees for natural shade, nor buildings or other structures for shelter from the sun (Ṭ). Some suggested that the land could not sustain buildings (JJ, Z) or that these people had no knowledge of how to build structures (Ṭs). When the sun was on the ascendant, they sought refuge from its rays by either going into the water or burrowing in tunnels underground (Ṭ, Z); after the sun reached its highest point and began to set, they would emerge again (Ṭ, Z). Some say that Dhu’l-Qarnayn was given the same Divine mandate regarding this people as he was given for those in the region of the setting sun (v. 86; Ṭs).

91 Thus [it was], and We encompassed that which lay before him in awareness.

91 That God had full awareness of that which lay before Dhu’l-Qarnayn may be understood to mean that He had knowledge of these strange people whom Dhu’l-Qarnayn encountered (Ṭ). That which lay before him can also be taken to mean “that which was with him,” in which case God had knowledge of the armies, tools, and other means that Dhu'l-Qarnayn possessed (IK, Ṭs, Z).

92 Then he followed a means,

93 till he reached the place between the two mountain barriers. He found beyond them a people who could scarcely comprehend speech.

92–93 For followed a means, that is, a path, see 18:85–86c. The two mountain barriers are most widely reported by commentators to refer to the mountains of Armenia and Azerbaijan, which formed a “barrier” to lands and peoples lying farther north (R, Ṭ). In a place between the two mountain barriers, that is, in an opening between the mountains (Ṭ), he found a people dwelling on the near (or southern) side of the mountains. They could scarcely comprehend speech, meaning that they spoke a language they alone could understand and they could understand no other (Ṭs) or that they could only understand others with great difficulty or by means of gestures (R). Yet they spoke to Dhu'l-Qarnayn, and he understood them, perhaps, some suggested, because God gave him a special ability to understand their language, as He had given Solomon knowledge of the language of the birds (27:16; Ṭs), or because there was a translator (Ṭs).

94 They said, “O Dhu'l-Qarnayn! Truly Gog and Magog are workers of corruption in the land. Shall we assign thee a tribute, that thou mightest set a barrier between them and us?”

94 Gog and Magog translate Yaʿjūj and Maʿjūj, also called Yājūj (or Ājūj) and Mājūj elsewhere in Arabic literature (R, Ṭ). Commentators report that Gog and Magog are the offspring of Noah’s son Japheth (IK, Ṭs, Z); see Genesis 10:2, where Magog is listed as one of Japheth’s sons. Some have speculated that Gog and Magog were the ancestors or distant relatives of the Turks (IK, R, Ṭs, Z) or possibly the Daylamites (who hailed from regions to the north of Iran; R, Z), although such speculations seem to be based upon the rather fearsome reputation these two peoples had as warriors for medieval Muslims. Some suggest that Yaʿjūj or Ājūj may derive from taʿajjuj, meaning to ignite a fire, and Maʿjūj from mawj, referring to the waves of the sea (R)—both of which may be destructive forces. Gog and Magog are also mentioned in the Hebrew scriptures and in the New Testament as forces of destruction: in Ezekiel 38:2, the prophet Ezekiel is told to prophesy against Gog, of the land of Magog, who would attack Israel; and in Revelation 20:8, Gog and Magog refer to the nations that Satan will rouse to fight with him in the end times.

A ḥadīth describes Gog and Magog as huge in size (Ṭs), although other speculative reports describe them variously as very small in stature or very large (R), with the claws and teeth of wild beasts (R); each male among them was said to beget a thousand offspring, all of whom bear arms and eat from every manner of beast on the earth (Ṭs). They are described as workers of corruption, a term used throughout the Quran to indicate spiritual corruption as well as violent and wicked behavior on the earth, see 2:11–12c; 5:33c. That Gog and Magog were workers of corruption is said to mean that they used to devour people (R, Ṭ) as well as all the food and resources of the land (R, Ṭs, Z), and that the people had suffered much torment and slaughter from them (Ṭs, Z). The people of this region thus offered Dhu'l-Qarnayn a tribute, that is, some form of payment for setting up the barrier between themselves and Gog and Magog (Ṭs).

According to another interpretation, this verse refers to Gog and Magog working corruption on earth at a later point, near the time of the approach of the Hour (Ṭ, Ṭs), and their appearance is mentioned in conjunction with eschatological events as described in the Ḥadīth and other Islamic sources. Esoterically or symbolically, Gog and Magog may be identified with the various negative and destructive developments in the human psyche and religious culture that Islamic tradition foretells as coming about near the end times, when the traditional barriers against such tendencies have been weakened or broken. See also 21:96–97, which refers to the future destruction Gog and Magog will wreak at this time: Till the time when Gog and Magog are unleashed, and they rush down from every hill, and the true promise draws nigh.

95 He said, “That wherewith my Lord has established me is better; so aid me with strength. I shall set a rampart between you and them.

95 Dhu'l-Qarnayn responded, That wherewith my Lord has established me is better, indicating that God had given him such great wealth and expanse of land that he had no need of what they could offer him (R, Ṭs) and that he would provide this service simply for the sake of righteousness and doing good (IK). Al-Rāzī and Ibn

Kathīr note that the response is similar to that of Solomon in 27:36 when given gifts by the Queen of Sheba: Do you offer me wealth? What God has given me is better than what He has given you. Dhu'l-Qarnayn did, however, ask the people to aid him with strength, meaning to provide him with able-bodied men and the tools and materials to assist him in making the barrier (IK, R, Ṭs).

96 Bring me pieces of iron.” Then, when he had leveled the two cliffs, he said, “Blow!” till when he had made it fire, he said, “Bring me molten copper to pour over it.”

97 Thus they were not able to surmount it, nor could they pierce it.

96–97 Dhu'l-Qarnayn leveled the two cliffs by filling in the gap between them with the pieces, or ingots, of iron (JJ, Ṭs). With the command Blow! he ordered them to blow fire on iron pieces now filling the mountain opening until the heap of iron was itself intensely hot or flaming (JJ, Ṭs). He then poured molten copper, or alternately molten brass or iron, over the burning iron barrier to fill in the holes between the iron pieces (JJ, Ṭs) and form a solid wall (Ṭs), which Gog and Magog were unable to surmount from above or breach from below (Ṭs). Although most commentators locate these mountains and the opening between them in the regions of Armenia and Azerbaijan, some say the two mountains were located near where the Roman (Mediterranean) sea meets the (Atlantic) ocean (Ṭs).

98 He said, “This is a mercy from my Lord. And when the Promise of my Lord comes, He will crumble it to dust. And the Promise of my Lord is true.”

98 Dhu'l-Qarnayn declared that this barrier he had constructed, or else the ability to construct it (R), was a mercy from his Lord to hold back the terrors of Gog and Magog from the people. He also said that when the Promise of the Lord comes—that is, with the onset of the events of the Hour, only after Jesus has killed the Antichrist, according to some (Ṭs), and as the time of Resurrection draws near (R)—God would crumble the barrier to dust and level it to the ground (Ṭs). This is similar to the Quranic descriptions of God's destruction of the mountains in general with the coming of the Hour; see 20:105; 56:5; 69:14; 70:9; 73:14; 77:10; 78:20; 81:3; 101:5. Some connect this story to the figure of Khidr (see 18:65c), indicating that Khidr and Elisha (al-Yasa^c; see 6:86; 38:48) meet every night at this mountain barrier to prevent Gog and Magog from getting out (T̄s). That the Promise of God is true is repeated in several verses; see 4:122; 10:4, 55; 18:21; 28:13; 30:60; 31:33; 35:5; 40:77.

99 And We shall leave them, on that Day, to surge against one another like waves. And the trumpet shall be blown, and We shall gather them together.

99 On that Day means on the Last Day, before the Resurrection but after the slaying of the Antichrist (IK). Those who are left to surge against one another are either Gog and Magog and human beings, whose lives and property they are overtaking (IK), or human beings and jinn, who come against one another at this time (Aj, IK). Some say that these forces who surge against one another will not, however, be able to enter Makkah, Madinah, or Jerusalem (Aj). At this time, the trumpet shall be blown, heralding the onset of the Day of Resurrection. The trumpet is said to be blown by Seraphiel (Isrāfīl) or one of the other archangels (IK); for other references to the trumpet as a herald of the Resurrection and in some cases as the sound that will rouse the dead from their graves, see 20:102; 23:101; 27:87; 36:51; 39:68; 50:20; 69:13; 74:8; 78:18; see also 39:68c.

100 And We shall present Hell, on that Day, as an array before the disbelievers, 100 On that Day, God will present Hell . . . as an array for the disbelievers, so that they can see it and hear its raging and groaning (Aj), even before they enter it.

101 those whose eyes were veiled from the remembrance of Me, and could not hear.

101 Those whose eyes were veiled . . . and could not hear refers to those who were spiritually blind and deaf in life, making them impervious to the revealed messages of the prophets and to the Oneness of God. Similar references to the veiling of eyes and the failure to hear as metaphors for spiritual blindness and deafness are found in several verses; see 2:7c; 6:25c.

102 Do those who disbelieve reckon that they may take My servants as protectors apart from Me? Truly We have prepared Hell as a welcome for the disbelievers!

102 The Quran states that people have no helpers apart from God (see, e.g., 42:46) and repeatedly warns those who would vainly seek protectors other than Him (7:3; 13:16; 42:9), such as idols (2:257) or Satan and his minions (7:30; 18:50). See 29:41: The parable of those who take protectors apart from God is that of the spider that makes a house. Truly the frailest of houses is the spider's house, if they but knew. That Hell is described as a welcome (nuzul, implying an offering of hospitality) may be considered a somewhat ironic usage, similar to those verses in which the disbelievers are given glad tidings of a painful punishment (31:7; 45:8) or the Fire of Hell is described as a refuge for them (24:57). Hell and its punishments are also described as a welcome in 56:52–56; 56:92–94. Cf. v. 107, where the Garden is analogously described as a welcome for those who believe and perform righteous deeds.

103 Say, “Shall I inform you who are the greatest losers in respect to their deeds?”

104 Those whose efforts go astray in the life of this world, while they reckon that they are virtuous in their works.”

105 They are those who disbelieve in the signs of their Lord, and in the meeting with Him. Thus their deeds have come to naught, and on the Day of Resurrection We shall assign them no weight.

103–5 Those who disbelieve in the signs of their Lord, and in the meeting with Him (v. 105) are described in this passage as the greatest losers, because their efforts in this world are in vain; see also 7:147: As for those who deny Our signs and the meeting of the Hereafter, their deeds have come to naught. Such people reckon that they are virtuous in their works, for as mentioned in several verses the deeds of the disbelievers and wrongdoers seem fair to them (see 6:108c). But their deeds have come to naught, because they are disbelievers, and deeds without faith are assigned no weight (cf. 2:217; 3:21–22; 5:5, 53; 6:88; 9:17; 33:19; 39:65; 47:9–10, 32). In 25:23, it is said that the deeds of those who are guilty of denying their prophets will be as scattered dust.

⑩①⑥ That is their recompense—Hell—for having disbelieved and for having taken My signs and My messengers in mockery.

106 Hell is the recompense for those who mock God’s signs and messengers by denying them and belittling their warnings; cf. v. 56, in which the disbelievers mock the truth, as well as 2:231; 5:57; 45:9, 35, which mention those who mock God’s signs or warnings.

⑩①⑦ Those who believe and perform righteous deeds, theirs shall be the Gardens of Paradise as a welcome.

⑩①⑧ Abiding therein, they seek not any change therefrom.

107–8 Just as Hell is a “welcome” for the disbelievers, the Garden is a welcome for those who believe and perform righteous deeds; see also 3:198; 32:19; 41:31–32.

⑩①⑨ Say, “If the sea were ink for the Words of my Lord, the sea would be exhausted before the Words of my Lord were exhausted, even if We brought the like thereof to replenish it.”

109 The Words of my Lord may be a reference to God’s Knowledge and Wisdom (ST, Z) or to the many spiritual meanings and benefits of the Quran and other Divine Revelation (Ṭs), rather than to the literal words of the Quran itself. It may also be a reference to His capacity to create and to command whatever He wills (Ṭs), for God creates by the “Word,” as in 2:117: When He decrees a thing, He only says to it, “Be!” and it is (see also 3:47; 6:73; 16:40; 19:35; 36:82; 40:68), and as in 4:171, where Jesus’ miraculous creation is described as God’s Word having been committed to, or cast upon, Mary. In the context of discussions of the Garden and Hell in vv. 102–8, some have suggested that the Words of my Lord here refers to the rewards promised and punishments threatened in the Hereafter (Ṭs) or the generous words God will speak to the people of the Garden in the Hereafter (Aj). All of these are described here as more inexhaustible than the sea itself, for as vast as the sea is, it is still finite, while the Words of God are infinite (Aj, R) and eternal (ST). See also commentary on 31:27: And if all the trees on earth were pens, and if the sea and seven more added to it [were ink], the Words of God would not be exhausted. Truly God is Mighty, Wise.

110 Say, “I am only a human being like you. It is revealed unto me that your God is one God. So whosoever hopes for the meeting with his Lord, let him perform righteous deeds and make no one a partner unto his Lord in worship.”

110 In several verses, the Prophet Muhammad and other prophets assert that they are only a human being delivering a message from God (see, e.g., 14:11; 17:93; 41:6). However, it is the merely human nature of prophets itself that causes some people to doubt them; see 6:91; 11:27; 14:10; 21:3; 23:24; 23:47; 26:154, 186; 36:15; 54:24; 64:6; 74:25. Whosoever hopes for the meeting with his Lord, and thus believes, should perform righteous deeds and should ascribe no partners to God; that is, they must avoid the unforgivable sin of shirk, or idolatry (see 4:48c). As believers are, by definition, not committers of shirk in its outward sense, Ibn ‘Ajībah cites in connection with this verse a ḥadīth that warns the believers to be wary of the “minor shirk.” When asked what “minor shirk” meant, the Prophet responded that it referred to hypocrisy or religious ostentation (riyā’).

Mary

Maryam

Maryam is a Makkan sūrah believed to have been revealed after Sūrah 35, Fāṭir, although some report that vv. 58 and 71 were revealed in Madinah (Q). The sūrah is named for Mary (Maryam) the mother of Jesus, whose story it recounts in detail. This is the only sūrah named for a female figure, and indeed Mary has the distinction of being the only woman mentioned by name in the Quran; other female figures are identified only by their relation to others, such as the wife of Adam and the mother of Moses, or by their title, such as the Queen of Sheba.

Since nearly all named figures in the Quran are considered prophets, and since Mary receives the message about her miraculous conception of Jesus, identified as God's "Word," from the Archangel Gabriel, the angel of revelation, a small minority of Islamic authorities, such as the Andalusian theologian Ibn Ḥazm (d. 456/1064) and the Persian Sufi Rūzbihān al-Baqlī (d. 606/1209), consider her to be a female prophet. However, since Mary is not explicitly identified as a prophet in the Quran and Islamic tradition generally holds that all prophets are male (based on the description of prophets as "men" in 12:109), most Muslim authorities do not consider Mary a prophet, but rather an exceptionally pious woman with the highest spiritual rank among women. In a ḥadīth, the Prophet names Mary as one of the four spiritually perfected women of the world.

Mary represents a unique point of connection between Islam, Judaism, and Christianity. She was born into a priestly Jewish family and dedicated to service in the Temple, but she was also the mother of Jesus and thus plays a central and miraculous role in the establishment of Christianity. In the Quran, Mary's importance is indicated by the fairly substantial detail with which her story is recounted, both here and in 3:35–48. She also plays a role of significance in certain forms of Islamic piety.

This sūrah is reported to have played an important role in the history of the early Islamic community. After the Battle of Badr, in which many prominent Makkans were killed, the Makkan leaders sent a delegation to the Negus, the Christian king of Abyssinia, who had given refuge to a small group of the Prophet's followers. The Makkan delegation demanded that the king hand over some of these Muslims, so that they could exact retribution upon them for the loss of those Makkans who died at Badr. The Negus summoned a delegation of the Muslims and asked them to recite something from the revelations that had been sent to the Prophet Muhammad. Ja'far ibn Abī Ṭālib (d. 7/629), the Prophet's cousin and older brother of 'Alī ibn Abī Ṭālib, came forth and recited from this sūrah. Upon hearing the Quran's words regarding Mary and Jesus, the Negus and the religious leaders of his court began to weep profusely and refused to hand over the Muslims, indicating that the religious teachings of the Quran were deeply related to those of the Christian faith (Q).

Maryam has several unique characteristics that give it a distinct linguistic and thematic unity. It is one of the longest sūrahs to have a clearly defined rhyming pattern; sixty-seven of its ninety-eight verses end with the same final sound, and other, shorter passages contain separate, but related, rhyming patterns. Also in this sūrah, God is repeatedly and most commonly referred to by the Divine Name al-Raḥmān ("the Compassionate"); nearly a third of all instances of this Divine Name in the Quran (i.e., other than in the opening basmalah formula) are located in this sūrah alone.

The sūrah begins with substantial accounts of the related figures of Zachariah and John (vv. 2–15) and of Mary and Jesus (vv. 16–36), followed by more succinct accounts of Abraham (vv. 41–50) and Moses (vv. 51–53). These four accounts bear some common thematic elements, including God's bestowal of prophetic children or relatives upon other prophets or sacred figures: God grants John to Zachariah, Jesus to Mary, Isaac and Jacob to Abraham, and Aaron to his brother Moses. In all four accounts these Divine "gifts" are granted only after Zachariah, Mary, Abraham, and Moses withdraw from their people and enter a state of separation from the world. The juxtaposition of speaking and silence also ties the accounts together: Zachariah and Mary's temporary silence (vv. 10–11, 26) is complemented by the infant Jesus' miraculous ability to speak (vv. 29–33).

These four accounts are followed by a brief mention of other prophetic figures, including Ishmael (vv. 54–55) and Idrīs (vv. 56–57), and then by a warning that many who came after these prophets went astray and that only those who repent, believe, and work righteousness will enter the Garden (vv. 58–63). After a reminder in v. 64 that revelation only comes to the Prophet by God's Command, the sūrah proceeds to address the criticisms leveled against the Prophet and the Quranic message (vv. 65–82). Vv. 88–95 issue a strong rejection of the claims of those who say that God has begotten a child. The sūrah concludes in v. 98 with a sobering observation about the utter silence of earlier generations destroyed by God for their wrongdoing, from whom one no longer hears even the slightest sound.

In the Name of God, the Compassionate, the Merciful

① Kāf. Hā. Yā. ʿAyn. Ṣād. ② A reminder of the Mercy of thy Lord unto His servant, Zachariah, ③ when he cried out to his Lord with a secret cry. ④ He said, “My Lord! Verily my bones have grown feeble, and my head glistens with white hair. And in calling upon Thee, my Lord, I have never been wretched. ⑤ Truly I fear my relatives after me, and my wife is barren. So grant me from Thy Presence an heir ⑥ who will inherit from me and inherit from the House of Jacob. And make him, my Lord, well-pleasing.” ⑦ “O Zachariah! Truly We bring thee glad tidings of a boy whose name is John; We have not given this as a name to any before him.” ⑧ He said, “My Lord! How shall I have a boy, when my wife is barren, and I have grown decrepit with old age?” ⑨ He said, “Thus shall it be. Thy Lord says, ‘It is easy for Me! I had created thee before, when thou wast nothing!’” ⑩ He said, “My Lord! Appoint for me a sign.” He said, “Thy sign shall be that thou shalt not speak with men for three nights, [while thou art] sound.” ⑪ So he came forth from the sanctuary unto his people, and signaled to them that they should glorify morning and evening. ⑫ “O John! Take the Book with strength!” And We gave him judgment as a child, ⑬ and a tenderness from Our Presence, and purity; and he was reverent, ⑭ and dutiful toward his parents. He was not domineering, rebellious. ⑮ Peace be upon him the day he was born, and the day he dies, and the day he is raised alive. ⑯ And remember Mary in the Book, when she withdrew from her family to an eastern place. ⑰ And she veiled herself from them. Then We sent unto her Our Spirit, and it assumed for her the likeness of a perfect man. ⑱ She said, “I seek refuge from thee in the Compassionate, if you are reverent!” ⑲ He said, “I am but a messenger of thy Lord, to bestow upon thee a pure boy.” ⑳ She said, “How shall I have a boy when no man has touched me, nor have I been unchaste?” ㉑ He said, “Thus shall it be. Thy Lord says, ‘It is easy for Me.’” And [it is thus] that We might make him a sign unto mankind, and a mercy from Us. And it is a matter decreed. ㉒ So she conceived him and withdrew with him to a place far off. ㉓ And the pangs of childbirth drove her to the trunk of a date palm. She said, “Would that I had died before this and was a thing forgotten, utterly forgotten!” ㉔ So he called out to her from below her, “Grieve not! Thy Lord has placed a rivulet beneath thee. ㉕ And shake toward thyself the trunk of the date palm; fresh, ripe dates shall fall upon thee. ㉖ So eat and drink and cool thine eye. And if thou seest any human being, say, ‘Verily I have vowed a fast unto the Compassionate, so I shall not speak this day to any man.’” ㉗ Then she came with him unto her people, carrying him. They said, “O Mary! Thou hast brought an amazing thing! ㉘ O sister of Aaron! Thy father was not an evil man, nor was thy mother unchaste.” ㉙ Then she pointed to him. They said, “How shall we speak to one who is yet a child in the cradle?” ㉚ He said, “Truly I am a servant of God. He has given me the Book and made me a prophet. ㉛ He has made me blessed wheresoever I may be, and has enjoined upon me prayer and almsgiving so long as I live, ㉜ and [has made me] dutiful toward my mother. And He has not made me domineering, wretched. ㉝ Peace be upon me the day I was born, the day I die, and the day I am raised alive!” 34 That is Jesus son of Mary—a statement of the truth, which they doubt. 35 It is not for God to take a child. Glory be to Him! When He decrees a thing, He only says to it, “Be!” and it is. 36 “Truly God is my Lord and your Lord; so worship Him. This is a straight path.” 37 Yet the parties differed among themselves, and woe unto those who disbelieve for the witnessing of a tremendous day! 38 How well they will hear and how well they will see on the Day they come unto Us. But the wrongdoers, today, are in manifest error. 39 And warn them of the Day of Regret, when the matter will have been decreed, while they are in a state of heedlessness and believe not. 40 Surely We shall inherit the earth and whatsoever is upon it, and unto Us shall they be returned. 41 And remember Abraham in the Book—verily he was truthful, a prophet — 42 when he said unto his father, “O my father! Why do you worship that which neither hears nor sees, nor can avail you in any way? 43 O my father! Verily knowledge has come unto me that has not come unto you. So follow me, and I shall guide you upon a sound path. 44 O my father! Worship not Satan; surely Satan is disobedient toward the Compassionate. 45 O my father! Truly I fear that a punishment from the Compassionate will befall you, such that you will become a friend of Satan.” 46 He said, “Do you reject my gods, O Abraham? If you cease not, I shall surely stone you. Take leave of me for a long while!” 47 He said, “Peace be upon you! I shall seek forgiveness for you from my Lord. Verily He has been gracious unto me. 48 And I withdraw myself from you and that which you call upon apart from God. And I call upon my Lord; it may be that in calling upon my Lord, I will not be wretched.” 49 So when he had withdrawn from them and that which they called upon apart from God, We bestowed upon him Isaac and Jacob, and each We made a prophet. 50 And We bestowed upon them something of Our Mercy, and ordained for them a sublime, faithful renown. 51 And remember Moses in the Book. Verily he was devoted, and he was a messenger, a prophet. 52 We called out to him from the right side of the Mount, and drew him nigh in intimate discourse. 53 And We bestowed upon him, from Our Mercy, his brother, Aaron, a prophet. 54 And remember Ishmael in the Book. Verily he was true to the promise, and he was a messenger, a prophet. 55 He used to bid his people to prayer and almsgiving, and he was pleasing unto his Lord. 56 And remember Idrīs in the Book. Verily he was truthful, a prophet. 57 And We raised him to a sublime station. 58 They are those whom God has blessed among the prophets of the progeny of Adam, and of those whom We carried with Noah, and of the progeny of Abraham and Israel, and of those whom We guided and chose. When the signs of the Compassionate were recited unto them, they would fall down, prostrate and weeping. 59 Then they were succeeded by a generation who neglected prayer and followed base desires. So they shall meet [the reward of] error, 60 save for those who repent and believe and work righteousness. It is they who shall enter the Garden, and they shall not be wronged in the least: 61 Gardens of Eden, those which the Compassionate promised His servants in the Unseen. Verily His Promise shall come to pass. 62 They shall hear no idle talk therein, but only “Peace!” And therein they shall have their provision, morning and evening. 63 This is the Garden We shall bequeath unto those among Our servants who were reverent. 64 “We descend not, save by the Command of thy Lord. Unto Him belongs that which is before us and that which is behind us, and whatsoever lies between that, and thy Lord is not forgetful— 65 the Lord of the heavens and the earth and whatsoever is between them. So worship Him and be steadfast in His worship. Dost thou know any who can be named alongside Him?” 66 Man says, “When I am dead, shall I be brought forth alive?” 67 Does man not remember that We created him before, when he was naught? 68 And by thy Lord, We shall surely gather them and the satans, and We shall surely bring them around Hell on their knees. 69 Then indeed We shall pluck out from every group whosoever among them was most insolent toward the Compassionate. 70 Then We shall surely know those who most deserve to burn therein. 71 And there is not one of you, but that he will approach it. It is, with thy Lord, a decree determined. 72 Then We shall save those who are reverent and leave the wrongdoers therein, on their knees. 73 And when Our signs are recited unto them as clear proofs, those who disbelieve say unto those who believe, “Which of the two groups is better in station or fairer in company?” 74 How many a generation We destroyed before them who were fairer in [their] furnishings and in outward appearance. 75 Say, “Whosoever is in error, the Compassionate will extend his term till, when they see that which they have been promised, be it the punishment or the Hour, they will know whose position is worse, and whose host is weaker.” 76 God increases in guidance those who are rightly guided. And that which endures—righteous deeds—are better in reward with thy Lord, and better in return. 77 Hast thou not considered the one who disbelieves in Our signs, and says, “I shall be given wealth and children.” 78 Has he penetrated the Unseen, or made a pact with the Compassionate? 79 Nay, but We shall record that which he says, and We shall prolong for him the punishment. 80 And We shall inherit from him that which he claims, and he will come unto Us alone. 81 And they have taken gods apart from God, that they might be a strength for them. 82 Nay, but they will disavow their worship, and they will become an opponent unto them. 83 Hast thou not considered how We unleash the satans on the disbelievers, to incite them cunningly? 84 So hasten not against them; verily We are counting for them a number. 85 On the Day We shall gather the reverent to the Compassionate as an honored delegation, 86 and We shall drive the guilty into Hell as a thirsty herd. 87 They have no power of intercession, save the one who has made a pact with the Compassionate. 88 And they say, “The Compassionate has taken a child.” 89 You have indeed asserted a terrible thing. 90 The heavens are well-nigh rent thereby, and the earth split asunder, and the mountains made to fall down in ruins, 91 that they should claim for the Compassionate a child. 92 It is not fitting for the Compassionate to take a child. 93 There is none in the heavens and on the earth, but that it comes unto the Compassionate as a servant. 94 He has taken account of them, and numbered them exactly. 95 And each of them shall come unto Him on the Day of Resurrection, alone. 96 Surely those who believe and perform righteous deeds, for them shall the Compassionate ordain love. 97 We have only made this easy upon thy tongue that thou mayest give glad tidings unto the reverent thereby, and that thereby thou mayest warn a contentious people. 98 How many a generation before them have We destroyed? Dost thou perceive even one of them, or hear from them a murmur?

① Kāf. Hā. Yā. ʿAyn. Şād.

1 The five Arabic letters at the beginning of this sūrah are among the “separated letters” (al-muqattaʿāt) found at the beginning of twenty-nine sūrahs. Among them, this sūrah is the only one that begins with these particular letters, which constitute the longest set of such letters found in a single verse. Although the meaning of these letters is considered by most commentators to not be known clearly, some have speculated that the letters at the beginning of this sūrah may stand for various Names and Attributes of God found in the Quran. For example, some suggest that the Kāf stands for the Divine Name Kabīr (“Great”) or Karīm (“Generous”). Alternately, some consider these five letters, strung together but pronounced individually (i.e., kāf-hā-yā-ʿayn-şād), to constitute one of the Names of God or else a name for the Quran (Ṭ). For a fuller commentary on the separated letters, see 2:1c.

② A reminder of the Mercy of thy Lord unto His servant, Zachariah,

2–35 These verses recount the intertwined stories of Mary, Zachariah, John (the Baptist), and Jesus; see 3:35–62 for a similar account. The two stories are also connected in 21:89–91 as well as in the Biblical account found in Luke 1:5–80. The connection between John’s miraculous birth to the aged and formerly barren wife of Zachariah and Jesus’ miraculous birth to the young virgin Mary makes the point that God’s power to create transcends all ordinary, physical boundaries and that age and human limitations are irrelevant to the manifestation of God’s Will in sacred history.

③ when he cried out to his Lord with a secret cry.

2–3 Zachariah’s request for a son is also described in 3:37–41 and is mentioned briefly in 21:89–90. In 6:85, Zachariah is described as among the righteous, and he is understood to be a descendant of Aaron—that is, a member of the Jewish priestly class—as well as Mary’s paternal uncle. The text may also be read, “A reminder of the Mercy of thy Lord, His servant Zachariah,” indicating that Zachariah himself was a mercy from God bestowed upon his people (R). That the sūrah begins with an account of God’s Mercy (rahmah) may be related to a significant feature of this sūrah, namely, that God is referred to throughout as al-Rahmān, “the Compassionate” (derived from the same root as rahmah); see, e.g., vv. 18, 26, 44–45, 58, 61.

That Zachariah cries out to God with a secret cry indicates his sincerity, since praying or supplicating in a loud voice may suggest hypocrisy (Z) or the desire to be seen of men (4:142); see 7:55, where people are enjoined to call upon their Lord humbly and in secret. His supplication may also have been in a low voice because this mode of supplication is particularly favored by God (IK), or as a result of his age and frailty (Z), or because of fear of his relatives (see v. 5; Z).

④ He said, “My Lord! Verily my bones have grown feeble, and my head glistens with white hair. And in calling upon Thee, my Lord, I have never been wretched.

⑤ Truly I fear my relatives after me, and my wife is barren. So grant me from Thy Presence an heir

⑥ who will inherit from me and inherit from the House of Jacob. And make him, my Lord, well-pleasing.”

4–6 Cf. 3:38; 21:89–90; and Luke 1:5–25. In v. 4, Zachariah describes the physical effects of his age, as he was said to be between sixty and eighty-five years old at this time (Z). His statement that he has never been wretched in his supplications means that in the past God had always answered his prayers (Bd, Mw). Given that Zachariah was from a priestly Jewish family, his statement I fear my relatives after me is understood to mean that he feared that his relatives would not continue to guide the religious community or uphold the religion properly after his death (Bd). Zachariah’s relatives (mawālī) may refer to his agnatic relatives, who would inherit his position after him if he had no son (Mw) or to other, unrelated religious scholars who might assume religious leadership of the Jewish community after him (Mw).

In v. 5, heir translates walī, which elsewhere in the Quran is translated “protector” or “friend,” but in this context refers to an heir, since it concerns

Zachariah's desire for a child of his own (Bđ) who could be heir to his religious knowledge and authority and perhaps to his function of prophethood (Mw), but not necessarily to his wealth. Zachariah was a prophet, and a well-known ḥadīth asserts that the prophets do not have heirs to their wealth (Bđ). That it is spiritual and not material inheritance that is meant here is indicated by Zachariah's description of his heir as one who will inherit from me and inherit from the House of Jacob; see 12:6, where the House of Jacob is blessed by God; and 4:54, where God gave the House of Abraham the Book and Wisdom, and . . . a mighty sovereignty. Additionally, such a child would be an heir from Thy Presence—that is, God's Presence—since the age of Zachariah and his wife meant that any child born to them would greatly transcend the normal limits of human childbearing and could thus be nothing other than a Divine Gift (Bđ).

Zachariah also prays that this heir will be well-pleasing (raḍiyyan), that is, that God will be pleased with his character and deeds (Mw). The related term riḍā is usually translated “contentment,” and elsewhere the Quran states that the Contentment of God is what true believers strive for (3:162, 174; 5:2, 16); it is also associated with the paradisaic state (3:15; 9:21). In 5:119, the great triumph in the Hereafter belongs to those about whom it is said, God is content with them, and they are content with Him; see also 9:72, 100. Regarding the relationship between Divine and human contentment, there is also a ḥadīth that states, “Whosoever is content with God's Decree, God is content with him”; see also 89:28c.

⑦ “O Zachariah! Truly We bring thee glad tidings of a boy whose name is John; We have not given this as a name to any before him.”

7 The announcement to Zachariah is understood to be God's response conveyed to him either directly by God or through the medium of an angelic messenger (R) or messengers (Ṭs; see 3:39). The Arabic for John is Yaḥyā, which means “he lives”; it may refer to John's having been brought to life through Zachariah's faith (Ṭ) or simply to his having been brought to life miraculously in his mother's womb (Bđ). Others indicate that it refers to God having enlivened his heart with faith and obedience (R).

That God Himself gives John his name is a distinct honor (R, Ṭs); Jesus is also given his name by God (3:45). That God has not given this as a name to any before him indicates the special favor bestowed upon John, and his virtue (Ṭs; see vv.

12–15). The uniqueness of his name may reflect the fact that he was named by God Himself prior to his birth, while other children are named by their parents after they are born (R). The Shiite tradition connects the story of John, whose name had no precedent and who was martyred when he was beheaded by the tyrannical Herod (see Matthew 14:1–12), with that of the grandson of the Prophet, al-Ḥusayn ibn ʿAlī, whose name, according to Shiite sources, was given by the Prophet himself and also had no precedent and who was similarly martyred, after which his head was delivered to the Umayyad ruler, Yazīd (Ṭs).

8 He said, “My Lord! How shall I have a boy, when my wife is barren, and I have grown decrepit with old age?”

8 Cf. 3:40. Zachariah responds in this way either to indicate his awe and wonder at God’s creative Power or because he wishes to know how—that is, by what means—he will be granted this son, given his wife’s barrenness (IK, Mw). But as God’s response in v. 9, It is easy for Me, indicates, God has no need of “means” by which to create (Z). Zachariah’s questioning as to how he shall have a boy is also justified, insofar as the announcement in v. 7 only indicated that Zachariah would be given a boy (ghulām), rather than a “son” (walad; R), and thus did not specify that the child would be conceived and born in the normal manner.

9 He said, “Thus shall it be. Thy Lord says, ‘It is easy for Me! I had created thee before, when thou wast nothing!’”

9 Thus shall it be translates kadhālika and might also be rendered “Thus it is.” Bringing creatures into being is easy for God, for when He decrees a thing, He only says to it, “Be!” and it is (2:117; 3:47, 59; 6:73; 16:40; 19:35; 36:82; 40:68). The identical statement is given as a response to a similar question from Mary in v. 21. As an example of how easy creation is for Him, God reminds Zachariah that He had created him when he was nothing, indicating that God’s bringing John into existence through aged parents was no more miraculous than His ability to bring all things from nonexistence into existence (R, Ṭ).

⑩ He said, “My Lord! Appoint for me a sign.” He said, “Thy sign shall be that thou shalt not speak with men for three nights, [while thou art] sound.”

10 Cf. 3:41. That Zachariah will not speak with men is understood to mean that he was rendered temporarily incapable of speaking, though his faculties were still sound (Ṭ, Ṭs, Z). His sudden inability to speak was also said to be a sign for his people, who thus knew that his request had been granted (Ṭs). Some report that he continued to be capable of uttering prayers and praises to God, but was unable to speak to people (Ṭs). His temporary inability to speak draws parallels with the instruction given to Mary that she observe a fast of silence after the birth of Jesus (v. 26), further indicating the symbolic relationship between the two accounts. That both Zachariah and Mary were commanded to observe silence after these miraculous events suggests the spiritual significance of silence. Many Sufis have indicated that silence is the only true way to communicate or express an encounter with God’s Presence, as all words are inadequate in such cases. Outward silence, moreover, can be a manifestation of an inward suppression or emptying of the self in the Face of the Divine.

⑪ So he came forth from the sanctuary unto his people, and signaled to them that they should glorify morning and evening.

11 The sanctuary (miḥrāb) likely refers to Zachariah’s personal prayer room in the Temple (Ṭ, Ṭs); miḥrāb is also used to describe Mary’s private prayer room (3:37) and David’s private residence (38:21). In Islamic mosque architecture, miḥrāb designates the prayer niche carved into the wall of the mosque indicating the direction of prayer (qiblah). Miḥrāb derives from a root related to waging war; according to al-Ṭabrisī, the prayer niche is given this name, because when one turns toward it in prayer, one is spiritually waging war against Satan.

Zachariah signaled to his people, meaning that he gestured to them through signs (see 3:41) or communicated to them by writing (Ṭ, Ṭs). In various places the Quran enjoins people to call upon, glorify, or invoke God morning and evening (see 6:52; 18:28; 24:36; 33:42; 48:9; 76:25), which can mean either that one should do so continuously or that one should do so at these particular times, given their association with the transition between darkness and light or night and day, symbolizing the transition between life and death (see 6:52c). The “glorifying” (tasbīḥ) of God morning and evening may be a reference to the regular morning and evening prayers, during which God is praised, or to any manner of praising God (Ṭs).

⑫ “O John! Take the Book with strength!” And We gave him judgment as a child, 12 This address to John is understood to have been made immediately after his birth (Q, Ṭ); it enjoins him to take the Book—that is, the Torah—with strength, meaning to follow it in earnest and to observe its commands and prohibitions (Ṭ). Judgment here refers to the understanding of the Book that God gave John as a youth or perhaps to his prophethood (R). John’s precocious spiritual understanding reportedly made him disinterested in play as a child (Ṭ).

13 Tenderness translates ḥanān, a term that connotes a gentle mercy or compassion. That it is from Our Presence means that it is a quality of mercy that can only be bestowed by God (Ṭ). Some suggest that a tenderness from Our Presence refers to the love and compassion God had for John (Ṭ), or to John himself, who was a “tender mercy” to Zachariah (Ṭ). Purity refers to John’s purity from sin as well as to his righteousness in deed (Ṭ). For the quality of “reverence” (taqwā), see 2:2c.

⑭ and dutiful toward his parents. He was not domineering, rebellious.

⑮ Peace be upon him the day he was born, and the day he dies, and the day he is raised alive.

14–15 John is described as dutiful toward his parents, that is, obedient and loving (Ṭ); regarding the importance of filial piety, see 2:83c and 6:151–52c as well as 4:36; 17:23; 29:8; 31:14; 46:15. Rather than domineering and rebellious, he was gentle and humble by nature (R) toward both God and his parents (Ṭ), which al-Rāzī asserts is a characteristic of all believers. The triple blessing of peace upon him is identical to Jesus’ statement about himself in v. 33. The blessing upon him the day he was born refers to God’s protection for him against the evil promptings of Satan (R, Ṭ); the blessing upon him the day he dies indicates that he is exempt from the trials of the grave (R, Ṭ); and the blessing upon him when he is raised alive means that he will not suffer the fear and dread that will overcome others on the Day of Resurrection (Ṭ) or experience any punishment (R, Ṭ).

16 And remember Mary in the Book, when she withdrew from her family to an eastern place.

16 Maryam, the daughter of ʿImrān (66:12), was reported to hail from a pure and noble family of the Davidic line (IK); see commentary on 3:35–37 for the account of her birth and dedication to the Temple by her mother’s vow. Mary’s purity is mentioned in several Quranic verses, including 3:36, where her mother’s prayer that God will protect her from Satan is considered to have been granted; 21:91; and 66:12. In his commentary on this passage, Rūzbihān al-Baqlī asserts that Mary’s very substance was the holy, unadulterated fiṭrah, or the primordial human mold itself.

Mary withdrew from her family in order to devote herself to solitary worship (R, Z). An eastern place may refer to an area “east” of the Temple sanctuary (IK, Ṭ, Z) or east of her home (JJ, Z). Some commentators speculate that perhaps she withdrew there after the onset of menstruation (IK, R, Ṭ) or to purify herself afterward (R, Z), although others report that she miraculously escaped her locked prayer room in order to seek solitude on a hillside or mountainous area near the Temple (R, Z). Still others interpret this verse to refer to Mary’s spiritual withdrawal from the realm of existent beings, symbolized by her family, in order to enter the holy realm of the Spirit, the eastern place, where she would witness and encounter the Divine and the “eternal breath of union” (Rb); cf. 66:12, where she conceived Jesus after the Spirit was breathed into her. Viewed in this way, the present verse can be understood to mean that one cannot encounter the spiritual dimension of reality until one withdraws from all worldly things that distract one from the remembrance of God (Aj).

17 And she veiled herself from them. Then We sent unto her Our Spirit, and it assumed for her the likeness of a perfect man.

17 She veiled herself from them, literally, “She drew a veil (Hijāb) before them.” The veil may indicate a curtain or wall that shielded her from view (Ṭ, Z), perhaps while she was purifying herself (R). In this state, Mary encountered the angel (Z) who gave her the news that she would conceive a son. Our Spirit is considered by most to be the Archangel Gabriel (IK, R, Ṭs, Z), who is referred to elsewhere as the Holy Spirit (Rūḥ al-Qudus; 2:87, 253; 5:110; 16:102) or as the Trustworthy Spirit (26:193), perhaps because religion is “revived” through him (Z), as spirit is also associated strongly with the giving of life. The angel appeared to her in the form of a perfect man, whose appearance some describe as that of a young, beardless man, beautiful and radiant in appearance, perfectly proportioned (Ṭ, Z), and without blemish (Z). He appeared in this form, according to some, so that she would not be overcome with fear and recoil from him (Z). Alternately, the Companion and early Quran reciter and commentator Ubayy ibn Kaʿb (d. 29/649) considered the Spirit and the perfect man references to the spirit of Jesus (IK, Rb; see also R, Ṭs for a similar interpretation that is not attributed to Ubayy ibn Kaʿb), who is described in 4:171 as a Spirit from God.

18 She said, “I seek refuge from thee in the Compassionate, if you are reverent!”

18 When Mary sees the angel, she is afraid, since he appeared as an unfamiliar man of whose intentions she was unsure (IK, Ṭ). She thus utters a formula of seeking refuge in God, who is addressed here and throughout the sūrah by the Name al-Raḥmān (“the Compassionate”). The formula for seeking refuge is found in the opening verses of Sūrahs 113 and 114 and is commonly uttered by Muslims in the face of great danger or evil or prior to the basmalah when performing ritual ablutions or beginning any form of prayer or recitation of the Quran.

19 He said, “I am but a messenger of thy Lord, to bestow upon thee a pure boy.”

19 Messenger translates rasūl, which can refer to angelic as well as prophetic messengers. The angel has come to bestow upon Mary a pure boy, that is, to be the cause of her conceiving a son by breathing into her sleeve or clothing (Bd, R, Z; cf. 21:91; 66:12) or else simply to bring her the news that she will conceive such a son (Q, R, Z). The boy will be pure of all sin or fault (R, Ṭ, Ṭs). Pure here renders zakī, which also relates to the concept of growth, and some have thus suggested that this means that Jesus would grow in purity and goodness from infancy to manhood (Aj, R, Ṭs).

20 She said, “How shall I have a boy when no man has touched me, nor have I been unchaste?”

20 See Zachariah’s similar response in v. 8 and 3:40 and Mary’s in 3:47. As with Zachariah in v. 8, Mary’s response is understood to be an inquiry as to how the conception of the child would come about, for example, through marriage to someone or in another way (IK, Ṭ), rather than an expression of doubt regarding the message the angel has brought. No man has touched her means that she had not engaged in normal sexual relations through marriage, while her statement that she had not been unchaste refers to her innocence of all illicit sexual relations (R, Ṭ, Ṭs, Z). Although, as mentioned above, a minority of Islamic scholars have considered Mary a female prophet (see the introduction to Sūrah 19), most have not. Thus for some commentators, Mary’s miraculous conception of Jesus is proof that inimitable evidentiary miracles (mu‘jizāt), usually given to the prophets in order to serve as proof of their prophethood, may also be given to those who are not prophets (Ṭs). Others have considered the conception of Jesus in this manner to be a miracle bestowed upon Jesus or Zachariah (Ṭs) rather than upon Mary.

21 He said, “Thus shall it be. Thy Lord says, ‘It is easy for Me.’” And [it is thus] that We might make him a sign unto mankind, and a mercy from Us. And it is a matter decreed.

21 Thus shall it be. Thy Lord says, "It is easy for Me" is the same response given to Zachariah in v. 9; see 19:9c. Jesus is a sign unto mankind in that he serves as a proof of God's Power as Creator (IK), since his birth shows that God is capable of bringing a child into being without a father (IK, R), just as He was capable of bringing Adam into being without a mother or a father (IK). Through his miraculous conception and birth and his speaking as an infant (vv. 30–33), Jesus is also a sign or proof of his own prophethood and of his mother's innocence (Ṭs). Cf. 23:50, where Mary and Jesus together are said to constitute a sign. Jesus is also a mercy from God to Mary and to those who believe in him and are guided by him (Ṭ, Ṭs).

22 So she conceived him and withdrew with him to a place far off.

22 Mary conceived Jesus when the Spirit was breathed into her (21:91; 66:12); according to a common account, the Spirit was breathed through the opening of her shirt or its sleeve (IK, Ṭ, Ṭs). Adam is similarly brought to life when God breathed into him of His Spirit (15:29; 32:9; 38:72), although it is their creation through Divine fiat rather than through ordinary human means that is explicitly identified as the basis of the similarity between Adam and Jesus in 3:59: Truly the likeness of Jesus in the sight of God is that of Adam; He created him from dust, then said to him "Be!" and he was. According to some, when Zachariah's wife came to Mary to announce her own pregnancy, she found Mary pregnant as well, and the child in the womb of Zachariah's wife seemed to prostrate before the child in Mary's (IK, Ṭ), hence fulfilling the angels' proclamation in 3:39 that John would confirm a Word from God, the Word being Jesus; cf. Luke 1:41, where the baby in the womb of Zachariah's wife, Elizabeth, "leaped" when she encountered the pregnant Mary.

Some identify the place far off to which she withdraws, like the eastern place in v. 16, as an area east of the Temple (Ṭ). However, others describe it more convincingly as a distant place where she and her family were not known. She goes far off in order to avoid embarrassing Zachariah as well as out of fear for her child and perhaps herself, anticipating that her people, among whom she had a reputation for great piety and asceticism, would not understand (R). Wahb ibn Munabbih, who was familiar with the Jewish and Christian scriptures, reports that Mary's pregnancy was known to one of her relatives named Joseph, who also served in the Temple and helped her during her pregnancy (R, Ṭ; see also IK for a similar account not attributed to Wahb ibn Munabbih). Some accounts assert that she later fled with Joseph to Egypt as her time of delivery drew near (R, Ṭ); cf. Matthew 2:13–14, where Mary and Joseph, who are married in the Biblical account, flee to Egypt after Jesus' birth.

23 And the pangs of childbirth drove her to the trunk of a date palm. She said, “Would that I had died before this and was a thing forgotten, utterly forgotten!”

23 The date palm to which Mary is driven—seeking both refuge from the sight of others and strength, by leaning on or clinging to the tree for support (R, Ṭs, Z)—is said to have been a dried-up palm trunk, devoid of fruit or green fronds because its top had been cut off. Moreover, the season is said to have been winter (R, Z), making the tree's production of ripe dates in v. 25 particularly miraculous.

Mary's wish to have died before this means that she wished she could have died before the onset of the difficulties she now faced as a woman giving birth to a child alone, without a husband, including both the physical pain of labor and embarrassment about what people would think of her (Aj, IK, Ṭ). Some commentators assert that Mary's longing for death should not be understood to mean that she lacked patience, contentment, or trust in God (Aj). Al-Rāzī observes that longing for death is often the response of the righteous to suffering (R), as they refuse to abandon their moral or spiritual duties, but are nonetheless fearful of or saddened by the consequences that may result. Al-Rāzī gives, as one of several examples, °Alī ibn Abī Ṭālib's similar statement before the Battle of the Camel (36/656), the opening battle of the First Civil War during his caliphate. Forgotten (nasyan) and utterly forgotten (mansiyyan) translate different forms of the same root and convey Mary's desire to be completely forgotten from memory, such that no one would look for her, all trace of her would be erased, and it would be as if she were completely unknown or had never dwelt upon the earth (IK, Ṭ). On a spiritual level, Mary's statement can be understood as expressing the ultimate victory against the worldly ego, for it indicates that she wished not only to withdraw from and forget the world, but also to be utterly forgotten by it.

24 So he called out to her from below her, “Grieve not! Thy Lord has placed a rivulet beneath thee.

24 The voice that calls out to Mary here may be the Archangel Gabriel's or Jesus' (Ṭ, Ṭs, Z). Because the voice calls out from below her, many consider it more likely that it is Jesus addressing her after he has been delivered (Ṭ, Ṭs), although some point out that if it is Gabriel calling to her, then from below her (min taḥtihā) may mean “in front of her” (Ṭ, Ṭs). Alternately, from below her may mean from below the palm trunk (Ṭ, Z), which is also grammatically feminine and would take the feminine pronoun; or else it may mean that Gabriel was calling to her from the valley or the foot of the mountain below her (IK, Ṭs). Rivulet translates sariyyan; however, some suggest that sariyyan, which can also be an adjective meaning “noble” or “distinguished,” may be a description of Jesus himself (IK, Qu, Ṭs, Z).

25 And shake toward thyself the trunk of the date palm; fresh, ripe dates shall fall upon thee.

25 The trunk of the date palm, which was said to have been dried out (IK, Ṭ), became a source of fresh dates (Ṭ). The miracle of fresh, ripe dates falling from a dried-out tree symbolically replicates the miracle of the birth of John from his old and formerly barren mother (vv. 7–9); it also recalls the miracle of fresh fruit “out of season” that came to Mary while locked in her solitary prayer room; see 3:37c.

26 So eat and drink and cool thine eye. And if thou seest any human being, say, ‘Verily I have vowed a fast unto the Compassionate, so I shall not speak this day to any man.’”

26 So eat is an injunction to Mary to nourish her body with the fresh dates, said to be particularly beneficial for women during childbirth (IK, Q, Z), but may also be a command to “nourish her soul” (Bḏ, IK) and to be consoled (Z) thereby, as the provision of miraculous food and drink are symbolic of God's love and concern for her (Rb). To cool thine eye (qarrī ‘aynan) is a common Arabic expression meaning to be comforted and to become at peace. A version of this expression is also used to describe the state of Moses' mother when the infant Moses is temporarily restored to her so that she might nurse him (20:40). According to some, Mary is enjoined to be at peace upon contemplating the radiant beauty of her son (Rb).

I have vowed translates nadhartu, the same word used by Mary's mother in making her vow to God regarding the child in her womb (3:35). The verb nadhara is similar to the Biblical term "Nazarite," used to describe those who had undertaken a vow to "separate themselves to the Lord" for a stated period of time (see Numbers 6:2) and refrain from speech except in the case of prayer. Some report that it was a practice among some Israelites and Jews of Mary's time to fast by abstaining from speech as well as from food and drink (Ṭ, Ṭs). Mary's fast of silence also evokes Zachariah's temporary inability to speak as a sign of the impending birth of his son (v. 10; 3:41); and some say her fast of silence served as a similar "sign" (Ṭ). Her fast of silence, however, also allowed Jesus to speak on her behalf (Ṭs). This freed her from the burden of having to argue for her own innocence before her family (Bd).

27 Then she came with him unto her people, carrying him. They said, "O Mary! Thou hast brought an amazing thing!

27 Amazing thing translates fariyyan, which indicates something that is serious and grave as well as unprecedented (Bd, Ṭ, Ṭs).

28 O sister of Aaron! Thy father was not an evil man, nor was thy mother unchaste."

28 That Mary is addressed as sister of Aaron is not, according to commentators, meant to indicate that she was the biological sister of the prophet Aaron, brother of Moses. This would be chronologically impossible, although Mary's father's name is ʿImrān (66:12), as is that of the prophets Moses and Aaron, according to Islamic tradition. Some commentators explain that the name Aaron signified righteousness among the Jews of this time, and so the title sister of Aaron was meant to indicate that Mary was like Aaron in righteousness (Ṭ, Ṭs). Another explanation is that the name Aaron was common among the Israelites and that Mary had a half brother named Aaron (Th, Ṭs, Z). The most widely held view among the commentators is that Mary was a descendant of the prophet Aaron and the title sister of Aaron is meant as a reference to her noble lineage (Bd, Th, Ṭs, Z); see also

3:33–34c.

29 Then she pointed to him. They said, “How shall we speak to one who is yet a child in the cradle?”

29 Mary pointed to the infant Jesus, indicating that they should speak to him (Ṭ). Their response reflects their incredulosity at being instructed to speak to an infant. According to some commentators, their response suggests a tone of anger, for they initially thought Mary’s instruction was meant mockingly or in jest (Q, Ṭs, Z). Child in the cradle here may mean a child in the mother’s lap (Ṭ).

30 He said, “Truly I am a servant of God. He has given me the Book and made me a prophet.

31 He has made me blessed wheresoever I may be, and has enjoined upon me prayer and almsgiving so long as I live, 30–31 According to some commentators, Jesus’ sudden ability to speak, like Zachariah’s sudden inability to do so in v. 10, was a temporary matter and that after delivering the statements recounted in vv. 30–33 Jesus returned to the ordinary state of an infant as yet incapable of speech (R, Q). The miraculous and temporary gift of speech was bestowed upon him in order to absolve his mother of any blame or suspicion (Q). Al-Ṭabrisī notes, however, that some claimed that Jesus’ intellect was perfected and he was a prophet from this time onward, in which case his miraculous ability to speak as an infant continued beyond this encounter with his mother’s family.

It is significant that the first words spoken by Jesus were an assertion of his servanthood in relation to God (Q); emphasis is also placed on Jesus’ servanthood in 4:172, and the idea of Jesus as “servant of God” is understood by Muslims to serve as a response to Christian claims regarding the divinity or sonship of Jesus (see 4:172–73c; 5:75c). The Prophet Muhammad is also repeatedly described as God’s servant in the Quran (see 17:1; 25:1; 53:10; 57:9), and according to Islamic tradition, one of the Prophet’s names, like the name of his father, was °Abd Allāh (“servant of God”).

Jesus' words He has given me the Book—that is, the Gospel (Z)—mean that it had been decreed that Jesus would be given the Book (Ṭ), since he was still an infant and the meaning of these words would only be fulfilled in the future (Th, Ṭs). Others suggest that Jesus was taught the Torah through inspiration while he was yet in the womb (Th) or, as noted above, that he was made a prophet when he was still a child; see 3:48 regarding God's teaching the scriptures, including the Torah and Gospel, to Jesus. That Jesus had been made . . . blessed is understood to mean that Jesus is a source of spiritual benefit (Ṭ, Z) for those who follow his religion (Th), that he is a “teacher of the good” (Ṭ, Th, Z), a guide for those in error, a vindicator of the oppressed, one who brings abundance to the deprived, and an enjoiner of right and forbiddener of wrong (Q, Qu, Ṭ), which the Quran describes as a characteristic of the believers in 3:104, 110, 114; 9:71, 112; 22:41; 31:17, and of the Prophet Muhammad specifically in 7:157. Prayer and almsgiving are frequently mentioned together in the Quran as pillars of correct religious practice for Muslim believers (see, e.g., 2:110, 177, 277; 4:162; 9:71) as well as for the People of the Book (e.g., 2:43, 83; 5:12). Almsgiving translates zakāh, a word that, in addition to almsgiving, may also refer to the practice of purifying oneself spiritually by avoiding sin and disobedience (Ṭ). So long as I live refers to the duration of Jesus' time on earth, for Muslims believe that Jesus has not yet died; he was taken directly to God (4:158) and will return to earth and die just prior to the end of time; see 4:158c.

32 and [has made me] dutiful toward my mother. And He has not made me domineering, wretched.

32 Jesus, like John in v. 14, is characterized by filial piety; regarding the importance of filial piety, see 2:83; 4:36; 6:151; 17:23; 29:8c; 31:14; 46:15. Like John, he is also not domineering, that is, neither arrogant nor disobedient to God's commands (Ṭ) nor violent in anger (Q). Jesus is reported to have lived humbly: he ate mostly plant foods, wore a coarse hair shirt, sat on the ground, and was itinerant, without a fixed residence (Q). Despite his filial piety, Jesus is said to have treasured those who followed the truth of his message above all. According to one report, when a woman saw Jesus raising the dead and healing the sick, she said to him, “Happy is the womb that bore thee and the breasts that nursed thee!” He replied, “Happy are those who recite the Book of God and follow what is in it” (Ṭ, Th). A similar sentiment is conveyed in Mark 3:31–35; Matthew 12:46–50; and Luke 8:19–21, where Jesus identifies his true family not as his biological mother and relatives, but as those who “hear the word of God and do it.”

33 Peace be upon me the day I was born, the day I die, and the day I am raised alive!”

33 Jesus’ statement in this verse is identical to that regarding John in v. 15, although here the triple invocation of peace is uttered in the first person by Jesus himself. The invocation is understood to mean that Jesus enjoys protection from God against Satan; he was spared Satan’s touch on the day he was born (Ṭ), and he will be free from fear on the day he dies (after his return to earth; see 43:61c) and on the day he is raised alive (Ṭ) with the rest of humanity (see commentary on 4:157–59).

34 That is Jesus son of Mary—a statement of the truth, which they doubt.

34 A statement of the truth (qawl al-ḥaqq) is most likely a description of the account of Jesus as presented in the Quran, which is understood by Muslim commentators to be the true account of his life and person, as opposed to the account of the Jews, who did not accept his prophethood, and the account of the Christians, who considered him to be the son of God and Divine (Q, Ṭ). The phrase might also be meant to describe the words uttered by Jesus in vv. 30–33 (Q). Which they doubt would then refer to the Jews and Christians (Ṭ, Th), who are said elsewhere to be in doubt concerning the true nature and story of Jesus (see 4:157 and commentary). Alternately, a statement of the truth may be related to the description of Jesus as a Word from God in 3:45 (Q, Th), although in that verse it is kalimah, which is translated Word, rather than qawl (statement) as is found here. Since the Truth (al-Ḥaqq) is one of the Names of God, some consider Truth here to be a reference to God, so that a statement of the truth could be rendered “the Word of God” and would thus be a description of Jesus that is synonymous with his description in 3:45 as a Word from Him.

35 It is not for God to take a child. Glory be to Him! When He decrees a thing, He only says to it, “Be!” and it is.

35 The Quran repeatedly rejects and derides the notion that God could have a child; see 6:100–102 and commentary as well as 2:116; 4:171; 10:68; 16:57; 21:26; 39:4. Quranic refutations of God’s having a child are usually accompanied, as here, by the exclamation Glory be to Him! See also commentary on 112:3: He begets not, nor was He begotten. Regarding the Divine creative fiat Be! as the means by which God brings creatures into existence, see 2:117 and commentary, as well as 3:47; 6:73; 16:40; 36:82; 40:68. See 3:59 regarding Jesus specifically.

36 “Truly God is my Lord and your Lord; so worship Him. This is a straight path.”

36 As translated, this verse is read as a continuation of the words that Jesus speaks in vv. 30–33 (Ṭ, Ṭs), and the first sentence is nearly identical to Jesus’ words in 5:117. Read in this way, the statement reiterates the idea that Jesus is a servant in relation to God, Whom he describes as my Lord and your Lord. The command so worship Him indicates that those who would worship Jesus should worship God instead, who is Jesus’ Lord as well as their own. However, the verse may also be read as a continuation from v. 34, so that it could be rendered: “That is Jesus son of Mary . . . and that is God, my Lord and your Lord” (Ṭ, Ṭs). Regarding the straight path, understood to be the path of true religion that leads to salvation, see 1:6c.

37 Yet the parties differed among themselves, and woe unto those who disbelieve for the witnessing of a tremendous day!

37 The parties who differed among themselves are said by some to be the Jews and the Christians, who differ with each other over the status of Jesus (Q, Z). Others suggest that the parties refers to different Christian sects, for example, the Jacobites and Nestorians (Q, Ṭ, Ṭs, Z), which were based in the Near East. The witnessing of a tremendous day refers to the witnessing or experiencing of great fear in the face of the reckoning and punishment meted out on the Day of Resurrection (Ṭ, Z). The witnessing may also be a reference to the testimony of others against the disbelievers on that Day, including the testimony of the angels, the prophets, and leaders of their respective religious communities as well as the testimony of even their own skin and limbs against themselves (see 24:24; 36:65; 41:20; Z). Witnessing translates mashhad, which most literally denotes the time and place of the reckoning and judgment (Z). The verse may thus allude to the great fear that this scene or setting will induce.

38 How well they will hear and how well they will see on the Day they come unto Us. But the wrongdoers, today, are in manifest error.

38 On the Day of Resurrection and Judgment, the disbelievers will hear and see keenly, in contrast to their spiritual “blindness” and “deafness” in earthly life to the signs of God and the teachings of the scriptures and prophets (Ṭs); regarding spiritual blindness or deafness in this life, see, for example, 2:18c as well as 2:171; 5:71; 17:97. See also 50:22, which says regarding the Last Day: You were indeed heedless of this. Now We have removed from you your cover; so today your sight is piercing. In order to point to another aspect of existence in the Hereafter, a different metaphor of blindness is used in 20:125, where it is said that those who were spiritually blind in this life will be raised . . . blind as a testament to their blindness in earthly life (see 20:124–27c). Even if the hearing and seeing of the disbelievers will be strong on this Day, it will be of no benefit to them, just as believing on this Day brings no benefit to those who were not believers in earthly life; see, for example, 40:84–85 (Ṭ, Ṭs).

39 And warn them of the Day of Regret, when the matter will have been decreed, while they are in a state of heedlessness and believe not.

39 Here the Prophet is instructed to warn the Quraysh of the Day of Regret—a descriptive reference to the Day of Resurrection and Judgment found only in this verse, although the idea that one’s evil deeds will be a source of regret in the Hereafter is mentioned, for example, in 2:167 and 8:36. Some commentators explain this regret by saying that those whose disbelief and evil deeds earned them a place in Hellfire will first be shown the dwellings in the Garden that had been prepared for them, had they been believers (Ṭ).

The matter will have been decreed and similar phrases are used in several verses to indicate the coming of the Last Day and Judgment (see 2:210; 6:8; 14:22). The “matter is decreed” at that point, because after the coming of the Last Day, one no longer has the opportunity to repent and mend one’s ways in a manner that would change one’s fate in the Hereafter. When the matter will have been decreed is thus a description of the point at which final and everlasting Judgment is made. According to a ḥadīth often associated with this verse, after human beings have been sent to the Garden or to Hell, God will bring forth death itself in the form of a ram and “slaughter” it before the inhabitants of both the Garden and the Fire to indicate that death can no longer change or bring an end to their respective fates (Q, Ṭ).

40 Surely We shall inherit the earth and whatsoever is upon it, and unto Us shall they be returned.

40 One of the Quranic Names of God is the Inheritor (al-Wārith); see 15:23; 28:58; and also 21:89, where He is described as the best of inheritors. God is the Inheritor insofar as all things belong to Him and thus return unto Him in the end; see 57:5: Unto Him belongs sovereignty over the heavens and the earth, and unto God are all matters returned; and 55:26–27: All upon it (the earth) passes away. And there remains the Face of thy Lord, Possessed of Majesty and Bounty.

41 And remember Abraham in the Book—verily he was truthful, a prophet—

41 Truthful translates ṣiddīq, a word that also means “sincere” or “loyal.” The Quran also uses this term to describe Joseph (12:46), Idrīs (v. 56), and Mary (5:75). The plural, ṣiddiqūn/īn, is used for those who believe earnestly in God and the prophets (57:19), and the ṣiddiqūn are counted together with the prophets, the witnesses (or martyrs), and the righteous as those whom God blesses (4:69). According to al-Rāzī, the term refers to those who are honest by nature and habit, but may also refer to those who are constantly confirming the truth (regarding this term, see also 4:69–70c). Abraham is said to have been truthful in his speech, his promises, and his deeds (Ṭ).

Islamic tradition makes a distinction between the title prophet (nabī), which pertains to all those given a message from God—of either glad tidings or warning, or both—to deliver to their people, and “messenger” (rasūl), which refers to those prophets who have brought a new revelation or religious law for their people. All messengers are prophets, but not all prophets are messengers. The two terms are more distinct in meaning in Islamic tradition than they are in the Quran, however, where certain prophets, such as Hūd and other Arabian non-Biblical prophets, who were given only a message of warning and not a new religion or scripture, are referred to as “messenger” (rasūl) rather than “prophet” (nabī; see 7:67; 26:125, 143). Abraham is considered both a messenger and a prophet in Islamic tradition, but only the title “prophet” is used explicitly for Abraham in the Quran itself. That Abraham is also a messenger (rasūl) according to the traditional definition may be implicit in 4:163–65 and in his having been given scriptures in 53:36–37 and 87:19.

42 when he said unto his father, “O my father! Why do you worship that which neither hears nor sees, nor can avail you in any way?”

42 This verse begins one of several Quranic accounts of Abraham’s confrontation with his father, Azār (6:74), and his people regarding their idolatry; see also 6:76–83; 21:51–67; 26:69–87; 37:84–96; 43:26–28. In this verse, Abraham presents an argument against idolatry that is repeated in various ways throughout the Quran, namely, that it is illogical to worship something that can neither hear nor see (see 7:194–96c). Al-Rāzī elaborates further on this argument regarding the futility of worshipping idols or false deities, noting that if the idols cannot see or hear, they can neither distinguish those who worship them from those who do not nor hear the supplications of their devotees; moreover, to worship such as these is to worship something that is less capable than oneself (R). Some commentators indicate that the false objects of worship for Abraham’s people were simple idols (Q, Th). Al-Rāzī suggests, however, that Abraham’s people likely did not consider these idols to be powerful in themselves; rather, they may have worshipped them as representatives of the stars, which they considered to possess Divine Power, or they worshipped them as representatives of great people who they thought could act as intercessors with God on their behalf (R). The idols also cannot avail . . . in any way; that is, they cannot prevent or avert harm or bring benefit (Ṭ); cf. 21:66; 26:73.

④③ O my father! Verily knowledge has come unto me that has not come unto you. So follow me, and I shall guide you upon a sound path.

43 The knowledge that Abraham claims to possess uniquely is the spiritual knowledge that has come to him as a prophet and by which his father and his people might be guided—specifically, knowledge of the Reality of God and the Hereafter (Q). That Abraham’s father is asked here to accept spiritual guidance from his son is a clear inversion of the tribal norm and is thus one of the ways in which the Quran makes the point that spiritual authority, unlike tribal authority, is not determined by age or lineage. This point serves as an implicit response to those who would claim that their rejection of prophetic messages was done on the basis of deference to their “fathers” or to their fathers’ traditions (see, e.g., 2:170; 5:104). This is also one of several places in this sūrah where human age is shown to be irrelevant to the manifestation of God’s Will, as when the aged Zachariah and his barren wife become capable of bearing a child (vv. 4–9) and when the infant Jesus is endowed with the power to speak (vv. 30–33). The sound path is understood to mean the path of correct religion by which salvation may be attained (Q).

④④ O my father! Worship not Satan; surely Satan is disobedient toward the Compassionate.

44 Worship not Satan is understood to mean that one should not obey Satan’s promptings toward sin and evil (Q, R, Th), since Abraham’s people did not “worship” Satan directly. The commentators point out, however, that obeying another being through an act of disobedience to God is tantamount to “worshipping” that being (Q, Th), a point also discussed in 9:31c.

④⑤ O my father! Truly I fear that a punishment from the Compassionate will befall you, such that you will become a friend of Satan.”

45 Friend here translates walī, which can also mean “protector” (as it is often rendered elsewhere in this translation of the Quran) and which designates a close bond of allegiance, support, or even love. The state of being a friend (walī) of Satan may be contrasted with that of being a friend of God (walī Allāh; see 10:62–64c), a term used in the Islamic and especially the Sufi tradition to designate the sanctity or sainthood of those whose devotion to God has led them to attain a state of nearness to Him, even in this life, and who therefore may serve as channels of His Grace and Favor in this world, although not in the same way or to the same degree as those who are prophets. Analogously, those who are friends of Satan can thus be considered channels of Satan's influence and temptation in this world. When one becomes a friend or associate of Satan, one is dissociated from or repudiated by God (R, Ṭ), and this is the fate that Abraham fears, or according to some commentators "knows" (Q, Ṭ, Th), will befall his father if he persists in his worship of idols. Abraham's fear that his father will become Satan's friend may also mean that he fears that his father will end up as a companion or cohabitant with Satan in Hellfire (Q, R). It does not mean that Satan will be his friend in the literal sense, since Satan is repeatedly described as the enemy of human beings (see, e.g., 2:168; 6:142; 7:22) and in the Hereafter Satan will abandon his followers (14:22). Al-Rāzī notes that each argument in vv. 42–45 is preceded by the vocative O my father, indicating that the words he speaks are spoken out of love and earnest filial concern for the spiritual well-being of his father (R), not out of disrespect.

46 He said, "Do you reject my gods, O Abraham? If you cease not, I shall surely stone you. Take leave of me for a long while!"

46 I shall surely stone you is understood by most to mean that Abraham's father was threatening to curse him or to "stone him with words" (Q, Ṭ, Th) rather than to stone him physically, although some mention this possibility (Q), also discussed in 26:116c. His warning, Take leave of me for a long while, likely means, "Take leave of me so that you will be safe from my punishment!" (Q, Ṭ, Th).

47 He said, "Peace be upon you! I shall seek forgiveness for you from my Lord. Verily He has been gracious unto me.

47 Abraham's response, contrasting sharply with his father's threat, is Peace be upon you, which the Quran identifies as the greeting of the believers, both in this world and in Paradise; see 6:54c; 7:46–47c. It is also the response the Quran enjoins toward the ignorant and those who engage in idle talk, as in 25:63: The servants of the Compassionate are those who walk humbly upon the earth, and when the ignorant address them, say, "Peace"; and 28:55: And when they hear idle talk, they turn away therefrom and say, "Unto us our deeds, and unto you your deeds. Peace be upon you! We do not seek out the ignorant." Abraham's response is not meant as a greeting, however, but rather as an indication that he will discontinue his confrontation with his father, as he does not intend to fight him, and that his father has nothing to fear from him (Q, Ṭ). Abraham seeks forgiveness for his father here, but when it became clear to him that his father was an enemy of God, he repudiated him (9:114).

④⁴⁸ And I withdraw myself from you and that which you call upon apart from God. And I call upon my Lord; it may be that in calling upon my Lord, I will not be wretched."

48 Abraham promises here that he will heed his father's request and take leave of him; he also removes himself from all association with the idols and false deities that Abraham's father and people call upon apart from God. This is understood as his taking leave of his family to migrate to the Holy Land (Th). Wretched translates shaqiyyan, which can describe one who suffers perdition in the Hereafter. But here, as with Zachariah's similar declaration in v. 4, that Abraham will not be wretched in his calling upon God more likely means that God will answer his prayers and supplications (Ṭ). In the context of this verse, Abraham is said to have called upon his Lord to grant him family and children who would strengthen him, now that he was alone and separated from his father and his people (Q). The answer to Abraham's prayer is then recounted in the next verse, where he is given Isaac and Jacob. If this is indeed the content of Abraham's supplication, then it would be consistent with a larger theme of this sūrah, namely, God's Compassion in bestowing blessed children upon prophets and other holy persons like Zachariah and Mary. Alternately, some suggest that Abraham's prayer was that his father would be guided (Q), although this seems less likely, since according to the Quran this guidance does not come to pass.

④⁴⁹ So when he had withdrawn from them and that which they called upon apart from God, We bestowed upon him Isaac and Jacob, and each

We made a prophet.

50 And We bestowed upon them something of Our Mercy, and ordained for them a sublime, faithful renown.

49–50 Isaac and Jacob are also described as gifts bestowed upon Abraham by God in 6:84; 21:72; 29:27; see also 14:39, where it is Isaac and Ishmael who are bestowed upon Abraham, and 11:71, where Abraham’s wife is given glad tidings of Isaac, and after Isaac, of Jacob (cf. 37:101). The statement each We made a prophet is meant to include Abraham as well as Isaac and Jacob (Ṭ); Isaac and Jacob are also identified as prophets elsewhere; see 6:84–89; 6:84c. Here, Isaac and Jacob are gifts bestowed upon him to compensate Abraham for the loss of his father and his people (Ṭ), and al-Ṭabarī notes that the gift of these two prophets was far better than what he had lost.

The Mercy that is bestowed upon them by God is said by some to refer to bounty and provision in this world, such as wealth and children (Ṭ, Th), while others say that it also refers to the gifts of prophethood and revelation (Th); see 29:27c. Sublime, faithful renown is an idiomatic translation of lisāna ṣidqin ‘aliyyan, which literally means “a sublime tongue of truthfulness.” However, commentators all indicate that the phrase refers to the high reputation and sincere praise that Abraham and his family enjoyed and still enjoy among people of many creeds (Q, Ṭ, Th, Ṭs), including not only Jews, Christians, and Muslims, but also the pre-Islamic pagan Arabs, who recognized Abraham as their venerable forefather. This is an answer to Abraham’s supplication in 26:84: And make for me faithful renown (lisān ṣidq) among later generations.

The Sufi commentator Ibn ‘Ajībāh interprets this verse to mean that all those who remove themselves from worldly and created things and withdraw to the “realm of Truth” in order to witness the Truth will be rewarded with spiritual knowledge and “holy gifts.” He asserts that withdrawing from creatures is a necessary condition at the beginning of the path for Sufi disciples, but when they reach a certain level, it becomes incumbent upon them to mingle with people and be in the world, for at that point their encounters with other people will increase their knowledge and understanding (Aj). He further states that Shaykh Abu’l-Ḥasan al-Shādhilī (d. 656/1258) cited this verse when commenting that the practice of solitude leads to “the lifting of veils, the descent of Mercy, the realization of love, and ‘a truthful tongue’ in speech.” The reference to “truthful tongue,” although used in al-Shādhilī’s statement to mean honesty and veracity, appears to be an allusion to lisāna ṣidqin (lit. “tongue of truthfulness”), which in the present verse is used idiomatically to mean great renown.

51 And remember Moses in the Book. Verily he was devoted, and he was a messenger, a prophet.

51 For other major accounts of Moses, see 2:49–74; 5:20–26; 7:103–55; 10:75–93; 18:60–82; 20:9–97; 26:10–67; 27:7–14; 28:3–46; 43:46–56; 79:15–26. Moses was devoted (mukhlis) to the One God, worshipping Him alone (IK, Q, Ṭ, Ṭs, Z), without hypocrisy (Q, Z). True devotion or sincerity, especially for Sufis, means to worship God only for the sake of God, not for the sake of the blessings of this world or the next that one might attain through such worship (Aj); regarding devotion, see 7:29c; 31:32c; 98:5c. Mukhlis can also be read as mukhlas, meaning “specially chosen” (IK, Q, Ṭ, Ṭs, Z); both can be considered correct according to al-Ṭabarī. Moses is a messenger, since he brings his people a new scripture (the Torah) and through it a new Divine Law; he is a prophet to both the Israelites and Pharaoh’s people in that he brings messages of warning to both.

52 We called out to him from the right side of the Mount, and drew him nigh in intimate discourse.

52 The Mount here, as elsewhere, refers to Mt. Sinai (Ṭūr Sīnīn); see 2:63–64c. From the right side of the Mount refers to the side of the mountain that was on the right as Moses approached it from Midian and saw the burning bush in the distance (IK, Q, Ṭ, Ṭs); see 20:10; 27:7; 28:29. The right side of the Mount is sometimes used in the Islamic mystical tradition as a symbol for the innermost dimension of the heart (K), which Sufis often speak of as the place of Divine Self-Revelation and the locus of intimate discourse with God (K). It is said by some that God drew him nigh until he could hear the scratching of the pen on the tablets of the Torah (IK, Q, Ṭ, Ṭs; see 7:143c) or until he could hear God’s Speech directly (Ṭs). That God drew him nigh may also mean that God raised him to a station of nobility and purity (Ṭs) or to the noble station in which God spoke to him outside of the context of revelation (Q). For some, the latter interpretation is preferable, since it avoids the theological impossibility of discussing physical distance in relation to God, as God does not reside or inhere in any place or location (Ṭs). Other commentators offer a mystical description of Moses' nearness to God at this moment, saying that there are seventy thousand veils of light and darkness between the Throne and the earth, and Moses came so close that there was but a single veil between himself and God (Ṭ, Th). In intimate discourse is likely a reference to God speaking to Moses directly, as mentioned in 4:164, which is the basis for his prophetic title Kalīm Allāh ("the one who speaks to God and to whom God speaks").

53 And We bestowed upon him, from Our Mercy, his brother, Aaron, a prophet.

53 Just as John was a mercy from God to Zachariah (see 19:2–3c) and Isaac and Jacob were His gifts to Abraham (v. 49), God's gift of mercy to Moses is his brother, Aaron. Aaron was reportedly older than Moses. God's giving Aaron to Moses is understood, therefore, to mean that He gave him the gift of Aaron's prophethood (Ṭ), for Aaron was also a prophet, although not a messenger (rasūl), since he served to support the revelation brought by Moses rather than bringing a separate one. Nonetheless, Aaron along with Moses is said to have been given the Criterion, and a radiant light and a reminder for the reverent (understood as a reference to the Torah) in 21:48, and both are given Our signs and a manifest authority in 23:45; in 37:117, God gave the two of them the Book that makes clear. God's sending Aaron as a helper for Moses is said to come in response to Moses' supplication in 20:29–30, And appoint for me a helper from among my family, Aaron, my brother (Q, Ṭs), and in 28:34, And my brother, Aaron, is more eloquent than me in speech. So send him with me as a helper (IK). In certain Sufi commentaries, Aaron is said to represent the esoteric dimension of the revelation given to Moses (Rb), and his position is compared to that of ʿAlī ibn Abī Ṭālib vis-à-vis the Prophet, for example, in the famous ḥadīth in which the Prophet says to ʿAlī, "Your position in relation to me is as the position of Aaron in relation to Moses, except that there shall be no prophet after me."

54 And remember Ishmael in the Book. Verily he was true to the promise, and he was a messenger, a prophet.

55 He used to bid his people to prayer and almsgiving, and he was pleasing unto his Lord.

54–55 Ishmael, the son of Abraham, is identified as both a messenger and a prophet, presumably since he was responsible for bringing Abrahamic monotheism to the people of Arabia, and especially to the tribe of Jurhum (Ṭs), among whom he and his mother are said to have settled in Makkah. That he was true to the promise reportedly refers to his reputation for keeping his word (Ṭ, Ṭs). Many relate an account in which someone had asked Ishmael to wait for him in a specified location, and then forgot about him. Ishmael is said to have waited either several days or an entire year without moving from the spot (IK, Q, Ṭs, Z). A similar account is told about the Prophet before his prophetic mission (IK, Q). For those who consider Ishmael rather than Isaac to be the son nearly sacrificed by Abraham in 37:102, the description of Ishmael as true to the promise may also allude to his remaining steadfast during this ordeal (Q); see 37:102c.

He was pleasing (marḍiyyan) unto his Lord as a result of his obedience, righteousness, purity (Ṭ, Ṭs), and avoidance of all ugliness in his conduct (Ṭs). These qualities recall Zachariah’s prayer for a son who would be pleasing (raḍiyyan), from the same Arabic root) to God (v. 6) as well as the description of John in vv. 13–14. According to the Quran, the religious duties of prayer and almsgiving are commanded by God for all Muslims (e.g., 2:110, 177; 4:77) as well as for the People of the Book more generally (cf. 2:43, 83; 5:12; 19:31). Some say Ishmael used to command his people to perform prayer at night and give charity during the day (Ṭs); the Prophet is also told to bid his family to prayer in 20:132.

⑤⑥ And remember Idrīs in the Book. Verily he was truthful, a prophet.

⑤⑦ And We raised him to a sublime station.

56–57 Idrīs is identified as truthful (ṣiddīq) and a prophet, as is Abraham in v. 41. Idrīs is also mentioned along with Ishmael and Dhu’l-Kifl in 21:85 as among the patient. Some say that his name is derived from the root d-r-s, meaning “to study,” because of his love of studying (Q, Th, Ṭs), but others, such as al-Zamakhsharī, cast doubt on this interpretation. Idrīs is most commonly considered the great-grandfather of Noah, whose Biblical name is Enoch (Q, Ṭs, Th), but Idrīs is also sometimes identified with the Quranic Elias (Ilyās), see 6:85c; 37:123c. Given his antediluvian dates, Idrīs is said to have been the first to have written with a pen, to have had knowledge of astronomy and mathematics, and to have made sewn clothing (from animal skins; Q, Ṭs, Z); he is often referred to by the epithet Abu'l-Ḥukamā⁹ (“father of the philosophers [or sages]”) in Islamic philosophical and metaphysical works. Some say that he was the first prophet among the children of Adam (Q) and that he was given thirty scrolls (Q, Z). That God raised him to a sublime station is reported to mean that God raised him either bodily or in spirit to the fourth or sixth heaven (Q, Ṭ, Ṭs, Z); in a ḥadīth, the Prophet reports having encountered Idrīs in the fourth heaven during his miraculous Ascension (mi^crāj) through the seven heavens (Q). According to others, Idrīs has not yet died, having been raised alive, or taken directly, by God (Ṭ), much like Jesus in 4:158. His sublime station may also refer simply to his being a prophet (Z).

58 They are those whom God has blessed among the prophets of the progeny of Adam, and of those whom We carried with Noah, and of the progeny of Abraham and Israel, and of those whom We guided and chose. When the signs of the Compassionate were recited unto them, they would fall down, prostrate and weeping.

58 They refers to all of the prophets and sacred figures mentioned to this point in the sūrah (Ṭ, Z). Progeny of Adam may refer to all of these figures or specifically to Idrīs (Ṭ, Z), who otherwise would not fall into any of the other groups mentioned, since he predates Noah and Abraham. Those whom We carried with Noah refers to Abraham and his progeny, Isaac, Ishmael, and Jacob, while the progeny of . . . Israel (i.e., Jacob) refers to those sacred figures among Jacob’s descendants who are mentioned in this sūrah: Moses, Aaron, Zachariah, John, Mary, and Jesus (Ṭ, Z). When the signs—that is, the indications and proofs of God—were recited to them from the revealed Books (Ṭ), they would fall down, prostrate and weeping in submission and humility (R). Weeping is indicated in several ahādīth as the appropriate response to hearing the Quran; according to one ḥadīth, the Prophet enjoins, “Recite the Quran and weep. And if you do not weep, then make yourself weep” (Z).

With its reference to prostrating, this verse is one of fifteen verses known as sajdah (prostration) verses; upon hearing these verses recited, Muslims are enjoined to prostrate physically. (The others are 7:206; 13:15; 16:49–50; 17:107–9; 22:18; 22:77; 25:60; 27:26; 32:15; 38:24; 41:37–38; 53:62; 84:21; 96:19, though there is some disagreement as to whether the prostration after 41:37–38 and 53:62 is obligatory or supererogatory, and most consider the prostration after 38:24 to be one of thanks rather than obligation.) Prostrating and weeping in response to the recitation of the Quran can be indicative of the spiritual quality of “tenderness of heart” (riqqat al-qalb), which, according to al-Qushayrī, was shared by all the prophets. The bodily prostration of the prophets to the recitation of the signs of God is a reflection of the prostration of their inner selves before the spiritual truths they have realized (Qu). Ibn ʿAjībah says that such a response to the recitation of the Quran is characteristic of the first stage of the love of God (maḥabbah), which is later replaced by joy at hearing the Words of the Beloved, as one draws spiritually nearer to Him.

59 Then they were succeeded by a generation who neglected prayer and followed base desires. So they shall meet [the reward of] error, 59 According to Ibn ʿAbbās the generation who succeeded the prophets mentioned in v. 58 refers to the Jews (Ṭs, Z), while Mujāhid and Qatādah claim that it refers to the Muslim community at the end of time (Ṭs). Some say that “neglecting prayer” here refers to this later generation’s failure to pray at all (Ṭ, Z), but others suggest that it means that they failed to say the prayers at their appointed time or delayed in performing them (Ṭ, Ṭs, Z). Regarding the importance of performing prayers at their specified times, see 4:103 and commentary. That they shall meet [the reward of] error may be understood to mean that they will meet the requital or punishment for their error (Ṭs, Z); some thus gloss error (ghayy) here as “evil” (Ṭs). According to some, ghayy is the name of a valley, well, or river in Hell (Ṭ, Ṭs, Z).

60 save for those who repent and believe and work righteousness. It is they who shall enter the Garden, and they shall not be wronged in the least:

60 Even for those people described in v. 59, the door of repentance remains open until death (see 4:17–18c). “Believing” and “working righteousness” are repeatedly paired in the Quran as the twin bases for attaining to the Garden in the Hereafter, for both Muslims and followers of other faiths (see 2:62c; 5:69c), indicating the interconnectedness and indispensability of both faith and good works (see, e.g., 2:25; 3:57; 4:57; 7:42). For other verses asserting that God does not wrong people, see 2:272, 281; 3:25, 161; 4:49, 77, 124; 6:160; 8:60; 17:71; 23:62; 39:69.

⑥1 Gardens of Eden, those which the Compassionate promised His servants in the Unseen. Verily His Promise shall come to pass.

61 Gardens of Eden refers to the paradisaal gardens of the Hereafter; see also 9:72; 13:23; 16:31; 18:31; 20:76; 35:33; 38:50; 40:8; 98:8. They are in the Unseen because they remain hidden to human beings while they are in this world (Ṭ); see 32:17: No soul knows what comfort is kept hidden for it as a recompense for that which they used to do. In the present verse, His Promise refers to the promise that God's servants and "friends" (awliyā') will enter the Garden (Ṭ). That His Promise shall come to pass is similar to repeated assertions that God's Promise is true (see, e.g., 4:122; 10:4; 18:21).

⑥2 They shall hear no idle talk therein, but only "Peace!" And therein they shall have their provision, morning and evening.

⑥3 This is the Garden We shall bequeath unto those among Our servants who were reverent.

62–63 Cf. 56:25–26. The notion of the paradisaal Garden as a place in which there is no idle talk is mentioned in several verses (52:23; 56:25; 78:35; 88:10–11), as is the idea that the salutation with which the people of Paradise will be greeted, and with which they greet one another, is "Peace" (salām) (7:46; 10:10; 13:24; 14:23; 16:32; 33:44; 36:58; 39:73; 56:26). There they shall have their provision of food and drink and all that they desire (Ṭ), morning and evening. According to some, there is no night or midday in the Garden, as there is no darkness; "night" and "day" are thus measured in terms of the lowering and lifting of veils and the closing and opening of gates (Ṭ).

64 “We descend not, save by the Command of thy Lord. Unto Him belongs that which is before us and that which is behind us, and whatsoever lies between that, and thy Lord is not forgetful—

64 This verse was reportedly revealed when there had been an unusually long period—reportedly twelve, fifteen, or forty nights (Ṭ, Z)—during which no revelation had come to the Prophet through the Archangel Gabriel (Ṭ); see also the introduction to Sūrah 93 about 93:1–3, in which the Quran responds to the Prophet’s concern over an earlier hiatus in the revelation. At the time of the revelation of the present verse, the Prophet was being questioned by those around him about the inhabitants of the cave and Dhu’l-Qarnayn (the Quranic accounts of these figures are found in Sūrah 18) as well as about the Spirit. The Prophet did not know the answers to these questions and was hoping for some revelation to guide him; the fact that for a while no revelation came concerned him and caused the idolaters to suggest that God had abandoned him (Z). When the archangel returned, the Prophet reportedly asked, “What prevents you from visiting us more than you do?” (Ṭ, Ṭs). The present verse is understood to represent Gabriel’s direct response to the Prophet’s question; the We in the opening line refers to the archangel (Z). Gabriel indicates that he comes to the Prophet only upon the Command of thy Lord; cf. 17:85, where the Spirit, sometimes identified with Gabriel, is said to be from the Command of God; and 97:4, where it is said that the angels and the Spirit descend, by the leave of their Lord. A minority interpretation understands this verse to convey the words of the people of the Garden, since they do not settle in the Garden save by God’s Command (Ṭs).

Various interpretations are given for that which is before us and that which is behind (or beyond) us. Some indicate that this pair of phrases refers to the temporal distinction between the affairs of this world and the Hereafter, to the time before the creation of human beings and the time after their annihilation, or simply to the past and the future, where the future includes what remains of this life as well as the Hereafter (Ṭ, Ṭs). Others suggest that this phrase refers to the spatial distinction between earth and Heaven (Ṭs). Whatsoever lies between may refer to the period between the “two blowings” of the trumpet (Ṭs)—the first of which will bring the world to an end and the second will wake the dead (see 39:68c)—or to the period of our earthly lives (Ṭs). God’s possession of these three temporal or spatial dimensions indicates His encompassing all time and space. Thy Lord is not forgetful is meant to assure the Prophet that God has not “forgotten” him (cf. 93:3, where it is said that the Prophet has not been forsaken); rather, any interval between the revelations is providential and for his ultimate benefit (Z).

65 the Lord of the heavens and the earth and whatsoever is between them. So worship Him and be steadfast in His worship. Dost thou know any who can be named alongside Him?”

65 Lord of the heavens and the earth is a title for God found also in 13:16; 17:102; 18:14; 21:56; 26:24; 37:5; 38:66; 43:82; 44:7; 45:36; 78:37. Dost thou know any who can be named alongside Him? means: “Is there any who is His equal or His like in generosity and bounty?” (Ṭ) or “Is there any partner or associate who can be named alongside Him?” (Ṭ). The question is purely rhetorical, indicating that no one should be called “God” except Him, and thus it is not right that idols or false deities should be referred to as “gods” (Z). Some commentators suggest that this verse is meant to establish that no one other than God should be called al-Raḥmān (R, Z), a Divine Name that, as already mentioned, is used repeatedly for God throughout this sūrah.

66 Man says, “When I am dead, shall I be brought forth alive?”

67 Does man not remember that We created him before, when he was naught?

66–67 In several other verses, similar rhetorical questions are posed by the idolaters in order to dismiss the idea of resurrection after death, followed by similar responses indicating that God’s ability to create human beings the first time should be sufficient proof that He can do it again: 17:49–51; 17:98–99; 36:78–79; see also 17:49–51c.

68 And by thy Lord, We shall surely gather them and the satans, and We shall surely bring them around Hell on their knees.

68 The Quran mentions the disbelievers as allies or associates of satans in several verses (2:14; 6:121; 7:30), for God has made the satans the friends of those who believe not (7:27). These satans can also be either human beings or jinn (see, e.g., 6:112). That the disbelievers and the satans who inspire them shall be brought to Hell together is consistent with other verses indicating that God will fill Hell with Satan and those who follow him all together (see, e.g., 7:18c; 38:85). They are brought around Hell on their knees, a posture reflecting their state of fear, lowliness, and powerlessness in the face of impending judgment and punishment (R, Z); see also v. 72, where God leaves the wrongdoers in the Fire on their knees, and 45:28, where on the Last Day thou wilt see every community upon its knees.

69 Then indeed We shall pluck out from every group whosoever among them was most insolent toward the Compassionate.

70 Then We shall surely know those who most deserve to burn therein.

69–70 From every group means from every religious community or nation (ummah; Ṭ). Here and in 6:159, the reference is to communities or groups who have fallen into error or schism. Those who are most insolent and thus who most deserve to burn are said by many to be the leaders of those communities in error, who are not only astray themselves, but who lead their communities astray as well, and so are deserving of greater punishment (R, Ṭs, Z); see 11:19–20; 11:20–22c. Others suggest that the most insolent refers to those who are most stubborn in their rejection of God and in disobedience to Him (R, Ṭ) or to those guilty of the worst offenses, such as idolatry (shirk) or disbelief (kufr); these people will enter the Fire first (Ṭ).

71 And there is not one of you, but that he will approach it. It is, with thy Lord, a decree determined.

72 Then We shall save those who are reverent and leave the wrongdoers therein, on their knees.

71–72 Vv. 69–70 describe the disbelievers, specifically, as huddled on their knees in the Fire, but vv. 71–72 suggest that all people, both the pious and the iniquitous, will approach it, that is, the Fire of Hell (Ṭ). Several commentators state that when the righteous “pass through” Hell, its flames will subside or become cool for them, so that they will not even be aware of having passed through them (Bd, Ṭ, Z); or that they will enter the fire, but they will then emerge from it because of their good deeds (Ṭ). Others assert that the Fire will not touch the righteous at all as they pass through Hell (Mw), or that only the disbelievers are being addressed in this verse (Ṭ). According to some, the righteous approaching the Fire refers to their suffering fevers and illnesses in this world (Ṭ, Z). Still others suggest that the righteous believers are made to pass through the Fire, so that they may know the extent of God’s Bounty and Favor toward them and can thus enjoy greater happiness in the Garden (Ṭs). In a ḥadīth, the Prophet declares that none of those present with the Muslims at the Battle of Badr (2/624) and Ḥudaybiyah (6/628) will enter the Fire. The Prophet’s wife Ḥafṣah then asked him about v. 71, indicating all would approach the Fire, and he responded by continuing to recite v. 72, which states that God shall save those who are reverent (Ṭ).

73 And when Our signs are recited unto them as clear proofs, those who disbelieve say unto those who believe, “Which of the two groups is better in station or fairer in company?”

73 In the Makkan context in which this sūrah was revealed, those who disbelieve are the idolatrous Quraysh, while those who believe are the Companions of the Prophet (Ṭ). The Makkan idolaters boast of their being better in station, that is, having better residences and living conditions (Ṭ, Ṭs), and fairer in company, meaning that they have wealthier or more socially prominent friends and associates. The Makkan idolaters assume that what they have enjoyed in this regard on earth they will also enjoy in the Hereafter (Ṭs); see 19:77–78c.

74 How many a generation We destroyed before them who were fairer in [their] furnishings and in outward appearance.

74 The exclamation How many a generation We destroyed before them is repeated in identical or similar form in several verses throughout the Quran as a warning, usually directed toward the Makkian Quraysh, that their earthly wealth and status will not keep them safe from God's Punishment. Previous generations or "towns" were destroyed for their wrongdoing, despite having a better earthly provision and material situation than the Makkans; see 6:6; 7:4; 17:17; 19:98; 21:11; 22:45; 28:58; 38:3; 44:37; 47:13; 50:36. In the present verse, the reference to the destruction of those who were fairer in [their] furnishings (or material possessions) and in outward appearance is a response to the implicit claim of the disbelievers in v. 73 that they were superior to the believers in station and in company.

75 Say, "Whosoever is in error, the Compassionate will extend his term till, when they see that which they have been promised, be it the punishment or the Hour, they will know whose position is worse, and whose host is weaker."

75 If neither wealthy living conditions nor prominent associates can protect one from God's Punishment (vv. 73–74), neither can the apparent blessing of longevity. Although God may give some people long life as an opportunity for them to reflect in a way that will bring them to belief and righteousness (see 35:37), here, as in many other verses, the Quran warns that God's prolonging the lives or delaying the destruction of some disbelievers and wrongdoers may not necessarily be a blessing. Rather, it may be an opportunity for them to wander even farther astray and to increase in sin (see 2:15; 3:178; 6:110; 7:182–83). Moreover, this temporary respite will only make their being seized in the end all the more sudden and unexpected (13:32; 22:44). Be it the punishment or the Hour means that their sudden end may come through either the earthly destruction of their particular community or the universal onset of the events of the Last Day and Final Judgment.

76 God increases in guidance those who are rightly guided. And that which endures—righteous deeds—are better in reward with thy Lord, and better in return.

76 That God increases in guidance those who are already rightly guided is also mentioned or implied in 18:13 and 47:17. Similarly God increases in faith those who already believe (9:124; 48:4; 74:31); yet for those in whose hearts is a disease, God increases them in disease (2:10). Such verses point to a certain nexus between the role of Divine and human will in the determination of an individual's moral destiny. This is consistent with other verses suggesting that God leads people astray who have already chosen the paths of disbelief or iniquity (see 2:26; 6:125; 40:34, 74), most explicitly by His abandoning them to their own misguidance (Z).

God may increase people in guidance by helping them in acts of obedience and granting them success in their attempts to please Him through righteous deeds (Ṭs, Z) as well as by bestowing various (spiritual or material) favors that will guide them toward virtue and virtuous deeds (Ṭs). It may also mean that God gives them greater certainty and resolve regarding the guidance that they have already been given and that He continues to increase them in guidance and certitude by revealing new signs or verses (Q). Related to this theme, some commentators interpret this verse historically, suggesting that it refers to God's guiding the believers during the lifetime of the Prophet in new ways through successive revelations, which sometimes entailed the abrogation of earlier Quranic rulings by later ones, offering new guidance on particular matters in order to meet the changing needs of the nascent Islamic community (Ṭ, Ṭs); on the question of the abrogation of certain Quranic rulings, see 2:106c.

Regarding the enduring reward and benefit of righteous deeds in comparison to the material goods of this world, see also 18:46; 28:60; 42:36. In the context of this verse, righteous deeds is sometimes glossed as a reference to obligatory prayer or to other, supererogatory prayers and forms of praising God (Z). Such deeds are better in return than the station and company of the idolaters mentioned in v. 73, since good deeds lead to reward in both this world and the next (Ṭs).

77 Hast thou not considered the one who disbelieves in Our signs, and says, "I shall be given wealth and children."

78 Has he penetrated the Unseen, or made a pact with the Compassionate?

77-78 Wealth and children are mentioned repeatedly in the Quran as emblematic of the good things of this world (see, e.g., 9:69; 17:6; 18:46), but also as one of its challenges (see 64:14). This verse was reportedly revealed in response to a Makkan leader and idolater, al-^ʿĀṣ ibn Wā'il (father of ^ʿAmr ibn al-^ʿĀṣ), who owed money to one of the Companions of the Prophet. When resurrection was mentioned to him in conjunction with a request that he repay his debt to the Companion, al-^cĀṣ mockingly replied that if he were indeed to be resurrected, he would be resurrected possessing wealth and children and so would be able to repay his debt then (Ṭ, Ṭs, W). Some say that the disbeliever who spoke these words was al-Walīd ibn al-Mughīrah (Ṭs), although this statement might also be intended to convey an attitude common among other disbelievers and thus to apply generally.

The Unseen refers to all that is beyond ordinary and external human means of knowing or understanding (see 6:59c), that is, beyond the external senses and the conjectures based upon them. In this context, it refers specifically to the realities of the next world. Although God may reveal something of the Unseen to prophets or others, God alone possesses the keys of the Unseen, none knows them but He (6:59), and None in the heavens or on the earth know the Unseen, save God (27:65). The question about whether the disbeliever has made a pact with the Compassionate means, according to some, “Has he believed in God and acted upon His Commands and avoided what He has prohibited?” (Ṭ), such that he might merit such reward in the Hereafter; or “Has he made a pact that he would enter the Garden?” (Ṭs). Similar rhetorical questions about possessing knowledge of the Unseen, or having a special pact or covenant with God are found in 2:80 and 53:35, as a challenge to those who glibly assert that they expect to find bliss or escape punishment in the Hereafter.

79 Nay, but We shall record that which he says, and We shall prolong for him the punishment.

80 And We shall inherit from him that which he claims, and he will come unto Us alone.

79–80 Nay is the response to the rhetorical question in v. 78 and is meant to indicate that the disbeliever in that verse does not have knowledge of the Unseen or a pact with God (Ṭ). God will prolong . . . the punishment of the disbeliever, because he has compounded his disbelief with lies and vain claims (Ṭ). God shall inherit from him that which he claims; that is, God will “inherit” his wealth and his children (Ṭ, Ṭs), since God is the Inheritor (see v. 40; 15:23; 21:89; 28:58) and all things return to Him. In the Hereafter, the disbeliever will come unto God alone, that is, devoid of the wealth and children that were a source of honor and security for him in this world (Ṭ, Ṭs). Regarding human beings returning to God alone, see v. 95;

6:94c.

81 And they have taken gods apart from God, that they might be a strength for them.

82 Nay, but they will disavow their worship, and they will become an opponent unto them.

81–82 The disbelievers hope that the gods apart from God that they worship will be a strength for them, that is, that they will defend them against or deliver them from God’s Punishment or any harm or evil that God might bring upon them (Ṭ), or that they might be their intercessors with God (Ṭs). According to the Quran, this is a vain hope, however, for in 39:38 the Prophet is told: Say, “Then have you considered those upon whom you call, apart from God? If God desires some harm for me, could they remove His Harm, or if He desires some mercy, could they withhold His Mercy?” Say, “God suffices me; in Him trust those who trust”; and 10:107 states: And if God should touch thee with affliction, none can remove it save He.

Rather than being a strength for the idolaters, the gods they have taken apart from God will disavow those who worshipped them and indeed become an opponent to their former worshippers (Ṭ, Ṭs); see 2:166–67; 6:94; 7:37; 28:63–64; 40:74, 84. Alternately, the verse may be read to mean that the idolaters will disavow and oppose their idols and false deities on the Day of Judgment in an attempt to avoid punishment (Ṭs).

83 Hast thou not considered how We unleash the satans on the disbelievers, to incite them cunningly?

84 So hasten not against them; verily We are counting for them a number.

83–84 That God will unleash the satans may mean simply that God does not hold them back from the disbelievers (Z) as a punishment for their disbelief. Others assert that the verse refers to God’s giving the satans authority over the disbelievers (R). To incite them cunningly means to mislead, tempt, or seduce them into disobeying God (R, Ṭ, Z); this is similar to 17:64, where God tells Iblīs, Incite whomsoever thou canst among them with thy voice (Q, R; see commentary on this verse). The Prophet and the believers should not hasten . . . against the disbelievers, meaning that they should not attempt to hurry their demise by seeking their punishment or destruction, for God may be postponing their destruction in order to give them the opportunity to manifest their ultimate inner character and destiny (see 19:75c). That God is counting for them a number means that He is taking full account of all of their deeds, so that He may recompense them accordingly (R, Ṭ), or that their breaths, years, and terms are numbered (R, Ṭ), that is, finite and ever nearing their end.

85 On the Day We shall gather the reverent to the Compassionate as an honored delegation, 86 and We shall drive the guilty into Hell as a thirsty herd.

85–86 On the Day—that is, the Last Day—the reverent shall come to God as an honored delegation. Some describe the reverent arriving as if riding on splendid camels rather than walking on foot (IK, R, Ṭ), while the guilty shall be like beasts of burden themselves, “herded” into Hell, thirsty (JJ), and in search of water (Bḍ) they will never find.

87 They have no power of intercession, save the one who has made a pact with the Compassionate.

87 The Quran limits the possibilities of intercession in the Hereafter in various ways. Here intercessors are those who have made a pact with the Compassionate—that is, those who believe in the One God and His Messenger and follow His commands (R, Ṭ, Z). Elsewhere, it is said that none may intercede except those who have received God’s permission (2:255; 20:109) or with whose word He is content (20:109) or who have borne witness to the truth knowingly (43:86); regarding intercession, see 2:48c; 2:255c. Despite the limitations on who may intercede, the present verse also affirms that even those who are guilty of major sins may benefit from the intercession of those who have made a pact with the Compassionate (R).

88 And they say, “The Compassionate has taken a child.”

89 You have indeed asserted a terrible thing.

90 The heavens are well-nigh rent thereby, and the earth split asunder, and the mountains made to fall down in ruins,

91 that they should claim for the Compassionate a child.

88–91 Cf. 21:26. Throughout the Quran, various claims by different religious communities that God has a child are rejected; see 6:101–2c. That the heavens and the earth are well-nigh rent by such claims is meant to indicate that all creatures, except certain human beings and jinn, are rooted in the awareness of God’s Oneness and are terrified of shirk, or the associating of partners with God (IK, T̄). In the face of such claims that God has a child, the mountains nearly fall down in ruins in anger for God’s sake (T̄). The Quran indicates that all creatures have an existential awareness of God and a relationship with Him, even seemingly inanimate natural phenomena; see, for example, 2:74, where stones crash down for the fear of God; and 17:44: The seven heavens, and the earth, and whosoever is in them glorify Him. And there is no thing, save that it hymns His praise, though you do not understand their praise. The heavens and earth are also described as split or rent asunder on the Last Day; see 50:44; 73:18; 82:1.

92 It is not fitting for the Compassionate to take a child.

92 See 6:101–c as well as 112:3, which says of God, He begets not, nor was He begotten. That it is not fitting for the Compassionate to take a child is said by some to mean that such a thing is impossible and inconceivable (R).

93 There is none in the heavens and on the earth, but that it comes unto the Compassionate as a servant.

94 He has taken account of them, and numbered them exactly.

95 And each of them shall come unto Him on the Day of Resurrection, alone.

93–95 That every created reality comes unto the Compassionate as a servant is another way of saying that God is the Lord (Rabb) of all things, which are therefore servants in relation to Him. That all who are in the heavens (the angels) and on the earth (human beings and jinn) are His servants is to say that they all, ultimately, worship Him; cf. 51:56: I did not create jinn and mankind, save to worship Me.

That God has taken account of and numbered His creatures means that He knows the number of all His creatures (Ṭ) and, by implication, also their nature, their destiny, and their essence. It may also refer to His Knowledge of the finite terms of their existence, for everything with Him is according to a measure (13:8; see also 42:27). Some Islamic philosophers, such as Ibn Sīnā, argued that God’s Knowledge of things, while all-encompassing, was nonetheless a general knowledge and thus God knew the “particulars” of things only in a universal way. This view was rejected by the theologians (mutakallimūn), who claimed that God has knowledge of all particulars as particulars. That God “takes account of” and “numbers” all that is in the heavens and on the earth is one of several Quranic statements that speaks directly to God’s Knowledge of particulars (R); see also 6:59: He knows what is on land and sea; no leaf falls but that He knows it, nor any seed in the dark recesses of the earth, nor anything moist or dry, but that it is inscribed in a clear Book. In v. 95, each of them—that is, each being in the heavens and on the earth (v. 93)—will come unto God alone, in the sense that all will be resurrected without anyone to aid or defend them before God, Who will judge and do as He wills on that Day (Ṭ).

96 Surely those who believe and perform righteous deeds, for them shall the Compassionate ordain love.

96 Love here translates wudd, rather than ḥubb, the word usually used elsewhere for “love” in the Quran (see 2:165c; 5:54c), but commentators generally understand these two words as synonymous (Ṭ). That God shall ordain love for those who believe and perform righteous deeds is understood to mean that God grants that such people will be loved in the world, particularly by God’s other believing servants (Ṭ). Al-Sulamī states that such people are beloved by their fellow

Muslims, which is none other than a manifestation of God’s Love for them. Al-Rāzī favors this interpretation, but also notes that some interpret the verse to mean that God will grant righteous believers what they love, rather than the state of being loved by others, for it is well known that the believers are often despised rather than loved by the disbelievers, and that some disbelievers are much beloved among people in this world (R). Yet he favors the first interpretation, since it is supported by a ḥadīth that says that when God loves a servant, He calls out to the Archangel Gabriel, “Verily I love so-and-so, so love him!” Gabriel then calls upon all those in Heaven to love this person, and the inclination to love this person is then made to descend upon those on earth (see also IK, Q). Some report that this verse was revealed as a consolation to °Abd al-Raḥmān ibn °Awf, who was concerned about leaving his companions in Makkah (Ṭ).

For Shiite commentators, the love that God ordains for the righteous believers is the love of and spiritual attachment (walāyah) to °Alī ibn Abī Ṭālib (Qm, Ṭb, Ṭs), for according to Shiites there are no true Muslim believers save those in whose hearts is the love of °Alī (Ṭs). According to a Shiite report, the Prophet said to °Alī, “Say, ‘O God, ordain for me a pact with Thee, and ordain for me love in the hearts of the believers.’” This verse was then revealed (Ṭs). For some Sufis, the love that God ordains here is none other than the unveiling of Divine secrets. In this vein, a well-known ḥadīth qudsī says, in part, “Verily My servant does not cease to draw nigh unto Me through supererogatory acts until I love him, and when I love him, I am the hearing with which he hears, the seeing with which he sees, the hand with which he grasps, and the foot with which he walks.” Al-Qushayrī cites a similar ḥadīth: “My servant does not cease to draw nigh unto Me until he loves Me and I love him” (Qu).

97 We have only made this easy upon thy tongue that thou mayest give glad tidings unto the reverent thereby, and that thereby thou mayest warn a contentious people.

97 God made the Quran easy upon thy tongue (cf. 44:58)—that is, on the tongue of the Prophet—by revealing it in Arabic (IK, R, Z), the native language of the Prophet and his Companions. This verse may also be read to mean, “We made this easy in thy tongue [i.e., in the Prophet’s language],” referring to the revelation of the Quran in Arabic (Z). See also 54:17, 22, 32, and 40, where the Quran is said to have been made easy to remember. Contentious translates luddan, which denotes those who are intensely but vainly argumentative and who argue on the basis of falsehood (Ṭ). The term also connotes an attitude of insolence and a certain “deafness” to hearing the truth (Ṭ).

98 How many a generation before them have We destroyed? Dost thou perceive even one of them, or hear from them a murmur?

98 The rhetorical question, How many a generation before them—that is, before the Quraysh—have We destroyed also appears in v. 74 and in several other Quranic verses; see 19:74c. The verse and the sūrah conclude by evoking powerfully the absence and silence of these destroyed peoples and is similar in tone and affect to verses that bid the Arabs (in particular) to observe the ruins of earlier peoples, whose empty dwellings were well known to them, because of their travels through the desert; cf. 3:137; 6:11; 12:109; and 27:51–52. See also 6:11c. One no longer hears from such people even a murmur (rikz), that is, not even the slightest sound (R, Ṭ).

Ṭā Hā

Ṭā Hā

Ṭā Hā is a Makkan sūrah, with the possible exception of vv. 130–31, which some consider to be Madinan (JJ), although the context of these two verses indicates that they are most likely Makkan. This sūrah was revealed after Sūrah 19, Maryam (JJ), and figures prominently in the famous conversion account of the second Caliph, ʿUmar ibn al-Khaṭṭāb (d. 23/644). Shortly before becoming Muslim, ʿUmar was intent on killing the Prophet. He encountered a Companion, who was concealing the fact that he was a Muslim, and ʿUmar told him of his plan. In order to divert ʿUmar, the Companion told him to first settle affairs with his own household, as ʿUmar’s sister and her husband had also accepted Islam. They were reciting the Quran when ʿUmar came to their home to confront them. The parchment from which they were reading, but which they hid when ʿUmar entered, contained some or all of Ṭā Hā. ʿUmar told them that he had heard them and insisted on seeing what they had been reciting. After a brief confrontation, they relented and gave him the parchment. Upon reading it, ʿUmar had a change of heart, resolved to become Muslim, and went to the Prophet to profess his faith (Ibn Hishām, al-Sīrah al-nabawiyyah [Beirut, 1999], 1:272). The Prophet is reported to have said concerning this sūrah (along with Sūrahs 2 and 3) that God’s Supreme Name (al-ism al-ʿaẓam) is to be found in it (R).

The sūrah begins with a consolation to the Prophet and speaks of God’s all-encompassing knowledge and His Most Beautiful Names. It then segues into a lengthy account of the story of Moses (vv. 9–97) that recounts many details of his life, including his encounter with God and the charge of his mission to Pharaoh, the Israelites' escape from Egypt, and the false god that the Israelites worshipped when Moses went to Mt. Sinai. Next, the sūrah transitions to discuss several aspects concerning the end of time and the Last Day, and then recounts the story of Adam's creation, temptation, banishment, and forgiveness (vv. 115–24). It then encourages the Prophet to be steadfast in the face of the Makkans' insults, recounting the Makkans' disingenuous request for a sign to be sent to the Prophet from God; and concludes with a threat to the Makkans, telling them to wait for the inevitable end, when they shall come to know who is upon the sound path and is rightly guided.

① Ṭā. Hā. ② We did not send down the Quran unto thee that thou shouldst be distressed, ③ but only as a reminder unto one who fears [God], ④ a revelation from He, Who created the earth and the high heavens. ⑤ The Compassionate mounted the Throne. ⑥ Unto Him belongs whatsoever is in the heavens and whatsoever is on the earth, whatsoever is between them, and whatsoever lies beneath the ground. ⑦ And if thou speakest aloud, verily He knows what is secret and what is more hidden still. ⑧ God, there is no god but He. Unto Him belong the Most Beautiful Names. ⑨ Hast thou heard tell of Moses, ⑩ when he saw a fire and said unto his family, “Stay here. Verily I perceive a fire. Perhaps I shall bring you a brand therefrom, or find guidance at the fire”? ⑪ Then when he came to it, he was called, “O Moses! ⑫ Verily I am thy Lord. Take off thy sandals. Truly thou art in the holy valley of Ṭuwā. ⑬ I have chosen thee, so listen to what is revealed. ⑭ Truly I am God, there is no god but I. So worship Me, and perform the prayer for the remembrance of Me. ⑮ Surely the Hour is coming. I would keep it hidden, that every soul might be recompensed for its endeavors. ⑯ So let not he who believes not and follows his caprices turn thee away from it, or thou wilt perish. ⑰ And what is that in thy right hand, O Moses?” ⑱ He said, “It is my staff. I lean upon it and beat down leaves for my sheep. And I have other uses for it.” ⑲ He said, “Cast it, O Moses!” ⑳

So he cast it, and behold, it was a serpent, moving swiftly. 21 He said, "Take hold of it, and fear not! We shall restore it to its former way. 22 And enclose thy hand in thy side. It will come forth white, without blemish, as another sign, 23 that We may show thee some of Our greatest signs. 24 Go unto Pharaoh! Truly he has rebelled!" 25 He said, "My Lord! Expand for me my breast! 26 Make my affair easy for me, 27 and untie a knot from my tongue, 28 that they may understand my speech. 29 And appoint for me a helper from among my family, 30 Aaron, my brother. 31 Through him, increase my strength, 32 and make him a partner in my affair, 33 that we may glorify Thee much 34 and remember Thee much. 35 Truly Thou dost ever see us." 36 He said, "Thou hast been granted thy request, O Moses! 37 And We have indeed shown thee favor another time, 38 when We revealed to thy mother that which was revealed: 39 'Cast him into the ark and cast it into the sea. Then the sea will throw him upon the bank. An enemy unto Me and an enemy unto him shall take him.' And I cast upon thee a love from Me, that thou mightest be formed under My eye. 40 When thy sister went forth and said, 'Shall I show you one who can nurse him?' Thus We returned thee to thy mother that she might be comforted and grieve not. And thou didst slay a soul, but We saved thee from sorrow. And We tried thee with trials. Then thou didst remain some years among the people of Midian. Then thou didst come, as determined, O Moses. 41 I selected thee for Myself. 42 Go forth, thou and thy brother, with My signs, and tire not in the remembrance of Me. 43 Go, both of you, unto Pharaoh! Truly he has rebelled! 44 Yet speak unto him gently, that haply he may remember or have fear." 45 They said, "Our Lord! Truly we fear that he will deal hastily with us, or that he will transgress." 46 He said, "Fear not! Truly I am with ye twain; I hear and I see. 47 So come unto him and say, 'Truly we are two messengers of your Lord. So send forth with us the Children of Israel and punish them not. We have brought you a sign from your Lord. Peace be upon him who follows guidance! 48 Truly it has been revealed unto us that punishment shall come upon him who denies and turns away.'" 49 He said, "So who is the Lord of you two, O Moses?" 50 He said, "Our Lord is He Who gives everything its creation, then guides [it].” 51 He said, “What, then, of former generations?” 52 He said, “Knowledge thereof is with my Lord in a Book—He errs not, nor does He forget— 53 the One Who made the earth a cradle for you, and threaded paths for you therein. He sent down water from the sky, wherewith We brought forth diverse kinds of vegetation [saying], 54 ‘Eat and pasture your cattle.’” Truly in that are signs for those possessed of intelligence. 55 From it We created you, and unto it We shall bring you back, and from it We shall bring you forth a another time. 56 We indeed showed him Our signs, all of them; yet he denied and refused. 57 He said, “Have you come to us in order to expel us from our land with your sorcery, O Moses? 58 But we shall surely produce for you sorcery like it. So appoint a tryst between you and us at a neutral place, which neither you nor we shall fail to keep.” 59 He said, “Your tryst shall be on the Day of Adornment; let the people be gathered when the sun has risen high.” 60 Then Pharaoh turned away and devised his scheme. Then he came. 61 Moses said to them, “Woe unto you! Do not fabricate a lie against God, lest He should destroy you with a punishment. Whosoever fabricates [lies] has failed.” 62 So they debated their affair among themselves and kept secret their intimate discourse. 63 They said, “These two are sorcerers who wish to expel you from your land with their sorcery and to do away with your exemplary way of life. 64 So gather your plot, then come in ranks. Today, whosoever gains the upper hand will surely have prospered!” 65 They said, “O Moses! Either you cast, or we shall be the first to cast.” 66 He said, “Nay, you cast.” Then, behold, their ropes and their staffs appeared to him, through their sorcery, to move swiftly, 67 whereat Moses conceived a fear in his soul. 68 We said, “Fear not! Truly thou art uppermost. 69 Cast that which is in thy right hand; it will devour what they have produced. They have produced only a sorcerer’s trick. And the sorcerer prospers not, wherever he may go.” 70 Then the sorcerers were cast down in prostration. They said, “We believe in the Lord of Aaron and Moses.” 71 He said, “Do you believe in Him before I give you leave? He is indeed your chief, who has taught you sorcery. Now I shall surely cut off your hands and your feet on alternate sides, and I shall surely crucify you on the trunks of palm trees. And you will surely know which of us [inflicts] a more severe and lasting punishment!” 72 They said, “We shall never prefer you to the clear proofs that have come to us, nor to Him who originated us. So decree whatsoever you decree; you only decree in the life of this world. 73 Truly we believe in our Lord, that He may forgive us our sins and the sorcery that you compelled us to perform. And God is better and more lasting!” 74 Verily, whosoever comes unto his Lord guilty, surely his shall be Hell, wherein he neither dies nor lives. 75 But whosoever comes unto Him as a believer, having performed righteous deeds, theirs shall be the highest ranks— 76 Gardens of Eden with rivers running below, abiding therein. That is the recompense of one who purifies himself. 77 And We indeed revealed unto Moses, “Set forth with My servants by night and strike for them a dry path through the sea. Be not afraid of being overtaken, and fear not.” 78 Then Pharaoh pursued them with his hosts, and they were overwhelmed by the sea that enshrouded them. 79 Pharaoh led his people astray, and guided them not. 80 O Children of Israel! We have saved you from your enemies and have appointed a tryst for you on the right side of the Mount. And We sent down unto you manna and quails. 81 Eat of the good things We have provided you, but exceed not the limits therein, lest My Wrath be unleashed upon you. And he upon whom My Wrath is unleashed has been cast into ruin. 82 And surely I am most forgiving toward the one who repents and believes and works righteousness, and thereafter is rightly guided. 83 “What hast made thee hasten from thy people, O Moses?” 84 He said, “They are close upon my footsteps, and I hastened unto Thee, my Lord, that Thou mayest be content.” 85 He said, “Truly We tried thy people in thine absence, and the Samaritan led them astray.” 86 Then Moses returned to his people, angry and aggrieved. He said, “O my people! Did your Lord not make you a goodly Promise? Did the pact seem too long for you? Or did you desire that the anger of your Lord be unleashed upon you, such that you failed your tryst with me?” 87 They said, “We did not fail our tryst with thee of our own will, but we were laden with the burden of the people’s ornaments. So we cast them [into the pit], and thus did the Samaritan throw also.” 88 Then he brought forth for them a calf as a mere body that lowed, and they said, “This is your god and the god of Moses, though he has forgotten.” 89 Have they not considered that it does not respond to them with words, and that it has no power over what harm or benefit may come to them? 90 And Aaron had indeed said to them earlier, “O my people! You are merely being tested by this, and truly your Lord is the Compassionate. So follow me and obey my command!” 91 They said, “We shall not cease to be its devotees till Moses returns unto us.” 92 He said, “O Aaron! What hindered thee, when thou didst see them going astray, 93 that thou didst not follow me? Didst thou disobey my command?” 94 He said, “O son of my mother! Seize not my beard or my head. Truly I feared that thou wouldst say, ‘Thou hast caused division among the Children of Israel, and thou hast not heeded my word.’” 95 He said, “What was your purpose, O Samaritan?” 96 He said, “I saw that which they saw not. So I took a handful [of dust] from the footsteps of the messenger, and I cast it. Thus did my soul prompt me.” 97 He said, “Be gone! In this life it shall be yours to say, ‘Touch [me] not!’ And truly for you there is a tryst that you cannot fail to keep. Now observe your god, to whom you remained devoted: we shall surely burn it and scatter its ashes in the sea!” 98 Your only god is God, besides whom there is no other god. He encompasses all things in knowledge. 99 Thus do We narrate unto thee some of the accounts of those who have come before. And We have given thee a Reminder from Our Presence. 100 Whosoever turns away from it, verily he shall bear it as a burden on the Day of Resurrection, 101 abiding therein. How evil a burden for them on the Day of Resurrection— 102 the Day the trumpet shall be blown, and We shall gather the guilty on that Day, blind. 103 They will whisper among themselves, “You have tarried only ten [days].” 104 We know well that which they will say, when the most exemplary of them in conduct will say, “You have tarried only a day!” 105 They ask thee about the mountains. Say, “My Lord shall scatter them as ashes. 106 And He will leave it a barren plain. 107 You will see no crookedness or curvature therein.” 108 On that Day they shall follow a herald in whom there is no crookedness. And voices will be humbled before the Compassionate, and you will hear naught but a murmur. 109

On that Day intercession will be of no benefit, save [that of] those whom the Compassionate has granted leave and with whose word He is content. 110 He knows that which is before them and that which is behind them, and they encompass Him not in knowledge. 111 Faces will be humbled before the Living, the Self-Subsisting. And whosoever bears wrongdoing will have failed. 112 But whosoever performs righteous deeds and is a believer, he shall fear neither wrong nor deprivation. 113 Thus have We sent it down as an Arabic Quran, and We have varied the threat therein that haply they may be reverent, or [that] it might occasion remembrance for them. 114 Exalted is God, the True Sovereign. Be not in haste with the Quran before its revelation is completed for thee, but say, “My Lord! Increase me in knowledge!” 115
And We indeed made a pact with Adam aforetime, but he forgot. And We found no resoluteness in him. 116 And when We said unto the angels, “Prostrate yourselves before Adam,” they prostrated, save Iblīs; he refused. 117 We said, “O Adam! Truly this is an enemy unto thee and thy wife. So let him not expel the two of you from the Garden, such that thou wouldst be wretched. 118 Truly it is for thee that thou shalt neither hunger therein, nor go naked, 119 and that thou shalt neither thirst therein, nor suffer from the heat of the sun.” 120 Then Satan whispered to him. He said, “O Adam! Shall I show thee the Tree of Everlastingness and a kingdom that never decays?” 121 So they both ate therefrom. Then their nakedness was exposed to them, and they began to sew together the leaves of the Garden. Adam disobeyed his Lord, and so he erred. 122
Then his Lord chose him, and relented unto him and guided [him]. 123
He said, “Get down from it, both you together, each of you an enemy to the other. And if guidance should come unto you from Me, then whosoever follows My Guidance shall not go astray, nor be wretched.
124 But whosoever turns away from the remembrance of Me, truly his shall be a miserable life, and We shall raise him blind on the Day of Resurrection.” 125 He will say, “My Lord! Why hast Thou raised me blind, when I used to see?” 126 He will say, “Thus it is. Our signs came unto you, but you forgot them. Even so, this Day shall you be forgotten!” 127 Thus do We recompense whosoever is prodigal and believes not in the signs of his Lord. And surely the punishment of the Hereafter is more severe and more lasting. 128 Does it not serve as guidance for them, how many generations We destroyed before them, amid whose dwellings they walk? Truly in that are signs for those possessed of intelligence. 129 And were it not for a Word that had already gone forth from thy Lord and a term appointed, it would be inevitable. 130 So bear patiently that which they say, and hymn the praise of thy Lord before the rising of the sun and before its setting, and in the hours of the night glorify [Him], and at the ends of the day, that haply thou mayest be content. 131 Strain not thine eyes toward the enjoyments We have granted certain classes of them, as the splendor of the life of this world, that We may test them concerning it. The provision of thy Lord is better and more lasting. 49 4 And bid thy family to prayer and be steadfast therein. We ask no provision of thee; We provide for thee. And the end belongs to reverence. 69 6 They say, “Why has he not brought us a sign from his Lord?” Has there not come unto them the clear proof of that which is in the scriptures of old? 134 Had We destroyed them with a punishment before it, they would have said, “Our Lord! If only Thou hadst sent a messenger unto us, we would have followed Thy signs before being abased and disgraced.” 135 Say, “Each is waiting, so wait! For you shall come to know those who are the companions of the sound path, and those who are rightly guided.”

1 The Arabic letters ṭā and hā are among the separated letters (al-muqattaʿāt) that are found at the beginning of twenty-nine sūrahs and whose innermost meaning, most commentators attest, is known only to God; see 2:1c. Some have said that ṭā hā could mean “O man!” (Kl, Ṭ, Ṭs) with the Prophet as the referent (Kl, TH), or that it is one of the Names of God (M) or a name of the Prophet (Kl). Since ṭā hā can be a name of the Prophet, it has become a proper name among Muslim males. According to Jaʿfar al-Şādiq, ṭā hā refers to the purity and guidance of the Household of the Prophet (ahl al-bayt; R). According to another interpretation, the ṭā refers to a tree in Paradise called Ṭūbā (see 13:29c) and the hā to an abyss (hāwiyah; see 101:9c) in Hell, which is to say that it is as if God were swearing by both the Garden and the Fire (R).

② We did not send down the Quran unto thee that thou shouldst be distressed,

2 The Quran was not given to the Prophet to cause him to be distressed over its acceptance or rejection by his people, or their belief or disbelief in his message (Q; see 15:88; 18:6; 26:3). Thus this verse relates to the wider Quranic theme of God’s addressing the prophets’ human reactions to the trials they encountered when rejected by their people (see 2:214; 11:36; 15:97–99; 21:83–84; 26:3). According to another interpretation, the Prophet had been praying all night to the point that his legs had become swollen; so this verse was revealed, conveying that the Quran was not sent to cause him to weaken and exhaust himself in acts of worship, thereby causing undue hardship upon himself (Q).

③ but only as a reminder unto one who fears [God],

3–4 But in v. 3 can mean “however,” which would indicate that v. 3 does not directly follow upon v. 2, as it would then read, “However, it is only a reminder unto one who fears [God]” (R). If it is directly connected to v. 2, then v. 3 can mean that the Quran was not revealed to the Prophet in order to cause him hardship, but rather was sent down only as a reminder unto one who fears [God] (R). In either case, one who fears refers to those who reverence God (muttaqīn), as in 2:2: This is the Book in which there is no doubt, a guidance for the reverent (R). Elsewhere, “Reminder” is considered one of the names of the Quran; see 3:58; 21:2, 7, 10, 24 (cf. 38:1).

⑤ The Compassionate mounted the Throne.

5 The Compassionate (al-Raḥmān; see 1:3c; 55:1c) appears in the Quran as an adjective describing God, but also as one of His proper Names (see, e.g., 19:18, 26, 44). This verse is the only instance in the Quran where the Compassionate is referred to as mounting the Throne; for other Quranic references to God’s mounting the Throne, see 7:54; 10:3; 13:2; 32:4; 57:4; cf. 25:59: He Who created the heavens and the earth and whatsoever is between them in six days, then mounted the Throne, the Compassionate [is He]. For the special significance of the Divine Name al-Raḥmān, see 17:110: Call upon God, or call upon the Compassionate. Whichever you call upon, to Him belong the Most Beautiful Names. This verse clearly indicates the close connection between the Names Allāh (“God”) and al-Raḥmān (“the Compassionate”), both of which, in traditional Islamic sources, are identified as Names of the Divine Essence.

⑥ Unto Him belongs whatsoever is in the heavens and whatsoever is on the earth, whatsoever is between them, and whatsoever lies beneath the ground.

6 V. 5 invokes the imagery of God as King seated upon a Throne, and v. 6 continues this image as it calls attention to God’s sole ownership of everything in existence (see also, e.g., 2:255; 5:17; 67:1). According to a spiritual interpretation of this verse reported by al-Sulamī, since everything belongs to God, one should ask only God to fulfill one’s requests: “To Him belongs the kingdom (mulk). So whoever seeks out a part from the whole from other than Him has sought wrongly. Return to Him for all of the things that are of importance to you, and He will suffice

you. Seek all of your requests from Him, and He will bestow them upon you.” The Prophet is reported to have said, “When you ask, ask only of God; and when you seek help, seek help only from God.”

⑦ And if thou speakest aloud, verily He knows what is secret and what is more hidden still.

7 What is secret refers to hidden talk (Kl), and what is more hidden still refers to what lies deeply hidden in the soul and is only known to God (Kl, My, Qu). According to a common Sufi psychological teaching, the secret (sirr) corresponds to the heart, which is the locus of one’s consciousness of God, while what is more hidden still (akhfā) corresponds to a deeper dimension of the same reality. Al-Rāzī deduces from the second part of this verse that if God knows the innermost recesses of a person’s thoughts, then, a fortiori, He also knows what he speakest aloud. Taken together, vv. 6–7 are in part similar to 2:284: Unto God belongs whatsoever is in the heavens and whatsoever is on the earth. And whether you disclose what is in your souls or hide it, God will bring you to account for it; see also 2:255; 6:3; 13:10; 21:110.

⑧ God, there is no god but He. Unto Him belong the Most Beautiful Names.

8 For God’s Most Beautiful Names as well as their function in Islamic ritual practice, see 7:180c; 17:110; 59:24.

⑨ Hast thou heard tell of Moses,

9 This verse introduces a lengthy account of the story of Moses that extends to the end of v. 98. For other aspects of the life of Moses elsewhere in the Quran, see 2:49–61; 7:103–55; 10:75–93; 18:60–82; 26:10–66; 27:7–14; 28:3–46; 79:15–25.

⑩ when he saw a fire and said unto his family, “Stay here. Verily I perceive a fire. Perhaps I shall bring you a brand therefrom, or find guidance at the fire”?

10 It is said that Moses’ encounter with God occurred at night, during the winter, when Moses had lost his way (Ṭ). Having seen the fire (Q), he sought warmth or perhaps some means of illumination from it; see also 27:7; 28:29; cf. Exodus 3:1–3. It is said that the fire was on Horeb, identified in Exodus 3:1 as “the mountain of God.” For the symbolism of the fire perceived by Moses as representing increasing levels of certainty in the spiritual life, see 27:7c.

⑪ Then when he came to it, he was called, “O Moses!

⑫ Verily I am thy Lord. Take off thy sandals. Truly thou art in the holy valley of Ṭuwā.

11–12 It is said that in the valley God called to Moses from a tree (Q, Ṭ) that was a kind of lycium or boxthorn (°awsaj) plant (JJ, Ṭ); see also 28:30. It thus refers to the tree (JJ) or, alternately, to the fire that Moses perceived (see v. 10; IK, R, Ṭ) and which consumed the tree (Bg, R). See also 27:8–10; 28:30. Cf. Exodus 3:4–6.

Moses was told to take off his sandals, either because they were made of the skin of a dead donkey (Ṭ), or out of reverence (ta°ẓīm) for the sacred space where he was standing, just as people are commanded to remove their shoes before entering the sacred sanctuary (ḥaram) of the Ka°bah (IK) or in fact any mosque. According to a more esoteric reading of this phrase, al-Ghazzālī suggests that in being asked to remove his sandals Moses was being instructed to cast aside this world and the next world by turning his face toward God alone (Niche of Lights, trans. D. Buchman [Provo, 1998], 30). In other words, for Sufis the verse means that one’s heart should be free of any attachment to the things to be found in this world, and even the thought of the delights of the next world, as one should dedicate oneself solely to God (My, Qu). As Ibn °Ajībah explains it, the phrase means, “Leave the two realms of existence (kawn) if you wish to witness the Presence of the Existentiator (mukawwin).”

The idea of taking the sandals off has inspired a number of artful literary works in Islamic civilization, such as the book Taking Off the Sandals (Khal^c al-na^clayn) by the Andalusian mystic Abu'l-Qāsim ibn Qasī (d. 546/1151), and is a frequently encountered image and symbol in Sufi poetry. In a famous poem attributed to Ibn ^cArabī, the Divine intent behind the imagery is explained: “Take off the sandals if you come / to this valley, for therein is Our Holiness. / Of the two worlds divest yourself, / and lift the veils of in-betweenness” (Aj).

It is also interesting to note that the name of the holy valley in which Moses encounters God is Ṭuwā, which comes from a root that means “to fold up” and “to become enwrapped.” Thus, Moses is told to rid himself of any thought of this world or the next, because he is in the place of Divine intimacy, the inner, holy sanctuary that symbolizes the Ocean of the Divine Presence above all states of existence (Aj). It is here that all of existence is “folded up” before him (Aj) and where his soul becomes “enwrapped” in the Divine Reality.

13 Moses' being chosen refers to God's conferral of messengerhood (risālah) upon him as well as the special distinction given to him of being addressed by God directly (R), which is why Moses is also referred to in the Islamic tradition as Kalīm Allāh, that is, “the one to whom God spoke”; see also 7:144c. According to the early Sufi figure Abū Sulaymān al-Dārānī (d. 215/830), “God (Great and Glorious is He) looked into the hearts of the children of Adam and did not find a heart more humble than the one belonging to Moses (upon whom be peace). Thus, He singled out Moses from among them by speaking directly with him” (al-Ghazzālī, Iḥyā' [Beirut, 1997], 4:142).

⑭ Truly I am God, there is no god but I. So worship Me, and perform the prayer for the remembrance of Me.

14 See also 3:18, where God testifies to His own Divinity: God bears witness that there is no god but He. In the present verse, perform the prayer for the remembrance of Me is said to refer to the act of remembering God much in the prayer (Bq). A deeper dimension of this act of remembering God is, as explained by the Sufi Rūzbihān al-Baqlī, for the servant to be the dhikr through which he becomes “drowned in the oceans of witnessing the One Who is Remembered (al-madhkūr), because the prayer is the place for witnessing secrets by means of lights (al-anwār), [and the place] for the disclosure of beauty (al-jamāl) to spirits by virtue of their ascent.”

⑮ Surely the Hour is coming. I would keep it hidden, that every soul might be recompensed for its endeavors.

15 Commentators disagree regarding the phrase I would keep it hidden. For some, the modifier akādu can make the phrase mean, “I desire to keep it hidden” (R). Alternately, others read the phrase as a shortened version of an Arabic idiom that describes how one keeps something so hidden that it is even hidden from oneself. Through this form of poetic exaggeration, this phrase would be interpreted, “I have well-nigh kept it hidden [from Myself],” indicating how unknown the Hour is to creation (Q, R). Some read the disputed word as simply a statement of fact or assurance (Q), so that the phrase would mean, “I have indeed kept it hidden.”

⑯ So let not he who believes not and follows his caprices turn thee away from it, or thou wilt perish.

16 If it refers to the Hour (see v. 15), the message of this verse is not to lose faith in the Hour and fail to prepare for it (Kl) on account of those who do not believe in it and instead follow their ephemeral desires (Aj). Alternately, it is possible that it refers to the prayer mentioned in v. 14 (Z).

⑰ And what is that in thy right hand, O Moses?”

⑱ He said, “It is my staff. I lean upon it and beat down leaves for my sheep. And I have other uses for it.”

17–18 God’s question to Moses is a rhetorical one intended to draw his attention to the staff so that when it becomes a serpent, Moses will know in a direct manner that it was the result of a great miracle (Bg). Al-Rāzī explains it this way: “It is as if God said, ‘O Moses, do you know the reality of that which is in your hand, that it is a piece of wood which can neither harm nor benefit, but which will then turn into a mighty serpent?’”

In traditional Islamic lore, the staff of Moses is said to have belonged initially to Adam and was made from a pillar in Heaven; it was then transmitted from prophet to prophet until it ended up with the prophet Shu^ʿayb, who then gave it to Moses when he married Shu^ʿayb’s daughter (ST); see also 7:106–8c. According to al-Tustarī, although Moses’ words I have other uses for it will become true in the future because God will soon make it the means by which Moses performs several major miracles, at this point Moses is unaware of the future function of the staff. This, al-Tustarī says, was God’s way of showing to Moses that even though he was to be a prophet, what even someone like him knows is ultimately very little in comparison to what God knows. See also 27:10; 28:31; cf. Exodus 4:2.

19 He said, “Cast it, O Moses!”

20 So he cast it, and behold, it was a serpent, moving swiftly.

19–20 The serpent was long (IK) and mighty (^ʿ*aẓīm*; JJ), and is said to have eaten a tree and swallowed a rock (IK, Ṭ). Its swift motion is a reference to its quickly slithering about on its belly like a small snake (JJ). See also 27:10; 28:31; cf. Exodus 4:3.

21 He said, “Take hold of it, and fear not! We shall restore it to its former way.

21 Elsewhere in the Quran, when the staff becomes a serpent, Moses is said to have turned in retreat without returning (27:10; 28:31). Some say that Moses’ fear was assuaged when God informed him that He would cause the serpent to return to its former way (R), that is, its form as a staff (Aj). Yet others say that after God told Moses not to fear, a state of tranquility and contentment overcame him so that he was no longer fearful (R); see also 27:10–11c; cf. Exodus 4:3–4. Moses then laid hold of the serpent by its mouth, grabbing it by either the teeth or the jaw, at which time God turned it back into a wooden staff (R). Al-Qurṭubī explains that God showed Moses the serpent as a way of preparing him so that when he would go to Pharaoh and cast his staff before him and his entourage, he would not be frightened.

Some philosophers and mystics read this verse as alluding to various aspects of the human being's lower nature. Moses' staff, which became a serpent, is seen as the unrefined human soul which must be conquered in order for the soul's true nature to be actualized, as explained by Mullā Ṣadrā: "There is no serpent like your soul; so slay it and purify it of the stain of its false beliefs and ugly opinions; or subjugate it until it becomes a muslim in your hand. First cast it aside like the staff of Moses; then pick it up with your right hand after it has returned to its former way and primordial disposition. It shall then live an intellectual life, striving for the Return and the Final Abode" (Mafātīḥ al-ghayb [Beirut, 2002], 81).

22 And enclose thy hand in thy side. It will come forth white, without blemish, as another sign, 23 that We may show thee some of Our greatest signs.

22–23 Side here refers to what is beneath the upper arm (Z) or, more specifically, the region directly below the armpit (Kl); see also 27:12; 28:32. It is said that Moses' skin was reddish brown and that when he removed his hand from his side, it was white, without blemish, meaning it was completely luminous, with no dark spots (Aj, Q); cf. 27:12; 28:32; Exodus 4:6–7. Moses' hand is said to have shone with such brilliance by night and day that it was like the sun and the moon (Bg, Q), or its light was even more intense (Q). Moses' white hand is referred to as another sign, which here denotes the second miracle given to him (Bḍ); see also 27:12, which speaks of Moses' hand as among nine signs (see also 17:101c). According to Ibn ʿAbbās, Moses' white hand was the greatest of his miracles (Aj). Similar to the report in Exodus 34:34–35, it is said that when Moses later received the Torah from God on Mt. Sinai, his face shone with such radiance that he had to veil it when addressing his people (al-Thaʿlabī, Qiṣaṣ al-anbiyāʾ [Cairo, 1951], 123–24).

24 Go unto Pharaoh! Truly he has rebelled!"

24 This verse is identical to 79:17 (cf. v. 43); see also 26:10–11; 27:12; 28:32; cf. Exodus 3:7–10.

25 He said, “My Lord! Expand for me my breast!

26 Make my affair easy for me,

27 and untie a knot from my tongue,

28 that they may understand my speech.

25–28 This part of Moses’ prayer is commonly uttered by Muslims at times of difficulty and anxiety. Moses’ prayer for his breast to be expanded is seen as a prayer to God to fill his being with the light of faith and certainty, or to help him carry out his message properly (R); see also 94:1c. Moses’ request that God untie a knot from his tongue is thought by some Muslim and Jewish commentators (see 26:12–13c) to be a reference to a physical speech impediment (Q, Z), namely a lisp.

The commentators relate a story that, while still a child, Moses struck Pharaoh and pulled some of the hair out of his beard, an act that threatened Pharaoh, as he interpreted it to mean that Moses would one day become his enemy and cause his kingdom to perish (according to some, Pharaoh had already developed a fear that one of the sons of the Israelites would overthrow him, which is arguably why he ordered that they all be killed; see 2:49c). Pharaoh ordered Moses to be put to death, but Pharaoh’s wife Āsiyah (regarding whom see 66:11c) tried to protect Moses, assuring him that Moses was just a young child and did not have the ability to discriminate between right and wrong. In order to test Moses, Pharaoh put a fiery coal and a ruby before him. If Moses took the ruby, that would mean that he could discriminate between things that look the same, but are in fact very different. In that case, Pharaoh would put him to death, since that would mean that he attacked Pharaoh intentionally and would one day be responsible for his demise. But if Moses took the fiery coal, that would mean that he could not discriminate between the objects placed before him, confirming Āsiyah’s defense of him and rendering his actions not worthy of punishment. With the objects in front of Moses, Gabriel came and guided his hand to lay hold of the fiery coal, which Moses then accidentally placed into his mouth, thereby burning his tongue and impeding his speech (Q, R, T); see also 43:52c.

Al-Rāzī observes that Moses' request that God untie a knot from his tongue was motivated by his desire to be able to communicate effectively the message with whose delivery God had charged him. This is why Moses then says in v. 28, that they may understand my speech, that is, in conveying God's message (JJ). According to Ibn Juzayy, the reason Moses requested that God only loosen and not completely remove a knot from his tongue is that he was not asking for complete eloquence, but for enough of the speech impediment to be removed so that people would understand his message clearly; cf. Exodus 4:10–11. Moses' request was granted, for which, see v. 36c.

It is also possible that there is a connection between Moses' request that his breast be expanded and that a knot in his tongue be loosened, namely his anticipating that, upon being denied by Pharaoh and his people and being called a liar by them, he would feel constriction in his breast, which would then result in his inability to speak with facility; see 26:12–13c.

29 And appoint for me a helper from among my family,

30 Aaron, my brother.

31 Through him, increase my strength,

32 and make him a partner in my affair,

33 that we may glorify Thee much

34 and remember Thee much.

35 Truly Thou dost ever see us.”

29–35 Moses asks God to appoint his brother Aaron to help him carry out his duty of delivering the message to Pharaoh and his people (Bḍ). See also 19:53; 26:12–13c; cf. Exodus 4:13–16. Moses sought Aaron's help because Aaron was older and more eloquent (Z). The word translated helper here is wazīr, which comes from a root that connotes the carrying of a weight or burden on behalf of another person, which is why many scholars assert that in Islamic political history wazīr came to denote the king's right-hand man or chief minister, who was responsible for discharging many of the king's duties (Bd, M, N). Moses' request that God strengthen him with Aaron was answered, as is evidenced by 28:35: We shall strengthen thine arm through thy brother, and We shall grant an authority for both of you, such that they shall not reach you (M); see also v. 36.

With the request Make him a partner in my affair, Moses is asking God to make Aaron a prophet along with him (IJ, Z). It is said that the intention behind Moses' words, That we may glorify Thee much, and remember Thee much, was so that he and his brother could work together in worshipping and remembering God, thereby increasing spiritually through their mutual encouragement (Z), which is in keeping with the Sufi concept of spiritual companionship (ṣuḥbah); see also 5:2: Help one another toward piety and reverence. In Shiite Islam, the relationship between Moses and Aaron is of special significance, since it is seen as analogous to the intimate connection between the Prophet Muhammad and his cousin and son-in-law ʿAlī ibn Abī Ṭālib, to whom the Prophet is reported to have said, “You are to me as Aaron was to Moses, except that there shall not be a prophet after me.” And like the Prophet and ʿAlī in the Islamic tradition, particularly in Shiite and Sufi sources, Moses represents the function of prophecy (nubuwwah) and Aaron that of sainthood (walāyah).

③⑥ He said, “Thou hast been granted thy request, O Moses!

36 This verse refers to the fulfillment of all of Moses' requests made in vv. 25–35 (Aj), including his prayer that a knot be loosened from his tongue (v. 27), enough of which was removed in order for him to convey his message effectively (R); see also 43:52c. Some of Moses' requests were actualized later, such as God's strengthening him through Aaron (see 28:35; Aj).

③⑦ And We have indeed shown thee favor another time,

37 Al-Rāzī notes that the words We have indeed shown thee favor another time serve to assure Moses that, since God had already been protecting him and looking after his best interests before granting his requests in vv. 25–36, He would also tend to Moses' needs in the future. Alternately, these words function as an indication to Moses that God had been looking after him from the beginning, so as to prepare him for the weighty task of prophecy and the deliverance of the Israelites from Pharaoh's control (R).

38 when We revealed to thy mother that which was revealed:

38 This verse refers to the time when Pharaoh was killing the newborn males of the Israelites (see 2:49c; 28:4c). God cast into the heart of Moses' mother, or caused her to see by means of a dream, what He wanted her to do with her infant in order to save him; see 28:7c. For the different senses of the root w-h-y, which usually denotes "revelation" but can in certain cases also mean "inspiration" employed in the Quran, see 16:68–69c; 28:7c.

39 'Cast him into the ark and cast it into the sea. Then the sea will throw him upon the bank. An enemy unto Me and an enemy unto him shall take him.' And I cast upon thee a love from Me, that thou mightest be formed under My eye.

39 The ark, which was made from a sycamore tree (Q), is said to have been built by a person who was a member of Pharaoh's family but was a believer (Q; see 28:2; 40:28). The sea here is the Nile River (JJ, Kl, Q), and the enemy of God and Moses is Pharaoh (Kl). It is said that Pharaoh was busy supervising the Nile when he saw the ark and ordered that it be brought to him. His wife was present and saw the baby in it. Moved by compassion for the baby, she asked Pharaoh if they could keep him, and he granted her request (Kl); see also 28:7–10. I cast upon thee a love from Me can either mean that God loved Moses (Z), or that God caused Moses to be beloved to His servants in general (JJ, Ṭ) or to Āsiyah and Pharaoh in particular (Ṭ). According to al-Zamakhsharī, these interpretations are not mutually exclusive, for, as he asserts, "Whoever God loves, people will also love." That thou mightest be formed under My eye refers to Moses' being raised and nurtured under God's protection and care (Aj).

40 When thy sister went forth and said, 'Shall I show you one who can nurse him?’ Thus We returned thee to thy mother that she might be comforted and grieve not. And thou didst slay a soul, but We saved thee from sorrow. And We tried thee with trials. Then thou didst remain some years among the people of Midian. Then thou didst come, as determined, O Moses.

40 Cf. 28:11–13. God is said to have caused the infant Moses to refuse to be suckled by anyone other than his mother, and thus Moses’ sister, who in 28:11 is told by their mother to follow Moses and is described as watching him from a distance while the household of Pharaoh were unaware, directed them to someone who could suckle him, namely Moses’ mother; see 28:12c. Moses’ being returned to his mother is seen as a fulfillment of God’s Promise that He would return him to her; see 28:7: Surely We shall bring him back to you and make him one of the messengers. Read in connection with 19:24–26, which speaks of God’s comforting Mary during her labor pains, the present verse is an indication of the great compassion and care that God has for the suffering of mothers. Although God’s comforting Moses’ mother and Mary during their labor is not directly connected to the success of the prophetic missions of their sons (Moses and Jesus respectively), it is done purely out of compassion for the pain that these mothers had to suffer for the sake of their sons.

For the incident of Moses’ slaying an Egyptian and what ensued from this event, including Moses’ flight from Egypt, see commentary on 28:15–20. We tried thee with trials refers to the many great trials by which God tested Moses, one after the other, from the time he was saved from Pharaoh’s slaughtering the male children of the Israelites to his eventual escape from Egypt and his time in the wilderness, where he was without riding beast or provisions. It is understood by some that God had made Moses undergo all of these trials to prepare him to become a prophet and messenger (Aj). For the time Moses spent among the people of Midian, which is said to have been twenty-eight years in total (Aj, Q), see commentary on 28:21–28. The last part of this verse, where God tells Moses that he had come to the valley to meet Him as determined, means that God had ordained for Moses both the path that would lead to knowledge of Him and the time in which its attainment would occur; thus, Moses’ arrival at the valley where he met God was in accordance with the Divine Decree (Su).

41 I selected thee for Myself.

41 God tells Moses I selected thee for Myself as a way of honoring Moses and drawing him nearer, since it is as if God is saying to him, “I have made a place for you in My Favor and My Generosity” (Kl). This verse is similar to 7:144: O Moses! Verily I have chosen thee above mankind through My messages and My speaking [unto thee]. So take that which I have given thee, and be among the thankful; see also 20:13c.

42 Go forth, thou and thy brother, with My signs, and tire not in the remembrance of Me.

42 My signs refers to the nine signs given to Moses (JJ; see 17:101c). Tire not in the remembrance of Me means to not weaken in conveying the message (Q). According to a spiritual interpretation of this verse, it means that one should not invoke God only with the tongue while the heart is not vigilant and aware of the One who is being invoked (ST); see also vv. 33–34.

43 Go, both of you, unto Pharaoh! Truly he has rebelled!

43 Cf. the similar wording addressed to Moses in v. 24; 79:17; see also 26:10–11; 27:12; 28:32.

44 Yet speak unto him gently, that haply he may remember or have fear.”

44 According to some commentators, the command here is similar to the words God tells Moses to speak to Pharaoh in 79:18–19: Dost thou wish to be purified and that I guide thee to thy Lord that thou mightest have fear? (Bd, Z). Gently could also be rendered “a gentle word,” which some understand as a reference to the Islamic testimony of faith (shahādah), “There is no god but God” (lā ilāha illa’Llāh; IK). Gently is also seen as a general command to Moses to communicate the message to Pharaoh in a gentle manner (IK). Al-Rāzī notes that it is customary for tyrants, when they are admonished harshly, to increase in their obstinacy and pride. Thus, by speaking gently to Pharaoh, there was a chance he would respond positively to the admonition conveyed by Moses and Aaron; see also 16:125: Call unto the way of thy Lord with wisdom and goodly exhortation. And dispute with them in the most virtuous manner. Al-Rāzī also notes that since Moses was brought up by Pharaoh, it was only fitting that Moses be gentle with him, which would be in keeping with the importance of observing the rights of one’s caregivers.

Remember here refers to Pharaoh’s taking heed of the warning given to him (JJ) and turning away from his misguidance (IK), while fear is understood to mean that Pharaoh would be fearful of God, return to Him (JJ), and be obedient toward Him (IK). Haply (laʿalla) conveys the sense of “perhaps,” “hopefully,” or “it might be that” (on laʿalla, see also 2:21c; 2:24c; 11:12c; 28:67c). In this case, haply is said for the benefit of Moses and Aaron (JJ), who could not know the outcome of delivering God’s warning and admonition to Pharaoh, but should have hope in the possibility that he would remember or have fear (R).

45 They said, “Our Lord! Truly we fear that he will deal hastily with us, or that he will transgress.”

46 He said, “Fear not! Truly I am with ye twain; I hear and I see.

45–46 It is reported that Moses and Aaron’s fear that Pharaoh would deal hastily with them refers to his hastening their punishment (JJ); for Pharaoh’s tendency to punish swiftly as evidenced by his summary execution of the sorcerers, see vv. 70–73 and 7:124; see also 7:124c. Alternately, it can refer to Pharaoh’s killing them without actually pondering over the proofs they would have brought to him (Ṭs). Moses and Aaron’s fear that Pharaoh would transgress conveys the concern that he would go beyond bounds in punishing them, or that, in his attempts to refute them, his disbelief (kufr) would increase (Ṭs). God’s telling Moses and Aaron that He is with them is understood to mean that He will protect them and help them (Bḍ); cf. Exodus 3:11–12.

47 So come unto him and say, ‘Truly we are two messengers of your Lord. So send forth with us the Children of Israel and punish them not.

We have brought you a sign from your Lord. Peace be upon him who follows guidance!

④⑧ Truly it has been revealed unto us that punishment shall come upon him who denies and turns away.’”

47–48 Moses and Aaron were inviting Pharaoh to believe in God and to free the children of Israel (Kl) who were under the control of Pharaoh and his people—Pharaoh used to kill their children and force them into labor in order to serve him, all the while humiliating them (Kl). A sign from your Lord is a collective reference to the miracles of Moses’ staff and his white hand (Kl). Peace be upon him who follows guidance conveys the teaching that whoever believes in God’s signs will have greetings of peace from God, the angels, and the believers, which will also entail safety in both this life and the next (Aj); punishment in this world and the next shall come upon him who denies God’s signs and turns away (Aj).

④⑨ He said, “So who is the Lord of you two, O Moses?”

⑤⑩ He said, “Our Lord is He Who gives everything its creation, then guides [it].”

49–50 Al-Rāzī notes that the question posed by Pharaoh here was a preliminary stage to his deeper inquiry about God found in 26:23 (And what is the Lord of the worlds?); in other words, Pharaoh, in questioning Moses, was actually seeking answers to theological questions. Other commentators reject the idea that Pharaoh was making a serious theological inquiry into the Nature of God and instead interpret his questions as a form of confrontation (see 26:23–24c). If seen as a sincere inquiry, So who is the Lord of you two, O Moses? is interpreted as a question regarding God’s modality (kayfiyyah, lit. “howness”), or how He is who He is. When Moses answered Pharaoh by pointing to the signs of God’s Being, citing Him as He Who gives everything its creation, then guides [it], Pharaoh realized that he would not be able to receive any further answers from Moses concerning God’s Nature, and so proceeded to ask him in 26:23, And what is the Lord of the worlds?, which is an inquiry into essence or quiddity (māhiyyah); in other words, Pharaoh was asking Moses to define God’s Essence (R). But God’s Essence is above any and all descriptions and definitions and is completely inaccessible through human means. For Moses' reply to Pharaoh's question concerning God's Essence, see 26:23–24c; see also Exodus 3:13–15.

51 He said, “What, then, of former generations?”

52 He said, “Knowledge thereof is with my Lord in a Book—He errs not, nor does He forget—

51–52 Pharaoh's question means, “What is the condition of the former generations after death, and what has God done with them?” Moses' reply confirms that knowledge of this matter is an unfathomable affair that none knows but God (Aj). By a Book is meant the Preserved Tablet (see 85:22c).

53 the One Who made the earth a cradle for you, and threaded paths for you therein. He sent down water from the sky, wherewith We brought forth diverse kinds of vegetation [saying], 54 ‘Eat and pasture your cattle.’” Truly in that are signs for those possessed of intelligence.

53–54 Cf. 43:10–11. The relationship between water and vegetal life is discussed in 6:99 and 13:4. For the benefits of cattle, see 6:142c; 16:5–7c. Intelligence in those possessed of intelligence translates nuhā, which is derived from a root that also connotes “restraining” or “prohibiting”; here it refers to those who, through the use of their rational faculties (‘aql), avoid vile actions and ways of thinking (JJ).

55 From it We created you, and unto it We shall bring you back, and from it We shall bring you forth a another time.

55 It here refers to the earth (ard; ʾ) or dust (turāb; K), although the latter can also denote “earth.” See also 43:11. This verse is often recited at Muslim funerals, as it instructs people that human beings are made of earth (i.e., clay), are buried in it when they die, and shall be resurrected from it on the Last Day.

56 We indeed showed him Our signs, all of them; yet he denied and refused.

57 He said, “Have you come to us in order to expel us from our land with your sorcery, O Moses?”

58 But we shall surely produce for you sorcery like it. So appoint a tryst between you and us at a neutral place, which neither you nor we shall fail to keep.”

56–58 Our signs, all of them refers to the nine signs that Moses brought to Pharaoh and his people (JJ, Z); see 17:101c. Pharaoh denied the signs and refused to accept the truth (Z). Sorcery like it means “sorcery” like the kind that Moses had come with (Ṭū). For references to similar accusations of sorcery made against Moses, Jesus, Muhammad, and other prophets, see 5:110c. A tryst and neutral place refer to the fixed time of their meeting (Ṭū) and its location respectively (M).

59 He said, “Your tryst shall be on the Day of Adornment; let the people be gathered when the sun has risen high.”

60 Then Pharaoh turned away and devised his scheme. Then he came.

59–60 The Day of Adornment is considered by many to be the Day of °Āshūrā° (the tenth of Muḥarram) or a day of celebration (Kl, M) on which the Egyptians’ adorned themselves and gathered together (JJ). Devised his scheme refers to Pharaoh’s gathering his sorcerers together along with all those who would aid him in his encounter with Moses, as well as to the tools necessary for the sorcerers to carry out their trickery (R).

61 Moses said to them, “Woe unto you! Do not fabricate a lie against God, lest He should destroy you with a punishment. Whosoever fabricates [lies] has failed.”

61 In this context, Moses’ words Do not fabricate a lie against God mean, “Do not call God’s signs and miracles sorcery” (Z); see also 10:77.

62 So they debated their affair among themselves and kept secret their intimate discourse.

63 They said, “These two are sorcerers who wish to expel you from your land with their sorcery and to do away with your exemplary way of life.

64 So gather your plot, then come in ranks. Today, whosoever gains the upper hand will surely have prospered!”

62–64 Upon hearing Moses’ words, the sorcerers consulted one another in private concerning the best means by which they could oppose and overcome him (Aj). Al-Māturīdī, the important Quran commentator and founder of the Māturīdī school of Sunni theology, notes that the sorcerers’ statement that Moses and Aaron wish to expel them from their land is taken from an identical statement by Pharaoh with regard to Moses in 26:34–35: Truly this is a knowing sorcerer, who desires to expel you from your land with his sorcery (see also v. 57). Their sorcery refers to the miracles that Moses performed for Pharaoh earlier (Aj), namely the nine signs that Pharaoh took to be sorcery (see v. 56). By their exemplary way of life the sorcerers were referring to their easy lifestyle, which entailed all of their needs being met by the Israelites by virtue of the Egyptians’ dominance over them (M).

65 They said, “O Moses! Either you cast, or we shall be the first to cast.”

66 He said, “Nay, you cast.” Then, behold, their ropes and their staffs appeared to him, through their sorcery, to move swiftly,

65–66 See 7:115–16c.

67 whereat Moses conceived a fear in his soul.

68 We said, “Fear not! Truly thou art uppermost.

67–68 Moses conceived a fear in his soul means fear entered into his heart because, after the sorcerers had caused their ropes to appear as serpents and were seen by the people, Moses was apprehensive that this might prevent the people from seeing the truth of the sign with which he had come (M).

69 Cast that which is in thy right hand; it will devour what they have produced. They have produced only a sorcerer’s trick. And the sorcerer prospers not, wherever he may go.”

69 When Moses cast his staff, it devoured all their deceptions (7:117) and whatsoever they did was shown to be false (7:118). See also 10:77, where Moses makes a similar statement about the ultimate futility of the work of sorcerers. After the sorcerers were defeated, they turned back, humbled (7:119). See also 20:89c.

70 Then the sorcerers were cast down in prostration. They said, “We believe in the Lord of Aaron and Moses.”

70 See commentary on 7:119–22.

71 He said, “Do you believe in Him before I give you leave? He is indeed your chief, who has taught you sorcery. Now I shall surely cut off your hands and your feet on alternate sides, and I shall surely crucify you on the trunks of palm trees. And you will surely know which of us [inflicts] a more severe and lasting punishment!”

72 They said, “We shall never prefer you to the clear proofs that have come to us, nor to Him who originated us. So decree whatsoever you decree; you only decree in the life of this world.

73 Truly we believe in our Lord, that He may forgive us our sins and the sorcery that you compelled us to perform. And God is better and more lasting!”

71–73 See commentary on 7:123–26; cf. also v. 71 with 26:49. The sorcerers reached such a high degree of certainty in God that they came to see the trials and pleasures of this life as merely passing and ultimately finite in comparison to the state of eternal felicity in the Afterlife (K). The sorcerers’ statement that God is better and more lasting means that the rewards that God can give are better than the rewards that Pharaoh can give, and that God’s Punishment, when meted out, is more lasting than Pharaoh’s punishment (JJ); see also 28:60; 42:36; cf. v. 131.

74 Verily, whosoever comes unto his Lord guilty, surely his shall be Hell, wherein he neither dies nor lives.

75 But whosoever comes unto Him as a believer, having performed righteous deeds, theirs shall be the highest ranks—

76 Gardens of Eden with rivers running below, abiding therein. That is the recompense of one who purifies himself.

74–76 One neither dies nor lives in Hell because its inhabitants will not experience rest in it, nor will they live a kind of life from which they can draw positive benefit (JJ); see also 14:16–17; 87:13. For the various ranks in Paradise, see 4:96c. The Gardens of Eden are mentioned in several places in the Quran; see 13:23; 16:31; 18:31; 35:33; 98:8.

77 And We indeed revealed unto Moses, “Set forth with My servants by night and strike for them a dry path through the sea. Be not afraid of being overtaken, and fear not.”

77 The first part of this verse is identical to the first part of 26:52. Moses followed God’s Command to go with the Israelites by night, and they were pursued by Pharaoh and his hosts at sunrise (26:60). See also 26:61–64.

78 Then Pharaoh pursued them with his hosts, and they were overwhelmed by the sea that enshrouded them.

79 Pharaoh led his people astray, and guided them not.

78–79 For the drowning of Pharaoh and his hosts, see 7:136c; see also 2:50; 8:54; 10:90; 17:103; 26:65–66; 28:40; 43:55; 44:24; 51:40. The fate of Pharaoh in particular is discussed in 10:90–92c.

80 O Children of Israel! We have saved you from your enemies and have appointed a tryst for you on the right side of the Mount. And We sent down unto you manna and quails.

81 Eat of the good things We have provided you, but exceed not the limits therein, lest My Wrath be unleashed upon you. And he upon whom My Wrath is unleashed has been cast into ruin.

80–81 Cf. 2:57, 60; 7:160. For God’s sending down manna and quails to the Israelites and the command to eat of the good things We have provided you, see 2:57c. Exceed not the limits therein is a warning against excess combined with ungratefulness for the blessings that they had been given (JJ); see 2:61 for the Israelites’ request for foods other than what they had been given and the subsequent Divine Response for their ingratitude. For the Israelites’ asking Moses to make them an idol similar to the ones they found others worshipping, along with Moses’ response, see 7:138–41c; for their taking an idol to worship apart from God while Moses was on Mt. Sinai, see vv. 87–88.

A tryst for the Israelites on the right side of the Mount refers to the reception of the Torah, which would soon be given to Moses at Mt. Sinai (JJ; see vv. 83–84); cf. 19:52, which speaks of the right side of the Mount in reference to Mt. Horeb, where Moses met God and was chosen as a messenger (see v. 10); see also 28:29, 46.

82 And surely I am most forgiving toward the one who repents and believes and works righteousness, and thereafter is rightly guided.

82 For the nature and significance of God’s Forgiveness, see 7:156c; 39:53c.

83 “What hast made thee hasten from thy people, O Moses?”

84 He said, “They are close upon my footsteps, and I hastened unto Thee, my Lord, that Thou mayest be content.”

83–84 Moses appointed Aaron over the Israelites while he spent forty days on Mt. Sinai in retreat, fasting and having intimate discourse with God (see commentary on 7:142–43). Then he hastened to his meeting place with God on the Mount (IK; see v. 80; 7:143). It is said that Moses rushed to his meeting place with God in order to fulfill immediately God’s Command (Kl), and out of an intense desire to speak with Him (Z). Moses’ words, that Thou mayest be content, mean that Moses also came hurriedly to their meeting so that God would be more content with him (IK, Z). God’s question to Moses is not out of ignorance, but rather functions as a means of allowing Moses to articulate to himself the purpose of his haste, which engenders in him a heightened sense of awe and reverence for the One before Whom he stands. Moses’ statement that the Israelites are close upon his footsteps means that they have alighted in a spot close to the Mount (IK).

85 He said, “Truly We tried thy people in thine absence, and the Samaritan led them astray.”

85 For the Samaritan (al-Sāmirī), see also 7:148c. It is said that al-Sāmirī is a generic title derived from the name of the Israelite tribe (al-Sāmirah) to which this individual belonged (Z). The Samaritan is believed to have been a hypocrite who did not accept Moses' message, but appeared to do so outwardly (Z).

86 Then Moses returned to his people, angry and aggrieved. He said, “O my people! Did your Lord not make you a goodly Promise? Did the pact seem too long for you? Or did you desire that the anger of your Lord be unleashed upon you, such that you failed your tryst with me?”

86 This verse is similar to 7:150 (see also 17:150c). God's goodly Promise refers to His Promise that He would give the Torah to the Israelites to live by (JJ; see v. 80). See also 20:80–81c, where the Israelites are warned of God's Wrath if they were to be ungrateful.

87 They said, “We did not fail our tryst with thee of our own will, but we were laden with the burden of the people's ornaments. So we cast them [into the pit], and thus did the Samaritan throw also.”

87 The Israelites' response indicates that they were tricked by the Samaritan. According to some, the people's ornaments refers to the heavy jewelry lent to the Israelites by the Egyptians before the latter were destroyed, and which was therefore unlawful for the Israelites to keep (Kl, R, Z). From a spiritual point of view, the burden of the people's ornaments can represent worldly riches or wealth, which becomes a kind of spiritual “burden” for people by giving them a false sense of security and immortality that weakens their sense of reliance upon God and their ultimate return to Him, as in 104:1–3: Woe unto every slandering backbiter who amasses wealth and tallies it, supposing that his wealth makes him immortal. See also 18:7–8c; 18:46c.

Aaron told the Israelites that these ornaments were a source of religious defilement (najas) and thus were sinful to keep; he ordered them to throw these ornaments into a pit until Moses returned, which they all did (R). Alternately, some have said that it was the Samaritan who ordered them to throw the ornaments into the pit, telling them that they should wait to see what God wants to do with the ornaments (Kl, R). Then, without their knowledge, the Samaritan lit the pit on fire and used the now malleable ornaments to form the golden calf (Kl); see also 7:148c.

88 Then he brought forth for them a calf as a mere body that lowed, and they said, “This is your god and the god of Moses, though he has forgotten.”

88 The golden calf made sounds as though it were a real calf. Some say it did so because it had a number of perforations and hollows in it that made a kind of whistling sound when the wind blew; others report that when the Samaritan took a handful [of dust] from the footsteps of the messenger (v. 96) and cast it into the molten gold, it caused the calf to low; see 7:148c; 20:95–96c. They refers to the Samaritan and his followers who were already inclined to idolatrous tendencies (Q). The reference to Moses having forgotten is prompted by the Samaritan’s suggestion that Moses forgot that the calf was Moses’ god and thus went elsewhere in search of him (R).

89 Have they not considered that it does not respond to them with words, and that it has no power over what harm or benefit may come to them?

89 Cf. 7:148, which mentions that the calf did not speak to them or guide them in any way. Despite the calf’s unintelligible lowing sounds, it was nothing in comparison to God, Who spoke clearly to Moses; see 7:148c. It can also be said that such “senseless miracles”—that is, supposed “miracles” that are unaccompanied by meaningful spiritual guidance—are ultimately without purpose or value, and are thus actually evil in their attempt to detract from prophetic miracles that come as a support for rationally comprehensible revelation and guidance. The Samaritan’s trickery also bears some analogy to the magic of the sorcerers (see 7:117–18; 10:77) who, at Pharaoh’s behest, tried to undermine the religious message of Moses by challenging the uniqueness of the wonders or marvels accompanying it.

90 And Aaron had indeed said to them earlier, “O my people! You are merely being tested by this, and truly your Lord is the Compassionate. So follow me and obey my command!”

90 Aaron said this to the Israelites before Moses returned, calling them to worship the true God, and enjoining them to obey his command to worship God (JJ). Cf. Aaron’s role here and in Exodus 32:1–6.

91 They said, “We shall not cease to be its devotees till Moses returns unto us.”

91 This means that the people insisted they would not cease worshipping the calf until Moses returned (M).

92 He said, “O Aaron! What hindered thee, when thou didst see them going astray, 93 that thou didst not follow me? Didst thou disobey my command?”

94 He said, “O son of my mother! Seize not my beard or my head. Truly I feared that thou wouldst say, ‘Thou hast caused division among the Children of Israel, and thou hast not heeded my word.’”

92–94 While on the mountain, Moses was informed by God that his people had gone astray. He thus returned to them in a state of anger and grief over their actions, and when he saw their worship of the idol, he threw down the Tablets in anger and shock. Since Moses had left Aaron in charge of the Israelites, upon his return he rebuked Aaron for what had happened while he was absent. See also 7:150c.

95 He said, “What was your purpose, O Samaritan?”

96 He said, “I saw that which they saw not. So I took a handful [of dust] from the footsteps of the messenger, and I cast it. Thus did my soul prompt me.”

95–96 A handful [of dust] from the footsteps of the messenger refers to the tracks of dust or sand left behind by the “horse of life” (faras al-ḥayāt), upon which the Archangel Gabriel was riding when he was sent to take Moses to meet God at Mt. Sinai, an event witnessed by the Samaritan (Z). The Samaritan took some of this dust and noticed that whenever this dust was placed upon something, it would become spirit, flesh, and blood; that is, it would become a living thing (Q).

97 He said, “Be gone! In this life it shall be yours to say, ‘Touch [me] not!’ And truly for you there is a tryst that you cannot fail to keep. Now observe your god, to whom you remained devoted: we shall surely burn it and scatter its ashes in the sea!”

97 In this life it shall be yours to say, “Touch [me] not!” is understood to mean that the Samaritan was forbidden from then on to be in contact with the Israelites in any way whatsoever (Ṭ). The tryst that you cannot fail to keep is in reference to the punishment that the Samaritan would inevitably encounter, in either this life or the next (M). Since the idol was a living animal made of flesh and blood (see v. 96c), Moses first burned it and then cast its ashes into the sea (Ṭs). According to Ibn Kathīr, the calf was made of gold, but then turned into a living creature, which was then burned and the ashes thrown into the sea (cf. 2:93). It is also said that Moses wanted to kill the Samaritan, but that God revealed to him that he should not do so (Ṭs); cf. Exodus 32:20.

98 Your only god is God, besides whom there is no other god. He encompasses all things in knowledge.

98 For God as encompassing all things in knowledge, which means that everything that takes place does so in accordance with His Wisdom and His Knowledge, see 40:7, which speaks of God encompassing all things in Mercy and Knowledge, as well as 6:80c; 7:89; 65:12.

99 Thus do We narrate unto thee some of the accounts of those who have come before. And We have given thee a Reminder from Our Presence.

99 Thus do We narrate; that is, just as We related to you the story of Moses, so too do We relate to you reports of other older communities (JJ); see also 7:107. By a Reminder from Our Presence is meant the Quran (JJ, R). See also 7:107; 28:44–46.

100 Whosoever turns away from it, verily he shall bear it as a burden on the Day of Resurrection,

101 abiding therein. How evil a burden for them on the Day of Resurrection—

100–101 Whosoever turns away from it—that is, the Quran (Aj)—shall be subject to a “weighty” punishment (Bḍ) on the Day of Resurrection. Abiding therein means that such a person will continually be in this state of punishment (Bg); see also v. 124; 72:17.

102 the Day the trumpet shall be blown, and We shall gather the guilty on that Day, blind.

103 They will whisper among themselves, “You have tarried only ten [days].”

104 We know well that which they will say, when the most exemplary of them in conduct will say, “You have tarried only a day!”

102–4 The Day the trumpet shall be blown refers to the second blowing of the trumpet, which will signal the Day of Resurrection (R); the trumpet's first blowing ushers in the Last Day, when the world will come to an end; see 39:68c. For the function of the trumpet in Islamic eschatology, see 6:73c. By the guilty here is meant the disbelievers and the wrongdoers, namely those who ascribed partners unto God (R). For the manner in which the disbelievers will be blind on the Last Day, see vv. 124–25; see also 20:124–27c. According to some, the reason that the guilty will whisper among themselves is that they will be so terrified that they will barely be able to speak (R); cf. v. 108. Only ten [days] refers to the period of time people in the Hereafter will think they had spent in the life of this world (R), although some say that it relates to the period of time in the grave (R). Although most say that ten refers to a number of days (as in 23:112–13), some suggest that it refers to a number of hours (as in 79:46; R). In Arabic, the term days can have different symbolic meanings and may even denote entire cosmological periods; see 14:5–6c. The most exemplary of them in conduct refers to those who were the most just (JJ) and most knowledgeable (Kl); see also 17:52; 23:114.

According to one interpretation, people will deem their time on earth to have been slight because of their intense fear on the Last Day (JJ). From another perspective, however, the life of this world will seem so insignificant to them on the Last Day that all of their actions, in the face of eternity, would amount to only a few days or hours, much like a dream whose duration seems long, but when the dreamer awakens, he or she realizes that it took place in only a few fleeting moments. The Prophet (or, according to some, ‘Alī) is reported to have said, “People are asleep, and when they die, they awaken”; see the essay “Death, Dying, and the Afterlife in the Quran.” Meditating upon this saying, Mullā Ṣadrā explains the manner in which every soul will awaken in the afterlife: “Every soul, whether it be felicitous or miserable, when it is disengaged from the body and travels to this abode . . . its inner faculties will become powerful and piercing because of [its] perception of the matters related to the next world, as in His Most High’s saying, Now We have removed from you your cover; so today your sight is piercing [50:22].”

105 They ask thee about the mountains. Say, “My Lord shall scatter them as ashes.

106 And He will leave it a barren plain.

107 You will see no crookedness or curvature therein.”

105-7 The destruction of the mountains on the Last Day is referred to throughout the Quran; see 18:47; 52:10; 56:5; 69:14; 70:9; 77:10; 78:20; 81:3; 101:5.

108 On that Day they shall follow a herald in whom there is no crookedness. And voices will be humbled before the Compassionate, and you will hear naught but a murmur.

108 The reference here is to the Archangel Seraphiel (Isrāfīl), who according to some traditions will be standing on the Dome of the Rock in Jerusalem on the Last Day or the Day of Resurrection, calling people with his powerful voice (JJ, Z). Seraphiel is also the archangel responsible for the two blowings of the trumpet, for which, see 39:68c. Some say that Seraphiel will call people after the second trumpet blast (Aj), in which case the scene of his calling would not be the Last Day, but the Day of Resurrection. That there will be no crookedness in the herald means that people will not be able to turn away from him (IK, Z). Out of awe, peoples' voices will be humbled (Aj). The murmur they will hear on this Day is said to be the slight sounds that people's feet will make (AJ, JJ, Z) as they walk to the Gathering Place (maḥshar; Aj, Z). Murmur translates hamsah, which denotes the pitter-patter sound of a camel's hoofs (AJ, JJ, Z); cf. v. 103.

109 On that Day intercession will be of no benefit, save [that of] those whom the Compassionate has granted leave and with whose word He is content.

109 For a discussion of intercession on the Day of Judgment, see 2:48c; 2:255c. Some theologians say that the reference to with whose word He is content encompasses anyone who testifies to God's Oneness, while the Mu^ctazilites restrict this status to those who believe and who also have not committed major sins; see 21:28c.

110 He knows that which is before them and that which is behind them, and they encompass Him not in knowledge.

110 This verse is similar to part of 2:255: He knows that which is before them and that which is behind them. And they encompass nothing of His Knowledge, save what He wills; see 2:255c; see also 21:28; 22:76. The main difference between the present verse and 2:255 is in the phrase about “knowledge.” In 2:255 it says, They encompass nothing of His Knowledge, emphasizing creatures’ inability to comprehend God’s Knowledge. The present verse has They encompass Him not in knowledge, highlighting their inability to know Him fully. As the first Caliph, Abū Bakr, is reported to have said, “The inability to comprehend [God] is comprehension itself” (Ibn ʿArabī, Futūḥāt, II: 619.35).

111 Faces will be humbled before the Living, the Self-Subsisting. And whosoever bears wrongdoing will have failed.

111 On the Day of Judgment, people, here symbolized by their faces (as in 88:8–9), will be in a lowly state like slaves, and the kingdom will belong solely to God (R); see also 40:16. For God as the Living, the Self-Subsisting, see 2:255c.

112 But whosoever performs righteous deeds and is a believer, he shall fear neither wrong nor deprivation.

112 In several places the Quran couples righteous deeds and belief—that is, action and faith—as the means by which people attain salvation; see 4:124; 16:97; 17:19; 21:94; 40:40. Deprivation in this verse is in reference to the detraction of one’s good deeds (Kl); that is, in the Afterlife, believers will not be slighted in the least in regard to the righteous actions that they have performed.

113 Thus have We sent it down as an Arabic Quran, and We have varied the threat therein that haply they may be reverent, or [that] it might occasion remembrance for them.

113 The Quran refers to itself variously as being an Arabic Quran (12:2; 39:28; 41:3; 42:7; 43:3), a judgment in Arabic (13:37), and [in] a clear, Arabic tongue (16:103; cf. 26:195; 46:12); see 13:37c. We have varied the threat therein is to say that in the Quran the threat of Divine Punishment or Sanction is repeated in various ways (R). It might occasion remembrance for them means that those who read about the destruction of previous nations in the Quran might draw lessons from their stories (JJ).

114 Exalted is God, the True Sovereign. Be not in haste with the Quran before its revelation is completed for thee, but say, “My Lord! Increase me in knowledge!”

114 This verse refers to the Prophet’s fear of forgetting the verses of revelation, which led him to repeat quickly what was being revealed to him by the Archangel Gabriel while the revelation was taking place (Q, R); see 75:16–18c. Alternatively, it could be an admonishment to the Prophet not to seek to receive the revelation before its appropriate time (R).

My Lord! Increase me in knowledge! is commonly invoked by Muslims at various times, such as when they are students beginning their studies. The Prophet is reported to have said, “If a day comes upon me in which I do not increase in a knowledge that draws me nearer to God, may God not bless me that day” (Ṭs). Thus, if the Prophet is told to pray for increase in knowledge, then, a fortiori, all Muslims are expected to do the same. Hence, Ibn ‘Arabī says, “God did not say to His Prophet, Say, ‘My Lord! Increase me in knowledge!’, nor did He allow us to hear that, except as a way of alerting us so that we would [also] say this and seek increase from God. If this were specific to the Prophet, God would not have allowed us to hear it, or He would have mentioned that it was specific to him” (Futūḥāt, II: 531.7). This supplication has often been a prayer of the Sufis in particular, although it is used by pious Muslims in general.

115 And We indeed made a pact with Adam aforetime, but he forgot. And We found no resoluteness in him.

115 The pact that God made with Adam refers to His telling him not to approach the tree (R); see 2:35c; 7:19c. By aforetime is meant either before Adam’s actual eating from the tree or, more generally, before the coming of the Prophet Muhammad and the revelation of the Quran (R). He forgot denotes Adam's forgetting his pact (Q) or abandoning it (JJ, Q); see also v. 121. The Prophet is reported to have said, "Adam forgot, and thus his progeny forgot." Adam is the model for human beings to follow, since God taught Adam the names, all of them (2:31). According to the close spiritual companion of Jalāl al-Dīn Rūmī, Shams-i Tabrīzī (disappeared in 644/1247), people should keep in mind that Adam only forgot one time, and so they also should allow themselves to forget only once. Concerning the person who constantly falls into error in the spiritual life, Shams says, "The custom of his father [Adam] was [that he only forgot] one time—once is enough!" (Maqālāt [Tehran, 1990], 767). On human forgetfulness, see 59:19c.

We found no resoluteness in him can mean that God did not find in Adam the resolve to disobey Him (R), although he and his wife did eat from the tree because they were deceived by Satan (see 7:21–22c); in other words, he erred, but did not do so intentionally (Ṭs). Or We found no resoluteness in him can mean that God did not find in Adam the moral resolve to obey His Prohibition against eating from the tree (R). According to this latter interpretation, some see the reference to God not finding resoluteness in Adam as the reason for his not being counted as one of the resolute among the messengers (ūlu' l-ʿazmi min al-rusul), for whom, see 46:35c.

116 And when We said unto the angels, "Prostrate yourselves before Adam," they prostrated, save Iblīs; he refused.

116 See 2:30c; 7:11c.

117 We said, "O Adam! Truly this is an enemy unto thee and thy wife. So let him not expel the two of you from the Garden, such that thou wouldst be wretched.

118 Truly it is for thee that thou shalt neither hunger therein, nor go naked, 119 and that thou shalt neither thirst therein, nor suffer from the heat of the sun."

117–19 For the warning to Adam and Eve that Satan is an enemy unto them, see 7:21–22c. Let him not expel the two of you from the Garden is an admonition from God to Adam and Eve that they should not obey Satan, for he will cause them to leave the Garden through his deceiving them to eat from the forbidden tree (Kl). Such that thou wouldst be wretched refers to the hardship and fatigue that Adam and Eve would experience because of the need to earn a livelihood in this world (M, Z). In other words, by obeying Satan, they would leave their state of comfort in the Garden and descend into the life of this world, which is filled with hardship; see also 2:36; 7:24–25. Thus, the references in v. 118 to being neither hungry nor naked, and in v. 119 to neither being thirsty nor experiencing the sun’s heat, evoke the state of complete ease and comfort that Adam and Eve experienced in the Garden, which is juxtaposed to the hardships of the life of this world which they would encounter if they were to succumb to Satan’s suggestions. For other accounts of Adam and Eve’s being warned by God, Satan’s deceiving them, their fall from Paradise, and their remorse over their actions, see 2:35–37 and 7:19–23.

120 Then Satan whispered to him. He said, “O Adam! Shall I show thee the Tree of Everlastingness and a kingdom that never decays?”

121 So they both ate therefrom. Then their nakedness was exposed to them, and they began to sew together the leaves of the Garden. Adam disobeyed his Lord, and so he erred.

120–21 See 7:21–22c. The offer made by Satan (who presents himself as a sincere adviser to Adam and Eve in 7:21) to show them the Tree of Everlastingness was an invitation to achieve immortality (Bg). According to the Mu^ctazilites, the last part of v. 121, Adam disobeyed his Lord, and so he erred, means that Adam committed a minor sin (ṣaghīrah; R). However, according to others, Adam did not commit a sin in the real sense of the term. Rather, he is metaphorically characterized as “disobeying” God because his proximity to Him dictated that he choose the most optimal of paths, whereas he ended up choosing one that was less optimal, but not actually sinful (Aj). According to al-Rāzī, Adam’s actions took place before he became a prophet, an interpretation that would be favored by the majority of theologians for whom prophethood and sin are mutually exclusive. On whether prophets can sin, see also 22:52c; 27:10–11c.

122 Then his Lord chose him, and relented unto him and guided [him].

122 For God's pardoning of Adam, see 2:37c.

123 He said, "Get down from it, both you together, each of you an enemy to the other. And if guidance should come unto you from Me, then whosoever follows My Guidance shall not go astray, nor be wretched.

123 This verse is understood to be an address to Adam and Eve and their future progeny, indicating their banishment from Paradise, but also the means by which they could recover their original nature while on earth—by following God's Guidance. See also 2:38–39c; 7:24–25c. For the significance of the fall of Adam and Eve, see 7:24–25c.

124 But whosoever turns away from the remembrance of Me, truly his shall be a miserable life, and We shall raise him blind on the Day of Resurrection."

125 He will say, "My Lord! Why hast Thou raised me blind, when I used to see?"

126 He will say, "Thus it is. Our signs came unto you, but you forgot them. Even so, this Day shall you be forgotten!"

127 Thus do We recompense whosoever is prodigal and believes not in the signs of his Lord. And surely the punishment of the Hereafter is more severe and more lasting.

124–27 The remembrance of Me can refer to the Quran in particular (JJ), in which case it would be translated "My Reminder," or to the guidance that reminds people of God and calls them to Him in general (Aj). A miserable life is a life that is constricted (Kl, Ṭ), especially spiritually. Or, it may refer to a life in which one is merely given to the things of the world and lives in a state where he is fearful of their being taken away from him, which is contrasted with the life of the believer—that is, one who lives in hope for the world to come, who may be safe from evil and disbelief, and whose life is whelmed in the grace (barakah) of faith (Bd). Juxtaposing such people with the believers, al-Zamakhsharī calls attention to 16:97: Whosoever works righteousness, whether male or female, and is a believer, We shall give them new life, a good life, and We shall surely render unto them their reward in accordance with the best of that which they used to do.

Some people are said to be raised blind on the Last Day and in the Hereafter, even though they could see with their physical sight while alive on earth. This form of blindness in the Afterlife is the direct result of spiritual blindness in the life of this world, as in 17:72: And whosoever was blind in this [life] will be blind in the Hereafter, and further astray from the way; see also 17:97, and 22:46: Truly it is not the eyes that go blind, but it is hearts within breasts that go blind. For the various types of spiritual blindness in this world, see 5:71c. From another perspective, those who were spiritually blind in this life will come to “see” the reality of things in the next life; that is, they will come to witness, in a crystal-clear manner, the truths they rejected in this life (see 20:102–4c; 50:22).

To forget Our signs (v. 126) means to abandon and disbelieve in God’s signs (JJ), namely, the proofs brought by His messengers (Aj). For God’s “forgetting” the disbelievers on the Last Day, see 7:51c and 45:34c. For the prodigal, see 10:12c. The promise that the chastisement of the Hereafter is more severe and more lasting means that the disbeliever’s perpetual blindness in the Hereafter is more intense than any kind of constriction that he will experience in this life (Z). Alternately, it can mean that God’s leaving the disbeliever in his state of blindness in the Hereafter is more intense and longer-lasting than the blindness that results from his turning away from God’s signs (Z).

128 Does it not serve as guidance for them, how many generations We destroyed before them, amid whose dwellings they walk? Truly in that are signs for those possessed of intelligence.

128 Along with a number of other verses (17:17; 19:74; 36:31; 38:3; 50:36), this verse refers to the generations that were destroyed for their refusal to accept the messengers sent to them by God (see also 6:6; 7:4; 21:11; 22:45, 48; 47:13, which speak of the destruction of towns for the same reason). For an almost identical verse, see 32:26. For the meaning of those possessed of intelligence, see 20:53–54c.

129 And were it not for a Word that had already gone forth from thy Lord and a term appointed, it would be inevitable.

129 If God had not already determined to put off the disbelievers' punishment until the Day of Judgment (JJ, Sh), their destruction would be inevitable (JJ); see also 10:19; 11:110; 41:45; 42:14, 20.

130 So bear patiently that which they say, and hymn the praise of thy Lord before the rising of the sun and before its setting, and in the hours of the night glorify [Him], and at the ends of the day, that haply thou mayest be content.

130 Cf. 50:39–40. Before the rising of the sun and before its setting refers to the dawn prayer (ṣubḥ or fajr) and the late afternoon prayer (ʿaṣr) respectively (JJ, Q), while in the hours of the night refers to the night prayer (ʿishāʾ; Q). The ends of the day refers to the midday prayer (ẓuhr) and the sunset prayer (maghrib) respectively, since the midday prayer stands at the end of the first part of the day and the beginning of the second part of the day, while the sunset prayer stands at the end of the second part of the day (Q); see also 50:39–40c. That haply thou mayest be content means that, by virtue of glorifying God at these times, one will be content with the reward that will be given by God (JJ). It can also mean that one will become generally content with whatever is given by God in the life of this world.

According to a spiritual interpretation, this verse means that those treading the path of spiritual perfection should be patient and devoted solely to their Master. They should turn away from sins and from being concerned with people's opinions of them, occupying themselves instead with the constant remembrance and invocation (dhikr) of God until the false sense of self disappears in the Presence of the Knower of the Unseen, through which they will become content in witnessing the Beloved (Aj).

131 Strain not thine eyes toward the enjoyments We have granted certain classes of them, as the splendor of the life of this world, that We may test them concerning it. The provision of thy Lord is better and more lasting.

131 In the first part of this verse, the Prophet is being admonished not to desire the things of the world that have been given to the Makkans who are rejecting him; see also 15:88c. That We may test them concerning it means “that We may punish them in the Afterlife on account of it” (Z). The provision of thy Lord is better and more lasting means that the rewards that God has promised the Prophet in the Hereafter are far better and longer lasting than the enjoyments He has given the disbelievers in this life (Ṭū); cf. 28:60; 42:36. See also v. 73, where God Himself is described as better and more lasting (see also 20:71–73c).

From a spiritual perspective, the provision of God that is being referred to here is the virtue of trust in God (tawakkul), since having complete trust in Him is better and more lasting than one’s own efforts in seeking out the things one wants (Su). Alternatively, provision here could be a reference to both contentment with God and total reliance upon Him (Su).

49 4 And bid thy family to prayer and be steadfast therein. We ask no provision of thee; We provide for thee. And the end belongs to reverence.

132 Some say that family (ahl) refers to the Prophet’s close relatives, while others say that it refers to the people of his faith (R), in which case thy family would be rendered “thy people” instead, since ahl can mean either “family” or “people.” Although this injunction is addressed to the Prophet, it applies to the believers in general (Q). We ask no provision of thee; We provide for thee is similar to 51:57–58: I desire no provision from them; nor do I desire that they should feed Me. Truly God is the Provider, the Possessor of Strength, the Firm. The phrase the end belongs to reverence means that Paradise is for those who are reverent (see 2:2c; JJ). Elsewhere in the Quran, it also says that the end belongs to the reverent (7:128; 11:49; 28:83).

69 6 They say, “Why has he not brought us a sign from his Lord?” Has there not come unto them the clear proof of that which is in the scriptures of old?

133 The Makkans made repeated requests for the Prophet to bring them a sign (6:37; 10:20; 13:7, 27; see also 6:37c; 10:20c). The clear proof of that which is in the scriptures of old is a reference to the various stories in the Quran that are also found in the previous scriptures, accounts that serve as clear proofs that the Quran comes from God (Kl). Alternatively, this part of the verse can be a reference to those parts of the Torah and the Gospel that mention the Prophet Muhammad (Kl); see 7:157c.

134 Had We destroyed them with a punishment before it, they would have said, “Our Lord! If only Thou hadst sent a messenger unto us, we would have followed Thy signs before being abased and disgraced.”

134 Some say that this verse is meant to expose the Makkan idolaters as liars who would always reject truth (IK). Al-Rāzī notes the irony of their statement: if they were punished, they would present their excuse; but now that the Prophet has come to them, they do not stand on any firm ground as they continue to reject him. See also 6:109; 28:47; 35:42.

135 Say, “Each is waiting, so wait! For you shall come to know those who are the companions of the sound path, and those who are rightly guided.”

135 That each is waiting means each party is waiting to see what its outcome will be, either in this life or at the time of death (R). The words for you shall come to know are intended to threaten and frighten the disbelievers (R); see also 10:20c.

The Prophets

al-Anbiyā'

A*l-Anbiyā'*, a Makkan sūrah (Q), receives its name from the many stories of prophets told in it. The first section recounts the various accusations of falsehood and expressions of incredulity directed at the Prophet by the Quraysh (vv. 1–10) and offers a reminder that peoples before him had been destroyed and could do nothing to stave off their punishment (vv. 11–15). The impossibility of God taking a consort or having a child and the absurdity of more than one divinity in the universe are explained (vv. 16–29), followed by a section asking human beings to contemplate the cosmos (vv. 30–33). Human beings are reminded that all souls will taste death and will then be judged (vv. 34–47).

After a brief mention of Moses and Aaron (vv. 48–50), a longer account of Abraham is given that includes his ruse of blaming the largest of his people's idols for destroying the smaller ones to show them how empty their worship was and the attempt by his people to burn him alive in retaliation (vv. 51–73). After mentioning Lot (vv. 74–75) and Noah (vv. 76–77), the sūrah narrates a story of David and Solomon in which David's judgment is overturned by that of his son (vv. 78–82). This is followed by accounts of Job (vv. 83–84); Ishmael, Idrīs, and Dhu'l-Kifl (vv. 85–86); Jonah (vv. 87–88); and Zachariah, John, and Mary (vv. 89–91).

The last part of al-Anbiyā' addresses the end of the world and the coming of the Hereafter. A reminder of the tendency of religious communities to fragment when their members disagree among themselves is followed by an account of the coming of Gog and Magog, the ultimate end of idolaters and their idols in Hell, and the destruction of the cosmos and its renewal for the righteous (vv. 92–104). The sūrah ends with a statement that the Prophet is a mercy to all creation, and a reminder both that he has given fair warning of what is to come and that he does not know when the final doom will come to pass (vv. 105–12).

In the Name of God, the Compassionate, the Merciful

① For mankind, their reckoning draws nigh, while they turn away heedless. ② No new Reminder came unto them from their Lord, but that they listened to it while they played, ③ with their hearts diverted. And those who do wrong confide in secret converse, “Is this not but a human being like yourselves? Will you then yield to sorcery, while you see clearly?” ④ He said, “My Lord knows that which is spoken in Heaven and on earth, and He is the Hearing, the Knowing.” ⑤ Yet they said, “Confused dreams! Nay, he has fabricated it! Nay, he is a poet! Let him bring us a sign like those of old were sent!” ⑥ No town that We destroyed before them believed; will these, then, believe? ⑦ And We sent no messenger before thee, but that they were men unto whom We revealed. So ask the people of the Reminder, if you know not. ⑧ We did not make them bodies that ate not food; nor were they immortal. ⑨ Then We fulfilled the promise unto them, and saved them and whomsoever We willed, and We destroyed the prodigal. ⑩ We have indeed sent down unto you a Book wherein is your Reminder. Do you not understand? ⑪ How many a town engaged in wrongdoing have We shattered, and then brought into being another people after them? ⑫ And when they felt Our Might, behold, they ran away from it. ⑬ “Do not run away! But return to the luxury you have been given and to your dwellings, that haply you may be questioned.” ⑭ They said, “Oh, woe unto us! Truly we have been wrongdoers.” ⑮ And that did not cease to be their cry, till We made them a mown field, stilled. ⑯ And We did not create Heaven and earth and whatsoever is between them in play. ⑰ Had We desired to take up a diversion, We would surely have taken it from that which was with Us, were We to do so. ⑱ Nay, but We cast truth against falsehood, and it crushes it, and, behold, it vanishes. And woe unto you for that which you describe! 19 Unto Him belongs whosoever is in the heavens and on the earth. Those who are with Him are not too arrogant to worship Him; nor do they weary. 20 They glorify night and day, without tiring. 21 Or have they taken gods from the earth who resurrect? 22 Were there gods other than God in them, they would surely have been corrupted. So glory be to God, Lord of the Throne, above that which they ascribe. 23 He shall not be questioned about what He does, but they shall be questioned. 24 Or have they taken gods apart from Him? Say, "Bring me your proof! This is the Reminder for those who are with me, and the Reminder for those before me. Nay, but most of them do not know the truth; so they turn away." 25 And We sent no messenger before thee, save that We revealed unto him, "Verily, there is no god but I; so worship Me!" 26 And they say, "The Compassionate has taken a child." Glory be to Him! Nay, but they are honored servants. 27 They precede Him not in speech, and they act according to His Command. 28 He knows that which is before them and that which is behind them, and they intercede not, save for one with whom He is content. They are wary, for fear of Him. 29 And whosoever among them would say, "Truly I am a god apart from Him," such will We requite with Hell. Thus do We requite the wrongdoers. 30 Have those who disbelieve not considered that the heavens and the earth were sewn together and We rent them asunder? And We made every living thing from water. Will they not, then, believe? 31 And We placed firm mountains in the earth, lest it shake beneath them, and We made wide tracts between them as paths, that haply they may be guided. 32 And We made the sky a canopy preserved; yet they turn away from its signs. 33 He it is Who created the night and the day, the sun and the moon, each gliding in an orbit. 34 We have not ordained perpetual life for any human being before thee. So if thou diest, will they abide forever? 35 Every soul shall taste death. We try you with evil and with good, as a test, and unto Us shall you be returned. 36 And whenever those who disbelieve see thee, they take thee in naught but mockery, "Is this the one who makes mention of your gods?" And it is they who are disbelievers in the remembrance of the Compassionate. 37 Man was created of haste. Soon shall I show you My signs; so seek not to hasten Me! 38 And they say, “When will this promise come to pass, if you are truthful?” 39 If those who disbelieved but knew of the time when they shall not be able to hold back the Fire from their faces or from their backs, nor be helped! 40 Nay, but it will come upon them suddenly, and confound them. Then they will not be able to repel it, nor will they be granted respite. 41 Messengers were certainly mocked before thee. Then those who scoffed at them were beset by that which they used to mock. 42 Say, “Who will protect you, night and day, from the Compassionate?” Nay, but they turn away from the remembrance of their Lord. 43 Or do they have gods to defend them apart from Us? They cannot help themselves; nor are they given protection against Us. 44 Nay, but We granted enjoyment to them and their fathers till life grew long for them. Do they not consider how We come upon the land, reducing it of its outlying regions? Is it they who shall prevail? 45 Say, “I only warn you through a revelation.” But the deaf do not hear the call however much they are warned. 46 And if but a breath of thy Lord’s Punishment were to touch them, they would surely say, “Oh, woe unto us. Truly we were wrongdoers.” 47 We shall set the just scales for the Day of Resurrection, and no soul shall be wronged in aught. Even if it be the weight of a mustard seed, We shall bring it. And We suffice as Reckoner. 48 We indeed gave unto Moses and Aaron the Criterion, and a radiant light and a reminder for the reverent, 49 who fear their Lord unseen, and who are wary of the Hour. 50 This is a blessed Reminder that We have sent down. Will you then deny it? 51 And We indeed gave unto Abraham his sound judgment aforetime, and We knew him 52 when he said unto his father and his people, “What are these images to which you are cleaving?” 53 They said, “We found our fathers worshipping them.” 54 He said, “Certainly you and your fathers have been in manifest error.” 55 They said, “Have you brought us the truth, or are you among those who jest?” 56 He said, “Nay, but your Lord is the Lord of the heavens and the earth, Who originated them. And I am among those who bear witness unto this. 57 And by God, I shall scheme against your idols after you have turned your backs.” 58 So he broke them into pieces—save the largest of them—that haply they may have recourse to it. 59 They said, “Who has done this to our gods? Verily he is among the wrongdoers!” 60 They said, “We heard a young man mention them; he is called Abraham.” 61 They said, “So bring him before the eyes of the people, that haply they may bear witness.” 62 They said, “Was it you who did this to our gods, O Abraham?” 63 He said, “Nay, but it was the largest of them that did this. So question them, if they speak!” 64 So they consulted among themselves and said, “Verily it is you who are the wrongdoers!” 65 Then they reverted, “Certainly you know that these speak not!” 66 He said, “Do you worship, apart from God, that which benefits you not in the least, nor harms you? 67 Fie upon you, and upon that which you worship apart from God. Do you not understand?” 68 They said, “Burn him, and help your gods, if you would take action!” 69 We said, “O Fire! Be coolness and peace for Abraham.” 70 They desired to scheme against him, but We made them the greatest losers. 71 And We delivered him and Lot to the land that We blessed for all peoples. 72 And We bestowed upon him Isaac, and Jacob as an added gift. And each of them We made righteous. 73 And We made them imams, guiding according to Our Command. And We revealed unto them the doing of good deeds, the performance of prayer, and the giving of alms. And they were worshippers of Us. 74 And as for Lot, We gave unto him judgment and knowledge, and We saved him from the town that was committing vile deeds. Truly they were an evil people, iniquitous. 75 And We caused him to enter Our Mercy; verily, he was among the righteous. 76 And [remember] Noah, when he cried out aforetime, We answered him and saved him and his family from great distress. 77 And We helped him against those people who denied Our signs. Truly they were an evil people; so We drowned them all together. 78 And [remember] David and Solomon, when they rendered judgment regarding the tillage, when the people’s sheep strayed therein by night. And We were Witness to their judgment. 79 We made Solomon to understand it, and unto both We gave judgment and knowledge. We compelled the mountains and the birds to glorify along with David; We did this. 80 And We taught him how to make garments for you to protect you against your own might, but are you thankful? 81

And unto Solomon, the wind blowing violently: it ran by his command to the land that We had blessed. And We know all things. 82 Among the satans are those who dove deep for him, and performed other deeds besides this. And We guarded them. 83 And [remember] Job, when he cried unto his Lord, “Truly affliction has befallen me! And Thou art the most Merciful of the merciful.” 84 So We answered him and removed the affliction that was upon him, and We gave him his family, and the like thereof along with them, as a mercy from Us and a reminder to the worshippers. 85 And [remember] Ishmael, Idrīs, and Dhu’l-Kifl—each was among the patient. 86 We caused them to enter Our Mercy; truly they are among the righteous. 87 And [remember] Dhu’l-Nūn, when he went away in anger, and thought We had no power over him. Then he cried out in the darkness, “There is no god but Thee! Glory be to Thee!
Truly I have been among the wrongdoers.” 88 So We answered him, and saved him from grief. Thus do We save the believers. 89 And [remember] Zachariah, when he cried out to his Lord, “My Lord! Leave me not childless, though Thou art the best of inheritors.” 90 So We answered him, and bestowed John upon him, and We set his wife aright for him. Truly they vied in good deeds. They called upon Us with desire and with fear, and they were humble before Us. 91 And as for she who preserved her chastity, We breathed into her of Our Spirit, and made her and her son a sign for the worlds. 92 Truly this community of yours is one community, and I am your Lord. So worship Me! 93 But they have fragmented their affair among themselves. Each is returning unto Us. 94 And whosoever performs righteous deeds and is a believer, there shall be no ingratitude for his endeavor, and surely We shall write [it] down for him. 95 And it is forbidden unto any town We have destroyed that they should ever return, 96 till the time when Gog and Magog are unleashed, and they rush down from every hill, 97 and the true promise draws nigh. And, behold, there shall be the fixed stare of those who disbelieved, “Oh, woe unto us! We have certainly been heedless of this!
Indeed, we have been wrongdoers.” 98 Surely you and that which you worship apart from God shall be fuel for Hell. Unto it you shall come.

99 Had these been gods, they would not have come unto it. But each shall abide therein. 100 Theirs shall be groaning therein, and therein they shall hear not. 101 Surely those for whom what is most beautiful has already gone forth from Us; they shall be kept far from it. 102 They hear not the slightest sound thereof, while they abide in that which their souls desire. 103 The greatest terror will not grieve them, and the angels will receive them. “This is your Day, which you were promised.” 104 That Day We shall roll up the sky like the rolling of scrolls for writings. As We began the first creation, so shall We bring it back—a promise binding upon Us. Surely We shall do it. 105 And We have indeed written in the Psalms, after the Reminder, that My righteous servants shall inherit the earth. 106 Truly in this is a proclamation for a worshipful people. 107 And We sent thee not, save as a mercy unto the worlds. 108 Say, “It is only revealed unto me that your God is one God. So will you be submitters?” 109 But if they turn away, say, “I have proclaimed to you all equally. I know not whether that which you are promised is nigh or far off. 110 Verily He knows that which is spoken openly and He knows that which you conceal. 111 And I know not; perhaps it is a trial for you, and an enjoyment for a while.” 112 He said, “My Lord, judge with truth! Our Lord is the Compassionate, the One Whose help is sought against that which you ascribe.”

Commentary

① For mankind, their reckoning draws nigh, while they turn away heedless.

1 The first verse of al-Anbiyā' announces that the time of the reckoning approaches (R); cf. 54:1. Reckoning (ḥisāb) is a word used to signify the accounting of the Day of Judgment, which is also called the Day of Reckoning (e.g., 38:16; 40:28). Some theologians have said that the time that has passed since God created the world is greater than the time remaining until the world ends (Q, Z), a chronology based on the fact that the verb used in this verse for draws nigh (iqtaraba) ordinarily signifies that one is closer to one's destination than to one's origin (R). Some say that from God's point of view the reckoning is close—not in a temporal sense, because God knows all moments simultaneously—but rather is close with regard to His Knowledge of the reckoning; human beings, however, think of it as something distant (M); see also 70:6–7, which speaks of the impending punishment (70:1) in these terms: Truly they see it as far off, but We see it as nigh.

In addition to the fact that the Quran points out that the world as such will come to an end, some commentators observe that it should be enough for anyone that one's own death is certain, regardless of the time of the destruction of the world; this is part of what is signified by their reckoning draws nigh (Q). To be heedless means that people only care about this world (Ṭ) and pay no attention to the matters of the Hereafter (Q). It is said among the Sufis that there are those who are heedless of the Hereafter because they are engrossed in worldly affairs, and there are the righteous believers who are mindful of the Hereafter; but there are also those who are heedless of the Hereafter because they are so engrossed in the remembrance of God that they give no thought to the Garden or to the Fire (Aj).

② No new Reminder came unto them from their Lord, but that they listened to it while they played,

2 See the similar verse 26:5 and commentary. The notion of “play” as a characteristic of the disbelievers and idolaters is associated with their overall state of “heedlessness,” or ghaflah; see also 6:91; 43:83; 52:12; 70:42, which speak of the way in which the disbelievers engage in “play” instead of remembering God.

③ with their hearts diverted. And those who do wrong confide in secret converse, “Is this not but a human being like yourselves? Will you then yield to sorcery, while you see clearly?”

3 The practice of sorcery (siḥr), which could also be rendered “magic” or “illusion,” is an accusation made against the Prophet that in the Arabian context could imply that he was a poet with a demonic muse (see v. 5) or a soothsayer; on this latter subject, see commentary on 26:224–27. What the idolaters are said to see clearly is that Muhammad is, from their point of view, a man like themselves who is possibly engaged in sorcery or is somehow possessed (Q). The objection voiced by opponents of the prophets that they are no more than human beings like themselves is also found in 11:27; 23:24, 33; 26:154; 26:186. However, the prophets also affirm that they are only human beings, usually in response to challenges to produce miracles or knowledge of the unseen, as in 14:11; 18:110; 41:6. On this latter point, also see 18:110c.

④ He said, “My Lord knows that which is spoken in Heaven and on earth, and He is the Hearing, the Knowing.”

4 God knows secret discussions in addition to what is said openly (IK, R), as in 5:99 and 24:29: God knows what you disclose and what you conceal (cf. 16:19; 64:4). Some read the verb at the beginning not as He said but as a command “Say” directed at the Prophet (Q, Ṭ). God’s Knowledge of what is in Heaven and on earth is mentioned many times in the Quran (e.g., 3:29; 5:97; 10:18; 25:6; 27:65; 29:52; 49:16; 58:7).

⑤ Yet they said, “Confused dreams! Nay, he has fabricated it! Nay, he is a poet! Let him bring us a sign like those of old were sent!”

5 Confused dreams renders aḍghāth al-aḥlām (cf. 12:44). Some say aḍghāth refers to those dreams that are not meant to be interpreted (Q); that is, instead of being manifestations of one’s inner spirit or inspirations from an angelic source, they are random products of the imagination without any objective meaning. Some commentators note the incoherence of the various accusations in this verse and see them as mutually contradictory: if it is a “confused dream,” it can be neither sorcery nor something consciously fabricated (M).

The sign like those of old were sent refers to wonders produced by previous prophets, such as Moses’ miraculous staff (Q). Some commentators say that the requests for signs were simply obstinate challenges: had the Prophet healed lepers, for example, the Quraysh would have said it was a kind of medicine they simply did not understand. As it happened, they rejected the Quran’s eloquence and proofs, which they were unable to duplicate or surpass (Q). For another example of this type of challenge, see also 3:183, where others say to the Prophet: Truly God has committed us to not believe in any messenger until he brings us a sacrifice consumed by fire.

⑥ No town that We destroyed before them believed; will these, then, believe?

6 Earlier peoples who were destroyed, such as those of Ṣāliḥ and of Pharaoh, did not believe (Q), even though the kinds of signs that the Quraysh challenged Muhammad to produce were also brought to those people, but to no avail (Ṭ).

⑦ And We sent no messenger before thee, but that they were men unto whom We revealed. So ask the people of the Reminder, if you know not.

7 This verse is interpreted to be a consolation and support for the Prophet reminding him that God never sent angels or other types of beings to fulfill the role of prophet or messenger, only human beings like themselves (Q). Others, however, understand it to mean that messengers are male, not female, owing to the conditions and demands of messengerhood (M), perhaps specifically the physical toll. Not all commentators, however, raise the question of gender (R, Ṭ); on whether women can be considered prophets or messengers in the Islamic tradition (most say they cannot, though this is made problematic by the figure of Mary, who some consider to have prophetic rank), see the introduction to Sūrah 19 and 28:7c.

Some understand people of the Reminder (ahl al-dhikr; cf. 16:43) to mean the learned people among Jews and Christians—that is, the learned among the people to whom the Torah and the Gospel were revealed (Ṭ)—who would be able to tell the Quraysh that God always sent human beings as prophets and messengers (Q, R). A minority of commentators say this verse is directed toward Muslim believers and suggests they ask those who know the Quran, which is often referred to as the Reminder (e.g., 6:90; 7:2; 21:50; Q). Some quote the saying of the famous Sufi Junayd that the people of the Reminder (ahl al-dhikr) refers to those who know the inner realities of the remembrance and invocation (dhikr) of God (since dhikr can mean at once “invocation,” “reminder,” and “remembrance”) and who look at things with the eyes of the unseen (Su), meaning with a vision that penetrates beyond the outward aspects and appearances to the true inner nature of things.

⑧ We did not make them bodies that ate not food; nor were they immortal.

8 The humanity of the prophets is also affirmed in 25:20: And We sent not any messengers before thee but that they ate food and walked in the markets; see also 5:75c; 25:7c. Immortal renders khālidūn, meaning literally “lasting” or “abiding” forever, a word often used to describe the state of those who will inhabit the Garden or the Fire. Some point out that it is not superhuman qualities, such as being immortal or not needing food, that distinguish prophets from other human beings, but their miracles and the absence of negative qualities in their message and character (R). By extension, this verse means that neither the prophets nor saintly people are free of the need for the lawful enjoyment of food, drink, and even sexual relations (though they may abstain from food temporarily or sex permanently; Aj).

⑨ Then We fulfilled the promise unto them, and saved them and whomsoever We willed, and We destroyed the prodigal.

9 The promise is understood to refer specifically to the remainder of this verse, meaning the promise to save the prophets and punish those who opposed them (M, Q, R). The concept of prodigality is discussed in 3:147c; 7:80–81c; 10:12c; 25:67c.

⑩ We have indeed sent down unto you a Book wherein is your Reminder. Do you not understand?

10 The Quran serves as a reminder of the promise of God to reward good deeds and punish sins or as a reminder of what is obligatory and forbidden in one's religion (R). For some, wherein is your Reminder (dhikr) can also mean “wherein is your nobility/stature,” where dhikr is understood in its meaning of “renown” or “reputation” (Q, R, Ṭ), as in 94:4, which addresses the Prophet: And did We not elevate thy renown (dhikrak)? Some say that here dhikr means “your story or tale” (Q), or “your virtue” or “the best of your actions” (Q). For others, it refers to the act in which one finds life (Su), understanding dhikr to mean the remembrance of God as an action and state of being, rather than as a reminder one receives from outside of oneself.

⑪ How many a town engaged in wrongdoing have We shattered, and then brought into being another people after them?

11 Though similar verses of general import appear elsewhere (e.g., 6:6; 7:4; 17:17; 19:98; 28:58; 38:3; 50:36), some commentators connect this verse with certain towns in Yemen that were destroyed (Q, R), mentioning specifically a place called Ḥadūr, to whom a prophet was sent, though the people of Ḥadūr rejected him. As a spiritual allegory, this verse (and similar ones) can be read as saying God destroys a wicked heart through trials and deprivations and in its place brings a wholesome heart into being through a process of spiritual transformation (Aj).

⑫ And when they felt Our Might, behold, they ran away from it.

12 Felt Our Might could also mean “sensed Our Might,” so that when they saw the impending destruction (before they experienced it), they fled (Ṭ).

⑬ “Do not run away! But return to the luxury you have been given and to your dwellings, that haply you may be questioned.”

13 Return to the luxury is understood to mean, “Go back to your worldly existence (dunyā)” (Ṭ), that is, the lifestyle the wrongdoers flaunted and enjoyed (Q). That haply you may be questioned is thought to mean, “So that you will be made to understand.” This command to go back to the world is understood by some to be a form of mockery or a taunt (Q, Ṭ), though it could also be a kind of rhetorical device alluding to the impossibility of escape. It is said by some that these words could have been spoken by the angels or by God (R).

⑭ They said, “Oh, woe unto us! Truly we have been wrongdoers.”

14 It is thought that the wrongdoers said this when the angels began to carry out the punishment, when such an admission was too late to do them any good (Q).

⑮ And that did not cease to be their cry, till We made them a mown field, stilled.

15 Stilled renders khāmidīn, a word also used to express the extinguishing of a flame or more simply dying (Q).

⑯ And We did not create Heaven and earth and whatsoever is between them in play.

16 Cf. 44:38. Similar language is employed where the Quran says that God did not create the world frivolously (23:115) or in vain (3:191; 38:27). It means that, unlike the tyrants and prodigal of the earth, whose glories and riches are for play and diversion, God creates the splendor of the heavens and the earth for a purpose (R).

①⑦ Had We desired to take up a diversion, We would surely have taken it from that which was with Us, were We to do so.

17 Diversion in take up a diversion is interpreted by some to mean “consort” or “wife” (Q, Ṭ) or “[to have a] child” (Q, R). From that which was with Us means that if God had willed to do so, He would not have created the world at all (Ṭ), referring back to the previous verse, which states that God did not create the world in play. Another possible interpretation is that this verse signifies that God is transcendent beyond the kinds of commingling with His creation that is falsely attributed to Him by some.

①⑧ Nay, but We cast truth against falsehood, and it crushes it, and, behold, it vanishes. And woe unto you for that which you describe!

18 Crushes renders the verb damagha, a word that can have the general sense of overcoming or vanquishing, but that also conveys the sense of crushing a skull to the point of reaching the brain (dimāgh, etymologically related to the verb); it can also have the meaning of an object stamping a form into softer material. Vanishes is understood by some to mean “is destroyed” (Ṭ). The relationship between falsehood and truth in the Quran is discussed at greater length in the commentary on 17:81: Truth has come, and falsehood has vanished. Also see 8:8: So that He may verify the truth and prove falsehood to be false; 34:49: Truth has come, and falsehood originates naught, nor restores; and 42:24: God wipes out falsehood and verifies the truth through His Words.

That which you describe can either refer to the lies the wrongdoers told or signify their idolatry, recalling phrases such as Exalted is God above the partners they ascribe (7:190; 23:92; 27:63), which exalt God above idolatrous attributions (see also v. 112, where God is said to be the One Whose help is sought against that which you ascribe). Some understand these descriptions to refer to the accusations made against the Prophet in vv. 3–5.

①⑨ Unto Him belongs whosoever is in the heavens and on the earth. Those who are with Him are not too arrogant to worship Him; nor do they weary.

20 They glorify night and day, without tiring.

19–20 Cf. 41:38. These verses are thought to refer to the angels (R, Ṭ). Those who are with Him can also mean “those who are near Him.” Nor do they weary is understood to mean that they neither tire nor become bored (Ṭ), which is possible only for angels, not human beings (R). Some note that for the angels the glorification of God is what breathing is for human beings (Ṭ); see 41:38c.

21 Or have they taken gods from the earth who resurrect?

21 Rather than worship the Creator of the heavens and the earth (v. 19), such people prefer to worship earthly beings incapable of giving life (Q). The imagery of biological life renewed is also treated as a symbol of what will happen to human beings on the Day of Resurrection, as in 35:9: And God is He Who sends the winds; then they cause clouds to rise. Then We drive them to a land that is dead, and thereby revive the earth after its death. Thus shall be the Resurrection!

22 Were there gods other than God in them, they would surely have been corrupted. So glory be to God, Lord of the Throne, above that which they ascribe.

22 Other than God (illa’Llāh) can also be rendered “except for God,” which is also the second half of the formula lā ilāha illa’Llāh, “There is no god but God.” In them, which uses a pronoun in the dual form, refers here to the heavens and the earth. This is one of a handful of verses that argue, as it were, that the notion of a multiplicity of gods is a self-evident logical absurdity; others include 12:39–40, where Joseph asks his fellow prisoners: Are diverse lords better, or God, the One, the Paramount? You worship apart from Him naught but names that you have named. Similar verses include 23:91: And neither are there any gods with Him, for then each god would take away what he created, and some of them would overcome others; and 17:42: Say, “If there were gods with Him, as they say, they would surely seek a way unto the Possessor of the Throne.” As a spiritual allegory, v. 22 is understood to symbolize the truth that a divided heart will become corrupted, and that a heart must be unified and detached from entanglements in the world (Su).

23 He shall not be questioned about what He does, but they shall be questioned.

23 God is not answerable to creation, but creatures are answerable to Him (R). The idea of “questioning” in the sense of responsibility or answerability also arises in v. 13 as well as 2:119, 134; 16:56. See also 28:78c, which discusses the complexity of the Quran’s language about being “questioned” in the Hereafter.

For some commentators He shall not be questioned . . . but they shall be questioned touches on teleology, or how or whether human beings can ask God why He did such and such (Q, R); indeed, the phrase could also be rendered, “He is unanswerable for what He does, but they are answerable.” In regard to created things one can ask why they acted as they did, but it is by definition impossible for creatures to know why God does what He does, and theologically what is at stake is whether God stands in need of a reason outside of Himself to do anything (R). The issue of free will versus predestination also arises here, in that human beings cannot, following a strictly predestinarian reading of this verse, question God or ask why one was made a disbeliever in life (Q). This is connected to God provides for whomsoever He will without reckoning, one interpretation of which understands it to refer to the fact that no one can bring God to account for the provisions He gives or withholds from different creatures (see 2:212c).

24 Or have they taken gods apart from Him? Say, “Bring me your proof! This is the Reminder for those who are with me, and the Reminder for those before me. Nay, but most of them do not know the truth; so they turn away.”

24 In the Quran the bringing of proof (burhān) is a “demonstration” or “evidence”; this word is used similarly in 2:111; 23:117; 27:64; 28:75. Reminder in both instances in this verse renders dhikr, a word that can also mean “invoke,” “mention,” “recall,” “remembrance,” or even “renown.” Thus some understand Reminder for those before me to refer here to the fact that the Quran recounts the lives of those peoples who passed away before (R, Ṭ), in which case it would be rendered “Reminder of those before me.” Some understand Reminder in a Reminder for those before me to refer to the Torah and the Gospel, and the content of this Reminder, like that of the Quran, to be that human beings should not take gods apart from Him, which is reaffirmed in v. 25 (R).

Some read the truth as an extended part of the subject rather than as an object, so that the verse would read, “This is a Reminder for those before me (but most of them know not), the truth.” (R).

25 And We sent no messenger before thee, save that We revealed unto him, “Verily, there is no god but I; so worship Me!”

25 Even though the messengers had different commands regarding what was obligatory and forbidden, they all conveyed the same message of monotheism and devotion to God (Ṭ), confirming the self-evident existence and Oneness of God (Q). Some read part of this verse in the third person: “We sent no messenger before thee, but that it was revealed unto him.” Regarding the fundamental similarities among the messages and messengers, see the essay “The Quranic View of Sacred History and Other Religions.”

26 And they say, “The Compassionate has taken a child.” Glory be to Him! Nay, but they are honored servants.

26 In the Quran, when it is said that God has taken a child, or children (Q), the reference is to either the belief among the idolatrous Quraysh that the angels were “daughters of God” (see, e.g., 37:149–53c; 43:16–17c) or the Christian doctrine of the Divine sonship of Jesus (see, e.g., 4:171c). According to some, this verse was revealed specifically in connection with the tribe of Khuzā^cah, who considered the angels to be daughters of God and worshipped them in order to obtain their intercession (Q); honored servants refers to these angels.

Some Muslim theologians do not object to calling God “Father” in a narrow metaphorical or symbolic sense (see 2:116c), but consider it erroneous to assert that any such Divine “offspring” are not like other creatures and would have a different ontological status by virtue of being begotten by God; a similar error would be believing that they are “children of God” in an exclusive and sectarian way, as in 5:18: And the Jews and the Christians say, “We are the children of God, and His beloved ones.” Say, “Why then does He punish you for your sins?” Nay, but you are mortals of His creating. He forgives whomsoever He will, and He punishes whomsoever He will.

27 They precede Him not in speech, and they act according to His Command.

27 They precede Him not in speech means the angels do not speak except as commanded by God and do not act except according to His Will (Ṭ). Interpreted as a spiritual allegory, this means that one should inwardly model oneself on the angels, striving to neither speak nor act except in accordance with the Will of God, adhering to the Sunnah, and being with God constantly (Su).

28 He knows that which is before them and that which is behind them, and they intercede not, save for one with whom He is content. They are wary, for fear of Him.

28 That which is before them and that which is behind them refer to what will take place in the future and what took place in the past (Ṭ), or they can refer to the Hereafter and this world (Q). On the concept of intercession (shafā'ah) in the Quran, usually framed in terms of who God allows to intercede on behalf of others on the Day of Judgment, see 2:48c; 2:255c. For some, this verse connects the debate about intercession with the dispute regarding the status of a person who perpetrates a major sin (kabīrah; R); that is, for some the category one with whom He is content includes anyone who believes, “There is no god but God,” while others (i.e., the Muʿtazilites) restrict it to those who believe and who also have not committed major sins (R). For more on the question of major sin and its relationship to faith, see 2:82c and also the essay “The Quran and Schools of Islamic Theology and Philosophy.” They are wary also denotes the sense of being anxious and careful. The attributes of fear and wariness (the latter could also be rendered “anxiety”) are not those of a Divinely begotten being, but of a creature who knows that God is omniscient and omnipotent (R).

29 And whosoever among them would say, “Truly I am a god apart from Him,” such will We requite with Hell. Thus do We requite the wrongdoers.

29 Some commentators view this verse as a specific reference to Iblīs (Q, Ṭ), but others say that this verse does not necessarily describe something someone actually said; rather, it refers to what would happen if they did say this (R).

30 Have those who disbelieve not considered that the heavens and the earth were sewn together and We rent them asunder? And We made every living thing from water. Will they not, then, believe?

31 And We placed firm mountains in the earth, lest it shake beneath them, and We made wide tracts between them as paths, that haply they may be guided.

30–31 Some see this “rending asunder” as a reference to God’s making the earth into seven earths and the heaven into seven heavens, as alluded to in 65:12 (Ṭ), or to God’s pulling apart of the heavens and the earth, which were originally “connected” or “adjacent” (Ṭ). It may also mean that the heavens and the earth used to be a single thing, and then God separated them with the air and wind (Q). For others this verse means that the heavens are rent asunder by rain, and the earth by the vegetation that grows as a result of that rain (Q, Ṭ). This latter interpretation is preferred by some, because of the phrase that follows, And We made every living thing from water (R). Another interpretation is offered by Abū Muslim al-Iṣfahānī: sewn together (ratq) symbolizes the state of things before the creation of the world, where in a sense “nothingness” was all of a piece and nothing could be distinguished from anything else; rent asunder (fataqnā, from fatq) then symbolizes the act of creation, in which realities once joined together in “nonexistence” come to be separate from each other as they take on existence and individual identity (R).

Another opinion is that this means that the heavens and the earth were at first dark and then were illuminated, signifying that night preceded day (R). As a spiritual allegory, the heavens represent the spirit and the earth represents the faculties of the soul; the waters of the spirit penetrate the earth and cause wisdom and piety to grow; the mountains are the intelligence, which anchors the soul and keeps it from going adrift; and the paths between them represent the inward spiritual life directing human beings toward God (Aj).

The creation of things from water is also mentioned in 24:45: And God created every beast from water; and 25:54: And He it is Who created a human being from water. See 24:45c. The phrase in this verse could also be rendered, “It is by water that We make things live” (R, Z). For some, water refers to reproductive fluids (M).

According to one cosmological image found in the Islamic tradition, the earth floats upon water and would move about as if it were a ship on the sea, were it not for the firm mountains anchoring it (cf. 16:15; 31:10; R). Wide tracts renders fijāj, which are thought to refer to wide paths (R, Z). Between them (referring to the mountains) renders fīhā, which is understood by some to mean “upon it,” where the pronoun refers to the earth, so that the translation would be “wide tracts upon [the earth]” (R), which are placed so that people may be guided to their destinations on earth or to an awareness of God’s Oneness after reflecting upon them (R).

32 And We made the sky a canopy preserved; yet they turn away from its signs.

32 Preserved means preserved from the satans (R), or it connotes “upraised” (cf. 52:5; Ṭ), meaning protected from falling down to the earth (Q). The sky as canopy (saqf) is also mentioned in 2:22; 40:64; 79:28. It is said the idolaters turn away in the face of the signs of the heavens, including the sun, moon, and stars (Ṭ).

33 He it is Who created the night and the day, the sun and the moon, each gliding in an orbit.

33 For the various elements in this verse, see 36:40c. The notion of heavenly bodies gliding in orbits is an occasion for some commentators to discuss the cosmology underlying this imagery (R). The common notion in Islamic cosmology during premodern times was that the heavenly bodies moved within spheres of an ethereal or subtle substance (Q, R), but there were a few, such as Ḍaḥḥāk, for whom “orbits” meant nothing more than the trajectories of these bodies through the heavens. Al-Qurṭubī’s and al-Rāzī’s concluding remarks on this verse point out that no one can have knowledge of these matters except through revelation.

34 We have not ordained perpetual life for any human being before thee. So if thou diest, will they abide forever?

35 Every soul shall taste death. We try you with evil and with good, as a test, and unto Us shall you be returned.

34–35 Perpetual life renders khuld, a word used in the frequent refrain they shall abide (khālid) therein, related to the state of those in the Hereafter (e.g., 3:15; 7:36, 42), and other contexts to connote “perpetuity” or “everlastingness” (cf. 10:52; 20:120; 25:15; 32:14; 41:28). In this verse it refers specifically to this world, where every human being will die (Ṭ). If thou diest, will they abide forever contains the verb form of the noun rendered by perpetual life. This question is asked of the Prophet, signifying that if the Prophet should die, it will not change the fundamental situation of the idolaters who oppose him—they too will die (Ṭ). For some, to taste death (cf. 3:185; 29:57) refers not to death itself, but to the sufferings that precede it (R). According to the Sufi Junayd, “Whosoever is between the two vanishings (fanāʾayn) is now vanishing (fānī),” implying that between the state of nonexistence that precedes earthly life and the death at the end of that life one is in a constant state of dying (Su). Some mention that this verse was revealed in relation to those who believed that the Prophet would never die (R); alternately, because the idolaters indicated they would delight at his death and misfortune, this verse was revealed as a reminder that the Prophet’s death would not change the truth (Q).

Both evil and good can be trials (Ṭ), as in 7:168: And We tried them with good things and with evil things; that is, one can be tried with sickness as well as good health, poverty as well as wealth, error as well as guidance (Ṭ). Or people are tried as to whether they will do what is obligatory and abstain from what is forbidden (Q). The test by what is good is whether one will be grateful to God and be generous with what God provides, and the test by what is evil is whether one will be patient (R).

36 And whenever those who disbelieve see thee, they take thee in naught but mockery, “Is this the one who makes mention of your gods?” And it is they who are disbelievers in the remembrance of the Compassionate.

36 The one who makes mention of your gods refers to the Prophet when he disparaged and condemned the idolaters, which they took as an insult (Ṭ). Depending on the context, mention can be used to imply either praise or blame and censure (Ṭ). Makes mention renders yadhkuru, which is the verb form of remembrance (dhikr), the implication being that the idolaters censure the Prophet for “remembering” their idols, while they themselves refuse to “remember” and worship God. For some, remembrance of the Compassionate refers to the Quran (one of whose names is al-Dhikr, “the Reminder”) rather than to remembering God or being reminded of God (Q).

37 Man was created of haste. Soon shall I show you My signs; so seek not to hasten Me!

37 People were created possessing the trait of being hasty, which is similar to 30:54, God is He Who created you from weakness, meaning created weak, as in 4:28, Man was created weak (Q). Others say that this verse alludes to the rapidity of creation, as described in verses such as 2:117: He only says to it, “Be!” and it is. See also 17:11: Man prays for evil as he prays for good, and man is ever hasty.

38 And they say, “When will this promise come to pass, if you are truthful?”

38 The question in this verse is a frequent challenge often associated with the notion of “seeking to hasten,” and in this context it follows immediately upon God’s Command not to seek to hasten the promise of punishment for the disbelievers in the Hereafter (Q). It is not the mere fact of being hasty that is condemned (since this is a part of human nature, as attested by the previous verse), but challenging God to be so, in which case people display an excess of haste (R). See the similar verses 10:48; 27:71; 34:29; 67:25.

39 If those who disbelieved but knew of the time when they shall not be able to hold back the Fire from their faces or from their backs, nor be helped!

39 This verse is a conditional clause whose completion is implicit meaning, “If they but knew [they would do otherwise]” (R, Z). For the symbolism of the punishment visited upon faces and backs, see 8:50c.

40 Nay, but it will come upon them suddenly, and confound them. Then they will not be able to repel it, nor will they be granted respite.

40 That God’s Punishment will come . . . suddenly is mentioned in 6:31; 7:95, 187; 12:107; 22:55; 26:202; 29:53; 39:55; 43:66; 47:18. This unpredictability is connected with the notion that the Hour is known only to God (e.g., 79:44), which means in a sense that it will be “sudden” by definition (see 7:187c). Some note that people are confounded by something to the degree that they are heedless of its Creator, but whoever is always in the Presence of God will not be confounded by anything of the world (Su).

41 Messengers were certainly mocked before thee. Then those who scoffed at them were beset by that which they used to mock.

41 Cf. 6:10. The Prophet is reminded here, as elsewhere, that he was not the first messenger of God to be mocked by his people (13:32; 15:11; 36:30; 43:7). The idea that people will be beset by that which they used to mock (cf. 6:10; 11:8; 16:34; 39:48; 40:83; 45:33; 46:26) connotes being both surrounded and overcome by something. Most commentators interpret this verse to mean that those who ridiculed the idea of punishment in the Hereafter for their misdeeds in this life will eventually suffer that punishment and will not be able to escape it (Ṭ).

42 Say, “Who will protect you, night and day, from the Compassionate?” Nay, but they turn away from the remembrance of their Lord.

42 This verse serves as an implicit reminder that God is aware of the disbelievers and powerful over them by night and by day, but they are, nonetheless, oblivious (R). That is, while human beings are going about their daily affairs or sleeping, God is able to unleash His Punishment upon them at any time (Q). Some note that the name the Compassionate (al-Raḥmān) is used here because it would cause one to reflect upon the fact that God encompasses all things with His Mercy (R).

43 Or do they have gods to defend them apart from Us? They cannot help themselves; nor are they given protection against Us.

43 The powerlessness of the gods of the idolaters, for both themselves and their worshippers, is also mentioned in 7:192, 197. In this verse the inability of the idols to defend the idolaters implies that the idolaters will have no defense against God's Punishment when it comes either in this world, in the form of defeat and death, or in the Hereafter, in the form of punishment (R). Given protection against Us renders minnā yuṣḥabūn, which some understand to mean, "They will not have Us as a Companion" (Q, R).

44 Nay, but We granted enjoyment to them and their fathers till life grew long for them. Do they not consider how We come upon the land, reducing it of its outlying regions? Is it they who shall prevail?

44 The idolaters were granted enjoyment; that is, God provided them with the goods of this world. Some commentators understand this verse to refer to the conquest of a territory, which begins on its frontiers; for others, it refers to the loss of its peoples and its blessings; for others still, it refers to the loss of the learned sages of a community. The last interpretation has a special resonance with a ḥadīth that states: "God does not take away knowledge by removing it from His servants, but rather takes it away by removing the learned, till, when no learned people remain, people rely on ignorant leaders who are consulted and who make judgments without knowledge. They are thus misled and mislead" (R). Reading this statement as a reference to conquest and loss seems to fit more closely with the remainder of the verse: Is it they who shall prevail? (R).

45 Say, “I only warn you through a revelation.” But the deaf do not hear the call however much they are warned.

45 This verse commands the Prophet to remind his audience that what he says is the result of revelation (wahy); see also 53:3–4: Nor does he speak out of caprice. It is naught but a revelation revealed. For more on the nature of wahy, see 28:7c; 16:68c. They are deaf not in the literal sense, but insofar as they just listen to the revelation and do not act upon what is said; one is effectively “deaf” to a message if one ignores its significance (R). Spiritual deafness is an idea evoked throughout the Quran; see commentary on 2:18; 5:71; 6:25; 31:7. Some read the verb hear in the second person, so that it would be addressed to the Prophet, “Thou canst not cause the deaf to hear when they are warned” (Q, R).

46 And if but a breath of thy Lord’s Punishment were to touch them, they would surely say, “Oh, woe unto us. Truly we were wrongdoers.”

46 Breath renders nafḥah, a word that can also mean “breeze” or “fragrance.” It conveys the idea of something light and very slight, in the sense that one does not come into contact with the thing itself, but with what emanates from it. Here just a “whiff” of the punishment of the Hereafter causes exclamations of woe unto us (R), when it will be too late for the recognition Truly we were wrongdoers to do them any good (Q); see 67:10–11c.

47 We shall set the just scales for the Day of Resurrection, and no soul shall be wronged in aught. Even if it be the weight of a mustard seed, We shall bring it. And We suffice as Reckoner.

47 By for the Day of Resurrection some understand “on the Day of Resurrection” (R) or “for [the people of] the Day of Resurrection” (Q). God’s Knowledge of the tiniest deed is symbolized by the weight of a mustard seed (31:16) or by other very small objects (6:59; 10:61; 34:3; 99:7–8).

For some this verse seems to contradict 18:105: Thus their deeds have come to naught, and on the Day of Resurrection We shall assign them no weight. In this latter verse weight renders wazn, which is related to mawāzīn, the word rendered by scales. Not “assigning them weight” is understood by some to mean not that the scales will not be just, since no soul shall be wronged in aught (see also, e.g., 2:181; 3:25; 4:124; 16:111), but that they will not be honored or glorified on the Day of Resurrection (R).

Some commentators use physical imagery to describe what the scales or balance will be, often saying that the scales will be held by Gabriel and will actually bear some resemblance to the two-pan balance, and that one’s deeds will appear in a form that weighs down one side or the other (R). Others do not see these scales literally, but as a symbolical reference to the “weighing” of actions according to the Justice of God (Q). On the concept of mīzān (“balance” or “scales”), see especially 42:17c; 57:25c; 101:6–9c. On what it means for God “to suffice” in such contexts, see 2:137c; 3:173c.

④⑧ We indeed gave unto Moses and Aaron the Criterion, and a radiant light and a reminder for the reverent, 48 Moses is also described in 2:53 as being given the Criterion (see 25:1c). Here the Criterion is understood to be the Torah (Ṭ) or the help that God gave him in his mission (R). Some interpret the radiant light as referring to the Torah and consequently interpret the Criterion to be a reference to something else (Ṭ), though 5:44 and 6:91 treat the light and the book as one and the same.

④⑨ who fear their Lord unseen, and who are wary of the Hour.

49 Unseen renders ghāʾib, which literally means “absent” or “unseen” (related to ghayb, “unseen [reality]”). Some understand unseen to mean that the reverent here are absent from other people and pray to God in seclusion (R). Or it can refer to the fact that the worshippers are not present before God and the realities of the Hereafter, meaning that they cannot perceive God directly, but know Him through faith, reflection, and contemplation (Q), which keep them from disobedience toward God (R).

50 This is a blessed Reminder that We have sent down. Will you then deny it?

50 The Reminder (dhikr), referring here to the Quran (Q), is used several times throughout this sūrah in this sense of a Divine book (vv. 2, 7, 10, 24, 48, 84, 105).

51 And We indeed gave unto Abraham his sound judgment aforetime, and We knew him

51 Sound judgment renders rushd (see 2:256c; 72:2c); that it was given to Abraham aforetime means before Moses and Aaron (Ṭ). Some take it to mean that Abraham was rightly guided even as a child (R, Ṭ), before he was endowed with the office of prophethood (Q), though some say that it refers to prophethood itself or to the fact that God knew that He would make Abraham a prophet (R).

52 when he said unto his father and his people, “What are these images to which you are cleaving?”

53 They said, “We found our fathers worshipping them.”

54 He said, “Certainly you and your fathers have been in manifest error.”

52–54 Abraham’s encounter with his father and his people over the idols they worshipped is also recounted in 6:76–83; 19:42–48; 26:69–87; 37:84–96; 43:26–28. For the notion of idolaters blindly following the ways of their forefathers, see commentary on 5:104: “Sufficient for us is that which we have found our fathers practicing.” What! Even if their fathers knew naught and were not rightly guided? Similar injunctions are addressed to the Children of Adam (7:28), the Egyptians (10:78; 28:36), and people in general (31:21; 43:24).

55 They said, “Have you brought us the truth, or are you among those who jest?”

55 This verse is similar to the Israelites’ response to Moses in 2:67: And when Moses said to his people, “God commands you to slaughter a cow,” they said, “Do you take us in mockery?”

56 He said, “Nay, but your Lord is the Lord of the heavens and the earth, Who originated them. And I am among those who bear witness unto this.

56 Abraham points out that it is not the idols they worshipped who originated the heavens and the earth (M).

57 And by God, I shall scheme against your idols after you have turned your backs.”

57 Abraham says to himself, “I shall scheme against you concerning your idols” (R, T). In other words, after having tried verbal argument, he was now planning to use a different mode of demonstration (Q).

58 So he broke them into pieces—save the largest of them—that haply they may have recourse to it.

59 They said, “Who has done this to our gods? Verily he is among the wrongdoers!”

58–59 It is said that Abraham lagged behind a group of his people on a festival day in order to accomplish his demonstration (R). Some commentators add that Abraham took the ax with which he smashed the other idols and hung it around the neck of or leaned it against the largest one (Q, T).

That haply they may have recourse to it means that they would turn to the idol to find an explanation for what happened. This phrase could also be translated, “That haply they may return,” in which case it would be interpreted to mean that they would leave off their false worship and return to the true faith practiced by Abraham (R, Ṭ). Save the largest could also mean “save the greatest,” that is, the most important or valued idol (R).

60 They said, “We heard a young man mention them; he is called Abraham.”

61 They said, “So bring him before the eyes of the people, that haply they may bear witness.”

60–61 Mention them here means to mention them by way of censure and blame (Q, Ṭ); as noted in 21:36c, the verb “to mention” can, depending on context, connote a sense of disapproval or blame. They called the people to bear witness against Abraham, either because they did not want to punish him without some proof or because they wanted the punishment to be public (Ṭ), to serve as an example to others (R).

62 They said, “Was it you who did this to our gods, O Abraham?”

63 He said, “Nay, but it was the largest of them that did this. So question them, if they speak!”

62–63 By the largest of them, Abraham means the largest idol, which he left undestroyed (see v. 58). Some see in Abraham’s response here the implication that, according to his ruse, the largest idol was angered by the fact that the other idols were worshipped (Q). Some mention a ḥadīth attributed to the Prophet that states, “Abraham lied only concerning three things: when he said, (1) ‘Truly I am sick’ [37:89]; (2) that Sarah was his sister [Genesis 20:2]; and (3) that the largest idol destroyed the others.” Many commentators wrestle with the problematic notion of Abraham—a prophet—lying under any circumstances, and they do so in a manner similar to their efforts to address Abraham’s apparent worship of celestial bodies in

6:76–78. Al-Qurṭubī mentions that perhaps he told these lies while he was a child, and al-Rāzī reasons that what Abraham said would not count as a lie at all, at least not in the sense of being a deception, since his purpose was to demonstrate a truth by uttering words that no one present could have believed, thus exposing their absurdity.

64 So they consulted among themselves and said, “Verily it is you who are the wrongdoers!”

64 According to some, this verse means that some of the people thought they were wronging Abraham in accusing him (Ṭ).

65 Then they reverted, “Certainly you know that these speak not!”

65 Reverted translates nukisū ‘alā ru’ūsihim, which can also mean “were made to relapse” or, literally, “were turned upside down or turned over onto their heads or beginnings”; that is, the idol worshippers were overcome, albeit briefly, by Abraham’s argument and demonstration and changed their minds (Ṭ). Some think the phrase means they were overcome by the “madness of evil” (Ṭ), or they “went back” (in their thinking) because they were convinced by the arguments of Abraham (Ṭ), meaning that they began to think properly about the matter (R).

66 He said, “Do you worship, apart from God, that which benefits you not in the least, nor harms you?”

66 Similar statements and questions regarding the inability of idols to help or harm can be found in 5:76; 6:71; 10:18, 106; 13:16; 20:89; 22:12; 25:55.

67 Fie upon you, and upon that which you worship apart from God. Do you not understand?”

67 Fie renders the Arabic expression uff, also mentioned as what one should not say to one's parents in 17:23. It is an utterance meant to express annoyance (Z), and even disgust.

68 They said, "Burn him, and help your gods, if you would take action!"

68 This incident is mentioned in more detail in 37:97, where Abraham's people say, Erect a building for him and cast him into the fire. Commentators point out that some of the popular stories attached to this incident, such as the assertion that it was Nimrod who commanded that he be burned, have no direct basis in the Quran itself (R). Some traditions mention that the structure built was so large and became so hot that if a bird flew too close it, would be incinerated in midair (Q, R). It is also reported that Abraham recited a certain prayer as he was being cast into the fire: "O God, Thou art alone in Heaven, and I am alone on earth in worshipping Thee" (Q, R).

69 We said, "O Fire! Be coolness and peace for Abraham."

69 Some say that, were it not for the command to the fire to be peace, the coolness would have overcome Abraham (Ṭ). Al-Rāzī mentions three possible ways the fire became coolness and peace for Abraham: God removed the heat and the ability to burn from the fire while leaving its illumination; God caused a change in the nature of Abraham's body so that he was not affected by the fire; God placed a barrier between Abraham and the fire that kept the fire from burning him.

70 They desired to scheme against him, but We made them the greatest losers.

70 Abraham's opponents were overcome by both the verbal argument and the miracle of Abraham's withstanding the fire unharmed (R).

71 And We delivered him and Lot to the land that We blessed for all peoples.

71 Some say the land that We blessed for all peoples refers to the Levant (Shām; Ṭ), while others say it refers to Makkah (Q), where Abraham went to build the Kaʿbah with Ishmael (2:127). The land from which they were delivered is reputed to be Mesopotamia (ʿIrāq; Q). The idea of a blessed land also appears in v. 81 in connection with Solomon, in 7:137 with regard to the Children of Israel, and in 17:1 in the context of the Prophet’s Night Journey (isrāʿ).

72 And We bestowed upon him Isaac, and Jacob as an added gift. And each of them We made righteous.

72 As an added gift (nāfilan) is thought to refer to Jacob only (Ṭ) based on the reasoning that the initial gift was Isaac and Abraham had not prayed for a grandson (Q). Others read the first part of the verse to mean, “We bestowed upon him Isaac and Jacob as a gift” (Ṭ). Each of them—meaning all three, Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob—was made righteous (R, Ṭ).

73 And We made them imams, guiding according to Our Command. And We revealed unto them the doing of good deeds, the performance of prayer, and the giving of alms. And they were worshippers of Us.

73 On the concept of imams or “leaders,” see also 2:124c; 17:71c. That the three were made imāms means that they were the ones who were followed and imitated (Ṭ); they taught and guided people in matters of religion and good deeds (Q, R).

74 And as for Lot, We gave unto him judgment and knowledge, and We saved him from the town that was committing vile deeds. Truly they were an evil people, iniquitous.

74 This verse continues and We revealed unto them from v. 73, meaning, “And We revealed unto them and unto Lot . . . ” (R). It is also read to imply, “And remember Lot. We gave unto Him judgment and knowledge” (Q). Judgment, or ḥukm, refers to the ability to decide between disputants (R); other prophets are also described as being given ḥukm (3:79; 6:89; 12:22; 19:12; 45:16). For the story of Lot and his people, see 11:77–83, and also 7:80–84; 15:57–77; 26:160–73; 27:54–58; 29:28–35; 54:33–38.

75 And We caused him to enter Our Mercy; verily, he was among the righteous.

75 To enter into God’s Mercy is an idea also mentioned in 4:175; 7:151; 9:99; 42:8; 45:30; 48:25; 76:31. In this specific instance some interpret this Mercy to mean the status of prophethood, while others say that it refers to the rewards given to him by God in the Hereafter (R).

76 And [remember] Noah, when he cried out aforetime, We answered him and saved him and his family from great distress.

77 And We helped him against those people who denied Our signs. Truly they were an evil people; so We drowned them all together.

76–77 Before Abraham and his progeny, Noah was saved from the punishment meted out to his people in the form of the flood (Q, Ṭ), though the great distress can also be interpreted to include the mockery and insults Noah and his followers suffered (R). For the story of Noah, see 7:59–64; 10:71–73; 11:25–48; 23:23–30; 26:105–21; 37:75–82; 54:9–15; and Sūrah 71. Family renders ahl, which can also mean “people.” His family can thus be understood to mean “his people,” meaning those who followed the religion he taught (R).

78 And [remember] David and Solomon, when they rendered judgment regarding the tillage, when the people’s sheep strayed therein by night.

And We were Witness to their judgment.

78 Tillage refers to crops or an orchard (Ṭ). The animals wandered in unguarded and destroyed the vegetation. According to one account, David rendered judgment and awarded the sheep to the owner of the field as compensation, but Solomon intervened and recommended that the sheep be given to the farmer until the land returned to its previous state, to which David gladly agreed (Ṭ). In another version, Solomon recommended that the two owners exchange places: the shepherd would care for the field until it was restored to its previous state, and in the meantime the farmer would benefit from the milk and wool of the flock (Q). Some note that the Quran itself transmits none of these details, not even that there was a disagreement between David and Solomon on the matter, but they accept that the events occurred because of the testimony of the tradition on the question (R).

79 We made Solomon to understand it, and unto both We gave judgment and knowledge. We compelled the mountains and the birds to glorify along with David; We did this.

79 We made Solomon to understand it refers to the judgment he gave that was adopted by David (Ṭ). That the birds glorified God together with David is also mentioned in 27:16; 34:10; and 38:19. Here the glorification by the mountains is thought to mean that when David glorified God, the mountains would echo in response, or that David could command the mountains to do so (Q). Others say that it means that the mountains glorified God in accord with the universal sense of 17:44 (And there is no thing, save that it hymns His praise, though you do not understand their praise), but that David possessed an awareness and knowledge of this glorification that intensified his own certainty and glorification (R).

Some commentators view the two judgments rendered by David and Solomon and the adoption of Solomon's through the lens of the Islamic concept of "independent judgment," or ijtihad. A well-known ḥadīth states that if judges exercise their judgment and arrive at the correct decision, they are given two rewards by God, but if they exercise their judgment and err, they still receive a single reward. That is to say, when someone performs ijtihad with the proper qualifications and intentions, this is in and of itself meritorious, but it is doubly so if one comes to the correct judgment.

In this context, commentators address the issue that arises from the fact that

David, a prophet, had his judgment overturned in favor of another judgment. Some note that it is not impossible for a prophet to make a mistake; the “infallibility” or “protection from error” of prophets—an important tenet of Islamic theology—would only be damaged if a prophet were to persist in an error (Q). Thus some commentators opine that even prophets can exercise judgment of a normal human kind (ijtihad), which would not, in their view, contradict the fact that they are prophets (Q). For other commentators, Solomon’s judgment amounts to a kind of “abrogation” (naskh) of David’s judgment. Abrogation occurs where two judgments are both correct and Divinely inspired, but the one that is later in time supersedes the earlier one (Bđ, IK); on the concept of abrogation in Islamic Law, see 2:106c. Viewing the incident in terms of Divine abrogation preserves the idea that each of the prophets in the story was inerrant and guided directly by God and avoids the issue of a possibly imperfect or erroneous judgment by a prophet.

80 And We taught him how to make garments for you to protect you against your own might, but are you thankful?

80 Garments renders labūs, a word that can also refer to any weapon (Q, Ṭ), though the root l-b-s pertains more to something that is worn; see 34:11, where God says to David, Make coats of mail, and measure well the links thereof. The phrase against your own might means from your battles and wars and from your weapons (Q). See also 16:81: He has made coats for you that protect you from the heat and coats that protect you from your own might.

81 And unto Solomon, the wind blowing violently: it ran by his command to the land that We had blessed. And We know all things.

81 Solomon could command the wind to run to the land that God had blessed, where Solomon resided (Ṭ; see also 34:12c; 38:36). For more on Solomon and his miraculous court, see 27:17–44.

82 Among the satans are those who dove deep for him, and performed other deeds besides this. And We guarded them.

82 Dove deep refers to diving into the sea (Q, Ṭ) to extract precious gems (Th); among the other deeds the satans performed was building (Ṭ). Guarded them means that God ensured that the effects of the works of the satans would not become corrupted (Th), since the wont of satans (usually understood to refer to jinn) is to do something seemingly good and then cause it to become bad (R). Regarding other tasks assigned to the satans and the punishment they receive for deviating from Solomon’s commands, see commentary on 34:13–14.

83 And [remember] Job, when he cried unto his Lord, “Truly affliction has befallen me! And Thou art the most Merciful of the merciful.”

84 So We answered him and removed the affliction that was upon him, and We gave him his family, and the like thereof along with them, as a mercy from Us and a reminder to the worshippers.

83–84 On the story of Job, see commentary on 38:41–44. Many commentators transmit the background of the story of Job, which is not told in the same level of narrative detail in the Quran, from the Biblical description of his life, including Satan’s seeking and receiving permission from God to test Job by destroying his property, his family, and his health. This story is sometimes combined with dimensions not found in the Biblical account, such as explicit mention of Satan’s jealousy as a reason for seeking God’s permission to try Job as well as the notion that Satan “overheard” God’s Praise of Job (see 37:6–10c; Ṭ).

85 And [remember] Ishmael, Idrīs, and Dhu’l-Kifl—each was among the patient.

85 Idrīs is usually associated with the Biblical Enoch (Akhnūkh or Ukhnūkh; Ṭ), but also with Elias (6:85) and in later sources also with Hirmis or Hermes; for more on Idrīs and other understandings of who he was, see 19:56–57c.

Dhu’l-Kifl (who is also mentioned in 38:48) is described in many of the traditional accounts as a just and pious man, some say an Israelite, who was entrusted with the responsibility for his people from a good king or a prophet usually left unnamed (IK, Q, ٢); kifl is etymologically related to the idea of responsibility or guardianship, but it has other meanings as well. Some accounts mention that he was chosen for this responsibility on the condition that he fast during the day, pray during the night, and not display anger. Others say that he was a prophet, variously identified with Zachariah, Joshua, or Elias, and that Dhu'l-Kifl was a title or second name for one of these prophets, just as al-Masīḥ (“Messiah”) was for Jesus, Israel was for Jacob, or Aḥmad (61:6) was for Muhammad (R); see also 38:48c. Some, especially Indian Muslim scholars, identify him with the Buddha.

86 We caused them to enter Our Mercy; truly they are among the righteous.

86 We caused them to enter Our Mercy, that is, according to many, the Garden in the Hereafter (Q); see also 21:75c.

87 And [remember] Dhu'l-Nūn, when he went away in anger, and thought We had no power over him. Then he cried out in the darkness, “There is no god but Thee! Glory be to Thee! Truly I have been among the wrongdoers.”

87 Dhu'l-Nūn, mentioned only in this verse of the Quran, is another name for Jonah (٢; nūn means a large fish or whale, making the name Dhu'l-Nūn mean something like “the man of the fish”). The Quran does not tell the story of Jonah in full, but assumes its audience had prior knowledge of Jonah’s preaching to Nineveh, his flight on a ship, and his being cast overboard and swallowed by a fish (for more, see commentary on 37:139–45; 68:48–50 is also understood to be about Jonah). It is thought that his anger was directed against God because He spared Nineveh after having promised to destroy it, or that he was expressing a just anger on behalf of God in the face of the disobedience of his people (see 37:142c; Q, ٢).

Thought We had no power over him has various interpretations. Either Jonah believed God would not punish him for his sins, or he did not believe God could end the punishment and affliction he was already suffering (٢). Some see this as a rhetorical question meaning, “Did he think We had no power over him?” (٢), while for others it means, “He thought We would not straiten him”; had . . . power renders the verb naqdir (from qadara), which can also have the sense of “straiten” or “withhold,” as in 13:26: God outspreads and straitens provision for whomsoever He will (Q). This last opinion is preferred by those who refuse to believe that the thought that one could escape God’s Omnipotence would ever occur to the mind of a prophet. A literal meaning would be that it is an expression of Jonah’s “thinking well” (ḥusn al-ẓann) of God, in that he did not expect to be punished by Him (Su).

Darkness renders ẓulumāt, which is in the plural form and is thus interpreted by some to mean the darkness of the belly of the fish within the darkness of the sea within the darkness of the night (Q, Ṭ); on the significance of the plural form ẓulumāt, see 5:16c.

88 So We answered him, and saved him from grief. Thus do We save the believers.

88 We answered him; that is, God saved him from the belly of the fish (Ṭ); see 37:143–44c. For the Sufi Junayd, this verse means that God saves the believers from their troubles through their own sincerity, an awareness of their needfulness of God, the virtues, and manifesting an attitude of surrender (Su).

89 And [remember] Zachariah, when he cried out to his Lord, “My Lord! Leave me not childless, though Thou art the best of inheritors.”

89 The story of Zachariah is told in 3:37–41 and 19:2–11. Zachariah’s statement that God is the best of inheritors means that, in the absence of an heir, God would be the only one to inherit from him, an idea alluded to also in 28:58, where God speaks of Himself as the only one left to inherit from a people who were destroyed. Interpreted at a higher level, Zachariah’s prayer is that he not be left bereft of intimacy with God and without a way that would lead to Him (Su).

90 So We answered him, and bestowed John upon him, and We set his wife aright for him. Truly they vied in good deeds. They called upon Us with desire and with fear, and they were humble before Us.

90 Set his wife aright is interpreted to mean that God made her able to bear children (Q, T), as she is described as barren in 3:40; it can also mean something like to make her physically sound and healthy in this regard. Some commentators consider they vied in good deeds to include not only Zachariah, his wife, and John, but also the other prophets already mentioned in this sūrah (Q). To call upon Us (i.e., to pray to God) with both desire and fear means that they prayed in times of both ease and hardship, out of both hope and distress (Q).

91 And as for she who preserved her chastity, We breathed into her of Our Spirit, and made her and her son a sign for the worlds.

91 This verse is a reference to Mary (T), who is also described in 66:12 as one who preserved her chastity. Mary and Jesus together were a sign in the sense that the miracle of Jesus' virgin birth involved both of them (Q, R), but other signs, or miracles, are related to Mary or Jesus independently of one another, including the mysterious nourishment Mary received in the Temple (3:37) and Jesus' speaking in the cradle (19:29–30; R).

According to al-Rāzī, to breathe spirit into a human body means to cause it to have life, as mentioned in 38:72, where God says to the angels regarding Adam: I have proportioned him and breathed into him of My Spirit. See also 38:72c, which discusses the nuances of what it means for God's Spirit to be breathed into human beings.

92 Truly this community of yours is one community, and I am your Lord. So worship Me!

93 But they have fragmented their affair among themselves. Each is returning unto Us.

92–93 Cf. 23:52. One community is in the accusative, which causes some to see this verse as meaning, “This community of yours will continue to be one [as long as it holds to the truth]” (Q). Others take it to mean, “This religion of yours is one” (R, Ṭ), or that, despite the multiplicity of the prophets mentioned in this sūrah, the doctrine and reality of God’s Oneness is always the same (Q). They have fragmented their affair means that the communities to which the prophets were sent came to disagree over matters of religion (Ṭ) and broke up into sects and denominations (R). On the notion of one community and the disagreements and fragmentation that took place among earlier religious communities, see commentary on 2:213; 3:19; 5:48; 42:14.

94 And whosoever performs righteous deeds and is a believer, there shall be no ingratitude for his endeavor, and surely We shall write [it] down for him.

94 For the theological issues raised by this verse, namely, what it means to be a believer and perform righteous deeds so that one is saved, see 2:62c; 5:69c; and the essay “The Quranic View of Sacred History and Other Religions.” The idea of gratitude on the part of God (since there shall be no ingratitude) is also mentioned in 2:158; 4:147; 35:30; 42:23; 64:17. We shall write [it] down can also be rendered, “We write [it] down,” in the present tense, referring to the recording of human deeds often mentioned in the Quran (see, e.g., 10:21; 36:12c; 45:28–29c; 78:29). This phrase can also refer to God’s writing these deeds down in the Mother of the Book (13:39) or to the book of deeds that will be presented to people on the Day of Judgment, mentioned in 18:49: What a book this is! It leaves out nothing, small or great, save that it has taken account thereof. In some respects this verse resembles 17:19: And whosoever desires the Hereafter, and endeavors for it earnestly, and is a believer—it is they whose efforts shall be appreciated.

95 And it is forbidden unto any town We have destroyed that they should ever return,

95 The Arabic of this verse has an apparent double negative that commentators discuss and interpret in order to avoid the meaning, “It is forbidden unto any town We have destroyed that they shall not return,” which would mean that they would necessarily return. If read as a literal double negative, it is interpreted as saying that they will inevitably and necessarily “return” in the Hereafter to God (R), as alluded to in many verses in the Quran that state, And unto God are all matters returned (e.g., 22:76). Some read it is forbidden as “It is decided or resolved that,” meaning that God has determined that those who have been destroyed will not return to the world (R, Ṭ) or that they will not repent (Q); “repentance” (tawbah) also has the sense of turning or returning.

96 till the time when Gog and Magog are unleashed, and they rush down from every hill, 96 Gog and Magog are described as vicious and destructive beings locked away by the figure Dhu'l-Qarnayn in 18:94–99; see commentary on these verses. Unleashed renders fuzihat, which can literally mean “opened,” referring to the opening of the rampart that was built to hold them in (see 18:95). Hill can mean any high place (Ṭ).

97 and the true promise draws nigh. And, behold, there shall be the fixed stare of those who disbelieved, “Oh, woe unto us! We have certainly been heedless of this! Indeed, we have been wrongdoers.”

97 The coming of Gog and Magog is a sign of the impending end of the world (Ṭ). The true promise refers to the Day of Resurrection (R). The second phrase of this verse could also be read to mean, “The stare of those who disbelieved will be fixed” (Ṭ), which will occur because of the fear they experience in the face of this horrible event (Q, Ṭ); see also 14:42, He merely grants them reprieve till a day when eyes will stare, transfixed, and also 80:34–37, which speaks of how people react to their doom on the Day of Judgment. We have certainly been heedless of this reflects the fact that in the life of the world they paid no attention to such matters (R). Gog and Magog represent, at the level of spiritual symbolism, the preoccupations, tumult, and impressions that assault the soul, causing it to become corrupted and vulnerable to satanic influences (Aj).

98 Surely you and that which you worship apart from God shall be fuel for Hell. Unto it you shall come.

98 This verse is said to be addressed to the Makkan idolaters (R). Being fuel for the Fire or for Hell is also mentioned in 2:24; 3:10; 66:6. Some commentators mention that when the Quraysh heard this verse directed against their gods, they become extremely agitated and responded by pointing out to Muhammad that Jesus was worshipped by Christians and that some people also worshipped angels, at which time the Prophet remained silent until v. 101 was revealed, which, according to one interpretation, made clear that Jesus, the angels, and other figures who did not invite worship of themselves would not be fuel for the Fire (Q, R). Some do not interpret the relationship between v. 98 and v. 101 in this way at all and say, rather, that v. 98 makes it clear that it is the Quraysh who are being addressed directly, and that the use of the pronoun that which (mā) rather than “who” (man) implies that it is inanimate objects and not living beings that will be fuel for Hell (R). Al-Rāzī thus interprets the reaction of silence on the part of the Prophet to be a signal that the response was so obviously erroneous.

Seeing the once revered idols in the Fire is part of the anguish of the punishment (R). Another possible interpretation is that “that which they worshipped” could refer to an aspect of their own souls, meaning that their very attachment to false idols will be fuel for their sufferings and in fact will be the very cause of that suffering, recalling 25:43, which speaks of one’s desires as objects of worship themselves: Hast thou considered the one who takes his caprice as his god?

99 Had these been gods, they would not have come unto it. But each shall abide therein.

99 If the gods had been actual divinities, they would have been able to help their worshippers and keep them out of the Fire (Ṭ). Each shall abide therein means that both the worshipper and the object of worship will be fuel for the Fire (Ṭ).

100 Theirs shall be groaning therein, and therein they shall hear not.

100 Groaning (zafīr) is also mentioned in 11:106. They shall hear not is interpreted to mean that each person will experience the suffering utterly alone.

Some accounts describe the denizens of the Fire being placed into a container that is placed into another that is placed into yet another, so they are unable to sense anything other than their own suffering (Q, Ṭ). For some they shall hear not refers to the fact that they will be resurrected deaf, as described in 17:97: And We shall gather them on the Day of Resurrection upon their faces—blind, dumb, and deaf (R).

101 Surely those for whom what is most beautiful has already gone forth from Us; they shall be kept far from it.

101 This verse is understood by some to be a statement of predestination regarding those whose destination in the Garden has already gone forth, or has already been foreordained by God (Ṭ), while others think that it refers to those objects of worship who were falsely worshipped but did not participate in this false worship, such as Jesus and the angels (R, Ṭ), and who for this reason would not be fuel for Hell as described in v. 98, an interpretation that some see as gratuitous and erroneous (R). For others, this verse refers to those saints who are providentially chosen for sainthood (walāyah/wilāyah) or “friendship” with God and a life of virtue (Su).

102 They hear not the slightest sound thereof, while they abide in that which their souls desire.

102 Those for whom what is most beautiful has gone forth (v. 101) will not hear the slightest sound (ḥasīs) of the Fire (Ṭ). That the inhabitants of Paradise will have what they desire or call for is also mentioned in 16:31; 25:16; 36:57; 39:34; 42:22; 50:35; 77:41–42. Interpreted symbolically, this verse means that people of spiritual realization (ahl al-ḥaqāʾiq) do not hear the clamor of the world, occupied as they are with God and with the true nature of things and not distracted by what is other than true reality; the desire of the spirit is closeness with God, and the desire of the heart is vision of God (Su).

103 The greatest terror will not grieve them, and the angels will receive them. “This is your Day, which you were promised.”

103 The greatest terror refers to the Fire as it consumes those who are in it (Ṭ). For others it refers to the second blowing of the trumpet, when souls are resurrected (see 27:87c; 36:51; 39:68c; R, Ṭ). Others say that it refers to death, since in the Hereafter no one will die (R).

104 That Day We shall roll up the sky like the rolling of scrolls for writings. As We began the first creation, so shall We bring it back—a promise binding upon Us. Surely We shall do it.

104 The destruction or transformation of the cosmos is described in similar terms in 39:67: The heavens will be enfolded in His right Hand. Here scrolls renders sijill, understood to mean rolled-up pages upon which one writes, but which is interpreted by some to be the name of an angel (this is not unlike other normal Arabic words understood to be also the proper names of things, as described in 2:19c and 2:79c; Ṭ).

So shall We bring it back means that people will be brought back in the same condition in which they were created the first time—that is, barefoot, naked, and uncircumcised (Ṭ), an interpretation deriving from a ḥadīth. The Prophet stated, “O people! You will surely be resurrected unto God barefoot, naked, uncircumcised,” after which he recited, As We began the first creation, so shall We bring it back (Q). This verse is similar to 6:94: And [God will say], “Now you have come unto Us alone, just as We created you the first time, and you have left behind that which We had bestowed upon you. See also 18:48: They shall be arrayed before thy Lord in ranks. “Indeed, you have come unto Us as We created you the first time.”

For some this verse signifies the destruction and new creation of the heavens and the earth, as mentioned in 14:48: On that Day the earth shall be changed into other than the earth, and the heavens [too], and they will appear before God, the One, the Paramount. Theological disputes surrounding such verses center on whether the heavens and the earth will become nothing and a new creation will come into being from nothing, or whether in some sense the “parts” of the heavens and earth will be rearranged and reformed into a new creation (R).

105 And We have indeed written in the Psalms, after the Reminder, that My righteous servants shall inherit the earth.

105 The Psalms (al-Zabūr) are mentioned in 4:163 and 17:55. Some understand zabūr (often considered a synonym for kitāb, meaning “book” or “scripture”) to refer not just to the Psalms of David, but to all the books of the prophets (R, Ṭ), which would include the Torah, the Gospel, and the Quran (Q, Ṭ). The Reminder is what is in Heaven (Ṭ), the Mother of the Book (3:7; 13:39; 43:4), with God (R, Ṭ). For some commentators the earth refers to “the earth of the Garden” (Q, Ṭ), evidently meaning a kind of celestial earth, since the this-worldly earth is shared by both disbelievers and believers, while the Garden belongs to the latter only (R); others say that the earth refers to this world (R, Ṭ) and denotes disbelievers’ lands that would be inherited by the community of Muhammad.

106 Truly in this is a proclamation for a worshipful people.

106 A worshipful people is understood to refer to those who perform the five daily canonical prayers and fast the month of Ramadan, meaning the community of Muhammad (Q, Ṭ). Others see this verse as referring to those who are especially devoted to God, who do not worship God for the delights of the Garden or to be free of the Fire, but who do so out of love for God and pride in being a worshipper of God (Su).

107 And We sent thee not, save as a mercy unto the worlds.

107 Mercy renders rahmah, a word that can also mean “compassion,” “kindness,” “love,” and “caring.” On the concept of rahmah in relation to God see 1:3c and 7:156c. The grammar of this verse allows it to be understood to mean either that the sending of the Prophet Muhammad was a merciful act by God or that the Prophet is himself a mercy that God sent. It can signify that the Prophet is a possessor of mercy, is merciful, or is himself a mercy (Āl). Muslims often interpret this verse to mean that the Prophet is a mercy, because he is a cause for happiness in the “two abodes”—that is, in both the life of this world and the Hereafter—and that the prohibitions and commandments of the Law are all for the purpose of attaining mercy (Aj). The Prophet is considered by Muslims a mercy not only for believers, but for all people (Ṭ)—(for some the worlds here refers to both human beings and jinn; M)—though some restrict it to believers only (Q). Commentators often say that the Prophet was a mercy to disbelievers in that his opponents and enemies would not experience the same kinds of destruction and ignominy suffered by the tormentors of previous prophets (N, R, Ṭ, Th), even though all the prophets can be thought of as being sent as a mercy from God, just as all of the Divine books can be seen as a mercy (M). Some explain this point by saying that it is not necessary that the Prophet be a mercy to all people in the same way or in the same respect (R). This mercy can also refer to the privilege given to the Prophet Muhammad of intercession on the Day of Judgment (M; see 17:79c).

108 Say, “It is only revealed unto me that your God is one God. So will you be submitters?”

108 Cf. 2:163; 16:22; 22:34; 29:46; 41:6. Submitters renders muslim; see 2:128c.

109 But if they turn away, say, “I have proclaimed to you all equally. I know not whether that which you are promised is nigh or far off.

109 The Prophet is enjoined to say that he has taught everyone equally and has not kept any part of the revelation secret from anyone (Q, R); see also 81:24: And he does not withhold grudgingly [knowledge of] the unseen. Equally renders ‘alā sawā’, which is rendered in a just way in 8:58: And if thou fearest treachery from a people, withdraw from them in a just way. Because of this common wording, some understand ‘alā sawā’ (equally) to refer to fair warning that there was going to be a state of war between them (R), so that this verse would be rendered, “I have proclaimed to you all in a just way.” These ideas are common themes throughout the Quran, namely, that the Prophet’s responsibility is only to convey the message (e.g., 3:20; 5:92, 99; 13:40; 16:82; 29:18; 36:17; 42:48; 64:12; 88:21–24) and that he has no knowledge of the time of the Day of Resurrection (Q), which is known only to God (e.g., 7:187; 31:34; 33:63; 41:47; 43:85; 79:42–44).

110 Verily He knows that which is spoken openly and He knows that which you conceal.

110 See also 2:284; 4:149; 27:74; 33:54; 87:7, where public statements and secret thoughts are also said to be equally known by God.

111 And I know not; perhaps it is a trial for you, and an enjoyment for a while.”

111 Perhaps it is a trial for you; that is, perhaps the delaying of the punishment is a trial and not a blessing (Ṭ). This fact is also mentioned in 26:205–7, where the Quran says that more time only gives the disbelievers more opportunity to commit evil and entrench themselves in denial. Following the alternate interpretation offered in v. 109 above, this verse refers to the impending fight or battle that would take place after fair warning was given that fighting would occur (R).

112 He said, “My Lord, judge with truth! Our Lord is the Compassionate, the One Whose help is sought against that which you ascribe.”

112 The verb in this verse can be read as an imperative, “Say: My Lord, judge with truth!” (Ṭ). And some read the verse to mean, “My Lord judged/judges with truth” (Ṭ); see also 7:89: Our Lord! Decide between us and our people in truth, and Thou art the best of deciders. Some interpret this verse to mean that the Prophet seeks God’s Help against accusations that he is a sorcerer or poet (vv. 3–5), or against the blasphemous statements made about God, such as His having a child (see, e.g., 19:35; Ṭ).

The Pilgrimage

al-Ḥajj

There is no general agreement as to when al-Ḥajj was revealed. Some say it is Madinan except for vv. 52–55, which are Makkan (IK), while others say it is Makkan except for vv. 19–22, which are from the Madinan period (Q). Most say it is a mix of Makkan and Madinan verses (Q). According to one tradition, it was called one of the most remarkable of sūrahs for several reasons: it was revealed both at night and during the day, while on journey and while at home, and during war and during peace; it contains both abrogating and abrogated verses; and it has both muḥkam (unambiguous) and mutashābih (symbolic or allegorical) verses (Q). It takes its name from the mention of the ḥajj (pilgrimage) in v. 27 and also the broader discussion of it throughout.

Al-Ḥajj opens with a warning of the terrors of the destruction of the world and the Resurrection (vv. 1–4), which are compared to the individual life cycle of human beings (vv. 5–7). The traits of the misguided are described and compared with those of the righteous through the parable of a garden and by describing their reward or punishment in the Hereafter (vv. 8–25). The significance of the ḥajj is addressed in a passage that begins with a reminder that the rituals of the ḥajj were begun by Abraham and goes on to note that the true meaning of the rites of pilgrimage lies in the inner state of reverence (taqwā) that reaches God, not sacrificial meat or other physical aspects of the ḥajj (vv. 26–37).

The resistance to and rejection of other prophets by their peoples is mentioned in a passage that some commentators have explained in terms of the “story of the cranes,” more popularly known in the West as the “Satanic Verses,” which are connected to various passages of the Quran, but are often discussed in connection with v. 52 of this sūrah. This sūrah contains an important passage thought by many scholars to be the first verses revealed giving the Muslim community permission to resort to the use of force to defend itself against persecution (v. 39–41); it also contains significant verses dealing with the relationship of Islam to other religions and the place of the Muslim community in history (vv. 17, 34, 67, 78).

In the Name of God, the Compassionate, the Merciful

① O mankind! Reverence your Lord. Truly the quaking of the Hour is a tremendous thing. ② On the day you see it, every nursing woman will forget what she nurses, and every pregnant woman will deliver her burden, and you will see mankind drunk, though drunk they will not be. Rather, the Punishment of God is severe. ③ And among mankind are those who dispute concerning God, without knowledge, and follow every defiant satan, ④ for whom it is decreed that, should anyone take him as a protector, he will cause him to go astray and guide him unto the punishment of the Blaze. ⑤ O mankind! If you are in doubt concerning the Resurrection, [remember] We created you from dust, then from a drop, then from a blood clot, then from a lump of flesh, formed and unformed, that We may make clear for you. And We cause what We will to remain in the wombs for a term appointed. Then We bring you forth as an infant, then that you may reach maturity. And some are taken in death, and some are consigned to the most abject life, so that after having known they may know nothing. And thou seest the earth desiccated, but when We send down water upon it, it stirs and swells and produces every delightful kind. ⑥ That is because God is the Truth, and because He gives life to the dead, and because He is Powerful over all things, ⑦ and because the Hour is coming, in which there is no doubt, and because God will resurrect whosoever is in the graves. ⑧ And among mankind are those who dispute concerning God without knowledge, without guidance, and without an illuminating Book, ⑨ turning aside to cause others to stray from the way of God.

Such shall have disgrace in this world, and We shall make him taste the punishment of the burning on the Day of Resurrection. ⑩ That is because of what your hands have sent forth, and because God wrongs not His servants. ⑪ And among mankind some worship God upon a brink: if good befalls him, he is content thereby, but if a trial befalls him, he is turned over upon his face, losing this world and the Hereafter. That is the manifest loss. ⑫ He calls, apart from God, upon that which neither harms him nor benefits him. That is extreme error. ⑬ He calls upon one whose harm is likelier than his benefit. What an evil ally, and what an evil friend! ⑭ Truly God will cause those who believe and perform righteous deeds to enter Gardens with rivers running below. Truly God does whatsoever He desires. ⑮ Whosoever thinks that God will not help him in this world and the Hereafter, let him stretch out a rope to Heaven. Then let him sever it and see if his scheming removes that which enrages. ⑯ Thus do We send it down as clear signs, and thus does God guide whomsoever He desires. ⑰ As for those who believe, and those who are Jews, the Sabeans, the Christians, the Magians, and the idolaters, indeed God will judge between them on the Day of Resurrection. Truly God is Witness over all things. ⑱ Hast thou not considered that unto God prostrates whosoever is in the heavens and whosoever is on the earth, the sun, the moon, the stars, the mountains, the trees, and the beasts, and many among mankind? But for many the punishment has come due. Whomsoever God disgraces, none can ennoble. Truly God does whatsoever He will. ⑲ These two adversaries dispute concerning their Lord. As for those who disbelieve, garments of fire shall be cut for them, and boiling liquid shall be poured over their heads, ⑳ by which their innards and their skin will be melted. ㉑ And for them shall be hooked iron rods. ㉒ Whensoever they desire, in their grief, to leave it, they shall be returned unto it, while [being told], “Taste the punishment of the burning!” ㉓ Truly God will cause those who believe and perform righteous deeds to enter Gardens with rivers running below, adorned therein with bracelets of gold and pearl, and therein their clothes will be of silk. ㉔ And they shall be guided unto that which is good in speech, and be guided unto the path of the Praised. 25 Truly those who disbelieve and turn from the way of God, and the Sacred Mosque which We have appointed for mankind—equal are those who dwell there and those who come from abroad—whosoever desires to deviate wrongfully therein, We shall cause him to taste a painful punishment. 26 And [remember] when We assigned for Abraham the place of the House, [saying], “Ascribe no partners unto Me, and purify My House for those who circumambulate, and those who stand, and those who bow and prostrate. 27 And proclaim the ḥajj among mankind: they shall come to thee on foot and upon all [manner of] lean beast, coming from all deep and distant mountain highways, 28 that they may witness benefits for them and mention the Name of God, during known days, over the four-legged cattle He has provided them. So eat thereof, and feed the wretched poor. 29 Then let them be done with their untidiness, and fulfill their vows, and circumambulate the Ancient House.” 30 Thus it is. And whosoever magnifies the sacred things of God, that is better for him in the eyes of his Lord. Cattle are permitted you, save that which is recited unto you. So shun the filth of idols, and shun false speech, 31 as ḥanīfs before God, not ascribing partners unto Him. And whosoever ascribes partners unto God, it is as if he fell from the sky and the birds snatched him, or the wind swept him away to a place far off. 32 Thus it is. And whosoever magnifies the rituals of God, truly that comes from the reverence of hearts. 33 You shall have benefits in them, for a term appointed. Thereafter their lawful place of sacrifice shall be at the Ancient House. 34 For every community We have appointed a rite, that they might mention the Name of God over the four-legged cattle He has provided them. Your God is one God; so submit unto Him, and give glad tidings to the humble, 35 whose hearts quiver when God is mentioned, and who bear patiently what befalls them, who perform the prayer, and who spend of that which We have provided them. 36 And We have placed the sacrificial camels for you among God’s rituals. There is good for you in them. So mention the Name of God over them as they line up. Then when they have fallen upon their flanks, eat of them, and feed the needy who solicit and those who do not. Thus have We made them subservient unto you, that haply you may give thanks. ③⑦ Neither their flesh nor their blood will reach God, but the reverence from you reaches Him. Thus has He made them subservient unto you, that you might magnify God for having guided you. And give glad tidings to the virtuous. ③⑧ Truly God defends those who believe. Truly God loves not any ungrateful traitor. ③⑨ Permission is granted to those who are fought, because they have been wronged—and truly God is able to help them— ④① who were expelled from their homes without right, only for saying, “Our Lord is God.” Were it not for God’s repelling people, some by means of others, monasteries, churches, synagogues, and mosques, wherein God’s Name is mentioned much, would have been destroyed. And God will surely help those who help Him—truly God is Strong, Mighty— ④② who, were We to establish them upon the earth, would perform the prayer, give the alms, and enjoin right and forbid wrong. And unto God is the end of all affairs. ④③ And if they deny thee, the people of Noah denied before them, as did °Ād and Thamūd, ④④ and the people of Abraham, and the people of Lot, ④⑤ and the inhabitants of Midian, and Moses too was denied. But I granted the disbelievers a respite; then I seized them in punishment. And how, then, was the change I wrought! ④⑥ How many a town have We destroyed while it did wrong, laying thus fallen upon their roofs! And [how many] an abandoned well and lofty palace! ④⑦ Have they not journeyed upon the earth, that they might have hearts by which to understand or ears by which to hear? Truly it is not the eyes that go blind, but it is hearts within breasts that go blind. ④⑧ They bid thee to hasten the punishment, though God will not fail His Promise. And truly a day with your Lord is as a thousand years of that which you reckon. ④⑨ And how many a town did I grant respite while it did wrong. Then I seized it [in punishment], and unto Me is the journey’s end! ⑤① Say, “O mankind! I am only a clear warner unto you!” ⑤② And as for those who believe and perform righteous deeds, theirs shall be forgiveness and a generous provision. ⑤③ But those who endeavor to thwart Our signs, they shall be the inhabitants of Hellfire. ⑤④ And no messenger or prophet did We send before thee, but that when he had a longing, Satan would cast into his longing, whereupon God effaces what Satan cast. Then God makes firm His signs—and God is Knowing, Wise — 53 that He might make what Satan casts to be a trial for those in whose hearts is a disease, and those whose hearts are hard—and truly the wrongdoers are in extreme schism— 54 and so that those who have been given knowledge might know that it is the truth from thy Lord, and thus believe in it, and that their hearts be humbled before Him. And truly God guides those who believe unto a straight path. 55 Yet those who disbelieve remain in doubt over it, till the Hour comes upon them suddenly or there comes upon them the punishment of a barren day. 56 Sovereignty that Day shall be God's; He will judge between them, and those who believe and perform righteous deeds shall be in Gardens of bliss. 57 And as for those who disbelieve and deny Our signs, theirs shall be a humiliating punishment. 58 And as for those who emigrate in the way of God and are then slain or die, God will surely provide them with a beautiful provision. And truly God is the best of providers. 59 He will surely cause them to enter an entrance with which they shall be content. And truly God is Knowing, Clement. 60 Thus it is. And whosoever retaliates with the like of that which he has suffered, and is then aggressed upon, God will surely help him. Truly God is Pardoning, Forgiving. 61 That is because God makes the night pass into the day and makes the day pass into the night, and because God is Hearing, Seeing. 62 That is because God is the Truth and what they call upon apart from Him is false, and because God is the Exalted, the Great. 63 Hast thou not considered that God sends down water from Heaven, and then the earth becomes green? Truly God is Subtle, Aware. 64 To Him belongs whatsoever is in the heavens and whatsoever is on the earth. And God is truly the Self-Sufficient, the Praised. 65 Hast thou not considered that God has made whatsoever is on the earth subservient unto you—and the ship sails upon the sea—by His Command? And He maintains the sky lest it fall upon the earth, save by His Leave. Truly God is Kind and Merciful unto mankind. 66 And He it is Who gave you life; then He causes you to die; then He gives you life. Truly man is ungrateful. 67 For every community We have appointed a rite they are to perform; so let them not argue with thee over the matter. And call to thy Lord. Truly thou art following straight guidance. 68 And if they dispute with thee, say, “God knows best what you do. 69 God will judge between you on the Day of Resurrection concerning that wherein you used to differ.” 70 Knowest thou not that God knows whatsoever is in Heaven and on earth? Truly that is in a Book. Truly that is easy for God. 71 And they worship, apart from God, that for which He has sent down no authority, and that whereof they have no knowledge. And the wrongdoers shall have no helpers. 72 And when Our signs are recited unto them as clear proofs, thou seest denial upon the faces of those who disbelieve. They well-nigh pounce upon those who recite Our signs unto them. Say, “Shall I inform you of what is worse than that? The Fire God has promised to those who disbelieve. What an evil journey’s end!” 73 O mankind! A parable is set forth, so hearken unto it! Truly those upon whom you call apart from God will never create a fly, even if they gathered together to do so. And if the fly should rob them of aught, they could not rescue it from it. Feeble are the seeker and the sought! 74 And they did not measure God with His true measure. Truly God is Strong, Mighty. 75 God chooses messengers from among the angels and from among mankind. Truly God is Hearing, Seeing. 76 He knows that which is before them and that which is behind them. And unto God are all matters returned. 77 O you who believe! Bow, prostrate, and worship your Lord! And do good, that haply you may prosper. 78 And strive for God as He should be striven for. He has chosen [for] you—and has placed no hardship for you in the religion—the creed of your father Abraham. He named you muslims aforetime, and herein, that the Messenger may be a witness for you, and that you may be witnesses for mankind. So perform the prayer and give the alms, and hold fast to God. He is your Master. How excellent a Master, and how excellent a Helper!

Commentary

① O mankind! Reverence your Lord. Truly the quaking of the Hour is a tremendous thing.

1 The Hour refers to the eschatological events at the end of the world and the Day of Judgment. The quaking refers to the shaking of the earth at the end of the world (see Sūrah 99).

② On the day you see it, every nursing woman will forget what she nurses, and every pregnant woman will deliver her burden, and you will see mankind drunk, though drunk they will not be. Rather, the Punishment of God is severe.

2 It in On the day you see it most likely refers to the event of the quaking (Q, R). So great will the fear and shock be that women will forsake their nursing babies, pregnant women will miscarry, and people will be so affected by terror that they will appear as if drunk (Ṭ). There is disagreement among the commentators over whether this “shaking” refers to events leading up to and heralding the end of the world, to the destruction of the world itself, or to events on the Day of Judgment (Q).

③ And among mankind are those who dispute concerning God, without knowledge, and follow every defiant satan,

3 Some commentators believe that this verse must refer to those who disputed the existence of the Hereafter or the resurrection of the dead (e.g., 37:16), while others think that it is a reference to those people who called the Quran fables of those of old more generally (see 8:31c; R). A satan can refer to one of the forces of Satan as well as to a jinn or to a human being; see 2:14c. Some commentators argue that, although this verse deploras disputation about God when done in ignorance, there is implicit approval of those who discuss theological matters on the basis of true and reliable knowledge (Q, R).

4 Some take this verse to mean that it is decreed for every defiant satan that, should anyone take him, namely, the defiant satan, as a protector, he will misguide that person. Another interpretation is that it is decreed for those . . . who follow a defiant satan that those followers will be misguided by that satan. (R).

⑤ O mankind! If you are in doubt concerning the Resurrection, [remember] We created you from dust, then from a drop, then from a blood clot, then from a lump of flesh, formed and unformed, that We may make clear for you. And We cause what We will to remain in the wombs for a term appointed. Then We bring you forth as an infant, then that you may reach maturity. And some are taken in death, and some are consigned to the most abject life, so that after having known they may know nothing. And thou seest the earth desiccated, but when We send down water upon it, it stirs and swells and produces every delightful kind.

⑥ That is because God is the Truth, and because He gives life to the dead, and because He is Powerful over all things,

5-6 That human beings are created from dust is an idea found in 3:59; 18:37; 30:20; 35:11 (which also mentions the drop); and 40:67 (which also mentions the drop, the blood clot, and the effects of growing old). Commentators see this verse as a reference not only to the fact that Adam, the progenitor of all human beings, was created from dust, but also to the fact that the animals that people eat and whose milk they drink are nourished by plants, which are themselves nourished by dust, and in this sense human beings are, in their physical bodies, made from dust (R). The drop is often understood to refer to semen (R), also mentioned in 32:8: Then He made his seed from a draught of base fluid.

The lump of flesh, formed and unformed is generally thought to mean that, after the blood clot settles in the womb, some pregnancies come to term, while others miscarry before producing fully formed human beings (R, T). This fact is thought to be indicated by cause what We will to remain in the wombs for a term appointed. With regard to these descriptions and a term appointed, some commentators mention a ḥadīth that states, “Your creation is such that you are brought together in your mother’s belly for forty nights, then you are a blood clot for the same duration, then a lump of flesh for the same duration. Then God sends an angel who is given commands regarding four things, and thus he writes down one’s provision, one’s deeds, one’s life span, and whether one will be wretched or joyous.”

Some are taken in death refers to those who die before old age, while the most abject life refers to the weakness and loss of faculties one experiences in old age (IK). This verse is similar in theme to 30:54: God is He Who created you from weakness, then ordained strength after weakness, then ordained weakness and old age after strength; 36:68: And whomsoever We give long life, We cause him to regress in creation; and 16:70: And among you are those who are brought back to the weakest of ages, such that they know nothing after having had knowledge. Some commentators argue that people can be spared the infirmities and weaknesses of old age in accordance with the strength of their faith (Aj, R).

God is the Truth (al-Ḥaqq; cf. 22:62; 24:25; 31:30) could also be rendered, “God is the Real/Reality.” The growth of vegetation from dry earth is a common symbol in the Quran for the resurrection of the dead, as in 35:9: And God is He Who sends the winds; then they cause clouds to rise. Then We drive them to a land that is dead, and thereby revive the earth after its death. Thus shall be the Resurrection! See also 16:65; 25:48–49; 30:19, 50; 35:9; 36:33; 43:11; 45:5; 50:9–11.

⑦ and because the Hour is coming, in which there is no doubt, and because God will resurrect whosoever is in the graves.

7 As mentioned in 22:1c, the Hour refers to the end of the world. The inhabitants of the graves are also mentioned in 35:22; 60:13; 100:9.

⑧ And among mankind are those who dispute concerning God without knowledge, without guidance, and without an illuminating Book,

8 Cf. 31:20. The idea of an illuminating or luminous book is also found in 3:184 and 35:25. On disputing about God without knowledge, see 22:3c.

9 turning aside to cause others to stray from the way of God. Such shall have disgrace in this world, and We shall make him taste the punishment of the burning on the Day of Resurrection.

9 Turning aside translates an expression that literally means to turn one's side to something or to bend one's neck in pride or conceit and denotes an attitude of pride and haughtiness. Disgrace in this world is mentioned as a punishment throughout the Quran (e.g., 2:85, 114; 5:33, 41; 10:98; 39:26; 41:16).

10 That is because of what your hands have sent forth, and because God wrongs not His servants.

10 See 3:182, an almost identical verse. Commentators note that human beings' words and deeds will be recorded in the book they will read from on the Day of Judgment (Q), to which reference is also made in 17:13–14; 18:49; 69:19, 25; 78:29; 84:7–10. "What hands have sent forth" has an idiomatic sense of what human beings have wrought and also evokes the idea that one's deeds are sent, as it were, to the Hereafter, where one will meet them during judgment.

11 And among mankind some worship God upon a brink: if good befalls him, he is content thereby, but if a trial befalls him, he is turned over upon his face, losing this world and the Hereafter. That is the manifest loss.

11 Upon a brink is understood to mean "in a state of doubt" (Ṭ) or that one's belief is superficial, on the outer reaches of one's consciousness and not in the heart (R). According to al-Ṭabarī, this refers to people like the Bedouin of the Prophet's time, who would come and embrace Islam if there were some material benefit to be had, but who would go back to their old ways once that benefit was no longer available. If their lives were going well, with material wealth and sons, they would affirm the Prophet's veracity, but if they were afflicted with bad economic conditions and having only daughters, they would go back to their former ways.

For others this verse provides a general description of hypocrites, whose religion is informed by a superficial notion of what is good for them (Ṭ). They are upon a brink in that the slightest discomfort topples them from faith (R). They lose both this world—because the material goods they thought they would attain will be lost—and the Hereafter—because they were heedless of the true nature and rewards of faith (Ṭ). In this regard, when a man lamented to the Prophet that his new religion had brought him no good, the Prophet said, “Islam is not something spoken. Islam melts, as fire melts away the impurities of iron, gold, and silver” (R).

⑫ He calls, apart from God, upon that which neither harms him nor benefits him. That is extreme error.

⑬ He calls upon one whose harm is likelier than his benefit. What an evil ally, and what an evil friend!

12–13 These verses are usually thought to refer to idols and false gods, which are often described as something that neither harms nor benefits (cf. 6:71; 10:18, 106, 20:89; 21:66; 25:55; 26:73). Some say v. 13 refers to the help one seeks from worldly powers, but this could also refer to idols, because the worship of idols, far from being innocuous, is considered, from a religious perspective, to be harmful in itself, as it diverts one's attention from the worship of the One God (R).

⑭ Truly God will cause those who believe and perform righteous deeds to enter Gardens with rivers running below. Truly God does whatsoever He desires.

14 On Gardens with rivers running below, see 2:25c.

⑮ Whosoever thinks that God will not help him in this world and the Hereafter, let him stretch out a rope to Heaven. Then let him sever it and see if his scheming removes that which enrages.

15 Although this verse may be general in import, many commentators believe that him in not help him refers to the Prophet (R). It is also thought that this verse could refer to a group of believers who were so full of anger at the idolaters that they found the promised victory against them to be slow in coming; some believe it refers to the tribes of Asad and Ghaṭafān, who thought that the Prophet would not ultimately achieve victory; it can also refer to the Prophet's enemies in general, who did not believe he would overcome them (R).

According to one interpretation, this verse alludes to individuals who are driven to hang themselves (Aj, Q, R) and are asked to see if this will cure their rage; the word translated Heaven (samā'), which also means "sky," can also refer to the ceiling of a house. According to this interpretation, the absence of hope that God's Help will come is a manifestation of the deep despair characteristic of those whose faith is upon a brink (v. 11), and the victims of this despair and lack of hope are asked to meditate upon whether hanging themselves will change anything—the implied answer being that God's relationship with the Prophet, and by extension the believers, will remain the same in this world and the Hereafter.

According to another interpretation of the imagery of this verse, the doubting or hostile ones are here being invited, since they believe that God is preparing to sever the victory He promised the Prophet, to seek some rope, or "means" (sabab), to Heaven, to try to sever it themselves, and then to see if their scheme (i.e., the scheme to sever that help to the Prophet) will assuage their anger and impatience (Q, Th). In another interpretation it is the very revelation from God that these persons are invited to try to sever (Th), and some say the imagery is meant to imply that no matter how far one goes or what bounds one passes, nothing can come between God's Help and the Prophet (R).

16 Thus do We send it down as clear signs, and thus does God guide whomsoever He desires.

16 The concept of clear signs also appears in 2:99; 17:101; 24:1, 34, 46; 28:36; 57:9; 58:5; 65:11.

①⑦ As for those who believe, and those who are Jews, the Sabeans, the Christians, the Magians, and the idolaters, indeed God will judge between them on the Day of Resurrection. Truly God is Witness over all things.

17 On the identity of the Sabeans, see 2:62c. Magians translates majūs, the only instance of this word in the Quran. It likely comes from the Greek magos, which comes from the Old and Middle Persian mugh; it was originally a reference to a line of Persian priests (from which the word “magic” derives as well as “Magi,” the three who came from the East to visit the newly born Christ, as the use of sorcery was attributed to them by the ancient Greeks). To this day, however, majūs is understood by most Muslims to be a reference to Zoroastrians in general, not just the special class of priests. Historically, there has been debate, especially among Arabs, as to whether the Zoroastrians could be considered People of the Book, and it was common for different ritual and legal matters to be judged differently; for example, many jurists forbade intermarriage with Zoroastrians but permitted the consumption of meat purchased from them, while others debated whether one could use their animals to hunt (Q); see also 9:29c, which addresses the legal treatment of the People of the Book. During Islamic history, many jurists (such as al-Shāfi‘ī) accepted Zoroastrians as People of the Book, as we also see very generally in Persia and among Muslims of the Indian subcontinent.

For God’s judgment or disclosure of the truth in matters of religious disagreement on the Day of Judgment rather than in this world, see 2:113c.

①⑧ Hast thou not considered that unto God prostrates whosoever is in the heavens and whosoever is on the earth, the sun, the moon, the stars, the mountains, the trees, and the beasts, and many among mankind? But for many the punishment has come due. Whomsoever God disgraces, none can ennoble. Truly God does whatsoever He will.

18 The prostrating of the whole created world, not just human beings, is also mentioned in 13:15: And unto God prostrates whosoever is in the heavens and on the earth (see 13:15c). The worship of God by beings other than angels and human beings is mentioned in 13:13; 17:44; 34:10; 55:6. Prostration signifies not only the physical action, but also the very state of humble worship that prostration suggests (R).

The punishment has come due means that it is deserved (Ṭ). The structure of Whomsoever God disgraces, none can ennoble is similar to such other Quranic statements as 18:17: Whomsoever He leads astray, thou wilt find no protector to lead him aright; and 3:160: If God helps you, none shall overcome you. And if He forsakes you, who then can help you thereafter?

①¹⁹ These two adversaries dispute concerning their Lord. As for those who disbelieve, garments of fire shall be cut for them, and boiling liquid shall be poured over their heads, 19 Many commentators prefer to read this verse as a general description of any two disputing parties, but others record different opinions about the specific individuals to whom this verse may refer. Some say that it refers to the six warriors who began the Battle of Badr at the front of their respective armies: ʿAlī ibn Abī Ṭālib, the Prophet’s uncle Ḥamzah, and ʿUbaydah ibn al-Ḥārith on the Muslim side and three fighters from the Quraysh on the other (Q, R, Ṭ). Others believe that this verse refers to arguments between the Muslims and the People of the Book, because the latter claimed to be closer to God, an older community, and superior in other ways. Some commentators say the dispute refers to a conversation between the Garden and the Fire regarding the purpose for which they were created, and some mention a ḥadīth in which the Fire says, “The proud and the haughty enter me,” the Garden says, “The weak and poor enter me,” and God says, “Thou art My Mercy, I show mercy by thee. And Thou art My Punishment, I punish by thee whomsoever I will” (Q).

②²⁰ by which their innards and their skin will be melted.

③²¹ And for them shall be hooked iron rods.

④²² Whensoever they desire, in their grief, to leave it, they shall be returned unto it, while [being told], “Taste the punishment of the burning!”

20–22 It is understood that the iron rods are those with which they will be beaten (IK). Although this passage is a concrete description of the fate of some in the Hereafter, it is also interpreted as a spiritual allegory: the malicious soul, unable to see beyond the ephemerality of this world and understand the true nature of things, is beaten down from rising spiritually by the hooked iron rods of false belief in its own power to control its fate and continuously returned to a state of suffering by its pride and self-glorification (Aj). Taste the punishment of the burning is thought to be spoken by the custodians of the Fire (Ṭ).

23 Truly God will cause those who believe and perform righteous deeds to enter Gardens with rivers running below, adorned therein with bracelets of gold and pearl, and therein their clothes will be of silk.

23 Cf. 35:33. On Gardens with rivers running below, see 2:25c. Other references to the raiment and ornaments of the inhabitants of the Garden include 18:31; 44:53; and 76:21. The rivers running below and bracelets of gold and pearl contrast with the boiling liquid and garments of fire mentioned in v. 19.

24 And they shall be guided unto that which is good in speech, and be guided unto the path of the Praised.

24 That they shall be guided means that they will be inspired toward these things (Ṭ). The idea of a good word or good speech is also mentioned in 14:24: A good word is as a good tree: its roots firm and its branches in the sky. In the present verse that which is good in speech is seen as referring to many things, including the testimony of faith, “There is no god but God” (lā ilāha illa’Llāh), or “Praise be to God” (al-ḥamdu li’Llāh), or the Quran itself. These words may also refer to what is spoken in the Hereafter, including the glad tiding and welcome that the believers will hear from God (see Sūrah 89) and the words of the angels, as in 39:73, when they say to inhabitants of the Garden, Peace be upon you; you have done well; so enter it, to abide [therein] (cf. 7:46; 10:10; 13:23–24; 14:23; 19:62; 25:75; 33:44; 36:58; R). Goodness in word and speech is an aspect of the paradisaic state, as indicated by 78:35: They hear therein neither idle talk nor lying (cf. 19:62; 56:25; 88:11). The path of the Praised means the path of God, that is, the path to the Garden (Q).

25 Truly those who disbelieve and turn from the way of God, and the Sacred Mosque which We have appointed for mankind—equal are those who dwell there and those who come from abroad—whosoever desires to deviate wrongfully therein, We shall cause him to taste a painful punishment.

25 Turn from renders ṣadda ʿan, which can mean either to be diverted oneself or to divert others. Those who dwell there refers to the local inhabitants of Makkah, and those who come from abroad to people who travel to Makkah to visit. This statement is interpreted to mean that neither has a greater right to be in Makkah and visit the Sacred Mosque than the other (IK, R, Ṭ). To deviate wrongfully is understood by many to mean idolatry and the worship of anything other than God (IK, Ṭ), though others believe it refers to certain kinds of economic transactions in the sacred precincts (IK).

26 And [remember] when We assigned for Abraham the place of the House, [saying], “Ascribe no partners unto Me, and purify My House for those who circumambulate, and those who stand, and those who bow and prostrate.

26 Cf. 2:125. On the account of Abraham and the Kaʿbah, see commentary on 2:125–27. Purify My House is understood to mean keeping it free from doubt and idolatry (Ṭ). To circumambulate the Kaʿbah is an essential part of the rite of the ḥajj and ʿumrah (see 2:203c) and standing, bowing, and prostrating are all components of the Islamic canonical prayer in addition to symbolizing worship in general. For other instances where bowing and prostrating are mentioned, see also 2:43, 125; 3:43; 9:112.

27 And proclaim the ḥajj among mankind: they shall come to thee on foot and upon all [manner of] lean beast, coming from all deep and distant mountain highways,

27 Commentators mention accounts that Abraham did not know how he could announce the pilgrimage to people; so God told him to speak the words and they miraculously echoed far and wide and settled into the hearts of all men and women (Ṭ). Some have understood the mention of going on foot to indicate that it was more meritorious to walk than ride when going on pilgrimage (IK, Ṭ). By lean beast some have understood camels (Ṭ), whose leanness is interpreted by some as an indication of their having come from deep and distant mountain highways (Q).

28 that they may witness benefits for them and mention the Name of God, during known days, over the four-legged cattle He has provided them. So eat thereof, and feed the wretched poor.

28 The benefits were those of both this world and the Hereafter; that is, people benefited from both the markets and trade that accompany the pilgrimage and the attainment of God's Contentment and Reward in the Hereafter (Ṭ). Some understand known days to be the first ten days of Dhu'l-Ḥijjah (the twelfth month of the lunar calendar, during which the ḥajj takes place), while others see it as the days of tashrīq (the eleventh through the thirteenth days of that month; see 2:203c). Mention the Name of God . . . over the four-legged cattle refers to saying "In the Name of God" as one slaughters them for sacrifice. It is said that the idolaters would not eat the meat they slaughtered themselves, and this verse gave Muslims permission to eat the meat that they themselves had slaughtered if they wished, without making it obligatory (IK, Q). Wretched poor means those who are hungry and poor, unable to provide for themselves, and who are to be fed from the sacrifice (Ṭ).

29 Then let them be done with their untidiness, and fulfill their vows, and circumambulate the Ancient House."

29 To be done with their untidiness is, according to some, an expression referring to the cutting of fingernails or the shaving or cutting off of hair associated with ending the pilgrimage and leaving the state of iḥrām (Q, R, Ṭ); that is, it refers to entering into a state of bodily cleanliness (see 2:196c). Al-Rāzī points out that the word tafath, rendered here as untidiness, is unknown outside of the exegetical literature (tafsīr) and that when a Bedouin was asked about it, he equated it with filth.

Others say be done with their untidiness refers to conditions related to the rites of the ḥajj as a whole (Ṭ). Fulfill their vows means to perform the pilgrimage (IK). Ancient renders ‘atīq, which in addition to “very old” (it is mentioned as the first house established for mankind in 3:96) also means “freed,” and some commentators refer to a ḥadīth that says, “It was named the Free House, because no tyrant ever triumphed against it,” meaning that the Ka‘bah has withstood the assaults of tyrants and attackers throughout the ages (IK, Ṭ); the most well known attack is recounted in Sūrah 105, when the Ka‘bah was said to have been defended against a Yemeni army by a swarm of birds sent by God. ‘Atīq can also mean that something is excellent or beautiful.

30 Thus it is. And whosoever magnifies the sacred things of God, that is better for him in the eyes of his Lord. Cattle are permitted you, save that which is recited unto you. So shun the filth of idols, and shun false speech, 30 The sacred things are the ḥajj, the ‘umrah, Makkah and its environs, and indirectly whatever is prohibited there (Ṭ); sacred things (ḥurumāt) can also be rendered “forbidden things,” meaning those things that cannot be violated (cf. v. 32, where it is rituals that are magnified). Cattle are permitted refers to the different kinds of animals that can be sacrificed and consumed, and save that which is recited unto you indicates the prohibitions in the Quran against carrion, blood, pork, and anything that is consecrated to other than God (Ṭ). One should shun the filth of idols by not worshipping them and false speech by rejecting assertions about the idols, such as We do not worship them, save to bring us nigh in nearness unto God (39:3) and assigning daughters to God (16:57; Ṭ).

31 as ḥanīfs before God, not ascribing partners unto Him. And whosoever ascribes partners unto God, it is as if he fell from the sky and the birds snatched him, or the wind swept him away to a place far off.

31 On the meaning of ḥanīf, that is, someone who is devoted to the One God, but not through a narrow sectarian focus, see 2:135c. The imagery of one who has fallen from the sky (or the heavens) is meant to convey helplessness (Q) and, according to one interpretation, symbolizes the fall of the soul from faith into a state where it is vulnerable to being snatched away by Satan and further swept along by its own caprice and base appetites (R).

③② Thus it is. And whosoever magnifies the rituals of God, truly that comes from the reverence of hearts.

32 Rituals translates sha^cā'ir, which means not only the rituals themselves, but also the sacred things with which or places at which those rituals are performed. Since the rote sh-^c-r connotes the sense of “knowledge” or “consciousness,” al-Qurṭubī describes them as “that in which God has something by which He makes known or teaches.” The verse places reverence in the heart, and the Prophet is reported to have said, “Reverence (taqwā) is here,” and pointed to his heart. To “magnify” the rituals means that one believes that worshipping God through the rites of pilgrimage is an important and weighty matter (R). Others interpret the “magnification” to mean that the sacrificial animals should be well fed and beautiful, and one should not use sick or injured animals (IK, Ṭ). This latter interpretation evokes the spiritual interpretation given to 2:71, where the sacrificial cow is likened to the soul that needs to be made ready and worthy for its spiritual death.

③③ You shall have benefits in them, for a term appointed. Thereafter their lawful place of sacrifice shall be at the Ancient House.

33 By most accounts this verse refers to the benefits derived from the sacrificial animals, such as their milk and wool and the ability to ride them (see, e.g., 36:71–73), as there apparently was reticence on the part of the pre-Islamic Arabs to make use of sacrificial animals in this way; see also 5:103, where these idolatrous prohibitions against riding or eating the meat of certain animals considered sacred are mentioned and rejected. Jurists have pointed out that it is permissible to ride the sacrificial animals if this is necessary (Q). One has these benefits for a term appointed, meaning until the animals are sacrificed in the pilgrimage rites (IK, Q). Regarding Ancient House, see 22:29c.

34 For every community We have appointed a rite, that they might mention the Name of God over the four-legged cattle He has provided them. Your God is one God; so submit unto Him, and give glad tidings to the humble, 34 Cf. v. 67. On each community being given its own religious way, see also 5:48: For each among you We have appointed a law and a way; 10:47: For every community there is a messenger; and 16:36: We indeed sent a messenger unto every community. Your God is one God (cf. 2:163; 16:22; 21:108; 41:6) means both that God is one and that He is unique, since one (wāḥid), as in English, can also mean “the same”; that is, not only is God one, but also each community worships the same God. See the essay “The Quranic View of Sacred History and Other Religions.” Some commentators understand rite (mansak) to refer here specifically to sacrifice, while others give it the more general meaning of religious ritual (Q), and some understand it to refer to the physical place of religious ritual (R); on the concept of nusuk, to which mansak is related by root, see 6:162–63c.

35 whose hearts quiver when God is mentioned, and who bear patiently what befalls them, who perform the prayer, and who spend of that which We have provided them.

35 Other verses also speak of the physical manifestations of knowledge and faith, as in 39:23: Their skin and their hearts soften unto the remembrance of God; and 5:83: Their eyes overflow with tears because of the truth they recognize. Al-Qushayrī notes that the quivering of one’s heart increases to the degree one is conscious of God’s Self-Disclosure in the world.

36 And We have placed the sacrificial camels for you among God’s rituals. There is good for you in them. So mention the Name of God over them as they line up. Then when they have fallen upon their flanks, eat of them, and feed the needy who solicit and those who do not. Thus have We made them subservient unto you, that haply you may give thanks.

36 Sacrificial camels translates budn, whose meaning some jurists restrict to camels, while others say that it can refer to other animals such as cows (Q). The needy who solicit refers to people who request help or money, while those who do not are those who refrain from asking; see 2:273, which also mentions poor people who do not ask for help. Mention the Name of God refers to saying the formula “In the Name of God” as one slaughters an animal, and when they have fallen upon their flanks refers to when they die, since traditionally camels are slaughtered while standing (Q, R). In the pre-Islamic Age of Ignorance (jāhiliyyah; see 3:154; 5:50; 33:33; 48:26c) the idolaters would not eat the meat they sacrificed, and most jurists interpret this verse to mean that eating the sacrificial animal’s meat oneself is permissible and desirable though not obligatory, whereas it is religiously obligatory to feed others (Q).

The notion that all created things in the heavens and on the earth are “made subservient” to human beings appears many times throughout the Quran (e.g., 14:32–33; 16:12; 22:65; 31:20; 43:13; 45:12–13), although some commentators see this as a specific reference to animals that have been domesticated for such purposes (R).

37 Neither their flesh nor their blood will reach God, but the reverence from you reaches Him. Thus has He made them subservient unto you, that you might magnify God for having guided you. And give glad tidings to the virtuous.

37 It is reported that the idolaters used to smear the blood of the sacrificed animals on the Ka’bah and that some Muslims wanted to do the same, but then this verse was revealed (Q). Reverence (taqwā) is mentioned in v. 32, and here is mentioned again to shed light on the inner reality of the ritual of sacrifice. In the last sentence of this verse, the voice switches from the second-person plural to the singular, thus signifying a direct address to the Prophet.

38 Truly God defends those who believe. Truly God loves not any ungrateful traitor.

38 The word translated defends here is the same word, with a different preposition, that is translated as repelling in v. 40. In this verse it means literally something like “God repels [others] from those who believe.” The notion that God does not love the traitor (khawwān) is similar to the message of 4:107: Surely God loves not the one given to treachery and sin. It is reported by some that this verse was revealed in connection with certain believers who, while still in Makkah and suffering from the persecutions of the idolatrous Quraysh, desired to fight against them using perfidious and deceitful means (Q). In this connection al-Qurṭubī mentions a ḥadīth, “A flag will be hoisted for every perfidious person on the Day of Judgment, which will read, ‘This is the perfidy of this person.’”

39 Permission is granted to those who are fought, because they have been wronged—and truly God is able to help them—

39 This is the verse most frequently thought to be the first in permitting the believers to use force to defend themselves. Permission is granted refers to permission to fight. Previously, Muslims had been required to deal with the persecution and violence against them with patience and forbearance and in two notable cases through emigration from Makkah: the first was the emigration of some Companions to Abyssinia in 615, where they received the protection of the Negus; and the second was the major emigration of the Prophet and his Companions from Makkah to Madinah in 622.

According to some, this verse was revealed at the time of the emigration (hijrah) of the Prophet from Makkah to Madinah, and it is said that upon hearing this verse Abū Bakr said, “I knew that fighting would come to pass” (Q). Others say that it was revealed in connection with a group of believers who desired to emigrate from Makkah, but were hindered and overtaken by the disbelievers, and permission was given to them to fight back (Ṭ). In connection with v. 38, it is understood by some that initially a group of believers asked the Prophet for permission to fight back secretly using techniques like assassination, to which the revelation said, God loves not any ungrateful traitor (v. 38), after which permission was given to fight openly (Ṭ); see the essay “Conquest and Conversion, War and Peace in the Quran.”

With slightly different vowelings, the verse can be read to mean, “Permission is given to those who fight because they have been wronged” (Ṭ), and also, “He [God] gives permission to those who fight because they have been wronged” (R).

④ who were expelled from their homes without right, only for saying, “Our Lord is God.” Were it not for God’s repelling people, some by means of others, monasteries, churches, synagogues, and mosques, wherein God’s Name is mentioned much, would have been destroyed. And God will surely help those who help Him—truly God is Strong, Mighty—

40 The expulsion of the believers from their homes in Makkah, mentioned also in 2:191, 217, 246; 3:195; 8:30; 9:40; 8:30; 60:9, is one of the most often cited grievances of the Muslim community against the Quraysh. The believers were given permission to use force because of the wrongs committed against them: persecution and being forced to leave because of their faith, for saying “Our Lord is God.” The use of force is further contextualized by mentioning the protection of other houses of worship wherein God’s Name is mentioned much. Muslims are permitted to use force because of a prior use of force, namely, the expulsion from their homes. Likewise, God’s repelling people, some by means of others is also a justified use of force, because houses of worship would have been destroyed unless this “repelling” took place. By implication, such defense or “repelling” should take place in the future under similar conditions; that is to say, in this verse the use of force is conditioned by the actual expulsion of people from their homes and the potential destruction of different kinds of houses of worship.

Opinions differ regarding the religious communities to which each of these houses of worship corresponds. Monasteries renders ṣawāmi^c, usually understood to be houses of Christian monks, but also associated by some with the Sabeans; churches renders biya^c, which most have understood to refer to Christian houses of worship, but which may also refer to Jewish temples; synagogues renders ṣalawāt, usually understood to mean Jewish houses of worship but linked by some with the Sabeans (see 2:62); and mosques renders masājid, a word meaning “place of prostrations” and associated by most commentators with the houses of worship of Muslims themselves, although another opinion sees masājid as a general term referring to the previous three types of houses of worship (Ṭ); see 72:18c.

For many commentators and jurists, in keeping with their general theory of Islam’s supersession of all other forms of religion, this verse refers to the houses of worship in the past before the advent of Islam. Muslims, however, are prohibited from damaging or destroying the houses of worship belonging to peoples with whom there is a treaty (ahl al-dhimmah) both within and outside of Islamic lands (Q); for more discussion of these issues, see 9:29c and the essay “Conquest and Conversion, War and Peace in the Quran.”

Those who help Him is understood to mean those who help God’s religion and His Prophet (Q, R).

④① who, were We to establish them upon the earth, would perform the prayer, give the alms, and enjoin right and forbid wrong. And unto God is the end of all affairs.

41 Here, who follows upon and is to be identified with those who help Him, and according to some also corresponds to those referenced by the who mentioned in the first sentence of the previous verse (who were expelled; Ṭ). According to one opinion, this verse describes the conditions laid upon those whom God “establishes on the earth,” meaning those to whom God gives sovereignty and political power (Q, R). Others say that it is a description of the Emigrants or simply of all Muslims in general (Q, Ṭ). On the concept of enjoining right and forbidding wrong, see 2:207c and especially 3:104c.

④② And if they deny thee, the people of Noah denied before them, as did °Ād and Thamūd, ④③ and the people of Abraham, and the people of Lot, ④④ and the inhabitants of Midian, and Moses too was denied. But I granted the disbelievers a respite; then I seized them in punishment. And how, then, was the change I wrought!

④⑤ How many a town have We destroyed while it did wrong, laying thus fallen upon their roofs! And [how many] an abandoned well and lofty palace!

42–45 As occurs frequently in the Quran, the Prophet is reminded that the trials he undergoes, whether they consist of denial, mockery, or violence, were experienced by previous prophets as well and that the final end of their opponents was defeat and destruction (e.g., 14:9–13; 35:25–26; 40:5, 22). The commentators explain the imagery of fallen upon their roofs as meaning that the roofs first collapsed and then the walls fell upon them afterward (R).

The prophet sent to Midian was Shu^ʿayb (see, e.g., 7:85; 11:84); Hūd (see, e.g., 11:50) was sent to the ^ʿĀd, and Ṣāliḥ (see, e.g., 7:73) was sent to the Thamūd. Change in And how, then, was the change I wrought (cf. 34:45; 35:26; 67:18) renders nakīr, which carries the sense of altering something, especially from a state one likes to a state one dislikes (it is also the name traditionally given to one of the two angels who question and sometimes torment the dead while they are still in the grave). It is derived from the same root as inkār, “denial,” and hence some commentators understand this phrase to mean, “And how, then, was My Denial [of them]!” (R).

46 Have they not journeyed upon the earth, that they might have hearts by which to understand or ears by which to hear? Truly it is not the eyes that go blind, but it is hearts within breasts that go blind.

46 Traveling upon the earth to see the vestiges of previous civilizations is mentioned throughout the Quran, including in 3:137; 6:11; 12:109; 16:36; 27:69; 30:9; 35:44; 40:21; 47:10; see 30:9c.

The blindness of hearts is alluded to throughout the Quran, in addition to deafness and dumbness. As discussed in the commentary on 2:7 and the introduction to Sūrah 47 and as exemplified in this verse, the heart is the seat of knowledge and the organ of spiritual understanding. This is further explicated in the ḥadīth: “In the body there is a lump of flesh: when it is healthy, the whole body is healthy, and when it is rotten, the whole body is rotten. Yea, it is the heart.”

47 They bid thee to hasten the punishment, though God will not fail His Promise. And truly a day with your Lord is as a thousand years of that which you reckon.

47 Different interpretations are given to is as a thousand years of that which you reckon (cf. 32:5). The day is understood to mean one of the six days in which God created the heavens and the earth (see 25:59; 32:4; 50:38) or as the period of reckoning on the Day of Judgment itself, as “one of the days of the Hereafter” (Q, Ṭ). For others this verse means that a day of the punishment and fear that the disbelievers will experience in the Hereafter will feel like a thousand years to them (Q, R). It is also interpreted to mean that for God a day or a thousand years are the same and that to Him it is immaterial whether they are punished soon or granted respite, which respite is mentioned in the subsequent verse (R).

④⑧ And how many a town did I grant respite while it did wrong. Then I seized it [in punishment], and unto Me is the journey’s end!

48 Cf. v. 45. The idea of God as the journey’s end also appears in 2:285; 3:28; 5:18; 24:42; 31:14; 35:18; 40:3; 42:15; 50:43; 60:4; 64:3.

④⑨ Say, “O mankind! I am only a clear warner unto you!”

49 These words form a common refrain uttered by the Prophet Muhammad and other prophets in the Quran (e.g., 11:25; 26:115; 29:50; 38:70; 46:9; 51:50; 67:26; 71:2).

⑤⑩ And as for those who believe and perform righteous deeds, theirs shall be forgiveness and a generous provision.

50 Forgiveness and a generous provision appears also in 8:4, 74; 24:26; 34:4. Generous (karīm) could also be rendered “honorable” or “noble.”

⑤⑪ But those who endeavor to thwart Our signs, they shall be the inhabitants of Hellfire.

51 Those who endeavor to thwart Our signs (cf. 34:5, 38) are understood to be those who deny them, call them sorcery, or consider them to be “tales of those of old” (R), denying realities such as the Resurrection and the Day of Judgment (R). Other examples of the disbelievers directing their hostility at the signs of God include those who dispute regarding the signs of God (40:4, 35, 56, 69; 42:35), conceive a plot regarding Our signs (10:21), or deviate with regard to Our signs (41:40).

52 And no messenger or prophet did We send before thee, but that when he had a longing, Satan would cast into his longing, whereupon God effaces what Satan cast. Then God makes firm His signs—and God is Knowing, Wise—

52 Al-Rāzī notes, with approval, an opinion that interprets this verse as saying that all prophets are indeed mortal human beings, not angels, and thus not emotionless or impervious to temptation; yet because they are protected by God, these outside promptings have no influence. The Quran describes the Prophet as not unaffected by people’s rejection of his message, as described in 35:8: Let not thy soul be expended in regrets over them; and also 26:3: Perhaps thou dost torment thyself that they are not believers (cf. 18:6).

Some commentators connect this verse, and also 53:19–20 and 17:73–75, with an account referred to as the “story of the cranes” (qiṣṣat al-gharānīq), which in Western literature has come to be known as the “Satanic Verses.” According to this story, which has several different versions, the Prophet, while in the company of the Quraysh near the Ka’bah, was reciting al-Najm (Sūrah 53). The accounts state that after reciting vv. 19–20, which mention three of the goddesses worshipped by the Quraysh, Satan cast words into the Prophet’s recitation, or “onto his tongue,” during a moment of inattention or drowsiness on the part of the Prophet. The Prophet then recited or was heard to recite (different versions are offered), “They are the exalted cranes, and their intercession is to be hoped for,” and continued his recitation through to the end of the sūrah. At the last verse of that sūrah, which mentions prostration, the Prophet prostrated. The Quraysh, apparently pleased that their goddesses had been exalted, gladly joined in the prostration and then celebrated Muhammad’s embrace of their religion. Afterward, Gabriel corrected the Prophet or, according to some accounts, Muhammad realized the error himself, and v. 52 was then revealed to give him comfort after the sadness and apprehension he felt as a result of the incident.

Many of the early commentators transmit this account with significant differences in setup, wording, and import. Based on these accounts, it seems likely that many Muslims of the early centuries accepted that something like this incident actually happened or at least were comfortable enough with the story to pass it along as a subject of interest, as was often the case in the early tafsīr genre, which often registered material of varying quality that was sometimes at odds with a commentator's own convictions. Once it is analyzed more closely, however, the incident appears highly implausible for several reasons.

Commentators who reject the account tend to begin by pointing out that the often contradictory versions of the story are poorly sourced and poorly corroborated (IK, Q), not unlike some other material to be found in the biographical and exegetical literature of the early centuries. As al-Qurṭubī points out, commentators on the Quran and historians did not employ consistently rigorous filters for what they would record and transmit, and often strange and baseless material is to be found in their works.

The story has also been attacked as incoherent on what might be called psychological grounds. The Prophet was a man known for his honesty and trustworthiness who had, for several years before this incident occurred, along with his followers suffered terribly for condemning the idols of the Quraysh. He had also resisted several offers of money and power to relinquish his mission. To have made such an enormous concession to idolatry would have undercut his message and authority and would have certainly destroyed his credibility in the eyes of his followers. As al-Rāzī observes, the Prophet's greatest struggle was against the idols; in a sense, it defined his mission. Al-Māturīdī asks, if he could not distinguish Satan from Gabriel the first time, how could he do so when Gabriel came to correct him?

Chronological considerations also cast doubt on the story, or at least its connection with 22:52 and 17:73–75. Sūrah 22 is considered by some to have been revealed in Madinah, while sūrah 17 was revealed after the Prophet's Night Journey and Ascension in the tenth or eleventh year of the revelation, in Makkah. Many of the versions of the story place the "story of the cranes" in the fifth year of the revelation, at the time when some Muslims had sought refuge in Abyssinia. Sūrah 17 would have been revealed five or six years later, while Sūrah 22 would have been revealed at least eight years later, according to some chronologies. If either 22:52 or 17:73–75 were meant to give comfort or explanation to the Prophet, such a time lag would be highly unusual. Did the so-called verses of the cranes remain in circulation during that time? Some accounts also mention that the refugees to Abyssinia returned to Makkah, because they heard the news that the idolaters had reconciled with the Prophet as a result of the incident of the cranes. Aside from the illogic of refugees from idolatry returning because their leader had embraced idolatry, their return is more easily explained, according to critics of the story, by the conversion of ʿUmar ibn al-Khaṭṭāb, one of the most prominent adversaries of the young community, to Islam, bringing with him a level of political support that made it safe for the refugees to return. Moreover, the Negus of Abyssinia was himself embroiled in a rebellion, which would have contributed to the refugees' desire to leave.

There are also theological grounds for rejecting the incident as an explanation of v. 52. Al-Qurṭubī rejects the very possibility of Satan's taking control of a human being (much less a prophet) in such a manner, citing the words of Satan in 14:22, And I had no authority over you, save that I called you, and you responded to me, and further argues that if Satan had this power to control a person's speech, no human being could withstand it. From the point of view of the Islamic tradition, among both Sunnis and Shiites, the prophets are maʿṣūm, or "protected [from sin]," and from this perspective such an incident by definition would have been impossible.

Moreover, from what might be called a literary or thematic point of view, the verses in question do not necessitate this story as their basis. The thematic elements in 22:52 and 17:73–75 are not unique to those verses. In the case of 22:52, the context is that of those who endeavor to thwart the signs of God, which, as discussed in the commentary on 22:51, is a common description of the activity of the disbelievers as recounted in the Quran. In 22:52 had a longing renders the verb tamannā, and longing in his longing translates umniyah, a word that can mean "desires" or "false hopes." The noun umniyah also appears in 2:78 (hearsay); 2:111 (hopes); 4:123 (desires); 4:119 (desires); 57:14 (false hopes). The verb tamannā also appears in 2:94–95; 3:143; 4:32; 28:82; 53:24; 62:6–7. Some commentators gloss umniyah as "recitation," which, though not linguistically incorrect, is a rare secondary usage that stands in stark contrast to the Quranic usage of the term. The idea of "casting," when it does not refer to the physical action of throwing, as when Moses casts his staff, is used in various ways in the Quran; examples include the casting of terror (3:151), love (20:39), Spirit (40:15), hearing (as in "to give ear"; 50:37), enmity and hatred (5:64), and peace ("to offer peace"; 4:91). Furthermore, the two parts of this verse are not connected in the way the story of the cranes would suggest, because in the text God first effaces what Satan casts, and then makes His signs firm. This means that the "making firm" of the signs of God is not brought about by means of effacing what Satan casts, but comes afterwards. Moreover, this "making firm" most logically connects with the previous verse, which mentions those people who endeavor to thwart Our signs, to yield the meaning, "They endeavor to thwart them, but God makes them firm.” Finally, the allegedly interpolated verses would directly contradict the explicit message of the remainder of the sūrah into which they were allegedly inserted, which argues against such intercession (53:26) and reproaches those who assign daughters to God (53:21–23), the way the three goddesses were thought to be daughters of God by the Quraysh. As for those versions of the story that view 53:21–23 (the verses following those mentioning the names of the idols) as “replacements” for those that Satan cast, see comment on “abrogation,” or naskh, below.

Some accounts of the story of the cranes attach 17:73–75 to this verse. Against this view, many commentators relate, in connection with that passage, that the Prophet was apparently tempted to make some kind of compromise with the tribes of Quraysh and Thaqīf by offering some token of respect to their idols in the form of turning his face toward them as he walked by, which he did not do. This encounter is thematically not unrelated to the incident, described in Sūrah 80, in which the Prophet frowned at the pious persistence of a blind man while he (the Prophet) was talking to high-level members of the Quraysh. In the case of the frowning, the Prophet (incorrectly) made a practical judgment that it was more worthwhile to persuade the leaders of the Quraysh of the truth of Islam. In the matter of showing respect to the idols, he considered whether it was worthwhile to make some gesture that might reduce the Quraysh’s antagonism and even gain their assent, but ultimately he did not do so. In 17:74 it says that the Prophet would have inclined toward them a little, though in 17:73 it is clear they wanted more than that, namely, they wanted him to falsely ascribe something to God, so they could become friends. The danger of being lured by the desires of others is mentioned elsewhere, often where the Prophet is warned against following their caprices after the knowledge that has come to him (2:120, 145; see also 5:48; 13:37); none of these incidents are connected with the notion of Satan introducing something into the recitation of the Quran.

As for how the “story of the cranes” found its way into Islamic literature, in his commentary on 22:52 al-Māturīdī speculates that perhaps the Prophet uttered words like those reported in the story, but that he was registering the belief of the Quraysh themselves, as the Quran does in 10:18: And they say, “These are our intercessors with God.” Al-Rāzī doubts that words like this were spoken by anyone at all, arguing that no such formulation using the word gharānīq (“cranes”) was commonplace, but in fact at least one source from the second Islamic century reports that the phrase “Those are the exalted cranes whose intercession is desired” was part of a pre-Islamic prayer formula of the Quraysh. If that were the case, some type of miscommunication or misattribution would be more plausible.

Some of the credibility attached to the account stems from the assumption that Muslims would not invent a story that was so potentially embarrassing, but there are reasons to believe that the early community might not have been troubled by the account. It is conceivable that the historians and exegetes passing on the story might have in hindsight seen the end result—namely, Gabriel’s correction of the Prophet—as sufficient Divine protection against error and indeed as evidence of active participation by God in the life of the community and a warning against the promptings of Satan. Such a view is generally rejected by mainstream theologians and commentators, as described above. There are also interpretive reasons why such a story would have been transmitted, which is to say that the means by which it is employed to explain 22:52 actually serves exegetical purposes. First, it provides an “occasion for revelation” (sabab al-nuzūl) for this verse. Second, it supports the use of the word naskh, here rendered effaces, as referring to the technical sense of a later revelation replacing the wording or legal import of something that existed previously (on naskh as “abrogation,” see 2:106c). (In the tafsīr literature, naskh was not limited to one Quranic verse replacing another, though this came to be the accepted legal definition. It was also sometimes employed to refer to God’s overturning or replacing previous practices that were not originally Divinely ordained, and in rare cases it was thought by some to refer to the actual disappearance or forgetting of Quranic verses as determined by God.)

Some versions of the story indeed interpret 53:21–23 as the verses with which God “replaced” the words about the exalted cranes. Al-Rāzī and Ibn Kathīr, perhaps detecting this issue, note that in 22:52 one is dealing with “linguistic” naskh and not “technical” naskh, meaning that it is naskh in the plain Arabic sense of wiping away something rather than the legal definition, which combines both the revocation and the replacement of verses in the Quran. It is entirely plausible that, since some versions of the story provided a clear case of the removal and replacement of some verses, and since this is only one of two verses using the word naskh, the story was kept in circulation as evidence or support for the theory of naskh as “abrogation; for these issues, see 2:106c.

It is far from likely that the lore attached to the idols would have vanished immediately upon the conquest of Makkah and other towns controlled by idolaters. Indeed, the denizens of Ṭāʾif bargained for the right to temporarily worship their idols as part of an agreement to become Muslims and were much aggrieved when the Muslims destroyed those idols. It is conceivable that the story of the “exalted cranes” survived as an invention of bitter former idolaters, out of a kind of tribal pride that had yet to die out, possibly as the result of a misremembered incident related to the Prophet, the Quraysh, and the mention of their idols. Such a situation could have led to a series of stories that came down to the early commentators in the various forms of the story discussed above. The early transmitters of this story either saw no great theological or logical problem with the story or simply passed on a story they had heard without taking a firm position on it, as happens countless times in the early tafsīr tradition. Many commentators, in attempting to move the tafsīr genre from a collection of opinions to a normative account of the Quran, took great pains to demonstrate the baseless nature of the story.

The incident of the goddesses obscures rather than explains the verses it claims to be connected with by taking common themes in the Quran and giving them an explanation that is in discord with how those elements are understood elsewhere; the accounts offer a strained and implausible chronology based upon revelations taking place years apart from one another; and the accounts themselves contradict one another in substantial ways, since some interpret the words as having been uttered by the Prophet, and others interpret them as merely heard by the idolaters.

53 that He might make what Satan casts to be a trial for those in whose hearts is a disease, and those whose hearts are hard—and truly the wrongdoers are in extreme schism—

53 What Satan casts, that is, into the hearts of disbelievers (M). That God should make certain matters a trial is an idea found throughout the Quran (e.g., 2:102; 10:85; 17:60; 25:20; 37:63; 39:49; 54:27; 60:5; 74:3). The idea of hearts with disease (marad) is mentioned also in 2:10; 5:52; 8:49; 9:125; 33:12, 32, 60; 47:20, 29; 74:31. Such disease is often understood by commentators as a reference to hypocrisy, doubt, ignorance, and lack of faith (IK). The idea of hard or hardened hearts is also mentioned in 2:74; 57:16; and 39:22: Woe unto those whose hearts are hardened to the remembrance of God! The word schism renders shiqāq (also in 2:137, 176; 38:2; 41:52), which has the basic meaning of “fracture” or “separation” and connotes an attitude of opposition and hostility to the truth (R).

54 and so that those who have been given knowledge might know that it is the truth from thy Lord, and thus believe in it, and that their hearts be humbled before Him. And truly God guides those who believe unto a straight path.

54 Those who have been given knowledge also appears in 16:27 and 30:56 describing those who speak truths to the disbelievers in the Hereafter, while in other verses those who have been given knowledge are contrasted with various kinds of disbelievers (e.g., 17:107; 28:80; 29:49; 34:6; 47:16; 58:11). The contrast between those who are given knowledge and disbelievers or those with weak faith links knowledge (‘ilm) with belief (īmān). Here humbled renders a word that can also mean “at peace” or “content” (Aj, Q).

55 Yet those who disbelieve remain in doubt over it, till the Hour comes upon them suddenly or there comes upon them the punishment of a barren day.

56 Sovereignty that Day shall be God’s; He will judge between them, and those who believe and perform righteous deeds shall be in Gardens of bliss.

57 And as for those who disbelieve and deny Our signs, theirs shall be a humiliating punishment.

55–57 The barren day is interpreted by some to refer to the Day of Judgment, called barren (‘aqīm) because there are no days after it (Q), an interpretation supported by the mention of God’s Judgment in the subsequent verse. Others see it as a reference to the Battle of Badr, because it would be a day when mothers would lose their children to battle and there would be no blessing in it for the disbelievers (R). The idea of the end of the world coming suddenly or while human beings are unaware is also mentioned in 6:47; 7:187; 16:45; 21:40; 26:202; 29:53; 43:66; 47:18.

58 And as for those who emigrate in the way of God and are then slain or die, God will surely provide them with a beautiful provision. And truly God is the best of providers.

58 It is reported that this verse was revealed when two Emigrants died in Madinah, and some people said it was better to die fighting in the way of God than of natural causes (Q). Others generalize the meaning to include those who leave their homes to help the religion (R). Some mention 4:100: Whosoever forsakes his home, emigrating unto God and His Messenger, and death overtakes him, his reward will fall upon God. One could also mention 3:169, And deem not those slain in the way of God to be dead. Rather, they are alive with their Lord, provided for, as this latter verse shares the language of God's Provision for those who are slain. That God is the best of providers is also mentioned in 5:114; 23:72; 34:39; 62:11.

59 He will surely cause them to enter an entrance with which they shall be content. And truly God is Knowing, Clement.

59 The entrance is the entrance into Paradise, which will not be preceded by any difficulties for the Emigrants (R). A description of entering Paradise in contentment is also mentioned in 89:28–30: Return unto thy Lord, content, contenting. Enter among My servants. Enter My Garden.

60 Thus it is. And whosoever retaliates with the like of that which he has suffered, and is then aggressed upon, God will surely help him. Truly God is Pardoning, Forgiving.

60 This verse is understood as a general description of the plight of the believers who were persecuted and expelled from their homes in Makkah and forced to migrate to Madinah (Ṭ). Some commentators believe it refers to an incident in which some Muslims encountered idolaters during the month of Muḥarram, considered by the Arabs even before the advent of Islam one of the sacred months during which fighting was forbidden. The idolaters pressed to fight despite the tradition, and the Muslims responded in kind, but felt remorseful for having done so (Q, R, Ṭ); on the sacred months of the Islamic calendar, also see 9:36–37c.

61 That is because God makes the night pass into the day and makes the day pass into the night, and because God is Hearing, Seeing.

61 Some interpret this verse in combination with the previous one as an explanation of God's Power; God has power over the day and night and thus has the power to grant help and victory (R).

62 That is because God is the Truth and what they call upon apart from Him is false, and because God is the Exalted, the Great.

62 See 31:30, a nearly identical verse, and commentary.

63 Hast thou not considered that God sends down water from Heaven, and then the earth becomes green? Truly God is Subtle, Aware.

63 The revival of the dead earth by rain is a common theme in the Quran (cf. 7:57; 16:65; 22:5; 29:63; 30:24; 41:39), often interpreted as a symbol of the ease with which God will raise the dead in the Hereafter or of the revival of dead hearts by the water of the spirit; see 2:72–73c.

64 To Him belongs whatsoever is in the heavens and whatsoever is on the earth. And God is truly the Self-Sufficient, the Praised.

64 Self-Sufficient translates al-Ghanī, rendered in 47:38 as Rich; see 47:38c.

65 Hast thou not considered that God has made whatsoever is on the earth subservient unto you—and the ship sails upon the sea—by His Command? And He maintains the sky lest it fall upon the earth, save by His Leave. Truly God is Kind and Merciful unto mankind.

65 Cf. 31:31. The imagery of seafaring as a blessing bestowed by God is also mentioned in 14:32; 17:66; 30:46; 31:31; 43:12. In this context, where the sea wind is made subservient to the purposes of humanity, that God maintains the sky (samāʾ) is understood to mean that the natural order is Divinely maintained so that such travel is possible (R) and that the sky remains stable enough for ships to take to the sea (Z). It could also be understood as a metonym for whatever falls from the sky, such as rain, as in 11:52 and 71:11: He will send the sky upon you with abundant rains.

⑥⑥ And He it is Who gave you life; then He causes you to die; then He gives you life. Truly man is ungrateful.

66 On the cycle of life, death, and then life again, which is understood to mean the life of this world, followed by death, followed by the life of the Hereafter, see 2:28c, which also mentions the state of “death,” or nonexistence, that precedes life in this world.

⑥⑦ For every community We have appointed a rite they are to perform; so let them not argue with thee over the matter. And call to thy Lord. Truly thou art following straight guidance.

⑥⑧ And if they dispute with thee, say, “God knows best what you do.

⑥⑨ God will judge between you on the Day of Resurrection concerning that wherein you used to differ.”

67–69 For the statement For every community We have appointed a rite, see 22:34c; on the general question of the Divinely ordained differences among religions, see 5:48c and the essay “The Quranic View of Sacred History and Other Religions.” Here, as in v. 34, the word rendered rite (mansak) can mean both a ritual act and a place of ritual significance.

Let them not argue with thee is understood to mean that the Prophet, and by extension all believers, should not engage in debate with members of other communities over such questions, although some understand this to mean that those who would argue with the Muslims should themselves stop their dispute and embrace Islam (R). If the disputants continue, the believers are to remind them of God’s Knowledge and that God will judge the differences between religions not in this world, but in the Hereafter (e.g., 2:113; 3:55; 5:48; 6:164; 10:93; 16:92, 124; 32:25; 39:3, 46).

70 Knowest thou not that God knows whatsoever is in Heaven and on earth? Truly that is in a Book. Truly that is easy for God.

70 God's Knowledge of the heavens and the earth is also affirmed in 3:29; 5:97; 29:52; 58:7; 64:4; but this is the only instance in the Quran where the singular form of "heaven" (samā') is used in such a context; see also 31:16: If it be but the weight of a mustard seed, be it in a rock, in the heavens, or on the earth, God will bring it forth.

71 And they worship, apart from God, that for which He has sent down no authority, and that whereof they have no knowledge. And the wrongdoers shall have no helpers.

71 The concept of authority (sulṭān) being sent down appears many times in the Quran (e.g., 7:71; 11:96; 12:40) and is often understood to mean a Divine revelation or message. However, it can also refer to the authority of intellectual demonstration and in this respect is related to that whereof they have no knowledge (R). Sulṭān is also used for the influence or power of one thing over another (hence its use to mean a ruler), as in Satan's words to his followers in 14:22: I had no authority (sulṭān) over you, save that I called you, and you responded to me.

72 And when Our signs are recited unto them as clear proofs, thou seest denial upon the faces of those who disbelieve. They well-nigh pounce upon those who recite Our signs unto them. Say, "Shall I inform you of what is worse than that? The Fire God has promised to those who disbelieve. What an evil journey's end!"

72 Many verses speak of the negative reactions of the disbelievers to the recitation of God's signs, including 8:31; 19:73; 31:7; 34:43; 42:25; 46:7; 68:15; 83:13. The disbelievers' denial manifests itself in the form of anger (R). Here the word pounce carries the sense of gripping something violently (Q, Ṭ). Worse than that means worse than the feeling of anger at the signs of God that they hear recited to them (Q, R).

73 O mankind! A parable is set forth, so hearken unto it! Truly those upon whom you call apart from God will never create a fly, even if they gathered together to do so. And if the fly should rob them of aught, they could not rescue it from it. Feeble are the seeker and the sought!

73 The parable in this verse is commonly understood to refer to the idols that the Makkans took as objects of worship. The imagery of the idols being unable to retrieve something taken by a fly echoes the story of Abraham in 21:57–66, where Abraham destroys all the idols except one and blames the remaining idol. When blamed for the crime, he suggests that his accusers ask the remaining idol that destroyed the rest, and the accusers themselves point out that the idols are unable to do that. Cf. 7:191: Do they ascribe as partners those who created naught and are themselves created? Parables describing the powerlessness of the idols also appear in 7:194; 34:22; 35:13.

74 And they did not measure God with His true measure. Truly God is Strong, Mighty.

74 Cf. 6:91 and 39:67. This could also be translated, “They did not estimate God as He ought to be estimated.” Some understand the phrase to mean that they did not give God the honor due to Him, because they assigned partners unto Him that were nothing but stones (R), and they did not know Him as He ought to be known (Ṭ).

75 God chooses messengers from among the angels and from among mankind. Truly God is Hearing, Seeing.

75 God sends angels, such as Gabriel and Michael, as well as human beings as messengers (Ṭ). This verse is seen also as a reaffirmation that God’s sending of a man or an angel is not something novel (Q).

76 He knows that which is before them and that which is behind them. And unto God are all matters returned.

76 That which is before them is interpreted by some to refer to the Hereafter, and that which is behind them, to this world (R); see also 2:255c; 20:110; 21:28. Unto God are all matters returned also appears in 2:210; 3:109; 8:44; 35:4; 57:5 and refers to the ultimate return of all things to their origin with God.

77 O you who believe! Bow, prostrate, and worship your Lord! And do good, that haply you may prosper.

77 Bowing and prostrating are mentioned together also in 2:43, 125; 3:43; 9:112.

78 And strive for God as He should be striven for. He has chosen [for] you—and has placed no hardship for you in the religion—the creed of your father Abraham. He named you muslims aforetime, and herein, that the Messenger may be a witness for you, and that you may be witnesses for mankind. So perform the prayer and give the alms, and hold fast to God. He is your Master. How excellent a Master, and how excellent a Helper!

78 In Arabic, the structure of strive for God as He should be striven for is similar to that in they did not measure God with His true measure from v. 74. This is understood to mean striving (jihād) to do what God commands and striving against what God has forbidden, and to do both for neither worldly purposes nor renown (Q). Others say it means that one who strives for God should not fear the reproach of the reproachful (Ṭ). Many understood this to mean that the Muslim community should strive in later times as they did in the earliest battles (R), while others say this as a call to spiritual effort, citing the ḥadīth in which, upon returning from the Tabūk campaign, the Prophet is reported to have said, “We have returned from the lesser striving to the greater striving.”

Hardship (ḥaraj) is understood to mean “confinement” or “straitening” (Ṭ). That God has placed no hardship for you in the religion can be interpreted as a reference to the concessions granted by God when it comes to fulfilling religious obligations in certain circumstances, such as shortening the prayers while traveling and praying while seated or lying down if one is ill (R). It is also thought to refer to the opportunity to make expiation for one’s sins (Bḍ). More generally, it is thought to emphasize that there is no sin or fault for which God does not provide a way out (65:2; Ṭ). A verse of related import is 2:185: God desires ease for you, and He does not desire hardship for you. In this connection some mention the aḥādīth: “The best of your religion is that which is easiest of it,” and, “When I command you to do a thing, accomplish that which you can of it.”

The creed of Abraham is also mentioned in 2:130, 135; 3:95; 4:125; 6:161; 16:123, and in all cases except two is mentioned together with the concept of being a ḥanīf, or a primordial monotheist (see 2:135c). It is thought by some that he named you muslims refers to Abraham’s prayer with Ishmael in 2:128, Our Lord, make us submit unto Thee, and from our progeny a community submitting (muslim) unto Thee, where the community refers to the Prophet and his followers (Q, R), that is, the Islamic community as a whole. The other common opinion is that it is God Who named them muslims (“submitters”) aforettime (before) and herein (in the Quran), so that this verse becomes a kind of foretelling of the formation of the Muslim community (Q, R).

In 2:135–36, the Prophet and his community are directly linked to Abraham and his descendants, and in other verses Muslims are commanded to follow his “creed” (millah; 3:95; 4:125; 6:161; 16:123). In this sense the you in He named you can refer not only to the followers of the Prophet Muhammad, but also to all those throughout history who followed the creed of Abraham, a ḥanīf (16:123), which would also include other prophets as described in 2:136.

The statement that the community will serve as witnesses for mankind is similar to 2:143: Thus did We make you a middle community, that you may be witnesses for mankind and that the Messenger may be a witness for you. Al-Rāzī notes that God wants witnesses for mankind to be upright and just, so that others can come to faith. Ibn Kathīr understands witnesses for to mean that they are “that which is witnessed” (mashhūd) as upholders of justice, and the Prophet is similarly “witnessed” by his community for his exemplary qualities; see also 2:143c. Some have understood middle community as a community that establishes a just mean between the inward and outward aspects of religion, between the law and the spirit. Others have pointed to the providential positioning of the Islamic world in the middle belt of the world geographically. Others have emphasized Islam's preservation of the balance between the life of this world and otherworldliness.

The idea of holding fast to God is also mentioned in 4:146 and 4:175, and elsewhere the believers are also commanded to hold fast to the rope of God (3:103) and the tablets of Moses (7:145).

The Believers

al-Mu'minūn

Considered to be from the Makkan period (Q), al-Mu'minūn begins by describing the virtues and righteous actions of those who believe; it then moves to a reminder of humanity's origin from clay and, reminiscent of 22:5, recounts a human being's development starting from a clot of blood and culminating in another creation (vv. 12–14). After several verses describing the blessings of the world, the sūrah narrates the story of Noah, his struggles with the denial and rebuke of his people, and his journey in the ark (vv. 23–41). Brief mention of Moses and Jesus follows, after which the sūrah dwells upon the human tendency to divide into religious groups (vv. 42–54).

Having mentioned the difficulties presented to previous messengers, al-Mu'minūn turns to the opponents of the Prophet Muhammad; their reasons for opposition are similar to those voiced by the people of Noah, and the Prophet's people are reminded that he is no stranger to them (vv. 55–69). The opposition to prophets by the affluent and powerful is a recurrent theme in this sūrah, something also seen elsewhere in the tendency of the “notables” to oppose the prophets (see also 7:59–136; 7:60–62c).

The idolaters are addressed in a passage consisting of questions and answers regarding the relationship between God and creation (vv. 84–89); this passage provides a linear argument, a form uncommon in the Quran in general, against believing in multiple gods. The sūrah concludes by warning of the impending Day of Judgment and the punishment of disbelievers who, upon coming face-to-face with the reality of their perdition, will desire to go back to the world in order to do good instead of evil, though it will be too late for them (vv. 99–118). The grand and awesome nature of the Hereafter will make their life in the world seem to them as a day or part of a day (v. 113).

In the Name of God, the Compassionate, the Merciful

① Truly the believers have prospered, ② who are humble in their prayers, ③ and who turn away from idle talk, ④ and who give the alms, ⑤ and who guard their private parts, ⑥ save from their spouses or those whom their right hands possess, for then they are not blameworthy— ⑦ and as for those who seek beyond that, it is they who are transgressors— ⑧ and who keep their trusts and their covenant, ⑨ and who are mindful of their prayers. ⑩ It is they who are the heirs, ⑪ who shall inherit Paradise, abiding therein. ⑫ And indeed We created man from a draught of clay. ⑬ Then We made him a drop in a secure dwelling place. ⑭ Then of the drop We created a blood clot, then of the blood clot We created a lump of flesh, then of the lump of flesh We created bones and We clothed the bones with flesh; then We brought him into being as another creation. Blessed is God, the best of creators! ⑮ Then indeed you shall die thereafter. ⑯ Then surely you shall be raised up on the Day of Resurrection. ⑰ And indeed We created above you seven paths, and We were not heedless of creation. ⑱ And We sent down water from Heaven in due measure, and settled it in the earth, and We are able to make it disappear. ⑲ And thereby We brought into being for you gardens of date palms and grapevines, wherein you have many fruits and whereof you eat, ⑳ and a tree issuing forth from Mount Sinai that produces oil and a seasoning for eating. ㉑ And truly in cattle there is a lesson for you: We give you to drink from that which is in their bellies, and in them you have many uses, and some of them you eat. ㉒ And upon them, and upon ships, are you carried. ㉓ And We indeed sent Noah to his people, and he said, “O my people! Worship God! You have no god other than Him. Will you not be reverent?” ㉔ But the notables who disbelieved among his people said, “This is only a human being like yourselves, desiring to set himself above you. And had God willed, He would have sent down angels. We heard not of this from our fathers of old. 25 He is but a man possessed. So wait concerning him, for a time.” 26 He said, “My Lord! Help me, for they deny me.” 27 So We revealed unto Him, “Build the Ark before Our eyes and by Our Revelation. Then when Our Command comes and the oven gushes forth, place therein two of every kind, and thy family except those against whom the word has already gone forth. And address Me not concerning those who did wrong; surely they shall be drowned. 28 And when thou mountest the Ark, thou and those with thee, say, ‘Praise be to God, who has saved us from the wrongdoing people.’ 29 And say, ‘My Lord! Harbor me in a blessed harbor, for Thou art the best of harborers.’ 30 Truly in that are signs, and truly We put [mankind] to the test.” 31 Then after them We brought into being another generation. 32 And We sent among them a messenger from among themselves, [saying], “Worship God! You have no god other than Him. Will you not be reverent?” 33 And the notables of his people who disbelieved and denied the meeting of the Hereafter, and unto whom We had given luxury in the life of this world, said, “This is but a human being like you, eating of what you eat, and drinking from what you drink. 34 So if you obey a human being like yourselves, then surely you will be losers. 35 Does he promise you that when you are dead and are dust and bones, you shall indeed be brought forth? 36 Far-fetched, far-fetched is that which you are promised. 37 There is naught but our life in this world: we die and we live, and we will not be resurrected. 38 He is but a man fabricating lies against God, and we do not believe him.” 39 He said, “My Lord! Help me, for they deny me.” 40 He said, “In a little while they shall become remorseful.” 41 So the Cry seized them rightly, and We made them into dross; so away with the wrongdoing people! 42 Then after them We brought into being other generations. 43 No community can hasten its term, nor delay it. 44 Then We sent Our messengers in succession. Whenever there came unto a community its messenger, they would deny him. So We caused them to follow one another, and made them the objects of stories. So away with a people who believe not! 45 Then We sent Moses and his brother Aaron with
